Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731; Critten v. Chemical Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969; Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501; Clark v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 32 App. Div. 316, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1064, affirmed in 164 N. Y. 498, 53 N. E. 659; Wilmerding v. Postal Telegr. Cable Co. 118 App. Div. 685, 103 N. Y. Supp. 594.

great weight of judicial opinion. National Dredging Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Penn. (Del.) 580, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 130 Am. St. Rep. 158, 69 Atl. 607 ("or order" in checks fraudulently altered to "or bearer"); Israel v. State Nat. Bank, 124 La. 885, 50 So. 783 (series of forged checks); McKeen v. Boatmen's Bank, 74 Mo. App. 281; Brown v. Lynchburg Nat. Bank, 109 Va. 530, 64 S. E. 950, 17 Ann. Cas. 119 (employee of bank fraudulently charged depositor's account); Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657 (checks altered in amounts and in names of payees); National Bank v. Tacoma Mill Co. 104 C. C. A. 441, 182 Fed. 1 (unauthorized payments made to an employee of depositor). A fuller and more complete statement of this duty appears infra, II. a, 3.

A corporate depositor is under obligation to examine its pass book and returned vouchers, and to discover a defalcation of an employee resulting from the deposit by him of a part of the money represented by checks and the taking of the balance in cash, where a very slight examination of either accounts or book would have disclosed the defalcation. Scanlon-Gipson Lumber Co. v. Germania Bank, 90 Minn. 478, 97 N. W. 380.

That such a duty of examination rests upon the depositor is held impliedly by all the cases discussed below in this subdivision, since if no examination is necessary the character thereof is immaterial.

The doctrine first announced in New York in Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, that a depositor is under no duty to examine his pass book and returned checks for the detection of forgeries in order to protect the bank, while nominally approved in Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501, where it is stated that the recovery by the depositor was sustained by the decision in the Denison Case, is really modified in the Frank Case, and it is there held that the depositor is under no duty to the bank so to conduct the examination that it will necessarily lead to the discovery of the fraud. Consequently, where the depositor conducted an examination, but was deceived Defendant's negligence presented a question of fact for the jury.

Kelley v. Buffalo Sav. Bank, 180 N. Y. 171, 69 L.R.A. 317, 105 Am. St. Rep. 720, 72 N. E. 995, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 337; Squire v. Ordemann, 194 N. Y. 394, 87 N. E. 435; Parks v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. 137 App. Div. 719, 122 N. Y. Supp. 521; Niagara Woolen Co. v. Pacific Bank, 141 App. Div. 265, 125 N. Y. Supp. 1035.

Messrs. Davies, Stone, & Auerbach, for respondent:

The facts being undisputed, it was a question for the court to determine whether such examinations as the plaintiffs had made of their returned checks and account on the occasions when the pass book was balanced were sufficient to discharge the duty which they owed the bank.

Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325.

Plaintiffs failed to exercise reasonable care in verifying their account with defendant.

Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969; Myers v.

by the skilful character of the forgery, his omission to discover the forgery was held not to shift upon him the loss, which in the first instance was the loss of the bank.

That a duty rests upon a depositor to make some examination of the pass book and vouchers is finally determined in Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969.

That the depositor owes a duty to examine his pass book and vouchers to discover alterations, as distinguished from forged checks, is the theory of Cincinnati Nat. Bank v. Cressy, 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 121.

2. Time of examination.

The examination must be made within a reasonable time. Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100.

Ten days is a reasonable time in which to make an examination where the depositor resides in the town in which the bank is situated. Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank, 103 Mo. App. 613, 77 S. W. 1002; McKen v. Boatmen's Bank, 74 Mo. App. 281.

In McKen v. Boatmen's Bank, supra, the receipt given by the depositor to the bank contained a clause that all claims of reclamation should be made in ten days.

The negotiable instruments law provides that no bank shall be liable to a depositor for the payment by it of a forged or raised check, unless within one year after the return to the depositor of the voucher of such payment, such depositor shall notify the bank that the check so paid was forged or raised. Under this statute a corporate depositor which had failed to notify the bank of a forgery until after the expiration of a year from the time the vouchers were returned to it was held to be precluded from recovering of the bank. Shattuck v. Guardian Trust Co. 204 N. Y. 200, 97 N. E. 517. The checks in this case were to be signed by the president and countersigned by the treasurer. The president's name was signed to the checks in question, but the treasurer's was forged. The pass book and vouchers were receipted for by the president, and the pass book was afterward given to the treasurer showing the balance, but the vouchers were not received by the treasurer. Time was counted from the date of the receipt of the pass book by the treasurer, but as both that date and the date of the receipt by the president were more than a year before the notification of the bank, this is immaterial.

3. Sufficiency of examination.

In the case of forgery it has been held that after the lapse of a reasonable time without objection being made, the presumption arises that the account as balanced and the checks charged therein are correct. But this presumption is only prima facie in its effect, and is liable to be repelled by showing that the error or fraud was not discoverable by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, or that there was no such appearance of things as to excite the suspicion of a reasonable man. Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325.

Reasonable care is the test applied in Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969. After stating that, when a depositor has in his possession a record of checks he has given, with dates, payees, and amounts, a comparison of the record with the returned checks will necessarily expose forgeries or alterations, the court continues: "Considering that the only certain test of the genuineness of the paid check may be the record, made by the depositor of the checks he has issued, it is not too much, in justice and fairness to the bank, to require of him, when he has such a record, to exercise reasonable care to verify the vouchers by that record."

It is stated in Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657, that the depositor's duty to the bank is discharged when he exercises such diligence as is required by the circumstances of the particular case, including the relations of the parties and the established or known usages of banking business.

In Brown v. Lynchburg Nat. Bank, 109 Va. 530, 64 S. E. 950, 17 Ann. Cas. 119, where the account of a depositor was fraudulently charged up by employees of the Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672, 44 Atl. 280; First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L.R.A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80, 14 So. 335.

No negligence on the part of defendant can be predicated upon the mere payment of the first four forged checks drawn to the order of Hennessey.

Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969; Myers v. Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672, 44 Atl. 280.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The important question presented on this appeal concerns the obligation of a depositor in a bank to examine his pass book and bank with amounts not withdrawn by him, a monthly statement was rendered to the depositor consisting of his canceled checks for the past month, a machine-made slip represented to contain a list of these checks, a statement showing the totals of debits and credits, and the balance to the credit of the depositor. The depositor did not keep a pass book, but relied solely on these statements rendered by the bank. His examination of these statements consisted of seeing that his checks as drawn were returned to him as vouchers, that his signature to the checks was genuine, and that the checks returned corresponded with the stubs from which they were taken, and of verifying the total debits and credits. He did not check the individual checks with the items on the machine-made list of checks, but assumed that this list corresponded with the checks returned with it, and correctly represented his withdrawals from the bank. He did not examine it to see if it contained any item of charge against his account not represented by a check. The defalcation could have been discovered by a comparison between the machine-made slip and the checks which he had drawn. Under this state of facts the cause of action was held to be one for the jury. The failure of the depositor to take the simple procedure necessary to discover the error was treated as not negligence barring a recovery from the bank as a matter of law.

In Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, supra, a case involving the payment of checks which had been altered as to amounts and also the names of the payees by a confidential clerk of the depositor, where there was a controversy as to whether the officers of the bank had exercised due caution before paying the altered checks, and whether the depositor omitted, to the injury of the bank, to do what ordinary care and prudence required of him, it was held to be a mixed question of law and fact for the determination of the jury.

In Cole v. Charles City Nat. Bank, 114 Iowa, 632, 87 N. W. 671, a depositor executed and delivered his note to the bank returned vouchers as a protection against the payment by the bank of forged checks. The action was brought to recover a large amount paid by the respondent on a series of forged checks drawn in the name of appellants and charged to their account. The forgeries were conceded, but the respondent defended against the repayment of the amounts by it paid out on said checks, with the exception of four subject to special consideration, on the ground that appellants had contributed to such payment by their negligence in not examining their pass book and vouchers, and that it had not been guilty of any negligence in paying the checks. The court ruled with the respondent on this defense as matter of law, and

and was given credit therefor in his pass book; he saw the entry made, but did not observe that it was not in the proper place in the book, but was on a page where the account had been fully settled and balanced; subsequently a debtor of his deposited in the bank a sum equal to that for which he had previously given his note, and this amount was credited in its proper place on the pass book. He, however, did not know of this payment by his debtor, and was told by the president of the bank that no such payment had been made. In his settlement with the bank he received credit for only one of these sums. Under these facts it was held for the jury to say what knowledge an examination of the pass book and vouchers would have or should have conveyed to the depositor.

The finding of facts that the depositor was not guilty of any negligence in regard to the discovery of the forgery, and that he was, in so far as the bank was concerned, reasonably prudent and careful, and that the payment of the checks was not caused by any negligence on his part, a finding which was supported by evidence, was held conclusive in Shipman v. Bank of State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L.R.A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821, 27 N. E. 371.

The depositor involved in Clark v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 164 N. Y. 498, 68 N. E. 659, caused his pass book and returned checks and the bank slip of checks paid to be examined soon after their return from the bank by an expert, who reported the account to be correct. It was held, however, in this case that a finding of fact had been made that the depositor was not negligent, and therefore this question was not before the appellate court. The forgery involved in this case consisted in raising the amounts for which checks had been drawn.

From the foregoing discussion it appears that the depositor is not at all events required to discover the forgery or alteration. But the duty to examine requires him, within a reasonable time from the return of his pass book and vouchers, to make an examination thereof with care which is refused to submit either proposition thus stated to the jury.

The important facts which gave rise to the controversy are as follows: Prior to May 18, 1904, the appellants had opened and maintained with the respondent a deposit account with considerable credit balances. Checks drawn on this account were signed by means of a rubber stamp imprinting the words, "Estate of David P. Morgan," and authenticated by the actual signature of either trustee. The appellants had in their employ a trusted clerk who was their immediate agent in dealing with the bank. He made deposits, filled out the body of checks, and obtained from the bank the pass book and vouchers and check list whenever the account was balanced. Between

May 18, 1904, and May 20, 1905, he forged twenty-eight checks, aggregating a large sum, and employing in his forgeries the simulated signature of the trustee Morgan. These checks were paid by the bank, and together with the genuine ones drawn during the same period were charged to the appellants on the books of the bank. Five times during the period the former's pass book was written up and balanced, and on each occasion the checks paid by the bank since the last balancing, together with an itemized statement or list thereof, and the pass book, were returned to appellants by delivery to their agent Hennessey. The latter withdrew from the bundle of vouchers and destroyed the checks forged by him and also the check list, and then, after delaying reasonable under the circumstances of the particular case. The exact examination which is required of a depositor is one which cannot be stated in a general way, but depends upon the facts of the particular case. In the following cases particular situations have been discussed:

A depositor who, on each occasion after the return of his pass book and checks, examined the account as rendered, with the assistance of a clerk who had been guilty of forgery, and who in the examination of the account covered up the forgery, was held to have notice of such forgery, on the theory that notice to the agent is notice to the principal, and therefore to have been negligent in not discovering the forgery, so that he could not recover from the bank the amount paid out on the forged checks. First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L.R.A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80, 14 So. 335.

A depositor who personally signs all his checks, which are written either by himself or by his clerk, is bound to discover, upon the return of the pass book and canceled checks to him, forged checks which are written in a strange handwriting, although the signatures are so well imitated as to defy detection. Israel v. State Nat. Bank, 124 La. 885, 50 So. 783.

The failure of a depositor to compare the returned checks with the stubs in the check book, which would have exposed alterations made in the checks, is negligence. Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969. The examination was entrusted by the depositor in this case to the clerk who had committed the forgeries, and, while not imputing to the depositor the knowledge which such clerk possessed, it is stated that there is no reason why the depositor was not chargeable with such information as a comparison of the checks with the check book would have imparted to an innocent party previously unaware of the forgeries.

It would have been necessary in Scanlon-Gipson Lumber Co. v. Germania Bank, 90 Minn. 478, 97 N. W. 380, in order to have discovered the fraud, for the corporation to have compared the amounts deposited in the bank with checks drawn by it upon other banking houses payable to the defendant bank. See fuller statement of this case supra.

The exact examination which was made by the depositor does not clearly appear from the report of Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501. It is stated that the depositor, on each occasion after the pass book had been written up and the vouchers returned, made an examination of the account by comparing the checks returned to him by his confidential clerk with the memorandum of checks in the margin of the check book, and the balance in the pass book with the balance appearing in the check book, and on each occasion they were found to correspond. He then compared the checks with the entries in the pass book by having the confidential clerk read the entries while he had the checks, and no discrepancy appearing the account was deemed to be correct and was not further examined. It appeared that the confidential clerk, who was guilty of forgery, by abstraction of the forged vouchers and by false balances and readings, deceived the depositor and prevented him from ascertaining by means of the examination as conducted the true state of the account and the facts of the forgery. This was held to relieve the depositor from any liability for the loss.

A depositor has fulfilled its duty in this regard when it has examined the pass book as written up and returned by the bank, checking the statements over with the depositor's books to verify their accuracy, and not pursuing the inquiry further when the bank's statements correspond with the cash book and check book, and no irregularities appear. It is not the duty of the depositor in this regard to pursue the inquiry further so as to discover the fact that an employee of the depositor, instead of depositing certain items, received the same in cash, a transaction that nowhere appeared in the statement of the account with the bank. National Bank v. Tacoma Mill Co. 104 C. C. A. 441, 182 Fed. 1. After stating that this could have been discovered as long as convenient, delivered the pass book and the genuine vouchers to Kissell, who understood that the rules of respondent required that the pass book should be balanced every month or two months, and that, after balancing, it was returned with the paid checks as vouchers and with a detailed list thereof.

The estate, through Hennessey as its book-keeper, kept a journal and ledger containing an account with the bank, and from which there were drawn off once or twice during the period in question trial balances. It also had a regular check book upon the stubs of which were entered the genuine checks presented to and paid by the bank. Kissell, who seems to have been the more active trustee, never asked for the check list which he knew was returned by the bank when the pass book was balanced up, and never examined the balances shown by the pass book, and which were struck after payment of the forged checks. He contented himself during the period in question with comparing the genuine vouchers permitted by Hennessey to come into his hands with the check book and with the other books of the estate, and which comparison, of course, disclosed no signs of Hennessey's forgeries. The other trustee, in whatever examinations he made, never examined the pass book or the check list. On opening their account the appellants had arranged for the payment of interest thereon at a considerable rate, and the amount of this interest, as credited on the pass book, indicated much smaller balances by sending out to customers for their statements of account, the court continues: "We think, however, the duty of a depositor towards his bank in relation to the examination of the bank statements made in connection with its writing up and balancing the depositor's pass book does not reach to that extremity. The statements, as we have shown, are rendered for the purpose of advising the depositor of the state of his account. If those statements tally with the deposit slips made up by the depositor and the checks drawn against the bank, and if the balances agree one with the other, the depositor is not obliged to look further nor to bear in mind some irregularity that may appear elsewhere in his general books, although a searching inquiry might lead to a discovery of the fraud." But see Scanlon-Gipson Lumber Co. v. Germania Bank, supra.

4. Delegation to agents.

The examination of the pass book and vouchers may be delegated to an agent. Shipman v. Bank of State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L.R.A. 79, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821, 27 N. E. 371; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; National Bank v. Tacoma Mill Co. 104 C. C. A. 441, 182 Fed. 1.

The depositor may intrust the examination of the pass book and vouchers to an agent, provided he used ordinary care in selecting such agent. Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank, 103 Mo. App. 613, 77 S. W. 1002; National Bank v. Tacoma Mill Co. supra. See First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L.R.A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80, 14 So. 335, supra.

As to the depositor's right to recover the amount of a forged or check paid by a bank, as affected by the fact that he intrusted the examination of vouchers to the employee who was guilty of the original fraud, see note to First Nat. Bank v. Richmond Electric Co. 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 744.

5. Doctrine of account stated.

It is sometimes held that silence on the L.R.A.1915D.

part of a depositor who has received from the bank a pass book and canceled checks showing the state of his account upon a balance thereof amounts to an admission of the correctness of the entries of debits and credits in the pass book. In such a case the account is presumed to be correct until shown otherwise. Benton County Bank v. Walker, 85 Iowa, 728, 51 N. W. 241 (notes given by depositor charged to his account); Schoonover v. Osborne Bros. 108 Iowa, 453, 79 N. W. 263 (interest charges by bank); Des Moines Nat. Bank v. Sisson, 143 Iowa, 191, 121 N. W. 533 (accounting for collateral claimed incorrect); Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731 (forged check); Harley v. Eleventh Ward Bank, 76 N. Y. 618 (contest over an item of credit); August v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 13 N. Y. S. R. 956, 1 N. Y. Supp. 139 (forged indorsement); Nodine v. First Nat. Bank, 41 Or. 386, 68 Pac. 1109 (failure to credit deposits). See Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100, and Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325, infra.

If the incorrectness is not shown by the evidence, the account stands. McLaughlin v. First Nat. Bank, 71 Ill. App. 329. (The claim here was that some deposits had not been placed to the credit of the depositor, double charges of interest had been made, etc.) Clark v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 11 Daly, 239.

The failure to examine the pass book in such cases merely places on the depositor the burden of showing that the balance as returned is not correct; it does not estop him to show error in the account. Rettig v. Southern Illinois Nat. Bank, 147 Ill. App. 193 (depositor claimed certain items to have been improperly charged against her); Farry v. Farmers' & M. Bank, — N. J. Eq. —, 58 Atl. 305 (depositor claimed certain items were improperly charged to her account); Shipman v. Bank of State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L.R.A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821, 27 N. E. 371 (forged indorsement); Hutchinson v. Market Bank, 48 Barb. 302 (dispute as to credit).

than appeared on the books of the estate, or than would have appeared on the pass book except for payment of the forged checks.

The general rule of law is that a bank may pay and charge to its depositor only such sums as are duly authorized by the latter, and, of course, a forged check is not authority for such payment.

It is, however, permitted to a bank to escape liability for repayment of amounts paid out on forged checks, by establishing that the depositor has been guilty of negligence which contributed to such payments, and that it has been free from any negligence. That is the nature of the defense urged in this case.

I shall not consider in detail the evidence by which it is to be decided the appellants' claim that the bank itself was negligent. Several reasons are assigned why the question of its negligence at least should have been submitted to the jury. These assignments of negligence involve a consideration of the particular facts disclosed in this case, rather than a controversy concerning any principles of law, and I shall therefore content myself with simply stating that, after an examination of all of the evidence, we do not think that there was any which would have justified the jury in deciding that the respondent was negligent in paying the forged checks which are in dispute. It conceded its liability on the checks which were paid by it before and at the date when the pass book was first balanced and returned to the appellants, and the jury de-

It has been held that the evidence to open up such an account should be clear and satisfactory. Farry v. Farmers' & M. Bank, — N. J. Eq. —, 58 Atl. 305. In this case the account had extended over a number of years, had been balanced a number of times; the claim of irregularity was that certain charges had been made without vouchers. It is stated that vouchers for the payments were returned by the bank to the depositor with the pass book, and an examination of the pass book in connection with the vouchers, if made at the time, would have disclosed any charges without vouchers, and the question of propriety of such charges could have been settled while the transaction was fresh in the minds of the parties. It is further stated that the circumstance of the account having been overdrawn when the pass book was returned was a matter which specially imposed on the depositor the duty of immediate examination of the account. Under these circumstances it is stated that, while the account may be questioned for fraud or mistake, not only must the burden of proving the fraud or mistake be upon the complainant, but, since the particular charge upon which fraud or mistake is based in this case is the absence of any voucher for the charge, and these vouchers had been for years in the possession of the depositor, and the bank has lost control of the evidence on which it was entitled to rely, proof of the impropriety of the charge should be clear and satisfactory.

The balancing of a pass book and the return thereof with the canceled checks to the depositor on one account which the bank has with the depositor do not amount to an account stated as to another and separate account. Second Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 200.

While the duty of the depositor to examine his pass book is not the angle from which this theory views this question, that duty is necessarily implied. Unless the depositor does examine his pass book, the account as set forth by the bank therein becomes an account stated. This places the burden of proof upon the depositor in case L.R.A.1915D.

he thereafter discovers error therein, to show such error. The theory of account stated is more frequently applied to mistakes, but has been applied in case of forgeries, as shown in the foregoing.

It has been held that the bank is estopped by an entry in a pass book and a balance struck thereon from making a different showing, in the absence of fraud or error. Greenhalgh v. First Nat. Bank, 226 Pa. 184, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1016, 75 Atl. 260, 18 Ann. Cas. 330.

b. Doctrine that an examination is not required.

It was the theory of Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, that a depositor is under no duty to examine his pass book and returned canceled checks for the protection of the bank; that the book is balanced and the checks returned for his protection, and not for the protection of the bank. Consequently, it was held that the bank was not relieved from liability for the payment of checks forged by an employee of the depositor. The discussion as to the duty of the depositor to examine his pass book and vouchers appears in that part of the opinion devoted to forged checks which had been presented and paid after a balancing of the pass book and return thereof with forged checks which had been presented and paid before. It appears, however, that the amount of the checks which had been paid after the balancing was stricken from the judgment by the lower court, and the appeal was by the bank from a judgment for those paid before. The statement as to the duty of a depositor as to examination of his pass book and vouchers appears therefore to be dictum, and is so treated in Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969.

Upon the point that the depositor owes no duty to the bank to examine his pass book and vouchers, the case of Weisser v. Denison, supra, is cited in Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 65 Ill. 60, 16 Am. Rep. 576, and Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Nichols terminated on a special submission of that particular question that the time which elapsed between the return of this pass book and the payment of the next check thereafter was of sufficient length to give the appellants a reasonable opportunity for an examination and ascertainment of the condition of the account which disclosed the payment of the forged checks.

There then remains the single question already outlined, and which will be discussed, whether the appellants were guilty of negligence, after the lapse of a reasonable time, in not examining their pass book and list of vouchers and ascertaining what they were being charged with, and thus discovering the existence of the forged checks. It will be remembered that on five occasions when their account was written up all they did was to compare the genuine vouchers, which their dishonest clerk permitted to reach their hands, with their check book and ledger, and that they did not ask for the check list, which itemized all paid checks, both genuine and forged, or examine the pass book, which showed balances after deducting forged checks.

It is well established that appellants owed the duty of making some examination and verification of their account with the bank when the pass book and vouchers were returned. This is conceded by them, but they

& S. Co. 223 Ill. 41, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 752, 79 N. E. 38, with approval, although those cases finally turned on the fact that the bank had been negligent in paying the checks.

The view is taken in Cincinnati Nat. Bank v. Creasy, 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 121, that a depositor is under no duty to examine his pass book and returned vouchers for the purpose of discovering forgeries of his signature. It is stated, obiter, that in the case of an alteration he has such an interest in the discovery as to put upon him the duty of examining the checks to protect himself as well as the bank.

That the retention of a pass book without objection constitutes a settled account was denied in Kepitigalla Rubber Estates v. National Bank [1909] 2 K. B. 1010, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 964, 100 L. T. N. S. 516, 25 Times L. R. 402, 53 Sol. Jo. 377, 14 Com. Cas. 116, 16 Manson. 234. In following this case the court in Walker v. Manchester & L. Dist. Bkg. Co. 108 L. T. N. S. 728, states that the authorities are rather against the contention that there is a duty on the part of the customer to examine his pass book, but the point is not very important, because, even if there were a duty, the particular loss by honoring the first check was not caused by the nonperformance of that duty. It is then stated that it is true that if the depositor had found out about the first check he would have gotten rid of the fraudulent clerk and the subsequent forgeries would have been avoided, but the fact that he did not do so was not in law the cause of the subsequent checks being forged. "At the most it was a causa sine qua non; but that will not do. It is therefore unnecessary in this case to consider whether in no case is there a duty on the part of the customer to examine his pass book, because, even assuming there is such a duty, the breach of it would not be said to be the effective cause of the loss in this case."

In Bank of England v. Vagliano [1891] A. C. 107, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 145, 64 L. T. N. S. 353, 39 Week. Rep. 657, 55 J. P. 678, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 695, the court states merely, in answer to an argument that the retention of a pass book by a depositor without objection constitutes a settlement of accounts, and the further argument that the depositor had been guilty of negligence with respect to the examination of the vouchers, that there is no evidence to show what, as between a customer and his banker, is the implied contract as to the settlement of account by such a dealing with the pass book, or that, having regard to the ordinary course of dealing between a banker and his customers, the depositor had done anything which could be considered neglect of his duty to the bank or negligence on his part.

Under a statute providing that where a signature on a bill is forged, the forged signature is wholly inoperative unless the party whose signature is forged is precluded from setting up the forgery, the fact that monthly statements made by the bank to its depositor were not objected to was held not to preclude the depositor from setting up a forgery. It is stated that these documents cannot amount to a ratification, since the forgery was not known nor even suspected. The fact that the depositor was the Crown was noted, and it is stated that the Crown cannot be estopped. Two of the judges, however, were of the opinion that even an ordinary depositor could recover in this instance. Bank of Montreal v. Rex, 38 Can. S. C. 258.

In Kemble v. National Bank, 94 App. Div. 544, 88 N. Y. Supp. 246, affirmed in 183 N. Y. 545, 76 N. E. 1098, it is stated that a depositor is under no duty to the bank to examine his bank book to discover whether the bank cashier has correctly counted money deposited. Continuing further, it is stated that if it could be held that such a duty was owing from the depositor, an estoppel could not arise where there was no evidence whatever of any prejudice which had resulted to the bank from neglect of this duty on the part of the depositor.

See Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175, infra.

III. Duty to examine for forged indorsement.

The duty of a depositor to examine his account as shown by the pass book and vouchers does not extend to discovering a insist that this duty was fully discharged, by comparing with the check book the genuine vouchers, which Hennessey allowed to reach them. The record before us, however, discloses how incomplete and ineffective this examination was even as against the primitive methods which Hennessey employed to prevent detection of his wrongdoing by suppression and destruction of the forged vouchers and check list. On the other hand, if they had examined the check list and pass book, and if necessary compared them with their own books, they would have discovered at once the payment and debit to their account of checks which they had not drawn, and the forgeries would have been uncovered.

There is no question about that, of course. The only question is whether a jury would have been permitted to say that they were free from negligence when they closed their eyes or turned them away from these certain means of detection of their own agent's wrongdoing which were furnished to them for that very purpose by the bank. I do not think it would have been permitted to so determine. Negligence in this case means the neglect to do those things dictated by ordinary business customs and prudence and fair dealing toward the bank, which if done would have prevented the wrongdoing which resulted from their omission. We may take notice of the custom practically forged indorsement of the payee of a check where there is no reason to suspect payment to the wrong person. Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke, 81 Ga. 597, 2 L.R.A. 96, 7 S. E. 738; German Sav. Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 101 Iowa, 530, 63 Am. St. Rep. 399, 70 N. W. 769, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 349; Murphy v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 191 Mass. 159, 114 Am. St. Rep. 595, 77 N. E. 693; Jordan Marsh Co. v. National Shawmut Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 250, 87 N. E. 740; Masonic Ben. Asso. v. First State Bank, 99 Misc. 610, 55 So. 408; United Security Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 185 Pa. 586, 40 Atl. 97; Califf v. First Nat. Bank, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 412.

In accordance with the rule of these cases, it is stated in Guaranty State Bank & T. Co. v. Lively, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 211, that when checks are returned to a depositor by a bank he is not charged with notice that the indorsement thereon has been forged, but when he has ascertained the genuineness of his signature to the check and the correctness of the sum, he has performed his duty.

The court in Brixen v. Deseret Nat. Bank, 5 Utah, 604, 18 Pac. 43, expressed an opinion in accordance with these cases, but the decision in that case was finally rested upon the fact that the bank had been negligent in paying the check.

A depositor whose check had been paid upon a forged indorsement of the payee, and whose pass book had been returned with the check charged up to him, in which condition the matter remained for over a year, was allowed to recover upon discovery of the forgery the amount of the check, in Kuhn v. Frank, 7 Ohio L. J. 134.

A holding in effect the same results from the rule announced in Harter v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 63 N. J. L. 578, 76 Am. St. Rep. 224, 44 Atl. 715, that the return to the depositor of his check with a forged indorsement, together with the balanced pass book, casts upon him only the duty of exercising reasonable diligence and care to examine the vouchers and the account as stated by the bank, and to inform it of any errors thus discoverable, and that where the depositor was not in fact acquainted with the payee's signature, and there is no ground for claiming that he ought to have known it, he did not fail in his duty to the bank by not discovering the forgery on return of the check.

Harter v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank is approved in Pratt v. Union Nat. Bank, 79 N. J. L. 117, 75 Atl. 313, a case involving the forged indorsement of a check which had been retained by the depositor nearly two years after it had been returned to him with his pass book.

In Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175, an action by a depositor to recover a balance from the bank, which balance the bank claimed to have been paid out upon checks of the depositor, it appeared that the checks in question were procured by a confidential clerk of the depositor, who presented to the depositor fictitious accounts, in payment of which the depositor drew checks and handed them to the clerk to send to the payees. The clerk, instead of sending them to the payees, forged the name of the payees and drew the money. The court adhered to the doctrine announced in Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, and held that the depositor owed no duty to the bank which required him to examine his pass book or vouchers with a view to the detection of forgeries of his name. With reference to the question of the balance of the pass book and the return thereof with the vouchers to the depositor as being an account stated, it is held, in accordance with the earlier decision, that the proof of payment afforded by the stated account may be overthrown, and is overthrown, by proof of the forgery.

While citing Welsh v. German American Bank as authority, the court in Shipman v. Bank of State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L.R.A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821, 27 N. E. 371, states that the depositor had exercised sufficient care through an agent to discover the forged indorsements. There was a finding that the depositor had not been guilty of any negligence in failing to discover the forgery, and this finding, being supported by evidence, was taken as conclusive. It was accordingly held that the bank was liable to the depositor for checks paid out universal amongst banks at frequent intervals to write up and balance the pass books of their customers and return them with paid checks or other instruments as vouchers for the payments made and charged to the depositor. The appellants were business men and fully understood this. They apparently knew the rule of the bank requiring accounts to be written up every month or two, and they knew that there were returned with the pass book not only the vouchers, but an itemized list thereof as debited to the account. When they submitted their pass book to be thus written up, they in effect called for a statement of their account as kept by the bank; and, when this was furnished to them, is it to be thought that they satisfied the requirements of common prudence and fairness to the bank by absolutely disregarding the pass book and check list, which could not be easily falsified, and simply comparing a bundle of vouchers, which might be much more easily manipulated by ready abstraction of vouchers? The pass book is the statement of the bank's version of the account and the fundamental basis for comparison with the depositor's own records. The paid checks which are returned are the vouchers of the bank for its account as written on the pass book, and, if they are to be made the medium of comparison of accounts, the depositor at least ought to endeavor to know that they tally with the pass book. Otherwise he has made no reliable comparison or verification. Thereby it upon the indorsement of the payee forged by the depositor's employee, and also those made payable to a fictitious payee by the employee without the knowledge of the depositor, and the indorsement of such fictitious payee forged by him.

Shipman v. Bank of State was approved in Kearny v. Metropolitan Trust Co. 110 App. Div. 236, 97 N. Y. Supp. 274, affirmed in 186 N. Y. 611, 79 N. E. 1108, but it was there stated that, even if it be conceded that the depositor was negligent in failing to discover the forgery of the indorsement, the bank is not aided, because it did not appear that it was injured in any way by his failure.

No distinction is made in the New York cases just cited, between forged indorsements and forgeries appearing on the face of the check, but in Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969, this distinction is made in an obiter statement to the effect that the depositor's sources of information and means of knowledge may lead to an exposure of forgeries or alterations, but will give no information as to the genuine character of the indorsements, and because the depositor has no greater knowledge of that subject than the bank, it owes the bank no duty in regard thereto.

In Harlem Co-op. Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Mercantile Trust Co. 10 Misc. 680, 31 N. Y. Supp. 790, where the depositor's treasurer examined the returned checks as received from the bank with regard to their dates and amounts, but did not examine the signature of the payees as indorsed thereon, it is stated that, although these indorsements might have been verified by reference to the records of the association, such verification would appear to be an act in excess of the duty owing from the depositor to the bank.

A bank was held liable to a depositor for an amount paid on a check drawn by him, on which the indorsement of payee had been forged, about seven years after he had received the pass book and forged check from the bank, in Bank of British N. A. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 91 N. Y. L.R.A. 1915D.

106. It is stated that the depositor lost none of his rights by receiving, under a mistake as to the facts, the check as one properly paid and charged to its account by the bank.

A bank was held liable to a depositor for the amount paid on a check the indorsement of the payee of which had been forged, in National Marine Underwriters v. National Bank, 9 Misc. 362, 29 N. Y. Supp. 698; but there is no discussion as to the duty of the depositor to discover this forgery; in fact it is stated that the matter of an account stated had nothing to do with the question upon which the determination of the case depended.

On the contrary, in Wind v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 39 Mo. App. 72, the duty of a depositor to examine his pass book and vouchers was held to extend to the detection of forged indorsements. The cases discussed in the opinion are cases of forgeries on the face of the check, and the court fails to distinguish the questions. And it was held in the case that no injury having been suffered by the bank, the depositor might recover. A similar holding appears in Lieber v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 137 Mo. App. 158, 117 S. W. 672.

IV. Effect of failure to comply with duty.

a. In general.

The failure of the depositor to comply with his duty as defined in II. a, supra, does not necessarily throw the loss due to an error or payment on forgeries or alterations on him.

Under the theory of an account stated as discussed above, the failure of the depositor to make the requisite examination simply places upon him the burden of proof as to mistakes or erroneous payments. See II. a, 5, supra.

In case of forgeries and alterations the failure of a depositor to comply with his duty of examination is, by the weight of judicial opinion, made to depend upon the fore it seems to me that, when the appellants relied for verification merely on a comparison of vouchers without any effort to verify these by comparison with the check list or pass book, they did not exercise reasonable methods. On the other hand, it seems to me that when, having obtained from the bank a list of vouchers and balanced pass book, which were intended to give and did give them a correct basis for comparison and verification, they disregarded these, they were guilty of such obvious oblivion of their duties that no extended argument can make plainer their negligence than does the mere recitals of the facts. The authorities which have been called to our attention do not establish anything in opposition to these views, but the later ones tend to sustain them.

It is true that in Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, some things were said by the judges who wrote which question the doctrine that a depositor owes any duty to a bank to examine his pass book or vouchers with a view to the detection of forgeries, but the decision itself is only authority for the proposition that the bank was not relieved from liability for forged checks which had been paid before the account was balanced by the failure of the depositor to subsequently discover the forgeries.

In Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501, the court had before it for consideration the payment by the defendant of forged checks. The plaintiffs on further question whether the bank has suffered any injury from such failure.

Although the depositor has failed in the duty which rests upon him as to the examination of his account from the returned pass book and canceled checks, still he is entitled to recover from the bank money wrongfully paid out by it, if it has suffered no damage from the depositor's dereliction of duty. Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100; Wind v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 39 Mo. App. 72; McKeen v. Boatmen's Bank, 74 Mo. App. 281; Lieber v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 137 Mo. App. 158, 117 S. W. 672; Weinstein v. National Bank, 69 Tex. 38, 5 Am. St. Rep. 23, 6 S. W. 171.

In Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100, the forged check was paid on May 29; on the 4th of the following September the pass book was returned to the depositor, showing the statement of his account at that date, and the fact that he was charged with the amount of this check, which was returned to him as one of the vouchers. On the 11th of the following December another statement of the depositor's account was rendered to him by the bank, in which appeared the balance shown by the previous account. The depositor did not at once examine the check in dispute when it was returned to him with his balanced pass book in September, nor until some time in the month of December. He at first intimated to the bank a doubt of its genuineness in the latter part of December, but did not give notice that he actually claimed it to be a forgery until the 1st of the following February. There was nothing in the evidence showing that if notice had been given on the day the check was returned, the bank would have been in any better position to discover the forgery or the person who uttered it, or to avail itself of any of the coercive measures known to the law by which to retrieve the loss, than it was at the time it received notice. Upon this state of facts the court stated that if the depositor "was negligent, it was not shown that the defendant [bank] suffered any damage thereby, and for that reason such negligence cannot be allowed as a defense to plaintiffs [the depositor] right to recover in this action."

See Israel v. State Nat. Bank, 124 La. 885, 50 So. 783, infra.

But if the bank has suffered through the dereliction of duty on the part of the depositor, the depositor is precluded from recovering from the bank. Weinstein v. National Bank, 69 Tex. 38, 5 Am. St. Rep. 23, 6 S. W. 171.

In Fifth Nat. Bank v. Iron City Nat. Bank, 92 Tex. 436, 49 S. W. 368, it was held to be the duty of one bank doing business with another, to examine a statement received from such other and notify it as to the lack of authority of one of its agents to require the application of its account to the discharge of his notes, so that its failure to do so would estop it from denying such authority, if such failure operated to the prejudice of the bank rendering the statement. This was followed in the second appeal of this case, reported in 31 Tex. Civ. App. 308, 71 S. W. 612.

One theory is that upon the depositor's failure in his duty, the account as set forth in the pass book becomes an account stated. Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 110 (dictum).

The three foregoing cases indicate that the entire loss falls upon the depositor where the bank has been injured by his failure to make the required examination. The question, however, is not discussed as against the theory that only so much of the loss as is due to the depositor's dereliction of duty falls upon him.

The latter theory is adhered to in some cases, and it is held that where a depositor has failed in his duty in examining his account as shown by the pass book and canceled checks, which have been returned to him, the bank is not relieved entirely of payment to him of the amount wrongfully paid out by it, but only for the damage which it has suffered by reason of the depositor's failure. First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L.R.A. 426, 46 Am. St.;

each occasion, after the pass book had been written up and the vouchers returned, made an examination of the account by comparing the checks returned to them with the memorandum of checks in the margin of the check book, and the balance in the pass book with the balance appearing in the check book, and on each occasion they were found to correspond. One of the plaintiffs then compared the checks with entries in the pass book by having the dishonest clerk who had committed the forgeries read the entries while he had the checks, and, no discrepancy appearing, the account was deemed to be correct and was not further examined. It appeared that the clerk by abstraction of forged vouchers and by false balances and readings deceived the plaintiffs and prevented them from ascertaining, by means of the examination thus conducted, the true state of the account and the fact of the forgeries. But it will be noticed that the plaintiffs did precisely what the appellants in this case failed to do when they compared their pass book as written up by the bank with their own books, and that they were deceived by the false balances which their clerk had placed upon their own books. The court, while recognizing fully the obligation resting upon the depositor to make some examination of his account with the bank when made up, held that he was under no duty to so conduct the examination that it would of inevitable necessity lead to the discovery of the fraud; that he was only bound to use reasonable diligence; and that on the facts as developed in that case such diligence by the depositor was established.

In Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 230, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969, 973, Rep. 80, 14 So. 335; National Dredging Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Penn. (Del.) 580, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 130 Am. St. Rep. 158, 69 Atl. 607; Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969.

b. In case of a series of forgeries.

Where there is a series of checks forged and paid at different times, some before the depositor is chargeable with notice, and some after he is thus charged, the bank is entitled to invoke the equitable doctrine of estoppel as to those paid after the depositor is chargeable with notice, if the failure of the depositor to call attention to the forgeries misleads the bank into paying the subsequent checks. Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank, 96 Mo. App. 125, 70 S. W. 173.

This is stated to be the rule in Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219, 57 L.R.A. 529, 63 N. E. 969, although it does not appear that the facts there called for this decision.

In other cases of a series of forgeries, the element of injury to the bank is not given special notice, but it is held that as to the checks paid after the depositor is chargeable with notice arising from his duty to examine, the loss falls upon him. It is the theory that if the bank had been notified of the forgeries at the time when the depositor was chargeable with notice, the subsequent forgeries would not have been carried out. First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L.R.A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80, 14 So. 335; National Dredging Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Penn. (Del.) 580, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 130 Am. St. Rep. 158, 69 Atl. 607. It is evident, however, that, for the bank to invoke the equitable ground of estoppel, it must appear that it has been misled to its injury.

In Israel v. State Nat. Bank, 124 La. 885, 50 So. 783, the bank was held liable for the checks which had been paid before the depositor was chargeable with notice by virtue of having received his pass book and canceled checks, without any question as to whether it had been injured or not; while as to the checks which were paid after the depositor was thus charged with notice, the bank was held not liable.

In National Bank v. Tacoma Mill Co. 104 C. C. A. 441, 182 Fed. 1, there was a series of speculations by an employee, but, as the court held the depositor had fulfilled his duty as to inspection of the pass book, the question as to the bank's liability for speculations occurring after he had had an opportunity to inspect his pass book and discover them did not arise.

See Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731; Brown v. Lynchburg Nat. Bank, 109 Va. 530, 64 S. E. 950, 17 Ann. Cas. 119; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Walker v. Manchester & L. Dist. Bkg. Co. 108 L. T. N. S. 728, 29 Times L. R. 492, supra, in all of which there was a series of forgeries.

c. Necessity that bank show injury.

Where the right of the bank to throw a loss upon the depositor is dependent upon injury to the bank, the burden has been placed upon the bank to show that it has been injured by the dereliction in the depositor's duty.

Consequently, where it has not shown such injury, it will be presumed that it suffered none. Wind v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 39 Mo. App. 72; McKeen v. Boatmen's Bank, 74 Mo. App. 281.

A depositor who failed to examine his balance, pass book, and returned checks, including a forged one, for an unreasonable time after they had been returned to him, is entitled to recover from the bank the amount of the forged check paid by it, where there is no showing that the bank suffered by the delay. Janin v. London & the court had before it a case of payment by the bank of checks which had been raised. It appeared that a comparison of the returned vouchers with the check stubs would have exposed the alterations in the checks, and, as it was not necessary to examine the pass book to accomplish such detection, that phase of a depositor's obligation was not discussed. The failure to detect the alteration was due to the fact that the verification of the account was as a rule intrusted to the dishonest clerk who had raised the checks. The court in the opinion written by Judge Cullen reaffirmed the general rule laid down in the Frank Case, of an obligation on the part of the depositor to examine his account and vouchers, and, in reaching the conclusion that the plaintiffs were chargeable with knowledge of the fraudulent alterations which would have been disclosed by an honest comparison with the vouchers which were returned with the check book, said: "It is clear, therefore, that at all times a comparison of the returned checks with the stubs in the check books would have exposed the alterations made in the checks. Of course, the knowledge of the forgeries that Davis possessed, from the fact that he himself was the forger, was in no respect to be attributed to the plaintiffs. But we see no reason why they were not chargeable with such information as a comparison of the checks with the check book would have imparted to an innocent party previously unaware of the forgeries. The plaintiffs' position may be no worse because they intrusted the examination to Davis instead of to a third person; but they can be no better off on that account. If they would have been chargeable with the negligence or fail-

S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L.R.A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100.

The burden has been placed upon the bank to show injury even as to a series of forgeries. See Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Kenneth Invest. Co. v. National Bank, 96 Mo. App. 125, 70 S. W. 173.

But in Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657, it is stated that if the depositor was guilty of negligence in not discovering and giving notice of the fraud of his clerk, the bank was thereby prejudiced, because it was prevented from taking steps, by the arrest of the criminal, or by an attachment of his property or other form of proceedings, to compel restitution; that it is not necessary that it should be made to appear by evidence that benefit would certainly have accrued to the bank from an attempt to secure payment from the criminal; that an inquiry as to the damages in money actually sustained by the bank by reason of the neglect of the depositor to give notice of the forgery might be proper in an action to recover damages for a violation of the depositor's duty, but in a suit by the depositor in effect to falsify its stated account to the injury of the bank, whose defense is that the depositor has by his conduct ratified or adopted the payment of the altered checks, and thereby induced it to forbear taking steps for its protection against the person committing the forgeries, the right to seek and compel restoration and payment from the person committing the forgeries is in itself a valuable one, and it is sufficient if it appears that the bank, by reason of the negligence of the depositor, was prevented from promptly, and it may be effectively, exercising it.

V. Effect of negligence of bank.

If the bank has been negligent in failing to discover the alteration or forgery of a check it is liable for paying it, notwithstanding L.R.A.1915D.

standing the depositor failed in his duty to examine the account. National Dredging Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Penn. (Del.) 580, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 130 Am. St. Rep. 158, 69 Atl. 607; Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 65 Ill. 69, 16 Am. Rep. 576; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Nichols & S. Co. 223 Ill. 41, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 752, 79 N. E. 38; New York Produce Exch. Bank v. Houston, 95 C. C. A. 251, 169 Fed. 785.

In Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 65 Ill. 69, 16 Am. Rep. 576, a depositor, being obliged to leave the city for a short time, gave to a clerk a power of attorney authorizing him to draw checks on the bank for fifteen days, and lodged this power of attorney with the bank. After his return at the end of the fifteen days the clerk continued to draw checks and the bank to pay them. This is held to constitute negligence on the part of the bank which cannot be excused merely by the failure of the depositor to examine the returned checks.

A bank which has paid an overdraft of a local agent upon the account of his principal, who resides in another state, without ascertaining the authority of the agent, cannot assert failure of the principal to examine the pass book and returned vouchers after the balancing of the account, as an estoppel upon the principal to deny liability for the overdraft, since the failure to ascertain the authority of the agent is in itself negligence. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Nichols & S. Co. 223 Ill. 41, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 752, 79 N. E. 38.

A bank which cashed a check upon the forged indorsement of the payee named therein was held negligent where it had the genuine signature of the payee in the bank where it was accessible, and it is apparent that, had a comparison been made between the genuine signature in its possession and the signature on the check, the forgery would have been detected. Brixen v. Deseret Nat. Bank, 5 Utah, 504, 18 Pac. 43.

W. A. E.

ure of another clerk in the verification of the accounts, they must be equally so for the default of Davis, so far as the examination itself would have disclosed the facts. We think it plain, therefore, that the finding of the referee that the plaintiffs were not negligent in the examination of the pass book and vouchers is without evidence to sustain it, unless the plaintiffs discharged their duty to the defendant when they committed the examination to a proper clerk, and were not responsible for the manner in which the clerk performed the task. From the language of the report of the learned referee it would seem as if this last were the theory on which his decision proceeded. We do not think it can be sustained."

In addition to these decisions of our own court it was distinctly held in Myers v. Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672, 44 Atl. 280, and in Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657, that the depositor who sends his pass book to be written up and receives it back with his paid checks as vouchers is bound to examine the pass book and vouchers, and to report to the bank, without unreasonable delay, any errors which may be discovered. These decisions, it seems to me, sustain the conclusion that the appellants were remiss in their obligations, and that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and which course I recommend.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Willard Bartlett, Chase, Cuddeback, Hogan, and Miller, JJ., concur.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

L. C. DOW et al., Admr., etc., of Eulalie Lillie, Deceased, et al.,

v.

GEORGE L. LILLIE, Admr., etc., of Eulalie Lillie, Deceased, Respt.

(26 N. D. 512, 144 N. W. 1082.)

Appeal — petition to sell decedent's estate.

1. An order of the district court which confirms an order of the county court in an ancillary administration refusing to grant a petition, filed by the principal administrator under the direction of the principal court, for the sale of real estate in North Dakota and the transmission of the proceeds thereof to such principal court for the payment of the debts there provided, is a final order, affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding, and is applicable as such under § 7225, Rev. Codes, 1905.

Same — consideration of evidence.

2. In the case of such an appeal, and where the trial in the district court was had upon a stipulation of facts and depositions which were included in the certified record on appeal from the county to the district court, and no oral evidence was taken in the latter court, no statement of the case is necessary, and the supreme court can take into consideration the evidence as presented by the depositions and the stipulations.

Executor — rejection of claim — effect.

3. In allowing or rejecting a claim, an administrator acts merely as an auditor, and his refusal to allow such claim is not res judicata.

Same — ancillary administration — place of proof.

4. Where there is both a principal and an ancillary administration, creditors may prove their claims in either jurisdiction, and it is not always necessary that they should be proved in both.

Same — right of heirs.

5. Under the Code of North Dakota the heirs or devisees have no right to a decedent's property until his debts are paid. The creditors are the first preferred parties in interest, and, until satisfied, heirs or legatees have no enforceable interest.

Same — foreign claim — absence of proof — effect.

6. Where a resident of Iowa died in that state and administration of her estate was had, and on such administration a creditor proved his claim and said claim was allowed by the court, but there were not assets in such jurisdiction sufficient to pay the same, and an ancillary administration was had in North Dakota, where there was real estate belonging to the estate, but no money or personal property, and there were no debts, and a petition was filed in said ancillary administration by the administrator in the principal administration under the direction of said principal court, asking for the sale of the real estate in North Dakota and the transmission of the proceeds to said principal court for the payment of the debts there proved and allowed, held that said petition should have been granted, even though such debts had not been proved in North Dakota in the said ancillary administration.

Headnotes by BRUCE, J.

(January 8, 1914.)

Note. — Sale of real estate in state other than decedent's domicile to pay debts.

This note does not include cases where there is a power of sale in the will of the decedent.

For the subject of liability of heirs for L.R.A.1915D.

obligations of ancestor, see the note to Muldoon v. Moore, 21 L.R.A. 89.

For the question whether proceedings for sale of decedent's real property fall within the "omnibus" provision of the statute of limitations, see the note to Re Jones, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1304.

A PPEAL by petitioners from an order of the District Court for Bottineau County affirming an order of the County Court denying their petition for the sale of the real estate of Eulalie Lillie, deceased, in North Dakota, and the transmission of the proceeds thereof to petitioners for the payment of her debts in Iowa. Reversed.

Statement by Bruce, J.:

This litigation was started by the filing of a petition in proceedings pending in the county court of Bottineau county, North Dakota, relating to the administration of the estate of Eulalie Lillie, deceased. The petition was filed by the administrator in the principal administration of said estate held in the district court of Linn county, Iowa, such administrator having been directed to file the same by the presiding judge of the Iowa court. The petition alleged the principal administration in Iowa, the allowance of claims therein far in excess of the assets of said estate, and prayed the county court of Bottineau county, North Dakota, to direct the sale of the lands located in North Dakota and to transmit the proceeds to the administrator of the estate in Iowa, to be used in paying the debts there proved. The petition was heard by the county court of Bottineau county and denied. An appeal was seasonably taken from this order to the district court of Bottineau county. That court heard the proceedings upon the record which was made in, and which was sent up by, the county court, and on a stipulation Actions to enforce a claim directly against the land itself as distinguished from special proceedings to sell for debts are excluded.

Orders for the sale of land without the state.

The court of the state of decedent's domicile has, of course, no jurisdiction over the decedent's real property in another state.

Thus, where the state of Connecticut had granted to a man certain lands in the western reserve, in what is now Ohio, and thereafter deeded her jurisdictional claim to the United States, upon the death of the grantee intestate in Connecticut, the probate court there directed his administrator to sell the interest of the intestate in these lands for the payment of debts, and it was held that a sale made under this order was invalid and the title to the land remained in the heirs. Nowler v. Coit, 1 Ohio, 519, 13 Am. Dec. 640.

So, in Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435, it was observed that an administrator appointed at the domicile of an insolvent intestate, taking an order of the court there for the sale of land in another state, could not give anything by his deed.

See also the remark in Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. (Ala.) 380, that the orphans' court of the domicile could not subject the extraterritorial land to its jurisdiction and decree its sale for the payment of debts.

Where the executrix of a New Hampshire testator, who died owning land in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island, proved the will in New Hampshire and took a license from the court there to sell so much of the real estate as, with the personal estate, would pay the debts and incidental charges, and thereafter accordingly sold the Rhode Island land or some of it, it was held that her deed passed no title but that it was validated by a subsequent act of the Rhode Island legislature passed in that behalf, although the will was never probated in Rhode Island. Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542.

In Seldner v. Katz, 96 Md. 212, 53 Atl. 931, it was held that it was error for a L.R.A.1915D.

Maryland court of equity to order heirs at law or devisees of a Maryland decedent who was indebted to plaintiff, either to pay the debt or to sell lands in Ohio belonging to the decedent, and bring the money into the Maryland court for the payment of the debt, as there was no extraterritorial operation to the statute from which the equity courts of Maryland derived their authority to decree the sale of a deceased debtor's real estate for the payment of his debts; such statute providing that "where any person dies, leaving any real estate in possession, remainder or reversion, and not leaving a personal estate sufficient to pay his debts and costs of administration, the court, on any suit instituted by any of his creditors, may decree that all the real estate of such person, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be sold to pay his debts," etc. It was also held in the same case that if, by arrangements between the heirs, the realty or a part of it was vested in them, there could not be any claim that the Maryland court of equity should act in the premises, where there was no evidence showing that the lands in Ohio were answerable for the decedent's indebtedness under the laws of the state of Ohio, the debt in question being a simple contract debt.

In Allen v. Shanks, 90 Tenn. 359, 16 S. W. 715, where the executors of a Tennessee testator sold land in Arkansas, although the court seemed to think the will empowered them to sell land for the payment of debts, the court said: "The executors sold and conveyed the Arkansas plantation, and took notes of purchasers. This will was never proved in that state, and complainants have never qualified there. The decree of the chancery court did not authorize sales out of the jurisdiction in express terms, and we are unwilling to assume that such power was implied. The purchasers have not been brought before the court, so that we might affect them by our decree. We think these sales were invalid, and the executors cannot have credit for the notes of the purchasers, and will be chargeable for the rents of the property as if no sale had been made."

of facts. The record of the county court included the depositions on which the cause was originally tried. The district court affirmed the order of the county court in all respects, and an appeal was taken from this order to the supreme court. The facts as disclosed by the record, and the stipulations, are as follows: Eulalie Lillie at the time of her death was a resident of Marion, in the state of Iowa. On or about December 2, 1908, George L. Lillie, the respondent, filed a petition in the district court of Linn county, Iowa, asking that the estate of Eulalie Lillie be admitted to probate, and in the proceeding thus started an order was made appointing L. C. Dow and Josephine Lillie, two of the petitioners above named, as administrators. During her lifetime the said Eulalie Lillie had given to Karl W. Kendall notes aggregating $12,500. On April 27, 1909, these notes, together with other claims, were proved against the estate in Iowa and were allowed by the court and are now unpaid. The decedent also during her lifetime gave to petitioner the First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, her notes to the amount of $2,000. On April 23, 1909, these notes were also proved against the Iowa estate, and were allowed by the court in the sum of $1,650, which sum is still unpaid. Decedent left no real estate in the state of Iowa and only $200 in personal property. Decedent left no personal property in North Dakota, but did leave real estate which was appraised in the probate proceedings at $14,400. During

In Mowry v. McQueen, 80 Minn. 385, 83 N. W. 348, the merits were not important as it was held that under the circumstances the statute of limitations or the rules of the common law as to time would bar any action in equity in Minnesota to reach certain real property of an intestate resident in South Carolina, the land being situated in Wisconsin.

The question of exhaustion of domiciliary personal property.

There seems, in the absence of statute, to be no reason why the power of the local court should be restricted to cases where it is shown that the personal property in the place of principal administration is insufficient to pay the debts.

Thus, it has been held that the real property ought to be sold for the payment of debts without showing the want of personal property available for that purpose in the domiciliary administration. Lawrence's Appeal, 49 Conn. 411; Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202; Gilchrist v. Cannon, 1 Coldw. 581.

In Lawrence's Appeal, supra, where the executors of a decedent resident in New York proved his will there, took the rents of Connecticut real estate, and refused payment of claims of Connecticut creditors, although there was sufficient personalty in New York to pay all claims, it was held proper that eight years after his death at the request of a Connecticut creditor, the Connecticut court should admit the will to probate, appoint a local administrator with the will annexed, and should order land in Connecticut to be sold for the payment of claims in Connecticut. The court observed that it might well be found that the executors had refused to prove the will in Connecticut.

In Rosenthal v. Renick, supra, the executor of an Ohio will having died, letters with the will annexed were granted to two different persons respectively in Ohio and Illinois, and some claims being filed in Illinois, it was held that the Illinois land might be sold for the payment of debts L.R.A.1915D.

without showing that the personal property in Ohio was exhausted.

Where administration on the estate of a resident of Arkansas was taken out in Tennessee, where there was real property and a small amount of personal property, it was held that it was proper for the court of Tennessee to administer the estate and sell the land for the payment of the debts, if it appeared that there were debts exceeding the personal property, some of the creditors being residents in other states, without reference to the situation of the estate in Arkansas or to its solvency. Gilchrist v. Cannon, supra, where the court said: "It is an admitted principle of international law, that every state has the right to control and dispose of property actually within its jurisdiction; and it is the duty of every state to protect the rights of its own citizens, and to aid them in the recovery of their just debts, without the necessity of resorting, for satisfaction, to the distant forum of the original administration."

See also Partee v. Kortrecht, 54 Miss. 66, infra, "When the local administration is considered principal."

It was held in Prescott v. Durfee, 131 Mass. 477, that the Massachusetts probate court had jurisdiction to grant administration of the estate of a nonresident leaving only real estate in Massachusetts, although at the principal place of administration there was more than sufficient personal property to pay all his debts. The purpose of the application, it appears, was to subject the real estate in Massachusetts to a claim against the decedent by suit pending at the time of his death and under which the real property in Massachusetts had been attached.

But it has been held that the creditors ought, in the first place, to attempt to collect their claims at the place of domiciliary administration. Thus, where a testator resident in Louisiana died, leaving a will probated there, but was intestate as to real estate in Massachusetts, and there was an ample fund of personal property for the payment of all his debts in Louisiana, it the month of May, 1911, and after the approval and allowance of the claims of the petitioners Karl W. Kendall and First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, in the probate proceedings brought in the district court of Linn county, Iowa (which court had probate jurisdiction), a petition was filed in the county court in and for Bottineau county, North Dakota, asking that George Lillie be appointed administrator of the estate of Eulalie Lillie situated in the state of North Dakota, and such proceedings were had thereon that George L. Lillie was duly appointed and known as the administrator of such estate. On the 7th day of June, 1910, and on the 20th day of June, respectively, the said claims of the petitioners Karl W. Kendall and First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, for $14,510.93 and $1,650, respectively, were presented and filed with George L. Lillie, administrator in the county of Bottineau, North Dakota, and the judge of said court thereupon indorsed thereon the date of their filing. No other or further action was ever taken by the said administrator of George L. Lillie or by the said county court in reference thereto. On or about the 24th day of February, 1911, an order was made in the district court of Linn county, Iowa, on an application by the appellants and petitioners, Karl W. Kendall and First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, which prayed that the administrators of the decedent's estate in Iowa might be directed to apply to the county court of Bottineau county in North Dakota for an order was held to be error to grant a license to sell real estate in Massachusetts to pay the Massachusetts creditors and thus to disinherit the heirs in Massachusetts, it not having been shown that the creditors used diligence to collect their debts in Louisiana or that they met with any legal impediment there; and this was particularly so when the petitioner asking leave to sell the real estate was himself executor of the estate. Livermore v. Haven, 23 Pick. 116. It may be noted that an action was afterwards begun by the creditors against the administrator upon his Massachusetts bond, but the court held that he was not liable on this bond for the personal assets in Louisiana. Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 109.

What will be considered as debts.

An allowance provided by the laws of the domicile to be made to the widow and minor children of a deceased person out of his estate for their maintenance and support for the period of twelve months after his death, and which has preference over everything except funeral expenses and expenses of administration, cannot be regarded as an indebtedness that may properly be enforced, in the event of a deficiency of personal assets, against the realty of the decedent situated in another state or jurisdiction, where there is no law in such other state or jurisdiction that provides for any such allowance. Hansel v. Chapman, 2 App. D. C. 361.

In Cowden v. Jacobson, 165 Mass. 240, 43 N. E. 98, infra, "Miscellaneous," the court allowed sums paid by the Massachusetts administrator after the settlement of the account in Connecticut, being undertaker's services, and the cost of digging the grave, the decedent's body having been brought from Connecticut to Massachusetts for interment. As to this, the court observed: "No doubt, if there had been but one administrator, and he in Connecticut, these items would have been allowed in his account if duly presented to and paid by him. . . . But though the administration here was ancillary to that in Connecticut, we think that these expenses must be regarded as incurred by the ancillary administrator in the due course of his administration of the estate in this commonwealth, and that as such they should be paid out of the property available here for the payment of demands due to creditors residing in this state."

Must local debts be shown?

There seems to be some difference of opinion in the courts as to whether claims must be made in the local jurisdiction.

In Hobson v. Payne, 45 Ill. 158, upon a petition of the local administratrix appointed in Illinois where there was real property, the Illinois court gave an order for the sale of such real property for the payment of debts, it appearing that no debts had been proved locally, but that debts had been claimed against the estate in Kentucky, the place of domiciliary administration. On appeal the court reversed the decree, on the ground that it was made in a case not contemplated by the statute and for the purpose of paying supposed debts with which the local administratrix had no concern. The court observed that the creditors, if such there were, might have caused letters of administration to be taken out in Illinois and proved their claims, and the administratrix might then have obtained an order for the sale of land.

After the death of the executor of an Ohio will, and the appointment of separate administrators with the will annexed in Ohio and Illinois respectively, a claim which had been brought to judgment against the Ohio executor to be paid "in due course of administration" will not support a sale of land in Illinois for its payment, Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202, where the court said: "A judgment against an administrator in one state is no evidence of indebtedness against another administrator of the same decedent in another state, for the purpose of affecting assets received by the latter under his administration. The administrators are not regarded as in privity with each other."

directing the administrator of the North Dakota estate to institute proceedings to sell the land in North Dakota and to remit the proceeds of such sale to the administrators in Iowa. No claims have been proved against the estate in North Dakota, and the funds in the hands of the administrators in Iowa are entirely inadequate to pay the claims of the petitioners. Appellants Karl W. Kendall and First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, are both residents of Marion, Linn county, Iowa. This appeal is taken from the order of the district court affirming the order of the county court. There is no demand for a trial de novo, nor is there any settled statement of the case, nor any specifications of fact that the appellants desire this court to review.

Messrs. Engerud, Holt, & Frame for appellants.

Messrs. Noble, Blood, & Adamson for respondent.

Bruce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first point made by the respondent is that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground that the order is not an appealable one, and that the appellants have failed to demand a trial de novo, or to specify certain questions of fact that they desire the supreme court to review, or to make any settled statement, and have failed to enter up any judgment, or to appeal from any judgment. It is argued that the order of the district court was in reality one of

On the other hand, it was held in Dow v. LILLIE, that claims need not be made in the local jurisdiction.

In Thomas v. Williams, 80 Kan. 632, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1304, 103 Pac. 772, where land in Kansas was specifically devised by a resident of New York whose will was admitted to probate in New York, the devisees conveyed the land; thereafter the New York executor applied to the Kansas probate court of the county in which the land was situated for an order to sell it for the payment of debts and charges of administration, and this petition was granted over the objection of the devisees, and their grantee, and the decision affirmed. It was held that there being no statute of limitations applicable, the court would consider simply whether the delay was reasonable, that the evidence of the indebtedness, to wit, an order of the New York surrogate allowing it, while not conclusive against the devisees, was admissible in evidence against them. The court pointed out that the Kansas statute "in express terms (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2950) authorizes a foreign executor or administrator, where none has been appointed in Kansas, to sell real estate of the decedent situated in this state for the payment of debts in the same manner as though he had been appointed here. This provision establishes a connection between the foreign administration and the domestic proceedings. It makes the real estate in this jurisdiction, so far as necessary for the payment of debts, assets of the estate as administered elsewhere. It places the order of the foreign court allowing a claim against the administrator upon the same footing with a similar order made in this state. Neither is conclusive against the heirs, but either is admissible in evidence against them."

We are not informed whether or not there were any local debts in Higgins v. Reed, 48 Kan. 272, 29 Pac. 389, where the official headnote states that "when an executrix is appointed in another state, on the estate of a person dying out of this state, and no executor, executrix, or administrator thereon is appointed in this state, the L.R.A.1915D.

foreign executrix may file an authenticated copy of her appointment in the probate court of any county in this state in which there is real estate of the deceased, and then may be authorized, under an order of the court, to sell the real estate for the payment of debts of the decedent and the charges of administration, in the manner and upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the statute of this state."

No local debts seem to have been shown in Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. ed. 34, where the statute authorized the probate court where the real estate was situated to order its sale to satisfy the just debts of the decedent when the personal property was insufficient to pay them, upon representation of this insufficiency and "the same being made to appear" to the court. It was held in that case that a sale was properly ordered on an application by the local administrator showing that he was also the administrator in Illinois (the principal place of administration), accompanied by a certificate of the probate judge in Illinois showing that the personal property had been exhausted in payment of debts, that there remained debts unpaid to an amount named, and that the sale was necessary and proper to pay such debts, of the existence and amount of which due proof had been given. The decedent was domiciled in Illinois where administration was taken out and the same administrator took out letters in Iowa county, Wisconsin, where the decedent left personal property, and the application for sale was to the probate court of Grant county, Wisconsin, where the real property was located.

The question of time—reasonable delays.

In Durston v. Pollock, 91 Iowa, 668, 60 N. W. 221, cited in Dow v. LILLIE, the principal place of administration was Illinois, where the plaintiff was appointed administrator with the will annexed, and there was real property in Iowa, which was specifically devised by the will and which was not inventoried in Illinois, where claims were barred within two years from the granting the conclusions of law made by that court, and was not an appealable order, and that the appeal, if any, is one which should have been taken under § 7229 of the Code of 1905, the action being, according to the contention, an equitable one. It is also claimed that, even if the action is a law action, there is no settled statement, no notice of intention to move for a new trial, no motion for a new trial, no appeal from any order denying a new trial, and no appeal from any judgment. We are fully satisfied that the order appealed from was a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding, and was therefore appealable under § 7225, Rev. Codes 1905. Subdivision 2 of § 7225, Rev. Codes 1905, declares to be appealable a final order affecting a substantial right in a special proceeding.

Remedies in the courts of justice are, by the Code of North Dakota, divided into actions and special proceedings. See Rev. Codes 1905, § 6741. "An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong or the punishment of a public offense." Rev. Codes 1905, § 6742. "Every other remedy is a special proceeding." Rev. Codes 1905, § 6743. It is quite clear to us that the proceeding at bar is not an action under the definition of § 6742, and that therefore it must, under § 6743, be classified as a special proceeding. The proceeding is not of letters unless the creditors shall find other estate of the deceased "not inventoried or accounted for" by the executor or administrator, and within such two years the will was admitted to probate in Iowa. The court, in denying an application to sell the Iowa land to satisfy a claim which was not filed in Illinois, and was not filed in Iowa until after the two years' time had expired in Illinois, said: "Within the two years for exhibiting claims in the probate court of Mercer county [Illinois] and at a time when the only purpose of probating the will in Ringgold county [Iowa] would be to give effect to the devise of the land, it was so admitted to probate; and we assume, as being in the line of his official duty, that it was caused by the plaintiff. This was done in April, 1887; and assuming, as we should, that he had observed his duties under the law of his appointment in Illinois, we must treat this land as accounted for by him in so far as any accounting would be required in Illinois for land situated in Iowa."

In Hadley v. Gregory, 57 Iowa, 157, 10 N. W. 319, the principal place of administration was in Indiana, where all the claims were presented and where there had been full administration upon the personal assets, and it was held that an application ought not to be entertained to sell the real estate of the decedent in Iowa for the payment of his debts after the expiration of the time allowed for establishing claims had expired, where there were no peculiar circumstances shown entitling the claimant to equitable relief; and, there being no proof on the subject, the court would presume that the law of Indiana was the same as the law of Iowa with relation to limiting time for filing claims against the estate.

In Lawrence's Appeal, 49 Conn. 411, supra, "Question of exhaustion," etc., where it was claimed that after eight years the creditor could not take out letters on a foreign will in order to have the land sold for the payment of debts, it was held that the statute providing that "administration upon the estate of any person shall not be granted after seven years from his decease," L.R.A.1915D.

applied only to intestate estates, where the statutes also provided that "all wills executed according to the laws of the state or country where they were executed may be admitted to probate in this state, and shall be effectual to pass any of the estate of the testator situated in this state; and . . . that 'if the testator at his decease lived out of this state, the will may be proved in any district in which the estate conveyed or some part of it may be,' . . . and that 'no will shall be proved after ten years from the death of the testator.'"

In Thomas v. Williams, 80 Kan. 632, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1304, 103 Pac. 772, supra, "Must local debts be shown," it was held that there being no local statute of limitations relative to the case of an application by the domiciliary executor, the court in such case would consider simply whether the delay was reasonable.

Where devisees have made no improvements and there is no inflexible statute of limitation, the courts will not deny the proceeding to sell land for the payment of debts on account of some delay, where there has been no real laches. Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202.

See also Dow v. Lillie.

Sales in excess of debts.

Where sales were made on the representation that the debts at the principal place of administration were $8,000, the heirs could not attack the sales because they were for more than $10,000. Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. ed. 34.

When the local administration is considered principal.

In Hendrickson v. Ladd, 2 Dem. 402, where administration with the will annexed, the will being already probated in California, was granted in the state of New York, on the allegation that there was personal property there, not stating anything about creditors in New York, it was held that such administration was principal, and not ancillary, and that therefore the administrator might bring a proceeding to "an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense."

An ordinary proceeding, as the term is used in the Code, is such a proceeding as was known to the common law, and was formerly conducted in accordance with the proceedings of the common-law courts. Under the modern Codes it seems that it must generally be such a proceeding as is started by the issuance of a summons and results in a judgment which can be enforced by an execution. Hallahan v. Herbert, 67 N. Y. 409; Roe v. Boyle, 81 N. Y. 305; Hyatt v. Seeley, 11 N. Y. 52; Belknap v. Waters, 11 N. Y. 477; Re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67; Re Rafferty, 14 App. Div. 55, 43 N. Y. Supp. 760; Cornish v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 60 Wis. 476, 19 N. W. 443; Van Winkle v. Stow, 23 Cal. 458; McNiel v. Borland, 23 Cal. 144; State ex rel. Carleton v. District Ct. 33 Mont. 138, 82 Pac. 789, 8 Ann. Cas. 752; Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Conn. 700, 41 Atl. 1. A special proceeding, on the other hand, is a remedy which is of statutory origin. Roe v. Boyle, 81 N. Y. 305; Hyatt v. Seeley, 11 N. Y. 52; Re Ryers, 72

N. Y. 1, 4, 28 Am. Rep. 88; Mills v. Thursby, 2 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 432; Crosby's Estate, 55 Cal. 574, 588; Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 374, 26 Pac. 206. Proceedings, indeed, such as those before us have repeatedly been held to be special proceedings, and not actions. Scott's Estate, 15 Cal. 220; Re Joseph, 118 Cal. 660, 50 Pac. 768; Re Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 Pac. 36; Deer Lodge Co. v. Kohrs, 2 Mont. 66; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 Pac. 459; Crosby's Estate, 55 Cal. 574; Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204; Missionary Soc. v. Ely, 58 Ohio St. 405, 47 N. E. 538; Seward v. Clark, 67 Ind. 289; Carpenter v. Superior Ct. 75 Cal. 596, 599, 19 Pac. 174; Re Blythe, 110 Cal. 226, 42 Pac. 641; Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 374, 26 Pac. 206; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am. Rep. 656; Re Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 Pac. 36. So, too, it is equally clear that the order is a final order, and affects a substantial right. See Bolton v. Donavan, 9 N. D. 575, 84 N. W. 357; Ellis v. Southwestern Land Co. 94 Wis. 531, 69 N. W. 363; Re Sullivan, 40 Wash. 202, 111 Am. St. Rep. 895, 82 Pac. 297. It is an order, not a judgment, for in such cases the district court enters no judgment. See Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 7986, 7989.

Being a final order in a special proceed-sell the real estate in the state of New York for the payment of debts, which could not be done by the holder of ancillary letters.

Where administration was granted in Tennessee upon the solvent estate of a resident who at the time of his death owned in Mississippi land, but no personal property, it was held that the creditors might not bring a bill in equity in Mississippi to subject this land to the payment of their debts for the reason that under the law of Mississippi an administrator could be, and should be, appointed; the court pointing out that under the Mississippi statute, personal property situated in that state is distributed according to its laws, notwithstanding the domicile of the decedent is in another state, and that the necessary effect of this statute was to abolish ancillary administration altogether, and that the statute further devoted the real estate alike with the personal to the payment of the intestate's debts. Partee v. Kortrecht, 54 Miss. 66.

Distribution of proceeds.

In Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 475, where an intestate died in Vermont, letters were taken out upon his estate there and his administrators afterwards took out letters of administration in Massachusetts and obtained license to sell his real estate there for the payment of debts, and there was enough property in Massachusetts to pay the Massachusetts creditors, but the entire L.R.A.]1915D.

estate was insolvent, it was held that the Massachusetts creditors were only entitled to their pro rata share.

Where, at the request of administrators with will annexed in Pennsylvania, which was the state of the domicile of the insolvent decedent, administration was granted by the court in Iowa, where the decedent left large real estate, which was thereupon sold, and the debts proved in Iowa satisfied, the court directed that the surplus should be paid to the principal administrators in Pennsylvania against the plea of those claiming as heirs or distributees of the testator. Re Gable (Gara v. Austin) 79 Iowa, 178, 9 L.R.A. 218, 44 N. W. 352, referred to and quoted from in the principal case.

Miscellaneous.

In Mackin's Estate, 11 W. N. C. 207, the court observed that a widow of a New Jersey decedent who proved his will there, and took out letters, and then took out ancillary letters in Pennsylvania, could not sell and convey a good title to the Pennsylvania real estate without authority from the Pennsylvania orphan's court and upon entering security.

In Higgins v. Reed, 48 Kan. 272, 29 Pac. 389, where the application was by the domiciliary executrix, it was held that the omission of the local court to require a bond, if any error at all, was a mere irregularity, and not jurisdictional.

An intestate resident of Connecticut, where the whole blood took to the exclusion ing, no statement of the case was required. In such cases the statute (Rev. Codes 1905, § 7206) provides that the clerk of the district court shall transmit to the supreme court the order appealed from and the original papers used by each party on the application for such order. These papers, the statutes provide, must be certified by the clerk of the district court, and no other certification or attestation is necessary. In such a case, and where no oral evidence has been taken before the district court, and the order made by the district court is based entirely on the record of the county court and the stipulation of counsel, no statement of the case is necessary. Oliver v. Wilson, 8 N. D. 590, 593, 73 Am. St. Rep. 784, 80 N. W. 757; State ex rel. Minehan v. Meyers, 19 N. D. 805, 817, 124 N. W. 701. We have, at the request of counsel for respondent, carefully examined our holding in the case of Re Peterson, 22 N. D. 480, 134 N. W. 751. We find nothing, however, in that case which is antagonistic to the propositions herein advanced. If oral evidence had been taken in the district court, a settled statement of the case might have been necessary, but such was not the fact in the case at bar.

Not only then is the order appealable, but of the half blood, died leaving real and personal property there, and also real property in Massachusetts, and leaving a brother resident in Massachusetts and a minor half-sister resident in Maine. An administrator resident in Massachusetts was appointed in Connecticut and administered the estate there, and the brother submitted a claim on a promissory note against the estate to the Connecticut judge of probate who, finding that there was real property in Massachusetts, disallowed the claim, and the administrator's accounts in Connecticut were passed and a surplus was directed to be paid to the brother. The same administrator qualified as administrator in Massachusetts and sold the real estate there, and it was held that out of the sale of such real estate the claim of the brother on the note should be paid, the brother's receipt of the surplus from Connecticut having been as brother and not as creditor. The minor half-sister had received notice of the petition to sell the real estate in Massachusetts, "and also of the action of the court in Connecticut in regard to distribution," but made no objection to the proceedings until the administrator in Massachusetts presented his account for allowance. Cowden v. Jacobson, 165 Mass. 240, 43 N. E. 98.

It may be noted that the following cases cited in Dow v. Lillie do not seem to have had to do with the sale of land for the payment of debts: Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Vaughan v. Northup, 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639; Stacy v. L.R.A.1915D.

we are at liberty to examine the depositions which are to be found in the record in the case. This is important, as in them we find proof of what we believe to be important, if not necessary, facts; namely, that the decedent was a resident of the state of Iowa, and that there was in Iowa but $200 worth of personal property, and proved debts of many thousands of dollars.

Respondent next contends that appellants can have no relief, for the reason that their claims were presented to the administrator of the decedent's estate in North Dakota, that there is no record of their approval by him, and that no suit was brought upon them within the period prescribed by § 8105, Rev. Codes 1905. We do not, however, consider these facts to be pertinent. An administrator's act in passing upon a claim is not res judicata. In allowing or rejecting any claim he acts merely as an auditor. His allowance or rejection simply means that he is or is not satisfied as to the justice of the claim, but it is in no sense a judicial determination, as he is not vested with judicial functions respecting it. Chambers v. Chambers, 38 Or. 131, 82 Pac. 1013. It was not necessary in this case that the claims should have been proved or adjudicated in North Dakota. They were Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; McLean v. Meek, 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277; that of other cases there cited McCrary v. Tasker, 41 Iowa, 255, and Conger v. Cook, 56 Iowa, 117, 8 N. W. 782, apparently related to sales in the jurisdiction of domicile; and that Smith v. Union Bank, 5 Pet. 518, 8 L. ed. 212, did not relate to real property.

Security Trust Co. v. Black River Nat. Bank, 187 U. S. 211, 47 L. ed. 147, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52, cited in Dow v. Lillie, decided simply that a proceeding would not lie against an administrator upon a claim which was barred by the state statute of limitations, the action being brought in the United States court.

It may be noted that Bacon v. Chase, 83 Iowa, 521, 50 N. W. 23, which is not clearly reported, rests upon estoppel; that Re Donnelly, 19 Ont. W. Rep. 708, while possibly within the scope of this note, is not sufficiently reported; and that in Rapp v. Matthias, 35 Ind. 332, the deficiencies in the proceedings and the merits of the case were so entirely against the application as to make it of no value on the subject.

In Hapgood v. Jennison, 2 Vt. 294, it appears that the executor of a will proved it in Massachusetts and took out letters, and then proved it in Vermont, and took our letters of administration there, and made sales of land in Vermont for the payment of debts, but the terms of the will do not appear, or whether there was any power of sale in it or not.

B. B. B.

approved by the court of the principal administration in Iowa. It was optional with the petitioners and appellants to file their claims either in Iowa or in North Dakota. The heirs and other persons interested in the estate had the right to defend in Iowa as well as in North Dakota.

So, too, the statute of limitations or of nonclaim is not here involved. This is not an attempt to prove claims in North Dakota, but to induce the North Dakota court to sell property and to transmit the funds derived therefrom for the payment of claims properly proved and allowed in another state. Section 5187 of the Revised Codes of 1905 provides that "when any person having title to any estate, not otherwise limited by marriage contract, dies without disposing of the estate by will, it is succeeded to and must be distributed, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Code, and the Probate Code, subject to the payment of his debts." In this clause there is no qualification as to where those debts shall exist, or where they shall have been allowed. Section 8093 of the Code provides: "All the property of the decedent except as otherwise provided for the homestead and personal property set apart for the surviving wife or husband and minor child or children shall be chargeable with the payment of the debts of the deceased, the expenses of administration and the allowance to the family, and the property, personal and real, may be sold as the court may direct in the manner hereinafter prescribed."

Section 8096 provides: "The estate real and personal given by will to legatees or devisees is liable for the debts, expenses of administration and allowance to the family."

Section 8225 provides: "Upon the settlement of such estate and after the payment of all debts for which the same is liable in this state, the residue of the personal estate may be distributed and disposed of in manner aforesaid by the county court; or in the discretion of the court, it may be transmitted to the executor or administrator, if any, in the state or country where the deceased had his domicile, to be there disposed of according to the laws thereof."

Section 8226 provides: "If such person dies insolvent, his estate found in this state shall, as far as practicable, be so disposed of that all his creditors here and elsewhere may receive each an equal share in proportion to their respective debts."

Section 8227 provides: "To this end his estate shall not be transmitted to the foreign executor or administrator until all the creditors who are citizens of this state have received their just proportions; and no creditor who is not a citizen of this state shall be paid out of the assets found here until all those who are citizens have received their just proportions as provided in the preceding section."

Section 8228 provides: "If there is any residue after such payment to the citizens of this state, it may be paid to any other creditors who have duly proved their debts here, in proportion to the amount due to each of them, but no one shall receive more than would be due to him if the whole estate was divided ratably among all the creditors as before provided. The balance may be transmitted to the foreign executor or administrator, or if there is none, it shall after the expiration of one year from the appointment of the administrator be distributed ratably among all creditors both citizens and others, who have proved their debts in this state."

Section 8134 provides: "When a sale of property of the estate is necessary to pay the allowance of the family or the debts outstanding against a decedent, or the debts, expenses or charges of administration or legacies, or when such sale is for the best interests of the estate and the persons interested in the property to be sold, whether it is or is not necessary to pay the debts or family allowance, the executor or administrator may also sell any real estate as well as personal property of the estate in his hands and chargeable for that purpose upon the order of the county court; and an application for the sale of real property may also embrace the sale of personal property. To obtain an order for the sale of real property the executor or administrator must present a verified petition to the county court, setting forth the amount of personal property that has come into his hands as assets, and how much thereof, if any, remains undisposed of; the debts outstanding against the decedent, as far as can be ascertained or determined; the amount due upon the family allowance, or that will be due after the same has been in force for one year; the debts, expenses and charges of administration already approved, and an estimate of what will or may accrue during the administration; the facts showing the sale to be for the best interests of the estate, if the application is made upon that ground; a general description of all the real property, except the homestead, of which the decedent died seized, or in which he had any interest, or in which the estate has acquired any interest, and the condition and value thereof; the names of the legatees and devisees, and the heirs of the decedent, so far as known to the petitioner. If any of the matters herein enumerated cannot be ascertained, it must be so stated in the petition; but a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings, if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity is stated in the decree. If it appears to the court from such petition that it is necessary to sell the whole or some part of such real estate, for the purposes and reasons mentioned in this section, or any of them, or that such sale is for the best interests of the estate, such petition must be filed and an order thereupon made directing all persons interested in the estate to appear before the court at a time and place specified, not less than four, and not more than ten, weeks from the time of making such order, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the executor or administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the decedent as is necessary, or for the best interests of the estate."

It seems to us quite clear from the foregoing sections of the Code, and especially §§ 5187, 8225, 8226, and 8096, that the legislature fully contemplated and authorized the sale of real estate where such is necessary to pay debts duly proved in a foreign jurisdiction. Our statutes, in short, seem to have adopted the policy which would be chosen by any honest man, and to look upon the property of a decedent as a trust fund to be devoted to the payment of his debts wherever they exist. It is true that every reasonable protection is cast around the local creditor, but in that there is no suggestion of an intent that foreign creditors may be defrauded. Such is in accord with a sound public policy and a common honesty. "We cannot think," says Chief Justice Parker in the case of Dawes v. Head, 3 Pick. 128, "that in any civilized country advantage ought to be taken of the accidental circumstance of property being found within its territory, which may be reduced to possession by the aid of its courts and laws, to sequester the whole for the use of its own subjects or citizens, where it shall be known that all the estates . . . of the deceased are insufficient to pay his just debts. Such a doctrine would be derogatory to the character of any government."

An examination of the case of Re Gable, (Gara v. Austin) 79 Iowa, 178, 9 L.R.A. 218, 44 N. W. 352, discloses the fact that under similar circumstances, and if the creditors had been in North Dakota and the real estate in Iowa, the Iowa court would have decreed a sale of the real estate and the transmission of the funds to North Dakota. We can hardly believe that the legislature of North Dakota intended that it, its courts, and its citizens should be less honest than those of the state of Iowa. "There is an L.R.A.1915D.

obligation," says the supreme court of Iowa in the case of Re Gable, supra, "wherever the laws of comity rest which impel courts to enforce them with an authority not to be disregarded, though it be not prescribed by statute or by the common law. That obligation exists where justice demands authority to be exercised to the end that right may prevail; that property and property rights, domestic rights, and the liberty of the citizens may be protected and enforced. A court of justice, which is established that justice may be enforced and upheld, can have no more binding obligation resting upon it than that which requires that it shall do justice. . . . Under the law upon the subject, which prevails over the whole Union, all the property of a decedent, including his lands, except a homestead and other exemptions, is subject to the payment of his debts, and is assets for that purpose. Debts must be paid before the assets can be distributed to the heirs, legatees, and devisees, without regard to the place of residence of the creditors. Justice requires that creditors should be paid when they have duly established their claims. Such claims may be established either in the principal or ancillary administration. They will be paid when established in the ancillary administration, if assets sufficient are found within its jurisdiction. If sufficient assets for the payment of debts are not found under the control of the principal administration, and there is under the control of the ancillary administration money assets in excess of the debts proved therein, justice would forbid that such administration should disregard the demands of right, and distribute the assets to the heirs; but, as it has not before it the claims of all the creditors, some having been established in the principal administration proceedings, justice demands that the ancillary administration, in response to the demands of comity, transmit the money assets to the principal administrator." See also Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 475; Dawes v. Head, 3 Pick. 128; Fay v. Haven, 3 Met. 109; Joy v. Elton, 9 N. D. 444, 449, 83 N. W. 875.

We also find no merit in his contention that §§ 8225 and 8226, which impress the estate of a decedent with a trust in favor of creditors, and which provide for the transmission of the residue of the estate to the executor or administrator in the state or county of the decedent's domicile, relate only to cases in which the decedent has left a will. It will be noticed, indeed, that the word "administrator" as well as "executor" is used in §§ 8225-8228.

An administrator "is a person lawfully appointed to manage and settle the estate of a deceased person, who has left no executor."

Smith v. Gentry, 16 Ga. 31, 32; Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, vol. 1, p. 198. A distinction is made in law between an executor and an administrator. See Webster's Dictionary. There is nothing in the sections before us which give any reason for or any intimation of any desire on the part of the legislature that their provisions shall be confined to cases of testacy. It is also to be noticed that the statutes make use of the word "estate," and not "personal property."

Nor do we believe that there is any merit in the argument that § 8134, Rev. Codes 1905, and which provides that any local creditor may make an application for the sale of real estate if the administrator neglects so to do, covers local creditors merely, or creditors who have proved their claims in North Dakota, and that there is no machinery provided for in cases such as that before us. The legislative intention that the estate shall be impressed with a trust appears to us to be clear. It also appears to us that it was the intention that the rights of foreign creditors who had proved their claims in another jurisdiction should be based rather upon comity than upon the concession of a natural right, and that a wise discretion should be used in relation to the matter. We believe that under such circumstances the omission to provide for the machinery is in no way important; the ordinary machinery of the law being deemed adequate for the purpose.

In this connection it is well to take up the further claim of respondent that upon the death of the deceased the real estate vested in the heirs, and could not be subjected to the payment of debts such as those before us, or, to use the words of the petition, that "our statutes, being a rule of property, vested the title in the heirs freed from the creditors' claims after the limitations." Whether this be true generally it is not for us to determine. It is sufficient for us to say that §§ 3741 and 3742 of the Code have already been construed by this court, and then in the case of Friese v. Friese, 12 N. D. 82, 85, 86, 95 N. W. 446, we find it stated that "property not disposed of by will passes to the heirs, . . . subject to the control of the county court, and to the administrator appointed by that court for the purpose of administration. Section 3741, Rev. Codes 1899. Such property is to be distributed subject to the payment of the debts of the intestate. Id. § 3742. Under these sections, the administrator or executor has the exclusive right to the personal property for purposes of administration. Jahns v. Nolting, 29 Cal. 508. 'The whole matter of dealing with the estates of deceased persons is one of statutory regulation, and the L.R.A.1915D.

policy and intent of our statute very clearly contemplate that property of decedents left undisposed of at death . . . shall, for the purposes of ascertaining and protecting the rights of creditors and heirs, and properly transmitting the title of record, be subjected to the process of administration in the probate court.' Re Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078. This indebtedness was the property of the deceased, Ludwig Friese, and the statute prescribes the course to be taken for its proper distribution. It is not permissible, therefore, for these plaintiffs to disregard the due administration of the estate . . . in any court other than the county or probate court. The estate of Ludwig Friese must first be subjected to the claims of creditors before any distribution of it can occur, and it is not the policy of the statute to permit any person claiming decedent's property to take possession of it until all debts are paid. . . . We have seen that heirs or devisees, as such, have no right to decedent's property until his debts are paid. The creditors are the first preferred parties in interest, and, until satisfied, heirs or legatees have no enforceable interest. Haynes v. Harris, 33 Iowa, 517."

It is next urged that to lay down the rule announced in this opinion would be highly dangerous, as it would permit the appointment of an administrator in a state in which the deceased had little or no property, and that "fake" claims of all kinds and descriptions might be presented without any notice or chance to defend being given to the local creditors. We do not, however, anticipate any such danger. In the case at bar, the claims of petitioners were presented in the domiciliary court, and where they would naturally be expected to be presented. There can come no harm to the local creditors in this case for the simple reason that there are no local creditors, and the controversy is merely between the heirs and the Iowa creditors. The heirs certainly had an opportunity to defend, and a knowledge of, the proceedings in Iowa. So, too, we do not hold that in every case the local and ancillary administration may be required to transmit all of the funds, or to sell and transmit the proceeds of the real estate, to the domiciliary state. If there are local creditors who have had no legal notice of the proceedings in the domiciliary state, we have no doubt that the court may protect their interests, and that in the same way it may protect such creditors against fraud. It is a question of comity and of sound judicial discretion. Comity and sound judicial discretion would never require the transmission of funds, or assets, or the sale of property, when it would be fraudulent as to local creditors.

So, too, the assets would necessarily be transferred to be disposed of according to the laws and the judgment of the domiciliary state and the domiciliary court. If no sufficient notice had been given in that court to the local creditors in the ancillary state, we have no question that the domiciliary court would protect their rights.

We are cognizant of the fact that at common law the real estate of a decedent could not be subjected to the payment of debts. We are, however, dealing with statutes, and not with the common law.

Nor have we any fault to find with counsel's definition of the word "comity," and that comity is "a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will." We, in fact, hold that petitioners have no rights, but are merely entitled to the protection which comity should give, and that our legislature merely recognized such comity. We, too, have examined carefully the cases of Re Gable (Gara v. Austin), 79 Iowa, 178, 9 L.R.A. 218, 44 N. W. 352; Hadley v. Gregory, 57 Iowa, 157, 10 N. W. 319; McCrary v. Tasker, 41 Iowa, 260, and Conger v. Cook, 56 Iowa, 117, 8 N. W. 782, which are cited by counsel for respondent in support of the proposition that the Iowa courts under similar circumstances would not grant similar privileges. We, however, construe them otherwise. We have also read 18 Cyc. 1233, 1233d, 1234c, and Durston v. Pollock, 91 Iowa, 668, 60 N. W. 221; but with the same result. In 18 Cyc. 1235, indeed, and after the statements referred to by counsel for the respondent, we find the following: "As a general rule assets remaining in the hands of an ancillary representative after paying the claims of local creditors will be transferred to the place of the domicile for distribution. This rule, however, is not absolute or inflexible, but, on the contrary, the transfer will or will not be made as the court may deem proper in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, according to the circumstances of the case. In the absence of special circumstances making a local distribution proper, the general rule should prevail, since the distribution, wherever made, must be according to the law of decedent's domicile, and comity requires that it should be accorded to that jurisdiction; but the court may, even in cases where a transmission of the residue is proper, refuse to so order until the domiciliary representative has given a sufficient bond to secure its proper administration. While there is no question as to the authority of the court in the ancillary jurisdiction to order a residue of assets in that jurisdiction transmitted to the domiciliary representative, the court of one jurisdiction L.R.A.1915D.

has no authority over the representative of the other to compel him to bring in such assets, whether it be the court of the domiciliary or of the ancillary jurisdiction." See also cases cited. There is no attempt in the cases at bar on the part of the Iowa court to enforce its powers here. It merely petitions the local court to exercise its undoubted powers, and in conformity with justice and with interstate comity.

We have also examined the cases of Smith v. Union Bank, 5 Pet. 518, 8 L. ed 212; Vaughan v. Northup, 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639; Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337; McLean v. Meek, 18 How. 16, 15 L. ed. 277, and Security Trust Co. v. Black River Nat. Bank, 187 U. S. 211, 47 L. ed. 147, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52, which are cited by counsel for respondent. We believe, however, that the reasoning and conclusions before pursued and arrived at will show the same to be inapplicable to the case before us. We do not, indeed, find that the decisions mentioned, when carefully examined in connection both with the facts therein disclosed and the law pronounced, are in any way antagonistic to the conclusions herein arrived at.

Finally, counsel for respondent contends that §§ 8226-8228, Rev. Codes 1905, and which, in our opinion, make a trust estate of the property of a deceased person for the benefit of his creditors, only apply where the deceased died insolvent, and that a sale of the real estate can only be ordered under such statutes where there is proof that the entire property of the decedent is insufficient to pay his debts. He asserts that insolvency is not in this case, that it is not set forth as a ground for relief in the petition, and that there is no testimony regarding it in either court. We cannot, however, so hold. The petition alleges that "said Eulalie Lillie owned no real property in the state of Iowa, and the personal property of which she died seised did not exceed in value the sum of $200." It further alleges that claims in excess of $14,150 have been proved and allowed in said state. The answer admits "that the estate of decedent in the state of Iowa does not exceed in value the sum of $200." The record shows real estate in North Dakota of an appraised value of $14,600, with outstanding mortgages amounting to $4,130 exclusive of interest, and no personal property, and debts in Iowa amounting in all to $20,059.70, exclusive of interest. It would be absurd to state that the Iowa estate is not insolvent, or that the North Dakota and Iowa estates taken together are not in the same condition. We believe that this is all the showing that is required by the statute.

It is also claimed that the liability under the notes to the petitioners, Karl W. Kendall and First National Bank of Marion, Iowa, is a joint liability merely as an accommodation maker, and that there is no showing as to the resources of the other makers. We do not, however, deem this fact to be of any importance here. Even if we can, and should, go behind the findings of the Iowa court in this case which allowed these claims against the estate of the deceased, we can see no reason for criticizing or repudiating that allowance. The mere fact that the deceased signed the notes in question as an accommodation maker and without consideration, if such be the case, did not release her, and does not now release her estate from a primary liability to pay them. She signed the notes on their face, along with the other makers. The contract, as expressed by the terms of the notes, is a direct and absolute promise to pay them in full. By so signing the notes she made herself primarily liable, and the payee is not required to first exhaust his remedies against the other parties. "The maker upon the face of the paper, with whatever motive or purpose he may sign it," says the supreme court of California in Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282, "is bound by the contract which he signs, according to the legal effect and meaning of the words. He cannot vary that meaning by parol. The words import an unconditional promise to pay the payee so much money at a certain time. The law affixes to this unequivocal language its obvious signification. The payor is not permitted to contradict the words by showing that when he promised to pay absolutely, he meant to bind himself to pay conditionally, or on some contingency, or if another did not, or if demand was made and notice given. This contract being his own, and precise in its terms, he must fulfil it according to those terms." This has been the holding of this court. See Northern State Bank v. Bellamy, 19 N. D. 509, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 149, 125 N. W. 890. See also § 6495, Rev. Codes 1905; Inkster v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Mich. 147; Lord v. Ocean Bank, 20 Pa. 384, 59 Am. Dec. 728.

The order of the District Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings according to law and the conclusions reached in this opinion.

Goss, J., being disqualified, did not participate.

Petition for rehearing denied.
L.R.A.1915D.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

AMADA FRENCH, Respt.,
v.

STATE FARMERS' HAIL INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(29 N. D. 426, 151 N. W. 7.)

Pleading — amendment — discretion.

1. The allowance of amendments rests largely within the sound discretion of the trial court.

Same — conformance to facts.

2. Where it clearly appears that the defendant was not misled, surprised, or in any way prejudiced from maintaining his defense upon the merits, an amendment of the complaint to conform to the facts proved should be allowed.

Appeal — misjoinder — form of action.

3. The objection that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, or that a cause is of equitable, and not of legal, cognizance, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Reformation — insurance policy — recovery.

4. An insurance contract may be reformed and a recovery thereon enforced in the same action.

Insurance — agent of insurer.

5. Agents for an insurance company, authorized to procure applications for insurance, and to forward them to the company for acceptance, are deemed the agents of the insurers in all that they do in preparing the application. Hence, when such agent makes out an application incorrectly, notwithstanding the facts are truthfully stated to him by the applicant, such error is chargeable to the insurer, and not to the insured.

Same — hail — misdescription of land.

6. A misdescription of the land on which crops, insured against hail, are growing, will not, of itself, prevent a recovery in case of loss. And where such misdescription is due solely to the error of the agent of the insurance company in preparing the application for such insurance, it is not necessary to bring an action in equity to reform the policy; but the insured may, by setting forth the facts relating to the mistake, in his complaint, bring an action at law thereon in the first instance.

(February 2, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Walsh County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to Headnotes by CHRISTIANSON, J.

Note. — As to effect of agent's insertion in the application of false answers to questions correctly answered by the insured, see note to Suravitz v. Prudential Ins. Co. L.R.A. 1915A, 273.

recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of hail insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. R. Turner, for appellant:

The relief as to the correction in the description of the property insured, being purely equitable in nature, required an action for a reformation of the contract of the parties before a judgment at law could be obtained.

19 Cyc. 654, note 4; Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 44 Fla. 273, 32 So. 887; Collins v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 44 Minn. 440, 46 N. W. 906; Sun Ins. Co. v. Greenville Bldg. & L. Asso. 58 N. J. L. 367, 33 Atl. 962; Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Kinne, 77 Mich. 231, 18 Am. St. Rep. 398, 43 N. W. 871.

It was error to allow the amended complaint to be filed after judgment was entered, in that the amendment changed the nature of the cause of action, and in fact changed the entire cause of action.

1 Sutherland, Code. Pl. § 796; Wheaton v. Voorhis, 53 How. Pr. 319; Mendenhall v. Harrisburg, Water Power Co. 27 Or. 38, 39 Pac. 399; Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67 Iowa, 14, 24 N. W. 570; Maxwell v. Day, 45 Ind. 509; Carpenter v. Huffsteller, 87 N. C. 273; Allen v. Brooks, 88 Wis. 265, 60 N. W. 253; Sanford v. American Dist. Teleg. Co. 13 Misc. 88, 34 N. Y. Supp. 144; Mares v. Wormington, 8 N. D. 329, 79 N. W. 441; Woodward v. Northern P. R. Co. 16 N. D. 39, 111 N. W. 627; Cooke v. Northern P. R. Co. 22 N. D. 266, 133 N. W. 806.

Mr. H. C. DePuy, for respondent:

Collette was the agent of the defendant, and not of plaintiff, and his error in inserting the wrong number of the township and range was the error of the defendant, and not the error of plaintiff.

19 Cyc. 826-829; 28 Century Dig. col. 3015; Kansas v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776, 16 N. W. 430; Norman v. Kelso Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 114 Minn. 49, 130 N. W. 13; Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 433, 43 N. W. 811; Leisen v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 20 N. D. 216, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539, 127 N. W. 840; Whitney v. National Masonic Acci. Asso. 57 Minn. 472, 59 N. W. 943; Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 76 Mich. 428, 43 N. W. 373; Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 167, 45 N. W. 799; Erickson v. Ladies of Maccabees, 25 S. D. 183, 126 N. W. 262; Parno v. Iowa Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 114 Iowa, 132, 86 N. W. 211; Key v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 174, 41 N. W. 614; Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870, 28 N. W. 47; Siltz v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 71 Iowa, 710, 29 N. W. 605; Kansas L.R.A.1915D.

Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356, 35 Pac. 15.

There is no need of first obtaining reformation of a contract of hail insurance on grain, before action for the loss, where the property is correctly described by insured in the application, but the company, through the inadvertence of its officers and agents, inserts an incorrect number of the township, the subject of the insurance being otherwise correctly described.

State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L.R.A. 524, 20 Am. St. Rep. 696, 43 N. W. 341; Kansas Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356, 35 Pac. 15; Hearsh v. German Ins. Co. 130 Mo. App. 457, 110 S. W. 23; Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 283; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Gebhart, 32 Neb. 144, 49 N. W. 333; Smith v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 807; Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Lunkenheimer, 127 Ind. 536, 26 N. E. 1082; Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 65 Iowa, 308, 21 N. W. 652; Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 31 W. Va. 851, 13 Am. St. Rep. 909, 8 S. E. 616; Lumberman's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bell, 166 Ill. 400, 57 Am. St. Rep. 140, 45 N. E. 130; Hobkirk v. Phenix Ins. Co. 102 Wis. 13, 78 N. W. 160; Carey v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Iowa, 619, 66 N. W. 921; Walrath v. Royal Ins. Co. 16 Ohio C. C. 413, 9 Ohio C. D. 233; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Brannon, 99 Tex. 391, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 89 S. W. 1057, 13 Ann. Cas. 1020; 19 Cyc. 654, note 4; 28 Century Dig. col. 818; 11 Decem. Dig. 189.

Where the court exercises the functions of law and equity, it may, when there is an answer, grant any relief consistent with the facts alleged, and the prayer for relief may be amended accordingly at any time.

Getty v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 How. Pr. 269; Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 Pac. 673; Esch Bros. v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229; Holmes v. Campbell, 12 Minn. 221, Gil. 141; 31 Cyc. 438, 439; Hearsh v. German Ins. Co. 130 Mo. App. 457, 110 S. W. 23.

Christianson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no dispute about the facts in this case. The testimony consists solely of certain documentary evidence and the oral testimony of the plaintiff and of one Collette, an agent for the defendant. The plaintiff is a farmer residing on section 17, in township 157, range 51, in Walsh county, in this state. This township is named Acton township. It is conceded that Collette was the duly authorized and licensed agent of the defendant company, authorized not only to write insurance for the defendant, but also authorized to appoint subagents.

On June 27, 1912, said Collette obtained from the plaintiff an application for hail insurance with the defendant upon crops on the lands owned and occupied by plaintiff in section 17, and in the adjoining section 8 in said township. The application was prepared by Collette, who asked questions of the plaintiff and wrote down the answers in the application and secured the signature of the plaintiff, French, thereto. The plaintiff did not read the application before signing the same. The first part of the application is as follows:

"I, Amada French, of Oakwood, P. O., township of Acton, county of Walsh and state of North Dakota, hereby apply, etc."

While the application was being prepared, Collette inquired of the plaintiff as to the legal description of the township, and the plaintiff in reply stated that he did not know; whereupon Collette stated that he would look up the description for himself and insert it. Collette, in inserting such description, made an error, in this, that he wrote the number of the township "158" and the number of the range "52," when he should have written the number of the township "157" and the number of the range "51." The testimony of Collette in regard to the transaction is substantially as follows: "The application was taken right at Mr. French's home in section 17 in Acton township. It was township 157. I knew he lived in Acton township. I also knew the land he was working. The application was made on June 27, 1912. I saw Mr. French that day in the yard. He decided to take out some insurance right away, and I wrote the application in the yard. When I first took the application, I started to write it (the description of the township) in, then I said, 'I suppose that this is township 157, Acton township,' and he said he was not positive of that, and I said I would look it up myself and be sure; but I put it down 158, and it should have been 157. I did not look it up afterwards to see if it was 158. I was supposed to go to my brother-in-law's and get it in a plat book, but I was sure it was 158. I did not read the application over to him. I simply asked him questions, and I put down the answers. I told him where to sign it, and he signed it. I intended to describe in the application the land that I knew he was working, that is, the crops, upon sections 17 and 8 in Acton township. The mistake in regard to the number of the range was made under the same circumstances as the mistake with reference to the township. I undertook to fill in the description. I have since looked it up and discovered it was a mistake. I intended to take an application upon land situated in sections 17 and 8, in L.R.A.1915D.

township 157, range 51. I undertook to fill in the description of the township in the application and have since looked it up and discovered it was a mistake."

It is conceded that the plaintiff owned no lands or crops in township 158, range 52; but the only lands and crops which he owned were those located in Acton township, and there is no dispute but that these are the lands that were intended to be covered by the insurance. The testimony of the plaintiff, French, is substantially the same as the testimony of Collette. The plaintiff afterwards on July 7, 1912, received his policy, and on July 8, 1912, suffered a loss by hail. Proof of loss was duly forwarded to the defendant company, and a duly authorized adjuster for the defendant company, on July 31, 1912, adjusted the loss and agreed with the plaintiff in writing that the loss sustained amounted to $771.25. The mistake in the policy was not discovered until some time subsequent, when the defendant company refused to pay the loss as adjusted, but offered, however, to compromise by the payment of $400, which the plaintiff refused and afterwards brought suit against the defendant for the amount of the loss as adjusted.

The original complaint sets forth by proper allegations all the matters above recited relative to the mistake in the description as contained in the application and policy, how the same occurred, the issue of the policy, the loss thereunder, the adjustment of such loss, and the defendant's refusal to pay the same, and prays judgment for $771.25, the amount of the loss as adjusted. The original answer is not before us. Hence we are unable to ascertain what defense was offered thereby. The case was tried to the court without a jury, a jury being expressly waived.

At the very commencement of the trial, the following proceedings were had:

By Mr. Turner: The defendant asks leave to file an amended answer. I have the same prepared, but it is not verified. I will ask to verify it later.

By Mr. De Puy: The plaintiff has no objection, but we would like to have the amendment allowed upon condition that the plaintiff shall have the right to interpose a reply, if the plaintiff deems it desirable, setting up a waiver or estoppel in accordance with the proof, and also amend his complaint to conform with the proof that may be introduced at any time before judgment.

By the court: All right.

The plaintiff's amended complaint sets forth almost identically the same facts as those contained in the original answer, with the single exception that another allegation is added, stating the value of plaintiff's interest in the crops, and the prayer for judgment was amended by asking that the policy be reformed by substituting the proper description of township and range in lieu of the incorrect description. The amended answer admitted that Collette was a duly authorized agent of the defendant company, that the policy was issued and delivered, but denied any mutual mistake in the issuance of the policy, and further denied that the defendant issued any policy of insurance for injuries to the crops destroyed. The trial court made findings of fact and ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, that the policy be reformed by correcting the mistakes made therein with reference to the number of the township and range, and further awarded plaintiff judgment against the defendant for the sum of $771.25 and interest and costs. The appeal is taken from the judgment so entered.

The appellant relies for a reversal on three propositions: (1) That the court erred in allowing the amendment of the complaint; (2) that the insurance policy must be reformed by an action in equity before a judgment at law can be obtained; (3) that, where both equitable and legal relief is sought, the equity action must be first and separately tried.

Appellant's first contention, that the trial court erred in allowing an amendment of the complaint, is clearly without merit. It will be observed that, at the commencement of the trial, defendant's counsel obtained leave to amend the answer; that such leave was granted upon the condition that the plaintiff be permitted to amend the complaint. No objection was made by defendant's counsel to such arrangement, and the record indicates that the trial court believed that this arrangement was entirely satisfactory to defendant's counsel. The amendment, however, could in no manner prejudice the defendant, and we are satisfied that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the complaint to be so amended. The amended complaint sets forth substantially the same facts as the original complaint, and the only change of which defendant's counsel complains is the amendment of the prayer for judgment. It is not contended that any substantial change was made in the body of the complaint, and no showing or claim of surprise was made by the defendant. It is therefore self-evident that defendant was not prejudiced by the amendment, as the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the facts alleged and proven, rather than the relief demanded in the prayer for judgment.

"Disregarding the prayer or demand of judgment, the court will rely upon the facts alleged and proved as the basis of its remedial action." Pom. Code Remedies, *83.

"If the facts entitling a party to a remedy, legal or equitable, are averred and proved, he shall obtain that remedy, notwithstanding his omission to ask for it in his demand of judgment; and, if the facts were not averred, he shall not obtain the remedy, although he demanded it in the most formal manner." Pom. Code Remedies, *84.

"The prayer for relief forms no part of the statement of the cause of action, and it is unimportant unless there is ambiguity in such statement. A bad prayer for relief or a prayer for improper relief will not vitiate a pleading which is otherwise sufficient. The facts alleged, and not the relief demanded, are of chief importance, and they determine the relief to be granted." 31 Cyc. 110, and cases cited.

Under the provisions of § 7482, Comp. Laws 1913, the court has the right, in a proper case, to grant an amendment of the pleadings even after judgment. The propriety of the granting of such amendments rests within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be reviewed by this court, except in a case where such discretion has been abused.

California has certain statutory provisions, identical in language with §§ 7478 and 7482, Comp. Laws 1913, and in the case of Jackson v. Jackson, 94 Cal. 446, 29 Pac. 957, the supreme court of California held that "to allow amendments after the trial has commenced is in the discretion of the trial court, and error cannot be predicated on the allowance of such an amendment, whereby issues were raised which were not raised by the original pleadings, unless the adverse party asked to have the case reopened for the purpose of trying the new issue."

And in the case of Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 47, in considering the same question, the California court said: "It is also contended that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff, after the evidence had been taken and the cause submitted, to file an amended complaint. This contention is based upon the theory that the amended complaint changed the cause of action. What has been said disposes of this proposition. The action still remains upon the contract made by the former board, and, as there has been no change in the actual existence of the corporation which made the contract and was responsible for it, there has been no such change in the cause of action as would constitute a departure. The additional facts and circumstances alleged in the amended complaint do not involve any change in the nature of the cause of action. It still remained an action upon the contract, and it was within the discretion of the court to allow the amendment."

The decisions of the California court are also in harmony with the views expressed by Chief Justice Morgan in the case of Barker v. More Bros. 18 N. D. 82, 85, 118 N. W. 823, and are sustained by the great weight of authority. Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 53 Pac. 560; Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 47; Hedstrom v. Union Trust Co. 7 Cal. App. 278, 94 Pac. 387; Thomas v. Brooklyn, 58 Iowa, 438, 10 N. W. 849; Tiffany v. Henderson, 57 Iowa, 490, 10 N. W. 885; Adams v. Castle, 64 Minn. 505, 67 N. W. 638; Kaufman v. Barbour, 103 Minn. 158, 114 N. W. 739; O'Brien v. Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. 119 Minn. 4, 137 N. W. 399; Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. Jones, 89 Cal. 507, 26 Pac. 1089; Coubrough v. Adams, 70 Cal. 374, 11 Pac. 634; Wabash & W. R. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind. 430, 31 N. E. 861, 32 N. E. 85; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 868, 53 L.R.A. 817, 59 S. W. 24; Garver v. Garver, 145 Mo. App. 353, 130 S. W. 369; Rothschild v. Harris (City Ct. N. Y.), 125 N. Y. Supp. 41; Howland v. Caille, 153 Mich. 349, 116 N. W. 1079; Higgins v. People, 2 Colo. App. 567, 31 Pac. 951; Hansen v. Allen, 117 Wis. 61, 93 N. W. 805; Frey v. Owens, 27 Neb. 862, 44 N. W. 42; Briggs v. Rutherford, 94 Minn. 23, 101 N. W. 954.

Appellant's next contention is stated in its brief as follows: "It is the contention of the appellant and defendant that there were here two separate controversies, one equitable and the other legal; that, before any judgment could be entered or any amount found to be due, an action for a reformation of the contract must be brought and it be determined as a matter in equity that such reformation be had, so that a decree in such equity action would set out the real contract of the parties, and then upon that contract the plaintiff might sue for the amount claimed to be due."

We are unable to agree with appellant in his contentions for three reasons: First, the questions now sought to be raised were not raised in the court below; second, the policy could be reformed and recovery enforced thereon in the same action; third, a reformation of the policy was not essential to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

The objections now raised by appellant were in no manner urged in the court below. No demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and no demand for a separate trial of legal and equitable issues was L.R.A.1915D.

made, and no objection in any manner interposed to the submission of all the issues to the court. In fact, the defendant expressly stipulated that a trial by jury be waived and all the issues tried to the court. It is therefore obvious that the defendant cannot assert at this time that it was prejudiced by a mode of procedure to which it acquiesced in the district court; nor can it be permitted to object for the first time on appeal that a cause is of equitable, and not of legal, cognizance, or vice versa; that there is a misjoinder of causes of action; or that certain issues should have been submitted to a jury. 2 Cyc. 683, 690, 701.

We are also satisfied that appellant is clearly in error when it contends that two actions are necessary where it is essential to reform an insurance contract: First, one in equity to reform the policy, and then an action at law for the amount due thereon as reformed; but we are entirely satisfied that the policy may be reformed and a recovery enforced thereon in the same action. "There was nothing in the objection that the court should have stopped with reforming the policy, and turned the plaintiffs over to a new action to recover their damages. The rule of courts of equity was, when they had acquired jurisdiction, and had the whole merits before them, to proceed and to complete justice between the parties." Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 267.

In this state the forms of civil actions have been abolished, and it is provided that the provisions of, and all proceedings under, the Code in this state, "are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." Comp. Laws, § 7321.

"When the plaintiff is clothed with primary rights, both legal and equitable, growing out of the same cause of action or the same transaction, and is entitled to an equitable remedy, and also to a further legal remedy, based upon the supposition that the equitable relief is granted, and he sets forth in his complaint or petition the facts which support each class of rights, and which show that he is entitled to each kind of remedy, and demands a judgment awarding both species of relief, the action will be sustained to its full extent in the form thus adopted." Pom. Code Remedies, *78.

"In one civil action the plaintiff may not only unite and obtain both the remedy of reformation and the equitable remedy of specific performance, but also the remedy of reformation and the legal remedy of a pecuniary judgment for debt or damages for the breach of the contract as corrected, or the legal remedy of a recovery of specific property." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 862.

Was it necessary for plaintiff to seek relief in equity, and bring an equitable action for a reformation of the policy, or could he, by alleging all the facts in his complaint, maintain an action at law thereon in the first instance? It is conceded that Collette, and not the plaintiff, committed the blunder. Collette, in preparing the application, was the agent of the insurance company, and not of the applicant. In so doing, he was acting within the scope of his authority. Leisen v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 20 N. D. 316, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539, 127 N. W. 837; Kausel v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776, 16 N. W. 430; Whitney v. National Masonic Accl. Asso. 57 Minn. 472, 59 N. W. 943; Norman v. Kelo Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 114 Minn. 49, 130 N. W. 13. Collette's error, therefore, was the error of the defendant, and it will not be permitted to say that the plaintiff was to blame or negligent in trusting the accuracy of its agent in preparing the application. The only reason for the questions propounded to the plaintiff was to ascertain the truth with reference to the crops to be insured. It is conceded that the plaintiff gave truthful answers to all questions asked. The erroneous answer with reference to the description of the premises was not the answer of the plaintiff, but of Collette. Plaintiff applied for insurance upon his crops in Acton township in Walsh county. French and Collette both say that the intention was to insure these crops,—the crops growing on the very land where the application was prepared and signed. The plaintiff was in no manner to blame for the mistake in the application and policy. This was solely the fault of the defendant, as, of course, the defendant is bound by the acts of its agent in this case. The contract was to insure the very crops of the plaintiff in Acton township which were destroyed by hail. "The agreement in a policy is to insure certain property of a party—such as the house in which he and his family reside, a barn on his farm, or a warehouse for the storage of produce, or, as in this case, certain personal property. A misdescription of the land on which any of these is situated will not defeat a recovery in case of loss by fire, because the court looks at the real contract of the parties, which was to insure certain property of the policy holder. The fact that such property was on a particular section—as section 16 instead of 17—cannot, of itself, affect the risk, and would not render the policy void." Phenix Ins. Co. v. Gebhart, 32 Neb. 144, 146, 49 N. W. 333, 334.

In May, Ins. vol. 2, p. 1330, § 566, it is said: "In most of the states, however, L.R.A.1915D.

courts of law will apply the doctrines of waiver and estoppel, or allow proof of mistake, so as to enable the plaintiff to maintain his action for indemnity, and not drive him to a court of equity."

This question was before the supreme court of Kansas in American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533, and in that case the court says: "In such a case the contract is not void for uncertainty, nor is there any need of applying for a reformation of the contract, provided it appear, either from the face of the instrument or extrinsic facts, which is the true and which is the false description."

These principles are sustained by the following authorities: Phenix Ins. Co. v. Gebhart, 32 Neb. 144, 49 N. W. 333; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, supra; Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 65 Iowa, 308, 21 N. W. 652; Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Lunkenheimer, 127 Ind. 536, 26 N. E. 1082; Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 31 W. Va. 851, 13 Am. St. Rep. 909, 8 S. E. 616; Kansas Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356, 35 Pac. 15; Smith v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 804; State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L.R.A. 524, 20 Am. St. Rep. 681, 43 N. W. 340, 344; Lumbermen's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bell, 166 Ill. 400, 57 Am. St. Rep. 140, 45 N. E. 130; Hobkirk v. Phenix Ins. Co. 102 Wis. 13, 78 N. W. 160; Carey v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Iowa, 619, 66 N. W. 920; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Brannon, 99 Tex. 391, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 89 S. W. 1057, 13 Ann. Cas. 1020; Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 283; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 109 Ind. 273, 10 N. E. 85. See also Leisen v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 20 N. D. 317, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539, 127 N. W. 837, and Gorder v. Hilliboe, 17 N. D. 281, 283, 115 N. W. 843, and Beach, Ins. § 1319. A number of the authorities cited above are based upon the theory that the insurance company is estopped to deny the error of its agent, and that for that reason the plaintiff may sue upon the contract as issued, and, without any allegations in the complaint relative to the mistake, introduce testimony showing the knowledge of, and mistake made by, the agent of the insurance company in misdescribing the property. As we view the matter, however, the principle of estoppel should not be applied in a case where there is a misdescription of the property intended to be covered by the policy, but it is rather a case coming within the rule that parol evidence may be admitted for the purpose of showing that, by reason of a mistake, a written instrument does not truly express the intention of the parties. While there are cases holding that such evidence is only admissible in a court of equity, "yet this rule is by no means universal, and, in fact, the weight of authority supports the doctrine that evidence of this character is also admissible in an action at law." 9 Enc. Ev. 344. This rule is supported by the weight of modern authority. 17 Cyc. 702; Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2413-2415. See also Putnam v. Prouty, 24 N. D. 517, 140 N. W. 93; Gorder v. Hillboe, supra. But, "in order that parol evidence may be admissible to show a mistake in a written instrument, the existence of such mistake must have been alleged in the pleadings." 17 Cyc. 703.

It is established by the undisputed evidence in this case that the crops intended to be covered by the policy were destroyed; that the loss was adjusted by the adjuster of the defendant at the amount for which the trial court rendered judgment; and it is conceded that the plaintiff suffered a loss for at least the amount of the adjustment. It is inconceivable how defendant was in any manner injured by the mistake in the application and policy. It is not contended for one moment that there was any extra hazard in township 157, range 51, which did not exist in township 158, range 52.

We are entirely satisfied that the judgment of the trial court, under the undisputed facts in this case, is entirely just and proper and should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

JOSEPH REIFF et al., Appts.,

v.

CITY OF PORTLAND et al., Respts.

(71 Or. 421, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827.)

Highway — Improvements — single proceeding.

1. That a section of street which is to be improved as a whole contains a wooden

Note. — Public improvement: validity of assessment as affected by unlawful invasion of property rights.

I. In general, 772.

II. Theory that invalid part of assessment may be separated from valid, 776.

I. In general.

Considerable conflict is encountered as to the validity of assessments as affected by the fact that there has been an unlawful invasion of property rights in making the improvement for which the assessments are laid. This conflict seems to be due in part, L.R.A.1915D.

viaduct which will require a fill does not make the portions of the improvement on either side of it two improvements, requiring separate proceedings, under a charter providing that the improvement of each street or part thereof shall be made under a separate proceeding.

Certiorari — to review special assessments — what open to consideration.

2. Upon certiorari to review the action of a municipal council in reassessing the cost of a special improvement upon abutting property the court is confined to an examination of the records and the proceedings of the council resulting in the assessment.

Tax — special assessment — certificates of apportionment — presumption as to truth.

3. A certificate of the auditor whose duty was to assess the cost of a street improvement on abutting property, that he had made the assessment in proportion to benefits, is presumed to be true.

Same — effect of trespass by city.

4. An assessment for a street improvement is not invalidated by the fact that the municipality, in making a fill in the highway, extended the slope onto abutting property without obtaining a right to do so, and thereby became a trespasser, although the expense of the encroachment is included in the assessment.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Tax — review of assessments — necessity of appeal.

5. The objection that an assessment for a street improvement is void because a portion of the improvement extended upon private property without acquiring the right, and that it is not made on the theory required by statute, may be raised by review of the assessment without the necessity of an appeal.

Appeal — petition for rehearing — form.

6. The grounds for a petition for rehearing of an appeal should be brief and concise, and made separate from the argument.

Public improvement — objection to assessment — waiver.

7. Where the statute provides for filing objections to a municipal improvement, taxpayers waive the objection that two separate at least, to the manner in which the assessment is attacked; that is, whether the owner of the invaded premises, or other who has been assessed, is seeking to avoid his assessments, or whether the validity of the entire assessment is attacked. There is also considerable indefiniteness in the reports of the cases as to just what relief was sought.

An assessment upon the land which is unlawfully invaded in making the public improvement is invalid.

Thus, one through whose land a drain had been constructed without first compensating him therefor cannot be assessed for the construction of the drain. Re Cheese-portions of a street were included in one proceeding by failing to raise the question at the time the statute provides.

Same — review of assessment — effect of judgment.

8. Irregularities or defects in proceedings for a public improvement, and the assessment of benefits therefor, which are not brought to the attention of the court in a proceeding to review such proceedings, are waived and cannot be brought forward in a proceeding to review a reassessment made in accordance with the judgment entered on such review.

Same — trespass on adjoining property — retaining wall — liability for excess of cost.

9. The cost of extending a fill for a street improvement over onto adjoining property cannot be assessed against the property benefited by the improvement so far as it is in excess of the cost of a proper retaining wall.

Same — review — method.

10. The facts upon which an assessment for a public improvement is based and the result of the assessment cannot be reviewed by writ of review where the statute provides for an appeal, where the facts may be passed upon by a jury.

(Burnett, J. dissents.)

(April 28, 1914.)

brough, 78 N. Y. 232. It is stated that the construction of a drain through private lands without compensation to the owner for the land taken cannot be authorized; that the authorities who construct such a drain without the consent of and without compensation to the owner for the land taken are trespassers, "and an assessment to pay for the cost of the wrong cannot be legally laid. In other words, the petitioner cannot be compelled to pay for a trespass committed upon his land."

An assessment for a drain constructed without lawfully acquiring the right of way therefor is invalid. People ex rel. Williams v. Haines, 49 N. Y. 587. People ex rel. Cook v. Nearing, 27 N. Y. 306, holding that an assessment upon land for a drain improvement which was constructed without acquiring the right of way is not, for that reason, invalid, but that the remedy of the one whose property is invaded is in trespass, is overruled by the Williams Case.

An assessment to pay for the cost of a street improvement which followed a different line or course from that shown on the maps, and which thereby encroached upon private property, upon the property thus trespassed upon, is invalid. Tredwell v. Brooklyn, 11 App. Div. 224, 43 N. Y. Supp. 458. The court states that an assessment to pay for the cost of the wrong cannot legally be laid on the lands affected thereby; that one cannot be compelled to pay for a trespass committed upon his lands.

An assessment for a street improvement
L.R.A.1915D.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in defendants' favor, in certiorari proceedings to review certain proceedings of the city council in making a reassessment of property in the city for the payment of street improvement expenses. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Ralph R. Duniway, for appellants:

When objections are made by the property owners to the reassessment, the council must hear and determine them.

Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 383, 100 Pac. 942; Morgan v. Portland, 53 Or. 368, 100 Pac. 667; Duniway v. Portland, 47 Or. 103, 81 Pac. 945; Thomas v. Portland, 40 Or. 50, 66 Pac. 439; Portland v. Oregon Real Estate Co. 43 Or. 423, 72 Pac. 322; Kadlerly v. Portland, 44 Or. 154, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; Terwilliger Land Co. v. Portland, 62 Or. 101, 123 Pac. 57; Rogers v. Salem, 61 Or. 321, 122 Pac. 314; Jones v. Salem, 63 Or. 126, 123 Pac. 1096; Cook v. Portland, 35 Or. 383, 58 Pac. 353; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Portland, 40 Or. 56, 66 Pac. 442; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Gambell, 41 Or. 61, 66 Pac. 441; Oregon Transfer Co. v. Portland, 47 Or. 1, 81 Pac. 575, 82 Pac. 16; Hamilton, Special Assessments, § 823; Workman v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 463; Schintgen v. LaCrosse, 117 Wis. 158, 94 N.

upon one whose land had been improved for street purposes without his permission, and without condemning the same for public use, was held invalid in Baker v. Norwood, 11 Ohio C. D. 371.

A special tax to pay the cost of grading a street through private land was held invalid in Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. 274; also the objectors in this case were those through whose land the street had been graded. No statute is mentioned.

A similar decision appears in Culver v. Yonkers, 80 App. Div. 309, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1034, affirmed in 180 N. Y. 524, 72 N. E. 1141.

An assessment for improving a private way was held invalid in Speir v. New Utrecht, 121 N. Y. 420, 24 N. E. 692, on the ground that the improvement constituted a trespass for the expense of which no assessment could legally be made. No point is made as to the ownership of the property.

In Re Rhinelander, 68 N. Y. 105, an application was made by the owner of land assessed for the construction of a sewer, to vacate the assessment. The assessment complained of was in part for the construction of a sewer through private property without the consent of the owner thereof. It is not clear whether the entire assessment is held valid, or only that part of it which was due to the construction of the sewer through the private property. The court states: "That the municipal authorities in constructing the sewer there were trespassers, and that no assessment could legal-

W. 84; Rork v. Smith, 55 Wis. 67, 12 N. W. 408; Allen v. Davenport, 65 C. C. A. 641, 132 Fed. 209; Dean v. Charlton, 27 Wis. 522; State ex rel. Eaton v. District Ct. 95 Minn. 513, 104 N. W. 553; Dill v. Roberts, 30 Wis. 178; Plumer v. Marathon County, 46 Wis. 163, 50 N. W. 416.

There can only be a reassessment where the assessment proceedings were taken in good faith, the improvement made in substantial compliance with the contract, and where the defects in the assessment proceedings were such that the legislature could have made said defects immaterial.

Thomas v. Portland, 40 Or. 50, 66 Pac. 439; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Portland, 40 Or. 56, 66 Pac. 442; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Gambell, 41 Or. 61, 66 Pac. 441; Portland v. Oregon Real Estate Co. 43 Or. 423, 72 Pac. 322; Kaddery v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; Duniway v. Portland, 47 Or. 109, 81 Pac. 945; Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 370, 100 Pac. 942; Terwilliger Land Co. v. Portland, 62 Or. 101, 123 Pac. 57; Schintgen v. La Crosse, 117 Wis. 158, 94 N. W. 84; Hamilton, Special Assessments, §§ 823, 824.

Plaintiffs are entitled to the protection of the Constitution and courts, even when their property is attacked under the magic cry of reassessment by the defendants.

Hamilton, Special Assessments, §§ 822, 823; Workman v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 463; Schintgen v. La Crosse, 117 Wis. 158, 94 N. W. 84; Rork v. Smith, 55 Wis. 67, 12 N. W. 408; Dean v. Borohsenius, 30 Wis.

ly be laid to pay the expense of such a trespass."

In Moore v. Albany, infra, it is stated that the assessment in this case was assailed by the owner of the land wrongfully invaded. This fact does not appear in the report of the Rhinelander Case. The court in Moore v. Albany, supra, distinguishing that case further from the Rhinelander Case, states that in the Rhinelander Case there was no law under which the title of the land used could be obtained.

No part of the cost of a retaining wall erected partly upon the street and partly on the property of an abutting owner can be collected from such abutting owner, where the owner objected at the time of the construction to such invasion of his property rights. Western Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Allegheny, 92 Pa. 100. The objection here was to the cost of the wall apart from the cost of the paving of the street.

An assessment of the cost of constructing a sidewalk upon the plaintiff's land was held invalid in Richter v. New York, 24 Misc. 613, 54 N. Y. Supp. 150.

An improvement under a statute relating solely to the drainage of lands upon which surface water remains stagnant, in the course of which the authorities not only constructed a drain, but filled the lot, such filling constituting a large part of the cost of the improvement, is irregular, and an assessment therefor will be vacated. Re VanBuren, 17 Hun, 527. Ingalls, J., takes the position that this was a substantial error which rendered the assessment void; while Brady, J., concurs in the result on account of the effect of the decision in People ex rel. Williams v. Haines, supra. Re VanBuren was affirmed in the court of appeals (79 N. Y. 384) on grounds other than those covered in the present note.

Under a statute authorizing the improvement of public streets and assessment of the cost thereof on adjoining lots, the cost of improving a private street cannot be assessed upon adjoining lots. Spaulding v. Bradley, 79 Cal. 449, 22 Pac. 47; Spaulding v. Wesson, 115 Cal. 441, 47 Pac. 249. See Naltner v. Blake, 56 Ind. 127, infra. L.R.A.1915D.

On the contrary, the validity of such assessments has been sustained.

Thus, it has been held that a lot owner cannot attack the validity of an assessment for a sidewalk across the front part of his lot for the reason that the property was never acquired by the city for such purposes, where his lot has received the benefit and advantages of such walk. Boynton v. People, 159 Ill. 553, 42 N. E. 842. It is stated that the owner has a full consideration for the assessment levied on his lot, and the question whether he has received or is entitled to receive compensation for the strip of ground upon which the sidewalk is placed is not involved in this litigation; that if he is so entitled, the law will afford him a remedy.

In Davis v. Silverton, 47 Or. 171, 82 Pac. 16, it is held that an assessment for a street improvement is not rendered invalid so that it may be enjoined by the fact that, in doing the work, the city, believing that it was grading to the street line only, and without any wilful design or purpose of encroaching upon private property, did in fact encroach upon private property. The action in this case was brought by the owner of the property invaded, but no point is made of this fact. This case was followed in Hochfeld v. Portland, — Or. —, 142 Pac. 824, upon a writ of review to correct error committed by the city council in a reassessment of property for street improvements, where it was claimed that, in improving the street, there was a trespass upon the land of the abutting owners in building thereon an embankment to hold the fill of the street, without having condemned the property for public use. Apparently this action was not by the owner of the property invaded.

The fact that the authorities, in making a public improvement, unlawfully invaded private property, has been held not to invalidate an assessment made to pay for the improvement, where it is attacked by one other than the owner of the invaded premises. Moore v. Albany, 98 N. Y. 396.

The improvement involved in Moore v. Albany was a street. A part of the im-

236; Allen v. Davenport, 65 C. C. A. 641, 132 Fed. 209; Thomas v. Portland, 40 Or. 50, 66 Pac. 439; Duniway v. Portland, 47 Or. 109, 81 Pac. 945; Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 383, 100 Pac. 942; Morgan v. Portland, 53 Or. 368, 100 Pac. 657; Applegate v. Portland, 53 Or. 552, 99 Pac. 890; Jones v. Salem, 63 Or. 126, 123 Pac. 1098; Terwilliger Land Co. v. Portland, 62 Or. 101, 123 Pac. 57; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Portland, 40 Or. 56, 66 Pac. 442; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Gambell, 41 Or. 61, 66 Pac. 441; Portland v. Oregon Real Estate Co. 43 Or. 423, 72 Pac. 322; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222.

The records must disclose the right of the city to pass this reassessment upon pri-provement consisted of excavations on the slopes outside of the street line upon private property where the grade of the street was lower, so as to secure the full width of the street at grade. Where the grade of the street was elevated an embankment was placed outside of the street line on private property. Another part of the work upon private property outside the street line was the construction of drains; all of this work was done without the knowledge or express consent of the owners of the land, but such owners did not make any objection after they learned of the same, did not even object to the assessment upon their land, and allowed the embankments to remain for a number of years. It is stated that the improvement was completed much more cheaply than it would have been had the street been protected by a retaining wall or in any other way; so that the trespass, if one was committed, was really for the benefit of the persons assessed.

In Re Ingraham, 64 N. Y. 310, an action to vacate the assessment made upon lots for the construction of a sewer, in which the assessment was claimed to be invalid because the title to lands on which the sewer was laid had never been acquired by the corporation, the petitioner, who claimed to own to the middle of the street, did not show that the sewer was laid on his side of the street, nor in the center of the street. He alleged in his petition that the opposite side of the street was the property of and owned by individuals, and not by the city, and by affidavit showed that this half of the street, so far as he had any knowledge, had never been deeded to the city authorities. The court states that these allegations do not interfere with the right of the city to lay the sewer, that a permission from the owner or owners would be sufficient authority for that purpose, and as it is not shown that no such permission was given, and as it does not appear that these owners object, the legal presumption is that the city authorities were acting under a proper license, and had ample power to perform the work; that this must be assumed until the contrary is established by sufficient evidence.

vate property, or the proceedings cannot be sustained upon review.

Jones v. Salem, 63 Or. 126, 123 Pac. 1096; Morgan v. Portland, 53 Or. 368, 100 Pac. 657; Applegate v. Portland, 53 Or. 552, 99 Pac. 890.

When the city makes a street improvement which trespasses upon the private abutting property it is a trespasser, and a trespasser cannot recover for his trespass by claiming it is a benefit to the property trespassed upon.

People ex rel. Williams v. Haines, 40 N. Y. 587; Western Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Allegheny, 92 Pa. 100; Re Cheesbrough, 56 How. Pr. 460, affirmed in 78 N. Y. 232; Re Van Buren, 17 Hun, 527; Re Rhineland, 68 N. Y. 105; Moore v. Albany, 98

dec. 100. It is further stated that it is not enough to establish that, in carrying out the improvement, the city authorities committed a trespass upon the lands of another party; that this is a matter which rests between the city authorities and the person affected, and is not a valid ground of objection by a party assessed, who has no interest in the land upon which the sewer is laid. The case was returned to the lower courts for further proof.

See Hochfeld v. Portland, supra.

Property owners who have been assessed for the construction of a sewer cannot object to the confirmation of the assessment on the ground that the sewer crosses private property, where the owner of the property, who had full knowledge of the construction of the sewer, took no steps to prevent it and made no objection thereto, and consequently, under the law of the jurisdiction, would be estopped from making claim for compensation because of the construction of the sewer through his property. Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26.

Tax bills given in payment of sewers one of which was built over private property are valid, where the owner of the property gave his previous approval and consent to the construction. St. Joseph use of Saxton Nat. Bank v. Landis, 54 Mo. App. 315. It is stated that the owner would be estopped to question the right to occupy his lot with the city sewer, since, as owner of the property, he not only consented to the use of it by the city, but stood by and acquiescingly saw an expensive sewer constructed through his lot, which became a part of the public sewer system of the city.

The right of landowners who were contesting an assessment for a sewer, to raise the question as to the validity of the assessment on the ground that the land on which the sewer was constructed was not owned by the city, was denied after an appeal from the common council to the court, in McGill v. Bruner, 65 Ind. 421.

Where the public body making the improvement has received some grant or license from the owner of the premises to use the same for the purpose of the improve-

N. Y. 396; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522, 3 L.R.A. 247, 16 Am. St. Rep. 597, 41 N. W. 677; Hendershott v. Otumwa, 46 Iowa, 658, 26 Am. Rep. 182; Broadwell v. Kansas City, 75 Mo. 213, 42 Am. Rep. 406; Ashley v. Port Huron, 85 Mich. 296, 24 Am. Rep. 552; Martinsville v. Shirley, 84 Ind. 546; Evansville v. Decker, 84 Ind. 325, 43 Am. Rep. 86; Giacconi v. Astoria, 60 Or. 12, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1150, 113 Pac. 855, 118 Pac. 180; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. §§ 201, 204, 490, 492, 493; 38 Cyc. 1035, 1036, 1043; Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192, 60 N. W. 788; Stewart v. Tucker, 106 Ala. 319, 17 So. 385; Graham v. Connersville & N. C. Junction R. Co. 36 Ind. 463, 10 Am. Rep. 60; Warner v. Fountain, 28 Wis. 405; Hershberger v. Pittsburgh, 115 Pa. 78, 8 Atl. 381; Baltimore v. Hook, 62 Md. 371; Carpenter v. Hennepin County, 56 Minn. 513, 58 N. W. 295; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 640, 16 Am. Rep. 787; Alton v. Mulledy, 21 Ill. 76; Boston v. District of Columbia, 19 Ct. Cl. 31; Webster v. Stewart, 6 Iowa, 401; Westerfield v. Williams, 59 Ind. 221; Putnam v. Tyler, 117 Pa. 570, 12 Atl. 43; Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige, 390; Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 320; Ellett v. Wade, 47 Ala. 456; Isle-Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332, 26 Am. Rep. 520; Pinney v. Winsted, 83 Conn. 411, 76 Atl. 994, 20 Ann. Cas. 923; Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38; Mulligan v. Kenny, 34 La. Ann. 50; Caldwell v. Eneas, 2 Mill. Const. 348, 12 Am. Dec. 681; Davis v. Silvertown, 47 Or. 171, 82 Pac. 16; Kingsley

ment, the validity of such grant to effect the purpose for which it is intended is not discussed generally herein.

The case of Chicago v. Green, 238 Ill. 258, 87 N. E. 417, denying the validity of a special assessment for a sewer where the right to construct and maintain the sewer under a canal was given only by a resolution of the canal commissioners, which was held insufficient to convey the interest necessary for the permanent maintenance of the sewer, and Berwyn v. Berglund, 255 Ill. 498, 99 N. E. 705, sustaining an assessment where there was a grant of the right to maintain a sewer, are illustrative of this class of cases.

A few cases further illustrating this question are the following:

An assessment for a sewer running chiefly through private land the owners of which had granted to the city the right to lay the sewer through the land was sustained in Taylor v. Haverhill, 192 Mass. 287, 78 N. E. 474, where the city had power to lay such a sewer and make an assessment for its cost.

An assessment of the costs of a retaining wall erected in a street improvement partly on the street and partly on adjoining property, with the consent of the owners thereof, was held rightly assessed upon the abutting property, in Longworth v. Cincinnati, 34 Ohio St. 101, but no objection was made to the assessment on the specific ground that it was erected on private property.

The cost of a stone wall which is a necessary part of a street improvement, constructed on the sides of steep hills, built in part upon private property with the consent of the owners thereof, may be properly included in an assessment on abutting owners for the cost of the improvement. Re Perrysville Ave. 210 Pa. 537, 60 Atl. 160. None of the wall was built on the land of those objecting in this case. It is further stated in the opinion that an easement for the wall could have been obtained by adverse proceedings.

An assessment for the improvement of a street, part of which is owned by a private party, is not void on the theory that the L.R.A.1915D.

city is without jurisdiction to make the improvement because of such ownership, where there is a subsequent dedication of the street. Clark v. Salem, 61 Or. 116, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 205, 121 Pac. 416.

See St. Joseph use of Saxton Nat. Bank v. Landis, supra, as to the effect of owner not objecting.

The validity of an assessment for the construction of a public improvement, levied before the right of way on which the improvement is to be constructed has been secured, is not discussed. See Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 140 Ill. 216, 29 N. E. 704, where the validity of an assessment for a sewer under such circumstances was sustained.

It was held in Holmes v. Hyde Park, 121 Ill. 128, 13 N. E. 540, that the owner of property specially assessed for the purpose of grading and paving a street of an incorporated village could not interpose the objection, on an application to the court to confirm the assessment, that the village had not acquired title to the soil to be graded and paved as a street. Following this case, the court in Hunerberg v. Hyde Park, 130 Ill. 156, 22 N. E. 486, held that an owner of property who was specially assessed for the improvement of a street, and who claimed to be the owner of a part of the street where the proposed improvement was to be made, could not object to a confirmation of the assessment roll.

II. Theory that invalid part of assessment may be separated from valid.

With the exception of Re Rhinelander, 68 N. Y. 105 (discussed infra), the question whether the assessment can be sustained in part and held invalid in part was not considered in the foregoing cases. It will be noticed that this question was considered in Reiff v. Portland. It has also been considered in other cases. The majority of the cases hold that the total assessment for a public improvement, a small part of which is built on private property without the authority or consent of the owners, is not void, especially where the part that is

v. United R. Co. 66 Or. 50, 133 Pac. 787; Corvallis & E. R. Co. v. Benson, 61 Or. 359, 121 Pac. 418; Clark v. Portland, 62 Or. 124, 123 Pac. 708; Salem Mills Co. v. Lord, 42 Or. 82, 69 Pac. 1033, 70 Pac. 832; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Pacific Laundry Co. v. Pacific Bridge Co. 69 Or. 306, 138 Pac. 221; Warren v. Astoria, 67 Or. 603, 135 Pac. 527; Trotter v. Stayton, 45 Or. 301, 77 Pac. 395; Bernard v. Williamette Box & Lumber Co. 64 Or. 223, 129 Pac. 1039; 22 Cyc. 831-836; Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. 20 L.R.A. 161, note; Lynch v. Union Inst. for Sav. 159 Mass. 306, 20 L.R.A. 842, 34 N. E. 364; Williamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 26 Or. 224, 29 L.R.A. 88, 46 Am. St. Rep. 620, 37 Pac. 1016; Norton v. Elwert, 29 Or. 583, 41 Pac. 926; High, Inj. 4th ed. §§ 578-1272, 1273-1278; Lewis, Em. Dom. 3th ed. §§ 901-904-929-931; Dyer v. Bandon, 68 Or. 406, 136 Pac. 652.

There can be no reassessment, as the city illegally undertook to repair and improve different parts of the street in one proceeding, in violation of the charter, and in order to defeat the plaintiffs' right of remonstrance.

Oregon Transfer Co. v. Portland, 47 Or. 1, 81 Pac. 575, 82 Pac. 16; Cook v. Portland, 35 Or. 383, 58 Pac. 353; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Portland, 40 Or. 56, 66 Pac. 442; Oregon Real Estate Co. v. Gambell, 41 Or. 61, 66 Pac. 441; Portland v. Oregon Real Estate Co. 43 Or. 423, 72 Pac. 322; Jones v. Salem, 63 Or. 126, 123 Pac. 1096; built on private property can be reconstructed at a small cost.

Thus, tax bills issued to pay for the construction of a sewer a small part of which is built on private property without the authority or consent of the owner are not void in toto, especially where the part built on private property can be reconstructed by the city at a small cost. Johnson v. Duer, 115 Mo. 366, 21 S. W. 800. It is stated that there was some doubt whether the finding of the trial court that the sewer was laid through private property without the knowledge or consent of the owners was justified by the evidence, but the finding as made was accepted by the supreme court as a basis of the decision.

Referring to this case, and stating that it holds that one other than the owner of property invaded will be relieved of the cost of that part of the work which was constructed on private land, the court, in Springfield ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Baxter, 180 Mo. App. 40, 165 S. W. 366, holds in an action by the holder of a special tax bill to recover thereon that an instruction to the effect that the encroachment on the private property did not in any way render the tax bill void was properly refused.

In Athens v. Carmer, 169 Pa. 426, 32 Atl. 422, where, in constructing a sidewalk which was about 280 feet long, a thin wedge at one end of the walk an inch or 2 inches wide at the base, and running to a point a few feet away, was over the line of the street. It was held that a recovery of the assessment for that part of the sidewalk which involved no trespass should be allowed, and that the defense that no recovery could be had because of the trespass should be restricted to that part of the whole work which was in fact a trespass.

That there can be a recovery for the part of a sewer regularly constructed is held also in Miller v. Anheuser, 2 Mo. App. 168.

But so much of the cost of the improvement as is due to the unlawful invasion of private property is void. Johnson v. Duer, supra. But an injunction to restrain the collection of tax bills issued in payment of L.R.A.1915D.

the improvement was refused until the part of the assessment, other than that for the part of the sewer constructed through private property should be paid or tendered.

That there can be no recovery for the part of a sewer constructed on private property is held also in Miller v. Anheuser, supra.

In the abstract of Lorenz v. Armstrong, appearing in 3 Mo. App. 574, it is stated that where street improvements have been made by a municipal corporation upon property which has not been dedicated or condemned to public use there can be no recovery on a special tax bill issued for such improvement.

See Athens v. Carmer, supra.

This seems to be the holding in Re Rhineland, 68 N. Y. 105, where, in an action to vacate an assessment upon land on the ground that the sewer for the construction of which the assessment had been levied was constructed across the private property of the petitioner seeking to vacate the assessment, it is stated that the place indicated was not a street, that the municipal authorities in constructing the sewer there were trespassers, and that no assessment could legally be laid to pay the expense of such a trespass.

See Western Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Allegheny, 92 Pa. 100.

Where the attack is made by the owner of the invaded premises, whose substantial rights have been invaded, the entire assessment is void. Thus, an assessment for the cost of the construction of a sidewalk which encroaches upon the property on which the assessment is levied is invalid in its entirety where the substantial rights of the property owner are invaded. Springfield ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Baxter, supra. The sidewalk in this case encroached about 8 inches at one end, ran off the lot and onto the parking altogether about 140 feet from the starting point, so that only a triangular part of the sidewalk, 8 inches at one end, narrowing down to a point 140 feet away, was on the defendant's lot. There was no evidence in this case showing the value of the lot, or what, if any, improve-

Rogers v. Salem, 61 Or. 321, 122 Pac. 314; Thurber v. McMinnville, 63 Or. 410, 128 Pac. 43; Terwilliger Land Co. v. Portland, 62 Or. 101, 123 Pac. 57; Macartney v. Shipherd, 60 Or. 133, 117 Pac. 814, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1257; Dean v. Charlton, 27 Wis. 522; Dill v. Roberts, 30 Wis. 178; Plumer v. Marathon County, 46 Wis. 163, 50 N. W. 416; Rork v. Smith, 55 Wis. 83, 12 N. W. 408; Duniway v. Portland, 47 Or. 111, 81 Pac. 945; Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 383, 100 Pac. 942; Grady v. Dundon, 30 Or. 333, 47 Pac. 915; Flagg v. Columbia County, 51 Or. 172, 94 Pac. 186; Scott v. Ford, 52 Or. 288, 97 Pac. 99; 19 Cyc. 26.

Messrs. Frank S. Grant and Lyman E. Latourette for respondents.

Ramsey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On September 21, 1910, the plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of certiorari to obtain a review of certain proceedings of the council of the city of Portland, had in making a reassessment of the property of certain adjacent lot owners in said city, for the payment of the expenses of a street improvement; the petitioners claiming that said proceedings were illegal and void, for reasons alleged in said petition. The petition contains 27 pages, and hence it is impracticable to set it out in this opinion.

On October 7, 1903, the council of the city of Portland passed a resolution for the improvement of Seventeenth street of said city from 58.5 feet north of the north line of Vaughn street to the south line of Marshall street, in said city, in the manner stated in said resolution. The improvements contemplated by said resolution were made, and the city assessed the expense thereof upon the property adjacent to said street; but the circuit court of Multnomah county, upon a writ of review, prosecuted by interested parties, held that said assessment was invalid, for defects in said proceedings, and directed the city to make a reassessment of the expense of said improvement. Said judgment or order was made on July 6, 1908.

On March 23, 1910, the council of the city of Portland passed an ordinance, No. 20,989, entitled, "An Ordinance Making a Reassessment for the Improvement of Seventeenth Street from 58.5 Feet North of the North Line of Vaughn Street, to the South Line of Marshall Street." This ordinance was approved by the mayor of said city on March 24, 1910, and by this ordinance the city levied certain reassessments upon the property of the plaintiffs, amounting to $5,574.79, for the improvement of said Seventeenth street from 58.5 feet north of the north line of Vaughn street to the south line of Marshall street. The plaintiffs own property adjacent to said improvement, and said reassessment was made by said city to pay for the improvement of said street, made as stated supra; the assessment, originally made by said city to pay for said improvement, having been held invalid, for defects in the proceedings. The reassessment was made to pay for the same improvement for which the said invalid assessment was made. The plaintiffs began this certiorari proceeding, claiming that said reassessment is invalid.

1. After the allowance of said writ of review, the trial court allowed a motion of the defendants for an amended writ, and disallowed a motion of the plaintiffs for a further return to said writ. The rulings of the court upon these motions are assigned as error. But, in the view that we take of this case, the rulings of the court on said motions cannot materially affect our decision. Hence we will treat the questions for consideration as if the papers that the plaintiffs desired returned were in the record.

2. The reassessment was, in a sense, a continuation of the original assessment proceedings. There was no new improvement made, and the reassessment proceedings were on it; nothing from which the appellate court could determine the value of the property so that it might be determined whether the encroachment was substantial. The trial court had held under the evidence that the encroachment invaded the substantial rights of the defendant, and the appellate court stated that it was unwilling to declare as a matter of law that the trial court's finding in that particular was erroneous. See, in this connection, Athens v. Carmer, supra.

Or where the cost of a retaining wall which was erected entirely upon an adjoining owner's property cannot be separated from the cost of grading and graveling an alley in the improvement of which the wall is erected, an assessment upon the property thus invaded is entirely void. Naltner v. Blake, 56 Ind. 127. It was here claimed that the owner had consented to the erection of the wall on his property. In answer to this it is stated that even had he consented to such erection, the city was not authorized to charge him with the expense of the wall. This decision is regarded in Jackson v. Smith, 120 Ind. 520, 22 N. E. 432, as being in conflict with McGill v. Bruner, 65 Ind. 421, supra, and with the cases generally which deny the property owner the right to attack the assessment on the ground that the title to the property on which the improvement is made has not been acquired by the body making it.

W. A. E.

were had for the purpose of imposing a lien upon the lands of the adjacent property owners for the payment of the expense of said improvement, in accordance with § 400 of the charter of said city.

3. The first point urged by the plaintiffs is that the reassessment is invalid, because the original resolution for the improvement of Seventeenth street was invalid, in that it attempted to provide for a repair of two separate parts of Seventeenth street, which had been formerly improved by gravel, and which parts of said street extended from the south line of Marshall street to 50 feet north of the north line of Marshall street, and were then separated by a wooden elevated bridge about 4 blocks long, where a second piece of gravel street commenced, which was attempted to be repaired in said resolution, etc.

Counsel for the plaintiffs contends that said resolution is invalid, under § 375 of the charter of Portland, which, inter alia, provides: "The improvement of each street or part thereof, shall be made under a separate proceeding."

This clause prohibits the improvement of two or more streets or parts of two or more streets in the same proceeding, but, whether it prevents the improvement of two or more parts of the same street in one proceeding, when the parts to be improved are disconnected, need not be decided here, because the improvement in question is all on Seventeenth street, and the portions of the street improved appear to be continuous from 58.5 feet north of the north line of Vaughn street to the south line of Marshall street. The fact that along a portion of the part to be improved a fill was necessary did not invalidate the improvement.

4. Section 400 of the charter of the city of Portland (Special Laws of Oregon for 1903, p. 161) provides that whenever an assessment for a street improvement has been or shall hereafter be set aside or amended by any court, or when the council shall be in doubt as to the validity of such assessment, the council may, by ordinance, make a new assessment or reassessment upon the lots, blocks, or parcels of land which have been benefited by such improvement, to the extent of their respective and proportionate shares of the full value thereof. Under said section, "such reassessment shall be based upon the special and peculiar benefits of such improvement to the respective parcels of land assessed, at the time of the original making, but shall not exceed the amount of such original assessment." Said § 400 has been before this court several times, and its validity and constitutionality are settled by the decisions of this court, L.R.A.1915D.

and it is not necessary to re-examine those questions in this cause. Duniway v. Portland, 47 Or. 103, 81 Pac. 945; Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 370, 100 Pac. 942.

5. Under said § 400, supra, the reassessment therein authorized to be made must be "based upon the special and peculiar benefits of such improvement to the respective parcels of land assessed," and the assessment upon any lot or parcel should not exceed the special and peculiar benefit resulting to such lot or parcel of land from such improvement.

Section 400, supra, provides the manner in which a reassessment shall be made, and, if the city in this case complied with said action, the reassessment made is valid.

6. In the first place, there must have been an actual attempt by the council, in good faith, under the regular procedure provided by the charter, to make an improvement, and assess the cost thereof to the property benefited, in proportion to such benefit. The proceeding must have failed, because of an omission to comply with some of the provisions of the charter relating to such assessments. The proceeding must have been set aside by some court of competent jurisdiction on account of defects therein, or the council must have doubts as to the validity of such proceedings. The original contract for the improvement must have been substantially complied with, and the improvement must have been made in substantial accordance with the contract and the proceedings authorizing it.

No notice to abutting property owners need be given of the intention of the council to pass a resolution for reassessment, and such a resolution need not contain a finding that the original contract for the improvement had been substantially complied with. See, on all these points, Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 383, 385, 100 Pac. 942.

After the resolution providing for the reassessment has been passed by the council, notice thereof must be given to the property owners, and they must have an opportunity to appear and object to the reassessment, if they desire to do so.

This being a writ of certiorari, we are restricted to an examination of the record and proceedings of the council, and cannot consider facts that are not found in the record.

7. The plaintiffs contend that they were not properly notified of the intention of the council to make said reassessment, and given a proper opportunity to make objections thereto. The council on August 25, 1909, adopted a resolution for the making of said reassessment, and directed the auditor of said city to prepare, within ninety days from said date, a preliminary reassessment.

assessment upon the lots, blocks, and parcels of land within the district benefited by said improvement, and give due notice to the owners of all property affected by said reassessment, in the manner prescribed by the charter.

8. On November 24, 1909, the auditor presented to the council of said city his preliminary reassessment of the property affected by said improvement, and it was filed on said date. Notice was given by the auditor of the making of said preliminary reassessment, and that any objections to said assessment and reassessment should be filed in writing with the auditor within ten days from December 4, 1909, the last day of publication of said notice, and that objections to said reassessment would be heard by the council at the regular meeting thereof on December 22, 1909, etc. Said notice seems to be in proper form, and it was published and served according to law.

On December 13, 1909, the plaintiffs, by their attorney, filed with the auditor lengthy objections to said reassessment. In these objections the plaintiffs contended that said reassessment was illegal and void, for several reasons. One objection made to said reassessment was that it was not made in accordance with the special and peculiar benefits to the property by reason of said improvement, and apportioned equitably throughout the district. Another objection was that the city in one proceeding attempted to make a repair of two separate parts of Seventeenth street that had formerly been improved with gravel, and which parts of said street were separated by a wooden elevated bridge about four blocks long. But the record shows that said improvement was not in separate parts of said street, but continuous, as stated supra. Another objection was that the city, in making a fill in said improvement, caused a large amount of earth and other filling material to be put upon the private property of the people opposite the wooden bridge, without their consent and without obtaining any right to do so, and that the city had attempted to appropriate said private property to a public use, in violation of the Constitution, and without compensation and that, in doing so, the city was violating the law, and a trespasser. Said objections allege also that the city, in making said reassessment, undertook to charge said property owners for the expense of said trespassing upon their property, in building the slopes of said fill upon their property, and attempting also to charge the entire cost of the fill in the street upon the abutting property, and that said fill was not made for the benefit of the abutting property, but for the benefit of other property in the district, and the city at large; that it was an illegal and unjust charge upon the abutting property; and that the said charge upon the abutting property owners is greatly in excess of the benefit to the property abutting the bridge; and that the reassessment upon the property of other persons is a great deal less than the benefit to their property, etc.

9. A. L. Barbour, auditor of said city, made said reassessment, and, in his certificate appended thereto, he certified as follows: "I, A. L. Barbour, auditor of the city of Portland, Oregon, do hereby certify that the whole cost of said improvement was the sum of $10,762.12; that I have viewed the reassessment district and each lot, part thereof, and parcel of land therein; that the property within the reassessment district is benefited in the full sum of such cost; that I have ascertained what I deem to be the special and peculiar benefit derived by each lot or part thereof or parcel of land within said district by reason of such improvement; and I hereby apportion the cost of said improvement to the lots, parts of lots, and parcels of land within the said district, in accordance with the special and peculiar benefits derived thereby, in the amount set opposite the number and description thereof, and to the extent of their respective and proportionable shares of the full value thereof. I further certify that each lot, part of lot, or parcel of land within said district is especially and peculiarly benefited by said improvement in the amounts so set forth, and, in my judgment, said property should be reassessed in such amounts," etc.

10. The foregoing certificate of the auditor shows on its face that said reassessment was properly made, and we do not find that his certificate is not true. The auditor was the proper officer to make said reassessment, and he is presumed to have done his duty properly, and his certificate stating how he made said reassessment is presumed to be true.

In assessing or reassessing the expenses of street improvements, the officer charged with that duty is required to act in good faith. It is his duty to estimate in good faith, and as accurately as he can, the amount that each parcel of land subject to assessment will be specially and peculiarly benefited by the improvement, and in no instance to assess upon a piece of property an amount in excess of such special and peculiar benefit. He has no right to sit down and figure what the improvement in front of property has cost, or will cost, and impose that amount upon the property, unless the property has been, or will be, benefited to that extent by the improvement.

11. The record of the council shows that on December 22, 1909, a remonstrance by Anna F. Grace et al. and Ralph R. Duniway, attorney for objecting property owners, was read in the council, and, on motion, it was referred to the committee on streets.

On February 21, 1910, said committee wrote the attorney for the plaintiffs, notifying him that the ordinance making a reassessment for the Seventeenth street improvements, and the remonstrances against the same, would be considered by said committee at the next regular meeting of the committee, to be held on March 4, 1910, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

In a letter of the date of March 4, 1910, addressed to said committee, the attorney for the plaintiffs acknowledges receipt of the committee's letter to him, notifying him that the remonstrances against the proposed reassessment would be considered by the committee on March 4, 1910, at 2 o'clock P. M., and in this letter Mr. Duniway says that he does not believe that the committee had any jurisdiction or power to act on the reassessment ordinance and objections, or that the council could then legally pass upon his objections and enact said ordinance. He said he would attend said meeting of the committee if it should be possible for him to do so, but expressed doubts as to his ability to attend.

12. The objections of the plaintiffs to said reassessment were referred also to the city attorney by said committee, and the city attorney reported that, if Mr. Duniway's objection that said reassessment was an attempt to impose the cost upon the abutting property without regard to benefits, and, as a mere mathematical calculation, was true, the rule of assessment should be changed.

On March 18, 1910, the committee on streets reported to the council that they had considered the ordinance for the reassessment of the cost of the improvement of said Seventeenth street, and the remonstrances against the same; that the remonstrators were called, and, no one appearing, the remonstrances were considered by the committee, and the committee recommended that the remonstrances be overruled and the ordinance passed. Said report is dated March 18, 1910, and it was filed March 22, 1910.

At a regular meeting of the council on March 23, 1910, the report of said committee was presented to the council, and, on motion, it was adopted, and said remonstrances were overruled by the council. Said ordinance was passed by the council L.R.A.1915D.

March 23, 1910, and approved by the mayor March 24, 1910.

13. The city gave due notice of the making of the preliminary reassessment and of the time within which objections thereto could be made. The plaintiffs, by their attorney, filed with the auditor their written objections thereto. These objections were presented to the council and read, and, by the council, they were referred to the committee on streets. This committee referred said objections to the city attorney, and he made a report concerning them to the committee. The committee notified the plaintiffs' attorney of the time when they would consider said objections or remonstrances. The attorney did not appear before the committee, and the committee, after considering said objections, reported to the council that they had considered them, and recommended that the objections be overruled. This report was presented to the council at a regular meeting, and read to the council, and the council, on motion, overruled said objections, and, at the same session, passed the ordinance making the reassessment. We hold that the plaintiffs had due notice of said proposed reassessment, and that they filed their objections thereto, and that those objections were heard, decided, and overruled by the council, and that the proceedings of the council were regular in this respect.

14. There is another matter that should not be overlooked, relating to the opportunity given to persons whose lands are reassessed to have determined the amount that should be assessed against their lands to pay for such an improvement. Section 401 of the charter of Portland confers upon persons objecting to such reassessment the right to appeal from the decision of the council to the circuit court, and have the amount to be assessed against their property determined by a jury trial. Hence it appears that the charter of Portland affords the adjacent landowners proper remedies against unjust reassessments by the council.

15. The plaintiffs contend also that the city, in making said improvements, made a large fill along a portion of Seventeenth street, and, in doing so, wrongfully and without the consent of the adjacent landowners, caused a large amount of earth and other filling material to be put upon the land owned by the persons along said street, and that, in doing so, the city violated the law, and was a trespasser, and that, for this trespass, this court should annul said reassessment.

16. We think that the city had no right to pile earth and other material upon the abutting owners' lands, and that, if it was done without their consent, it was a trespass, for which the landowners could recover damages in an action at law.

In Hendershott v. Ottumwa, 46 Iowa, 659, 26 Am. Rep. 182, the court says: "It is equally well settled that if, in making changes in the natural surface of streets, the city is negligent in construction, so that the adjacent lots are injured by reason of such negligence, the city is liable for such injury."

In Ashley v. Port Huron, 35 Mich. 301, 24 Am. Rep. 552, the court says: "If the corporation [the city] send people with picks and spades to cut a street through it [land] without first acquiring the right of way, it is liable for a tort; but it is no more liable under such circumstances than it is when it pours upon his land a flood of water by a public sewer so constructed that the flooding must be a necessary result. The one is no more unjustifiable, and no more an actionable wrong, than the other."

In Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522, 3 L.R.A. 247, 16 Am. St. Rep. 597, 41 N. W. 677, the syllabus is: "In this case the grading of a city street in such a manner as to raise an embankment upon 30 feet of the entire frontage of an abutting lot, and thereby bury a portion of the dwelling house of the owner therein, is held to amount to a taking of private property for the public use, within the inhibitions of the Constitution; and that in such a case the law does not require such owner to wait until his property is completely destroyed, and then turn him over to an action of trespass to recover his damages, but equity, when appealed to, will interfere and restrain such threatened destruction."

See also Giaconci v. Astoria, 60 Or. 12, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1150, 113 Pac. 855, 118 Pac. 180, and Western Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Allegheny, 92 Pa. 100.

In this case it is claimed that the city made a fill the full width of the street, and made a slope extending onto the lands of the abutting owners. We hold that the city had no right to do this without the consent of the owners. However, it is probable that the city could have obtained a right to use the property of the abutting owners by proper proceedings and paying for it.

Moore v. Albany, 98 N. Y. 406, 407, is a case closely in point, the court there says, inter alia: "As to the embankments outside of the street lines. In grading a street it seems to us clear that the public authorities have no right to invade private property outside of the street lines. If it becomes necessary to use or to interfere with such property, they must in some way acquire the right to do so. These embankments were built for the purpose of making the street within the street lines. In order to grade the street to the full width thereof, it was necessary either to build retaining walls on the sides of the street within the street lines, or to support the street by sloping embankments upon the adjoining lands. It is evident that the latter mode was the most reasonable and economical. The lands outside of the street lines are not permanently occupied or used for the street or appropriated to public travel. They remain in the possession and occupancy of the owners thereof, subject to the burden of the earth cast thereon. These embankments are evidently not injurious to the adjoining owners, as it is for their interest to have their lands filled up to the grade of the street. It cannot be presumed that they will dig away and remove these embankments, and, if they should, the street would still remain, and the city could support its sides in some other way. The only practical remedy for the owner of lands thus invaded is to sue the city or those who placed the earth upon his lands without his consent, express or implied, for the wrong, and in such an action he can recover his entire damage for a permanent appropriation of his land for the embankment. Henderson v. New York C. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 423. It does not appear that any of the owners of the land thus invaded make any objection to the embankments. They could, if they had desired, have restrained the deposit of earth upon their lands by an equitable action. That they did not do. They could have objected to the deposit of the earth, and it does not appear that they did that. They did not even object to the assessment made upon their lands on account of these embankments when they appeared before the board of contract and apportionment, and before the common council, in reference to the assessment. These embankments have remained there since the early part of the year 1877, and they have not been disturbed, and there is the highest probability that they never will be. If any attempt should be made by the landowners to disturb them, there is ample power under the city charter to vest the title to the lands in the city for the purpose of the street. Laws of 1870, chap. 77, title 7, § 1. These embankments are not the street, but are there simply for the support of the street which is upon land acquired for the purpose thereof, and their cost was a necessary and proper expense in the construction of the street."

In Marshall's Appeal, 210 Pa. 538, 539, 60 Atl. 160, the court says: "The only question argued is whether the city could assess against the abutting properties a part of the cost of stone walls built at places along the sides of the avenue. . . . Some of these walls were built in part, and, some of them wholly, on the adjoining properties. None, however, were built on the land of the appellants. The determination of the plan and manner of improving the avenue rested with the municipal authorities, and the abutting properties were liable to assessment to the extent to which the local improvement was a permanent benefit to them. If the walls were a necessary part of the street improvement, and the right to maintain them on private property was secured by the city, their cost was properly included in the assessment."

In the case of Davis v. Silvertown, 47 Or. 177, 82 Pac. 16, 18, the plaintiff claimed that the proceedings for the street improvement were, as to the assessment against her property, invalid, and she sought to have the collection of said assessment enjoined. The plaintiff had built a stone wall on what she contended was the line between her property and the street that was improved. In said suit she contended that the city, in making said improvement, had encroached upon her land and destroyed said stone wall. In deciding the case the court, inter alia, says: "If in reality there was an encroachment upon plaintiff's lots, it was not by design to widen the street beyond the true boundary, and it could not, by any logical course of reasoning or principle involved, invalidate the proceedings for the improvement of which the plaintiff complains."

We do not think that the encroachment upon the plaintiffs' lands or the assessing of the expense thereof to the adjacent owners, in the manner claimed by the plaintiffs, affected the validity of the reassessment proceedings. If said encroachment upon the lands of the plaintiffs occurred without their express or implied consent, it may be that they could maintain a suit in equity to enjoin the collection of that part of the assessments that could be shown to have been incurred to pay the expense of putting the earth on the plaintiffs' said premises; but we do not decide whether such a suit could be maintained or not. But said encroachment upon the lands of the plaintiffs, and the assessing of the expense thereof to the adjacent owners, do not invalidate said reassessment proceedings. The council had jurisdiction to make said reassessment, and its action was not rendered invalid by the encroachment complained of.

17. The plaintiffs could have prevented said encroachments upon their property by a suit for injunction. They could also have maintained an action at law to recover damages for the injury to their premises by the placing of earth upon them, and to have said earth removed as a private nuisance, if it was a nuisance, under § 341, L. O. L.

As stated supra, the plaintiffs had a right to appeal from the decision of the council to the circuit court, and have the amount that was properly assessable to their lands for said improvements determined by a jury. They had ample remedies for the redress of their grievances without resorting to certiorari proceedings.

18. It is a general rule that the remedy by certiorari should not be granted if efficient relief can be or could have been obtained by resort to other available modes of redress. 6 Cyc. 742. It is also a general rule that the granting of relief by certiorari rests in the sound discretion of the court (6 Cyc. 748); and this is especially so where the matters in controversy are of a public nature.

In Burnett v. Douglas County, 4 Or. 392, Mr. Justice McArthur says: "In all cases where the proceedings sought to be reviewed involves a matter of public interest affecting a great number of persons, the allowance of the writ is in the sound discretion of the court, and, if refused, the refusal is not subject to review or appeal."

In Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County, 47 Or. 208, 209, 81 Pac. 352, 355, the court says: "When it appears in a proceeding instituted by an individual taxpayer to annul the tax assessed against his property, on account of some insufficiency or irregularity in the manner of the assessment or the description of the property, that no equitable grounds exist for the allowance of the writ, it should ordinarily be denied, leaving the taxpayer to such remedies, as the law otherwise affords him." See, also Woodworth v. Gibbs, 61 Iowa, 398, 16 N. W. 287; Knapp v. Heller, 32 Wis. 469.

We have examined the questions presented by this appeal, and we hold that the council of the defendant city had jurisdiction to reassess the cost of the street improvement in controversy, and that said reassessment proceedings are regular and valid, and that there was no error in the proceedings of the court below.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Moore, Burnett, and Eakin, JJ., concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Eakin, J., on July 14, 1914, handed down the following additional opinion:

The writ in this case brings up for consideration only the objections to the reassessment of the cost of the improvement of Seventeenth street, filed by the plaintiff before the council on December 13, 1909, pursuant to the notice of date November 24, 1909, appointing December 22d for hearing said objections by the council. The so-called objections, instead of being briefly and concisely stated separately from the argument, are so mingled with the recitals, suggestions, and criticisms that it is difficult to find just what is the real objection. It is first objected that the reassessment is as illegal and void as the one set aside by the court, and that it was not made in the manner provided by law, but should have been made in accordance with the special benefits; second, that the cost of improvement in front of each lot was assessed thereto contrary to the charter; third, that the assessment includes the repair of two separate parts of Seventeenth street in one proceeding, and is therefore illegal; fourth, that it extended the base and support of the fill for part of the street onto adjacent property without right, and charged the cost of the extension as part of the expense of improvement, thus rendering the proceeding void and making it impossible to levy an assessment thereon; and, fifth, there is special objection by plaintiff Lewis as to matters affecting only the payment of her assessment, and not the regularity of the proceedings.

The first four objections relate to questions of law which need no special finding of fact by the council. Hughes v. Portland, 53 Or. 389, 100 Pac. 942.

The petitioners are not affected by the fifth objection nor interested therein, and it cannot be considered on this review. These objections do not call the attention of the council to just what part of the reassessment was wrong or incomplete, or in what regard, in a manner that it may rectify the assessment or answer the objection. However, considering the matters sought to be questioned, as gathered from the brief and oral argument, we understand there are two principal objections urged to the reassessment: (1) That the assessment is void because part of the improvement is made by extending the incline of the fill beyond the line of the street and upon private property without purchase or condemnation; (2) that the assessment is made on the theory of abutting costs assessed to the separate lots, instead of according to the special and peculiar benefits derived by each lot to the extent of its respective proportionate share of the costs, as provided by the charter. These two elements relate to the proceeding, and they can be raised by review, as they are shown by the record.

Thus the record may be made to disclose that the assessment is accomplished by the charter method; but when the record shows that the charter method has been followed, error in judgment of the facts in relation thereto or in the computation producing the result cannot be reviewed. That can be questioned only by appeal, where a jury trial may be had.

In addition to what has been said by Mr. Justice Ramsey in the opinion, we find the petition for rehearing is subject to the same criticism made above to the objections to the assessment, that the statement of the ground of the petition should be brief and concise, and made separately from the argument. First, it is urged that the slopes of the fill, being upon private property, to that extent the city is a trespasser, which, it is contended, renders the proceeding void, and the assessment noncollectible. No other lot owner is injured in or affected by that matter, and his remedy was to have enjoined the city in the first instance, or he may now sue for damages; but the work of improvement has been done, the whole district has the benefit of it, and the city's right to the cost is not affected by the trespass.

As to the motion made in the circuit court for an order requiring the auditor to add to the return the proceedings relating to the initiation of the improvement, we find that when a city adopts a resolution to improve a street and notice is given thereof, property owners may file objections or remonstrances against the improvement, and if no objection or remonstrance is filed, then the jurisdiction of the council is deemed complete. Section 378 of the charter. The proceeding for this improvement was commenced in 1903, and no objection or remonstrance was filed thereto. That was the time and place for plaintiffs to have objected to the inclusion of two separate portions of a street in one proceeding, and, the question not being then raised, it was waived. In the year 1908 the assessment of benefits made by the council by ordinance No. 14,144 was reviewed in the circuit court by the plaintiffs. Only the manner of making the assessment and the sufficiency of it were questioned. The writ was sustained, the proceedings reversed, ordinance No. 14,144, making the assessment, was held void, and the cause remanded for a reassessment upon the lots which have been benefited by the improvement to the extent of their respective and proportionate shares of the full value thereof. By that adjudication all irregularities or defects in prior proceedings not reviewed are deemed waived. Therefore the proceedings sought to be added to the return by the motion of plaintiffs are immaterial here, and ordinance No. 14,144 was held void and cannot affect this case. The motion for an additional transcript was properly denied. The reassessment is the effort of the council to make it according to the mandate of the circuit court, and is the only proceeding for review.

As to the assessment of the cost of the slopes of the fill, the petitioners are only interested in or affected by the extension of the fill beyond the street to the extent that the same has increased the cost of the improvement in excess of what it would have cost if held by a retaining wall, and the cost to the district probably should be reduced that amount, but that is a question of fact, not only requiring the engineer's measurements and estimates, but the testimony of expert witnesses, as to what was the excessive cost, which cannot be tried out on review. The remedy, if any, of the property owners injured or dissatisfied with the reassessment, is appeal under § 401 of the charter, which is intended to reach just such questions as this, but it does not go to the regularity of the proceedings.

As to the second question concerning the method of making the assessment according to benefits, in the preliminary assessment made by the auditor it is stated that he viewed the district and each lot, and advises that the property in the district is benefited to the amount of the cost of the improvement; that he has ascertained what he deems to be the special and peculiar benefit derived by each lot by reason thereof; that he apportions the cost of said improvement to the lots in accordance with such benefits to the extent of their respective and proportionate shares of the full value thereof, setting out each lot, and the assessment so found. The city council, by ordinance No. 20,980, makes the same statement as to the manner of assessment, and declares the assessment accordingly. There is no suggestion that the manner of making this assessment is erroneous, but only as to the result and the inclusion of the cost of the slopes of the fill, which we deem without merit. These are questions of law. The purpose of the plaintiffs in this review proceeding seems to be to require the city council to so set out the facts involved in its reassessment, its reasons therefor, and its methods of arriving at conclusions, in order that they may try out the facts in the court on review. Section 401 of the charter is intended to determine the specific amount to be assessed against any particular property by appeal, where the facts may be presented to the jury. The L.R.A.1915D.

writ of review was intended to determine from the record whether the proceedings are regular and the method adopted the proper one, but it cannot review the facts or determine the result of a reassessment. The determination by the council of the amount the property was specifically and peculiarly benefited by the improvement and the proportionate share of the cost to be charged to each lot, in the absence of fraud or demonstrable mistake of fact, is conclusive, except as a right of appeal may be given by the charter, or unless it has proceeded upon an erroneous principle of law. Hughes v. Portland, supra, 53 Or. 385, 100 Pac. 942. The amount of assessment of any lot is left to the judgment of the council, and when it has exercised its judgment its decision is final, except as above mentioned. The principal objection raised by them is that the cost of the improvement charged to their properties is in excess of the benefits and in excess of their proportionate share thereof, and the council must determine these matters as issues of fact. It has determined that the lots mentioned in § 1 of ordinance No. 20,989 are especially and peculiarly benefited by the improvement to the extent of their respective and proportionate shares thereof, and thus complies with § 400 of the charter and with the order of the circuit court, and that cannot be reviewed on this writ. The amount of the benefit is a matter of opinion, and the expression of that opinion in figures is all that is contemplated by the Hughes Case, and the council can do no more. The further remedy of the plaintiffs is under § 401 of the charter.

We think the plaintiffs had their case fully considered at the hearing by the original opinion. The petition is denied.

. Moore and Ramsey, JJ., concur.

Burnett, J., dissents.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE BAUSBACH, Appt.,

v.

FRANK G. REIFF et al.

(244 Pa. 559, 91 Atl. 224.)

Conspiracy — to secure discharge of employee.

1. Workmen cannot lawfully combine to secure the discharge of a fellow workman by notifying the employer that they will

Note. — For forcing discharge of foreman or coemployee as justification for strike, see note to De Minico v. Craig, 42 quit if he is not discharged, merely because he makes conditions so unpleasant for them that they do not care to work with him.

Evidence — res gestæ — letter of recommendation.

2. A letter of recommendation given a workman discharged at the request of fellow workmen on the day of his discharge, stating the reasons therefor, is admissible as res gestæ in an action for damages by such employee against those who secured his discharge.

(Moschzisker, J., dissents from headnote 2.)

(March 30, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Schuylkill County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been suffered because of a conspiracy by defendants to have plaintiff discharged from his employment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Wilhelm for appellant.

Mr. Charles A. Snyder for appellees.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this case brought this action of trespass against the defendants to recover from them damages which he claims to have suffered by reason of a conspiracy entered into by defendants to have him discharged from his employment as chief engineer of the Rettig Brewing Company of Pottsville, Pennsylvania. He had held that position for more than five years, when, on July 18, 1910, a committee of employees presented to the manager of the brewery a paper which was signed by all the defendants, which was as follows:

Pottsville, Pa., July 17, 1910.

We, the undersigned, do hereby declare that we refuse to work after twenty-four hours' notice to the employers of the Rettig Brewing Company as long as George Bausbach is employed at same plant.

Upon the trial, plaintiff offered testimony showing that he was discharged by the brewing company in consequence of the threats contained in the paper and repeated orally by the committee, and that the reason the defendants, the signers of the paper, demanding his discharge was that he had a short time before reported to the manager of the brewing company the conduct of a night watchman whom he had detected in stealing goods from the brewery, and who was discharged in consequence of the report made by plaintiff. The defendants admitted having presented the paper in question to the management of the brewery, but contended that their reason for so doing was not the action of plaintiff in reporting the theft, but because of a general dislike for him.

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1048, and see also Roddy v. United Mine Workers, post, 789.

As to civil liability for inducing discharge of employee, see notes in 62 L.R.A. 714; 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899; 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966; and 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893; and see also Roddy v. United Mine Workers, post, 789. L.R.A.1915D.

The trial resulted in a verdict for defendants. Plaintiff has appealed, and his counsel have filed twenty-one assignments of error, chiefly to the charge of the court below, and to its answers to points, and to rulings on offers of evidence. The third assignment is to the following language in the charge to the jury:

"If you find, of course, that these men were justified in requesting the dismissal of this man, Bausbach, the plaintiff, on account of his making it so unpleasant for them that they did not care to work with him, that is the end of this case; your verdict should be in favor of the defendants."

The first, second, twelfth, and thirteenth assignments are to language used in the charge and in answering points with respect to which substantially the same question is raised, and that is whether employees to whom a fellow workman is for any reason disagreeable may lawfully combine for the purpose of procuring his discharge by notifying the employer that they will refuse to work if the workman to whom they object is retained.

In Erdman v. Mitchell, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L.R.A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783, 56 Atl. 327, 331, this court said, speaking by Mr. Justice Dean (p. 91): "A conspiracy is the combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish an unlawful purpose. It is unlawful to deprive a mechanic or workman of work by force, threats, or intimidation of any kind; a combination of two or more to do the same thing by the same means is a conspiracy. That, by the legislation referred to, such conspiracy is no longer criminal, does not render it lawful. At common law the courts held that such combination was so prejudicial to the public interests, and so opposed to public policy, as rendered it punishable criminally; but the legislature, which generally determines what is and what is not public policy, has declared that it is no longer a crime or misdemeanor. But this is as far as it has gone; it is as far as it could go without abolishing the Declaration of Rights."

And Mr. Justice Dean quotes with approval (p. 94) from 1 Eddy on Combinations, 416, as follows: "The courts recognize the right of workmen to combine together for the purpose of bettering their condition, and in endeavoring to attain their object they may inflict more or less inconvenience and damages upon the employer; but a threat to strike unless their wages are advanced is something very different from a threat to strike unless workmen who are not members of the combination are discharged. In either case the inconvenience and damage inflicted upon the employer is the same; but in the one case the means used are to obtain a legitimate purpose, namely, the advancement of their own wages, and the injury inflicted is no more than is lawfully incidental to the enjoyment of their own legal rights. In the other case the object sought is the injury of a third party."

In Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 Ann. Cas. 638, Loring, J., said (p. 582): "A single individual may well be left to take his chances in a struggle with another individual. But in a struggle with a number of persons combined together to fight an individual, the individual's chance is small, if it exists at all. It is plain that a strike by a combination of persons has a power of coercion which an individual does not have. The result of this greater power of coercion on the part of a combination of individuals is that what is lawful for an individual is not the test of what is lawful for a combination of individuals; or, to state it in another way, there are things which it is lawful for an individual to do which it is not lawful for a combination of individuals to do. . . . We have no doubt that it is within the legal rights of a single person to refuse to work with another for the reason that the other person is distasteful to him, or for any other reason, however arbitrary. But . . . what is lawful for an individual is not necessarily lawful for a combination of individuals."

In De Minico v. Craig, 207 Mass. 593, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1048, 94 N. E. 317, it is said in the syllabus (p. 594): "A labor strike to get rid of a foreman because some of the workmen under him have a dislike for him is not a strike for a legal purpose."

Loring, J., said (p. 599): "The plaintiff had a right to work, and that right of his could not be taken away from him or interfered with by the defendants, unless it came into conflict with an equal or superior right of theirs. The defendants' right to better their condition is such an equal right. But to humor their personal objections, their likes and dislikes, or to escape from what 'is distasteful' to some of them, is not in our opinion a superior or an equal right. . . . One who better his condition only by escaping from what he merely dislikes, and by securing what he likes, does not better his condition within the meaning of those words in the rule that employees can strike to better their condition."

In the light of these authorities, which point out a sound distinction between what a single individual may lawfully do and that which a combination of individuals may do, the instructions of the trial judge which are the subject of the first three assignments of error were inadequate and erroneous. The united action of the defendants was put upon the same basis as that of any single one of them; the trial judge using by way of illustration a supposed act by Reiff, the first defendant named. It does not appear that the jury were instructed that an act which might be lawful if done by one person might become unlawful if a number of persons combined to do it. The only fair interpretation which could be placed upon the instructions given was that, "if Frank G. Reiff, or any other one of these defendants," had the right to threaten to stop work if plaintiff was not discharged, the entire twenty-eight men who signed the paper might lawfully combine to do the same thing. This was not a sound statement of the law. Again, it appears that the jury were instructed that, if plaintiff "worked on the nerves" of his coemployees, if he made himself "objectionable," "obnoxious," "unpleasant," or "distasteful" to them, they had the right to unite to procure his discharge by threatening to strike. This was going too far. The jury might very well have been instructed that, if plaintiff's habits, or his character, or his conduct while at work towards his fellow workmen, was such as to render him an unfit associate for ordinary workmen of good character, it would have been sufficient reason for interference by his fellow workmen with his employment. They had the right to combine to advance their own interests in any proper way, but not for the purpose merely of inflicting injury upon another. It appears from the evidence that some of the defendants had disagreements with plaintiff, and gave some reasons for disliking him. But none of them testified that these difficulties caused them to sign the paper. Eighteen of the defendants gave no testimony whatever, and there was nothing to show that plaintiff had in any way made himself obnoxious or distasteful to them, nor was there anything in the evidence to show that they signed the paper for any other reason than that alleged by plaintiff, which was that he had reported to the company a theft by the night watchman. The first, second, third, twelfth, and thirteenth assignments are sustained.

In the sixteenth assignment it is alleged that the trial judge erred in striking out of the testimony a paper which had been previously offered in evidence by plaintiff, and had been admitted by the court. W. B. Shugars testified that on July 18, 1910, the committee handed him the written notification from the defendants, which was dated the previous day. That night another man was put to work by the brewery in the place of plaintiff. The plaintiff had already testified that Shugars had said to him that it would be best to let him go for the benefit of both sides, and had added: "I will give you a recommendation for the time you worked here and tell you why we had to leave you go."

Shugars gave plaintiff the recommendation the same day, and when he was on the stand identified the letter of recommendation given to plaintiff, and signed by him. This letter of recommendation stated in substance that he had been discharged through no fault of his own, but at the demand of employees, because he had reported the dishonesty of one of them. The trial judge admitted the letter in evidence, and it was read to the jury; but on the following day the trial judge, having decided that the letter was inadmissible, directed that it be stricken from the testimony, and instructed the jury to disregard its contents. Counsel for appellant contends that the letter was admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

In 1 Elliott on Evidence, § 537, it is said: "Declarations which accompany or are a part of the fact or transaction in controversy, and tend to illustrate or explain it, such transaction itself being admissible, are also admissible as being so connected as to be a part of such fact or transaction."

In Shannon v. Castner, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 264, Rice, P. J., said (321): "Where declarations or acts accompany the fact in controversy and tend to illustrate or explain it, they are treated, not as hearsay, but as original evidence, in other words, as part of the res gestæ."

In Coll v. Easton Transit Co. 180 Pa. 618, 37 Atl. 89, 90, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 62, the present chief justice quotes from Wharton on Evidence, 2d ed. § 259, as follows (p. 626): "The res gestæ may therefore be defined as those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. These incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of time more or less appreciable. They may consist of speeches of any one concerned, whether participant or bystander. They may comprise things left undone as well as things done. Their sole distinguishing feature is that they should be necessary incidents of the litigated act; necessary in this sense, that they are part of the immediate preparations for or emanations of such act, and are not promoted by the calculated policy of the actors."

In Shadowski v. Pittsburg R. Co. 226 Pa. 537, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 302, 75 Atl. 730, our Brother Elkin said (p. 539): "Under the doctrine of res gestæ, those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of the occurrence upon which the suit is based may be proven when illustrative of the act about which complaint is made. It is true, also, that these incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of the time more or less appreciable; but they must grow out of and be in a legal sense immediately connected with the litigated act. They may consist of remarks made at the time by an actor, participant, and perhaps under exceptional circumstances by a bystander, if the party making the remark has to do with or is concerned about the occurrence. It is imperatively required, however, that they should be the necessary incidents of the litigated act in order to make such remarks admissible as testimony."

Under the rule as stated and illustrated in these cases, we think the letter of recommendation was admissible in evidence, at least for the purpose of showing the fact of plaintiff's discharge, and showing that the only reason for it, as stated by his employer, was the demand and the threat made by defendants. The letter was given to plaintiff upon the same day of his discharge, and was a part of the transaction tending to illustrate and explain it. The discharge and the giving of the letter were practically parts of the same event. In so far as the plaintiff was concerned, the letter was an undesigned incident, showing the cause of his discharge, given to him by his employer in explanation of an unjustified action which was forced upon the employer. We think, therefore, that the trial judge erred in striking out the letter, and in instructing the jury to disregard it. If the letter contained certain statements which were deemed to be irrelevant, the trial judge could have refused to admit such parts of the letter, or could have instructed the jury to disregard them; but, instead of doing this, he struck out the entire letter. If it had appeared from the testimony that Shugars had said to plaintiff: "We are obliged to discharge you because these twenty-eight men have threatened to strike if we continue to employ you, and we have no other reason than this for discharging you,"—it would hardly be contended that evidence of such a statement was not properly admissible as part of the res gesta. What difference does it make that Shugars made substantially this statement in writing, and handed it to plaintiff? The sixteenth assignment is sustained.

We do not deem it necessary to consider in detail the remaining assignments of error. For the reasons which we have indicated, the judgment is reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

Moschzisker, J., dissents from so much of the above opinion as deals with the subject of res gesta, under the sixteenth assignment of error.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

J. H. RODDY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA
et al.

(41 Okla. 621, 139 Pac. 126.)

Master and servant — compelling discharge of servant — liability.

1. Employees of a coal company, who are members of a labor union, have the right, when involved in a trade dispute between themselves and their employer, and growing out of this relation, to protest to their employer against the employment, or retention in his employment, of a nonunion employee, and to accompany such protest with the statement that if such nonunion man is employed or retained, the union employees will strike,—that is, that such employees will simultaneously cease to work for such employer,—and if such protest is not heeded, the union men have the lawful right to strike; and if it is heeded, the nonunion man who is discharged has no cause of action against either the union as an organization, or the members thereof as individuals.

Pleading — sufficiency of facts — discharge of employee.

2. A petition based on the charge that the plaintiff, a nonmember of a labor union, was discharged from his employment because of the demands therefor made by the authorized agents and committees of a labor organization, who informed the common employer that if such nonunion man was not discharged, that the union men would strike, does not state a cause of action for Headnotes by BREWER, C.

Note. — As to whether the purpose of forcing the discharge of a coemployee is a justification for a strike; and as to civil liability for inducing the discharge of an employee, see note to Bausbach v. Reiff, ante, 785.
L.R.A.1915D.

damages against either the labor organization or the individual members thereof; and a demurrer to such petition was properly sustained.

Same — right to quit work.

3. Any man, in the absence of a contract to work a definite time, has a right to quit whenever he chooses, for any reason satisfactory to him, or without any reason. If his wages are not satisfactory, his hours too long, his work too hard, his employer or his employment uncongenial, or his collaborators objectionable, his right to quit is absolute. What an individual may do, a member of his collaborators may join him in doing, provided the thing to be done is lawful.

(January 19, 1914.)

ERROR to the District Court for Coal County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover damages for alleged wilfully, maliciously and unlawfully securing the discharge of plaintiff from his employment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Charles T. Gibson, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff has a right of action against the defendants jointly and severally.

Wilson v. Hey, 232 Ill. 389, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 85, 122 Am. St. Rep. 119, 83 N. E. 928, 13 Ann. Cas. 82; Purington v. Hinchliff, 219 Ill. 159, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 824, 109 Am. St. Rep. 322, 76 N. E. 47; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Lucke v. Clothing Cutters' & T. Assembly, 77 Md. 396, 19 L.R.A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, 26 Atl. 505; Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 37 L.R.A. 802, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496, 46 N. E. 297; 8 Cyc. 656; Martens v. Reilly, 109 Wis. 464, 84 N. W. 840; Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle, 118 Ky. 662, 111 Am. St. Rep. 331, 82 S. W. 271; Cooley, Torts, p. 142; 1 Sutherland, Damages, § 140; Cooke, Labor Monopolies & Labor Unions, 2d ed. § 72, p. 153.

Messrs. W. N. Redwine and O. M. Threadgill for defendants in error.

Brewer, C., filed the following opinion:

The court sustained a demurrer to the petition, which is lengthy, but which we think is fairly summarized as follows:

The plaintiff alleges:

That the defendant United Mine Workers of America is a voluntary association composed of men engaged in coal mining in the United States, Mexico, and Canada. That defendant United Mine Workers of America, District No. 21, is a part and subdivision of the United Mine Workers of America. That defendant Local Union No. 1811.

is also a local subdivision of the association. That the 500 or 600 individuals sued are members of the general and district organizations, through their membership in said local union. That all of the defendants are bound together in one organized body "for the purpose and with the object of uniting all employees who produce or handle coal or coke in or around mines, into one body, and to ameliorate their conditions by conciliation, arbitration, or strike."

That the local union secures members for the organization; transacts business of a local nature relating to the organization and its departments; elects local officers and representatives to the National Organization; elects or appoints agents, representatives, and committees, and vests them with power and authority to represent the local union in its dealings with the mine operators, etc.

That all the individual defendants were members of the union and were in the employ of the Western Coal & Mining Company, and that as such members of such organization defendants declared who should be employed by such coal company. That there was a parol agreement between the coal company and the defendants in their organized capacity that no one objectionable to organized labor would be employed in its coal mines.

That on the 1st of May, 1909, and for a long time prior thereto, plaintiff had been in the employ of the coal company as an entryman, and was receiving $125 per month for his work. That his relations with the coal company were amicable, and its agents had informed him that he would be retained in its employment so long as his work was satisfactory.

(3) That the defendants conspired "willfully, knowingly, maliciously, and unlawfully" to procure plaintiff's discharge, to destroy his reputation and credit, and to harass and annoy him, to prevent his securing employment, and to publish him as a nonunion man, etc.

(4) The fourth paragraph is lengthy, and complains of the union "blacklisting the defendant on the books of the union" as a nonunion man, etc. (It is not clear what this paragraph intends to charge, unless it be relative to some trial or expulsion of plaintiff from the union; at any rate the language is so indefinite that it is unimportant in this summary.)

The petition then sets out the specific things the defendants are charged with doing at great length, and we think with much superfluity of words, and which, summarized, alleges that about May 1, 1909, a committee of the local union (naming the individuals) called on the mine foreman,

William Veatch, and informed him "that the plaintiff, J. H. Roddy, was a nonunion man, and a man objectionable to the United Mine Workers of America and the membership thereof, defendants herein, had been so recorded on the books of the defendants herein; that he, the said J. H. Roddy, plaintiff, was a man unfit to work with union men, and that they, etc., demanded . . . that said William Veatch . . . discharge the plaintiff, etc."

It is then charged that this committee made the same statements and demands of John S. Cameron, the mine superintendent. It is then charged that James Mullen, a representative of the United Mine Workers of America, and Mose Clevenger, a representative of district No. 21, of the organization, appeared before John S. Cameron, superintendent, and made the same statements and demands made by the local committee as above stated, with the additional statement that if plaintiff was retained in the employ of the company that the defendants would strike and quit their employment with it.

The petition then charges that plaintiff was discharged by the coal company on account of the actions of the defendants, saying that they would strike, and because of the agreement between the company and the union that no nonunion man would be retained in its employment, and that he would not have been discharged but for the actions of the defendants as alleged.

The petition then proceeds with several pages of matter dealing with the results to him of his discharge from his employment, and the recordation of the fact that he was a nonunion man, and the various ways in which he has suffered and been injured thereby, and of the various elements entering into his claim of an aggregate of $100,000 damages from the defendants, but we think the gravamen of the charge claimed to be actionable has been made to fully appear in the above synopsis of the petition.

When the petition in this case is studied and analyzed, it clearly appears that the thing complained of—the acts forming the sole basis upon which the suit is founded, and for which relief in the way of damages is sought—is that these union men protested to their employer, the coal company, against plaintiff's retention as a workman at the mine, and followed this with the statement that if he was so retained the union men would quit work; the reason given being that plaintiff was a nonunion man. If this action was lawful, it follows that damages cannot be predicated upon it. So our inquiry is ended when we determine whether the defendants, in what they did, were within their legal rights.

Since many individual laborers in the various trades have brought themselves together into large and well-organized bodies, with the power, necessarily, and we think rightly, of affecting wages, hours of employment, and other physical, as well as moral, conditions in all the wide fields of industry, the rights and duties of such organizations and the members thereof, with regard to their employers, as well as to society as a whole, has been a fruitful field of litigation, and practically every court in this country has had occasion to consider some of the many phases of the question. This has brought about much conflict of opinion; but, as we view it, our duty is best performed by confining our remarks here closely to the sole question involved; for, as we perceive it, while the tangled web of judicial opinion affords opportunity for a delightful excursion far afield, yet, one who essays to ramble there must be a very wise man if he does not say concerning it either too much or too little.

We take it as fundamental that any man, in the absence of a contract to work a definite time, has a right to quit whenever he chooses, for any reason satisfactory to him, or without any reason. If his wages are not satisfactory, his hours too long, his work too hard, his employer or his employment uncongenial, or his collaborators objectionable, his right to quit is absolute. We think under the better authority that what an individual may do, a number of his collaborators may join him in doing, provided the thing to be done is lawful. We quote the words of Chief Justice Alton B. Parker in National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 320, 58 L.R.A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369: "It is not the duty of one man to work for another unless he has agreed to, and if he has so agreed, but for no fixed period, either may end the contract whenever he chooses. The one may work, or refuse to work, at will, and the other may hire or discharge at will. The terms of employment are subject to mutual agreement, without let or hindrance from anyone. If the terms do not suit, or the employer does not please, the right to quit is absolute, and no one may demand a reason therefor. Whatever one man may do alone, he may do in combination with others, provided they have no unlawful object in view. Mere numbers do not ordinarily affect the quality of the act. Workmen have the right to organize for the purpose of securing higher wages, shorter hours of labor, or improving their relations with their employers. They have the right to strike, that is, to cease working in L.R.A.1915D.

a body by prearrangement until a grievance is redressed, provided the object is not to gratify malice or inflict injury upon others, but to secure better terms of employment for themselves. A peaceable and orderly strike, not to harm others, but to improve their own condition, is not in violation of law." The opinion proceeds with a lengthy and interesting discussion of the law, from which the court deduces the following syllabus: "A labor union may refuse to permit its members to work with fellow servants who are members of a rival organization, may notify the employer to that effect, and that a strike will be ordered unless such servants are discharged, where its action is based upon a proper motive, such as a purpose to secure only the employment of efficient and approved workmen, or to secure an exclusive preference of employment to its members on their own terms and conditions, provided that no force is employed and no unlawful act is committed. If, under such circumstances, the employees objected to are discharged, neither they nor the organization of which they are members have a right of action against the union or its members."

In Clemmitt v. Watson, 14 Ind. App. 38, 42 N. E. 367, it is said: "So far as appears by these instructions, none of the appellants were under any continuing contract to labor for their employer. Each one could have quit without incurring any civil liability to him. What each one could rightfully do, certainly all could do if they so desired, especially when their concerted action was taken peaceably, without any threats, violence, or attempt at intimidation."

And in Raycroft v. Tayntor, 68 Vt. 219, 54 Am. St. Rep. 882, 35 Atl. 53, 33 L.R.A. 225, it is said: "One who procures the discharge of an employee not engaged for any definite time, by threatening to terminate a contract between himself and the employer, which he had a right to terminate at any time, is not subject to an action by the employee for damages, whatever may have been his motive in procuring the discharge."

In Cooke's Trade & Labor Combinations the question of the right to strike is discussed by the author at page 31, § 8, as follows: "The right of a single individual, apart from contractual relations, to quit his employment, that is to discontinue working for a particular employer, seems never to have been seriously questioned. The idea has been advanced that the nature of the employment may create an implied agreement not to quit, at least, without reasonable notice, but this exception to the general doctrine remains to become generally established. It has been seriously questioned whether this right to quit one's employment equally exists in a case of a combination to so quit employment or discontinue working. In other words, the question is whether strikes are legal, for we define a strike as a simultaneous quitting of employment by a number of employees in pursuance of agreement. Apart from the lurking idea, already considered, that an act entirely lawful if done by a single individual may be unlawful by reason of being done in pursuance of a combination of individuals to do the same act, it is difficult, on principle, to discover any illegality in a strike, as we have just defined it, and this is the view that has been generally adopted in this country." And the author, after discussing the doctrine of the English courts relative to combinations among workmen, and after eliminating the question of physical violence and unlawful methods which sometimes accompany strikes, sums up by saying on page 36: "Applying, however, what has already been said, we say here that (apart from the existence of contractual liability) the existence of the relation of employee justifies, as a natural incident or outgrowth of such relation, the quitting of employment, whether singly or in a combination, and whether or not with the intent to injure the employer (or any other person)." J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trade Council, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 550, 98 Pac. 1027, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165; Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 37 Mont. 264, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 707, 127 Am. St. Rep. 722, 96 Pac. 127; 24 Cyc. 821, and note 41 of authorities; Meier v. Speer, 96 Ark. 618, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 792, 132 S. W. 988; Pierce v. Stablemen's Union Local No. 8,760, 156 Cal. 70, 103 Pac. 324.

The case of Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 Ann. Cas. 638, considers when a strike will be illegal, and an extended discussion of the question will be found both in the opinion and in the note collecting the authorities.

A petition based on the charge that the plaintiff, a nonmember of a labor union, was discharged from his employment because of the demands therefor made by the authorized agents and committees of a labor organization, who informed the common employer that if such nonunion man was not discharged, the union men would strike, does not state a cause of action for damages against either the labor organization or the individual members thereof, and a L.R.A.1915D.

demurrer to such petition was properly sustained.

The cause should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:
Adopted in whole.

Rehearing denied March 10, 1914.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. MORRISEY et al., Appts.,

v.

C. L. WILLIAMS, Receiver.

C. L. WILLIAMS, Receiver,

v.

FIDELITY BANKING & TRUST COMPANY et al.

(— W. Va. —, 82 S. E. 509.)

Corporation — rescission of stock subscription.

1. The general rule that a subscription or purchase of the stock of a corporation will not be rescinded even for fraud, when no action to that end is taken until after the declared insolvency of the corporation by a receivership, is not without qualification. If proper equities of creditors will not be affected, the rule should not apply. And particularly where no debts of the corporation have accrued subsequent to the subscription or purchase, rescission may be had.

Same — bank — insolvency — laches.

2. A fraudulent sale by an insolvent bank of shares of its capital stock may be rescinded by the purchaser, though action in that behalf is not taken until after a receiver for the bank has been appointed, where no great length of time elapsed between the sale and the receivership, the purchaser did not actively participate in the management of the bank, no want of diligence on the part of the purchaser in discovering the fraud or in taking steps to rescind appears, and no considerable amount of indebtedness, remaining unpaid, accrued against the bank subsequent to the sale.

(June 30, 1914.)

Headnotes by ROBINSON, J.

Note. — Fraud as a ground of release from subscription to stock after insolvency of corporation.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to Gress v. Knight, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 900.

As pointed out in the earlier note the American doctrine is that the mere insolvency of a corporation does not bar the right of rescission for fraud, but in order

APPEAL by plaintiffs Morrisey et al. from decrees of the Circuit Court for Mercer County denying them relief in consolidated causes for the rescission of the sale of bank stock, and for the enforcement of the so-called double liability of stockholders. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mesars. Ross & Kahle, for appellants:

A contract may be rescinded if the misrepresentations were relied upon by the party deceived, though the means of obtaining information are fully open to both parties.

Cleavenger v. Sturm, 59 W. Va. 658, 53 S. E. 593; Engeman v. Taylor, 46 W. Va. 669, 33 S. E. 922; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285, 2 S. E. 713.

A contract induced by a false statement made in good faith may be rescinded by the party deceived.

Tolley v. Poteet, 62 W. Va. 231, 57 S. E. 811; Fitzgerald v. Frankel, 109 Va. 603, 64 S. E. 941; Virginia Land Co. v. Haupt, 90 Va. 533, 44 Am. St. Rep. 939, 19 S. E. 168; Schwarzbach v. Ohio Valley Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 52 Am. Rep. 227; Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 438; Engeman v. Taylor, 46 W. Va. 669, 33 S. E. 922; Lowe v. Trundle, 78 Va. 65; Grim v. Byrd, 32 Gratt. 293; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 311, 54 Am. St. Rep. 725, 24 S. E. 478; 1 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. § 149; Wren v. Moncure, 95 Va. 369, 28 S. E. 588.

to entitle the subscriber to such rescission he must act promptly.

The rule is stated in People v. California Safe Deposit & T. Co. 19 Cal. App. 414, 126 Pac. 516, 520, to be that the mere insolvency of the corporation and the appointment of a receiver do not in themselves bar the stockholder's right to a rescission of his contract, considering the corporation was the real owner and vender of the stock, and that the stockholder was defrauded (which in this case the complaint charged and the demurrer admitted), and, this being so, the stockholder is entitled to have a complete rescission of the fraudulent action complained of, provided he has not been guilty of laches.

The right of subscribers to rescind their subscriptions for fraud, and, upon the rescission, to have notes given in payment of a part of the subscription price canceled, was sustained in Joyce v. Eifert, — Ind. App. —, 105 N. E. 59, but there is no discussion of the effect of insolvency; in fact, the rescission was made before the corporation was completed or any business for which it had been formed was transacted. As to cash payments made by these subscribers, they were held entitled to share with other subscribers who subsequently, upon discovering the fraud, had a receiver appointed, in the proportion that the cash

A contract induced by a party making a false statement under circumstances that the duty of knowing the truth rested upon him, although made in good faith, is sufficient for rescission.

Grim v. Byrd, 32 Gratt. 293; Schuttler v. Brandfass, 41 W. Va. 201, 23 S. E. 808.

A subscriber to stock may rely on printed statements of the company given him as an inducement to subscribe.

1 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. §§ 144, 352; Newton Nat. Bank v. Newbegin, 33 L.R.A. 727, note; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 311, 54 Am. St. Rep. 725, 24 S. E. 478; Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 365, 23 N. E. 544; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 4244.

The fact that the bank is insolvent and a receiver appointed to take charge of its assets is not a bar to rescission.

Stufflebeam v. De Lashmuth, 83 Fed. 449; Winters v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. 508; Florida Land & Improv. Co. v. Merrill, 2 C. C. A. 629, 2 U. S. App. 434, 52 Fed. 77; Newton Nat. Bank v. Newbegin, 33 L.R.A. 727, 20 C. C. A. 339, 40 U. S. App. 1, 74 Fed. 135; High, Receivers, 4th ed. § 205; Bolles, Bkg. 1907, 763; 2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 473.

To constitute a waiver of right to rescind a contract induced by fraud, defrauded party must, first, have full knowledge of all material circumstances; and, second, with this knowledge in mind, have done some deliberate act with the intent to waive his rights.

20 Cyc. 23; Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 473; paid in them bore to the total amount of cash paid in by all the subscribers.

A rescission was allowed in case of an insolvent corporation in which no rights of innocent purchasers or creditors were affected in Farnsworth v. Muscatine Produce & Pure Ice Co. 161 Iowa, 170, 141 N. W. 940, but there is no discussion of the effect of insolvency.

But creditors whose rights have intervened have rights superior to the right of the stockholders to rescind, and as against them rescission will not be allowed. Burleson v. Davis, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 141 S. W. 559.

Thus, where the corporation incurs debts after the subscription to the capital stock has been made, and the fact of insolvency by reason of these debts exists, it has been held that there can be no rescission for fraud as to creditors whose claims arose after the stockholder became such, although the corporation is still a going concern and is itself bringing an action on the note given for the subscription. Southern Tobacco Co. v. Armstrong, 11 Ga. App. 501, 75 S. E. 828.

In Southern Tobacco Co. v. Armstrong, supra, the president of the corporation who had induced the subscription by false representations of the company's solvency was one of its chief creditors. It is stated by 1 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. § 162; Virginia Land Co. v. Haupt, 90 Va. 533, 44 Am. St. Rep. 939, 19 S. E. 168; Cottrill v. Krum, 100 Mo. 397, 18 Am. St. Rep. 563, 13 S. W. 753; Wilson v. Carpenter, 91 Va. 183, 50 Am. St. Rep. 824, 21 S. E. 243; Fitzgerald v. Frankel, 109 Va. 603, 64 S. E. 941.

Article 11, § 6, of the Constitution of West Virginia, and § 2394 of the Code of West Virginia (1906), only provide for the recovery of the double stockholders' liability for "all liabilities accruing while they are such stockholders;" and the double liability, being in derogation of the common law, this provision must be strictly construed.

36 Cyc. 1178, 1180; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 199.

One who has been induced to purchase the shares of a national bank by false representations, who rescinds the contract, and tenders back the shares, duly assigned, to the president of the bank, and calls upon him to return the consideration, and brings a suit for rescission of the contract, cannot be held liable in a suit by a receiver of the

the court that if the debts were limited to this, the court would be inclined to allow the subscriber to rescind his subscription; other debts, however, had been contracted after the subscription had been made, and it is stated that if the company was insolvent by reason of the other debts, the rule would apply, and there could be no rescission.

If the subscriber has been guilty of laches, he cannot rescind after insolvency of the corporation or the commencement of proceedings to liquidate its affairs on the ground of insolvency, where to grant the relief would prejudice the rights of creditors.

Thus, a stockholder in a bank who had purchased a part of his stock more than two years before the bank went into liquidation, and a part of it more than one year before it was insolvent, during which time he not only had the right, but had ample opportunity, to investigate and ascertain the condition of the bank, and take such proceedings as appeared to him necessary to protect his interests, but did not do so, but accepted as true the representations as to the condition of the bank made by its officers, and received regularly large dividends on his stock, was held guilty of laches in Reid v. Owensboro Sav. Bank & T. Co. 141 Ky. 444, 132 S. W. 1026, and not entitled to rescind. This case was approved in Little v. Owensboro Sav. Bank & T. Co. 150 Ky. 331, 150 S. W. 334, in case of a subscriber who lived in London, the court treating that fact as unimportant.

One induced by fraud to subscribe to the stock of a corporation, who neglects for an unreasonable time after he has discovered the fraud, or is chargeable with notice bank to recover an assessment upon such stock.

10 Cyc. 443; Stufflebeam v. De Lashmuth, 83 Fed. 449; People v. California Safe Deposit & T. Co. 19 Cal. App. 414, 126 Pac. 516, 520.

Messrs. Sanders & Crockett, for appellees:

Even if the plaintiffs had shown fraud on the part of the officers of the bank in inducing them to purchase the stock, they are precluded from rescinding the contract of purchase, and are estopped to deny that they are stockholders, for the reason that, after they purchased the stock, and before they took any action to rescind, the bank became insolvent, and went into the hands of a receiver, and the rights of creditors intervened, and their rights are superior to any rights of the plaintiffs.

Cook, Corp. 5th ed. §§ 163, 164; Scott v. Deweese, 181 U. S. 202, 45 L. ed. 822, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 665, 24 L. ed. 523; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. ed. 203; Ogilvie v. Knox Ins. Co. 22 How. 380, 16 L. ed. 349; Howard v. Turner, 155 Pa. 349, 34

thereof, to have his subscription canceled, is not entitled to have such relief, where the interests of third persons have in the meantime become involved and such persons would suffer injury by reason of the cancellation. People v. California Safe Deposit & T. Co. supra.

Whether a subscriber has lost his right to rescind by laches or by participation in the affairs of the corporation as a stockholder after discovery of the fraud is a question for the jury. Southern Tobacco Co. v. Armstrong, supra.

One induced to subscribe to the stock of bank through the fraudulent statements and representations of the officers and agents of such bank at a time when the bank was in fact insolvent, and who does not discover the insolvency for about seventeen months thereafter, when insolvency proceedings were begun against the bank, is not guilty of such laches as bars his right to a rescission. People v. California Safe Deposit & T. Co. supra.

It is stated in Reid v. Owensboro Sav. Bank & T. Co. supra, that if the corporation is insolvent when the action for rescission or other relief is brought, and the rights of creditors will be affected, the shareholder who has been induced by fraud or misrepresentations to purchase stock cannot obtain relief from his contract unless he became a stockholder so shortly before the insolvency as not to have had reasonable time or opportunity to investigate its affairs and discover the fraud, nor unless upon the discovery he, without delay, asserts his right to appropriate relief.

See supra for further discussion of this case, and see, also, Little v. Owensboro Sav. Bank & T. Co. supra. W. A. E.

Am. St. Rep. 883, 26 Atl. 753. Thompson v. Reno Sav. Bank, 19 Nev. 103, 3 Am. St. Rep. 797, 7 Pac. 68, see note to 3 Am. St. Rep. 824, 825; Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fidler, 60 Pa. 124, 100 Am. Dec. 546, see note to 100 Am. Dec. 556; Turner v. Grangers' Life & Health Ins. Co. 65 Ga. 649, 38 Am. Rep. 801; 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 1450, 1451; West End Real Estate Co. v. Claiborne, 97 Va. 734, 34 S. E. 900; Martin v. South Salem Land Co. 94 Va. 28, 26 S. E. 591; 10 Cyc. 441; Howard v. Glenn, 85 Ga. 238, 21 Am. St. Rep. 156, 11 S. E. 610; Lantry v. Wallace, 182 U. S. 536, 45 L. ed. 1218, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878; Rehbein v. Rahr, 109 Wis. 136, 85 N. W. 315; Wallace v. Hood, 89 Fed. 11.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal brings up for review decrees in consolidated causes, styled as Morrissey v. Williams, Receiver, and Williams, Receiver, v. Fidelity Banking & Trust Co. In the first-named cause Morrissey sought, on the ground of fraud, a rescission of a sale of bank stock, which sale was made to him by an officer of the bank on its behalf only a short time before the bank as insolvent went into the hands of a receiver. The decree therein denies him relief. The object of the other cause was to enforce for the benefit of the creditors of the bank the so-called double liability of the stockholders. In it the receiver has decreed against Morrissey for an amount equal to that of the shares of stock held by him under the sale that he sought to have rescinded in the first-named suit. Morrissey complains of the decrees against him. If the decree in the first-named cause must be reversed, the decree in the other cause necessarily falls. Clearly if the sale of the stock is rescinded, liability as a holder of the stock cannot be enforced against Morrissey.

While we have great respect for the judgment of the learned chancellor who decided the causes, we are of opinion that the sale of the stock to Morrissey was fraudulent in equity, and that under the facts and circumstances appearing he may have the same rescinded. We are confirmed in this view by the same chancellor's finding and decree in a cause presenting the same issues upon virtually the same facts and calling for the application of the same law as in the Morrissey Case. That cause is Scott v. Williams, — W. Va. —, 82 S. E. 511, also here on appeal, and to be decided herewith by separate memorandum. Scott's Case, demanding on the ground of fraud a rescission of a sale to him of stock in the insolvent bank, is the same as Morrissey's. It is no stronger. Indeed the one is nearly L.R.A.1915D.

identical with the other so that no practical distinction can be made between them. Yet in the Scott Case, decided some months later than the other, the chancellor decreed a rescission. It therefore appears that upon maturer consideration the chancellor most commendably confessed his error in the former decree in the Morrissey Case. One of the noblest traits of a judge is willingness to change his views when convinced that they are wrong.

It will serve no practical purpose to narrate the evidence in relation to the sale of the stock to Morrissey. It suffices to say that the facts and circumstances point clearly to the conclusion that the bank officer, by representations which he knew or at least was chargeable with knowing were false, palmed off on Morrissey stock in the insolvent bank, held by it as collateral to a past-due note, through leading him to believe it was new stock, and took in lieu of the same from Morrissey a good and valuable certificate of deposit in a foreign bank. In less than a month thereafter the bank was forced to close its doors. The certificate of deposit is still in the hands of the receiver. In equity and good conscience it must be returned to Morrissey.

It is submitted for the receiver that a subscription or purchase of stock in a corporation cannot be rescinded even for fraud when no action in that behalf is taken until after a declared insolvency of the corporation by a receivership, the rights of creditors then having stepped in as entitled to superior consideration. In many cases this is true. It is not true in this case. The rule rests on the rights of creditors. When the reason for the rule does not arise, the rule is of course not applicable.

From the record it does not appear that the rights of creditors intervened between the time Morrissey took over the stock and the time the receiver took charge, a period, as we have said, of less than a month. It does not appear that liabilities of the bank accrued within this period for which the stockholders would be liable. We cannot see that the liabilities increased 1 cent, or that a single new creditor came in, while the stock was in Morrissey's hands under the fraudulent sale. Liabilities of the bank accruing prior to the purchase by Morrissey of the stock did not attach against him as a stockholder. Our law plainly says that the stockholders are only liable for the liabilities of the bank "accruing while they are such stockholders." Const. art. 11, § 6 (Code 1913, p. cxxi), Code 1913, chap. 47, § 78aIII (§ 3034); Dunn v. Bank of Union, — W. Va. —, L.R.A. 1915B, 168, 82 S. E. 758, decided at this term. Stockholders in banks by the issuance of new stock to them, or by the transfer of the stock of others to them, do not assume the so-called double liability as to debts of the bank existing prior to the issuance or transfer of the stock. They are liable only for debts accruing subsequent to their acquisition of the stock. A transferrer of bank stock remains liable for debts of the bank that accrued while he held the stock. This is the plain import of our law. Similar provisions in other states are so understood. Laws of Illinois, 1889, page 59; Shuey v. Holmes, 21 Wash. 223, 57 Pac. 818. Surely it would not be equity to allow the receiver to apply Morrissey's money to the payment of creditors of the bank to whom the law does not bind him. Plainly Morrissey's right to a rescission is superior to the rights of creditors to whom debts were due from the bank before he became a stockholder. They lent no credit on the strength of his having stock, either theoretically or actually. They are in no worse position than if he had never purchased the stock. A rescission can do them no harm.

While the general principle relied on by the receiver is usually applicable when a considerable length of time elapsed between the purchase of the stock and the demand for rescission, yet sound authorities refuse to apply it under such circumstances as are disclosed in Morrissey's Case. We shall not cite the cases. The books readily disclose them. From a leading text the following is pertinent: "In England, and in some of the states in this country, it has been held that a subscription cannot be repudiated on the ground of fraud, for the first time, after the corporation has become insolvent, and has made an assignment or gone into the hands of a receiver or an assignee in bankruptcy, even though the fraud may not have been discovered before insolvency, and though there may have been no laches in discovering it. According to the better opinion, however, this doctrine cannot be sustained without qualification. Surely, the equity of a person who has been induced to subscribe for stock in a corporation, without negligence on his part, by the deceit of its officers or agents, and who has not been guilty of negligence, either in failing to discover the fraud, or in repudiating his subscription after its discovery, cannot be said to be inferior to the equity of persons dealing with the corporation and becoming its creditors, and he should not be denied the right to set up the fraud as a defense in an action or other proceeding to enforce his subscription, merely because the corporation has become insolvent, and it is sought to enforce the subscription for L.R.A.1915D.

the benefit of its creditors. The view that he has such right is supported by well-considered cases, both in England and in this country. This rule should undoubtedly be applied where no debts have been contracted by the corporation since the date of the subscription." 2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 473g.

A complete examination of the authorities leads us to believe that the United States circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit, in Newton Nat. Bank v. Newbegin, 33 L.R.A. 727, 20 C. C. A. 339, 40 U. S. App. 1, 74 Fed. 135, fairly states the law, wherein it is said: "If a considerable period of time has elapsed since the subscription was made; if the subscriber has actively participated in the management of the affairs of the corporation; if there has been any want of diligence on the part of the stockholder, either in discovering the alleged fraud, or in taking steps to rescind when the fraud was discovered; and, above all, if any considerable amount of corporate indebtedness has been created since the subscription was made, which is outstanding and unpaid,—in all of these cases the right to rescind should be denied, where the attempt is not made until the corporation becomes insolvent. But if none of these conditions exist, and the proof of the alleged fraud is clear, we think that a stockholder should be permitted to rescind his subscription as well after as before the company ceases to be a going concern."

Now, without entering into details, we may say that none of the conditions mentioned above as warranting a denial of rescission appear in Morrissey's Case. No considerable period of time elapsed. Morrissey did not actively participate in the management of the affairs of the bank: there was no want of diligence on his part in discovering the fraud or in taking steps to rescind; and no considerable amount of the bank's indebtedness accrued while he held the stock. The mere presence of Morrissey at a meeting in response to a hurried call of the stockholders when the bank's failing condition first became generally known cannot bind him as participating in the management of the affairs of the bank. He would naturally go there to see how things stood. While there he in no way committed himself to keep the stock—in no way did that which would condone the fraud practised on him. Indeed, it is a reasonable inference that, by the report of the president made at this meeting, Morrissey first realized that he had been deceived by the sale of the stock to him. Only a short time before that in the negotiation of the sale he had been assured by officers of the bank that its condition was flourishing. Nothing appears that would reasonably charge him with notice to the contrary. In two days after the meeting the commissioner of banking closed the bank. Morrisey obtained leave to sue the receiver for rescission, at the earliest opportunity. He brought his suit at the first term of court available. What lack of diligence in taking steps to rescind? None. As to the last-named condition—the accrual of indebtedness against the bank—we have already spoken. We have said that there is no proof of the accrual of indebtedness. If any did accrue, the inferences from the proof of what business the bank did during the time that Morrisey held the stock point to the fact that the same was inconsiderable.

What we have said sufficiently disposes of the questions determining the appeal. The decree in the first-named cause will be reversed and a decree rescinding the sale of the bank stock will be here entered. The decree in the other cause will also be reversed in so far as it adjudges liability on the score of this particular stock.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plff. in Err.,
v.

BANK OF NEW YORK, NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION.

(— C. C. A. —, 219 Fed. 648.)

Bills and notes — draft on United States Treasury — forgery — payment — effect.

The United States cannot recover money paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to a bona fide holder for value, guilty of no negligence contributory to the fraud, upon a draft upon him bearing the forged signature of an officer having the right to make such drafts, since he was bound to know the signature of such official, and the question whether the bill is negotiable or not is immaterial.

(December 15, 1914.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a complaint filed to recover the amount of a forged draft paid by plaintiff to defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Coxe, Ward, and Rogers, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. H. Snowden Marshall and Gordon Auchincloss, for the United States:

The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is not presumed to know the signatures of such agents of the United States as are authorized to draw on him. The rule applicable to private dealings is not controlling.

United States v. National Exch. Bank, 214 U. S. 302, 53 L. ed. 1006, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665, 15 Ann. Cas. 184.

The draft in question was a conditional one. Even after payment the drawee may recover, where the payment was caused by a mistake of fact.

Hannay v. Guaranty Trust Co. 187 Fed. 686; Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. 468, 477, 22 L. ed. 164, 169; Wall v. Monroe County, 103 U. S. 74, 78, 26 L. ed. 430, 432; Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400-408, 28 L. ed. 470-473, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489; District of Columbia v. Cornell, 130 U. S. 655-661, 32 L. ed. 1041-1043, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 694; United States v. Bolognesi, 164 Fed. 159; Whiteside v. United States, 93 U. S. 247, 257, 23 L. ed. 882, 885; Floyd Acceptances (Pierce v. United States), 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169.

Messrs. Karl T. Frederick and Huger W. Jervey, with Messrs. Satterlee, Canfield, & Stone, for defendant in error:

The paper was a negotiable instrument, with all the incidents attaching thereto, under the law merchant.

United States v. Clinton Nat. Bank, 28

Note. — Duty of government official to know signature of drawer of draft.

In United States v. Cooke, 9 Phila. 468, Fed. Cas. No. 14,855, an action by the United States to recover money paid upon a forged draft drawn upon the paymaster of the Army, the trial judge charged the jury that the case did not differ from the familiar one of an individual paying a check on the faith of the signature of the drawer which subsequently proved to be a forgery, and under the direction of the court the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant. L.R.A.1915D.

Upon a motion by the United States for a new trial, it is stated merely that the delay of more than six years which had elapsed was fatal to the claim of the United States; that all cases required the utmost diligence on the part of the drawee, a diligence analogous to that required in giving notice of the dishonor of commercial paper. It is further stated that had an individual in this case been plaintiff the action would have been barred by the statute of limitations. A motion for a new trial was refused.

A payment by an assistant treasurer of Fed. 357; United States v. Central Nat. Bank, 6 Fed. 134; Floyd Acceptances (Pierce v. United States), 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169.

The drawee of a draft, having accepted or paid it, cannot demand repayment upon discovery that his drawer's name was forged.

Price v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1354, 1 W. Bl. 390; National Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 77, 7 Am. Rep. 310; National Exch. Bank v. United States, 80 C. C. A. 632, 151 Fed. 402.

The draft is not a conditional one in any sense which could free the acceptor from the usual effect of his acceptance.

Price v. Neale, supra.

The doctrine of Price v. Neale is subject to no exception in favor of the United States government.

Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. ed. 237; United States v. Central Nat. Bank, 6 Fed. 134; United States v. Clinton Nat. Bank, 28 Fed. 357; United States v. Stockgrowers' Nat. Bank, 30 Fed. 912; White v. Continental Nat. Bank, 64 N. Y. 316, 21 Am. Rep. 612.

Rogers, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the United States to recover from defendant the amount of a draft paid by plaintiff to defendant on March 19, 1912, together with interest from date of payment.

The complaint alleges that defendant on or about March 14, 1912, presented to the Treasury Department at Washington, District of Columbia, a draft dated Rosario (Argentine Republic), February 8, 1912, for $463.73, drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury, payable to the order of the British Bank of South America, Limited, and purporting to be signed by Robert T. Crane, American Consul, and bearing the indorsement of the British Bank of South America, Limited, followed by the indorsement of defendant as the last indorsement on the back thereof; that, without Crane's knowledge, Crane's signature to the draft had been forged; and that on March 19, 1912, the Secretary of the Treasury, under a mistake of fact and in ignorance that Crane's signature was a forgery, paid defendant the amount of the draft, which sum defendant has refused to return to plaintiff, though requested so to do.

A copy of the instrument follows:

Consulate of the United States of America.
Rosario, February 8, 1912. No. 5.

Fifteen days after sight (acceptance waived and indorsements by procuration, excepted) of this sole of exchange. $463.73

Pay to the order of the British Bank of South America, Limited, four hundred, sixty-three dollars, seventy-three cts., U. S. gold Dollars Value received and charge the same to account for Relief of Seamen and balance of salary.

To the Secretary of Treasury.

[Seal] Robert T. Crane,
Washington, D. C. American Consul.

The indorsements upon the back of the instrument are not herein set forth, as they are not involved.

It is true that in some cases where a person has been induced by fraud to make payment of a bill or note such payment may be recovered back. And in like manner under some circumstances one who has paid a bill under a mistake of fact is allowed to recover the amount thereof. So under some circumstances a party who has made a payment on a forged instrument may be permitted to recover it back from the party receiving it. Welch v. Goodwin (1877) 123 Mass. 71, 25 Am. Rep. 24; Goddard v. Merchants' Bank (1850) 4 N. Y. 147.

But if one accepts forged paper, purporting to be his own, and pays it to a holder for value, the Supreme Court has said that it is undoubtedly true as a general rule of commercial law that he cannot recall the payment. What he has done amounts to an adoption of the paper as genuine. He is presumed to know his own signature. Cooke v. United States (1875) 91 U. S. 389, 396, 23 L. ed. 237, 242. So, it is incumbent upon the drawee of a bill or check to the United States in the city of New York, to the holder of Treasury notes upon the redemption thereof, was held not to bind the United States as to the genuineness of the notes in Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. ed. 237. It is the theory of this case that the genuineness of these notes could only be determined by the Treasury Department at Washington, and that the Department there having decided the notes to be counterfeit within a reasonable time, and returned them, the United States government could recover from the holder of the notes the amount paid it. A judgment in this case, allowing a recovery from the L.R.A.1915D.

holder of the notes, was reversed on other grounds.

Generally as to drawee's duty to know signature of drawer, see note to Germania Bank v. Boutell, 27 L.R.A. 635.

As to right of drawee of forged check or draft to recover money paid thereon, see notes to First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49; Title Guarantee & T. Co. v. Haven, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1308; State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 100; and Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & T. Bank, L.R.A.1915A, 77.

W. A. E.

be satisfied that the signature of the drawer is genuine. He must know, is conclusively presumed to know, whether the signature of the drawer is genuine.

The case of Price v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1354, 1 W. Bl. 390, decided in 1762, established the principle that the drawee of a draft, having accepted or paid it, cannot compel repayment of the money upon discovering that his drawer's name was forged. And for more than a century and a half it has been settled law that the drawee of a bill must be presumed to know as matter of law the handwriting of his correspondent, the drawer of the bill, and that it is incumbent upon him to be satisfied of the genuineness of the drawer's signature. If he accepts or pays a bill to which the drawer's name has been forged, he is thereby estopped by his act, and cannot thereafter repudiate his acceptance or recover back the money he has paid. The principle applies as well to the case of a bill paid upon presentment as to one accepted and afterwards paid. See National Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank (1871) 46 N. Y. 77, 7 Am. Rep. 310.

In Price v. Neale two bills of exchange had been paid by the drawee, the signature of the drawer having been forged. One bill was paid when it became due, without acceptance. The other was accepted and paid at maturity. When the forgery was discovered, an action was brought to recover back the money paid; it being admitted that both parties were equally innocent. The action was for money had and received, in which no recovery could be had unless it was against conscience for defendant to retain it. Lord Mansfield said that in such a case as the one then before him it could not be affirmed that it was unconscientious for defendant to retain the money, he having paid a fair and valuable consideration for the bills. He continued: "Here was no fraud, no wrong. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to be satisfied, 'that the bill drawn upon him was the drawer's hand,' before he accepted or paid it; but it was not incumbent upon the defendant to inquire into it. Here was notice given by the defendant to the plaintiff, of a bill drawn upon him, and he sends his servant to pay it, and take it up. The other bill he actually accepts, after which acceptance, the defendant, innocently and bona fide, discounts it. The plaintiff lies by for a considerable time after he has paid these bills and then found out 'that they were forged.' . . . He made no objection to them at the time of paying them. Whatever neglect there was, was on his side. The defendant had actual encouragement from the plaintiff himself for negotiating the second bill, from the plaintiff's having without any scruple or hesitation paid the first; and he paid the whole value bona fide. It is a misfortune which has happened without the defendant's fault or neglect. If there was no neglect in the plaintiff, yet there is no reason to throw off the loss from one innocent man upon another innocent man; but in this case if there was any fault or negligence in anyone, it certainly was in the plaintiff, and not in the defendant."

It is true that it has been held, in one case at least, that the doctrine of Price v. Neale should not be adhered to in cases where the holder of an unaccepted bill presents it to the drawee for acceptance or payment, and that in such cases the unrestricted indorsement and presentation of the draft to the drawee is a representation on the part of the holder and indorser that the signature of the drawer is genuine. Ford v. People's Bank (1906) 74 S. C. 180, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 63, 114 Am. St. Rep. 986, 54 S. E. 204, 7 Ann. Cas. 744. And in North Dakota the doctrine of Price v. Neale has been rejected in its entirety. First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere (1906) 15 N. D. 299, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, 125 Am. St. Rep. 588, 108 N. W. 546. But the two cases last cited are without support in the decisions of the English courts, and have little, if any, support in the American decisions.

Indeed, the principle established by Price v. Neale has been incorporated into the uniform negotiable instruments act which has been adopted in the District of Columbia and was in force there at the time this payment was made. That act provides that the acceptor, by accepting the instrument, engages that he will pay it according to the tenor of his acceptance, and admits "the existence of the drawer, the genuineness of his signature, his capacity and authority to draw the instrument." As payment is equivalent to acceptance, the United States under the act admitted the genuineness of the drawer's signature (act January 12, 1899, chap. 47, 30 Stat. at L. p. 785, § 62), if the bill was negotiable.

As early as 1825, the Supreme Court applied the principle of Price v. Neale in Bank of United States v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. 333, 6 L. ed. 334. The supreme court, through Mr. Justice Story, in Bank of United States v. Bank of Georgia, referred approvingly to Price v. Neale, saying: "The case of Price v. Neale has never since been departed from; and in all the subsequent decisions in which it has been cited, it has had the uniform support of the court, and has been deemed a satisfactory authority."

Price v. Neale goes upon the same theory as do those which hold that a bank is, bound to know its customer's signature, and has so remedy where it has paid or certified a forged check to a bona fide holder for value. The presumption is that it has greater means and better opportunities to become familiar with the handwriting of depositors than are afforded the holder.

The courts have in a number of cases held that the rule that the drawee is presumed to know the signature of his drawer does not apply if the holder, by his negligence, has contributed to the success of the fraud practised. Myers v. Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672, 44 Atl. 280; Woods v. Colony Bank (1902) 114 Ga. 683, 56 L.R.A. 929, 40 S. E. 720; Brennan v. Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank, (1886) 62 Mich. 343, 28 N. W. 881. But in this case the government makes no claim that defendant has been guilty of any negligence contributory to the fraud practised. Counsel for the government comes into court with the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is not presumed to know the signatures of such agents of the United States as are authorized to draw on him. It is argued that the United States is entitled to greater protection than an individual from the unauthorized and fraudulent acts of its agents. And it is said that to charge the government with knowledge of the genuineness of the signatures of those of its servants who may be entitled to draw upon it is to impose a liability on it which public policy demands should be borne by individuals dealing with it. We are informed that to hold the Treasury Department liable in a case such as the case at bar is not only not common sense, but is against the recognized principles of law. Attention is called to the recent case of United States v. National Exch. Bank (1909) 214 U. S. 302, 317, 53 L. ed. 1006, 1011, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665, 670, 16 Ann. Cas. 1184, where the present Chief Justice said: "The exceptional rule as to certain classes of commercial paper proceeds upon an assumption of knowledge or duty to know, naturally arising from the situation of the parties, entirely consonant with their capabilities, and in accord with the common-sense view of their relation. To apply the rule, however, to the government and its duty in paying out the millions of pension claims, which are yearly discharged by means of checks, would require it to be assumed that that was known, or ought to have been known, which on the face of the situation was impossible to be known, would besides wholly disregard the relation between the parties, and would also require that to be assumed which the obvious dictates of common sense make clear could not be truthfully assumed." L.R.A.1915D.

In that case the United States was held not chargeable with knowledge of the signatures of the vast number of persons entitled to receive pensions. The action was brought by the United States to recover the sum of payments made at the subtreasury in Boston upon 194 pension checks, the signatures of the persons to whom the checks were payable having been forged. The Supreme Court held that the government had the right to recover. A similar ruling had been rendered in an earlier decision made by Judge Coxe in 1889 in United States v. Onondaga County Sav. Bank (D. C.) 39 Fed. 259, which we affirmed in 12 C. C. A. 407, 26 U. S. App. 377, 64 Fed. 703.

The case of United States v. National Exch. Bank, supra, affords no support, however, for the principle which counsel for the government ask us to recognize in this case. The rule announced in that case is in entire harmony with Price v. Neale, supra, and with the cases which have followed it. In United States v. National Exch. Bank the forgery was not of the drawer's name, as in Price v. Neale, but of the payee's name on pension warrants. The forgery of a payee's name or of an indorser's name is very different from the forgery of a drawer's name. At common law there is no obligation upon the part of the drawee to know the genuineness of the signature of the payee or of an indorser. Price v. Neale has never been applied to such cases. In Bolognesi v. United States (1911) 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 143, 111 C. C. A. 67, 189 Fed. 335, the United States had brought an action against the defendants to recover moneys collected by them upon 128 money orders, amounting to $12,800, fraudulently issued by a clerk in charge of a substation post-office, less the amount collected on the clerk's bond. The defendants claimed that they received the fraudulent orders in good faith, and paid full value for them. The trial judge directed a verdict for the United States for the full amount claimed, and we sustained him in so doing. But that case was subject to a statute (Rev. Stat. § 4057; Comp. Stat. 1913, § 7606) which expressly provided that in all cases where money of the Postoffice Department had been paid to any person in consequence of fraudulent representations, or by the mistake, collusion, or misconduct of any officer or other employee in the postal service, the Postmaster General should cause suit to be brought to recover such wrong or fraudulent payment or excess. And we held that the United States might recover the amount paid out, on money orders fraudulently issued, from the persons to whom it was paid, and that the good faith of such persons in acquiring the orders was immaterial.

In the course of the opinion it was said that the case was determined upon principles other than those of the law merchant, and the defenses which that law would afford a bona fide holder for value of commercial paper did not come up for consideration. We thought that the government in issuing money orders was exercising a governmental function.

The contention of the government that an exception should be made in its favor to the well-established rule of Price v. Neale must be disregarded. The number of persons who can have a right to draw bills upon the government is relatively small, and it should protect itself as do banks and other large corporations against imposition in such cases. The Supreme Court, in Cooke v. United States (1875) 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. ed. 237, said: "When the United States become parties to commercial paper, they incur all the responsibilities of private persons under the same circumstances."

And we find no warrant for saying that the United States is not bound by the same law as an individual when it enters into a transaction of this nature.

A bill is negotiable paper, except where the rule is changed by statute, only where it is made payable at all events and unconditionally. And this is expressly required under the negotiable instruments law in the United States and under the bills of exchange act in England. Counsel contend that the draft in this case was not negotiable because it was upon its face conditional. It is said that the words appearing on the draft, "and charge the same to account for relief of seamen and balance of salary," made the draft conditional, and that it was not to be paid at all unless Congress had appropriated and set aside a fund, which was not exhausted at the time the draft was presented, for the payment of salaries and for the relief of seamen. If no such fund existed for the relief of seamen, or if nothing remained unpaid in salary account, the draft would have been worthless, as the holder was bound to know.

We do not, however, find it necessary to determine whether the claim that this bill is conditional, and therefore not negotiable, is sound or unsound. In our view of the matter it is unimportant whether it is conditional or unconditional, negotiable or non-negotiable. And we are not called upon to say whether a bill can be drawn upon the Secretary of the Treasury which is unconditional, and whether every bill drawn upon him is inherently conditional. That question can be decided when it arises. But in our opinion the doctrine of Price v. Neale is as applicable to non-negotiable bills as it is to negotiable ones. Price v. Neale went upon the theory that a drawee knows the signature of his drawer, and that it is negligence in him if he accepts or pays without first satisfying himself respecting the genuineness of the signature. There seems to be as much reason for applying the principle to non-negotiable paper as to paper which is negotiable, and we are unaware that any case has been decided in which a court has held the principle applicable to instruments which are negotiable under the law merchant. And sometimes it is said that without regard to the principle of negligence the drawee who pays the money should bear the loss, assuming that both himself and the holder who presented the bill for payment are equally innocent, as he is the one whose act occasioned the loss. But upon whichever of these two theories the doctrine of Price v. Neale may rest, and the first of the two seems the better reason, they apply with as much force where the bill is non-negotiable as where it is negotiable. The importance of the distinction between negotiable and non-negotiable paper grows out of the principle that the bona fide holder of negotiable paper takes, free from equities, while the holder of non-negotiable paper takes subject to them. But that distinction does not affect the question now under consideration. The act of payment follows the acquisition of the title by the holder, and it is the effect of the act of payment alone which is to be determined, and, in determining it, it can make no difference whether or not the holder acquired the paper free from or subject to existing equities, and, if it is not unconscientious for the holder of a negotiable bill who is paid on a forged signature of the drawer to retain the money paid him by the negligence of the payee, no more is it unconscientious in the holder of the non-negotiable bill who has been paid in the same way to retain what he has been paid.

We are asked to hold, under the authority of Guaranty Trust Co. v. Grotrian, 57 L.R.A. 689, 52 C. C. A. 235, 114 Fed. 433, and of Hannay v. Guaranty Trust Co. (C. C.) 187 Fed. 686, that the money paid can be recovered back. In the first of these cases a draft directed the drawee to pay and charge the same to account of certain flax seed, forged duplicate bills of lading for which were attached to the draft. The acceptance was, "Accepted against indorsed bills of lading" for flax seed. The draft was paid without knowledge that the bills of lading were forged, and before the arrival of the steamship on which the flax seed should have been according to the bills of lading, and without the knowledge that the flax seed was not there.

It was held in that case that the acceptance was conditioned on the delivery of genuine bills of lading, and that, as this condition was not waived by payment, the acceptor could recover the money paid. The same principle was involved in the second of these cases. But those cases are not in point as respects the question now before us. In the two cases cited, the forgery was not of the signature of the drawer, but of the bills of lading which purported to have been issued by the carrier. The drawee of the bill of exchange was not presumed to know the genuineness of the signatures to the bills of lading. The court, holding the acceptance and payment to have been conditional on the genuineness of the bills of lading, allowed the money to be recovered back, as the condition had not been realized.

Judgment is affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

R. A. COFFEY, Receiver, Appt.,

v.

J. W. GAY et al.

(— Ala. —, 67 So. 681.)

Receiver — right to appeal from adverse decision.

A receiver who brings an action to establish a claim in the court from which he received his appointment cannot appeal from an adverse decision without permission of the court.

(November 7, 1914.)

Note. — Right of receiver to appeal.

- I. Orders not affecting receiver personally.
 - a. Right to appeal in general, 802.
 - b. Receiver as representative of creditors and others interested in the property, 805.
 - c. Receiver as mere officer of court, 807.
- II. Orders affecting receiver personally.
 - a. Compensation and settlement of accounts, 808.
 - b. Removal, 809.
- III. Necessity for leave of court, 810.
- IV. Effect of allowance of appeal, 811.
- V. Dismissal of appeal by court on its own motion, 811.
- VI. Miscellaneous, 811.

This note is confined to consideration of the questions whether a receiver as such has sufficient interest, or stands in such a representative capacity that he is entitled to appeal from an order of the court, and whether an appeal can be taken by him L.R.A.1915D.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for Jackson County dismissing a bill filed to recover from defendants for unpaid stock subscriptions. Appeal dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lawrence E. Brown for appellant.

Mr. John F. Proctor for appellees.

Gardner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The First State Bank of Bridgeport, Alabama, was placed in the hands of a receiver under appointment of the chancery court of Jackson county, upon bill filed by Alex M. Garber, as attorney general of the state, as provided by statute (§ 3560, Code of 1907) of force at that time. Pending the administration of the affairs of said bank in said court, the receiver first named resigned, and appellant, R. A. Coffey, was duly appointed his successor, and is now acting as such. This bill was filed by said receiver against stockholders, seeking recovery from them upon the theory of unpaid subscriptions, etc. The suit is by said Coffey in his official capacity only; he being without any interest therein except in an official way.

The first averment of the bill is as follows: "That orator is receiver of the First State Bank, acting under appointment of this court made in the case of Alex M. Garber, Attorney General, etc., v. First State Bank, and brings this, his bill of complaint, in his official capacity as such receiver."

Upon submission of the cause for final decree, the chancellor was of the opinion that the complainant had failed to make out his case, and, of consequence, dismissed the bill; the reasons therefor being expressed without leave of the court making the order appealed from.

As to right of administrator, executor, or trustee to appeal as party aggrieved, see note to Bryant v. Thompson, 13 L.R.A. 745.

I. Orders not affecting receiver personally.

a. Right to appeal in general.

In comparatively few cases has the question been considered as to the necessity for a receiver's obtaining leave of court to appeal. In most of the cases the question decided has been whether he had such interest, or stood in such a representative position, as entitled him to appeal. If so, it was seemingly assumed that an appeal would lie as in other cases, and if not, leave of court to take the appeal was held not to confer upon the receiver the right of appeal. It appears to be the general rule that, as representing all the creditors and others interested in the property, a receiver has the right to appeal from an orin the decree. From this adverse decree the receiver brought this appeal.

Appellees move that the appeal be dismissed upon the ground that the appeal is taken by the receiver, as such, without any authority from the court appointing him, and without disclosing any special or personal interest in said appeal.

"The appointment of a receiver is one of the prerogatives of a court of equity, exercised in aid of its jurisdiction, in order to enable it to accomplish, as far as practicable, complete justice between the parties before it."

"He [receiver] is said to be the arm and the hand of the court, a part of the machinery of the court, by which the rights of parties are protected." 34 Cyc. 16, 17.

"A receiver appointed by the court of chancery is, to every extent, an officer of that court." Magee v. Cowperthwaite, 10 Ala. 966.

By the decided weight of authority it is established as the general rule that a receiver cannot institute an action connected with the administration of his trust without first procuring the leave of the court appointing him. High, Receivers, 4th ed. § 208; 34 Cyc. 377.

As a reason for the above rule, it was said in Screven v. Clark, 48 Ga. 41: "A receiver is at last only an officer of the court, and the foundation of the rule probably is that it is always for the court itself to determine whether it shall be dragged into litigation."

der which in its effect increases or diminishes the estate as a whole, but not from an order merely determining the relative rights of parties to the suit, or of creditors whose claims against the estate are admittedly valid; also that from an order in which he has a personal interest, as one settling his accounts or affecting his compensation, he may appeal. The rule was thus stated by the Federal Supreme Court, by Mr. Justice Brewer, in Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625: "It is often said that he [a receiver] is merely the hand of the court which has appointed him; and for certain purposes that is not an inapt expression. He is charged with the duty of carrying into execution the orders of that court, but he is also a custodian of property, and has by virtue of such custody certain obligations to the parties owning or interested therein. First. A receiver may defend, both in the court appointing him and by appeal, the estate in his possession against all claims which are antagonistic to the rights of both parties to the suit. . . . Second. He may likewise defend the estate against all claims which are antagonistic to the rights of either party to the suit, subject to the limitation that he may not in such defense question any order or decree of the court distributing burdens or apportioning rights between the parties to the suit or any order or decree resting upon the discretion of the court appointing him. . . . In appointing a receiver the court has a right, within certain recognized limits, to prescribe the terms and conditions of the appointment. . . . Now these conditions, whatever they may be, are beyond the challenge of the receiver. He may not say directly or indirectly, 'I accept the appointment; I take charge of the property, but I repudiate the terms and conditions imposed on the receivership.' . . . Third. Neither can he question any subsequent order or decree of the court distributing the estate in his hands between the parties to the suit. It is nothing to him whether all of the property is given to the mortgagee or all returned to the mortgagor. He is to stand indifferent between the parties, and may not be heard either in the court which appointed him, or in the appellate court, as to the rightfulness of any order which is a mere order of distribution between the parties. In this connection it must be noticed that an intervener, although for certain purposes recognized as a party to the litigation, is not such a party as comes within the scope of the limitation just announced. He is one who comes into the litigation asserting a right antagonistic or superior to that of one or both of the parties thereto, and a receiver who represents, so far as the property is concerned, the interests of the parties, may rightfully challenge his claim; provided that in such challenge he does not question any orders of the court heretofore referred to. . . . Fourth. He may appeal from an order or decree which affects his personal rights, provided it is not an order resting in the discretion of the court. Thus he may not appeal from an order discharging or removing him, or one directing him in the administration of the estate, as, for instance, to issue receiver's certificates, to make improvements, or matters of that kind, all of which depend on the sound discretion of the trial court. He may appeal from an order disallowing him commissions or fees, because that affects him personally, is not a matter purely of discretion, and does not delay or interfere with the orderly administration of the estate. Fifth. His right to appeal from an allowance of a claim against the estate does not necessarily fail when the receivership is terminated to the extent of surrendering the property in the possession of the receiver. It is a common practice in courts of equity, anxious as they are to be relieved from the care of property, to turn it over to the parties held entitled thereto, even before the final settlement of all claims against it, and at the same time to leave to the receiver the further defense of such claims, the party receiving the property giving security to abide by any decrees which may finally be entered against the estate. An admission that the railway property had

Speaking to the question of an appeal by the receiver from an order entered in the court from which he received his appointment, the supreme court of Wisconsin, in the case of McKinnon v. Wolfenden, 78 Wis. 237, 47 N. W. 436, after noting that the appeal by the receiver was not authorized by the court, said: "Without such authority it was not competent for him to take the appeal. A receiver is the mere servant or agent of the court to do its bidding, and he cannot be heard to question by appeal the regularity or propriety of the orders of court in the action, unless the court first authorizes him to do so."

"And, since he is the mere servant or agent of the court, he will not be allowed of his own volition to appeal from an order made in the progress of the cause in which he is appointed." High, Receivers, 4th ed. § 264b.

See also First Nat. Bank v. C. Bunting & Co. 7 Idaho, 27, 59 Pac. 929, 1106; 34 Cyc. 447.

Authority to institute the suit in the instant case may be found in the order appointing appellant receiver, and, while it is true the suit is by a separate and independent bill, yet it may still be considered as merely a part of the administration of the trust estate and as ancillary to the main suit. Such was the effect of the holding in White v. Ewing, 150 U. S. 36, 40 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018, wherein it is said: "The circuit court obtained jurisdiction over the . . . company by the been turned over to the purchaser is not therefore of itself conclusive against the right of the receiver to appeal."

A receiver may appeal, it has been said, with respect to any claim asserted by or against the estate involving the increase or diminution of the entire estate of which he is the receiver, and which increase or diminution would inure to the benefit or loss of all the creditors. Knabe v. Johnson, 107 Md. 616, 69 Atl. 420; Beilman v. Poe, 120 Md. 444, 88 Atl. 131; Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400.

But as regards the respective equities of parties to the suit, the rule has been laid down that the receiver should be indifferent, and not partisan; that his duty is to all the parties in common, and he should not become the advocate of one against the other. Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, modified and affirmed in 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Beilman v. Poe, 120 Md. 444, 88 Atl. 131; Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400.

Accordingly, it has been held that a receiver has no right to appeal from an order of the court merely determining the relative rights of creditors, and not involving an increase or diminution of the assets as a whole. Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. supra; Grier v. Union Nat. L. Ins. Co. 217 Fed. 293; State ex rel. Wilkerson v. Cobbs, 182 Ala. 331, 62 So. 729; Knabe v. Johnson, 107 Md. 616, 69 Atl. 420; Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400; Strauss v. Carolina Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. 118 N. C. 556, 24 S. E. 116; Battery Park Bank v. Western Carolina Bank, 127 N. C. 432, 37 S. E. 461; State ex rel. Miller v. People's State Bank, 22 N. D. 583, 135 N. W. 196.

Under a statute giving the right of appeal to any party "aggrieved," it was held in Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400, that a receiver had no right to appeal, even with the permission of the court rendering it, from a decree that a sum deposited in a bank for which the receiver was appointed was a special deposit, and that it be paid by the receiver to the petitioner as a preference, the receiver admitting that the sum had been deposited with the bank, but denying that it was a special deposit. The ground of the decision is that in cases of this character, where the debt is admitted, but the only contest is whether the claimant is entitled to a preference, the receiver does not have sufficient interest to appeal, but should stand as neutral between the parties, and that the creditors only are the aggrieved parties entitled to appeal.

In Esmeralda County v. Wildes, supra, it was plausibly contended that the expressions sometimes used in describing the position of the receiver as an "agent," an "arm," or a "hand" of the court, are meaningless figures of speech, and when taken literally do not fully and correctly describe the official relation of the receiver to the court; that the receiver is not a mere agent compelled to obey every word or illegal order; also that, even if it be conceded that the receiver has no right of appeal between rival creditors as such, he should have the right of appeal as representative of the creditors, where, as in this instance, they are not parties to the proceeding, and not represented unless by the receiver. And the court remarked upon the necessity of a law which would provide a better protection for creditors and their interests in such a case, inasmuch as the receiver, being required to remain neutral, was, under the statute, deprived of the right of appeal, saying that power should be vested in the court appointing a receiver in a case of this kind, to appoint an agent to represent the creditors separately and apart from the receiver, and, by reason of his representative capacity, to prosecute an appeal, so that the guidance of the court of last resort would be afforded not only to the receiver as the representative of the estate, but also to the court appointing him.

So, in State ex rel. Miller v. People's State Bank, 22 N. D. 583, 135 N. W. 196, it was held that a receiver of a bank had no right to appeal from an order of the court allowing a preference to a creditor, filing of the original creditors' bill, . . . and by the appointment of a receiver, and any suit by or against such receiver, in the course of the winding up of such corporation, whether for the collection of its assets or for the defense of its property rights, must be regarded an ancillary to the main suit," etc.

The fact, therefore, that the suit was by separate bill filed in the same court from which the receiver received his appointment, can have no effect upon the principle involved. This suit the receiver was without authority to bring until he first obtained permission of the court of his appointment. This consent given, he files his bill in the chancery court, from which he received his power to act. Whether or not the authority given to sue would also carry with it the implied authority to appeal from an adverse judgment had the suit been in a court other than the one from which he obtained his appointment we need not stop to inquire. That question is not before us. We think that most clearly there could be no implied authority in the instant case for an appeal from its adverse decree. Indeed, this question is answered in the recent case of Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. 182 Ala. 372, 62 So. 730, wherein it is said: "The receiver is the mere creature of the court. He must give heed to his master's voice. He cannot make authority for himself. Neither the recited language of the decree nor any reasonable implication to be found in it authorizes the receiver to question and that such an appeal, though taken with the permission of the court making the order, would be dismissed.

But a similar order was held appealable by the receiver under the New York practice, at least from the special to the general term of court. People v. St. Nicholas Bank, (Re Lathrop) 77 Hun, 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 407, followed in s. c. (Re Homans) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421, s. c. (Re Quincy) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 421, s. c. (Re Beers) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422, s. c. (Re Kohn) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 422, s. c. (Re Kerr) 77 Hun, 611, 28 N. Y. Supp. 423. It had been previously held, the court said, that a receiver, as an officer of the court, had a right to apply from time to time to the court for instructions, and that this meant not simply the special term or any other branch, but the entire court made up of its various branches, including the general term. And a receiver of a bank who, on the petition of depositors, had been ordered to pay out certain funds notwithstanding his opposition thereto, was regarded as a party aggrieved within the meaning of the provisions of the Code giving the right to appeal.

"In some cases, as for instance from an order distributing the funds of the estate, it is usually held that a receiver has no right of appeal; but where the duty is put upon him of defending the assets of the estate, or protecting it from unwarranted or unlawful claims, we do not understand that this right has ever been denied." Pickering v. Richardson, 57 Wash. 117, 106 Pac. 614.

D. Receiver as representative of creditors and others interested in the property.

As indicated above, a receiver has generally been held to have the right to appeal from an order of the court affecting the estate as a whole, on the ground that he represents all the creditors and others interested in the property, and is not merely an officer of the court. Particular applications L.R.A.1915D.

of this rule are shown in the following cases:

In Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, modifying and affirming 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, where the receiver of a railroad appointed in a foreclosure suit contended that the claim of an intervener for labor and material was due from a third party, and not from the mortgagor, it was held that the receiver had the right to appeal from an order of the court decreeing payment of the claim in preference to the mortgage debt.

And in Kavanagh v. Bank of America, 239 Ill. 404, 88 N. E. 171, it was held that the receiver of a bank had a right to appeal from an order directing him to pay the amount of a certificate of deposit to an intervener, an indorsee thereof, the court saying that the receiver represented the entire estate and all persons interested in it, and it was his duty to defend the estate against all claims antagonistic to the rights of the parties to the suit, and, if necessary for such defense, to appeal. The decision in this case was followed in Pryor v. Bank of America, 240 Ill. 100, 88 N. E. 288.

So, in People v. Brooklyn Bank, 140 App. Div. 750, 126 N. Y. Supp. 155, it was held that a receiver of a bank might appeal from an order denying his motion for a review of his own account and that of his coreceiver, on the ground that the allowances to the receivers and their attorneys were excessive, although the bank had consented to the allowances, where the consent was given under moral, if not legal, duress in order to resume business. The receiver was regarded as entitled to appeal as representing all parties interested in the estate. An appeal from this decision was dismissed in 202 N. Y. 561, 95 N. E. 1130, without opinion.

A receiver of a railroad appointed by a state court, from whose possession the property is wrongfully taken by a receiver appointed by the Federal court, has such interest in the property as will give him a standing in the Federal court to petition for its restoration to his possession, and to the court's decree by appeal. In the general expression of this decree there is nothing to indicate that it was written with the view of conferring unusual authority upon the receiver, or that the court had in contemplation the propriety of the receiver's appeal from its future orders."

The language is directly applicable here. The court gave permission to bring the suit, and the same court heard and determined the cause adversely to the receiver. There is nothing in the order permitting suit indicating any purpose to grant leave to appeal from any order or decree of that court. The court has by its decree determined that there is no merit in the suit, and dismissed the bill. "The receiver is the mere creature of the court. He must give heed to his master's voice." Without the permission of the court he had no authority to bring suit, and it is entirely within the same line of reasoning to require that he obtain leave to prosecute the appeal from an adverse decree from the same court. There are, of course, exceptions to the rule, but with these we are not concerned.

maintain an appeal from an order refusing to restore such possession. Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168, 39 L. ed. 660, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

A receiver of a partnership, as representing the members of the firm and its creditors, may appeal from a judgment for the plaintiffs in an action for goods sold and delivered to the firm, to which he is a party, although the verdict is against part only of the members of the firm. Honegger v. Wettstein, 15 Jones & S. 125. On appeal, however, in 94 N. Y. 252, 13 Abb. N. C. 393, it was held that the receiver had no such interest in the action as entitled him to intervene and defend; that the order allowing him to do so was erroneous, and the judgment was therefore reversed.

In Felton v. Ackerman, 9 C. C. A. 457, 22 U. S. App. 154, 61 Fed. 225, it was held that a receiver of a railroad might appeal from an order of the court by which he had been appointed, granting an injunction, at the instance of an intervener, restraining the receiver from obstructing a highway crossing.

As to whether the receiver stood in such a representative position as entitled him to appeal, the court in Felton v. Ackerman, supra, said: "The first question suggested is whether it is consonant with the relations which ought to exist between a receiver and the court appointing him, that he should be allowed to appeal from an order of the kind made here. We think it is. The learned judge at the circuit allowed the appeal, and we see no reason why he should not have done so. While it is true that the receiver is an arm of the court in the administration of the property, yet, where persons intervene to obtain relief against him, because they cannot obtain full relief in any other forum, the issue raised by his answer to the petition makes the proceeding an adversary one, in which the receiver represents the interests of the owners of the property of which he is temporarily in charge. If, as such representative, he feels aggrieved by an order of the court made in an adversary proceeding of this character, it is difficult to see why he should not be permitted to have the order of the court reviewed by the appellate tribunal, to which any other litigant may resort. Certainly, the owners of the property, if aggrieved by the order against the receiver, L.R.A.1915D.

might appeal, and there would seem to be no justice in preventing the temporary custodian of their property from doing so. As between parties to the action claiming an interest in the property which he is preserving, of course, the receiver can take no part; but where the appeal is in the interest of the property, and therefore in the interest of all who shall thereafter be shown to have any right to the property, it is quite convenient and proper that the receiver should be allowed to conduct the appellate proceeding."

Receivers of a railroad appointed during the pendency of an appeal in a proceeding to condemn land for railway purposes were held in Jeffery v. Osborne, 145 Wis. 351, 129 N. W. 931, entitled to appeal from the verdict assessing the damages on a second trial.

And in Thom v. Pittard, 10 C. C. A. 352, 8 U. S. App. 597, 62 Fed. 232, it was held that a receiver of a railroad, with the consent of the court, might appeal from a decree for damages for injuries to an employee while the road was being operated by the receiver.

As to the representative character of the receiver, it was said in Thom v. Pittard, supra: "It is claimed that the receiver, the officer and servant of the court, subject to its orders, without personal interest in the funds under his control, which are to be accounted for as the court may direct, is not to be permitted to refuse to obey the court's orders by appealing from its decrees. But we must remember that the receiver represents all the parties in interest. He stands for the railroad company as well as for all persons having claims against it, and he speaks for the bondholders as well as for the stockholders. While he has no personal interest in the proceedings, except to faithfully and impartially discharge his duties, it is incumbent upon him to carefully protect the property confided to his keeping. . . . Permission given the receiver to sue, or direction to him to defend, should take with it the right to follow the suit to the court of last resort. . . . While it is true that any of the defendants to said chancery suit, interested in the property of the railroad company and in its proper distribution, as also the plaintiffs, could have appealed from said decree in favor of appellee, . . . still it does

The court may deem an appeal a useless consumption of the fund of the estate, as well also as productive of unnecessary delay in its administration. We doubt not that in all proper cases the court would give the permission for review of the decree, a matter resting largely in the sound discretion of the court, and for an abuse of the discretion the party aggrieved is not without remedy.

The principles recognized in Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. supra, seem decisive of this case, and in the conclusion of the opinion the rule here invoked was declared a salutary one. We adopt, as applicable here, the concluding sentence of that opinion: "The court may, in its discretion, authorize its receiver to bring its decree under review by appeal, but in this case it has not done so, and the appeal must be dismissed." Appeal dismissed.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan and Mayfield, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied December 17, 1914.

not follow that the receiver, who was in fact the defendant, so far as the issues raised by the petition were concerned, could not also appeal."

And as representing the creditors and stockholders, a receiver of an insolvent bank may appeal from an order of the court directing a settlement of a claim against it which the petitioner represented was for the interest of all parties. McGregor v. Third Nat. Bank, 124 Ga. 557, 53 S. E. 93. It was said that the receiver was indeed an officer of the court, but that he was appointed for the express purpose of representing not only the bank, but also all its creditors and stockholders; that "unless he represented them in the litigation, it would be necessary to bring all of them before the court. . . . It was through the receiver that these interested parties had to resist the granting of the relief sought by the plaintiff; and the judgment being adverse to him, it was his right and duty, as their representative, to except thereto, if he or any of them was not satisfied therewith. Their right of review by the supreme court was certainly not cut off merely because he was an officer of court and was, under ordinary circumstances, subject to its orders without question."

Where a judgment was rendered in the Federal court against a corporation, and a receiver appointed by the state court applied to the Federal court for permission to appear specially in the action, and make such defenses as there might be on behalf of the corporation, and for stay of execution on the judgment, it was held that the receiver had a right to prosecute a writ of error to review a judgment denying the petition. Rust v. United Waterworks Co. 17 C. C. A. 16, 36 U. S. App. 167, 70 Fed. 129.

In Gephart v. Taylor, 124 Md. 111, 91 Atl. 772, it was held that a receiver of a firm had a right to appeal from an order of the court dismissing his petition filed on behalf of certain creditors against a former receiver, to enforce an alleged liability to the firm growing out of the administration of the first receivership.

And an appeal was allowed by a receiver of a railroad in Guarantee Trust & S. D Co. v. Philadelphia, R. & N. E. R. Co. 69 Conn. 709, 38 L.R.A. 804, 38 Atl. 792, from L.R.A.1915D.

an order directing him to restore a schedule of wages to employees.

It is the duty of receivers to appeal if they believe injustice has been done to the corporation they represent. Strauss v. Carolina Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. 118 N. C. 556, 24 N. E. 118.

See also Ellicott v. Warford, under II. b, infra.

c. Receiver as mere officer of court.

In some cases a receiver has been regarded as merely an officer of the court, and therefore not entitled to appeal from an order distributing the funds of the estate. The order appealed from has sometimes been one distributing the funds among parties to the suit, and therefore, under the rule laid down by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. (discussed under I. a, supra), the receiver would have no right to appeal. But in some cases the right of appeal has been denied to the receiver even where these to whom the funds were ordered paid were not, it seems, parties to the original suit, and the order appealed from was one which would diminish the assets as a whole, and therefore it would seem was one from which, under the rule generally laid down, the receiver might appeal.

In Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Caldwell, 58 Ill. App. 219, the court, in dismissing an appeal by a receiver from an order for the allowance of a claim against the estate, said: "A receiver is the mere hand of the court, to do what the court directs. When, in passing upon his accounts, the court charges or refuses to allow items, and he claims that the action of the court does him wrong personally, he may appeal. . . . But if he may appeal from one order in which he has no interest, as to the distribution of assets, he may from every one; and unless he can be charged with bad faith or want of reasonable prudence, his expenses and reasonable compensation must come out of the assets. . . . Next, we will have clerks appealing from directions of the courts to enter orders unwise in the opinion of the clerks."

So, in Gillespie v. Illinois Steel Co. 62 Ill. App. 594, and Dewar v. Ellwood, 98 Ill. App. 46, receivers were held to have no standing to complain of orders of the court determining the rights of claimants to the property of corporations for which the receivers were appointed.

And in Sutton v. Weber, 100 Ill. App. 360, it was held that a receiver had no right to appeal from an order of the court to pay a certain amount of rent for the store occupied by him, where he had sufficient funds of the estate to pay the same, as he was but an arm of the court, bound to do its bidding, and had no personal interest in what should be done with the money which he was ordered to pay.

So, in Foreman v. Defrees, 120 Ill. App. 486, it was held that a receiver had no right to appeal from an order of the court directing him to pay a claim of certain petitioners for services rendered the defendant in the suit, the court saying that the receiver was an officer of the court, that the assets were under its control, and that the receiver had no personal interest in the question whether the assets in his hands should go to the creditor in question or to other parties.

In the three Illinois cases last above cited, the appeals were allowed by the court making the order appealed from.

Also, in Stevens v. Hadfield, 178 Ill. 532, 52 N. E. 875, subsequent proceedings in 196 Ill. 253, 63 N. E. 633, the court said that it was of no consequence to whom the court should ultimately order the balance in the hands of the receiver paid, and that he could not complain of an order directing payment of such balance to a certain party, where the court had previously made an order or judgment from which he had not appealed, passing upon the amount of moneys received and paid out by him, and finding that he had a stated balance on hand, to be paid out as the court might thereafter direct.

A receiver, it was said in Herrick v. Miller, 123 Ind. 304, 24 N. E. 111, cannot question the correctness of an order made by the court for the disposition of the funds in his hands; to permit him to question the correctness of such orders would be to permit a constant "rebellion of the hands against the head," which would result in the utmost confusion, and would wholly destroy the usefulness of the office of receiver.

So, in Stanton v. Andrews, 18 Ill. App. 552, it was said: "A receiver is an officer of the court, and has been figuratively styled the hands of the court. With that figure in mind, this case [an appeal by a receiver from an order of the court directing payment out of the funds in his possession, of a certain amount found due a creditor] appears very much like a mild rebellion of the hands against the head."

In Stanton v. Andrews, supra, it was held that a receiver has no right to appeal from an order of the court fixing the amount due a creditor, and ordering him to pay the same out of a fund which the court had previously directed him to retain for this purpose, where all other creditors and claimants had been paid except the one in question, whose claim was then in litigation, although the order directing the receiver to retain the fund further provided that, upon the settlement of the claim then in litigation, the receiver might retain the residue, if any, as additional compensation for his services as receiver.

And it was said in Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279, that a receiver's holding of the property was the holding of the court for the one for whom the possession was taken, and that the receiver had no more right to interfere in the litigation, or ask for a revision of the decree or orders affecting the rights or claims of the parties, than an entire stranger to the cause.

That a receiver cannot in any sense be regarded as representing any of the parties to the cause was the rule laid down in Re Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 278. The order appealed from was, however, one discharging the receiver and directing an account. It was said: "It is, moreover, conceded that the receiver has no rights himself, and, of course, cannot appeal or interfere in any way in the conduct of the cause, unless he can be considered as representing those at whose instance he was appointed. But to view him in that light would be to give him a character inconsistent with the nature of his office. . . . How can he be the officer of the court and the hand of the court, and at the same time the representative of the interests of certain of the parties to the cause? The court must act by its officers and agents, and there is as much propriety in calling the court the representative of any of the parties to the cause, as its agents and officers, who derive their authority from the court, and are removable at its discretion. . . . If the receiver may prosecute this appeal on behalf of the parties whom he may be supposed to represent, why may not he interfere at any and every stage of the cause, when he may think the interest of those parties requires it? But surely this could never be tolerated. The proceedings in the cause, except, indeed, where his own accounts and allowances are concerned, are as to him res inter alios acta. . . . I hold it, therefore, to be too clear for doubt, that a receiver has no right to intermeddle in questions affecting the rights of the parties or the disposition of the property in his hands; that he cannot in any sense, or to any extent, be regarded as the representative of any one or more of the parties to the cause, and that he must retire from his office, and give up the property committed to his custody, whenever required so to do by the court."

See also cases under III. infra.

II. Orders affecting receiver personally.

a. Compensation and settlement of accounts.

A receiver, because of his personal interest therein, may appeal from an order affecting the amount of his compensation or denying him any compensation. Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625 (see quotation from this case under I. a, supra); Magee v. Cowperthwaite, 10 Ala. 966; Herdon v. Hurter, 19 Fla. 397; McAnrow v. Martin, 183 Ill. 467, 56 N. E. 168; Sutton v. Weber, 100 Ill. App. 360; Beilman v. Poe, 120 Md. 444, 88 Atl. 131; Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400.

"It may well be that a receiver who is the mere custodian for the court cannot appeal from an order directing him to turn over the property in his hands. But when the order erroneously fixes the amount of property in the receiver's hands, and directs him to turn over more than he has in custody, it is essential to the protection of his rights that he should be allowed to appeal." How v. Jones, 60 Iowa, 70, 14 N. W. 193. To a similar effect is Merriam v. Victory Min. Co. 37 Or. 321, 56 Pac. 75, 58 Pac. 37, 60 Pac. 997.

A receiver in a foreclosure suit, although not a party to the suit, may appeal from a decree therein settling his accounts. Hinckley v. Gilman, C. & S. R. Co. 94 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 166.

It is only from orders affecting the receiver's compensation, or from orders refusing to allow items in his accounts, that a receiver may appeal. Foreman v. Defrees, 120 Ill. App. 486. To a similar effect is Haigh v. Carroll, 197 Ill. 193, 64 N. E. 375.

And in Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. 182 Ala. 372, 62 So. 730, the court said: "A receiver may undoubtedly appeal from orders and decrees affecting his claim for fees and expenses, or involving him in personal responsibility," citing Thornton v. Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. 94 Ala. 353, 10 So. 442.

A receiver may appeal in his individual capacity from an order which determines that after his discharge from office he will be personally liable for obligations which he transacted officially. Re Premier Cycle Mfg. Co. 70 Conn. 473, 39 Atl. 800.

Where the receiver's accounts or personal rights are affected, it was said in Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279, that he must necessarily have the same means of redress that any other party so affected would have, and that it could not be doubted that where a court makes a void decree by which it directs its receiver to pay over funds in his hands, and, because he fails to obey such decree, attaches and imprisons him for an indefinite time, he is entitled to have the order of imprisonment reviewed.

See also Stanton v. Andrews, under I. c, supra, and Polk v. Johnson, under III., infra.

b. Removal.

It is well established that a receiver has no right to appeal from an order merely removing him from office, and not settling his accounts or affecting the allowance of his compensation or expenses. Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, modified and affirmed in 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, L.R.A.1915D.

19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Re Premier Cycle Mfg. Co. 70 Conn. 473, 39 Atl. 800; L'Engle v. Florida C. R. Co. 14 Fla. 266; Conner v. Belden, 8 Daly, 257; Witherbee v. Witherbee, 55 App. Div. 151, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1039; State ex rel. Casedy v. Inter-State Fisheries Co. 36 Wash. 80, 78 Pac. 202.

"The holding of a receiver is the holding of the court, and he has no right to ask for a review of the order removing him any more than a stranger to the cause." Conner v. Belden, 8 Daly, 257.

A receiver, it was said in Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, modified and affirmed in 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, has no right to appeal from a decree removing him from his position, for that is a matter of discretion with the court appointing him.

And in State ex rel. Casedy v. Inter-State Fisheries Co. 36 Wash. 80, 78 Pac. 202, the court said: "No matter how much the receiver may feel aggrieved at the action of the court in removing him, he individually cannot complain. A party to the action has an interest in the personnel of the receiver, and it might be that, if the court should arbitrarily remove one and appoint another, he could have the orders reviewed in some way, but no such right belongs to the receiver. He may have orders relating to his compensation, his accounts, or his acts while receiver, reviewed, when he is aggrieved by such orders, but whether he personally shall or shall not continue as receiver is a question he has no right to litigate."

A receiver has no right to appeal from a mere order of removal which does not settle his accounts or deny him compensation, even though it direct him to turn over to his successor all the property of the estate in his possession and the balance of the money in his hands as shown by his final account. Young v. Irish, 104 Minn. 367, 116 N. W. 656.

In Young v. Irish, supra, the court, however, stated that the receiver had the right of appeal if the order was susceptible of the construction that it was in effect a settlement of his accounts and a refusal to allow him compensation.

A receiver has no right to appeal from an order of the court discharging him and directing him to account. Re Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 278. The receiver, it was said, was the hand of the court, and the holding of the receiver was the holding of the court for the one from whom the possession was taken, and therefore the receiver had no rights whatever, and no more authority to ask for a revision of the order removing him than an entire stranger to the cause.

The contention was denied in Re Colvin, supra, that the receiver had the right of appeal because the order discharging him directed him to deliver over the property to the administrator pendente lite, it being said that it was immaterial what the court did with the property, provided the receiver was discharged from his responsibility as such, and that it could not be questioned but that he would be so discharged by obeying the order of the court in this instance.

So, in Ellicott v. Warford, 4 Md. 80, it was held that a receiver had no right to appeal from an order removing him from office and directing him to deliver to the administrator pendente lite the personal property of the estate. The contention was denied that the receiver should have the right to appeal as representing the parties interested, especially in view of the fact that other parties in interest had brought independent appeals from the same order.

A receiver has no right to appeal from an order discharging him in which his expenses and compensation are properly provided for. Montpelier Cup & Metal Works v. Dilsaver, 169 Ill. App. 279.

But where an order discharging a receiver fails properly to protect him in the expenses which he has incurred in caring for the property, he may appeal. Ibid.

So, a receiver may appeal from an order removing him which is a reflection either upon his competency or integrity, or both, and which fails to protect him against expenses which he has incurred. Flinn v. Hanbury, 157 App. Div. 207, 141 N. Y. Supp. 844.

III. Necessity for leave of court.

As stated above (I. a) the question of the necessity for a receiver's obtaining leave of court to appeal has been considered in comparatively few cases, it being apparently generally assumed that if the receiver had such an interest or stood in such a representative position as entitled him to appeal, an appeal would lie as in other cases.

The decision in COFFEY v. GAY, that a receiver cannot appeal from an order of the court appointing him in which he has no personal interest, unless authorized by the court so to do, is supported by the cases of Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. 182 Ala. 372, 62 So. 730; First Nat. Bank v. C. Bunting & Co. 7 Idaho, 27, 59 Pac. 929, 1106; Polk v. Johnson, — Ind. App. —, 76 N. E. 634; McKinnon v. Wolfenden, 78 Wis. 237, 47 N. W. 436, approved in Union Nat. Bank v. Mills, 103 Wis. 39, 79 N. W. 20. See also Re City & County Invest. Co. L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 475, 42 L. T. N. S. 303, 28 Week. Rep. 933; and Re Silver Valley Mines, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 381, 47 L. T. N. S. 597, 31 Week. Rep. 96, which were cases of liquidators appointed under the English practice.

In First Nat. Bank v. C. Bunting & Co. 7 Idaho, 27, 59 Pac. 929, the court, in holding that a receiver appointed in an action against a bank could not appeal without permission of the court, from an order declaring deposits in his possession to be a trust fund, and directing him to pay them to the state and certain counties which had intervened, said: "It should be borne in mind that this is not an action against the receiver, but that in this action the receiver was appointed. Then the receiver has no personal interest in the judgment from L.R.A.1915D.

which he appeals. It is of no personal interest to the receiver whether he pays the money mentioned in the several judgments to the respondent counties, or whether he pays them to the general creditors. It was his duty to obey the orders of the court appointing him, of which he is only an agent. He had no right to appeal from said orders."

So, in McKinnon v. Wolfenden, 78 Wis. 237, 47 N. W. 436, it was held that, unless authorized by the court so to do, a receiver as such could not appeal from an order of the court appointing him, confirming the report of a referee as to the amount due on certain mortgages, as the receiver was a mere servant or agent of the court to do its bidding, and, without its consent, could not be heard to question by appeal the regularity or propriety of its orders.

And in Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. 182 Ala. 372, 62 So. 730, it was said that without leave of court a receiver has no right to appeal from an order of the court appointing him, respecting the conflicting claims of creditors; that he is the mere agent of the court for the collection and distribution of the assets of the insolvent corporation of which he is appointed receiver, under orders of the court which fully protect him, and in this disposition of the property he has no personal interest, except as to orders affecting his claim for fees and expenses, or involving him in personal responsibility; that the distribution of the fund among creditors concerns them only.

It was held also in Cobbs v. Vizard Invest. Co. supra, that the receiver was not authorized to appeal from an order of the court appointing him, decreeing a deposit to belong to one of two claimants, by the fact that he was authorized to contest and resist the allowance of any claim to the extent that it was unjust or illegal, to collect and reduce the money to assets, and to employ legal counsel for all such purposes, "and for any other purpose in the discharge of his duty as such receiver." This power and duty the receiver, it was said, had exercised as to the item in dispute by contesting the claim in the lower court.

To allow receivers in all cases to review the rulings of the court under whose appointment they act, without first obtaining authority for that purpose, would tend to the consumption of the fund in the payment of costs and attorneys' fees, rather than to the conservation of the interest of those for whose benefit insolvent funds are administered. Ibid.

"A receiver is a mere officer of the court. His first duty is to obey its orders. He has no discretion, speaking generally, as to the application of funds which are in his hands by virtue of the receivership. He holds them strictly subject to the order of the court, to be disposed of as the court may direct. . . . Being a mere agent of the court, he has no authority to appeal from orders made by it in the pending proceeding, except as it may authorize him to do so. . . . The exception is that he has the right to appeal in all matters relating to his official conduct or his accounts and credits. In these cases he occupies the position of a party to a suit." Polk v. Johnson, — Ind. App. —, 70 N. E. 634.

In Cornell Wind Engine & Pump Co. v. Breed, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 365, the rule was laid down that the defendant, as assignee and receiver, had a right to prosecute an appeal from a judgment against him, even though his appointment as receiver superseded the assignment and as receiver he was not expressly authorized to prosecute the appeal; but that if such organization were necessary, the fact that the court from which he received his appointment granted the appeal would be sufficient.

In Kirkpatrick v. Eastern Mill. & Export Co. 135 Fed. 151, the court refused to grant leave to a receiver to appeal from an order; and in Cook v. Anderson Food Co. — N. J. Eq. —, 55 Atl. 1042, there was a similar refusal, except on the condition that those soliciting the receiver to take the appeal secure him in the costs and expenses thereof.

IV. Effect of allowance of appeal.

Where a receiver has no right to appeal, as, for instance, from an order merely determining the relative rights of the parties to the suit, and not involving an increase or diminution of the estate as a whole, the fact that the court making the order allows the appeal, and authorizes and directs the receiver to take the same, will not confer upon him the right to appeal. Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400; Knabe v. Johnson, 107 Md. 616, 69 Atl. 420; State ex rel. Miller v. People's State Bank, 22 N. D. 583, 135 N. W. 196; Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, modified and affirmed in 174 U. S. 182, 43 L. ed. 941, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

In Farlow v. Kelley, 131 U. S. CCI. Appx. and 26 L. ed. 427, a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by a receiver without first obtaining leave of the court was denied, the court saying that the allowance of the appeal by the circuit court was equivalent to leave by it to the receiver to take an appeal. Based upon this case the contention was made in Bosworth v. Terminal R. Asso. 26 C. C. A. 279, 53 U. S. App. 302, 80 Fed. 969, that the appellate court was bound to entertain an appeal by a receiver because it had been allowed by the lower court. But it was held that the fact that the lower court allowed an appeal did not require the appellate court to entertain the same, if the receiver did not otherwise have such an interest in the order appealed from as entitled him to appeal. The court said that in some states it is held that no case may be appealed by a receiver without permission, notwithstanding parties may appeal as of right and without leave; and that the supreme court in the case of Farlow v. L.R.A.1915D.

Kelley, supra, merely held that, if leave were essential, it was granted by the usual allowance of an appeal; but that it was nowhere held, and the doctrine could not be sanctioned, that the allowance of an appeal could operate to clothe the receiver with an interest which he did not have, or impose upon the appellate court the duty of hearing and determining a moot question. The rule declared in the Bosworth Case was approved in Knabe v. Johnson, 107 Md. 616, 69 Atl. 420.

And in Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400, it was said that no order or sanction of the lower court could authorize the appellate court to take cognizance of a matter on appeal, unless the right of appeal clearly appeared as matter of law.

See also Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Caldwell, Sutton v. Weber, and Foreman v. Defrees, under I. c. supra, where, although the appeal was allowed by the court making the order appealed from, appeals by receivers were dismissed because the receivers had no right to appeal, the effect of the allowance of the appeal, however, not being discussed; and see Cornell Wind Engine & Pump Co. v. Breed, under III. supra.

V. Dismissal of appeal by court on its own motion.

The court on its own motion will dismiss an appeal by a receiver in which he has no interest and no right of appeal (Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Caldwell, 58 Ill. App. 219; Foreman v. Defrees, 120 Ill. App. 486); or an appeal taken without leave of court, when that is necessary (First Nat. Bank v. C. Bunting & Co. 7 Idaho, 27, 59 Pac. 929, 1106).

In Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Caldwell, supra, the court said: "This point has not been made by counsel for the appellee, but we cannot sanction, even by silence, the idea that a receiver may set up in opposition to the court, his theories of how the assets shall be disposed of."

VI. Miscellaneous.

Under the New York statute giving the right of appeal to "a person aggrieved who is not a party, but is entitled by law to be substituted in place of a party, or who has acquired, since the making of the order or the rendering of the judgment appealed from, an interest which would have entitled him to be so substituted, if it had been previously acquired," it was held in Ross v. Wigg, 100 N. Y. 243, 3 N. E. 180, that where certain creditors obtained a judgment and commenced supplementary proceedings thereon, in which a receiver was appointed, the receiver was not an aggrieved party entitled to be substituted in place of the same defendant in another action then pending by another creditor, and was not entitled to appeal from an order therein. The statute was said to contemplate cases mainly, if not exclusively, where the party to the record is merely a nominal one, and the real party in interest is the one aggrieved, because he is the real party, or where, since the commencement of the action, there has been by death or in some other way a devolution of the entire interest or property involved in the litigation to some other person, who has thus become the party aggrieved.

Under the same statute, it was held in Jones v. Woodin, 164 App. Div. 79, 149 N. Y. Supp. 377, that receivers of a corporation appointed by the court of another state to protect its property, not being entitled to be substituted for it as the defendant in the action, could not appeal from a judgment against it.

A receiver who is not a party cannot appeal as matter of right, under a statute allowing such an appeal only by one of the parties or his personal representative, from an order directing him to pay claims from the funds in his hands, of third persons not parties to the original suit. Dorsey v. Sibert, 93 Ala. 312, 9 So. 288.

A receiver appointed pending an action by the parties for whose property he was appointed receiver cannot enter an appeal in the action in his own name as receiver, without first having himself made a party thereto, since no one has a right to appeal except parties to the case in which the appeal is entered. Dupree v. Drake, 94 Ga. 466, 19 S. E. 242. R. E. H.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

VINCENZO PETELLO

v.

TEUTONIA FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(89 Conn. 175, 93 Atl. 137.)

Insurance — bill of sale — unconditional ownership.

1. A bill of sale of chattels to secure money advanced to pay the purchase price

Note. — Insurance: mortgage or instrument given as security as breach of condition as to sole and unconditional ownership.

As to vendor's lien as affecting sole and unconditional ownership, see note to Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Pitts, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627.

Concerning vendee under executory contract as owner where vendor holds title, see note to Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775.

As to outstanding contract of sale of property as defeating sole and unconditional ownership by vendor, see notes to Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Erickson, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 512, and Sharman v. Continental Ins. Co. 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 670.

It is held, in jurisdictions where the common-law theory is in force, under which the L.R.A.1915D.

is not a violation of a condition in an insurance policy on the property that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership.

Same — chattel mortgage.

2. A bill of sale of chattels to secure money advanced to pay for them is not, although recorded, within the operation of a provision in an insurance policy rendering it void if the property becomes encumbered by a chattel mortgage.

(February 23, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court of Waterbury, affirming a judgment of the City Court in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by Beach, J.:

The plaintiff on November 13, 1911, brought from one Paladino the stock and fixtures of a barber shop known as No. 600 Bank street, in the city of Waterbury, and paid therefor $400, which he had borrowed for that purpose from one Criscitiello, his brother-in-law, who lived in New York city. The loan was made on the agreement that the lender should be secured by a bill of sale of the property, and, for the purpose of securing Criscitiello, the plaintiff had the vendor make out a bill of sale directly to him. Plaintiff agreed to pay Criscitiello each week as much as he could spare after paying the expenses of conducting the shop. On May 2, 1912, when the policy in question was issued, the plaintiff had paid $250, and still owed the balance, and Criscitiello still held the bill of sale as security. At that time other fixtures and supplies had been bought by the plaintiff after the bill of sale was given and were not covered by it. The policy of insurance was in stand-title passes to the mortgagee, as well as in those where the lien theory is in force, that a mortgage or instrument given as security does not violate a clause in a policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than the sole and unconditional ownership, since the insured is considered to be the owner as to all the world except the mortgagee.

This result was reached in the following cases, although the mortgages executed by the insured passed the title to the property to the mortgagee: Hubbard v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 33 Iowa, 325, 11 Am. Rep. 125 (chattel); Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378 (real estate); Judge v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 521 (chattel).

The court in Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. supra, said: "It has long been settled in this commonwealth that, as to all the ard form and placed $100 on the stock of barber shop supplies and $400 on the furniture and fixtures while contained in the shop. The policy contained the usual provisions that it should be void "if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, . . . or if the subject of insurance be personal property and be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage." Soon after the policy was issued, Criscitiello demanded payment of the balance due him, and the plaintiff borrowed $150 for that purpose from another brother-in-law, Copozzi, upon a similar agreement to secure the lender by a bill of sale of the property, and for that purpose caused Criscitiello to execute a bill of sale to Copozzi. Neither Criscitiello nor Copozzi took possession of any part of the property covered by the bills of sale, but the plaintiff remained in exclusive possession thereof until March 17, 1913, when all the stock and fixtures in the shop, being then of the value of $766, were destroyed by fire. The bills of sale were recorded in the town clerk's office of the town of Waterbury.

Mr. William J. McKenna for appellant.

world except the mortgagee, a mortgagor is the owner of the mortgaged lands; at least till the mortgagee has entered for possession. . . . This being the law, and the mortgagees not being in possession of the premises, the plaintiff's assignor might well be described in a policy of insurance as the owner of the property insured; and, inasmuch as his estate was in fee simple, not an estate for life, and not a base, qualified, or conditional fee, it might well be described as the entire and unconditional ownership; and, as he had no joint tenant nor tenant in common, his estate was well described as the sole ownership. As between him and the defendant, the mortgages and the lease were mere encumbrances on his title, not affecting its character as entire, and not changing it from an absolute to a conditional estate or ownership. Even as between him and the mortgagees, the mortgagees' estate was the conditional one, determinable by satisfaction of the condition set out in the mortgage deed. There was no joint tenancy or tenancy in common of the mortgagor and the mortgagees."

And a like result was reached in the following cases where the mortgages apparently created only a lien upon the insured property: Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 101 Ky. 12, 39 S. W. 434 (chattel); McClelland v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 107 La. 124, 31 So. 691 (chattel); Standard Leather Co. v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co. 131 Mo. App. 701, 111 S. W. 631 (real estate); Hare v. Headley, 54 N. J. Eq. 545, 35 Atl. 445 (real estate); Woodward v. Re-

Mr. John H. Cassidy, for appellee:

Plaintiff's interest in the insured property was that of unconditional and sole ownership.

Hough v. City F. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581; Security Ins. Co. v. Kuhn, 207 Ill. 166, 69 N. E. 822; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668; Dupreau v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 615, 5 L.R.A. 671, 43 N. W. 585; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Keating, 86 Md. 130, 63 Am. St. Rep. 499, 38 Atl. 29; Kronk v. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 300; Miller v. Alliance Ins. Co. 19 Blatchf. 308, 7 Fed. 649; Sprigg v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 101 Ky. 185, 40 S. W. 575; Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L.R.A. 598, 26 N. E. 877; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Rhea, 60 C. C. A. 103, 123 Fed. 9; Clay F. & M. Stock Ins. Co. v. Beck, 43 Md. 358; Friezen v. Allemania F. Ins. Co. 30 Fed. 352; Forward v. Continental Ins. Co. 142 N. Y. 382, 25 L.R.A. 637, 37 N. E. 615; Horton v. Doolittle, 32 Conn. 405; State v. Hurlburt, 82 Conn. 235, 72 Atl. 1079; Sinclair, Scott Co. v. Miller, 80 Conn. 303; 68 Atl. 257; Morin v. Newbury, 79 Conn. 338, 65 Atl. 156.

To effect a breach of condition against encumbrances, the mortgage must be both public F. Ins. Co. 32 Hun, 365 (real estate, but see infra, as to this case); Huff v. Jewett, 20 Misc. 35, 44 N. Y. Supp. 311 (real estate); Omaha F. Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 50 Neb. 580, 70 N. W. 30 (chattel); Kronk v. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 300 (bill of sale of chattels); Burlington F. Ins. Co. v. Coffman, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 439, 35 S. W. 406 (real estate); Alamo F. Ins. Co. v. Lancaster, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 677, 28 S. W. 126 (real estate); Friezen v. Allemania F. Ins. Co. 30 Fed. 352 (chattel); Union Assur. Soc. v. Nalls, 101 Va. 613, 99 Am. St. Rep. 923, 44 S. E. 896 (chattel); Western Assur. Co. v. Temple, 31 Can. S. C. 373 (real estate). See also the decision in PETELLO v. TRUTONIA F. INS. CO.

In Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 101 Ky. 12, 39 S. W. 434, the court said: "It is insisted, first, that this mortgage affected the ownership of the property, and the appellees, on account of it, were not its sole and unconditional owners. This is not now the law. When the legal title was regarded as in the mortgagee there might have been some reason for the contention that the mortgagor was not the sole and unconditional owner; but even then the mortgagor was the owner in fact, and the title was in the mortgagee only as a fiction, to the end that he might foreclose. Now the legal title is held to be in the mortgagor, and he is truly the sole and unconditional owner. And such must have been the intent of the draftsman of the policy, for if by the words, 'sole and unconditional owner' the rights of mortgagors valid and operative as an encumbrance. It must be technically a mortgage.

Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut. F. Asso. 103 Iowa, 276, 68 N. W. 710, 72 N. W. 530; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Wicker, 93 Tex. 390, 55 S. W. 740; Watertown F. Ins. Co. v. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. 41 Mich. 131, 32 Am. Rep. 146, 1 N. W. 961; Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. 90 Me. 333, 38 Atl. 324; Morin v. Newbury, 79 Conn. 338, 65 Atl. 156; Patchin v. Rowell, 86 Conn. 372, 85 Atl. 511; State v. Hurlburt, 82 Conn. 235, 72 Atl. 1079; Sinclair, Scott Co. v. Miller, 80 Conn. 303, 68 Atl. 257; Kronk v. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 300; Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 47 C. C. A. 459, 108 Fed. 497; Caplis v. American F. Ins. Co. 60 Minn. 376, 62 N. W. 440.

and mortgagees were intended to be affected, the additional words 'if the property be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage,' would have been wholly useless."

The view has been taken in some cases that a clause providing that "if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership" the policy shall be void refers to the interest, and not to the title of the insured, and that the existence of a mortgage does not violate such provision. Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 12 App. D. C. 245, 40 L.R.A. 358 (chattel); Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Conowingo Bridge Co. 113 Md. 430, 77 Atl. 378 (real estate); Clay F. & M. Stock Ins. Co. v. Beck, 43 Md. 358 (real estate); Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Weaver, 70 Md. 536, 5 L.R.A. 478, 17 Atl. 401, 18 Atl. 1034 (chattel); Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rocefer Bros. 92 Va. 747, 53 Am. St. Rep. 848, 24 S. E. 393 (chattel); Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364 (real estate); Wolpert v. Northern Assur. Co. 44 W. Va. 734, 29 S. E. 1024 (chattel); Teter v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. — W. Va. —, 82 S. E. 40 (real estate).

The court in Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364, said: "The question then in this case turns upon the construction to be given to the condition in the policy above quoted. Can that be construed to be a warranty on the part of the assured that there was no encumbrance on the property insured? This condition does not refer to the legal title, but to the interest of the assured in the property; that he warranted to be no 'other than the entire unconditional and sole ownership of the property.' This was no warranty against liens and encumbrances. His interest was the sole ownership. The fact that he had mortgaged the property did not make the mortgagee a joint owner with him. The fact that he may have encumbered it with a deed of trust does not make the cestui que trust a joint owner. The fact that there may have been liens for taxes, or liens by judgment, did not affect his ownership. He is still the sole owner, though he may have encumbered it, or liens

Mr. Francis J. Hogan also for appellee.

Beach, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first assignment of error raises the question whether the bills of sale given under the circumstances stated in the finding avoid the policy as a breach of the condition that the interest of the insured should be that of sole and unconditional ownership.

As between the parties, the transaction was one to which a court of equity might give the effect of a mortgage, although the bill of sale was absolute in form. It could have no other effect. Morin v. Newbury, 79 Conn. 340, 65 Atl. 156; Lovell v. Hammond Co. 66 Conn. 500, 510, 34 Atl. 511.

may exist against it, and the existence of such is no breach of a condition declaring sole ownership."

In Ellis v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 32 Fed. 646, a policy on realty containing a provision that it should be void if the insured was not the sole, absolute, and unconditional owner was claimed to be avoided by reason of an existing mortgage; but it was held that the provision referred not to the matter of encumbrances, but to the character and quality of the title, whether that of a fee simple or leasehold, etc., and that the policy was therefore not vitiated by reason of the existing mortgage.

And in American Artistic Gold Stamping Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 1 Misc. 114, 20 N. Y. Supp. 646, it was held that the fact that a chattel mortgage existed on the insured property did not violate a condition as to sole and unconditional ownership, the court holding that this provision had reference only to the quality of the insured's title, not to liens and encumbrances on the property.

But in Woodward v. Republic F. Ins. Co. 32 Hun, 365, there was held to be a breach of the condition against sole, entire, and unconditional ownership as to certain personal property on which a chattel mortgage existed, the court holding that the effect of a chattel mortgage was to convey the title to the mortgagee so that the mortgagor's interest was that of an equity of redemption, and nothing more.

The position has been taken by the United States Supreme Court that the intention of the insurer in inserting a provision for the unconditional and sole ownership was to protect itself against all conditional transfers.

Thus, in Hunt v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 196 U. S. 47, 49 L. ed. 381, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179, a condition for the unconditional and sole ownership of the insured property and for the nonexistence of any chattel mortgage thereon was held to be broken where certain trust deeds of the property had been executed to secure payment of money, the legal effect of which was practically the same as a chattel mort-

It is generally held that outstanding mortgages and liens do not constitute a breach of a condition in a fire insurance policy that the interest of the insured is that of sole and unconditional ownership. Cooley speaks of this as the well-settled rule, and it seems to be followed, not only in states where the effect of a mortgage is merely to create a lien, but also in states where the mortgage is treated as a conveyance of the title. 2 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 1378; 19 Cyc. 694; Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co. 43 N. J. L. 300, 39 Am. Rep. 584; Hare v. Headley, 64 N. J. Eq. 545, 35 Atl. 445; Clay F. & M. Stock Ins. Co. v. Beck, 43 Md. 358; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Weaver, 70 Md. 536, 5 L.R.A. 478, 17 Atl. 401, 18 Atl. 1034; Wolf v. Theresa Village

Mut. F. Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 402, 91 N. W. 1014; Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378; Union Assur. Soc. v. Nalla, 101 Va. 613, 99 Am. St. Rep. 923, 44 S. E. 896; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Public Parks Amusement Co. 63 Ark. 187, 37 S. W. 959; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Enoch, 72 Ark. 47, 77 S. W. 899. The same rule is applied to a vendor's lien on land not wholly paid for. Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Pitts, 88 Miss. 587, 41 So. 5, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627, 117 Am. St. Rep. 756, 9 Ann. Cas. 54, and cases cited in note.

The defendant has pointed out but one case in which this condition that the interest of the insured should be that of sole and unconditional ownership has been held to be broken solely because the interest of the insured was other than unconditional and sole ownership, the policy was held to be avoided because of the existence of two mortgages, one of which was executed before and one after the issuance of the policy. The decision in the case, however, apparently rested principally upon a provision against concealment and a change of interest.

In the abstract in Home Ins. Co. v. Allen, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 95, it is stated that where a policy provides "that if the interest of the assured in the property be other than the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership thereof for the use and benefit of the assured, the policy shall be void," a lien upon the property created by the voluntary act of the parties will invalidate the policy. The nature of the encumbrance under consideration does not appear.

In United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Kukral, 7 Ohio C. C. 356, 4 Ohio C. D. 633, the trial court refused to charge that if the insured property was encumbered by a mortgage at the time the policy was issued the interest of the insured was not the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership within the requirement of the policy, and it was held that although there might have been a mortgage on the property, and in that sense the ownership might not have been entire, unconditional, and sole, yet the insured might be entitled to recover under § 3643, Rev. Stat. (the terms of which do not appear), unless there was fraud on his part.

In Hawley v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 102 Cal. 651, the insured was held not precluded from recovering on a policy containing a condition that it should be void if the interest of the insured in the property was other than that of sole and unconditional ownership where she stated in her application that the insured property was encumbered, although the mortgagee, being unable to reach the mortgagor, brought a suit to prevent his mortgage from outlawing, but subsequently withdrew it and canceled the mortgage and took a deed from the insured which the evidence showed was intended as a mortgage.

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Barker, 6 Colo. App. 535, 41 Pac. 513, where the policy contained a provision among others that it should be void if the interest of the insured was other than unconditional and sole ownership, the policy was held to be avoided because of the existence of two mortgages, one of which was executed before and one after the issuance of the policy. The decision in the case, however, apparently rested principally upon a provision against concealment and a change of interest.

In the abstract in Home Ins. Co. v. Allen, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 95, it is stated that where a policy provides "that if the interest of the assured in the property be other than the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership thereof for the use and benefit of the assured, the policy shall be void," a lien upon the property created by the voluntary act of the parties will invalidate the policy. The nature of the encumbrance under consideration does not appear.

In United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Kukral, 7 Ohio C. C. 356, 4 Ohio C. D. 633, the trial court refused to charge that if the insured property was encumbered by a mortgage at the time the policy was issued the interest of the insured was not the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership within the requirement of the policy, and it was held that although there might have been a mortgage on the property, and in that sense the ownership might not have been entire, unconditional, and sole, yet the insured might be entitled to recover under § 3643, Rev. Stat. (the terms of which do not appear), unless there was fraud on his part.

In Hawley v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 102 Cal. 651, the insured was held not precluded from recovering on a policy containing a condition that it should be void if the interest of the insured in the property was other than that of sole and unconditional ownership where she stated in her application that the insured property was encumbered, although the mortgagee, being unable to reach the mortgagor, brought a suit to prevent his mortgage from outlawing, but subsequently withdrew it and canceled the mortgage and took a deed from the insured which the evidence showed was intended as a mortgage.

J. T. W.

the insured was that of a mortgagor in possession. With that exception the cases relied on are either cases where the interest of the insured was that of a conditional vendee, or cases where the policy was avoided for the breach of some other condition. In Williamson v. Orient Ins. Co. 100 Ga. 791, 28 S. E. 914; Orient Ins. Co. v. Williamson, 98 Ga. 464, 25 S. E. 560, a distinction was drawn between an ordinary mortgage, which, under the state Code, created merely a lien on the property, and an absolute conveyance of title intended as a security; the latter being held to avoid the policy as a breach of the condition. We think, however, that this distinction is not well taken, for, as pointed out in Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668, the parties might have contracted with reference to the state of the title, but preferred to use the word "interest;" and so the condition is to be understood as referring to actual or equitable ownership, and not as requiring the insured to hold an absolute legal title. In accordance with this view, it is generally held that one in possession of real estate under an obligatory contract to buy, who has not paid in full, and therefore has not yet become the legal owner, is nevertheless a sole and unconditional owner within the meaning of the standard form of policy. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, and note (21 Okla. 873, 129 Am. St. Rep. 808, 98 Pac. 552).

The rule appears to be otherwise in the case of conditional vendees of personal property bought on the instalment plan when the title remains in the seller. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, supra; Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 12 App. D. C. 245, 40 L.R.A. 358; Dow v. National Ins. Co. 26 R. I. 379, 67 L.R.A. 479, 106 Am. St. Rep. 728, 58 Atl. 999; Lasher v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 423; McWilliams v. Cascade F. & M. Ins. Co. 7 Wash. 48, 34 Pac. 140.

So far as the authorities attempt to lay down any general rule, it is that if the interest of the insured is conditional or contingent, or if it is for years only or for life, or in common, it is not that of sole and unconditional ownership; but where the entire loss, if the property is destroyed by fire, must fall upon the party insured, the reason and purpose of this provision does not seem to exist.

We find but one case exactly in point. In that case, as in this, a bill of sale had been given, absolute in form, but really intended to secure the lender for the loan of the purchase money with which the property was bought, and it was held, assuming that the bill of sale was delivered before the policy was issued, that the latter was not void under the condition as to sole and unconditional ownership. Kronk v. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 300.

The second assignment of error raises the question whether the policy was avoided for a breach of the condition that the property should not be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage. The term "chattel mortgage" is a term of art, and is to be construed, as it was doubtless intended to be understood, as referred to that particular kind of an encumbrance having the known legal effect of a chattel mortgage. The delivery and record of a bill of sale absolute in form, but intended as security, without change of possession, does not have the legal effect of a chattel mortgage. As was said in Morin v. Newbury, 79 Conn. 340, 65 Atl. 156, of such a transaction: "The instrument is neither in form nor name a mortgage. It is not one to which the law attaches any peculiar virtue when recorded. It had no place upon the records and could serve no legal purpose there. Its execution and delivery accomplished nothing, aside from its value as proof, which a parol agreement would not."

If the insurance company intended that the policy should be avoided in case the property was subjected to any kind of a lien which a court of equity might enforce, the language used is not appropriate to that end. Having regard to the rule that provisions for forfeitures contained in insurance policies are to be construed with reasonable strictness in favor of the insured, we think that these bills of sale, given under the circumstances stated in the finding, are not chattel mortgages within the meaning of the policy. Morin v. Newbury, 79 Conn. 338, 65 Atl. 156; State v. Hurlburt, 82 Conn. 232, 236, 72 Atl. 1079; Rowland v. Home Ins. Co. 82 Kan. 220, 136 Am. St. Rep. 104, 108 Pac. 118; Humboldt F. Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co. 107 C. C. A. 274, 185 Fed. 54; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Fleenor, 104 Ark. 119, 148 S. W. 650; Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Batson, 111 Ark. 167, 163 S. W. 510.

The other assignments of error are dependent on the conclusions already stated, and do not require separate discussion.

There is no error.

In this opinion the other judges concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

LEO M. FRANK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF GEORGIA.

(142 Ga. 741, 83 S. E. 645.)

Constitutional law — due process — criminal trial.

1. Due process of law implies the administration of laws which apply equally to all persons according to established rules, and which are "not violative of the fundamental principles of private right, by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the case and proceeding upon notice and hearing."

(a) Consequently, where one indicted for murder has had full opportunity under the Constitution and laws of the state to defend his case in the courts of the state having jurisdiction thereof, in person, by attorney, or both, according to established constitutional rules of procedure, he has been afforded due process of law under the state and Federal Constitutions, which provide that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

(b) Where such opportunity has been, under constitutional laws of the state, afforded without discrimination, he has been accorded the equal protection of the laws. Same — verdict in absence of defendant — waiver.

2. If, on the trial of one indicted for murder, a verdict of guilty is received in the absence of the prisoner, and without his consent, while he is incarcerated in jail, a motion for new trial is an available remedy in such case, if made in time.

(a) But where a motion for a new trial is made by the defendant, with knowledge of the fact that the verdict was rendered in his absence, and such motion does not contain that fact as ground for a new trial, though it is recited therein, it is too late, after the motion for new trial has been denied, and the judgment has been affirmed by this court, to make a motion to set aside the verdict on that ground.

Criminal law — right to be present — waiver.

3. It is the right of a defendant, on trial for crime in this state, to be present at every stage of his trial, and to be tried according to established procedure. But he may waive formal trial and verdict, and plead guilty, and this includes the power to waive mere incidents of trial, such as his presence at the reception of the verdict.

(a) Accordingly, where, on the trial of one accused of murder, the counsel for the accused, at the suggestion of the trial

Headnotes by HILL, J.

Note. — Waiver of presence of accused at time of receiving verdict upon trial for felony.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to State v. Way, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 603, and that to State v. Gorman, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 306.

In Davidson v. State, 108 Ark. 191, 158 S. W. 1103, it was held that the accused in a capital case had the right to waive his personal presence at the time of receiving the verdict, and that where his presence had been duly waived a judgment against him should not be reversed on account of his absence with his own consent, unless it appeared that he was prejudiced in some way by such absence. In this case, upon consultation between the attorneys for the defendant and the court, in the absence of both the defendant and the prosecuting attorney, at the request of the attorneys for the defendant, and upon the specific understanding that the agreement be reduced to writing, waiving the presence of the defendant, if a verdict was returned in his absence, the court and the attorneys for the defendant believing that there was danger of a mob, and such action being in the interest of the defendant, the defendant was conveyed to a jail in another county. The waiver was prepared and signed by the attorneys and other counsel in the case. The court states that in this case it did no more than grant the request conveyed to it through defendant's counsel, that he be removed from the court and from the county for his own safety from threatened mob violence. That if he and his counsel conceived it to be necessary for his own safety that he should be absent from the county during the further progress of the trial, he cannot thereafter complain that the verdict was rendered in his absence. It was urged that the defendant did not waive his presence, and the counsel could not waive it for him; but there was a finding to the effect that he did authorize his counsel to take this step, and this finding was held justified under the circumstances of the case, and was not disturbed.

The further question involved in FRANK v. STATE, that the accused in a felony case, who was not present at the reception of the verdict, who does not take advantage of this fact upon his motion for a new trial, cannot thereafter take advantage of the same, was considered upon an appeal to the United States Supreme Court from a decree of the Federal district court denying a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of Frank, 237 U. S. 309, 59 L. ed. —, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582. That court held that there was no denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the United States Constitution in the practice established in the criminal courts of Georgia that the accused may waive his right to be present when the jury renders its verdict, and that such waiver may be given after as well as before the event, and is to be inferred from the making of a motion for a new trial upon other grounds alone when the facts respecting the reception of the verdict are within the prisoner's knowledge at the time of making such motion. W. A. E.

judge, waived the presence of the defendant at the reception of the verdict, without his knowledge or consent, and where the verdict was received and the jury polled by the court when the defendant was not present, but was confined in jail, and the defendant's counsel was also absent, and where it appears that, when the defendant was sentenced to suffer death, he was present in court in person and by attorneys, and later, within the time allowed by law, he made a motion for a new trial, which recited, among other things, his absence at the reception of the verdict, and that his presence had been waived by his counsel, and his motion for a new trial was refused by the trial court, and its judgment affirmed by the supreme court, the defendant will be considered as having acquiesced in the waiver, made by his counsel, of his presence at the reception of the verdict, and he cannot at a subsequent date set up such absence as a ground to set aside the verdict in a motion made for that purpose.

Appeal — disorder at trial — motion for new trial.

4. In so far as the motion to set aside the verdict relies on allegations of disorder within and without the court room, and popular excitement as affecting the trial, such matters peculiarly furnish grounds to be included in a motion for a new trial, under the practice in this state. In fact, contentions as to matter of that character were included in the original motion for a new trial, and on examination as to the facts were ruled against the movant, and the judgment was affirmed by this court.

(November 14, 1914.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment dismissing a motion to set aside a verdict convicting defendant of murder. Affirmed.

Statement by HIN, J.:

Leo M. Frank filed his motion in writing, which was afterwards amended, to set aside the verdict of guilty of murder rendered against him in the superior court of Fulton county. To this motion the state of Georgia interposed its demurrer, both general and special. On the hearing of the demurrer, and at the conclusion thereof, judgment was rendered by the court on June 6, 1914, sustaining the demurrer upon each and every ground, and dismissing the motion. To this judgment Leo M. Frank excepts, and assigns the same as error. From the motion it appears that the verdict of guilty of murder was received by the court on August 25, 1913, and it was sought to be set aside for the following reasons:

At the time the verdict was received, and the jury trying the cause was discharged, the defendant was in the custody of the law and incarcerated in the common jail of the L.R.A.1915D.

county. He was not present when the verdict was received and the jury discharged, as he had the right in law to be, and as the law required he should be. He did not waive the right to be present, nor did he authorize anyone to waive it for him, nor consent that he should not be present. He did not know that the verdict had been rendered and the jury discharged until after the reception of the verdict and the discharge of the jury, and did not know of any waiver of his presence made by his counsel until after sentence of death had been pronounced upon him. On the day the verdict was rendered, and shortly before the judge who presided at the trial of the cause began his charge to the jury, the judge, in the jury room of the courthouse wherein the trial was proceeding, privately conversed with two of the counsel of the defendant, and in the conversation referred to the probable danger of violence that the defendant would be in if he were present when the verdict was rendered, if the verdict should be one of acquittal; and after the judge had thus expressed himself he requested the counsel, thus spoken to, to agree that the defendant need not be present at the time the verdict was rendered and the jury was polled. In these circumstances the counsel did agree with the judge that the defendant should not be present at the rendition of the verdict. In the same conversation the judge expressed the opinion also to the counsel that even counsel of the defendant might be in danger if they should be present at the reception of the verdict. In these circumstances defendant's counsel, Rosser and Arnold, did agree with the judge that defendant should not be present at the rendition of the verdict. The defendant was not present at the conversation, and knew nothing about any agreement made, as above stated, until after the verdict was received and the jury was discharged, and until after sentence of death was pronounced upon him. Pursuant to the conversation above stated, neither of defendant's counsel were present when the verdict was received and the jury discharged; nor was the defendant present when the verdict was rendered and the jury discharged. Defendant says that he did not give counsel, nor anyone else, any authority to waive or renounce the right of the defendant to be present at the reception of the verdict, or to agree that the defendant should not be present thereat; that the relation of client and attorney did not give them such authority, though counsel acted in the most perfect good faith and in the interest of the personal safety of the defendant. Defendant did not agree that his counsel, or either of them, might be absent when the verdict was rendered.

Defendant says, upon and because of each of the grounds above stated: The verdict was of no legal effect and was void, and in violation of article 1, § 1, ¶ 3, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law." That the reception of the verdict in the "involuntary absence of the defendant" was in violation of and contrary to the provisions of article 6, § 18, ¶ 1, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, which provides that "the right of trial by jury, except where it is otherwise provided in this Constitution, shall remain inviolate." That the reception of the verdict in the absence of the defendant was contrary to and in violation of the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to wit: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." That the reception of the verdict in the absence of the defendant was in violation of article 1, § 1, ¶ 5, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, to wit: "Every person charged with an offense against the laws of this state shall have the privilege and benefit of counsel." Because the trial judge (Hon. L. S. Roan), upon considering "the motion for a new trial made by this defendant, after the reception of said verdict as above stated, rendered his judgment denying said motion, and in rendering said judgment stated that the jury had found the defendant guilty, that he, the said judge, had thought about the cause more than any other he had ever tried, that he was not certain of the defendant's guilt, that with all the thought he had put on this case he was not thoroughly convinced that Frank was guilty or innocent, but that he did not have to be convinced, that the jury was convinced, that there was no room to doubt that, and that he felt it his duty to order that the motion for a new trial be overruled." That the judge, in denying to the defendant a new trial in the case, did not, as shown by his statement, give to the defendant the judicial determination of the motion to which the defendant was entitled by law. That the judge, being constituted by law as one of the priors, did not afford to the defendant the protection which the law guarantees, nor the due process of law.

It was further alleged that the defendant was denied the due process of law, and the equal protection of the laws, because the court room wherein his trial was had had a number of windows on the Pryor street side, looking out on the public street of Atlanta, and furnishing easy access to any noises that might occur upon the street; that there was an open alleyway running from Pryor street on the side of the court-house, and there were windows looking out from the courtroom into this alley, and therein that crowds collected, and any noises in this alley could be heard in the court room; that these crowds were boisterous, and that on the last day of the trial, after the case had been submitted to the jury, a large and boisterous crowd of several hundred people were standing in the street in front of the court house, and as the solicitor general came out they greeted him with loud and boisterous applause, taking him upon their shoulders and carrying him across the street into a building wherein his office was located; that this crowd did not wholly disperse during the interval between the giving of the case to the jury and the time when the jury reached its verdict; that several times during the trial the crowd in the court room, and outside of the court room, which was audible both to the court and the jury, would applaud when the state scored a point; a large crowd of people standing on the outside, cheering, shouting, and hurrahing, and the crowd in the court room signifying their feelings by applause and other demonstrations, and on the trial, and in the presence of the jury, the trial judge in open court conferred with the chief of police of the city of Atlanta and the colonel of the Fifth Georgia Regiment stationed in Atlanta, which had the natural effect of intimidating the jury, and so influencing them as to make impossible a fair and impartial consideration of defendant's case. Indeed, such demonstrations finally actuated the court in making the request of defendant's counsel, Messrs. Rosser and Arnold, to have the defendant and counsel themselves to be absent at the time the verdict was received in open court, because the judge apprehended violence to the defendant and his counsel; and the apprehension of such violence naturally saturated the minds of the jury, so as to deprive the defendant of a fair and impartial consideration of his case, which the Constitution of the United States, in the 14th Amendment hereinbefore referred to, entitled him to.

On Saturday, August 23, 1913, previous to the rendition of the verdict on August 25th, the entire public press of Atlanta appealed to the trial court to adjourn court from Saturday to Monday, owing to the great public excitement, and the court adjourned from Saturday, 12 o'clock M. to Monday morning, because it felt it unwise to continue the case that day, owing to the great public excitement, and on Monday morning the public excitement had not subsided, and was as intense as it was on Saturday previous. When it was announced that the jury had reached a verdict, the trial judge went to the court room and found it crowded with spectators, and, fearing violence in the court room, the trial judge cleared it of spectators, and the jury was brought in for the purpose of delivering their verdict. When the verdict of guilty was announced, a signal to that effect was given to the crowd on the outside. The large crowd of people standing on the outside cheered and shouted as the jury was beginning to be polled, and before more than one juror had been polled the noise was so loud and the confusion so great that the further polling of the jury had to be stopped, so as to restore order, and so great was the noise and confusion and cheering and confusion from without that it was difficult for the court to hear the responses of the jurors as they were being polled, though the court was only 10 feet distant from the jury. All of this occurred during the involuntary absence of the defendant, he being at the time confined in jail as above set forth.

The state of Georgia, responding to the motion to set aside the verdict, said by way of demurrer that the motion should be dismissed for the following reasons: (1) Because a motion to set aside a verdict or judgment of the court should be, under the law, predicated upon some defect appearing on the face of the pleadings or record, and the motion filed is not one predicated upon any defect appearing of the face of the pleadings or the record. (2) Because it affirmatively appears from the motion that the defendant, Leo M. Frank, made a motion for a new trial, which was denied by the court, and as a matter of law, if the verdict was rendered at a time when the defendant was not present in court, such irregularity should have been included among the grounds of the motion for a new trial; and as a matter of law is conclusively presumed to have been incorporated and embodied in the motion for new trial, which motion was heard and denied, as shown by the petition. (3) Because the motion shows a course of conduct on the part of the defendant which amounts to an estoppel, and that the motion and the record of the decision of the case of Leo M. Frank v. State, rendered by the supreme court of Georgia, affirmatively shows a course of conduct that amounts to and constitutes an estoppel. (4) Because the motion affirmatively discloses that counsel for the defendant agreed with the court that the defendant should not be present at the rendition of the verdict; that this agreement on the part of counsel was and is binding on the defendant, Leo M. Frank, and effectively constitutes a waiver. (5) Because the motion, in conjunction with the decision of the supreme court of Georgia in the case of Leo M. Frank v. State of Georgia, affirmatively shows that Frank, after a knowledge of this waiver on the part of his counsel, acquiesced in the same and took steps affirmatively indicating a waiver of such conduct on the part of his counsel. (6) Because the motion affirmatively shows that the jury returning the verdict were polled, and the presence of the defendant is necessary for himself mainly in order to exercise this right to poll the jury. (7) Because the motion and the decision of the supreme court of Georgia in the case above named affirmatively discloses that the verdict of guilty was received in open court and a poll of the jury demanded on behalf of the defendant, and that the poll of the jury was in conformity with every requirement of law.

Mr. Henry A. Alexander, with Messrs. Tye, Peoples, & Jordan, Herbert J. Haas, and Leonard Haas, for plaintiff in error:

In trials for capital felonies, the accused has an absolute right to be present in person at each and every stage. Such presence is essential to the validity of a verdict of guilty, and both he and his counsel are incapable, on grounds of public policy, of waiving the presence of the accused at any stage of the trial.

Wells v. Terrell, 121 Ga. 368, 49 S. E. 319; Bagwell v. State, 129 Ga. 170, 58 S. E. 650; Tiller v. State, 96 Ga. 430, 23 S. E. 825; Wade v. State, 12 Ga. 25; Hopson v. State, 116 Ga. 90, 42 S. E. 412; Martin v. State, 51 Ga. 567, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 536; Bonner v. State, 67 Ga. 510; Wilson v. State, 87 Ga. 583, 13 S. E. 566; Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 137; Barton v. State, 67 Ga. 653, 44 Am. Rep. 743; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417; Ball v. United States, 140 U. S. 118, 35 L. ed. 377, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 701; Schwab v. Berggren, 143 U. S. 442, 36 L. ed. 218, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525; Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 36 L. ed. 1011, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; State v. Hughes, 2 Ala. 102, 36 Am. Dec. 411; Eliza v. State, 39 Ala. 693; Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 332; Slocoovitch v. State, 46 Ala. 227; Cook v. State, 60 Ala. 39, 31 Am. Rep. 31, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 304; Wells v. State, 147 Ala. 140, 41 So. 630; Harris v. State, 153 Ala. 19, 49 So. 458; Sneed v. State, 5 Ark. 431, 41 Am. Dec. 102; Cole v. State, 10 Ark. 318; Sweden v. State, 19 Ark. 205; Warren v. State, 19 Ark. 214, 68 Am. Dec. 214; Brown v. State, 24 Ark. 620; Osborn

v. State, 24 Ark. 629; Gore v. State, 52 Ark. 285, 5 L.R.A. 832, 12 S. W. 564; People v. Kohler, 5 Cal. 72; People v. Ebner, 23 Cal. 159; People v. Beauchamp, 49 Cal. 41; People v. Higgins, 59 Cal. 357; Green v. People, 3 Colo. 68; Smith v. People, 8 Colo. 457, 8 Pac. 920, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 615; State v. Hurlb. t, 1 Root, 90; Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 500; Gladden v. State, 12 Fla. 562; Summeralls v. State, 37 Fla. 162, 53 Am. St. Rep. 247, 21 So. 242; Holliday v. People, 9 Ill. 111; Harris v. People, 130 Ill. 457, 22 N. E. 826; State v. Hutchinson, 95 Iowa, 566, 64 N. W. 610; State v. Myrick, 38 Kan. 238, 16 Pac. 330; Temple v. Com. 14 Bush, 769, 29 Am. Rep. 442; State v. Ford, 30 La. Ann. 311; State v. Bradley, 30 La. Ann. 326; State v. Christian, 30 La. Ann. 367; State v. Thomas, 128 La. 813, 55 So. 415; Com. v. Tobin, 125 Mass. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 220; State v. Reckards, 21 Minn. 47; Scaggs v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 722; Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195; Stubbs v. State, 49 Miss. 716, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 608; Finch v. State, 53 Miss. 363; Sherrod v. State, 93 Miss. 774, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 509, 47 So. 554; Warfield v. State, 96 Miss. 170, 50 So. 561; McLendon v. State, 96 Miss. 250, 50 So. 864; Stanley v. State, 97 Miss. 860, 53 So. 497; Corbin v. State, 99 Miss. 486, 55 So. 43; State v. Buckner, 25 Mo. 172; State v. Cross, 27 Mo. 332; State v. Braunschweig, 36 Mo. 397; State v. Davis, 66 Mo. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 387; State v. Smith, 90 Mo. 37, 59 Am. Rep. 4; 1 S. W. 753; Burley v. State, 1 Neb. 385; State v. Peacock, 50 N. J. L. 34, 11 Atl. 210; People v. Perkins, 1 Wend. 91; Maurer v. People, 43 N. Y. 1; State v. Blackwelder, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 38; State v. Bray, 67 N. C. 283; State v. Jenkins, 84 N. C. 812, 37 Am. Rep. 643; State v. Paylor, 89 N. C. 539; State v. Kelly, 97 N. C. 404, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299, 2 S. E. 185; State v. Cherry, 154 N. C. 624, 70 S. E. 295; Wilson v. State, 2 Ohio St. 319; Sargent v. State, 11 Ohio, 472; Rose v. State, 20 Ohio, 31; Day v. Territory, 2 Okla. 409, 37 Pac. 806; Le Roy v. Territory, 3 Okla. 596, 41 Pac. 612; Humphrey v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 504, 139 Am. St. Rep. 972, 106 Pac. 978; Dunn v. Com. 6 Pa. 384; Prine v. Com. 18 Pa. 103; Dougherty v. Com. 69 Pa. 286; State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 42 Am. St. Rep. 877, 18 S. E. 1021; State v. France, 1 Overt. 434; Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed, 550; Clark v. State, 4 Humph. 254; Hutchinson v. State, 3 Coldw. 95; Stewart v. State, 7 Coldw. 338; Percer v. State, 118 Tenn. 765, 103 S. W. 730; Shipp v. State, 11 Tex. App. 46; Massey v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 371, 20 S. W. 758; Hill v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 646, 114 S. W. 117; Derden v. L.R.A.1915D.

State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 396, 133 Am. St. Rep. 986, 120 S. W. 485; Sperry v. Com. 9 Leigh, 623, 33 Am. Dec. 261; Hooker v. Com. 13 Gratt. 763; Jackson v. Com. 19 Gratt. 656; State v. Greer, 22 W. Va. 800; State v. Stevenson, 64 W. Va. 392, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 713, 62 S. E. 688; State v. Sutter, 71 W. Va. 371, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 399, 76 S. E. 811; French v. State, 85 Wis. 400, 21 L.R.A. 402, 39 Am. St. Rep. 855, 55 N. W. 566, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 348; Co. Litt. 227b; 2 Hale, P. C. 300; Rex v. Ladsingham, T. Raym. 193; 4 Bl. Com. 360; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 636; Bacon, Abr. title "Verdict" p. 308; 2 Barbour, Crim. Law, 365; Archbold, Crim. Pl. & Ev. 23d ed. p. 186; Abbott, Trial Brief, Criminal Causes, 2d ed. 718; Hughes, Crim. Law, § 3370; Clark, Criminal Proc. p. 423; Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. 8th ed. § 741; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 271(2); Diaz v. United States, 223 U. S. 442, 56 L. ed. 500, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1138; Stoddard v. State, 132 Wis. 520, 112 N. W. 453, 13 Ann. Cas. 1211; State v. Gorman, 113 Minn. 401, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 306, 129 N. W. 589; State v. Waymire, 52 Or. 281, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 56, 132 Am. St. Rep. 699, 97 Pac. 46; State v. Way, 76 Kan. 928, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 603, 93 Pac. 159; Gore v. State, 52 Ark. 285, 5 L.R.A. 832, 12 S. W. 564; Humphrey v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 504, 139 Am. St. Rep. 972, 106 Pac. 978; 22 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 927.

Messrs. E. A. Stephens and Hugh M. Dorsey, for the State:

The doctrine of waiver and ratification is recognized and applied in criminal cases.

Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897; Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 137, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 532; Smith v. State, 59 Ga. 514, 27 Am. Rep. 393; Martin v. State, 51 Ga. 567, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 536; Wilson v. State, 87 Ga. 583, 13 S. E. 566; Wade v. State, 12 Ga. 25; Tiller v. State, 96 Ga. 430, 23 S. E. 825; Miller v. State, 13 Ga. App. 440, 79 S. E. 232; Richards v. State, 136 Ga. 67, 70 S. E. 868; Bagwell v. State, 129 Ga. 170, 58 S. E. 650; Baldwin v. State, 138 Ga. 349, 75 S. E. 324; Barton v. State, 67 Ga. 653, 44 Am. Rep. 743; Bonner v. State, 67 Ga. 510; Ezzard v. State, 11 Ga. App. 30, 74 S. E. 551; Mithum v. State, 11 Ga. 630; Durham v. State, 70 Ga. 264; Hoyer v. State, 39 Ga. 719; Lyons v. State, 7 Ga. App. 50, 66 S. E. 149; Wiggins v. Tyson, 112 Ga. 750, 38 S. E. 86; Fannin v. Durdin, 54 Ga. 476; Schumpert v. State, 9 Ga. App. 553, 71 S. E. 879; Hill v. State, 118 Ga. 24, 44 S. E. 820; Daniels v. Towers, 79 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 120; Dean v. State, 43 Ga. 218; 22 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 929; Rhodes v.

State, 122 Ga. 508, 50 S. E. 361; Smith v. State, 81 Ga. 480, 8 S. E. 187.

Mr. Warren Grice, Attorney General, also for the State:

The voluntary absence of the accused at the time the verdict is received will not vitiate the verdict.

Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897; Barton v. State, 67 Ga. 653, 44 Am. Rep. 743; Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 167, 9 S. E. 610.

Counsel for accused had the right to make an express waiver of his presence.

Tiller v. State, 96 Ga. 430, 23 S. E. 825; Hill v. State, 118 Ga. 21, 44 S. E. 820; Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897.

Waiver by the attorney is binding on the client.

Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 630; Sarah v. State, 28 Ga. 576; 4 Cyc. 939, 940.

HILL, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Did the absence of the defendant, under the foregoing statement of facts, at the time that the verdict finding him guilty of murder was received by the court and the jury trying him was discharged, render the verdict void and of no legal effect? It is insisted by the defendant that the reception of the verdict in his involuntary absence, while he was confined in jail, was in violation of the due process clauses of the state and Federal Constitutions, and that it denied him the equal protection of the laws. "Due process of law, as the meaning of the words has been developed in American decisions, implies the administration of equal laws according to established rules, not violative of the fundamental principles of private right, by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the case and proceeding upon notice and hearing. The phrase is and has long been exactly equivalent to and convertible with the older expression 'the law of the land.' The basis of due process, orderly proceedings and an opportunity to defend, must be inherent in every body of law or custom as soon as it advances beyond the stage of uncontrolled vengeance." McGehee, Due Process of Law, 1 citing Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

On page 35, this same author says: "Before the passage of the 14th Amendment the security of the citizens of the several states for due process of law in proceedings by the state lay in its institutions alone. Even if due process was denied, the Federal government had no right to interfere. The 14th Amendment changed this condition of affairs. It made it a matter of national concern that the state should not deny due process [of law] to its citizens and to others. L.R.A.1915D.

It gave to the United States the right to supervise the performance of this duty, and transferred from the state to the Federal Supreme Court the ultimate decision on the question of the presence of due process in all proceedings affecting life, liberty, and property. But under the amendment the authority of the Federal court is merely to determine whether the state, by some official action, has provided due process or has failed in that duty; and if a denial of due process appears, it can only pronounce the proceedings void. The power of the Federal government ordinarily ends with that act. Thus the primary duty of providing for the protection of life, liberty, and property by due process of law rests still with the states, and the 14th Amendment operates merely as a guaranty addition to the state Constitutions against encroachments on the part of the state upon fundamental rights, which their governments were created to secure. It did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and Federal governments to each other and of both governments to the people." See United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436-438, 34 L. ed. 519, 521, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930. "The Federal Supreme Court has again and again declared that, when the highest court of a state has acted within its jurisdiction and in accordance with its construction of the state Constitution and laws, very exceptional circumstances will be necessary in order that the Federal Supreme Court may feel justified in saying that there has been a failure of due process of law. 'We might ourselves have pursued a different course, but that is not the test. The plaintiff in error must have been deprived of one of those fundamental rights, the observance of which is indispensable to the liberty of the citizen, to justify our interference.' For especially in cases involving procedure is it true that 'due process of law means law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice.'" McGehee, Due Process of Law, 167, citing Allen v. Georgia, 166 U. S. 138, 41 L. ed. 949, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, which case is cited and approved in Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 595, 42 L. ed. 865, 871, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

In Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 50 L. ed. 899, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560, 5 Ann. Cas. 783, it was contended that, because many lawyers, preachers, doctors, engineers, firemen, and dentists were excluded from jury service in Georgia, by the jury commissioners failing and refusing to put any of the names of the classes excluded in the jury box, the defendant had rights under the 14th Amendment. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Mr. Justice Holmes said: "At the argument before us the not uncommon misconception seemed to prevail that the requirement of due process of law took up the special provisions of the state Constitution and laws into the 14th Amendment for the purposes of the case, so that this court would revise the decision of the state court that the local provisions had been complied with. This is a mistake. If the state Constitution and laws as construed by the state court are consistent with the 14th Amendment, we can go no further. The only question for us is whether a state could authorize the course of proceedings adopted, if that course were prescribed by its Constitution in express terms."

In the case of Garland v. Washington, 232 U. S. 642, 58 L. ed. 772, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456, it was held that "a conviction upon a second and amended information, after a prior conviction under the original information had been set aside and a new trial granted, was not wanting in the due process of law guaranteed by U. S. Const. 14th Amend. because no arraignment or plea was had upon the second information, where, without raising that specific objection before trial, the accused had made certain objections to such information, and was put to a trial thereon before a jury in all respects as though he had entered a formal plea of not guilty."

In delivering the opinion of the court (which was unanimous), Mr. Justice Day said in part: "Due process of law, this court has held, does not require the state to adopt any particular form of procedure, so long as it appears that the accused has had sufficient notice of the accusation and an adequate opportunity to defend himself in the prosecution. Rogers v. Peck, 199 U. S. 425, 435, 50 L. ed. 256, 260, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87, 90, and previous cases in this court there cited. Tried by this test, it cannot for a moment be maintained that the want of formal arraignment deprived the accused of any substantial right, or in any wise changed the course of trial to his disadvantage. All requirements of due process of law in criminal trials in a state, as laid down in the repeated decisions of this court, were fully met by the proceedings had against the accused in the trial court. . . . Technical objections of this character were undoubtedly given much more weight formerly than they are now. Such rulings originated in that period of English history when the accused was entitled to few rights in the presentation of his defense, when he could not be represented by counsel, nor heard upon his own oath, and when the punishment of offenses, even of a L.R.A.1915D.

trivial character, was of a severe, and often of a shocking, nature. Under that system the courts were disposed to require that the technical forms and methods of procedure should be fully complied with. But with improved methods of procedure and greater privileges to the accused, any reason for such strict adherence to the mere formalities of trial would seem to have passed away, and we think that the better opinion, when applied to a situation such as now confronts us, was expressed in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Peckham, speaking for the minority of the court in the Crain Case, 162 U. S. 625, 649, 40 L. ed. 1097, 1104, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 952, 960, when he said: 'Here the defendant could not have been injured by an inadvertence of that nature. He ought to be held to have waived that which, under the circumstances, would have been a wholly unimportant formality. A waiver ought to be conclusively implied where the parties had proceeded as if defendant had been duly arraigned and a formal plea of not guilty had been interposed, and where there was no objection made on account of its absence until, as in this case, the record was brought to this court for review. It would be inconsistent with the due administration of justice to permit a defendant under such circumstances to lie by, say nothing as to such an objection, and then for the first time urge it in this court.'"

See Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. ed. 292, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 4 Ann. Cas. 773.

Authorities might be multiplied to the effect that if the state laws, as construed by the state courts, are not inconsistent with the provisions of the 14th Amendment, there is no denial of due process of law within the meaning of that provision of the Federal Constitution.

Article 1, § 1, ¶ 4, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia (Civil Code, § 6360), declares that "no person shall be deprived of the right to prosecute or defend his own cause in any of the courts of this state, in person, by attorney, or both."

By § 6079 of the Civil Code of 1910 it is provided that "the several superior courts of this state shall have power to correct errors and grant new trials in any cause or collateral issue depending in any of the said courts, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as they may establish according to law and the usages and customs of courts."

And see §§ 6080 et seq. as to the procedure in such cases.

Provision is made that cases tried in the superior courts may be reviewed by the supreme court, which has appellate jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases, civil and criminal, that may come before it, and to grant judgments of affirmance or reversal, etc. Civil Code, § 6103. And how stands the case with reference to our state Constitution and laws as affording the defendant due process of law? Article 1, § 1, ¶ 3, of the Constitution of Georgia (Civil Code 1910, § 6359), provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law." This provision of the state Constitution is in substantial accord with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Civil Code, § 6700.

Thus it will be seen that provision has been made in "the law of the land" by which all who are charged with crime can make their defense, and in case of conviction in the trial court they can make a motion for a new trial in that court on account of any alleged errors which may have been committed in the trial court. If the motion is denied by the trial court, the accused can take the case to the supreme court by writ of error, or by direct bill of exceptions, and have the case reviewed. We think it cannot be said, therefore, in view of the ample provisions made by the Constitution and laws of Georgia for anyone accused of crime to exercise his right of defense in our courts, that he is denied "due process of law," or the equal protection of the laws. See Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S. E. 1016.

2. In this state a defendant charged with crime and tried by a jury is given the right, by motion for a new trial, to have reviewed a verdict and judgment rendered against him, and have it set aside for an illegality, or irregularity amounting to harmful error, in the trial, including such grounds as the reception of a verdict in his absence; but, where such motion is made, it should include all proper grounds which were at the time known to the defendant or his counsel, or which by reasonable diligence could have been discovered. Leathers v. Leathers, 138 Ga. 740, 76 S. E. 44. A motion in arrest of judgment is also available to the defendant in a proper case, but a motion in arrest of judgment must be made during the term of court at which the judgment was obtained, and must be predicated upon some defect which appears upon the face of the record or pleadings. Civil Code 1910, § 5958. But L.R.A.1915D.

this court has decided a number of times that objections to the reception of a verdict in the absence of the defendant, and to recharging the jury in the absence of the prisoner, and similar alleged errors, can be made in a motion for a new trial. In Wade v. State, 12 Ga. 25, the defendant (a verdict for assault with intent to rape being rendered against him) made a motion for a new trial; one of the grounds being that the court read testimony taken down by the court to the jury in the absence of the prisoner, and without consent of the prisoner's counsel. It was held in that case that "The court has no more authority under the law to read over testimony to the jury, affecting the life or liberty of the defendant, in his absence, than it has to examine the witnesses in relation thereto in his absence."

A new trial was accordingly granted. The court merely treated the ground of the motion for a new trial as an irregularity, and not as a nullity. In Martin v. State, 51 Ga. 567, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 536, the defendant was indicted for simple larceny, and the court charged the jury the second time in the absence of the defendant and his counsel. This court did not treat the verdict of guilty as a nullity, but said: "As this important privilege was lost to the defendant in this case, and at a critical stage of the trial, through a mistake of the state's counsel, at least it is positively so stated, by defendant's counsel, and doubtless the court was misled by it, we think that there should be a new trial."

In Bonner v. State, 67 Ga. 510, there was an indictment for murder, and there was a conviction for voluntary manslaughter. A motion for a new trial was made, which was overruled, and the defendant excepted. A new trial was granted by this court, it being held: "in a criminal case the prisoner has the right to be present in person throughout the trial. Therefore for the judge to recharge the jury while the prisoner was absent and in confinement, although his counsel may have been present and kept silent, was error."

In Wilson v. State, 87 Ga. 583, 13 S. E. 566, there was indictment and trial for murder, and a motion for a new trial. The trial court recharged the jury in the absence of the defendant. This court held this to be cause for a new trial. And to the same effect see Tiller v. State, 96 Ga. 430, 23 S. E. 825; Hopson v. State, 116 Ga. 90, 42 S. E. 412.

It will thus be seen that this court has held that a motion for a new trial is an available remedy in a case where, during progress of the trial of one charged with a felony, some step is taken by the court during the enforced absence of the defendant, without his consent, and in such case the verdict rendered against the defendant will not be treated as a nullity, but it will be set aside and a new trial granted. It will also be seen that, where a motion for a new trial is made, the defendant must set out in that motion all that is known to him at the time, or by reasonable diligence could have been known by him, as grounds for a new trial.

Did the defendant in the instant case know at the time he made his motion for a new trial that he was absent without his consent when the verdict of guilty was rendered against him? He must of necessity have known it, and likewise his counsel. In one ground of his motion for a new trial (which was reviewed and passed on by this court in the case of Frank v. State, supra), it was alleged: "Defendant was not in the court room when the verdict was rendered, his presence having been waived by his counsel."

When one convicted of crime makes a motion for a new trial, it is his duty to include everything in it which was appropriate to such a motion and which was known to him at the time. As we have seen, the defendant could have made the question under consideration in the motion for a new trial. In Daniels v. Towers, 79 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 120, a judgment of conviction for felony had been affirmed by the supreme court on writ of error brought by the defendant, and this court held that the legality of his conviction could not be brought into question by writ of habeas corpus sued out by him, save for the want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the record as brought from the court below to the supreme court. In delivering the opinion of the court, Judge Bleckley said (p. 789): "We rest the case upon the general rule that after a judge of the superior court has presided in any case in the superior court of any county, and the judgment rendered at the trial has been affirmed by this court, it is to be taken for all purposes that it was a legal trial and judgment, and cannot be questioned for anything but the want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the proceedings as ruled upon here. If there is more record below, and the plaintiff in error, after conviction, does not bring it up, it is his own misfortune. He had an opportunity to bring it up. He must abide the judgment upon the record which he brings here; and if the judgment is legal according to that record, he must take the consequences. It will not do to allow him to bring up his case in sections, whether there is a trial of it by a court divided in sections or not. He must bring up his whole case as he expects to stand upon it for all time; and if he does not do it, neither he nor his friends can repair the error afterwards."

In support of his contention, the plaintiff in error cites the case of Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417. Hopt was tried on an indictment for murder, found guilty, and sentenced to suffer death. The judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory of Utah. Upon writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States the judgment was reversed and the case remanded, with instructions to order a new trial. A statute of Utah provided "if the indictment is for a felony, the defendant must be personally present at the trial; but if for a misdemeanor, the trial may be had in the absence of the defendant." Utah Comp. Laws 1888, § 4998.

The jurors of the competency of the jurors, appointed by the court, conducted their examination of the jurors in a different room, and tried the grounds of challenge out of the presence as well of the court as of the defendant and his counsel. The Supreme Court of the United States, in construing the statute of Utah, said that under their construction the trial, by jurors appointed by the court, of challenges of proposed jurors in felony cases, must be had as well in the presence of the court as of the accused, and that such presence cannot be dispensed with. But it will be observed that the decision was placed upon a construction of the statute of Utah which required the personal presence of the accused at every stage of the trial. It was said by Mr. Justice Harlan, who delivered the opinion, that "all doubt upon the subject is removed by the express requirement, not that the defendant may, but, where the indictment is for a felony, must, be personally present at the trial."

The absence of the defendant, however, was treated as an irregularity, as shown by the judgment remanding the case and ordering that a new trial be had.

Ball v. United States, 140 U. S. 118, 35 L. ed. 377, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761, was also relied upon. In that case it did not affirmatively appear from the record that the defendants were present when the sentence was pronounced upon them. It was said that "at common law it was essential, in a trial for a capital offense, that the prisoner should be present, and that it should appear of record that he was asked before sentence whether he had anything to say why it should not be pronounced."

The defendants were convicted of murder, and filed a motion for a new trial, and to arrest the judgment, both on the same date, but whether each along with the other motion is not clear. The case was remanded, with direction to quash the indictment, because it failed to show the time and place of death. 140 U. S. 133. In delivering the opinion of the court, Chief Justice Fuller said (p. 132): "We do not think that the fact of the presence of the prisoners can by fair intendment be collected from the record; no mention being made to that effect in the order, it not appearing therefrom that the sentence was read or orally delivered to them, and the usual questions not having been propounded."

The Chief Justice further said: "We are clear that the indictment is fatally defective, and that a capital conviction, even if otherwise regular, could not be sustained thereon."

While it seems to be the practice of the Federal courts, in capital felonies, that the record should show that the defendant was present and was asked whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced, it has never been the practice of this state "to enter on the record the fact that the prisoner and his counsel were present when the verdict was rendered, and when the sentence was pronounced, and from arraignment to sentence, or that the prisoner was asked, before sentence, whether there was any reason why sentence should not be pronounced upon him. The silence of the record as to such facts is, therefore, no cause for arresting the judgment or setting it aside." Rawlins v. Mitchell, 127 Ga. 24, 55 S. E. 958.

See also Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 137 (3).

Counsel for the defendant rely on the cases of Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 137, and Nolan v. State, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 284, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 532. In the former case the defendant was indicted for the offense of murder, and the jury found him guilty of voluntary manslaughter. When the jury were out, and before the verdict was returned, counsel for the accused consented that, if the jury agreed on a verdict that night, they could return a sealed verdict to the clerk of the court and disperse. They did not agree that night, but did on the following day, and their verdict was received in the absence of the prisoner and his counsel. The defendant made a motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the consent extended only in case of agreement that night, and not to the next day. It was held: "That consent of counsel that, should the jury agree that night, they might return a sealed verdict to the clerk and disperse, cannot be construed to extend to a verdict found on the next day. It was the legal right of the defendant to be present when the verdict was rendered, and, L.R.A.1915D.

had a motion to set aside such verdict been made on the ground of his absence, it should have been granted." By the motion in arrest of judgment the defendant sought to arrest the judgment as a nullity. But the court said that no motion under § 4629 of the Code then in force could be sustained for any matter not affecting the real merits of the offense charged in the indictment. The judgment of the court below, overruling the motion in arrest of judgment, was therefore affirmed. The court also said: "That it was the legal right of the defendant to have been present when the verdict was rendered by the jury we entertain no doubt, and if a motion had been made to set aside the verdict on the ground of his absence, that motion should have been granted by the court."

This last statement, from an examination of the record, is obiter. But what was probably meant by a motion to set aside was in the sense of being a motion for a new trial, as such motions have been likened to motions in arrest and to set aside. See Prescott v. Bennett, 50 Ga. 266, 272, where Judge Trippie said: "It is true that a motion entitled a motion to set aside is sometimes made for matters extrinsic the pleadings or record. In such cases they are practically more to be likened unto motions for new trials, and substantially are the same in form and effect."

This is probably what Judge Warner meant by the obiter expression quoted above from the Nolan Case; for, from the cases cited in which opinions were delivered prior to that utterance, it will be seen that a motion for a new trial was an available remedy in such cases, and it will be noted, too, that Judge Warner presided and delivered the opinion of the court in the Prescott Case, in which Judge Trippie used the language quoted above in his concurring opinion.

In the Nolan Case, reported in 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 532, Nolan was placed on trial for the offense of murder. Evidence was submitted to the jury, argument had, and a charge delivered by the court. Subsequently, while the defendant was confined in jail, in the absence of his counsel, and without his consent, the jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and were discharged. The defendant at a subsequent term moved to set aside the verdict rendered against him on the ground that it was rendered and published in his absence and without his right of being present having been waived. The trial court ordered accordingly. Subsequently the defendant was arraigned again upon the same indictment, and he pleaded specially in bar these facts as constituting his having been placed once in jeopardy, and claimed his discharge. This court held that "a verdict so received having been, on his motion, set aside as illegal, when afterwards arraigned for trial on the same indictment for the offense before another jury, the prisoner may plead specially his former jeopardy in bar of a second trial, and, if supported by the record and the extrinsic facts, the plea should be sustained, and thereupon the prisoner should be discharged."

It will be observed that the defendant in the Nolan Case treated the verdict as a nullity and made a motion to set it aside as such, which was done, instead of making a motion for a new trial, and setting up his defense as an irregularity, and seeking a new trial because of some error committed at the trial. In the latter case he would waive the fact that the verdict was a nullity, but insist that it was merely irregular and erroneous, requiring a new trial. Judge Bleckley, delivering the opinion in the last Nolan Case, said: "One trial, and only one for each crime, is a fundamental principle in criminal procedure, and must be the general rule practically ministered in all free countries. For the public authority, whether king or commonwealth, to try the same person over and over again for the same offense, would be rank tyranny. . . . Though some exceptions to the general rule are to be admitted, as when a new trial is had on the prisoner's motion, or when judgment upon a void indictment has been arrested, the transcendent importance of the rule itself requires that the exceptions should be few and strictly guarded."

In the instant case, the defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the court (paragraphs 6 and 7 of defendant's motion; also Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S. E. 1016), thus treating the verdict, not as a nullity, but as an irregularity. In Smith v. State, 59 Ga. 513, 27 Am. Rep. 393, it was held that, although the prisoner be in custody, he may consent that the verdict shall be received in his absence, and that a verdict thus received was valid, notwithstanding he was at the time confined in jail. The facts in this case were somewhat similar to the Nolan Case as to the agreement. The court said: "He ought to have been brought from the jail, so as to be present at the reception. But we think it was merely an irregularity, and that no matter of substance was involved. Having surrendered his right to poll the jury, no other of any value to him remained, for the exercise . . . of which his presence was important. Had he been in court, the result must have been the same as it was. Nothing took place in his absence L.R.A.1915D.

but the mechanical act of receiving the verdict, as the consent had provided it should be received. If he had been present, the act would have been no less mechanical. In Nolan's Case, 53 Ga. 137, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 532, the event contemplated did not happen."

We conclude from these authorities that the question here raised could have been adjudicated under a motion for a new trial, and that a failure to include this ground in such motion would preclude the defendant, after the denial of the motion, and the affirmance of the judgment by this court, from seeking to set aside the verdict as a nullity.

3. The motion to set aside the verdict complains of the reception of the verdict in the involuntary absence of the defendant, while he was incarcerated in jail, and in the absence of his counsel. Paragraph 2 of the motion avers that he did not waive that right, nor did he authorize anyone to waive it for him, nor did he consent that he should not be present; that he did not know that the verdict had been rendered and the jury discharged until after the reception of the verdict and the discharge of the jury; and that he did not know of any waiver of his presence made by his counsel until after sentence of death had been pronounced upon him. Paragraph 3 of the motion alleges that on the day the verdict was rendered, and shortly before the judge who presided on the trial of the case began his charge to the jury, the judge privately conversed with two of the counsel for the defendant, and in the conversation referred to the probable danger of violence to the defendant and his counsel if he or they were present when the verdict was rendered and it should be one of acquittal, and after the judge had thus expressed himself he requested counsel to agree that the defendant should not be present at the time the verdict was rendered and the jury polled; that under these circumstances counsel did agree with the judge that the defendant should not be present at the rendition of the verdict, and he was not present at the rendition of the verdict, nor were his counsel present. It is contended that it is the constitutional right of the defendant to be present at every stage of the trial, and that he cannot waive that right, nor can his counsel waive it for him, and that his absence at the reception of the verdict vitiates the whole trial.

It is the undoubted right of a defendant who is indicted for a criminal offense in this state to be present at every stage of his trial. But he may waive his presence at the reception of the verdict rendered in his case. In Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897, a waiver was made by the defendant's counsel in his presence as to his personal presence at the reception of the verdict. This court held in that case:

"8. Even if an attorney, by virtue of the relation of attorney and client existing between himself and one charged with a felony, has no implied authority to waive the right of his client to be present at the reception of the verdict, if the attorney makes an express waiver to this effect in the presence of the client, who does not at the time repudiate the action of his counsel, a verdict afterwards received in the absence of the accused and in consequence of the waiver will not be held to be invalid at the instance of the accused, seeking, after the reception of the verdict, to repudiate the action of his counsel in making the waiver.

"9. Before a verdict received in the absence of the accused will be held to be invalid, it is incumbent upon the accused to show that he was in custody of the law at the time the waiver was made, that he made no waiver of his right to be present, and that he did not authorize his counsel to make such waiver for him, and, if an authorized waiver has been made by counsel, that he has not ratified the same or allowed the court to act upon the waiver of counsel after he has notice that the same has been made."

Judge Cobb, who delivered the opinion of the court in the Cawthon Case, after citing a number of authorities pro and con, said (p. 413): "These decisions seem to draw no distinction between a waiver made by counsel in the presence of his client and one made in his absence. While counsel may have no implied authority, growing out of the relation of attorney and client, to make a waiver of this character for his client in his absence, we can see no good reason why the accused would not be bound by an express waiver made in his presence. Such a waiver is to all intents and purposes the waiver of the client. It would be trifling with the court to allow it to act upon a waiver thus made, and then impeach its action on the ground that counsel had been guilty of an unauthorized act. And while we recognize fully that there are limitations upon the authority of counsel, the client, even though he be charged with a capital felony, should not be allowed to impeach the authority of his counsel, when he acts in his presence, unless he promptly repudiates the unauthorized act before the court bases action upon it. Speaking for myself, I am inclined to the opinion that the right to make the waiver resides in the counsel, whether the accused be present or not at the time of the waiver; his authority arising from the mere relation of attorney and client. The reasoning of the courts L.R.A.1915D.

that hold to the contrary is not, in my opinion, satisfactory or by any means conclusive. Counsel is generally much better able to take care of the rights of the accused than he is himself, and the accused is better protected from improvident waivers by his case being left to the control of his counsel than if he were to take charge of the same in his own behalf."

As said by this court in effect in the case of Lampkin v. State, 87 Ga. 517, 13 S. E. 523, it is not sound practice for counsel to make a waiver of their client's presence at the reception of the verdict, take the chances of acquittal for their client, and then, after verdict of guilty, for the defendant to be allowed to repudiate the action of counsel and employ other counsel to set aside the verdict because of the absence of the defendant at the time it was rendered. Who was better prepared to protect the interests of the defendant—trained and expert counsel, or the defendant himself? True, he had the right to conduct the trial in person, if he so desired; but the defendant had committed his case to able and experienced counsel, who, in the exercise of their relation as attorney to the client, waived his right to be present, and they having made the waiver, the defendant by his conduct having acquiesced to it, he should be bound by it.

In the instant case the defendant, in his motion to set aside the verdict as a nullity, says that he did not know of the waiver of his presence made by his counsel. After the verdict of guilty was rendered against him in the trial court, the defendant made a motion for a new trial on various grounds, and, the motion having been overruled, a writ of error was sued out to this court, and the judgment of the lower court was affirmed. See Frank v. State, supra. The seventy-fifth ground of that motion contains the following recital, among others: "The defendant was not in the court room when the verdict was rendered, his presence having been waived by his counsel."

We pause here long enough to say that this court will take judicial notice of its own records, and will of its own motion, or at the suggestion of counsel, inspect the records of this court in a former appeal of the same case. Strickland v. Western & A. R. Co. 119 Ga. 70, 45 S. E. 721; Dimmick v. Tompkins, 194 U. S. 540, 548, 48 L. ed. 1110, 1113, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780; and authorities there cited; Mississinewa Min. Co. v. Andrews, 28 Ind. App. 496, 63 N. E. 231; Culver v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 149 Mich. 630, 113 N. W. 9; Studabaker v. Faylor, 52 Ind. App. 171, 98 N. E. 318; Mayhew v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 155 S. W. 191 (5); South Florida Lumber &

Supply Co. v. Read, 65 Fla. 61, 61 So. 125; Bohanan v. Darden, 7 Ala. App. 220, 60 So. 955; Alabama City G. & A. R. Co. v. Bates, 155 Ala. 347, 46 So. 776 (2); McNish v. State, 47 Fla. 69, 36 So. 176; Westfall v. Wait, 165 Ind. 353, 73 N. E. 1039, 6 Ann. Cas. 788; 1 Chamberlayne, § 683, p. 850.

The motion under review recites that "the said judge, Hon. L. S. Roan, upon considering the motion for new trial made by this defendant, after the reception of said verdict as above stated, rendered his judgment denying said motion, and in rendering said judgment stated that the jury had found the defendant guilty," etc.

When, therefore, the defendant by motion for a new trial invoked from the court a ruling upon alleged errors that had been committed upon the trial (reciting on the face of the motion a knowledge of his absence when the verdict was returned, and the waiver of his presence), he will not now be heard to say that the verdict was a nullity on account of his not being present at its rendition, after the motion for a new trial has been denied, and the judgment denying it affirmed by this court. Frank v. State, supra. And, moreover, an extraordinary motion for a new trial was made, and has likewise been refused, and the judgment overruling it affirmed by this court. Frank v. State, 142 Ga. 617, 83 S. E. 233. He had the right to invoke a ruling on that question in the motion for a new trial, and, failing to do so, he cannot now be heard to say that he will treat the verdict as a nullity and move to have it set aside as such. It would be a reproach upon the court's administration of the law to allow a defendant to make a motion for a new trial, with a knowledge of his absence when the verdict against him was rendered, and have the grounds of the motion adjudicated by the court, and then move to set the verdict aside as void. The defendant necessarily knew, when sentenced by the court, (for he was then present), that the verdict had been rendered against him. His counsel must have known it, for they filed his motion for a new trial. He and they are presumed to know the law. His motion for a new trial recited that his presence at the reception of the verdict had been waived by his counsel. Under these circumstances it must be held that the defendant acquiesced in the waiver of his counsel of his presence at the reception of the verdict. It would be trifling with the court to allow one who had been convicted of crime, and who had made a motion for a new trial on over 100 grounds, including the statement that his counsel had waived his presence at the reception of the verdict, L.R.A.1915D.

to have the motion heard by both the trial court and the supreme court, and after a denial by both courts of the motion, to now come in and by way of a motion to set aside the verdict include matters which were or ought to have been included in the motion for a new trial.

While a defendant indicted for crime in this state has the legal right to be personally present at every stage of his trial, as before stated, there are certain matters which he may waive, and which many prisoners do waive, at their trial. They may waive copy of indictment, formal arraignment, and list of witnesses before the grand jury, all of which are important rights. They may waive a preliminary hearing before a committal court, a jury of twelve to try them, or any legal objection to jurors who have qualified on their voir dire; they may even waive trial entirely, plead guilty of murder, and be sentenced to hang. Sarah v. State, 28 Ga. 576 (2), 581; Wiggins v. Tyson, 112 Ga. 745, 750, 38 S. E. 86. These are rights personal to the defendant, and it would be absurd to say that when his counsel had waived his presence at the reception of the verdict, and this waiver had been brought to his attention in ample time for him to move for a new trial on that ground, which he fails to do until after he makes a motion for a new trial on other grounds, with knowledge of the fact of his absence when the verdict was rendered, and then, after the motion so made has been finally adjudicated against him, he can successfully move to set aside the verdict as a nullity. We may add that the allegations of the petition show that at the rendition of the verdict the jury was polled by the court, under an agreement had with defendant's counsel when the waiver was made.

In this state, after a verdict of guilty of murder and the overruling of a motion for a new trial, a writ of error will lie to this court, assigning error on the overruling of the motion. In some jurisdictions the practice is different. But on examination of the cases in other jurisdictions in which a complaint of the reception of a verdict in the absence of the accused was made and sustained, it will be found that very commonly this was treated as a ground for remanding the case for another trial. We know of no provision in the Constitution of the United States, or of this state, nor of any statute, which gives to an accused person a right to disregard the rules of procedure in a state, which afford him due process of law, and demand that he shall move in his own way and be granted absolute freedom because of an irregularity (if there is one) in receiving the verdict. If an accused person could make some of his points of attack on the verdict, and reserve other points known to him, which he could then have made, to be used as grounds for further attacks on the verdict, there would be practically no end to a criminal case.

4. Comparing the grounds of the motion to set aside the verdict in this case on the ground of disorder in the court room during the progress of the trial, of cheering and applause outside the court room, and of the oral remarks of the trial judge before signing the order denying a new trial, with the grounds of the motion for a new trial made in the former record in this case (see Strickland v. Western & A. R. Co. 119 Ga. 70, 45 S. E. 721), when it was here under review upon the denial of that motion (Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S. E. 1016), it will be seen that the questions there made as to these matters were substantially the same as those sought to be raised by the present motion, and the questions there raised were adjudicated by this court in that case adversely to the contentions of the defendant. This court, therefore, will not again consider those same questions when sought to be raised by the motion to set aside the verdict now under review.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent.

Application for the allowance of a writ of error denied by the Supreme Court of the United States, December 7, 1914 (235 U. S. 694, 59 L. ed. —, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208).

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

ELLA CONLEY, by Next Friend,
v.

UNITED DRUG COMPANY.

(218 Mass. 238, 105 N. E. 975.)

Fright — fainting — fall — injury — liability.

1. The rule disallowing damages for Note. — Right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act.

I. Introduction, 830.

II. Fright caused by negligence.

a. Treating physical injury resulting from fright as a mere incident of the fright, 832.

b. Remoteness of the damage, 832.

c. Doctrine of expediency, 832.

d. Miscellaneous cases, 833.

L.R.A.1915D.

fright does not apply where physical injuries are caused by a fall consequent upon a faint caused by an explosion due to another's negligence.

Negligence — explosion — liability of property owner.

2. One is not liable for injuries caused by an explosion of a tank of gas upon his premises, if it was not at the time in his custody and control.

Same — res ipsa loquitur — absence of custody.

3. The rule of res ipsa loquitur does not establish negligence against the owner of property upon which a tank of gas explodes, in the absence of anything to show that it was in his control.

(June 16, 1914.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Norfolk County for the determination of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the explosion of a tank of gas. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Harold C. Haskell, for plaintiff:

Defendant owed to the plaintiff the duty of using reasonable care to keep the premises where she was employed in a safe and suitable condition, she being there by implied invitation as the employee of a joint occupant of said premises.

Wright v. Perry, 188 Mass. 268, 74 N. E. 328, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 461; Gile v. J. W. Bishop Co. 184 Mass. 413, 68 N. E. 837.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in this case.

Beattie v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 3, 86 N. E. 920; McNamara v. Boston & M. R. Co. 202 Mass. 491, 89 N. E. 131; Minihan v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 197 Mass. 367, 83 N. E. 871; O'Donnell v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 205 Mass. 200, 90 N. E. 977; Pinney v. Hall, 156 Mass. 225, 30 N. E. 1016; Cassady v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 184 Mass. 156, 63 L.R.A. 285, 68 N. E. 10, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 559; Levin v. New York C. R. Co. 133 N. Y. Supp. 467; Kearner v. Charles S. Tanner Co. 31 R. I. 203, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 537, 76 Atl. 833; White v. Boston & A. R. Co. 144 Mass. 404, 11 N. E. 552, 9 Am. Neg. Cas. 461.

III. Fright resulting from wilful tort, 833.

IV. Fright because of another's danger, 833.

I. Introduction.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to Huston v. Freemansburg, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, and supplement thereto appended to the case of Chittick v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073.

There being evidence of physical injury subsequently to the accident, the question whether such injury was the result of the accident was obviously for the jury.

Copson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 233, 50 N. E. 613; Berard v. Boston & A. R. Co. 177 Mass. 179, 58 N. E. 586; Driscoll v. Gaffey, 207 Mass. 102, 92 N. E. 1010; Cassady v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 184 Mass. 150, 63 L.R.A. 285, 68 N. E. 10, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 559.

The facts would have warranted the jury in finding that the plaintiff was thrown by the force of the explosion and so rendered unconscious, or that in attempting to save herself she fell and sustained the injuries complained of. In either event the defendant would be responsible for the injuries sustained.

Cameron v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 182 Mass. 310, 65 N. E. 385, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 86; Homans v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 180 Mass. 456, 57 L.R.A. 291, 91 Am. St. Rep. 324, 62 N. E. 737, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 248.

Messrs. Sawyer, Hardy, & Stone for defendant.

Orosby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by a minor,

The difference of opinion as to the right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright, discussed in the notes to which this is a supplement, continues in the recent cases. That there may be a recovery is affirmed in Spearman v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927, certiorari denied in 177 Ala. 672, 58 So. 1038, where a recovery was allowed against the owner of an automobile, who, in operating it upon the public highway, caused a mule hitched to a buggy containing two of the plaintiff's small children to run away, so frightening and unnerving her that she fainted and swooned, was made sick and subjected to physical suffering. After examining the different reasons given by the courts for denying a recovery in such cases, the court concludes that a recovery may be had although the plaintiff has not sustained any physical injury otherwise than the result of fright or mental shock.

But see Bachelder v. Morgan, infra, II. d. So, a recovery has been held allowable for nervousness which was the proximate result of fright.

The rules announced in Green v. Shoemaker, 111 Md. 69, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 667, 73 Atl. 688, cited in note in 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1074, were held applicable to an injury resulting to a young woman from a fall due to fright when she was crossing a railroad track directly in front of an engine, caused by the whistle being suddenly blown in an entirely unreasonable manner, and the cylinder cocks opened permitting an unusual and unnecessary quantity of steam to escape making an unusual noise. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 121 Md. 254, 88 Atl. 282.

Miscarriage following fright or shock caused by the negligence of the operator of an automobile in colliding with a carriage in which the plaintiff was riding was held in Pankopf v. Hinkley, 141 Wis. 146, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1159, 123 N. W. 625, to entitle the one thus suffering to maintain an action against the operator of the automobile, although there was no physical contact with the person.

See also Salmi v. Columbia & N. River R. Co. post, 834.

In Cook v. Mohawk, 207 N. Y. 311, 100 N. E. 815 an action by a landowner for the L.R.A.1915D.

wrongful obstruction of a natural waterway in such a manner as to discharge the water upon plaintiff's land causing damage thereto, and affecting the health of his wife, who was one of the occupants of a dwelling situated thereon, the question of fright was not considered, but the wife, who was afflicted with a hemorrhage due primarily to a small fibroid tumor, which made her very nervous was affected by the flowing of the water into the plaintiff's cellar. In the course of the opinion the case of Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L.R.A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 121, referred to in the earlier note, is cited, and it is stated that mental suffering is not a legal element of damages in such cases, and there can be no recovery except for physical ills which can be ascribed directly and with reasonable certainty to the defendant's wrongful act. It is further stated that the defendant in this case should not be held liable for the mental and nervous disturbance of the plaintiff's wife due to a cause entirely separate from the flooding of the plaintiff's premises.

In an action for trespass to real property brought by a husband and wife occupying the same, in which it was sought to recover damages for fright to the wife resulting from the trespass, it is stated that the fact that the defendants did not commit an assault or a battery upon the plaintiff cannot change the result; that they unlawfully trespassed upon their property, and if their acts did not by themselves constitute an actionable wrong, the jury could at least consider them an aggravation of damages. May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 157 N. C. 416, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, 72 S. E. 1059. See note to this case in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, on personal wrong as aggravation of damages for trespass on realty.

Even the courts which deny a recovery for physical injury resulting from fright allow a recovery where the fright causes the person to take some action which results in a direct physical injury. CONLEY v. UNITED DRUG CO.

Compare with Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, supra.

In Kennell v. Gershonovitz, 84 N. J. L. 577, 87 Atl. 130, the rule disallowing damages for fright was held not applicable to by her next friend, for physical injuries alleged to have been received by her by reason of the explosion of a cylindrical tank. This tank was about four feet long and 7 inches in diameter, and contained liquid carbonic acid gas. The explosion occurred in the basement of a building owned and, with the exception of the first floor, occupied by the defendant as a factory. The plaintiff was employed by the United Perfume Company, which occupied the first floor of the building.

1. The defendant contends that the plaintiff's injuries were due wholly to fright, and that she is precluded from recovery under the rule established in the case of Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2

Am. Neg. Rep. 566. The jury would have been warranted in finding upon the evidence that the explosion was so severe as to cause the floor near where the plaintiff and other girls were at work to be splintered and ripped up, that bottles were thrown about the room and broken, and that the girls who were employed on this floor with the plaintiff were greatly excited and endeavored to escape. The plaintiff testified that she did not recall that she was struck by anything or that she was thrown down, but that she fainted and did not recollect anything thereafter until she found herself at her home. There was also evidence that she was examined by a physician on the morning after the explosion; that this examination "disclosed tenderness on the

the injuries sustained by one in a collision between a street car on which she was riding, and a wagon, as a result of which broken glass was showered over her, the court stating that "if the glass caused no bodily injury, yet a faint and sustaining the bruises would comply with the rule."

In a second appeal of Hack v. Dady, 142 App. Div. 510, 127 N. Y. Supp. 22, an action for damages resulting from the explosion of a plot of lead, the court, while adhering to the theory of Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. disavowed in the earlier note, that where personal injuries are attributable alone to fright or shock there can be no recovery, holds that where the plaintiff was struck by a few drops of lead, the rule does not apply and a recovery may be had.

See first appeal of Hack v. Dady, 134 App. Div. 253, 118 N. Y. Supp. 906, in the note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1159.

On the contrary, the right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright has been denied. The reasons given are those discussed in the note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, and the cases will be taken up in the order there followed.

II. Fright caused by negligence.

a. Treating physical injury resulting from fright as a mere incident of the fright.

See earlier cases on this question in earlier notes to which this is supplementary.

b. Remoteness of the damage.

Recovery for physical and mental suffering of a woman resulting in a miscarriage, due to fright at an unlawful assault upon her husband, was denied in McGee v. Vanover, 148 Ky. 737, 147 S. W. 742, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 500. The court cites from the opinion in the earlier Kentucky case of Reed v. Ford, 129 Ky. 471, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 225, 112 S. W. 600, that the damages arising from pain and suffering resulting solely from fright, unaccompanied by any physical injury, are too remote and speculative, and again from Morse v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D.

117 Ky. 11, 77 S. W. 361, to the effect that to allow a recovery of damages in such cases would open the door to imaginary claims, and a recovery would be permitted for mere fright and its consequences. But the fright here was occasioned by threatened injury to another, and the decision is based largely on that fact.

In Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Robinett, 151 Ky. 778, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433, 152 S. W. 976, an action by a young woman to recover for injuries sustained by her when her father was put off a train on which they were riding, it was alleged in the complaint that in removing him from the train he was thrown against her, causing an injury to her side, and that she also suffered from fright when left alone upon the train. In discussing the right of the daughter to recover for fright, it is stated that she cannot recover for the mere fright thereby caused her, or for fright caused by being left on the train unattended by any of her family during the remainder of her journey home. Nor can she recover for fright suffered by her from the assault and battery committed by the railway servants upon her father in her presence, when or before ejecting him from the train, however wrongful the ejection may have been, unless the assault and battery upon the father caused his body to be thrown upon or against her as alleged in the petition, and by that means caused the injury to her person and consequent fright and suffering complained of.

As to the liability of a carrier for frightening passenger, see note to this case in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433.

On the contrary, the theory that injuries resulting from fright are too remote as a matter of law to be the basis of an action in damages has been expressly disapproved. Spearmen v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927, supra; Green v. Shoemaker, 111 Md. 69, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667, 73 Atl. 686, supra.

c. Doctrine of expediency.

In Morris v. Lackawana & W. Valley R. Co. 228 Pa. 198, 77 Atl. 445, a woman was held not entitled to recover damages of a plaintiff's right side, shoulder, and hip, and some days later a slight discoloration developed on the shoulder and side, and there was a mark over her right shoulder and another near her hip." The physician testified that these injuries could have been caused by a fall or by being thrown violently against some object in the room. In view of the effect of the explosion upon the plaintiff, and the fear and fright caused thereby, a jury might find, notwithstanding the absence of direct testimony to that effect, that she was thrown to the floor or against some object and so received the physical injuries described. Upon such a finding, manifestly the rule laid down in Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. supra, would not be applicable. If, as the defendant contends, the physical injuries which the plaintiff received were due to her falling upon the floor when, by reason of fright, she fainted and became unconscious, still we are of opinion that the rule adopted in Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. does not apply. We think that if the effect of the excitement and fright under which the plaintiff labored was to cause her to faint and fall to the floor and thereby sustain physical injuries, she would not be barred from recovery. The distinction between the case at bar and the Spade Case lies in the fact that in that case, unlike the present case, there was no evidence of physical injury, and for that reason it was held "that there can be no recovery for fright, terror, alarm, anxiety, or distress of mind, if these are unaccompanied by some physical injury." Spade v. Lynn & carrier for a miscarriage resulting from the nervous shock occasioned by the car in which she was riding bumping over the track at an open switch.

In Driscoll v. Gaffey, 207 Mass. 102, 92 N. E. 1010, the court declared that there can be no recovery for illness due solely to fright. It would seem from the context, and especially from the citation of Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566, cited in note in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 60, that the court meant that, in the absence of physical impact, there could be no recovery even though a physical sickness resulted from the fright. In this case, however, a recovery was sustained because there was evidence justifying a finding that there was a battery to the person. See also McGee v. Vanover, 148 Ky. 737, 147 S. W. 742, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 500.

On the contrary, the doctrine of expediency, or the theory that to allow a recovery for injuries resulting from fright would open the door to imaginary and fictitious claims, has been expressly disapproved. Spearman v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927, supra; Green v. Shoemaker, 111 Md. 69, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 667, 73 Atl. 688, supra.

d. Miscellaneous cases.

No recovery can be had for a shock to the nervous system of a woman causing her to suffer and continue to suffer in body and in mind, as a result of the boisterous conduct of a number of negroes who occupied a part of the same passenger coach in which she was placed. Norris v. Southern R. Co. 84 S. C. 15, 65 S. E. 956.

A woman cannot recover damages for injury to her health resulting from nervousness caused by fright at being negligently placed on a train other than that called for by her ticket, a fact that was not discovered until the train had left the station. Crutcher v. Big Four, 132 Mo. App. 311, 111 S. W. 891.

There is no discussion of this question in Bachelder v. Morgan, 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. L.R.A.1915D.

815, an action in damages by a pedestrian against the owner of an automobile for damages caused, as the pedestrian claimed, by being knocked down by the automobile while crossing a street. In the course of the opinion it is stated by the court that "if, from mere fright or excitement, the plaintiff fell and was not touched, as the defendant contends, then the defendant was not liable."

III. Fright resulting from wilful tort.

A husband was held entitled to recover for mental suffering and physical injury suffered by his wife, arising from fright produced by the unlawful act of the servants of a railway company in going upon the premises of the plaintiff at night for the purpose of inspecting and examining some lumber in the yard which the plaintiff was suspected of stealing. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Alexander, — Tex. —, 172 S. W. 709.

It is here stated by the court that the rule is fully settled in Texas that in case of physical suffering arising from mental condition produced by wilful tort, the wrongdoer is liable for all mental and physical injuries which naturally result from such tort.

IV. Fright because of another's danger.

A woman cannot recover for personal injuries due solely to fright caused by an unlawful assault upon her husband, where she apprehended no danger or injury to her person from the one assaulting her husband. McGee v. Vanover, 148 Ky. 737, 147 S. W. 742, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 500.

A nervous shock sustained by a workman incapacitating him from labor, consequent upon a fatal accident to a fellow workman, is a personal injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, within the meaning of the English workmen's compensation act of 1906. Yates v. South Kirby, F. & H. Collieries [1910] 2 K. B. 538, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1035, 103 L. T. N. S. 170, 26 Times L. R. 596, 3 B. W. Comp. Cas. 418, 3 N. C. C. A. 225.

See Spearman v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927, supra, I. W. A. E.

B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 290, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566; Gannon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 173 Mass. 40, 43 L.R.A. 833, 52 N. E. 1075, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 613; Berard v. Boston & A. R. Co. 177 Mass. 179, 58 N. E. 586; Homans v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 180 Mass. 456, 458, 57 L.R.A. 291, 91 Am. St. Rep. 324, 62 N. E. 737, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 248; Cameron v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 182 Mass. 310, 65 N. E. 385, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 86; Driscoll v. Gaffey, 207 Mass. 102, 92 N. E. 1010.

2. Without question the plaintiff was physically injured as the result of the explosion, and while she was in the exercise of due care. Proof of these facts alone, however, are not sufficient to entitle her to recover. In addition some evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant must appear in order that it may be charged with liability. The negligence charged is in substance that the defendant so negligently kept, used, and employed on its premises certain chemicals that an explosion occurred whereby the plaintiff was injured. The undisputed evidence shows that the explosion was caused by the bursting of a cylindrical steel tank filled with carbonic acid gas, and that at the time of the explosion this tank was upon the defendant's premises. It is plain that the mere fact of the explosion of the tank upon the defendant's premises is not sufficient to charge it with negligence. In other words, the defendant's liability cannot be established by proof of the explosion alone. To charge the defendant with negligence there must be some evidence (aside from the presence of the tank on the defendant's premises at the instant of the explosion) to show that it was at that time in its custody and control. In our opinion, there was an entire absence of such evidence. The defendant's superintendent, in answer to interrogatories, stated that he did not know the cause of the explosion, that the tank was not rightfully on the premises at that time, and was not handled by any employee or other agent of the defendant, and that it was not being handled under his immediate personal supervision. But the jury might not have believed this evidence, yet the superintendent's denial that the tank was rightfully on the premises would not furnish evidence that it was rightfully there, or in the custody or control of the defendant. All that the evidence presented shows is that the tank at the moment of the explosion was upon the defendant's premises. How it happened to be there, whether rightfully or otherwise, and how long it had remained there does not appear; nor is there any evidence to show that such tanks or their contents were manufactured, used, or dealt in by the defendant in connection with its business. There is no evidence to show the nature of the business the defendant was engaged in, and nothing to show that it knew or had any reason to believe that the tank was on its premises until after the explosion occurred. Under these circumstances, there is no evidence to warrant a finding that the defendant had any control over it, or was in any way responsible for its presence. Kendall v. Boston, 118 Mass. 234, 19 Am. Rep. 446; McIntire v. Roberts, 149 Mass. 450, 4 L.R.A. 519, 14 Am. St. Rep. 432, 22 N. E. 13; McGee v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 187 Mass. 569, 73 N. E. 657; Saxe v. Walworth Mfg. Co. 191 Mass. 338, 114 Am. St. Rep. 613, 77 N. E. 883, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 359; 29 Cyc. 477, 478. See also McNicholas v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 196 Mass. 138, 81 N. E. 889.

L.R.A.1915D.

The rule of res ipsa loquitur cannot be held to apply in this case, because it never is applicable unless the defendant has control of the agency which causes the injury.

It follows that judgment must be entered for the defendant in accordance with the terms of the report.

So ordered.

OREGON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

SOPHIA SALMI, Resp.,
v.
COLUMBIA & NEHALEM RIVER RAIL-ROAD, Appt.

(— Or. —, 146 Pac. 819.)

Fright — physical injury — liability.

1. One who negligently explodes a heavy blast in close proximity to and casts débris upon a dwelling occupied by a woman, when he could have foreseen that some injury was likely to happen to the inmates of the house from his act, is liable for a physical injury inflicted upon the woman in falling as a result of a swoon from fright at the explosion.

Appeal — instruction — assumption of fact.

2. It is error to assume the existence of an injury in instructing the jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries due to another's negligence.

Pleading — personal injury — aggravation of existing condition.

3. One cannot recover for aggravation of a condition existing at the time of a personal injury due to another's negligence unless such condition and its aggravation are pleaded.

Note. — For right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act, see note to Conley v. United Drug Co. ante, 830.

Evidence — explosion — fright — condition of premises.

4. Evidence as to the débris deposited on adjoining premises by an explosion is admissible in an action to recover damages for injury to a woman on the premises because of a swoon from fright at the explosion.

Same — action for tort — evidence as to contract.

5. In an action to recover damages for injuries to a woman through fright at an explosion on adjoining property, evidence is not admissible of a promise that no explosion should occur while her husband was away from home.

(March 9, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Columbia County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Burnett, J.:

It appears from the record that the line of the defendant's road passes the residence of the plaintiff within 150 feet, but considerably higher up a steep hillside. The complaint states in substance that on June 6, 1913, the defendant caused a large and unsafe blast of powder or dynamite to be exploded immediately above her residence on the right of way, well knowing at the time that the plaintiff and her two daughters were in the house, and having negligently advised them to go into the back bedroom, which was farthest away from the right of way, until the blast should be discharged. The plaintiff charges that they accepted this counsel and thereupon took refuge in the room and remained there until the blast was set off. She then alleges: "That by reason of said blast, aforesaid, a great and large amount of rock, earth, stumps, and débris was hurled and thrown with great force and violence at and down upon the residence of the plaintiff and the room then and there occupied by the plaintiff and her two daughters, by reason of which negligent and wrongful act the plaintiff was greatly frightened and was rendered unconscious, thereby falling in a swoon, upon the floor, by reason of which she sustained a painful, severe, and permanent injury, to wit, a large and painful rupture of the umbilicus, resulting in a large and painful umbilical hernia, from the effects of which she has suffered great and excruciating physical and mental pain and suffering, and from the effects of which she has ever since been prevented from attending properly to her household and other duties."

She claims damages in the sum of $4,600.

For a second cause of action the complaint recites a similar occurrence happening November 12, 1913, attended by another swoon of the plaintiff and the increase of the previous hernia, all to her damage in a sum set forth, together with certain special damages which she avers. The answer traversed the allegations of the complaint. The defendant also declares that in the progress of the work of clearing the right of way the contractor of the defendant put in a proper charge of powder, gave the plaintiff due warning that in thirty minutes the blast would be set off, and requested her to retire to a distance beyond which any rocks or débris could be thrown by the upheaval; but that she carelessly and negligently determined to remain in the house, so that any fright or injury suffered by her was due to her own negligence. The general issue and the defense of independent contractor were interposed to the second cause of action. The new matter in the answer was denied by the reply. A judgment resulted in favor of the plaintiff after a jury trial, and the defendant appealed.

Messrs. Veazle, McCourt, & Veazle and J. W. Day, for appellant:

Damages cannot be recovered for mere fright without resulting physical injury.

Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L.R.A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709, 23 Atl. 340; Haile v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 L.R.A. 774, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. 557; Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, 47 L.R.A. 323, 75 Am. St. Rep. 374, 55 N. E. 380, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 54.

No liability exists for acts of negligence causing fright or shock, in the absence of physical impact, even though subsequent physical ailments result.

Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L.R.A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 121; Huston v. Freemansburg, 212 Pa. 548, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 61 Atl. 1022; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 612, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566; McGee v. Vanover, 148 Ky. 737, 147 S. W. 742, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 500; Morse v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 117 Ky. 11, 77 S. W. 361; Ward v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. 65 N. J. L. 384, 47 Atl. 561; Deming v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 80 Mo. App. 162; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 402, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206, 64 S. W. 226.

An act of negligence which produces fright from which physical ailment results is not actionable because it is not the proximate cause of the injury, and the result could not be foreseen or reasonably anticipated.

Miller v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 78 Ohio St. 309, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949, 125 Am. St. Rep. 699, 85 N. E. 499; Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 401, 42 L.R.A. 199, 51 N. E. 657, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 15; Chittick v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 224 Pa. 13, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073, 73 Atl. 4; Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. ed. 1070.

Plaintiff cannot recover for mere aggravation of a hernia existing prior to June 6th, 1913, the date of the first blast.

Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 46 Or. 15, 68 L.R.A. 477, 78 Pac. 983; Dorn v. Clarke-Woodward Drug Co. 65 Or. 516, 133 Pac. 351.

Mr. Glen R. Metsker, for respondent:

Where the fright is accompanied by contemporaneous physical injury, however slight, the right to recover is never denied.

Hess v. American Pipe Mfg. Co. 221 Pa. 67, 70 Atl. 294; Green v. Shoemaker, 111 Md. 69, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667, 73 Atl. 690; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L.R.A. 193, 44 Pac. 323, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 76; Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 26 C. L. 428.

Whether the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of the injuries to plaintiff does not depend on whether the particular casualty or injury was such as the defendant should or might have foreseen, but is simply a question whether it was such negligence that, under the circumstances, ordinary prudence would have admonished it that its act would probably result in injury to someone.

Eberhardt v. Glasgow Mut. Teleph. Asso. 91 Kan. 763, 139 Pac. 416; Rodgers v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Kan. 222, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 88 Pac. 885, 12 Ann. Cas. 441; Barnett v. United Kansas Portland Cement Co. 91 Kan. 719, 139 Pac. 484; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L.R.A. 193, 44 Pac. 323, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 76; Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L.R.A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 3.

In the total absence of bodily impact or actual and visible contemporaneous physical injury, plaintiff could still recover for injuries due to nervous shock and fright.

Huston v. Freemansburg, 212 Pa. 548, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 61 Atl. 1022; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, and note, 93 Tex. 239, 47 L.R.A. 325, 54 S. W. 944, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 359; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L.R.A. 193, 44 Pac. 321, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 76; Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. L.R.A.1915D.

26 C. L. 428; Birmingham Realty Co. v. Thomason, 8 Ala. App. 535, 63 So. 65; Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L.R.A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1.

Burnett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Among other things, it is charged that the immediate cause of injury was the sudden fear of the plaintiff for which no action lies. Many authorities are cited to sustain the proposition that for mere fright without an attendant or resulting physical injury a cause of action will not lie, although subsequently physical ailments result. A careful analysis of the plaintiff's allegations on that point leads to the conclusion that she does not claim damages for the alarm she describes, but only relies upon it as one link in the chain of causation culminating in the actual physical hurt of which she complains. The lighted squib caused no damage to the person upon whom it first fell; but the individual who started its flight set in motion an agency which, operating naturally and hence in a manner reasonably to be anticipated, ultimately produced harm for which he was liable to the person injured. So in this case, if the testimony for the plaintiff is to be credited, the defendant inaugurated violent action by blasting which operated at once upon her mentality, producing swoon, followed in unbroken and immediate sequence by her fall upon an upturned stool, resulting in the trauma of hernia for which she claims damages. This constitutes the attendant or eventuating physical injury prescribed by most, if not all, the precedents cited by the defendant as a condition of recovering damages where fright is involved.

It is quite the ordinary thing, and a result to be expected, that a woman would be frightened by a loud explosion, especially when attended by débris falling all around her and into the very house where she was. The rest follows in normal succession. The instinct of self-preservation, a mental phenomenon, induced B. to throw off the squib which had fallen upon him. The immediate result was the injury charged upon A, who first threw the missile. Likewise in this instance the explosion of the blast naturally produced the mental state of fright, the fright the faint, the faint the fall, the fall the fracture of the abdominal wall, upon which the plaintiff rests her cause of action, all following in a close and immediate series. In the illustration of the squib, as well as in the concrete case before us, mental disturbance formed a link in an unbroken chain of causation created by the initial negligent act of the defendant, producing a result for which reason, and, as we believe, the weight of authority, holds it responsible.

Human emotions and other mental states naturally have a powerful influence upon human action and are factors which cannot be left out of the account. They must be reckoned as part of the necessary sequence of intermediate causes. It is a basic principle that, if the cause set in motion by the defendant operates continuously and directly upon another agency which, as a necessary consequence, affects a still different force by which injury is inflicted, the author of the initial cause is responsible for the final result. The difficulty lies in the application of this fundamental doctrine. The authorities are apparently in hopeless conflict on this question, but it is believed that proper discrimination will reconcile them in this manner. If, under all the circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary care, a person can discern that his act will naturally and probably result in harm of some kind to another, but not necessarily foreseen as to the exact form of injury, the former is liable in damages for the ensuing casualty. On the contrary, if no harmful result can reasonably be expected, or if there is no natural connection between the act of the defendant and the injury alleged, no action will lie.

In this case, considering that a large blast was set off within 150 feet of the plaintiff's house from the overhanging hillside, the jury was authorized to find that the defendant could have foreseen that some sort of injury was liable to happen to the inmates of that house, so that it would be liable for such hurt in whatever form it occurred, however extended the concatenation of causes between its initial act and the resulting injury. On this branch of the case, Mr. Chief Justice Winslow, in Pankopf v. Hinkley, 141 Wis. 146, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1159, 123 N. W. 625, tersely says: "The principle here decided is that when physical injury flows directly from extreme fright or shock, caused by the ordinary negligence of one who owes the duty of care to the injured person, such fright or shock is a link in the chain of proximate causation as efficient as physical impact from which like results flow."

The following citations justify the conclusion here set down: Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter, 93 Tex. 239, 47 L.R.A. 325, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, 54 S. W. 944, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 359; Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778; Pankopf v. Hinkley, supra; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Robinett, 151 Ky. 778, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433, 152 S. W. 976; Hendrix v. Texas & P. R. Co. 40 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 89 S. W. 461; Simone v. Rhode Island Co. L.R.A.1915D.

28 R. I. 186, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740, 66 Atl. 202; Armour & Co. v. Kollmeyer, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, 88 C. C. A. 242, 161 Fed. 78; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Murdock, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 116 S. W. 139; Arthur v. Henry, 157 N. C. 438, 73 S. E. 211; Spearman v. McCrary, 4 Ala. App. 473, 58 So. 927. A valuable note on the subject appears in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, appended to Huston v. Freemansburg, originally reported in 212 Pa. 548, 61 Atl. 1022, although the case itself indicates an opinion opposed to that here expressed.

It has been decided in some instances that if one, in the commission of an unlawful act, excites in the mind of another a reasonable apprehension of personal danger, and in the endeavor of the latter to escape his own act is the immediate cause of his death, the former is criminally responsible as for homicide. Cox v. People, 80 N. Y. 500; Adams v. People, 109 Ill. 444, 50 Am. Rep. 617, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 351; Norman v. United States, 20 App. D. C. 494; State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa, 477. Such cases clearly recognize the induced fright as one of the train of causes set in operation by the defendant and culminating in the homicidal crime. The analogy holds good in civil cases where the wrong complained of is inaugurated by a negligent act of the defendant, and continues naturally through various concomitant and succeeding causes, including fright of the plaintiff, to the injury in question. If criminal liability can be imputed in one case, civil accountability certainly attaches in the other.

The defendant contends that the trial court erred in its instruction to the jury, excepted to by the defendant, in assuming, in spite of the general issue, that the plaintiff had received an actual injury. In stating the case to the jury on the first cause of action the court said: "The issues for you to determine on that first cause of action are: (1) Was the defendant negligent in exploding the blast complained of? (2) Was the injury complained of by plaintiff caused by such an explosion, and, if so caused, was it the natural and proximate result of such explosion? (3) Was the plaintiff guilty of any negligent or wrongful act which contributed to and helped cause the injury?"

Whether the injury happened at all is thus omitted from the calculation. This assumption of hurt seems to have run through the whole charge. A single excerpt on that subject is sufficient. Referring to the assessment of damages, the court said: "In considering that question you are to take into consideration the pain and suffering the plaintiff Mrs. Salmi has endured and will endure as the natural result of the injury she received. You are also to take into consideration the impairment of health . . . through the injuries she received for such time as . . . her health has been impaired and will be impaired by reason of her injury, which impairment of health has prevented her from attending to or performing her usual and ordinary work, and also her pain and suffering which naturally results from the physical impact as a consequence of the injury received.

In thus assuming that the plaintiff had received an injury, the court was in error. Yarnberg v. Watson, 13 Or. 11, 4 Pac. 296; Kelley v. Highfield, 15 Or. 277, 14 Pac. 744; Salomon v. Cress, 22 Or. 177, 29 Pac. 439; Owens v. Snell, 29 Or. 483, 44 Pac. 827; Savage v. Savage, 36 Or. 268, 59 Pac. 461; West v. McDonald, 67 Or. 551, 136 Pac. 650.

Again, it was urged by the defendant that the plaintiff was afflicted with rupture prior to the June explosion, and there was evidence proper to be submitted to the jury on that subject. Apropos of this, the defendant requested the court to charge the jury in substance that, not having pleaded the same, the plaintiff could not recover for aggravation of a rupture existing prior to the first explosion; but the court refused to so instruct. This is error within the doctrine of Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 46 Or. 15, 68 L.R.A. 477, 78 Pac. 983; Dorn v. Clarke-Woodward Drug Co. 65 Or. 516, 133 Pac. 351; Boatright v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. 68 Or. 26, 135 Pac. 771.

We think there was no material error in allowing the plaintiff's witnesses to describe the condition of her premises as to the deposit of débris thereon when they were there soon after the occurrence complained of, especially as there was other testimony tending to show that the state of the property was the same as at the time of explosion. It was helpful in determining the force of the blast and its effectiveness in frightening the plaintiff into the faint she describes. It was erroneous to allow testimony concerning an alleged promise of the defendant's local manager to the plaintiff's husband that no blasting would occur while the latter was away from home. The action is not predicated upon a breach of contract, but is one of pure tort, and hence the testimony should be confined to the issues set out in the pleadings. On the main question presented it was proper to hold that fright should be reckoned as one of the causes in the succession leading to the injury; but, for the error of assuming the existence of hernia caused by the defendant, the admission of testimony about the manager's promise and the refusal to instruct the jury against assessing damages L.R.A.1915D.

for aggravation of a previous trauma, the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Moore, Ch. J., and McBride and Benson, JJ., concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

CHARLES E. KOONTZ

v.
BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY and
NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY, Trustee.

(220 Mass. 285, 107 N. E. 973.)

Judgment — nonresident — absence of service.

1. No judgment can be entered against a foreign corporation which has appeared specially for the purpose of pleading in abatement, or moving that the action be dismissed, if no personal service of process is shown.

Garnishment — cars of a foreign corporation.

2. Cars of a foreign railroad company engaged in interstate commerce are not subject to garnishment when in possession of a local company also engaged in interstate commerce, under an agreement by which the local company might transport to destination loaded cars coming into its possession, and employ the cars in its business for a per diem compensation, where it would be practically impossible for the local company to carry on its business independently of the arrangement.

(February 26, 1915.)

Note. — Attachment or garnishment of foreign railroad car.

This note is supplementary to the earlier notes on the same subject appended to Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 64 L.R.A. 501, and Seibels v. Northern C. R. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1026.

Cars owned by a foreign railway company which have temporarily come into the state in the course of interstate transportation, through the agency of other carriers, are subject to attachment under the state laws, despite the provisions of the interstate commerce act and of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 10058, securing continuity of transportation. Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. ed. 708, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907.

And a foreign railroad company having a REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for determination by the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while in defendant's employ, in which a motion by defendant for dismissal was allowed, and a motion by the trustee to be discharged was denied. Order of dismissal affirmed. Motion to be discharged granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles Toye, for plaintiff:

If defendant desired to contradict the officer's return, it should not have waived its answer in abatement, and it then would have been entitled, as a matter of right, to have the facts in dispute found by the jury, since a jury trial was claimed in the case, and not waived.

O'Laughlin v. Bird, 128 Mass. 600; Oliver Ditson Co. v. Testa, 216 Mass. 123, 103 N.

E. 381; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 101, 42 L. ed. 964, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526.

Plaintiff's act in attaching by trustee process the defendant's cars in the custody and possession of the trustee, within the territorial jurisdiction of the superior court, had no tendency to regulate interstate commerce, although indeed it might be indirectly affected thereby.

Rosenbush v. Bernheimer, 211 Mass. 146, 97 N. E. 984, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1317; Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. ed. 708, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907.

Mr. Frederick Foster, for defendant:

Service upon defendant was insufficient.

Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Assn. 215 Mass. 341, 102 N. E. 316; Lowrie v. Castle, 198 Mass. 82, 83 N. E. 1118; Kim-traffic contract with a local company cannot defeat an attachment of its cars within the state, because of the rights of the local company under the contract, where the latter is not made a party to the proceeding. De Rochemont v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. H. 158, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 529, 71 Atl. 868.

Attaching a car of a foreign railroad company when found idle within the state, under a statute permitting it in order to enable local creditors to collect their debts, is not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce. Ibid.

Nor is it invalid under the Federal statute giving railroad companies authority to carry property on its way to other states, and to contract with roads of other states, so as to form continuous lines of transportation. Ibid.

A state statute permitting the attachment of idle cars of foreign railroad companies is not invalid as tending to promote the evils at which the interstate commerce act of Congress is aimed, nor as directly or indirectly tending to defeat any of the purposes which Congress had in view when the statute was enacted. Ibid.

And where an attachment sued out by a creditor of a nonresident railroad company was levied upon one of its freight cars standing idle and empty upon the spur track of another railroad company, which under a contract with such foreign owner was in possession of such car, with a right to use, load, and send it beyond the limits of the state, and an order was obtained to sell the car after ten days' notice, it was held in Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 131 Ga. 245, 62 S. E. 177, upon the hearing of an application for injunction by the company having such possession to prevent the sale of the car, that it was not error to grant such injunction conditioned upon its giving bond in a named sum to return the car to the proper officers of the court after its right to use the car under the contract expired. The court said: "One of the questions involved in this case was passed on by this court in the case of Southern Flour & Grain Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 127 Ga. 626, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 853, 119 Am. St. Rep. 356, 56 S. E. 742, 9 Ann. Cas. 437. We have been requested to review and overrule this decision. However, we think the ruling there made is correct, and will not disturb it. We do not think the levy of an attachment against a nonresident railroad company on one of its freight cars standing empty and idle on the spur track of a railroad in this state is invalid, and a sale thereof cannot be enjoined on the ground that such levy and sale are an interference with interstate commerce or the duties of a common carrier to the public, or on the ground that a part of the property of a nonresident railroad corporation serving the public as a common carrier cannot be sold under attachment to pay its debts, but the collection of the debt should be made by the sequestration of the earnings of such nonresident corporation, or on any other ground referred to in the case cited supra. See also ground referred to in the briefs of the counsel for the plaintiff. See the authorities re Atlanta v. Grant, 57 Ga. 340; Drake, Attachm. 7th ed. § 252a, p. 253; Kneeland, Attachm. § 321, p. 237. The fact that the plaintiff held the car under the contract referred to would not make the levy of the attachment on it illegal. If the plaintiff was a hirer of the property in question, the judgment of the court granting the injunction, provided the plaintiff gave bond to return the car as provided for in the order, was one of which the plaintiff cannot complain in this case. Civil Code 1895, § 2913. An attachment can be levied on property of a debtor, though hired to another before the attachment is issued. There is nothing in Civ. Code 1895, § 2913, preventing an attachment from being levied on such property, and we know of no other statute having such effect."

ball v. Sweet, 168 Mass. 105, 46 N. E. 409; Green v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 205 U. S. 530, 51 L. ed. 916, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 595; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Corporation Comr. v. Electric Storage Battery Co. 188 Mass. 239, 74 N. E. 467, 3 Ann. Cas. 631.

There was no effectual attachment of defendant's property.

Wright v. Oakley, 5 Met. 400; Edwards v. Warren Linoline & Gasoline Works, 168 Mass. 564, 38 L.R.A. 791, 47 N. E. 502; Peabody v. Hamilton, 106 Mass. 217; Nye v. Liscombe, 21 Pick. 263; Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. 187 Mass. 596, 73 N. E. 885; Staniels v. Raymond, 4 Cush. 314.

The attachment was void under restrictions in the statutes upon the right to attach freight cars.

Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. 187 Mass. 596, 73 N. E. 885.

An unreasonable burden was imposed on the trustee.

Van Camp Hardware & Iron Co. v. Plimpton, 174 Mass. 208, 75 Am. St. Rep. 296, 54 N. E. 538; Drake, Attachm. 3d ed. 452; Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. supra; Rozenbush v. Bernheimer, 211 Mass. 146, 97 N. E. 984, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1317; Johnson v. Union P. R. Co. 145 Fed. 249, 29 R. L. 80, 132 Am. St. Rep. 799, 69 Atl. 298; Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 52 W. Va. 485, 64 L.R.A. 501, 94 Am. St. Rep. 948, 44 S. E. 294; Connery v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 92 Minn. 20, 64 L.R.A. 624, 104 Am. St. Rep. 659, 99 N. W. 365, 2 Ann. Cas. 347; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. 1 Ill. App. 399; Southern Flour & Grain Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 127 Ga. 626, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 853, 119 Am. St. Rep. 356, 56 S. E. 742, 9 Ann. Cas. 437.

The attachment would be an interference with interstate commerce.

Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall. 584, 22

But in Pullman Co. v. Linke, 203 Fed. 1017, where a foreign sleeping car en route from a city within the state to one without the state, while waiting at a junction with its passengers, both intra and inter state, aboard to be picked up by a through train and taken to its destination, was attached under a state writ and forcibly held by the sheriff, compelling the passengers to disembark and accept other accommodations, it was held that, under § 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 584, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8563, providing that the term "common carrier" as used in the act shall include sleeping car companies, the car, at the time of the attachment, was an instrumentality of interstate commerce, and was not subject to attachment under a state writ, which would directly interfere with its operation in such capacity. The court said: "That the statute under which the seizure was made is a valid state law, enacted to enable creditors to collect their debts, and for no other or ulterior purpose, and evinces no conscious purpose to regulate directly or indirectly interstate commerce, is not controverted; nor is it claimed, nor can it be successfully asserted, that the acts of Congress relating to interstate commerce were intended to abrogate the attachment laws of the state. Within their proper sphere, the Federal acts are paramount; but beyond that, the state law, whose purpose is wholesome, is operative as against all that come within its provisions. Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. supra. In that case the warning is sounded that interference with interstate commerce by the enforcement of attachment laws of a state must not be exaggerated. But when there is incompatibility between the obligations an interstate carrier has to its creditors and the obligations it has to the public, either from the nature of its services or under the acts of Congress, the instrumentalities of interstate commerce transportation are, for the time being, 'immune from judicial process,' and are 'put apart in a kind of civil sanctuary,' being, under such circumstances, exempt from attachment and, of course, from execution as well, by reason of the provisions of such acts for continuity of transportation and avoidance of transshipment of freight and passengers. Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 176, 54 L. ed. 719, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468, 18 Ann. Cas. 907. A sleeping car company, it is true, by furnishing sleeping cars under a contract with a railroad company to be used by the traveling public, does not thereby assume or acquire the status of a common carrier of goods or passengers, . . . unless declared to be such by some constitutional or statutory provisions. It merely furnishes accommodations to the passengers of another company, and performs only an auxiliary function in their transportation; but it is nevertheless engaged in a public calling. . . . Section 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 584, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8563, provides that the term 'common carrier' as used in that act shall include sleeping car companies. By virtue of this statutory provision, the plaintiff's status at the time of the seizure of the car was in legal contemplation the same as that of an interstate carrier. The car, moreover, was an instrumentality of commerce, and was when seized actually employed as such in interstate transportation. It is asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants that, in view of the facts disclosed, the acts of Congress, and the commerce clause of the national Constitution, the car in question at the time of its seizure was 'immune from judicial process.' The views of the state courts, when required to decide upon the liability of cars to judicial process when in

L. ed. 173; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Murphey, 196 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 444, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, 2 Ann. Cas. 514; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126; Union P. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. ed. 428; Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 41 L. ed. 1110, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 34 Fed. 481; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 19 L.R.A. 387, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 522, 54 Fed. 730; Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 52 W. Va. 485, 64 L.R.A. 501, 94 Am. St. Rep. 648, 44 S. E. 294; Connery v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 92 Minn. 20, 64 L.R.A. 624, 104 Am. St. Rep. 659, 99 N. W. 365, 2 Ann. Cas. 347; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. 1 Ill. App. 399; George D. Shore & Bro. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 76 S. C. 472, 57 S. E. 526, 11 Ann. Cas. 909; Pullman Co. v. Linke, 203 Fed. 1017.

Mr. John L. Hall, for the trustee:

The attachment of the cars was void.

Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. 187 Mass. 596, 73 N. E. 885; Hall v. Carney, 140 Mass. 131, 3 N. E. 14.

The court will not require the trustee to suffer pecuniary loss by reason of the attachment.

Coffee v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 155 Mass. 21, 28 N. E. 1128; Bowers v. Connecticut River R. Co. 162 Mass. 312, 38 N. E. 508; Foster v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 21, 72 N. E. 331; Ladd v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 193 Mass.

given attitudes and employed in interstate commerce, have been discordant, as noted in the Davis Case. No attempt will be made to review the cases there cited, or others of a kindred character which diligent counsel have pressed upon the court, or those in which the courts have passed upon the right to levy upon instrumentalities employed in the transportation of the United States mail (Harmon v. Moore, 59 Me. 428; Parker v. Porter, 6 La. 169), and which are claimed to be analogous to the case at bar. The situation of the car involved in the present case was unlike not only that of any car whose seizure was under consideration in any of the cases cited, but also that of the instrumentalities employed in the carriage of the United States mails whose attachment provoked the rule announced in the Harmon and the Parker Cases, respectively. The car was not empty or idle, or waiting for return shipment, or unnecessarily delayed in the course of business, or in process of loading or unloading, or awaiting the commencement of a journey or the next trip. It had already entered upon a lengthy and continuous journey, bearing interstate passengers who were in nowise connected with or concerned in the controversy between Gillett and the plaintiff, and who had acquired by purchase from the railroad company and the plaintiff for the whole of their respective journeys the valuable contractual rights of transportation and sleeping car accommodations on that particular car. . . . The switching of it from one train to another was an essential part of its journey, and while being so switched it was still in use in interstate commerce. The temporary suspension of its movements was but an incident in, and did not take it out of, the course of its transportation, or impart to it a local character only. . . . Having started with its load of human freight on its ultimate passage from Columbus to L.R.A.1915D.

Washington city, and being in the course of transportation to another state, it had ceased to be governed exclusively by the domestic law, and had begun to be and was governed and protected by the national law of commercial regulation. . . . The impounding of the car delayed (briefly though it was) the transportation of all the passengers both in the car and on the train to which it was to be attached, and, in disregard of their rights and the policy of Congress favoring continuous lines and continuous carriage (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 10058), enforced the transshipment of interstate passengers. The transportation of passengers from one state to another is in its nature national, is commerce between the states, is beyond the reach of state legislation, and admits of and requires uniformity of regulation through Congress, affecting alike all the states.

. . . The attachment levied on plaintiff's car directly stopped, though temporarily, the delivery, and required the transshipment of interstate passengers. It not merely incidentally and indirectly affected interstate commerce, but bore upon it so directly as to amount to its regulation. The state law, though enacted in the exercise of powers not controverted, may not be so used as to produce such a result, and the attachment must therefore be held invalid. . . . If the writ of attachment is susceptible of the application made of it by the defendants, litigants may at their pleasure cause the transshipment of interstate freight and passengers with its incident delay, and thereby produce great inconvenience, discomfort, and hardship, and necessarily interfere directly with the freedom of interstate commerce, continuous and rapid transportation, and the conduct of carriers in the management and disposition of their interstate business. But this may not be done." W. W. A.

359, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 79 N. E. 742, 9 Ann. Cas. 988; McNamara v. Boston & M. R. Co. 202 Mass. 491, 89 N. E. 131; Hale v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 190 Mass. 84, 76 N. E. 656; Van Camp Hardware & Iron Co. v. Plimpton, 174 Mass. 208, 75 Am. St. Rep. 296, 54 N. E. 538; Boston Type & Stereotype Foundry Co. v. Mortimer, 7 Pick. 166, 19 Am. Dec. 266; Smith v. Stearns, 19 Pick. 20; Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. 187 Mass. 596, 73 N. E. 885; Johnson v. Union P. R. Co. 145 Fed. 249, 29 R. I. 80, 132 Am. St. Rep. 799, 69 Atl. 298; Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 52 W. Va. 485, 64 L.R.A. 501, 94 Am. St. Rep. 948, 44 S. E. 294; Connery v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 92 Minn. 20, 64 L.R.A. 624, 104 Am. St. Rep. 659, 99 N. W. 365, 2 Ann. Cas. 347; Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. ed. 708, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907.

The enforcement of the attachment would interfere with interstate commerce.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 196, 6 L. ed. 70; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall. 584, 22 L. ed. 173; Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. ed. 708, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907; Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 52 W. Va. 485, 64 L.R.A. 501, 94 Am. St. Rep. 948, 44 S. E. 294; Connery v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 92 Minn. 20, 64 L.R.A. 624, 104 Am. St. Rep. 659, 99 N. W. 365, 2 Ann. Cas. 347; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. 1 Ill. App. 399; George D. Shore & Bro. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 76 S. C. 472, 57 S. E. 526, 11 Ann. Cas. 909; Seibels v. Northern C. R. Co. 80 S. C. 133, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1026, 61 S. E. 435; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The amended return on the writ having been insufficient to show any personal service on the defendant, a foreign corporation, described in the writ as having a usual place of business at Boston in this commonwealth, the court could not enter judgment against the company, which has appeared specially for the purpose of pleading in abatement, or to move that the action be dismissed. Stat. 1903, chap. 437, § 62; Rev. Laws, chap. 170, § 1; Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 10, 10 N. E. 705; Needham v. Thayer, 147 Mass. 536, 18 N. E. 429; Kimball v. Sweet, 168 Mass. 105, 46 N. E. 409; Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Asso. 215 Mass. 341, 343, 102 N. E. 316; Lawrence v. Bassett, 5 Allen, 140; Crosby v. Harrison, 116 Mass. 114. But as the action was begun by trustee process, the L.R.A.1915D.

court, if the trustee is charged, can enter a valid judgment against the property attached. Sprague v. Auffmordt, 183 Mass. 7, 66 N. E. 416; Lowrie v. Castle, 198 Mass. 82, 83 N. E. 1118; Rev. Laws, chap. 170, §§ 1, 6. The question whether the alleged trustee should be charged depends upon its answer, which is to be taken as true, as no interrogatories have been filed. Rev. Laws, chap. 189, §§ 9-17; Fay v. Sears, 111 Mass. 154; Corsiglia v. Burnham, 189 Mass. 347, 75 N. E. 253.

To maintain an effectual attachment there must be at the date of service a subsisting cause of action which the debtor can enforce against the trustee in his own name, or the debtor must have intrusted to, or deposited with the trustee, specific goods or effects. Wart v. Mann, 124 Mass. 586; Casey v. Davis, 100 Mass. 124; Howland v. Wilson, 9 Pick. 18. It is expressly stated in the answer that at the date of service the trustee, an interstate railroad company, had in its possession a large number of freight cars the property of the defendant, also engaged in interstate commerce. The cars, if subject to garnishment, were undoubtedly goods or chattels within the meaning of Rev. Laws, chap. 189, §§ 12, 13, 19; Brown v. Floersheim Mercantile Co. 206 Mass. 373, 92 N. E. 494; Rosenbush v. Bernheimer, 211 Mass. 146, 97 N. E. 984, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1317. See also Stat. 1906, chap. 324; Stat. 1910, chap. 214, §§ 23, 24; chap. 559, § 3. If received here and to be returned in the ordinary course of business, we should hesitate to say that under no circumstances cars of a foreign railroad company would be subject to attachment under our laws, because the attachment temporarily might interfere with interstate commerce, or with the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 10058, securing continuity of interstate transportation. Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 54 L. ed. 708, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 410, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1546, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 579, 588, 58 L. ed. 1479, 1483, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 944; De Rochemont v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. H. 158, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 529, 139 Am. St. Rep. 673, 71 Atl. 868; Southern Flour & Grain Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 127 Ga. 626, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 853, 119 Am. St. Rep. 356, 56 S. E. 742, 9 Ann. Cas. 437; Compare Connery v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 92 Minn. 20, 64 L.R.A. 624, 104 Am. St. Rep. 659, 99 N. W. 365, 2 Ann. Cas. 347; Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 52 W. Va. 485, 64 L.R.A. 501, 94 Am. St. Rep. 948, 44

S. E. 294; and Seibels v. Northern C. R. Co. 80 S. C. 133, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1026, 61 S. E. 435. Doubtless the compulsory enforcement of a legal right by due process of law may result in a temporary interference with the carrier's business, but this was held in Martin v. West, 223 U. S. 191, 197, 56 L. ed. 159, 162, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42, not to offend against the commerce clause of the Constitution. The trustee, however, received and retained the cars under an arrangement or agreement with the defendant which gave it the right to despatch them to the place of destination on its own lines, instead of transferring the freight to its own cars for further and final transportation. It also could use the empty cars for the carrying of freight between different points on its own road, and on the lines of other railroad companies directly or indirectly connected with the railroad of the owner of the cars, upon payment of fixed daily charges, so long as any car remained on tracks that the trustee owned or controlled. The cars thus became for the time being part of its equipment, and compensation therefor ceased only when they passed out of the trustee's possession and control. Foster v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 21, 72 N. E. 331; McNamara v. Boston & M. R. Co. 202 Mass. 491, 89 N. E. 131.

If the trustee is chargeable, it must retain actual possession so that the cars can be seized on execution. Brown v. Floersheim Mercantile Co. 206 Mass. 373, 376, 92 N. E. 494. And if this precaution is not taken it would be answerable for their value, but not to exceed the amount of the judgment. Rev. Laws, chap. 189, §§ 57-65. Cornell v. Mahoney, 190 Mass. 265, 266, 76 N. E. 664; Thompson v. King, 173 Mass. 439, 53 N. E. 910. The bailment cannot be said to be in violation of any rule of public policy to which common carriers of freight should conform. And upon the further statement in the answer, that the cars were in actual use under the agreement at the time of service, and that to carry on its business as a carrier of property independently of the arrangement would be practically impossible, the trustee ought not to be subjected to the expense of unloading and redistribution of their contents, or to the pecuniary loss from interference with the use of the cars which would be incurred if, having been emptied, they were collected and retained unused to await the result of the litigation. Van Camp Hardware & Iron Co. v. Plimpton, 174 Mass. 208, 75 Am. St. Rep. 296, 54 N. E. 538; Cox v. Central Vermont R. Co. 187 Mass. 609, 73 N. E. 885. The trustee not being chargeable, it becomes unnecessary to determine L.R.A.1915D.

whether the attachment was invalid because of the plaintiff's failure to comply with the provisions of Rev. Laws, chap. 167, § 39, relating to the attachment of railroad cars in actual use making regular passages. The order of dismissal is affirmed, and the motion of the trustee to be discharged is granted.

So ordered.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

HATTIESBURG TRACTION COMPANY.

(— Miss. —, 67 So. 897.)

Eminent domain — crossing railroad tracks with street railways.

An exercise of the right of eminent domain is not necessary to enable a street railway company, having municipal authority to lay its tracks along a public highway, to cross the tracks of a railroad company which are laid across the street at grade.

(March 29, 1915.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Forrest County sustaining a motion to dissolve an injunction restraining defendants from attempting to install or use a crossing over complainant's land until the institution of eminent domain proceedings and the right to condemn a crossing has been determined. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Code 1906, § 1876, provides: "Street railway companies chartered under the laws of this state may acquire a right of way across railroads by condemnation by pro-

Note. — Right of railroad company to compensation for the crossing of its track, where it intersects a street or highway, by an electric road.

As to necessity of making compensation, and measure thereof, upon laying out street across railway property, see note to New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Rhodes, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1225.

This note supplements the notes to Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 29 L.R.A. 486, and South East & St. L. R. Co. v. Evansville & Mt. V. Electric R. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 916, in which the earlier cases upon the above question are considered.

The general rule laid down in the earlier notes prevails in Indiana, where it is held that a street railway is not an additional burden upon a street, and that the right of such railway to cross the tracks of a steam ceeding in accordance with the provisions in this chapter."

Messrs. Truly, Ratliff, & Truly, for appellant:

Under the provisions of the Constitution and statute, a street railway company cannot, without exercising the power of eminent domain, tear up the track of a railroad company and install its own crossing.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. State, 94 Miss. 759, 48 So. 561; Central Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 95 Md. 428, 52 Atl. 752; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. 76 Miss. 731, 45 L.R.A. 223, 26 So. 370; Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Cavenders Creek Gold Min. Co. 119 Ga. 354, 100 Am. St. Rep. 174, 46 S. E. 422; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Southwestern Teleph. & Telegr. Co. 58 C. C. A. 198, 121 Fed. 276; Slaughter v. Meridian Light & R. Co. 95 Miss. 251, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1265, 48 So. 6, 1040; Cumberland Teleph. & Telegr. Co. v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 90 Miss. 686, 44 So. 166; Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Seaboard Air-Line R. Co. 116 Ga. 412, 42 S. E. 761; Thompson v. Grand Gulf R. & Bkg. Co. 3 How. (Miss.)

railroad at a street crossing is subject to no conditions other than those to which the general public is subject in traveling over such street. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric Street R. Co. 52 Ind. App. 639, 99 N. E. 1018; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric R. Co. 42 Ind. App. 66, 83 N. E. 651. And the same result was reached in Galveston, H. & S. R. Co. v. Houston Electric R. Co. 57 Tex. Civ. App. 170, 122 S. W. 287.

And in Evansville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Evansville Belt R. Co. 44 Ind. App. 155, 87 N. E. 21, the rule was recognized that a steam railroad which has been granted a right to occupy a public street takes the right subject to the power of the city or town to authorize the construction of a street car line by proper means across the tracks of the railroad, and that the latter has no right to object to such crossing.

And it was held in Michigan C. R. Co. v. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric R. Co. supra, that the operation of a street railway being a proper use of a street and a form of passage within the scope of a highway dedication, a railroad which had dedicated land for a street across its tracks could no more object to the passage of street cars than to the passage of carriages, omnibuses, or any recognized mode of highway travel.

And in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Muncie & P. Traction Co. 174 Ind. 167, 91 N. E. 600, it was held that an inter-urban street railway carrying passengers, baggage, express, and freight was not an additional burden upon a street for which damages might be recovered, and that it had the right to lay its tracks across those of a railroad where they crossed a street L.R.A.1915D.

240, 34 Am. Dec. 81; Pearson v. Johnson, 54 Miss. 259; Stewart v. Raymond R. Co. 7 Smedes & M. 568; Pearson v. Johnson, 54 Miss. 259; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Frederic, 46 Miss. 1; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Montgomery County Pass. R. Co. 167 Pa. 62, 27 L.R.A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659, 31 Atl. 468; Cumberland Teleph. & Telegr. Co. v. Cassidy, 78 Miss. 666, 29 So. 762; Louisiana & N. W. R. Co. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 112 La. 915, 36 So. 803; Hopson v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 71 Miss. 503, 15 So. 37; Vicksburg v. Herman, 72 Miss. 211, 16 So. 434; Shreveport Traction Co. v. Kansas City, S. & G. R. Co. 119 La. 759, 44 So. 457; Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 53 Neb. 631, 39 L.R.A. 751, 74 N. W. 67; Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 119 Ala. 129, 24 So. 368.

Messrs. Stevens & Cook, for appellee:

Plaintiff had no such property in or on Main street as made it necessary for defendant to resort to eminent domain proceedings before installing the crossing.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Lake Erie, B. G. & with the consent of the trustees of the town, without the consent and against the will of the railroad, although the latter owned the land in fee.

In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chautauqua Traction Co. 54 Misc. 275, 104 N. Y. Supp. 550, it was held that a street railway company had not, under a franchise from a village and order from the State Railroad Commission, the right to cross the tracks of a steam railroad on an overhead bridge built by the latter to carry the travel of a street over its tracks, without the consent of the railroad, and without having applied to the court for the right to cross, or for the appointment of commissioners to fix the point of crossing or compensation to be paid under § 12 of the Railroad Law, Laws 1890, p. 1087, chap. 565, although chap. 754, p. 794, Laws 1897, vested the determination of the manner in which the crossing should be made in the State Board of Railroad Commissioners, since the provisions of § 12 were held to remain in full force as to the determination by court commissioners of the point of crossing and compensation.

And it appears in Olean Street R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 75 App. Div. 412, 78 N. Y. Supp. 113 (affirmed on opinion below in 175 N. Y. 468, 67 N. E. 1068), that commissioners appointed under § 12 of the Railroad Law, Laws 1890, chap. 565, as amended by Laws of 1892, chap. 676, have the right to fix the compensation to be paid by a street railway for crossing the tracks of a steam railroad. The question involved in that case was as to the power of the court to authorize a street railway which had applied for the appointment of commissioners to determine the compensation to temporarily lay its tracks across those of a steam road.

J. T. W.

N. R. Co. 146 Fed. 446; South East & St. L. R. Co. v. Evansville & Mt. V. Electric R. Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 918, note; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. General Electric R. Co. 50 C. C. A. 424, 112 Fed. 689; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steel, 47 Neb. 741, 66 N. W. 830; Southern R. Co. v. Atlanta R. & P. Co. 111 Ga. 679, 51 L.R.A. 125, 36 S. E. 873; General Electric R. Co. v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 184 Ill. 588, 56 N. E. 963; Williams Valley R. Co. v. Lykens & W. V. Street R. Co. 1 Dauphin, Co. Rep. 225; West Jersey R. Co. v. Camden, G. & W. R. Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 31, 29 Atl. 423; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 70 Conn. 610, 40 Atl. 607, 41 Atl. 169; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 65 Conn. 410, 29 L.R.A. 367, 32 Atl. 953; Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 26 L.R.A. 674, 12 C. C. A. 365, 22 U. S. App. 570, 64 Fed. 628; 36 Cyc. 419f; Central Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 95 Md. 428, 52 Atl. 752.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Mississippi Central Railroad Company owns and operates a railroad which extends through the city of Hattiesburg, crossing a number of the streets of the city, one of them being Main street. The Hattiesburg Traction Company is a street railway company, and has received from the city of Hattiesburg permission to lay its tracks in the city streets. In extending its track along Main street it became necessary to cross the track of the railroad company, and negotiations were entered into by it with the railroad company for that purpose; the traction company agreeing to install and maintain the crossing at its own expense. The two companies failed to reach an agreement in the matter, not by reason of any objection of the railroad company to the character of crossing proposed to be installed by the traction company, but mainly because that company would not agree to operate its road at the crossing in accordance with certain requirements of the railroad company.

Failing to obtain the consent of the railroad company to cross its track, the traction company proceeded one night to install the crossing without the knowledge of the railroad company. This fact was discovered by the railroad company the next morning before the installation was complete, and it thereupon filed its bill in the court below, praying that the traction company be enjoined "from attempting to install or use a crossing over the line and roadbed of complainant at Main street crossing in the city of Hattiesburg, until eminent domain proceedings have been instituted, and the L.R.A.1916D:

right to condemn a crossing has been judicially and finally determined."

Upon the filing of this bill a temporary injunction was issued and served upon the traction company, and this appeal is from a decree sustaining a motion to dissolve this injunction, and is for the purpose of settling the principles of the case. After the granting of this injunction, an agreement was entered into between the two companies by which the traction company was permitted, without prejudice to the rights of the railroad company in so far as this litigation is concerned, to complete the installation of this crossing and to use the same.

The reason assigned by the traction company for attempting to install this crossing during the night is that to do so would not then interfere with the movement of trains over the railroad track; it not having commenced the installation until the last train due to cross the street that night had passed. With the truth of this explanation, however, we are not here concerned. The sole question presented to us for decision is this: Has a street railway company, operating under municipal authority, the right to construct its track across that of a steam railroad at a point where it crosses a street of the municipality, without first instituting condemnation proceedings and paying the railroad company the damages therein awarded it?

It is true that a railroad company's right of way, when owned by it, is its private property, and cannot, under § 17 of our Constitution, "be taken or damaged for public use, except on due compensation being first made;" but it is equally true that a railroad company does not own the streets of a municipality along or across which its tracks are laid, neither can it acquire, under § 3322 of the Code, any exclusive right to the use of the streets of the municipality. The only right it can acquire in the streets of a municipality is the right to locate its tracks along or across them, subject to the right of the public to continue the free use thereof for traveling, and to the right of the municipal authorities to grant similar easements therein. In Pennsylvania Co. v. Lake Erie, B. G. & N. R. Co. (C. C.) 146 Fed. 446, a case wherein, as in the case at bar, the complainant was a railroad company and the defendant a street railway company, it was said that "complainant's bill assumes the possession by complainant of a right in the street which in law it cannot possess. The bill alleges that the defendant is about to enter upon complainant's 'right of way.' In the sense in which this term is used in the bill, the complainant has no right of way in the street; that is, it has no tangible property therein. True, it has in strictness a right of way across the street; but this right is of an intangible nature. It has no more substance than the right of way over a street possessed by a pedestrian. So that to say that the defendant is about to enter upon complainant's 'right of way,' meaning the right of way it possesses across the street, is to say that the defendant is about to do what any and everybody has a right to do at all times, subject only to the movement of complainant's trains. What the defendant proposes to do is to introduce in the public highway, at the point where complainant's tracks cross it, another public use thereof, under authority of the municipal legislation necessary in such cases. The complainant has no property in the street, and none on it except a few ties and rails. The disturbance of these for the purpose of suiting them to the new use to be made of the public highway is necessary, and results in no invasion of complainant's rights."

The rule here announced is in accord with all of the authorities dealing with this precise question that have come under our observation, most, if not all, of which, will be found set forth in the notes to 36 Cyc. 1420; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 29 L.R.A. 485, and South East & St. L. R. Co. v. Evansville & Mt. V. Electric R. Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 916.

A number of cases have been cited by counsel for appellant to the point that a railroad company's right of way is private property, and cannot be taken or damaged for public use except on due compensation being first made, in none of which, however, was the right of the street railway to cross the track of a railroad in a public street involved, except in the case of Central Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 95 Md. 428, 52 Atl. 752. In that case the street railway company undertook to cross the track of the railroad company in a public street, whereupon the railroad company filed a bill in the proper court, praying "for an injunction to restrain the street railway company from" crossing its track until it, the street railway company, would enter into an agreement to pay not only the cost of making the crossing, but the subsequent cost of keeping the crossing in repair, which repairs, it was insisted, should be made under the supervision and according to the direction of the engineer of the railroad company. While the litigation was pending, "the street railway company, under an agreement with the steam railroad company, made the crossing at its own expense, and the question as to the relative rights and obligations of the two companies . . . was reserved for the future determination of the court." It was held that the street railway company, before it crossed the track of the railroad company, must execute an agreement for the maintenance of the crossing. This was the only question decided in that case; and, if it is in point here, it is only authority for the proposition that, when a street railway company desires to cross the track of a railroad company in a public street, it must pay the expense of installing and maintaining the crossing. Neither of these questions, however, is here involved, for the reason that the street railway company has paid the expense of installing the crossing and proposed to bear the expense of maintaining it.

In the case of Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 119 Ala. 129, 24 So. 368, so much relied upon by counsel for appellant, no question of the right of one railroad company to cross the tracks of another in a public street was involved. That case was decided by the supreme court of Alabama on August 15, 1898, and on October 29, 1898, another phase of the matter in dispute between the parties thereto came again before that court for consideration in the case of Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 119 Ala. 137, 43 L.R.A. 233, 24 So. 502. An examination of the reports of the two cases discloses that the Birmingham Railway & Electric Company had granted to the town of Woodlawn, "for the use of the citizens and the public generally, an easement over that part of its right of way which is within the corporate limits of the town of Woodlawn, and which is not absolutely essential for the operation of its road, this amount being about 25 feet for double track, and such room as is necessary to erect poles and proper waiting stations."

In the first case the Birmingham Traction Company attempted not only to lay its track across that portion of the Birmingham Railway & Electric Company's right of way which had been granted to the town of Woodlawn for a public street, but also across the 25-foot strip actually occupied by the electric company, and not included in the street. This, the court held, could not be done without the consent of the electric company, in the absence of condemnation proceedings. In the second case the traction company was seeking to locate its track along that portion of the electric company's right of way which had been granted to the town for a street, and this the court held it could do without paying the electric company any compensation therefor, the court pointing out (119 Ala. 137) that the former case involved not the use by the traction company of that portion of the right of way over which the city had been granted an easement, but of the 25-foot strip reserved and actually occupied by the electric company.

Affirmed and remanded.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

(Division No. 1.)

MINNIE A. BOUTELL, Resp't.,

v.

EDWARD F. SHELLABERGER, Appt.

(— Mo. —, 174 S. W. 384.)

Husband and wife — liability for wife's torts.

A man is not, under statutes giving his wife the right to manage her separate property, liable for torts committed in the management of her statutory separate estate, such as injuries to a tenant by the operation of an elevator in her apartment house, where he was not present, and did not direct or otherwise participate in the management, although his express statutory exemption extends only to liability for debts and liabilities contracted by the wife before marriage.

(March 2, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for expenses incurred and loss of services of her minor son on account of injuries sustained by the alleged negligent operation of an elevator. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Marley & Marley, for appellant:

The husband is not liable for the torts committed by his wife in the management of her separate estate.

Staley v. Ivory, 65 Mo. 74; Gillies v. Lent, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. 455; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 209, 17 L.R.A. 521, 32 N. E. 47, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 177; Peak v. Lemon, 1 Lans. 297; Fiske v. Bailey, 51 N. Y. 150; Baum v. Mullen, 47 N. Y. 577; Rowe v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 230; Lansing v. Holdridge, 58 How. Pr. 449; Eagle v. Swayze, 2 Daly, 140; Mangam v. Peck, 111 N. Y. 401, 18 N. E. 617; Choen v. Porter, 66 Ind. 196; D. Wolff & Co. v. Lozier, 68 N. J. L. 103, 62 Atl. 303; Brownson v. Gifford, 8 How.

Note. — On the question of the effect of married women's acts upon husband's liability for wife's torts, see notes to Kellar v. James, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1003; Jackson v. Williams, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 840; and Hageman v. Vanderdoes, L.R.A.1915A, 491. BOUTELL v. SHELLABERGER seems to be the only case on the point arising since the last note.

L.R.A.1915D.

Pr. 395; Graham v. Tucker, 56 Fla. 307, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 531, 131 Am. St. Rep. 124, 47 So. 563; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328, 2 N. E. 793; Russell v. Phelps, 73 Vt. 393, 50 Atl. 1101; Harrington v. Jagmetty, 83 N. J. L. 548, 83 Atl. 880; Gustine v. Westenberg, 224 Pa. 455, 73 Atl. 913; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009, 94 Pac. 360; Shane v. Lyons, 172 Mass. 199, 70 Am. St. Rep. 261, 51 N. E. 976; Walker v. Swayze, 3 Abb. Pr. 136; Hinds v. Jones, 48 Me. 349; Martin v. Robson, 65 Ill. 137, 16 Am. Rep. 578; Greenleaf v. Beebe, 80 Ill. 520; Madden v. Gilmer, 40 Ala. 637; Mhoon v. Colment, 51 Miss. 60; Bacon v. Bevan, 44 Miss. 293; Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 644; Pom. Code Rem. 222; Bliss, Code Pl. § 86.

Messrs. Brewster, Kelly, Brewster, & Buchholz and Hogsett & Boyle, for respondent:

A person injured by the tort of the wife in the management of property owned by her has a cause of action against both the husband and the wife for such tort.

Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374, 21 S. W. 907; Nichols v. Nichols, 147 Mo. 408, 48 S. W. 947; Taylor v. Pullen, 152 Mo. 434, 53 S. W. 1086; Bruce v. Bombeck, 79 Mo. App. 236; Merrill v. St. Louis, 83 Mo. 244, 53 Am. Rep. 576, s. c. 12 Mo. App. 466.

The plaintiff having a cause of action against both Rosa R. Shellabeger and Edward F. Shellabeger, and being entitled by law to one satisfaction therefor, had the right to bring suit thereon jointly against both or against either, as plaintiff might think proper.

Badgley v. St. Louis, 149 Mo. 122, 50 S. W. 817; Noble v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 171, 68 S. W. 969; Hutchinson v. Richmond Safety Gate Co. 247 Mo. 110, 152 S. W. 52; Winn v. Kansas City Belt R. Co. 245 Mo. 412, 151 S. W. 98.

Blair, C., filed the following opinion:

Respondent lived with her minor son in an apartment house in Kansas City, and the son was injured by the alleged negligence of the operator of an elevator maintained in the building by the owner for the use of the occupants. Appellant's wife owned the building. Under our statute it was her statutory separate property, having been acquired in 1899, and was leased and managed by her, through her agent, independently of her husband.

This action for damages was begun against appellant and his wife. No service having been had upon the wife, the case proceeded to judgment against the husband alone, and he appealed.

This record presents the question whether a husband is liable for the torts of his wife committed by her in the management of her separate real property; the husband neither being present, directing, or otherwise participating therein. This question has been passed upon in many jurisdictions. In practically all of them it is held that, in circumstances like those in this case, the husband is not liable. The question has never been squarely decided by this court.

The decisions in other jurisdictions fall into several classes: First. Those under statutes expressly exempting the husband from liability. These are not in point here, because founded upon such statutes. Second. Those which hold that the effect of statutes substantially like ours, affecting married women, has been to sweep away all liability of the husband for the wife's torts. Third. Those holding that the husband's liability for the wife's torts remains unaffected by married women's statutes, and now includes liability in circumstances like those in the instant case. These are few. Fourth. Those holding that the married women's statutes do not affect the husband's liability for the torts simpliciter, the purely personal torts, of the wife, and that this remains as at common law; but that the husband is not liable for the wife's torts when committed in the management of her separate property and out of the husband's presence, not under his direction, and without his participation.

The courts of this state consistently hold that, despite our statutes affecting the status of married women, the husband is still liable for the wife's purely personal torts, as at common law. Instances are: Nichols v. Nichols, 147 Mo. 407 et seq., 48 S. W. 947, in which case the husband and wife were sued by their daughter-in-law for their act in alienating from her the affections of her husband, their son; Taylor v. Pullen, 152 Mo. 434, 53 S. W. 1086, in which case the basis of the action was slander uttered by the wife, "without the presence, knowledge, or consent" of the husband; Bruce v. Bombeck, 79 Mo. App. 231, in which case the facts were that the wife (so the jury found) was racing a horse in a city street and negligently struck and injured plaintiff.

The case of Wirt v. Dinan, 44 Mo. App. 583, was one in which the wife was charged with stealing cattle and selling them to plaintiff, falsely representing them as her own, and that she was unmarried. The suit was to recover the amount paid the woman for the cattle. The husband was held liable. The case arose prior to the enactment of the statute capacitating the wife to be sued as feme sole, though she might sue to protect her separate property. L.R.A.1915D.

sonality. Acts of 1883, p. 113. Ellison and Gill, JJ., concurred in the result only. The opinion is to the effect that the wife's contract was void, and that it was as if it had never been; that to sustain the action did not give any effect to the contract, and consequently it was, in effect, a simple action for the wife's fraudulent representations, and fell within the general common-law rule defining the husband's liability for the wife's torts. Whether we approve or disapprove the reasoning employed and the result reached, it is clear the decision adds nothing to those already mentioned, but falls within the same class.

Since these decisions, and their like, deal only with the simple personal torts of the wife, they are not authority beyond that field. For such torts the husband was liable at common law, and the husband's liability for such torts these cases hold is unaffected by the statutes changing the status of married women.

In this case the apartment house was Mrs. Shellabarger's statutory separate estate. By the express terms of the statute (§ 8309, Rev. Stat. 1909), it was "under her sole control" and in no way liable for her husband's debts. With respect to her right to manage the property, and to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, and enforce and have enforced against her property any judgments rendered for or against her, the statute (§ 8304, Rev. Stat. 1909) explicitly provides she shall be deemed a feme sole.

Under the common law, had there been no statutes affecting the situation, the husband would have been entitled to the use of the apartment house, and the wife could have made no contract concerning it, nor could she have had an agent in connection with it. The statute, however, declaring that the wife's property, real and personal, shall be her separate property, and it shall "be under her sole control," and declaring that she "shall be deemed feme sole, so far as to enable her to carry on and transact business on her own account, to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued," etc., both excludes the husband as a factor so far as the wife's property, business, and contracts are concerned, and provides remedies against her in behalf of those who have rights to enforce. To hold that such a sweeping change in the wife's status introducing relations and activities on the part of the wife unknown to the common law, opening a field for torts by the wife which her former status made impossible, left the husband liable for torts committed by her in connection with the management of her separate property, would be not merely to adhere blindly to an ancient rule, but to attempt to bring within it things which could not have been within its purview, as formerly understood.

The statutes wholly emancipate the wife, at least so far as her separate property is concerned, and open new fields of endeavor closed to the wife by the common law. Since the husband is left no legal right to intermeddle with the business affairs and property of the wife, it is not logical to admit him to her new sphere solely that he may pay damages for torts the wife commits therein, excluding him for all other purposes.

The great weight of authority supports the conclusion that the husband is not liable in this case. Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 17 L.R.A. 521, 32 N. E. 47, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 177; Rowe v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 230; Henley v. Wilson, 137 Cal. loc. cit. 274, 58 L.R.A. 941, 92 Am. St. Rep. 160, 70 Pac. 21, citing Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, §§ 320, 321; D. Wolff & Co. v. Lozier, 68 N. J. L. loc. cit. 107, 52 Atl. 303; Harrington v. Jagmetty, 83 N. J. L. 548, 83 Atl. 880; Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. § 135, p. 197; Vanne-man v. Powers, 56 N. Y. loc. cit. 43.

It is urged, however, that in Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374, 21 S. W. 907, this court passed upon the question here involved and committed itself to the position opposed to that taken in the cases just cited. An examination of the authorities in other jurisdictions discloses that such is the general reputation of the case of Flesh v. Lindsay. Such, however, is not its character. In that case the principal question discussed was whether the wife could be held for loss caused by the falling, in 1887, of a party wall weakened by the negligence of workmen making repairs on a building erected on a lot inherited by the defendant wife in 1877. The workmen were employed by the husband, with the knowledge and consent of the wife. That case is not in point, as appears from the facts: (1) That the property there involved was not the separate property of Mrs. Lindsay, as the court expressly states in the opinion, and as the facts stated clearly show; (2) that the statutes making the wife's realty her separate property, and declaring it should be under her sole control, and declaring she should be deemed a feme sole with respect to her right to transact business, contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, were not enacted until 1889, two years after the tort was committed in 1887, and were prospective in effect; (3) and that the real question discussed was not the husband's liability, but that of the wife. Flesh v. Lindsay is not in point.

Nor is the act of 1881 (Laws 1881, p. L.R.A.1915D.

161) opposed to the conclusion that the husband is not liable in this case. That act is to the effect that "the husband's property, except such as may be acquired from the wife, shall be exempt from all debts and liabilities contracted or incurred by his wife before their marriage."

In Nichols v. Nichols, 147 Mo. 407 et seq., 48 S. W. 947, it was said that "upon the familiar principle of expressio unius, exclusio alterius," the act was "a positive expression of the legislative intent as to the extent to which" the married women's statutes should exempt the husband from liability for the wife's torts. That case, however, involved the question as to the husband's liability for the wife's torts simpliciter. It cannot be supposed that the act was intended to extend the field of the husband's liability. When it was passed (in 1881) the wife could have no statutory separate estate in realty. Such separate estate as she might have called for a trustee and was equitable. Besides the act of 1881 can hardly be held to modify the effect of the acts of 1889, relating to married women. The re-enactment of the act of 1881 in the revised bill of 1889 merely continued it as before, and added nothing to its force or effect. The construction given the act of 1881 in Nichols v. Nichols, supra, is fully preserved by applying it now to the legal status in the light of which it was first enacted. This was all that was done in the Nichols Case.

We conclude that, under the facts of this case, appellant is not liable. The judgment is reversed.

All concur; Woodson, J., in separate opinion.

Woodson, J., concurring:

I fully concur in the opinion of my learned associate filed in this case, not only for the reasons therein stated, but for the further reason I never have nor never will subscribe to the doctrine that the husband is responsible for any of the torts of his wife, those committed after the enactment of the married woman's act of 1889.

There was a show of reason and justice for that rule prior to the emancipation of the wife and property from the grasp of the husband. Then he took possession of her person and property by nature of the marriage; they becoming one, and he that one, and as an incident thereto he swallowed up her property also. Having thus absorbed the personnel of his wife and her property, it was considered but just that he should assume all of the responsibilities for which she otherwise would have been liable. Otherwise no redress whatever could have been had for the torts committed by her.

But now, under the liberal legislative enactments and judicial rulings, completely emancipating the wife from her husband in all property and business relations, it seems to me that there is no longer a vestige of law, reason, or justice left upon which to base a claim for damages against the husband for the separate torts of the wife. Such rulings are, in my opinion, wrong in morals and a travesty upon justice.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. C. STARLING, Admr., etc., of Alma Starling, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

SELMA COTTON MILLS.

(168 N. C. 229, 84 S. E. 388.)

Negligence — dangerous premises — injury to child.

1. A mill owner is negligent in permitting a fence inclosing a reservoir with perpendicular sides, and filled with 7 or 8 feet of water, to the top of which a sloping embankment leads on the outside, to become dilapidated, when the reservoir adjoins the playground of the children of the mill operatives, so as to be liable for the death of a five-year-old boy who, while at play, crawls through the fence for a drink and is drowned.

Judgment — nonsuit — res judicata.

2. A voluntary nonsuit is not res judicata.

(March 3, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Chatham County granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for the death of his intestate which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. Jones & Son and Douglass & Douglass for appellant.

Messrs. L. H. Allred, F. H. Brooks, and Manning & Kitchin, for appellee:

Defendant had exercised reasonable care and foresight in providing the fence as a protection, which was sufficient to measure up to the duty that it owed.

Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & P. Co. 148 N. C. 396, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 62 S. E. 600; Ferrell v. Dixie Cotton Mills, 157 N. C. 528, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 64, 73 S. E. 142, 3 N. C. C. A. 306; Greer v. Damascus Lumber Co. 161 N. C. 144, 76 S. E. 725; Benton v. North Carolina Public-Service Corp. 165 N. C. 354, 81 S. E. 448; 3 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 6th ed. § 705, p. 1846; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467, 63 N. W. 915.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. The plaintiff's intestate, a bright little boy five years of age, was drowned in a reservoir on defendant's premises Saturday afternoon, February 20, 1909. The reservoir was about 50 feet around, with a brick wall around it. It was 2 or 3 inches from the top of the brick wall to the water on the inside. Rev. Mr. Morris testified that there had been a fence around the reservoir, and that there was still " . . . a piece of one there at the time of the drowning of the little boy, Alma Starling." He testified that the fence was put up with post-oak posts skinned and the bark taken off, and slatted up between the posts, which were 8 feet apart, with slats fastened with small nails. These slats were 3 inches apart at the bottom, and wider apart going up, till they were 8 inches apart at the top. The fence was 3½ or 4 feet high. This reservoir was close to the mill and near the tenement houses of the operatives, and their small children played around it almost every day, rolling their hoops up and down the platform on the side of the reservoir. The father of Alma Starling, who was a mill operative, lived 210 feet from the reservoir. The witness testified further: "The fence around the reservoir was decayed and rotted and falling down. Some of it had fallen off. There were several places around the reservoir where the slats had fallen off, mostly on the side of the street where they had hauled coal. The slats had fallen off at the bottom. There

Note. — The doctrine of attractive nuisance is the subject of an extended note appended to Cahill v. Stone, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094. The specific question as to the applicability of the doctrine to ponds, reservoirs, waterways, etc., is discussed at page 1143 of that note, and in the later note to Thompson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1101. And see also later cases in this series, Riggle v. Lens, L.R.A. 1915A, 150; Romana v. Boston Elev. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915A, 510; and Cœur d'Alene Lumber Co. L.R.A.1915D.

v. Thompson, L.R.A. 1915A, 731. For the application of the doctrine to walls, fences, etc., see note to Coon v. Kentucky & I. Terminal R. Co. ante, 160.

Various other concrete aspects of that doctrine are treated in notes which may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes, "Negligence," §§ 23, 23a.

Generally as to duty of property owner to trespassing children, see note to Walsh v. Pittsburg R. Co. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 559.

was one hole in the fence. I could crawl through. That hole was something like 10 feet from the place where the body was found. There were three places where the fence had rotted down. I had talked with Mr. Rose, the superintendent, about the condition of the fence, and heard him speak about it. It had been in that condition for some time. Pretty soon after this drowning I got orders to put the fence up. The reservoir was about 15 feet from the mill. There was a passageway between the reservoir and the mill. There is a sloping earth bank on the outside that leads up to the top of the wall on which the fence was built."

The water on the inside, he said, came within 2 or 3 inches of the top of this wall. The posts were 8 feet apart, and the wall was 16 or 18 inches broad at the top. The slope of the wall on the outside was gradual.

There is also evidence that small children were playing about the reservoir and all around it every day. The reservoir was 25 or 30 steps from the front end of the mill. Small children of varying ages played around the reservoir, where there was a grassy place and trees for the children to play.

One of the little companions of the deceased boy testified that Alma went through the hole in the fence to get some water to drink in the tin cup, and fell in and was drowned; that he easily went through the hole near the bottom of the fence, which was 12 to 18 inches wide.

There were several witnesses who testified to the same effect, that the reservoir, which was 7 or 8 feet deep, was surrounded by a fence which had been suffered to become dilapidated, with many holes through it, and that children five or six years old and under were in the habit of playing around the reservoir, and that the management of the mill knew of it.

It does not admit of debate that the fact that such a dangerous place was unguarded by a secure fence where children of that age were allowed to play was culpable negligence on the part of the officers of the defendant. The very fact that a fence had been put up, of itself, shows that these authorities were aware of the danger. To permit it to become dilapidated was negligence. It may be that, if the defendant had put on evidence, a different state of facts could have been shown or matters in excuse. But, upon the evidence before us, it was clearly error to grant a nonsuit.

This case has no resemblance to Briscoe v. Henderson Lighting & P. Co. 148 N. C. 396, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 62 S. E. 600. That decision was put upon the ground that the child was a trespasser and of an age to be guilty of contributory negligence. But even in that case it was said that, when children are trespassers, liability will be enforced in many cases where there would be no liability if the injury had been sustained by persons of maturer age. The humane judge who wrote that opinion says on page 411 of 148 N. C.: An "infant who enters upon premises, having no legal right to do so, either by permission, invitation, or license, or relation to the premises or its owner, is as essentially a trespasser as an adult; but if, to gratify a childish curiosity, or in obedience to a childish propensity excited by the character of the structure or other conditions, he goes thereon and is injured by the failure of the owner to properly guard or cover the dangerous conditions which he has created, he is liable for such injuries, provided the facts are such as to impose the duty of anticipation or prevision; that is, whether, under all of the circumstances, he should have contemplated that children would be attracted or allured to go upon his premises and sustain injury."

But in this case these children were not trespassers. They were five or six years old, and were at their usual playground, where they went every day, which fact was necessarily known to the management of the mill. This playground was in the immediate proximity to the reservoir and to the mill, and the officials knew the danger of the children falling in there either in their play or in attempting to get water to drink, as this little boy did. The outside bank was sloping, and the children could climb up easily and would be tempted to do so naturally. On the inside the water came up within 2 or 3 inches of the top, and the wall on the inside was perpendicular, with the water 7 or 8 feet deep. A more dangerous situation could not have been devised. The management of the mill were aware of the danger, as is shown by their putting a fence around it. Indeed, the danger was self-evident. The children were those of the operatives of the mill, and were, so to speak, on their own grounds. They were not trespassers certainly. There is much evidence that the fence was dilapidated, and direct testimony that the little boy went through a hole in the fence near the ground. There was evidence that his playmate told him that it was dangerous, but the child was too young to be guilty of contributory negligence.

The fact that a nonsuit had been formerly taken is not res judicata. Hood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 627, 47 S. E. 607, and cases there cited; Helms v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 143 N. C. 394, 8 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 249, 118 Am. St. Rep. 811, 55 S. E. 831, 10 Ann. Cas. 643; Tussey v. Owen, 147 N. C. 338, 61 S. E. 180; Eureka Lumber Co. v. Harrison, 148 N. C. 333, 62 S. E. 413. Nor can we sustain the motion that a cause of action is not stated.

The judgment of nonsuit is reversed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

ANABEL MILLER

v.

JAMES C. MILLER.

(— Vt. —, 92 Atl. 9.)

Divorce — domicil — wife leaving state.
That a wife compelled to leave her hus-

Note. — Character of residence essential to give jurisdiction in divorce proceedings.

The earlier cases on this question will be found in notes to Bechtel v. Bechtel, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, and Winans v. Winans, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 992. The scope of the note is sufficiently indicated in the earlier notes.

Severally, as to right of wife to acquire a separate domicil for the purposes of a divorce suit by her, see note to Carty v. Carty, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297.

And as to local domicil or residence as a condition of jurisdiction of action for annulment of marriage, see note to Montague v. Montague, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 745.

In 14 Cyc. 584, it is said that "under the statutes of nearly, if not all, the states plaintiff must ordinarily be a resident of the state at the time the action is commenced."

To establish a bona fide residence within the meaning of a statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings, it is not sufficient to show the mere fact of residence, where it appears that there was a matrimonial domicil in a foreign state, and the claim is that the party invoking the jurisdiction has become a resident of the state. The test to be applied is: "There must be a voluntary change of residence; the residence at the place chosen for the domicil must be actual; to the factum of residence there must be added an animus manendi; and that place is the domicil of a person in which he has voluntarily fixed his habitation, not for a mere temporary or special purpose, but with a present intention of making it his home, unless or until something which is uncertain or unexpected shall happen to induce him to adopt some other permanent home." Williams v. Williams, 78 N. J. Eq. 13, 78 Atl. 693.

An "actual bona fide resident" within the meaning of a statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings was said in Sneed v. Sneed, 14 Ariz. 17, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 99, 123 Pac. 312, to mean a person who is in the state to reside permanently, and who, L.R.A.1915D.

band's domicil goes to another state with the intention not to return unless he sends for her does not destroy her residence in the state, so as to deprive its courts of jurisdiction over a proceeding for divorce begun by her under a statute requiring a year's residence in the state to entitle one to maintain such action.

(October 14, 1914.)

EXCEPTIONS by libellee to rulings of the County Court for Orange County made during the trial of an action for divorce, which resulted in a verdict for libellant. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. David S. Conant, for libellee:

The residence of the libellant must be the same as her domicil.

at least for the time being, entertains no idea of having or seeking a permanent home elsewhere. In this case it was held that a woman could not, by leaving her husband and removing to another state because there had been a few quarrels between them over property, without violent or mental distress which would destroy her health, acquire "an actual bona fide residence" in the state to which she removed, within the maintain such action.

The above rule was laid down also in Andrade v. Andrade, 14 Ariz. 379, 128 Pac. 813, as the test of whether the plaintiff in that case had been at the time of the commencement of the action for divorce an actual bona fide resident of the state for one year. The court also quoted the rule laid down in the note on this question in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, that "abiding in a place for a definite time until the accomplishment of a certain purpose, unaccompanied by any intention to remain permanently or indefinitely, is not sufficient to give a person a statutory residence."

In Harrison v. Harrison, 117 Md. 607, 84 Atl. 57, it was said that for a valid change of domicil, there are two requisites, namely, an act and an intent; that no definite duration of residence is requisite to accomplish the acquisition of a new domicil, but that what is required is that there shall be a clear, definite intent and an act done in the execution of that intent.

And under the California statute it was said in Smilie v. Smilie, 24 Cal. App. 420, 141 Pac. 829, that the residence can be changed only by the union of act and intent; that intention to change one's domicil is ineffectual unless accompanied by an actual change in the place of abode.

So, the mere intention of the wife, who at the time of the marriage was a resident of Pennsylvania, that she would return after the marriage to live in that state, and that her husband's domicil in New York should not be hers, even though communicated to the husband and assented to by him, will not entitle her to claim that her residence continued to be in Pennsylvania

Anderson v. Anderson, 42 Vt. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 334; Patch v. Patch, 86 Vt. 225, 84 Atl. 815.

Messrs. E. W. Smith and Frank S. Williams, for libellant:

Petitioner's husband's domicile was in Newbury; therefore her domicile was there, and Orange county was the proper place to bring her petition for a divorce.

Loker v. Gerald, 157 Mass. 42, 16 L.R.A. 498, 34 Am. St. Rep. 252, 31 N. E. 709; Ayer v. Weeks, 65 N. H. 248, 6 L.R.A. 716, 23 Am. St. Rep. 37, 18 Atl. 1108; Re Wickes, 128 Cal. 270, 49 L.R.A. 138, 60 Pac. 867; Bechtel v. Bechtel, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, and note, 101 Minn. 511, 112 N. W. 883.

after the marriage, within the meaning of a statute requiring a year's residence in the state by an applicant for divorce, where following the marriage the parties lived and cohabited in New York. Barning v. Barning, 46 Pa. Super. Ct. 291.

And intention alone, it was said in Turner v. Turner, 87 Vt. 65, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 88 Atl. 3, cannot retain a residence every vestige of which is gone, with no place left to which the party has the right to return. Therefore, intention by one removing with all his effects from a town which is not his domicile of origin, to retain his residence there, is not sufficient to effect that result for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction of a divorce proceeding, if he has in that place neither property nor home nor place to which he has a right to return.

The rule laid down in an earlier case—De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652, 24 N. E. 996, cited in the note on this question in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100,—was approved in Butler v. Butler, 134 N. Y. Supp. 108, that the term "residence" as used in the statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings is synonymous with inhabitancy or domicile. And it was held that one did not lose his residence in New York by going to Canada for his health, when he expected to return to New York and resume business upon his recovery, and left there his household and personal effects.

"The residence contemplated by the expression of the statute 'a bona fide residence' means something more than an abode more or less permanent. It denotes a 'residence' within the legal meaning of the word 'domicil,' that is, an abode animus manendi, . . . a place where a person lives or has his home, to which, when absent, he intends to return, and from which he has no present purpose to depart." Cohen v. Cohen, — Del. —, 84 Atl. 122, holding that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should be a citizen of the state to maintain an action for divorce, if he was a bona fide resident.

And in Halpine v. Halpine, 52 Pa. Super. Ct. 80, it was said that the residence re-

*L.R.A.*1915D.

Powers, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These parties were married at Chicago in the fall of 1911, and came at once to Newbury, Vermont, to reside. They lived together there on a farm owned by the libellee and his brother until May, 1912, when, on account of the husband's cruel treatment, the libellant was compelled to leave him. She went back once for a reconciliation, but was in effect turned away by him and forbidden to return. She then went back to Chicago, and did not intend to return to Vermont unless her husband came for and requested her to do so. This he never did, though there was some correspondence between them looking toward a resumption of marital relations at Newbury. She remained in Chicago until she quired by a statute providing that an applicant for divorce shall have resided in the state for the term of one year is "a bona fide residence animus manendi—a residence acquired with domiciliary intent—as distinguished from a mere coming into the state with the sole intent to abide there long enough to obtain a divorce and then return to the former domicile."

But the fact that the plaintiff in an action for divorce was moved to go to the state as one in which he could obtain a divorce more speedily and readily than in the state of his former domicile, and for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, would not, it was said in Gildersleeve v. Gildersleeve, — Conn. —, 92 Atl. 685, prevent him from acquiring a new domicile in the state to which he removed. It was said that "whatever the motive or purpose actuating a change of domicile may be, the tests to be applied in determining whether one has in fact taken place do not include them. The sole considerations are: (1) An actual change of residence; and (2) the absence of an intention to remove elsewhere. . . . There is no rule of law which prevents one from changing his domicile in order to facilitate his obtaining a divorce, or to secure other advantages he may think that the laws of the new domicile may afford him. He is free to change at his pleasure, but the change must be a bona fide one to be effective. If actual and bona fide, the change will be accomplished." And the rule was quoted that if "the animus really exists to remain there permanently, the fact that the motive of removal is to procure a divorce is immaterial."

The words "actual resident, in good faith, of this state for one year," in a statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings, are the equivalent of "domiciled in this state for one year." And the "domicil" is the place in which, both in fact and intent, the home of the person is established without any purpose to return to a former home." Connolly v. Connolly, — N. D. —, 146 N. W. 581.

So, the term "residence," within the came back here to prosecute her libel for a divorce. The court below granted the libellant a divorce, and the libellee insists that this was error, because the libellant lacked the year's residence required by Rev. Stat. 3071.

The term "reside" is used in different senses, and if this statute makes actual living here for the time specified a prerequisite, the libellant fails to make a case; for she was living in Chicago, and not in Vermont, during that time. But, having in mind the evil which the statute was designed to guard against,—fraudulent divorces,—we do not think that, in a case like this, it is necessary for the libellant to actually live in this state during the year preceding the filing of her libel. It is sufficient if her legal domicile is here. This is generally so held, and sufficiently appears from Turner v. Turner, 87 Vt. 65, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 505, 88 Atl. 3. And her legal domicile was here, because her husband's was here; and the general rule is that the husband's domicile is that of the wife. True it is that, when compelled by his misconduct to leave him, she may acquire a separate residence. Patch v. Patch, 86 Vt. 225, 84 Atl. 815. But she is not obliged to do so. He cannot by his bad conduct compel her to acquire a new domicile for herself; she may retain his, though she lives elsewhere. Duxstad v. Duxstad, 17 Wyo. 411, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1138, 100 Pac. 112.

So here the libellant's domicile was at Newbury, and was not lost by the mere act of removal, but continued until she acquired a new one somewhere else. Turner v. Turner, supra. To make a change of domicile effective, she must have not only gone to Chicago and lived there, but she must have had the intention of remaining there and making that city her home. Blondin v. Brooks, 83 Vt. 472, 76 Atl. 184. Neither meaning of a statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings on the court where either the plaintiff or the defendant resides, was construed in Harrison v. Harrison, 117 Md. 607, 84 Atl. 57, as the equivalent of domicile. It was said that the same term was to be found in the statutes of the state relating to the right to be registered, and that in all the cases involving that right the construction had been uniform, the term having the legal significance of domicile; and that no reason was apparent why a more lax construction should be given to the word as it is used in the statute with regard to divorce.

And to a similar effect is Barber v. Barber, 89 Misc. 519, 151 N. Y. Supp. 1064, the rule being laid down that the requirement of residence, as that term is used in a statute conferring jurisdiction in divorce proceedings if the plaintiff is a resident of the state when the offense is committed, and when the action is commenced, is not satisfied by mere actual and bodily presence of the plaintiff in the state, even for a long period; but that, as there used, residence is synonymous with domicile.

The Nevada statute, prior to the amendment of 1913, provided that divorce may be obtained by complaint to the district court of the county in which the cause therefor accrued, or in which the defendant shall reside or be found, or in which the plaintiff shall have resided for six months before bringing the suit. In 1911 a statute was passed defining what should constitute legal residence within the state, to the effect that legal residence is that place where the party "shall have been actually, physically and corporeally present within the state or county, as the case may be, during all of the period for which residence is claimed by him or her; provided, however, should any person absent himself from the jurisdiction of his residence with the intention in good faith to return without delay L.R.A.1915D.

and continue his residence, the time of such absence shall not be considered in determining the fact of such residence." Under these statutes, it was held in Fleming v. Fleming, 36 Nev. 135, 134 Pac. 445, that the plaintiff had not resided for six months within the county in which he sued for a divorce, where a month after coming into the county he accepted employment which required an indefinite absence, and by reason of which he had been during three of the six months continuously in another county, although his postoffice address remained in the county in which suit was brought, and his personal effects were also left there, and he returned to that county and continued to live there during the two months immediately preceding the bringing of the action.

The statute of 1911 was said in Fleming v. Fleming, supra, aside from the proviso, neither to limit nor enlarge, but rather to emphasize, the original provisions of the statute.

The term "residence" was distinguished from domicile in Fleming v. Fleming, supra, the court saying that actual residence was made by the statute the basis upon which the court acquired jurisdiction, and that in this respect residence must be distinguished from domicile; that one may have his domicile in one state and yet be a resident of another; that "giving to the word 'resided' as used in the statute . . . its plain ordinary significance, it must necessarily be construed to require an actual living in the county for six months preceding the filing of the suit. The word 'resided' in its general acceptance carries with it the idea of permanency as well as continuity. It does not mean living in one place and claiming a home in another; it does not mean a constructive or imaginary residence in Washoe county, while actually living or abiding or being in some other county. Our statute, as contrasted with similar statutes in other residence alone, nor intention, without more, would be sufficient. It is not found that the libellant intended to make Chicago her place of abode. All that is found is that she did not intend to return to Newbury unless her husband came for her,—which is quite a different thing, and does not fulfill the requirement of the rule. Turner v. Turner, supra. The rule apparently approved by Mr. Bishop is thus stated: "If the wife is plaintiff, and by the local law it is necessary for plaintiffs in divorce controversies to be domiciled in the country, she may sustain herself on her husband's domicile there, though she is in fact living abroad; and he cannot set up, in answer to this position, his own wrong, on account of which she has lawfully acquired another domicile."

This is going further than we are required to go in the case in hand, for as we have seen the findings here do not show that the libellant has acquired a domicile in Chicago. The author quoted admits that the doctrine of the text is denied in some jurisdictions, and it is shown in the note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. at page 149, that some courts hold that the maxim that the wife's domicile follows her husband's cannot be invoked in her favor to confer jurisdiction when she, being a nonresident, applies for a divorce in the state of the husband's domicile. But the views herein expressed are within the following authorities: Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 312; Dunlop v. Dunlop, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 20; Maaten v. Maaten, 15 N. H. 159; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156, 23 Am. Rep. 299; Smith v. Smith, 19 Neb. 706, 28 N. W. 296; Davis v. Davis, 30 Ill. 180; Duxstad v. Duxstad, supra,—a case in which the facts were essentially as here.

Affirmed, and cause remanded for a new time of payment of alimony to be fixed.

states, makes no provision as to residence in the state, but bases the jurisdiction upon the residence in the county; hence actual residence in the county where the suit for divorce is instituted is necessary to convey jurisdiction to the court in which the complaint is filed. In this respect there must be a keen contract drawn between a mere legal residence, sometimes termed 'domicil,' and an actual residence. Legal residence consists of fact and intention combined; both must concur, and when one's legal residence is fixed, it requires both fact and intention to change it. Actual residence, on the other hand, is the place of actual abode, of physical presence,—the abiding place. One may have an actual residence in one county and a legal residence or domicile in another. It is our judgment that the residence required by the statute . . . and contemplated by the session act of 1911 was actual residence; that is, physical corporeal presence, and not alone legal residence or domicile."

In 1913 the Nevada statute was amended by adding a provision that when at the time the cause of divorce accrues, the parties are not both bona fide residents of the state, no court shall have jurisdiction to grant a divorce unless either the plaintiff or the defendant shall have been a bona fide resident of the state for a period of not less than one year next preceding the commencement of the action. Tiedemann v. Tiedemann, 36 Nev. 494, 137 Pac. 824. As to the constitutionality of the amendment, see Worthington v. District Ct. — Nev. —, L.R.A.—, 142 Pac. 230.

Actual residence, and not merely a constructive domicile, on the part of the wife, was regarded in Wacker v. Wacker, 154 App. Div. 495, 139 N. Y. Supp. 78, as necessary to the maintenance of the action by her, under a statute conferring jurisdiction in separation proceedings where both parties are residents of the state when the action is commenced, the court saying that the term "both" in the provision "where both parties are residents" was significant, and would have not been used unless it was intended that both parties should reside in the state. So that it was held that a wife could not maintain an action against the husband in New York for separation, where the parties were married in Germany, and the husband, abandoning the plaintiff, came to New York and thereafter made his residence in that state, and the wife at the time of the beginning of the action had never been in the United States.

As to whether a wife may invoke the maxim that a wife's domicile follows the husband's, for the purpose of sustaining the jurisdiction of a court of the husband's domicile over a suit by her for divorce when she is actually a resident of another state, see cases cited at page 149 of the note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 135. It will be noted that in neither MILLER v. MILLER, nor in Duxstad v. Duxstad, 17 Wyo. 411, 100 Pac. 112, cited in the opinion, did the jurisdiction depend solely upon the affirmative of that proposition, as there was some evidence tending to negative a separate domicile.

Actual residence, as distinguished from a legal residence, which may be maintained in one place while actually living in another, was said also in Dickinson v. Dickinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 205, to be required by a statute providing that no suit for divorce shall be maintained unless the petitioner at the time of exhibiting the petition is an actual bona fide inhabitant of the state, and shall have resided in the county where the suit is filed six months next preceding the bringing of the suit.

And the residence required by the above statute must be continuous; it is not necessary that every day or perhaps every week should be passed in the county, but the bulk of the time should be passed there. Ibid.

On the principle that a temporary absence would not defeat the jurisdiction of the court under the Texas statute, it was held in McLean v. Randell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 1116, that the fact that the wife, after leaving her husband, went to another county and remained there with her married daughter until the trial in the divorce proceedings, the petition for divorce having been filed two days after she left her husband, would not prevent her bringing the action in the court of the county in which she and her husband had resided.

And a mere temporary absence during the year, when the permanent bona fide residence within the state remains unchanged, will not defeat the right to maintain an action for divorce under a statute requiring an applicant for divorce to have resided in the state at least one whole year previous to the filing of the petition, but the period of such bona fide residence within the state must include the time of the filing of the petition, and the whole of the previous year. Heath v. Heath, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 118.

The continuous residence contemplated by a statute conferring jurisdiction in actions for a separation of husband and wife, when the parties, having been married without the state, have become residents of the state, have "continued to be residents thereof at least one year," and the plaintiff is such a resident when the action is commenced, is a residence continued up to the time of the separation, and not merely an uninterrupted residence of one year by the husband and wife at any period antecedent to the commencement of the action. Elwell v. Elwell, 70 Misc. 61, 128 N. Y. Supp. 495.

Where the husband separates from the wife, with whom the children of the marriage remain, his place of residence is to be determined as if he were "a person having no family," within the meaning of a statute providing that the domicile of every person is the place where his family permanently resides, or, if he has no family, the place where he "shall generally lodge shall be considered his domicile." Smith v. Smith, 136 Ga. 197, 71 S. E. 158.

It has been said that one may have a residence in a boarding house as well as in a rented building or property owned outright; that the question is not how the party lived, but whether she has determined to make the place her home. McClintock v. McClintock, 147 Ky. 409, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1127, 144 S. W. 68. In this case it was held that a wife who left her husband because of cruel treatment and went to another county, having no home of her own to which to go, might acquire a residence in such county, although she did not go to housekeeping, but merely stopped with a relative.

Under a statute providing that the petitioner in a proceeding for divorce from bed and board until the parties are reconciled, L.R.A.1915D.

shall be a domiciled inhabitant of the state, and still have resided therein such length of time as to the court in its discretion shall seem to warrant the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by the statute, the acquirement of a residence or domicile must precede the preferment of the petition, and one cannot present a petition for divorce with the expectation or hope of thereafter acquiring such a residence or domicile. Walker v. Walker, 32 R. I. 28, 78 Atl. 339. The court, however, expressly stated that it did not mean to imply that in a proper case, one of urgent necessity, a wife could not become a domiciled inhabitant of the state by residing therein separate and apart from her husband one day or even a fractional part thereof for the purpose of becoming a petitioner for divorce. R. E. H.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF ALFRED I. MILLER,
Deceased.

(90 Kan. 819, 136 Pac. 255.)

Appeal — denial of administration.

1. An appeal may be had from a decision of the probate court refusing to appoint an administrator and grant administration of the estate of a nonresident intestate, where the decision is based upon the ground that such intestate left no property in the state to be administered.

Executor — situs of stock.

2. The situs of shares of capital stock in a Kansas corporation owned by one who was a resident of another state at the time of his death, for the purpose of administration, is at the domicile of the decedent, rather than in the state in which the corporation is organized and has its place of business.

(Johnston, Ch. J., and Mason and Smith, JJ., dissent.)

(November 8, 1913.)

Headnotes by JOHNSTON, Ch. J.

Note. — What assets will give jurisdiction to appoint administrator.

This note is supplementary to the note to Manning v. Leighton, 24 L.R.A. 684.

These notes do not include cases involving conflict between different administrators who have been appointed in different jurisdictions, as to the right to administer upon particular assets.

Necessity for assets.

Unless a statute so requires, the possession of an estate by a resident decedent is not a prerequisite to jurisdiction for the appointment of an administrator. Holburn v. Pfanmiller, 114 Ky. 831, 71 S. W. 940;

A PPEAL by the executrix of the estate of Alfred I. Miller, deceased, from an order of the District Court for Labette County, directing the probate court to appoint an administrator of such estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. A. Osgood, Paul H. Kimball, John E. Bishop, and Thomas H. Cobbs, for appellant:

The situs of the stock is St. Louis, the domicile of the deceased, and not Parsons, the domicile of the corporation.

Cook, Corp. § 361; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall 490, 22 L. ed. 189; Covington v. First Nat. Bank, 198 U. S. 100, 49 L. ed. 963, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 562; Newark City Bank v. Fourth Ward As-essor, 30 N. J. L. 13; State, Fish, Prosecutor, v. Branin, 23 N. J. L. 484; Griffith v. Watson, 19 Kan. 23; Hutchins v. State Bank, 12 Met. 421; Middlebrook v. Merchants' Bank, 41 Barb. 481; Brown v. San Francisco Gaslight Co. 59 Cal. 426; Luce v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 63 N. H. 588, 3 Atl. 618; Simpson v. Jersey City Contracting Co. 165 N. Y. 193, 55 L.R.A. 796, 58 N. E. 896.

The court erred in overruling the motion to dismiss the appeal.

Graves v. Bond, 70 Kan. 464, 78 Pac. 851; Grimes v. Barratt, 60 Kan. 259, 56 Pac. 472.

Messrs. Glasse & Burton for appellee.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Involved in this appeal is the question

Connors v. Cunard S. S. Co. 204 Mass. 310, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, 134 Am. St. Rep. 662, 90 N. E. 601, 17 Ann. Cas. 1051; Watson v. Collins, 37 Ala. 587.

No particular amount of assets is necessary to give the surrogate court jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of one who was an inhabitant of the state and was killed within the jurisdiction. Welch v. New York C. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 610.

So, the fact that there were no assets above exemptions or subject to administration is no ground for withholding administration on the estate of a resident decedent on petition of one holding a note against intestate with waiver of exemptions. Wheat v. Fuller, 82 Ala. 572, 2 So. 628.

But under a Code provision that if from any cause an estate is unrepresented, and not likely to be represented, the ordinary may vest the administration in the clerk of the superior court of the county, but that if the estate does not exceed in value the sum allowed by law to the widow and children, no administration shall be necessary, it is error for the ordinary to make the clerk administrator of an intestate, who died in the county without any estate, so as to enable a pending suit to be carried on against his representative. Lowery v. Powell, 109 Ga. 192, 34 S. E. 296.

And there should be no grant of administration where the only property left by the deceased, who apparently was a resident, was his personal clothing, which the widow had taken, and the apparent motive of the application was to enable the petitioner to bring a suit against the administrator to quiet title, the court saying that the object of administration is to pay the debts and distribute the surplus to the heirs, and in order to have administration there must be property to be administered. Murray's Estate, Myrich, Prob. Ct. Rep. (Cal.) 208.

And the probate court has no authority to issue letters of administration on the estate of one who was a nonresident of the state, and who left no property in the state, Mallory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 53 Kan. 557, 36 Pac. 1059.

So, where the decedent, a nonresident of L.R.A. 1915D.

the state, had neither tangible property nor a bona fide cause of action against any person residing in the county where application for administration was made, the ordinary did not have jurisdiction to grant administration. Berry v. Van Hise, 134 Ga. 615, 68 S. E. 423; Power v. Green, 139 Ga. 64, 76 S. E. 567.

And where an intestate was domiciled and died outside of the state, there can be no valid grant of administration in the state unless he left assets in the state, or such assets have come into the state since his death. McCord v. Thompson, 92 Ind. 565.

What value necessary.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 684.

The mere existence of local assets, irrespective of amount or value, will support a local grant of administration upon the estate of a resident decedent. Barlass v. Barlass, 143 Wis. 497, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1111, 128 N. W. 58.

In the absence of a statutory provision on the subject there is no positive rule of law that an estate must be of a given value as a condition precedent to the grant of letters testamentary, so, where intestate died while on a visit to the state, leaving two trunks and a valise, with their contents, and a small sum of money, the appointment of an administrator was authorized, and he could collect for the benefit of local creditors the balance of the purchase price of property sold in the state of intestate's residence, which was held by a trustee in the state where he died. Turner v. Campbell, 124 Mo. App. 133, 101 S. W. 119.

The status of intestate's property at the time of his death governs; so, where a resident intestate left $36, the fact that it was afterwards used to pay funeral expenses is immaterial, and a grant of administration was proper. Barlass v. Barlass, supra.

Likewise where deceased had property on his person at the time he was killed, consisting of a purse, $5 in money, and a claim for $25, the fact that it was sent out whether an administrator can be appointed in Kansas in a case where the deceased owned no property in Kansas, but did own certain shares of stock in a corporation organized under the laws of Kansas, and having its general offices in the state, and is there an appeal from a decision by the probate court refusing to appoint an administrator on the application of one of the creditors of the estate? Alfred I. Miller, a resident of St. Louis, Missouri, died in 1911, owning stock in a Kansas corporation called the Tishomingo Electric Light & Power Company, which had its principal place of business in Parsons, Kansas. P. T. Foley, who alleged that Miller was indebted to him in the sum of $43,858.40, and that no will had been filed in any other probate court of the state, and no administration had been commenced in any other county of the state, applied to the probate court of Labette county for the appointment of an administrator, representing that Miller owned stock in the Kansas corporation named, that an executor of the estate had since been appointed in Missouri, and that the claim of Foley had been filed in the court appointing the executor. The probate court refused to appoint an administrator, and dismissed the application, holding that it had no jurisdiction or power to make such an appointment. An appeal from that decision was taken to the district court, where it was held first, that the decision was appealable, and, second, that the probate court had erred in holding that it had no power to appoint an adminis-of the state to his widow would not defeat jurisdiction of the local courts to appoint an administrator. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bradley, 51 Neb. 596, 71 N. W. 283, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 244.

Under a statute providing for the appointment of an administrator in any county where there may be any debts or demands owing to an intestate, jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of a nonresident intestate is not defeated by the fact that the debtors had claims against the estate of decedent which might be set off against the amounts they owed. Hyatt v. James, 8 Bush, 9.

In Wheeler v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1, 14 Pac. 501; and Horton v. Trompeter, 53 Kan. 150, 35 Pac. 1106, which involved the jurisdiction of the courts to appoint administrators of resident minor decedents, the court, though acting upon the theory that some assets were necessary to give jurisdiction, sustained the appointments upon showings that insignificant amounts of personal property were owned by decedents.

And in Cox v. Kansas City, 86 Kan. 298, 120 Pac. 553, the suit of clothes which a nonresident decedent was wearing at the time of his death, valued at about $1.50, was held sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of his estate.

Personal property generally.

Money found upon the body of an unknown person upon the high seas, which has come into the registry of the United States district court, will give jurisdiction for administration by the public administrator of the county in which it is located. United States v. Tyndale, 54 C. C. A. 324, 116 Fed. 820.

The courts of Louisiana have no jurisdiction to administer the estate of a decedent domiciled in another state where the only property of decedent was of a personal or movable nature, as this species of property follows the domicile and is administered by its laws. Thomas's Succession, 35 La. Ann. 19.

Debts due decedent, generally.

For the purposes of administration, a debt due the estate of a deceased person from a debtor who resides in a different state from that in which the creditor was domiciled at the time of his death, is an asset at the place where the debtor resides, whether such debt be evidenced by simple contract, specialty, or judgment recovered prior to the death of the creditor. So, the debt of a judgment follows the judgment debtor when he removes to another state, and is bona notabilia there, which will give the probate court jurisdiction to appoint an ancillary administrator. Miller v. Hoover, 121 Mo. App. 568, 97 S. W. 210.

Under a statute providing that letters of administration shall be grantable in the case of a nonresident decedent by the register of the county where the principal part of the goods and estate of such decedent shall be, the situs of a debt evidenced by a promissory note which was brought into the state by the executor of a foreign decedent was in the county where the note was brought, not the county of the residence of the debtor. Viosca's Estate (Engelskirger's Appeal) 197 Pa. 280, 51 L.R.A. 876, 47 Atl. 233.

The courts of Louisiana have no authority to appoint an administrator to collect a debt due by a New York creditor to one who was a resident of and died in the state of Kentucky. Moise v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 45 La. Ann. 736, 13 So. 170.

Deposit in bank.

A deposit in a bank in a state, which is subject to withdrawal by check or surrender of the bank book, held and owned by a nonresident at the time of his death, constitutes property situated in the state, so as to give the probate court jurisdiction to entertain a petition for administration. Gregory v. Lansing, 115 Minn. 73, 131 N. W. 1010.

trator of the estate, and that it was the duty of that court to exercise the power and make the appointment. From that ruling, an appeal was taken to this court.

We have, first, the question, Is there an appeal from a decision of the probate court refusing to appoint an administrator? That court is vested with the power and charged with the duty of caring for the estates of deceased persons and of granting letters of administration. In the executors and administrators act it is provided that an appeal may be taken from certain decisions, and also from "a final decision of any matter arising under the jurisdiction of the probate court, except in cases of habeas corpus and injunction." Gen. Stat. 1909, § 3624.

Whether there shall be administration of the Miller estate is probate jurisdiction, and the decision holding that administration could not be had, and that no administrator of the estate could be appointed in Kansas, was a final decision of the whole merits of the application. The case of Grimes v. Barratt, 60 Kan. 259, 56 Pac. 472, is cited as an authority against the right of an appeal from such decision. That case did not determine that there could be no review of a final decision of the probate court refusing administration of an estate; but it did determine that the legislature had vested large discretion in the probate court in the selection of administrators, and that the exercise of that discretion was not the subject of review or appeal. The statute designates a number of persons who are entitled to ad-

Contingent claim.

The contingency that an insurance policy on the life of the deceased might be canceled, in which event certain premiums would be returned to his estate, the policy not being payable to the decedent or his estate, is not such an asset as would authorize the court to appoint a clerk administrator, over the objection of the wife and children of the deceased. Guerry v. Pullen, 112 Ga. 314, 37 S. E. 391.

Equitable claim.

Although the sole property of the estate is an equitable claim or demand, the probate court should treat such a claim as property justifying the issuance of letters in advance of its establishment, and should not await the action of a court of equity in establishing the validity of the same, nor should it, sitting as court of equity, itself try the controversy, and, as it determines it in favor of or against the asserted equity, grant or withhold letters of administration. Re Daughaday, — Cal. —, 141 Pac. 929.

And where personal property which had belonged to the estate was held by an heir under a title which might be void or voidable, the appointment of an administrator to collect and distribute the assets of deceased was proper. Re Acken, 144 Iowa, 519, 123 N. W. 187, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1166.

But a mere claim advanced by an applicant for administration that property owned by the son of deceased was purchased with money belonging to deceased does not constitute property within the state which will warrant the granting of administration. Beach's Appeal, 76 Conn. 118, 55 Atl. 596.

Judgments.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 687.

For the purpose of conferring jurisdiction to grant administration, the situs of a judgment due an intestate who has no fixed place of residence is in the county in which he died, and not in the county in which the judgment was rendered. Angier v. Jones, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 402, 67 S. W. 449. L.R.A.1915D.

A certified copy of a judgment rendered in another state is sufficient bona notabilia to authorize ancillary administration. Morefield v. Harris, 126 N. C. 626, 36 S. E. 125.

Corporate stock.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 687.

In Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472, 95 S. W. 894, which is cited in RE MILLER, the stock in question was issued by a New York corporation, and belonged to the estate of a decedent who was domiciled in New York; and the certificates at the time of the appointment of an administrator in Missouri were in the possession of a pledgee. The actual decision was therefore merely to the effect that the presence of the certificates in Missouri did not entitle the administrator appointed in that state to the stock. And in the companion case of De La Vergne v. Richardson, 198 Mo. 189, 95 S. W. 898, it was held that the appointment of the administrator was without jurisdiction, there being no other assets of the estate within the state. It is obvious, therefore, that while the court declared generally that the certificate is not the stock, but the mere evidence of the ownership of the stock, there was no actual decision as between the state of the owner's domicile and the state where the corporation is organized.

But it was held in Re Arnold, 114 App. Div. 244, 99 N. Y. Supp. 740, that where a nonresident dies owning stock of a domestic corporation, such stock is property within that county where the corporate property is or where the corporation has its principal place of business, within the meaning of a provision of the statute authorizing the surrogate court to grant letters testamentary when decedent, "not being a resident of the state, died without the state, leaving personal property within that county, and no other." This case presents the opposite view from that taken in RE MILLER, which holds that the situs of corporate stock is the domicile of the owner for the purposes of administration.

ministration of an estate in a certain order, and from whom the probate court may make a selection. The competency and suitability of the widow, next of kin, or creditors to discharge the trust is left to the discretion of the probate court, and it was held that such discretion was not reviewable unless it was oppressively and arbitrarily exercised. It was suggested that outside of this discretion a review might be had, and that under the then-existing statutes a final order of that kind was open to review in a proceeding in error. Under the new Code proceedings in error had been abolished, and a review of judgments and of final orders of probate courts may now be had by appeal. Civil Code, §§ 564, 567, 571 (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 6159, 6162, 6166); Re Pettit, 84 Kan. 637, 114 Pac. 1071; Kroenert v. Sawyer, 87 Kan. 374, 124 Pac. 418.

The decision in the present case did not involve a matter of discretion; but it was a final determination of the case, and left nothing further for the consideration of the probate court. As it effectually terminated the litigation of the question in that court, it was a final order or decision, from which an appeal lies.

Was it the duty of the probate court to appoint an administrator on the application of a creditor of the decedent? Miller was a nonresident of Kansas, and the question is, Did he leave anything here on which to found administration? It has been held that "where a person dies intestate, who was not a resident or inhabitant of the state at

In this connection see also Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229, Warrior Coal & Coke Co. v. National Bank, — Ala. —, 53 So. 997, and Murphy v. Crouse, 135 Cal. 14, 87 Am. St. Rep. 90, 66 Pac. 971, which, while not involving the question of jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, hold that, for the purpose of administration, the situs of corporate stock is that of the corporation rather than that of the owner of the stock.

out letters of administration. Treadwell v. Rainey, 9 Ala. 590.

Community property.

The interest of a deceased wife in the community property is not sufficiently tangible to become the subject of probate proceedings. Packard v. Arellanes, 17 Cal. 525.

Interest in partnership.

Where intestate was a nonresident of the state at the time of his death, but was possessed of a valuable interest in a partnership in the state, and left personal property in the county at the time of his death, and at the time of setting apart the year's support for the widow and two of the minor children they resided in the county, the granting of letters of administration and setting apart the year's support to the widow and minor children was proper. Wright v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 194, 42 S. E. 369.

Where an assignment of all the property of a bankrupt partnership was made with the consent of the bankruptcy court to parties who furnished money to effect a composition with creditors, so that there was no reversion of interest upon the discharge of the bankrupt, to the individual members of the prior firm, there was nothing upon which an administration might attach as to any of the prior assets of the firm so as to give the public administrator, acting as administrator for a deceased partner, any interest in the partnership estate. Hawkins v. Quinette, 156 Mo. App. 153, 136 S. W. 246.

Action for death or personal injury.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 686.

As to the right to grant administration for the sole purpose of bringing an action under the Federal employers' liability act, see note to Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 78.

Assuming that the existence of assets is necessary to give jurisdiction to appoint Claim against estate of another.

An apparent claim upon an estate furnishes a sufficient basis for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of an alien claimant to pursue it. Emery v. Cooley, 83 Conn. 235, 76 Atl. 529.

The interest of a nonresident beneficiary under a trust created by a will which had been admitted to probate in the state, which trust estate was in process of settlement in a court clothed with jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the trustee, was sufficient to authorize the appointment of an administrator of the deceased beneficiary. Vinton v. Sargent, 195 Mass. 133, 80 N. E. 826.

The right to a distributive share in an intestate's estate is to be accounted bona notabilia which will authorize the appointment, in the county where intestate resided and left her estate, of an administrator of the estate of a deceased nonresident claimant. Smith v. Munroe, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 345.

But the court had no jurisdiction to grant administration over an estate consisting of slaves which were in another state at the time of the death of the owner, and were brought into the state by the executrix of the will, who qualified in the other state where the testator died, and where the will was admitted to probate, independently of the fact that the executrix had a life estate in the slaves, as by virtue of her qualification under the will, she took the legal title to them, and might maintain an action in this state in her own name without taking L.R.A.1915D.

the time of his death, and who left no estate within the state to be administered, a probate court of the state has no jurisdiction to issue letters of administration on the estate of such intestate, and, where letters are issued, the acts of the court in doing so are utterly null and void." Mallory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 53 Kan. 557, syl. ¶ 1, 36 Pac. 1059; Perry v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 20 Kan. 420; Ewing v. Mallison, 65 Kan. 484, 93 Am. St. Rep. 299, 70 Pac. 369.

There was no property in Kansas on which to found administration, unless Miller's ownership of shares of stock in a Kansas corporation furnished a basis. Under the common law and as a general rule the situs of personal property is the residence of the owner, and the title to personalty is in the domiciliary executor or administrator. This rule may be modified by statute, and it frequently is for taxation and some other purposes. If the general rule applies that the situs of personal property follows the domicile of the owner, and there is nothing in the character of the property to except it from the operation of this rule, then it would seem that the probate court was without jurisdiction to make the appointment. The statute, in terms, provides that "the stock of any corporation created under this act shall be deemed personal estate." Gen. Stat. 1909, § 1743.

It is contended, however, that shares of stock are unlike ordinary personalty, and that the right under which an owner holds stock is incident to the ownership of the an administrator, either because decedent was a nonresident or because the law of the jurisdiction requires the existence of assets even in the case of resident decedents, the general rule is that a cause of action for wrongful death is a sufficient asset to justify the appointment of an administrator. Reiter-Connolly Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 40 So. 280; Mesker v. Bishop, — Ind. App. —, 103 N. E. 492; Durden v. Wright, — Ga. —, 84 S. E. 125 (dictum); Findlay v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 106 Mich. 700, 64 N. W. 732; Fann v. North Carolina R. Co. 155 N. C. 136, 71 S. E. 81; Jordan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 Wis. 580, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 885, 110 Am. St. Rep. 865, 104 N. W. 803, 4 Ann. Cas. 1113; Richards v. Riverside Iron Works, 56 W. Va. 510, 49 S. E. 437; Fickelsen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Anderson, 127 C. C. A. 587, 211 Fed. 301.

The right to letters of administration does not depend upon the existence of tangible assets to administer, but the appointment of an administrator may be proper and necessary in order to prosecute some claim of indeterminate value. So, administration should have been granted to a widow to enable her to prosecute a suit against a sheriff for permitting her husband to be taken from the jail and killed by a mob. Ex parte Jenkins, 25 Ind. App. 532, 81 Am. St. Rep. 114, 58 N. E. 560.

And the appointment of an administrator of an intestate, who was killed under circumstances that give a statutory cause of action for his death, was not invalid on the ground that no right of action arose in behalf of anyone until after the administrator had been appointed, and hence the administrator's appointment was not sustained by any assets in existence before it was made, as it is enough that assets and appointment come into being at the same moment. Southern P. Co. v. De Valle Da Costa, 111 C. C. A. 417, 190 Fed. 689.

In Re Tasanen, 25 Utah, 396, 71 Pac. 984, the court expresses its opinion that the weight of authority is that a claim for death by wrongful act is an asset of the estate of the deceased, but held that it was unnecessary to determine that question in view of a statute which, after providing for the appointment of administrators under certain circumstances, further provided for administration in all other cases in the county where application for letters is first made, the court regarding that provision as being intended to apply to cases in which the deceased was not a resident, and left no property in the state.

Although the damages recoverable in a statutory action for wrongful death may not be assets of the estate of the deceased in any proper sense of the term, letters of administration may be granted to enforce the right conferred by the statute, although the decedent left no property in the jurisdiction, the provision of the statute giving the administrator the right to sue for the death necessarily implying the right of the probate court to appoint an administrator for that purpose alone. Washington Asphalt Block & Tile Co. v. Mackey, 15 App. D. C. 410.

So, in Hutchins v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 44 Minn. 5, 46 N. W. 79, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 294, although the court said that, whether decedent was a resident or nonresident, the existence of assets is essential to administration, it was held that a cause of action for wrongful death was a sufficient foundation for administration of the estate of a nonresident in the county of the state in which he was killed, under a statute which gives the right to bring the action to the personal representative alone, although, strictly speaking, such cause of action never belonged to decedent during his lifetime, but accrued only upon his death, and the amount recovered, if any, forms no part of his general estate, but goes to the next of kin.

And this is the general rule, though deceased was a nonresident of the jurisdiction. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lipscomb, 22 App. D. C. 104; J. B. & J. M. Cornell Co. v. Ward, 93 C. C. A. 474, 168 Fed. 51; Dodge v. North Hudson, 177 Fed. 986; Cornell S. B. Co. v. Fallon, 102 C. C. A.

property, and therefore that the situs of his right or interest is the situs of the corporation. The answer to this contention is that, corporate stock having been declared by the legislature to be personal estate, it necessarily falls into the classification with ordinary personal property, unless the statute expressly gives it a situs elsewhere for purposes of administration. In Cook on Corporations it is said: "It is a well-established principal of law that shares of stock may, for certain purposes, have a situs at two separate places at the same time. For the purposes of suits concerning rights to its title, for taxation, and for a few other purposes, shares of stock follow the domicile of the stockholder." 2 Cook, Corp. 7th ed. § 363.

345, 179 Fed. 293; Southern P. Co. v. De Valle Da Costa, supra; Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 727, 54 Am. Rep. 39, 23 N. W. 123; Re Stone, — Iowa, —, 145 N. W. 903; Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Ky. 228, 30 S. W. 639; Voris v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 172 Mo. App. 125, 157 S. W. 835; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bradley, 51 Neb. 596, 71 N. W. 283, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 244; Vance v. Southern R. Co. 138 N. C. 460, 50 S. E. 860; Re Mayo, 60 S. C. 401, 54 L.R.A. 660, 38 S. E. 634; Re Lowham, 30 Utah, 436, 85 Pac. 445.

In Cooper v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 41 Tex. Civ. App. 596, 93 S. W. 201, however, it was held that the courts of Texas, in which state agencies had been established by railroad companies against which two distinct causes of action were claimed,—one in behalf of the estate of decedent, and the other in behalf of his surviving wife and children,—growing out of a fatal injury inflicted in Indian Territory upon decedent, who was domiciled, and died, in Oklahoma, had no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, there being no other claim of assets in the state. The decision, so far as the cause of action in behalf of the estate was concerned, rested upon the ground that the courts of Texas would not enforce such a right given or preserved by the survival statute in force in the Indian Territory, for the reason that there was no similar statute in Texas; and so far as the cause of action in behalf of the widow and children was concerned, upon the ground that it did not constitute property of the estate.

See also Marvin v. Maysville Street R. & Transfer Co. 49 Fed. 436, in which there is a dictum to the effect that a right of action for wrongful death is not an asset upon which an administration of the estate of a nonresident decedent could be obtained in Kentucky, although the injury was inflicted in the state, and the amount recovered, if any, would become a part of the personal estate of the decedent, and as such be subject to the payment of his debts, and go to his distributees under the statutes of the state as other personal property. And this, even though it be conceded that a right of

In Griffith v. Watson, 19 Kan. 23, a question arose whether capital stock of a corporation should be taxed at the residence of the owner or in a city in the same county where the corporation was located and engaged in business, and it was held that the stock was taxable at the residence of the owner. This ruling was made upon the theory that stock was personal property, and came within the common-law rule that the domicile of the owner draws to it all his personal estate, and, besides, this rule was reinforced by the statute which provides that personal property shall be listed and taxed at the place in which the person charged with the tax resides. For purposes of taxation, capital stock may have a situs at more than one place at the same time, and it has been held action for personal injuries during a decedent's lifetime, and which is made to survive his death by statute, might be sufficient assets to obtain administration upon his estate.

And in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herb, 125 Tenn. 408, 143 S. W. 1138, the court, indulging the presumption that the statute of Kentucky is similar to the statute of Tennessee, which authorizes the administrator to sue as trustee for the widow and next of kin, and not for the benefit of the estate, held that the courts of Tennessee had no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for a decedent who was domiciled in Kentucky and received the injury there, the railroad company against which the cause of action was asserted being a corporation of Kentucky, although it had agents and offices in Tennessee; for the reason that the cause of action for death was not an asset of the decedent within the meaning of the Tennessee statute in relation to the appointment of administrators for nonresidents' estates. The court further said that even if the claim for damages growing out of the alleged killing of one by wrongful act was assets of the estate of the decedent within the meaning of the local statutes, the county court of the county in which the Kentucky corporation had an agency would be without jurisdiction; that the statutes were enacted to provide for the administration of the estates of nonresident decedents found in the state because the personal representative in the state where the decedent resided at his death has no authority in Tennessee; and it was not intended that the courts of Tennessee should assume jurisdiction of assets of citizens and residents of other states and within the jurisdiction of their courts.

The appointment of an administrator in any part of the state into which a railroad might run, for the sole purpose of bringing suit upon the cause of action created by a statute of another state for the negligent death of an intestate who was killed on the railroad in such other state, is not authorized. Hall v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 Ky. 480, 80 Am. St. Rep. 358, 43 S. W.

to be competent for the legislature to provide that shares of stock may be separated from their owner and given a situs of their own. Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189.

In Covington v. First Nat. Bank, 198 U. S. 100, 111, 49 L. ed. 963, 968, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 562, 565, it was ruled that "the situs of shares of foreign-held stock in an incorporated company, in the absence of legislation imposing a duty upon the company to return the stock within the state as the agent of the owner, is at the domicile of the owner."

In Luce v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 63 N. H. 588, 3 Atl. 618, it was held that "in the absence of ancillary administration or statutory prohibition, the domiciliary administrator appointed in another state has authority to sell and assign stock of the decedent in a corporation in this state, and the corporation may voluntarily consent to its transfer by accepting the outstanding certificate and issuing a new one to the purchaser." (Syllabus.)

In Ohio it was held that shares of stock in a foreign corporation had a situs in Ohio for purposes of taxation, although the corporation was located in another state, and its capital invested in real property in that state. Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 28, 38 Am. Rep. 547. The same view was taken as to the situs of capital stock for taxation purposes in New Jersey. State, Fish, Prosecutor, v. Branin, 23 N. J. L. 484; Newark City Bank v. Fourth Ward Assessor, 30 N. J. L. 13.

698; Turner v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 110 Ky. 879, 62 S. W. 1025.

But a right of action for wrongful death is property of the deceased so as to confer jurisdiction upon the court to appoint an administrator, and such administrator may be appointed in the state where defendant company had its habitat, although the deceased was killed in another state. Fickelsen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788.

The difficulty of determining whether a cause of action for death is an asset of decedent's estate is avoided in some cases by granting administration upon the basis of other assets, though they may be of small value, and permitting the administrator so appointed to sue for the wrongful death.

Thus, where a nonresident who was killed within the state had property in his possession consisting of a pistol, a gold watch, a gold badge of an order, and money belonging to him, the court had jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for his estate, and the administrator could bring a suit for his wrongful death. Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 128 Tenn. 244, 159 S. W. 1086.

And in Wheeler v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297, Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1, 14 Pac. 501, and Horton v. Trompeter, 53 Kan. 150, 35 Pac. 1106, which were decided upon the theory that assets were necessary even in cases of residents, the court sustained the granting of letters of administration upon the estates of resident minors where the assets were unimportant, and obviously the purpose of taking out administration was to enable the administrator to sue for the wrongful death of the minor.

But in Ziemer v. Crucible Steel Co. 99 App. Div. 169, 90 N. Y. Supp. 962, it is held that the securing of letters of administration upon the estate of a nonresident upon the ground that he had property in the state, when in fact he had none, was a legal fraud upon the court, although the petition, in urging that the deceased left property in the state, also stated that the property was of no value; and the court L.R.A.1915D.

had no jurisdiction to make the appointment, and the administrator could not bring a suit to recover for the wrongful death of intestate, which cause of action arose in another state.

And in Mallory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 53 Kan. 557, 36 Pac. 1059, letters of administration were held void where apparently the purpose for which they were issued was to enable the administrator to bring an action for the wrongful death of his intestate, and it appeared that intestate was a nonresident of the state and owned no property therein.

However, in Cox v. Kansas City, 86 Kan. 298, 120 Pac. 553, the court sustained the grant of letters of administration upon the estate of a nonresident where it was obvious that the real purpose of the appointment was to provide a plaintiff for the prosecution of a death claim, where the only other property left by him in the state was the suit of clothes he wore, valued at $1.50, making no reference to the Mallory Case, but discussing the other Kansas cases cited above, involving residents, and saying it saw no just ground for distinction in principle between residents and nonresidents.

In Austin v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 122 Ky. 304, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 756, 91 S. W. 742, under a statute authorizing the appointment of an administrator by the court of the county "where decedent died, or where his estate, or any part thereof, shall be, or where there may be any debt or demand owing him," it was held that the court of the county where a suit by decedent for personal injuries was pending at the time of his death had jurisdiction to appoint an administrator to carry on the action, such a cause of action surviving according to the survival statute of the state, though the claim was the only asset decedent left in the jurisdiction, and he was a resident of and the injury occurred in another state, the statute of which did not provide for the survival of such causes of action.

Upon the death within the state of a nonresident who has brought an action to recover damages for a wrongful ejection

While shares of capital stock give no title to the tangible property of the corporation, they do give the owner the right to share in the earnings or profits of the corporation while it is a going concern, and entitle him to receive his proportion of the assets in case they are sold, or that the corporation is finally dissolved. Although such shares only represent the interest of the shareholder in the corporation, they are generally held to be property, and our statute declares that they shall be treated as personal property. It is the view of the court that, in the absence of legislation fixing the situs of such property for purposes of administration elsewhere, it must be regarded as at the domicile of the stockholder, and hence there was nothing in Kansas upon which to found administration of the estate of Miller, and the probate court of Labette county rightly refused to appoint an administrator. A different view was taken by the supreme court of Missouri in Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472, 95 S. W. 894, where it was, in effect, held that the situs of shares of stock in a New York corporation was in New York, and not in Missouri, where they were held. In answer, it is argued that the shares were only temporarily in Missouri, that they really belonged in New York, which was the location of the corporation, and therefore the statements in the decision as to the situs of stock being in the state in which the corporation is organized and doing business must be regarded as dictum and not controlling. Another authority cited by appellee is Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229, where it was, in effect, held that, for the purposes of administration, the situs of a certificate of stock of a corporation owned by a decedent is in the state where the corporation was organized and has its principal place of business, since it is the situs of the

from a railroad train upon which he was a passenger, resulting in his contracting a disease from which he died while the suit was pending, it was held that the action came within the survival statute of the state, and was a sufficient asset to support the appointment of an administrator in the county where it was pending. Forrester v. Southern P. Co. 36 Nev. 247, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1, 134 Pac. 753, rehearing denied in 36 Nev. 317, 136 Pac. 705.

Claim against government.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 687.

A claim against the government does not furnish foundation for a local administration in the District of Columbia when the decedent was domiciled in another jurisdiction at the time of his death. Re Coit, 3 App. D. C. 246.

Insurance policy.

See note in 24 L.R.A. 687.

A policy of life insurance issued by a company incorporated in one state, payable to the assured, his executors or administrators, is an asset for the purpose of founding administration upon his estate in another state in which the corporation transacted business at the time of his death and has since transacted it, and, as required by the statutes of that state, has an agent on whom process against it may be served. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138, 28 L. ed. 379, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364; Smith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 57 Fed. 133, affirmed in 14 C. C. A. 635, 29 U. S. App. 220, 67 Fed. 694.

A policy of life insurance upon the life of deceased which was actually carried beyond the limits of the county during his life and has never since been returned to the county does not give jurisdiction to the court of the county to grant administration, whether or not it was rightfully removed. Power v. Green, 139 Ga. 64, 76 S. E. 567.

Real estate.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 688.

As to sale of real estate in state other than decedent's domicile to pay debts, see note to Dow v. Lillie, ante, 754.

In Re Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078, although a nonresident intestate left no debts or personal estate, and, by mutual consent of the heirs, no administration was taken out upon real estate left by him, it was held that the court had jurisdiction to grant letters of administration to the public administrator and to grant an order for the sale of such real estate to pay the expenses of administration, under a probate statute which clearly contemplated that all property of decedents undisposed of at death should pass through administration for the purpose of ascertaining and protecting the rights of creditors, and properly transmitting the title of record.

Land sold by a deceased nonresident under bond for title, and for which he had received the full amount of the purchase money, is not a part of his estate, or such property as will support the granting of letters of administration. Adams v. Brooks, 35 Ga. 63.

A conditional certificate which was issued to immigrants and settlers under the land law, being transferable by the grantee, a resident intestate who left no property except such a conditional certificate, which he had assigned, had no property to give the probate court jurisdiction to grant administration; and, while letters of administration might have been issued on the supposition that there was an estate, yet, when it became manifest to the court that the land in question formed no part of the estate, and that there was no estate to be administered, it was the duty of the court to at once discharge the administrator and corporation, and not the domicile of the holder of the certificate, that determines. It is argued, however, that this authority rests to some extent on a local statute, and is therefore not entitled to much weight, since it is directly opposed to the general rule which fixes the situs of personal property at the domicile of the owner.

It follows that the judgment of the District Court must be reversed.

Burch, Porter, Benson, and West, JJ., concur.

Johnston, Ch. J., dissenting:

In my view the situs of the shares of stock owned by Miller was in Labette county, Kansas, the home and principal place of business of the corporation. While the authorities on the subject are not in harmony, it is generally recognized that certificates of stock are not debts, credits, securities, or chattels, but are simply evidences that the holder is a member of and has an interest in a corporation which itself owns all of its property. In a sense, shares of stock are treated as property; but it is of a peculiar kind, which gives the owner no right or title to the tangible property of the corporation. It is such an exceptional property right that it can only be enforced where the corporation is organized and has its place of business, and within the intention of the legislature the situs of the property for administration purposes is at the home of the corporation. In Thompson on Corporations it is said: "The general rule is that shares of stock in a corporation are personal property, whose location is in the state where the corporation is created. It is true that for purposes of taxation and some other similar purposes stock follows the domicile of its owner; but, considered as property separated from its owner, stock is in existence only in the state to dismiss the whole matter from the probate docket. Merriweather v. Kennard, 41 Tex. 273.

Assets brought within jurisdiction after death of intestate.

See also note in 24 L.R.A. 688.

Assuming that a probate court had no power to appoint an administrator, for the reason that the deceased left no estate in the county, subsequent bringing of the property into the county by the administrator would confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter upon the court, and authorize it to charge him with the property. Ela's Appeal, 68 N. H. 35, 38 Atl. 501.

But, under a statute giving the surrogate court of each county jurisdiction to grant letters of administration where the decedent, not being a resident of the state, died without the state, leaving personal property "which has, since his death, come into that county, and no other, and remains unadministered," personal property temporarily within the county of the state, in the possession of a domiciliary administrator appointed in another state, is not sufficient to give to the surrogate court of that county jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of such property. Re McCabe, 84 App. Div. 145, 82 N. Y. Supp. 180, affirmed in 177 N. Y. 584, 69 N. E. 1126.

So, statutory provisions for the administration of assets of an intestate which "shall arrive within county of New York after his death," and "which has since his death come into the state and remains unadministered," should be construed as meaning that the assets must arrive or come into the state in good faith, in due course of business, and not for the avowed object of securing a resident plaintiff who can prosecute a cause of action against a foreign corporation, arising in and between residents of another state. So, where the L.R.A.1915D.

only property of an intestate within the state was a watch and chain which was brought into the state after his death, for the sole purpose of giving the court jurisdiction, it was not sufficient for that purpose, and the procuring of the appointment of an administrator upon the facts stated amounted to fraud, so that the appointment could be attacked collaterally. Hoes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 173 N. Y. 435, 66 N. E. 119, reversing 73 App. Div. 363, 77 N. Y. Supp. 117.

And a promissory note which was brought into the county subsequently to the death of decedent for the purpose of conferring improperly a colorable probate jurisdiction upon the court of the county was held not bona notabilia in the county, and an administration granted upon it was vacated. Neal v. Boykin, 129 Ga. 676, 121 Am. St. Rep. 237, 59 S. E. 912. But on an appeal from a trial upon an agreed statement of facts, reported in 132 Ga. 400, 64 S. E. 480, it is held that the allegations of fraud were not sustained by the evidence, and that, although intestate was a resident of another state, and left, at the time of his death, no property in the county of this state, where application for letters of administration were made, yet, where personal property of the intestate was brought into the county after his death, and was there located at the time when application was made for letters of administration, the ordinary of that county had jurisdiction to grant letters of administration unless the property was carried there in bad faith.

An unauthorized decree granting plaintiff's letters of administration cannot be upheld by showing that property of the insured intestate was brought into the state after his death, no such facts having been presented to the surrogate or acted upon by him when he made the decree. McCarthy v. Supreme Court, 1. O. F. 107 App. Div. 185, 94 N. Y. Supp. 876. R. L. S.

of the corporation. On this point the Supreme Court of the United States has said: "The certificates are only evidence of the ownership of the shares, and the interest represented by the shares is held by the company for the benefit of the true owner. As the habitation or domicile of the company is and must be in the state that created it, the property represented by its certificates of stock may be deemed to be held by the company within the state whose creature it is, whenever it is sought by suit to determine who is its real owner." 4 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 3471.

Counsel for appellee quoted from and rely upon Cook on Corporations; but, while that authority says that for purposes of taxation and a few other purposes shares of stock follow the domicile of the stockholder, this is upon the theory that such property may have a situs at more than one place at the same time, and it then adds: "On the other hand, it has at the same time a situs where the corporation exists, and this situs may be for the purposes of suits concerning the title to the stock, for attachment and execution, and for various other similar purposes." 2 Cook, Corp. 7th ed. § 363.

In Grayson v. Robertson, 122 Ala. 330, 82 Am. St. Rep. 80, 25 So. 229, this question was directly involved, and it was expressly decided, not on a local statute, that for purposes of administration the situs of shares of stock of a corporation was in the state where the corporation was created, and not at the domicile of the owner. In a still later case the supreme court of Alabama reaffirmed this holding, and declared that "a certificate of corporate stock is merely evidence of ownership, and the situs of the interest which it represents must for the purposes of administration be in the state in which the corporation is organized and has its place of business." Warrior Coal & Coke Co. v. National Bank, — Ala. —, 53 So. 997, headnote, ¶ 3.

In Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472, 95 S. W. 894, the subject was discussed at considerable length, and cogent reasons are given why the situs of such property is necessarily in the state of the corporation. In Murphy v. Crouse, 135 Cal. 14, 87 Am. St. Rep. 90, 66 Pac. 971, it is held that ordinarily choses in action adhere to the person of the owner; but that for purposes of administration this is not true as to certificates of stock. In a question affecting the title to shares of stock the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the habitation or domicile of the corporation is in the state that creates it, and that L.R.A.1915D.

the property represented by the certificates of stock is deemed to be within the state and to be held by the corporation for the benefit of the owner. Jellenik v. Huron Copper Min. Co. 177 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 647, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559. In Andrews v. Guayaquil & Q. R. Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 211, 60 Atl. 568, it was ruled that the situs of stock in a New Jersey corporation was in New Jersey, and that any question relating to it might be determined there. In Fahrig v. Milwaukee & C. Breweries, 113 Ill. App. 525, it was declared that "the general rule is that shares of stock in a corporation are personal property whose location is in the state where the corporation is created" (Syllabus ¶ 3). Re Arnold, 114 App. Div. 244, 99 N. Y. Supp. 740; Re Fitch, 160 N. Y. 87, 54 N. E. 701; note in 25 Ann. Cas. 954. In State ex rel. Dawson v. Davis, 88 Kan. 849, 129 Pac. 1197, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 688, where the inheritance tax law was under consideration, it was said that "shares of stock are regarded as situated in the state of incorporation." (p. 850.) Being property situated in the state, it should not be withdrawn from the state until the claims of resident creditors are satisfied. As said in Denny v. Faulkner, 22 Kan. 89: "A state always has the right to protect home creditors by administration of the decedent's property within its borders." (p. 95.)

Our statute provides that, if a person of another state dies intestate, leaving property in Kansas to be administered, the probate court of the county where the property is situated may grant administration. Gen. Stat. 1909, § 3436. In my view the legislature intended that property such as shares of stock situated in Kansas should be administered in Kansas, and that it was never the legislative intention that property of a decedent should be removed from the state until the debts due to its own citizens had been paid. The officers of the corporation are really the agents and representatives of the owners of the shares wherever they may be, and their claims must be presented in Kansas in order to obtain either the profits in the enterprise or a share of the assets in case of final dissolution and distribution. The property being situated in Kansas, the administrator appointed in Missouri did not acquire any title to the shares, and has no authority to dispose of them.

I am authorized to state that Mr. Justice Mason and Mr. Justice Smith concur in this dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

DID CASE, Appt.,
v.
STEELE COAL COMPANY.

(162 Ky. 68, 171 S. W. 993.)

Master and servant — Libel by servant — Liability of master.

An employer is not responsible for a libel perpetrated as a joke by his bookkeeper in stating an account with an employee on a blank furnished for that purpose, which consists of a pencil memorandum of an item implying bestiality, which is not carried into the footings, and for which there is no heading in the blank, since the act is not within the scope of the bookkeeper's employment.

(January 8, 1915.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged false and malicious publication by defendant's agent of a libel against plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. J. Picklesimer and Roscoe Vanover, for appellant, relied on:

Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Henry Vogt Mach. Co. 139 Ky. 497, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Note. — Liability of employer other than proprietor of publication for libel by employee.

As to right of corporation to maintain an action for libel affecting its business, see notes to Brayton v. Cleveland Special Police Co. 52 L.R.A. 526; Gross Coal Co. v. Rose, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 741; and the late case of Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Henry Vogt Mach. Co. 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1023.

As to liability of master, including corporation, for slander by servant, see notes to Singer Mfg. Co. v. Taylor, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 929; Hypes v. Southern R. Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873; and the later case of Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 955.

As to liability of telegraph company for handling libelous message, see notes to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cashman, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 140, and Grisham v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 861.

As to punitive damages for libel by servant, see note to Forrester v. Southern P. Co. 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 62.

As to criminal liability of master for libel by servant, see note to Com. v. Sacks, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 37.

The present note does not cover the question of what communications are privileged or what circumstances will constitute malice destroying the privilege. As to privilege of communications between principal and agent, see note to Bohlinger v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 449. As to privilege as affected by extent of publication, see note to Coleman v. MacLennan, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 361. And see the later case, Kruse v. Rabe, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 469.

Neither does the note cover the question of what constitutes a ratification, nor the liability of a partnership for libel.

Liability of corporation for libel—generally.

This note assumes that the article in question was libelous, and deals only with the question whether the employer is liable for the particular act of his employee.

The authorities are agreed that a corporation is liable for a libel published by its agents or servants, where the act was expressly authorized, or was within the scope of their authority. Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 34 Cal. 48, 91 Am. Dec. 672; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 16 L. ed. 73; Washington Gas-light Co. v. Lansden, 9 App. D. C. 508, affirmed on this point in 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Behre v. National Cash Register Co. 100 Ga. 213, 62 Am. St. Rep. 320, 27 S. E. 986; Howe Mach. Co. v. Souder, 58 Ga. 64; Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Henry Vogt Mach. Co. 139 Ky. 497, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504, 96 S. W. 551; Vinas v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 27 La. Ann. 367; Pattison v. Gulf Bag Co. 116 La. 963, 114 Am. St. Rep. 570, 41 So. 224; Fogg v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 148 Mass. 513, 12 Am. St. Rep. 583, 20 N. E. 109; Howland v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 156 Mass. 543, 31 N. E. 656; Bacon v. Michigan C. R. Co. 55 Mich. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 372, 21 N. W. 324; Minter v. Bradstreet Co. 174 Mo. 444, 73 S. W. 668; Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. 98 N. C. 34, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312, 3 S. E. 923; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 5 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 521; Hardoneourt v. North Penn Iron Co. 225 Pa. 379, 74 Atl. 243; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Behee, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 107, 21 S. W. 384; Belo v. Fuller, 84 Tex. 450, 31 Am. St. Rep. 75, 19 S. W. 616; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 73 Tex. 568, 4 L.R.A. 280, 15 Am. St. Rep. 794, 11 S. W. 555; Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey, 101 Va. 443, 44 S. E. 692; Empire Cream Separator Co. v. De Laval Dairy Supply Co. 75 N. J. L. 207, 67 Atl. 711; Citizens' Life Assur. Co. v. Brown [1904] A. C. 423, 73 L. J. P. C. N. S. 102, 90 L. T. N. S. 739, 20 Times L. R. 497, 53 Week. Rep. 176; Whitfield v. Southeastern R. Co. El. Bl. & El. 115, 27 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 229, 4 Jur. N. S. 688, 6 Week. Rep. 545.

The practical question is whether the employee was acting within the scope of his authority in publishing the libel, and that is obviously quite a different question in the case of employers, corporate or otherwise, not engaged in the publication of papers or magazines, than in the case of employers so engaged; and the latter class of cases has therefore been excluded.

And it was conceded in Ramsdell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 79 N. J. L. 379, 75 Atl. 444, 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504, 96 S. W. 551; 10 Cyc. 1203; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 73 Tex. 568, 4 L.R.A. 280, 15 Am. St. Rep. 794, 11 S. W. 555; Hill v. Murphy, 212 Mass. 1, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1102, 98 N. E. 781, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 374; note to Com. v. Sacks, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1-44.

Messrs. Stratton & Stephenson for appellee.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Pike circuit court, entered upon a verdict returned in behalf of appellee in obedience to a peremptory instruction from the court. The action was brought by appellant to recover of appellee damages for the alleged false and malicious publication by its agent of a libel against and concerning him. The language and character of the libel will more fully appear from the following averments of the petition: "Plaintiff states that on and prior to February 16, 1913, he was employed by the defendant and in its service, engaged in mining coal at its mine in Pike county; . . . that it was customary for defendant company to issue to its laborers statements showing the amount of labor performed by the laborer for the two weeks preceding, and said statement also showed any and all advances made said laborer for said period; . . . that on said date defendant, by its duly authorized bookkeeper, issued a statement to this plaintiff showing the amount that a corporation was liable for a libel published by an employee where it was not privileged.

The court in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 16 L. ed. 73, said: "The defendants contend that they are not liable to be sued in this action; that theirs is a railroad corporation, with defined and limited faculties and powers, and having only such incidental authority as is necessary to the full exercise of the faculties and powers granted by their charter; that, being a mere legal entity, they are incapable of malice, and that malice is a necessary ingredient in a libel; that this action should have been instituted against the natural persons who were concerned in the publication of the libel. To support this argument, we should be required to concede that a corporate body could only act within the limits and according to the faculties determined by the act of incorporation, and therefore that no crime or offense can be imputed to it. That although illegal acts might be committed for the benefit or within the service of the corporation, and to accomplish objects for which it was created by the direction of their dominant body, that such acts, not being contemplated by the charter, must be referred to the rational and sensible agents who performed them, and the whole responsibility must be limited to those agents; and we should be forced, as a legitimate consequence, to conclude that no action ex delicto or indictment will lie against a corporation for any misfeasance. But this conclusion would be entirely inconsistent with the legislation and jurisprudence of the states of the Union relative to these artificial persons. Legislation has encouraged their organization, as they concentrate and employ the intelligence, energy, and capital of society for the development of enterprises of public utility. There is scarcely an object of general interest for which some association has not been formed, and there are institutions whose members are found in every part of the Union who contribute their efforts to the common object. To enable impersonal beings—mere legal entities, which exist only in contemplation of law—to perform corporal acts, or deal with personal agents, the principle of representation has been adopted as a part of their constitution. The powers of the corporation are placed in the hands of a governing body selected by the members, who manage its affairs, and who appoint the agents that exercise its faculties for the accomplishment of the object of its being. But these agents may infringe the rights of persons who are unconnected with the corporation, or who are brought into relations of business or intercourse with it. As a necessary correlative to the principle of the exercise of corporate powers and faculties by legal representatives, is the recognition of a corporate responsibility for the acts of those representatives. With much wariness, and after close and exact scrutiny into the nature of their constitution, have the judicial tribunals determined the legal relations which are established for the corporation by their governing body, and their agents, with the natural persons with whom they are brought into contact or collision. The result of the cases is, that for acts done by the agents of a corporation, either in contractu or in delicto, in the course of its business and of their employment, the corporation is responsible, as an individual is responsible under similar circumstances."

In actions of libel against a corporation it is a question for the jury to determine whether the corporation sought to be held liable had authorized or ratified the publication, or whether the publication was made or directed by its servants or agents in the course of their employment. Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, 9 App. D. C. 508, reversed on other grounds in 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Fogg v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 148 Mass. 513, 12 Am. St. Rep. 583, 20 N. E. 109; Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. 98 N. C. 34, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312, 3 S. E. 923.

—evidence as to employee's authority.

In Southern Exp. Co. v. Fitzner, 69 Miss. 581, 42 Am. Rep. 379, it was said in an ac-due said plaintiff from defendant, and also, under the head of 'Advances,' or under the head showing what defendant had paid plaintiff, defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, wilfully, and maliciously, and for the purpose of defaming plaintiff in his good name and character, and with malice toward plaintiff, falsely issued said statement with the following item as advanced plaintiff, to wit: 'Mulage, $1.50;' that the said bookkeeper of defendant issuing said statement for defendant had the authority under his said employment to issue statements for defendant, and was acting in the scope of his authority under his employment by defendant when he issued said statement as above set out; that said statement was exhibited to sundry people and citizens of Pike county, Kentucky, by defendant's said bookkeeper; that by the word 'mulage,' as charged in said statement, defendant meant to convey, and those who saw said statement understood defendant to convey, the meaning that plaintiff had been having sexual intercourse with defendant's mules used by defendant in its said coal mine in the mining and operating its said coal mines; that at and previous to said time defendant had been and was using mules in its said mining operations in its said mines; that it was known and generally understood among the miners and people in and about said mines that the word 'mulage,' as used on said statement, meant to have sexual intercourse with a mule, and that, when so charged as an advancement on said tion for libel against a corporation that an act done at the office where the corporation's business is conducted, and in its name, and by its servants professing to act for it, does not necessarily bind it, but that the foundation of its liability must arise from the fact that it conferred authority upon the person to do the act; and that while all these circumstances would be valuable as evidence of the delegation of power, and in some cases would be conclusive of it, at last the inquiry is narrowed to the question whether or not the act done was the act of the corporation performed by its agent.

In Carroll v. Penberthy Injector Co. 16 Ont. App. Rep. 446, where the only evidence of publication of a libelous circular by a corporation was the testimony of the plaintiff that the defendant's manager admitted that it was published by the defendant, it was held that no recovery could be had, since the manager had no authority to subject the corporation to an action of libel by his admission that he had published the libel by its authority.

But it was held that if the manager had been called as a witness and had proved that he had been authorized, or that it formed any part of his duty, to do the act complained of, then the act would have been that of the corporation, and it would have been liable. Ibid.

Where the evidence merely shows that a corporation against which a recovery for libel is sought appointed a committee to investigate certain bills without specially directing or authorizing them to make their report in print, and no usage was shown authorizing such a report, it is not liable for a libel contained in printed reports of the committee which were placed on the secretary's desk, and which were freely taken by members, since the report was but the act of the committee. De Senancour v. Société la Prévoyance, 148 Mass. 617, 16 N. E. 553.

In Gallagher v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. 177 Ill. App. 198, where there was no competent evidence tending to prove that the defendant corporation authorized or was responsible for the telephoning of a libelous advertisement for which it was sued, it was held that the libelous matter and evidence of its publication in a newspaper were inadmissible.

In Howe Mach. Co. v. Souder, 58 Ga. 65, evidence that the agent of a corporation, after a suit had been begun against it for a libelous advertisement in a newspaper, changed the advertisement and regretted that he could not then pay for it, but promised to pay as soon as he received funds of the company, was held admissible in an action against it for libel to show that it authorized the publication.

In Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. supra, it was admitted by demurrer that the libel was published by the defendant corporation, and it was held unnecessary to allege that the agent of the company was authorized to publish it, and that he was acting within the scope of his authority and duty in so doing.

—publications relative to former employees.

A sewing machine company has been held liable for a libel contained in an advertisement in a newspaper, stating that the plaintiff, a former employee, was not authorized to sell its machines, which was inserted by an agent of the company authorized to stop the plaintiff from selling the machines. Gallagher v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. supra.

And the company cannot escape liability on the ground that the agent was prohibited in general terms from advertising, and that his act was a wilful departure from his employment, but the act may be characterized as a wilful act done by the agent in the company's business. Ibid.

And in Pattison v. Gulf Bag Co. 116 La. 963, 114 Am. St. Rep. 570, 41 So. 224, it was held that a corporation was liable for a libel published with reference to the discharge of an employee which its manager sanctioned in the interest of the company.

And a railroad corporation is liable for a libelous statement concerning the discharge of a conductor and the reasons there-statement, it meant that defendant company was charging plaintiff the sum of $1.50 for having sexual intercourse with its mules; that defendant's said bookkeeper, having the authority to issue statements for defendant, showed and exhibited said statement to various and sundry people, and at said time laughed and made fun of plaintiff, and thereby, and as herein set out, injured and defamed the good name and character of said plaintiff falsely and maliciously, to his damage in the sum of $3,000."

Appellee's answer, as amended, contained two paragraphs, the first being a traverse, and the second alleging, in substance, that, although it did, on February 16, 1913, issue to the appellant a statement showing what was due him for his labor and also such charges as he was owing it, the statement as delivered to appellant contained no charge for "mulage," as alleged in the petition, but that, after the statement was issued and delivered to appellant, someone then present in appellee's store, suggested, as a joke, that appellant should be charged with "mulage," whereupon the latter returned the statement to its bookkeeper, who, to carry out the jest, added to it the word "Mulage," and placed opposite same the figures "$1.50;" that the whole matter was a joke at which appellant took no offense and in which he participated by returning the statement to the bookkeeper for the purpose of having the words and figures in question added to it; and for, contained in a circular posted where the public could read it, by order of the general manager of the company, in the ordinary performance of his duties. Tench v. Great Western R. Co. 32 U. C. Q. B. 452.

In Howe Mach. Co. v. Souder, supra, the jury's verdict that the corporation authorized the publication of the libel complained of, and that it referred to the plaintiff, a former employee, was held to be sustained by the evidence, which, however, is not set out.

See also Henry v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. under subdivision, "—publication for which employee furnished data;" Hardoncourt v. North Penn Iron Co. under subdivision, "—publications concerning competitor and advancement of employer's business;" and Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, under subdivision, "—personal acts of employee."

—publications concerning competitor and advancement of employer's business.

A corporation has been held liable for a libel relative to a competitor, contained in a letter written by a manager of its branch office, upon paper bearing its letter head, for the purpose of obtaining a contract for work for his employer which was also sought by the competitor, although the libelous statement was not known or assented to by it, the act being one within the scope of his employment. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Henry Vogt Mach. Co. 139 Ky. 497, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504, 96 S. W. 551.

And it has been held that an insurance corporation may be held liable where its general agent investigated statements made by an agent of another company, and subsequently published a libelous statement concerning the other agent, which was signed by him in the name of the company, his act being for the defendant's benefit. Wells v. Payne, 141 Ky. 578, 133 S. W. 575.

And in Citizens' Life Assur. Co. v. Brown [1904] A. C. 423, 73 L. J. P. C. N. S. 102, 90 L. T. N. S. 739, 20 Times L. R. 497, 53 L.R.A.1915D.

Week. Rep. 176, there was held to be evidence from which the jury could properly find that the publication of a libelous letter sent to policy holders of the defendant insurance corporation concerning a competitor was within the scope of the writer's employment where there was testimony that he was a superintendent who was to devote his whole time to the defendant's business, and act under instructions given by its officers in accordance with its rules; that he was to receive and pay money and supervise agencies; that he was to appoint and look after agents and to stand as an intermediary between the assured and the insurer; and that he was authorized to secure business and save business and visit policy holders whose policies had lapsed or were likely to lapse.

And where there was evidence that a libelous publication concerning a former employee of the defendant corporation was sent to persons with whom it had or desired to establish business relations with the evident object of protecting its business from competition by the former employee, and that it was signed in the name of the corporation, followed by the name of a person who was one of its directors and its treasurer and general manager, although it did not appear that the office of general manager had been created, it was held that it could not be said that the testimony furnished no ground for the inference that such person, in writing and publishing the libel, was acting within the scope of his authority, and that after a verdict for the plaintiff in the libel suit a judgment non obstante veredicto could not be entered for the defendant. Hardoncourt v. North Penn Iron Co. 225 Pa. 379, 74 Atl. 243.

In Fogg v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 148 Mass. 513, 12 Am. St. Rep. 583, 20 N. E. 109, there was held to be evidence for the jury upon the question whether the libel complained of had been published by the defendant railroad's authority, or ratified by it, or made by one of its servants or agents in the course of the business in which he was employed, where it was admitted that a libelous extract from a newspaper conthat no charge was, in fact, made against appellant or deducted from his wages for any such item.

On the trial appellee, at the conclusion of appellant's evidence, moved the court to grant a peremptory instruction directing a verdict for it. The court, however, then declined to act upon the motion, but later granted it at the conclusion of all the evidence.

It is insisted for appellant that the giving of the peremptory instruction was error. If the word "Mulage" and accompanying figures complained of had been written and published by appellee's bookkeeper, Johnson, in the manner alleged in the petition, its libelous character, in view of the evidence as to the meaning given the word

"mulage" by the miners of the community in which appellee's mine is situated, would be manifest, because, as applied, it tended not only to make appellant contemptible and odious, which would of itself make the tort complete, but it, in fact, charged him with the crime of buggery. So, if the libel had been committed in the manner and under the circumstances indicated, there would seem to be no doubt of the appellant's right to make the bookkeeper, Johnson, responsible therefor in damages; but it would not follow that appellee would be responsible for the act of Johnson in writing or publishing the libel, unless it was done in execution of the authority, express or implied, given by it; for beyond the scope of his employment the servant cerning a ticket broker doing business on the same street as the defendant was kept posted for forty days in a conspicuous place in the defendant's office, which was in immediate charge of one of its employees, and there was evidence from which it might be inferred that the defendant's office was used for publishing information to persons about to purchase tickets which would be likely to induce them to buy of defendant rather than elsewhere, and that the principal managing agents had knowledge of the kinds of advertisements and notices posted in the office, and that the defendant's general passenger agent declined to interfere with the publication complained of.

In Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Paul, 37 Ill. App. 439, it was held that an action against an insurance corporation for libel published in a circular containing libelous statements concerning a person insured by the company, which its agent had caused to be printed, could not be maintained where the company did not specially authorize the printing in advance or subsequently ratify it, and the expense of printing was paid by the agent, who had no authority to print anything unless application was made to the home office, and the company was not informed and had no actual knowledge that the circular had been printed or sent out, since, although it was within the scope of his duty to push the company's business by ordinary methods, he had no authority to do so by means of malicious torts.

—publication for which employee furnished data.

In Henry v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 139 Pa. 289, 21 Atl. 157, where there was no evidence that libelous articles concerning an employee of the defendant corporation were dictated or inspired by the company or by its general superintendent, but that they were published by reporters, the corporation was held not liable. The court said: "The other charge, that the railroad company was responsible for a libel published by its general superintendent, is L.R.A.1915D.

yet more novel. It would certainly be carrying the doctrine of respondent superior to an extreme length. The doctrine is hard enough as it is, and we are not disposed to push it further. There was not a scintilla of testimony to show that the company published a libel, authorized anyone else to do so, or knew that it had been done. It appears that when it became known that irregularities were supposed to exist in the ticket department of the company, a number of reporters, with the irrepressible enterprise for which they are somewhat celebrated, proceeded, in their own way, to investigate the matter and lay the fruits thereof before the public through the Pittsburgh newspapers. But there was no evidence that these articles were dictated or even inspired by the company, or by Mr. Holbrook. That he was beset by the reporters for information is certain; that he gave very little, and that very reluctantly, is equally certain. And even if he furnished all the information which the plaintiff imputes to him, it would not make him responsible for a libel, unless he went one step further, and procured its publication. Of this there was no evidence. The proprietors of the respective newspapers may or may not be responsible in damages for the publication; the defendant company and Mr. Holbrook clearly are not."

In Howland v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 156 Mass. 543, 31 N. E. 656, in an action for libel against a corporation based on a report of an investigating committee, it was held that certain requested instructions were erroneous and properly refused where they contained the propositions that if the defendant, through its officers, agents, or employees, in the course of their employment, furnished any part of the materials used in the composition of the libel, or was concerned or in any way aided in the production of the libel, this would make the defendant liable for the libel in the form in which it appeared.

See also Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, under subdivision, "—personal acts of employee."

is as much a stranger to his master as any third person, and the act of the servant not done in the execution of the service for which he was engaged cannot be regarded as the act of the master.

It does not appear from the evidence, however, that the alleged libel was committed in the manner alleged in the petition. It was admitted by appellant in giving his testimony that the statement of his account with appellee when first handed him by the bookkeeper, Johnson, did not contain the word "Mulage" or the figures "$1.50," but that they were added thereto by Johnson after its delivery to appellant, and apparent from the testimony of Johnson, uncontradicted by appellant, and in part corroborated by the witnesses Cline and Steele, that the addition of the objectionable word and figures was suggested by Cline or Steele asking Johnson if, in making out the statement for appellant, he had charged him with "mulage," in reply to which Johnson said he had not, and then obtained from appellant the statement and added to it the word "Mulage" and figures "$1.50." According to all the evidence, this act of Johnson's raised a laugh among the persons present, in which appellant joined. It is true that appellant claims he became indignant on account of the addition to the statement of the word and figures complained of, but we think it manifest from the testimony of Johnson, Cline, and Steele that such indignation was not shown by appellant at the time, and he did not deny that he laughed with the others at what all evidently regarded as the joke perpe—personal acts of employee.

It has been held that a gas company is not liable for the act of its general manager in writing a personal letter, which he copied into the official copy book of the company, and which was used as the basis of a libelous publication by the newspaper to which it was sent, respecting the testimony of a former manager of the company before a committee of Congress as to the price of gas, the letter having been sent in response to a communication to the general manager requesting information, and there having been no specific authority given, and the act not being within his duty as general manager, and he having testified that he did not regard the correspondence as of an official nature, but that he answered the request for information as an act of courtesy. Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296, reversing 9 App. D. C. 508.

And it has been held that an express company is not liable for a libel where the son of its agent, who performed the latter's duties, seeing a complaint of a consignor concerning goods which the consignee had refused because of breakage, which had been answered by the agent, wrote a libelous letter to the consignor concerning the consignee, the libelous letter not being written in the performance of any duty which he was required or permitted to perform. Southern Exp. Co. v. Fitzner, 59 Miss. 581, 42 Am. Rep. 379.

In Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey, 101 Va. 443, 44 S. E. 692, in an action against a corporation for libel by its agent, it was held that an instruction requested by the defendant should have been given which stated that if the jury believed from the evidence that the duty of the author of the libelous letter, as an agent of the defendant, did not require or authorize him to write the letter, but that it was his own personal act, outside the scope of his duty to the defendant, and written because he felt angered and aggrieved at what he conceived to be the bad treatment of him by the plaintiff, they should find for the defendant, L.R.A.1915D.

it being held that the instruction explained the meaning of the term "scope" as used in a preceding instruction, and that this ground was not covered by another instruction which was given by the court.

—for libelous protest by notary.

A notary is not a mere agent or servant of a bank, but is a public officer, sworn to discharge his duties properly; and a bank to which a draft was sent for collection is not liable in an action for libel on the ground that the draft was protested by the notary of the bank without presentation for payment, and this is true although the notary was also an employee and agent of the bank. May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 15 L.R.A. 637, 30 Am. St. Rep. 154, 14 S. E. 552.

Liability of employers other than corporations.

Employers other than corporations are held to be liable for libels published by their employees where the publication was expressly authorized, or was within the scope of the employee's authority.

Thus, it has been held that a dealer in plumbers' supplies is liable for a libel contained in a letter written by his manager in the routine of the business to a plumbers' association, regarding the plaintiff's credit, although it was wilfully done, since a master is responsible for a wilful injury committed by his servant while engaged in the transaction of the master's business. Trapp v. Du Bois, 76 App. Div. 314, 78 N. Y. Supp. 505.

In Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280, 9 L.R.A. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 516, 46 N. W. 5, it was held that the liability of the general manager of a commercial agency for libel should be submitted to the jury where the publication was made by a notification sheet sent to patrons of the agency by the general manager's chief clerk on information sent to the general manager, addressed to him in his name, without anything to indicate that it was intended for the agency, and the clerk, who was autrated by Johnson. It is further apparent from the evidence that, of the persons present in the store, only Cline saw the word "Mulage" and figures "$1.50" after they had been added to the statement by Johnson. They were afterwards seen by two other persons, but it was because the paper was shown them by appellant in the effort to discount or sell it to them, superinduced by his need of the money it showed him entitled to receive, which did not become due until several days later.

The circumstances attending the transaction in question clearly indicate that Johnson's motive in adding to the statement the word and figures complained of was to afford amusement to himself and the other persons present. The joke, however, was an indecent one, which only the vulgar mind would appreciate. Although appellant, at the time of its perpetration, was apparently amused by it, he did not willingly participate in the joke, and it can readily be understood that a sober second thought enabled him to realize its sting and the humiliation of feeling that would naturally result to a victim of such obscenity. If this were an action against Johnson for the libel complained of, we would be inclined to hold that he could not escape liability upon the ground that the libel was a joke. At most, evidence that this was so would be competent only in mitigation of damages; as it would tend to show the motive for the libel and the absence of actual malice.

thorized to open his letters and prepare such notification sheets without consulting the manager, unless there was something exceptional in the communication, sent out the report without consulting the defendant, it being held that the principles of respondet superior applied.

In Harding v. Greening, 8 Taunt, 41, 1 J. B. Moore, 77, Holt, 631, it was held that there was no evidence either of command, authority, adoption, or recognition to go to the jury, and that a nonsuit was properly entered where it appeared that the defendant, a tradesman, was in the habit of employing his daughter to draw his bills and write his business letters; that a bill in the daughter's handwriting was sent to a person who employed the plaintiff to inspect the bill, which, after he had reduced it, was returned by the debtor to the defendant; that it was then returned, together with the libel upon the plaintiff, which was also in the daughter's handwriting; it being held that there was nothing to show that it was within the scope of her authority to write the libel, or that she had been given such authority by the defendant.

It has been held that where authority is given to an agent to publish libelous words, and he causes a publication to be made which substantially corresponds with those words, the principal is liable. Dawson v. Holt, 11 Lea, 583, 47 Am. Rep. 312.

But the principal is not liable where the libel authorized to be published was in substance that the plaintiff was a troublesome fellow to his neighbors, and had tried to hire a negro to swear falsely, and the publication made by the agent was that the plaintiff was a pest to the community, and that there was overwhelming evidence on file in the clerk's office clearly establishing his guilt of subornation of perjury, such publication not being within the authority conferred on the agent. Ibid.

And in Russo v. Maresca, 72 Conn. 51, 43 Atl. 552, it was held that the president of a society was not liable for a libel published where he presided over a regular meeting at which it was voted to publish an answer to a certain newspaper article relating to the society, and at which a newspaper was designated in which the answer was to be published, and an appropriation made to pay for its insertion, and a member was selected to write it, but there was no contemplation that the answer should contain any libelous matter.

In Wilson v. Noonan, 27 Wis. 598, it was held that one who wrote an article for publication in a newspaper published in a foreign language, and gave it to the proprietor of the paper to be translated, was responsible for a libelous article which was printed, although the translation was materially inaccurate, it being held that the maxim respondet superior applied.

In Parkes v. Prescott, L. R. 4 Exch. 169, it was held, Byles and Mellor, JJ., dissenting, that the case should have been submitted to the jury on the question of a request by the defendants that the proceedings should be published, and on the question whether the published reports contained a correct account of the proceedings as the defendants meant them to appear, where there was evidence that the libels complained of were reports in newspapers of proceedings at a meeting of the board of guardians of a parish in which a discussion took place respecting the plaintiff's conduct; that one of the defendants stated that he hoped the local press would take notice of the very scandalous case, and requested the chairman to give an outline of it; that this was done by members of the board and the facts were taken down by reporters; that the other defendant, who was chairman of the meeting, said that he was glad gentlemen of the press were present, and hoped they would take notice of the case, and that he hoped the matter would be given publicity, and the other defendant added, "And so do I," to the former's remark that he hoped the press would take notice of the matter. Montague Smith, J., said: "I agree with the learned counsel for the defendants that loose expressions of a mere wish or hope that proceedings should be published would not be sufficient to fix liability on the defendants in cases like the present. I think the words must be of

The remaining question to be determined is: Do the facts appearing in the record make appellee responsible for the libel complained of? The paper on which it was written is a printed form appellee requires its bookkeeper to use in furnishing its employees statements of its accounts with them. The statement furnished appellant by Johnson, the bookkeeper, was as follows:

No. 4.

Feb. 16, 1913.

Mr. Did Case Earnings
Cars 37 @	22.20
Hours Tons Yards
Total Earnings
Advances
Store	7.85
Rent
Doctor	.50
Fuel Board
Smithing	.50
Insurance
Co. Deductions
Claims Mulage	1.50
[Pencil line run through the word "Claims," and on the same line following the word "Claims," is the word "Mulage," written with pencil.]
Helpers	3.30
<hr/>
Total Advances	12.15
<hr/>
Balance Due	10.05

It appears from the foregoing statement that appellee's indebtedness to appellant was $22.20, and that there was due it from appellant for advances, as shown opposite the proper headings, various items aggregating $12.15, which, deducted from the $22.20 of its indebtedness to appellant, left due him $10.05, as shown on the statement. According to the evidence, after this statement had been completed, Johnson obtained it from appellant and wrote thereon, opposite the word "Claims," the word "Mulage," and to the right of that word the figures "1.50." At the time this was done he ran his pencil through the word "Claims." All the figures appearing upon the statement were entered with a pen and ink, except the figures "1.50," which, together with the word "Mulage," was written with a pencil. It will further be observed that the figures "1.50" were not included in the advances charged to appellant in the statement, nor was the $1.50 actually charged to appellant or deducted from what was due him from appellee. The form of statement used in furnishing appellant his account contains no item or heading for such a charge as mulage, and it is admitted by appellant that no such charge as mulage is required by appellee to be made against its employees.

We think it patent from the evidence that the bookkeeper, Johnson, in writing the word and figures complained of on the statement furnished appellant, was not acting in the performance of any duty required of him by appellee or in the execution of any authority, express or implied, given him by it; nor was it an act within the scope of his employment or in the furtherance of his employer's business. It was merely an act done to accomplish a purpose of his own, wholly foreign to any duty he owed his employer, and entirely beyond the apparent scope of his employment by the latter. Nor does it appear from the evidence that his act in writing on the statement the word and figures complained of was at any time approved or ratified by appellee. Many cases have arisen in which the master has been held responsible for the torts of the servant, whether the tort consisted in the infliction of physical injury to the person aggrieved or injury to his character, but in all such cases liability is fastened upon the master because the servant is acting for the master. This doctrine is well stated in Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 115 Ky. 447, 103 Am. St. Rep. 330, 74 S. W. 171, as follows: "The reason the master is liable for the act of his servant at all is because the servant is acting in that matter in the master's stead and for him. Obviously, if the servant is not acting for the master, he cannot be said to be his representative in that act. So, if the servant is charged by the master with the authority to act in his stead in a given matter, the servant's action or his failure to act, as the case may be, is imputed to the master as if it were his own. This general doctrine must be too well known to require now the citation of au-such a kind, and used in such a manner, as to satisfy the jury that they amount to, and were in fact, a request to publish. If the words do amount to such a request, and the publication be made in pursuance of it by the persons to whom it was addressed, then it seems to me the persons making such request would be responsible for the libelous matter so published. Whether the libelous matter published is in pursuance of, and in accordance with, the request, or a departure from it, and so unauthorized, would be a question to be considered on the circumstances of the particular case."

J. T. W.

thority to support it. But where the servant steps aside from his employment and assumes to act, and does act, solely on his own account in a matter which the master has no more connection with than if he were the most complete stranger, it would not be logical or fair to make the master vicariously suffer for it; for in doing that act the servant, so-called, was absolutely his own master. . . . In determining whether a particular act is done in the course of the servant's employment, it is proper to inquire whether the servant was at the time engaged in serving his master. If the act be done while the servant is at liberty from the service, and pursuing his own ends exclusively, the master is not responsible. If the servant was, at the time the injury was inflicted, acting for himself and as his own master pro tempore, the master is not liable. If the servant step aside from his master's business, for however short a time, to do an act not connected with his business, the relation of master and servant is for the time suspended." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Rue, 142 Ky. 694, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 200, 134 S. W. 1144.

In Newell on Slander & Libel, p. 373, it is said: "If a partner, in conducting the business of a firm, causes a libel to be published, the firm will be liable as well as the individual partner. So, if an agent or servant of the firm defames anyone by the express direction of the firm, or in accordance with the general orders given by the firm for the conduct of their business. To hold either of the members of a partnership, it is not necessary that the partner should publish the libel himself. It is sufficient if he authorized, incited, or encouraged any other person to do it, or if, having authority to forbid it, he permitted it, the act was his." Burgess v. Patterson, 139 Ky. 547, 106 S. W. 837.

In Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Henry Vogt Mach. Co. 139 Ky. 497, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504, 96 S. W. 551, it was held that one corporation may sue another for libel on it, as distinct from a libel on its individual members. In that case the plaintiff and defendant were rival ice machine manufacturers, both endeavoring to secure a particular contract, and defendant's agent for this purpose wrote a letter to the proposed purchaser, stating that plaintiff was a secondhand dealer, that it put in a class of inferior work, was a scab establishment, and did not have a mechanic in its employ. It was held that such a writing was libelous per se, and that the corporation whose agent wrote the letter was liable in damages for the libel it contained, because, after obtaining knowledge L.R.A.1915D.

of the publication of the libel, its failure to repudiate it before suit operated as a ratification and approval of the libel. In the opinion it is said: "A corporation is liable in damages for the publication of a libel as it is for other torts. To establish its liability the publication must be shown to have been made by its authority, or to have been ratified by it, or to have been made by one of its servants or agents in the scope of his employment and in the course of the business in which he was employed."

In Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 135 Ky. 183, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 955, 121 S. W. 1026, 21 Ann. Cas. 481, which was an action for slander, it was held that a partnership or corporation is not liable for slander by its servant, unless the actionable words were spoken by its express consent, direction, or authority, or were ratified or approved by it. In a case for libel by the servant of a corporation, however, the question of the latter's liability will not turn upon whether it expressly consented to, directed, or authorized the libel. It will be responsible for the libel if it was published by the servant in execution of the authority, express or implied, given by the corporation, or in the performance of the service for which the servant was engaged, or the act was one within the apparent scope of his employment.

Measured by the above test, there is no cause for holding that appellee is responsible for the libel complained of in this case; hence the action of the Circuit Court in peremptorily instructing the jury to find for appellee was not error.

Judgment affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

HAMPTON GUANO COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

HILL LIVE-STOCK COMPANY.

(168 N. C. 442, 84 S. E. 774.)

Sale — fertilizer — warranty of ingredients — result.

1. An action for the purchase price of fertilizer sold under a warranty as to ingredients.

Note. — Evidence as to results of use of substance upon issue as to breach of warranty as to ingredients.

For admissibility upon question as to breach of warranty, of evidence as to success or failure of similar goods or apparatus, see note to Waterman-Waterbury Co. v. School Dist. L.R.A.1915B, 626.

For liability of vendor of seeds, see the dients cannot be defeated because it was not suitable to the purpose for which it was sold.

Evidence — effect of fertilizers — breach of warranty.

2. Upon the question of breach of warranty that fertilizer contains certain ingredients in certain proportions in a contract which provided that the vendor should not be liable for results, evidence of the effect of the fertilizer upon crops is admissible in connection with proof of the kind of soil, manner of cultivation, accidents of season and other pertinent facts to prove that it did not contain the ingredients stated or in the proportion specified.

Damages — breach of warranty — measure.

3. The measure of damages for breach of warranty that fertilizer contains certain ingredients is the difference between the value of the article delivered and what it would have been worth had it been as represented.

Sale — warranty — extension by retailer.

4. The liability of a manufacturer of fertilizer upon his warranty to the retailer cannot be enlarged by warranties inserted by the latter in his contracts with consumers.

(March 24, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Franklin County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the purchase price of fertilizers sold by plaintiff to defendant under a warranty as to ingredients. New trial.

note to Leonard Seed Co. v. Crary Canning Co. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79.

It will be noticed that this note lies in somewhat narrow compass, as the warranty is simply of ingredients and not of excellence or of results. Generally speaking, the result of the use of a thing is evidence of the nature of the thing. Whether the events following the use are due to the use, and so evidence of the nature of the thing used, depends on circumstances. Positive as distinguished from negative events following the use of a thing perhaps point more directly to its nature, as violent illness immediately after eating or drinking, with symptoms characteristic of the use of a certain poison; so the presence in a crop of a great deal of a certain weed may suggest that the seed used contained much of that weed.

But if there seems more ground for hesitation in reasoning from "negative results" or lack of results following the use of a certain thing, this kind of deduction is constantly employed by all of us every day,—as for instance in concluding that there has been an omission to put sugar in our coffee. The matter becomes, therefore, one depending upon what is fair and reasonable in the particular class of cases; but it is essential that the limited scope of the evidence be emphasized in the instructions to the jury.

It is interesting in this connection to refer to the opinion in Knowles v. State, 80 Ala. 9, where the court in holding that whether a liquor was intoxicating or not might be shown from its effect on persons using it said: "The most available mode of testing the nature and properties of a fluid or drug, next to that of chemical analysis, is by its effects on the human system. That a liquor when taken in certain quantities intoxicated or failed to intoxicate the person taking it is as competent to prove or disprove its intoxicating qualities as it would be to prove the poisonous nature of a drug by the effect following its administration."

It seems a sound doctrine which is sustained in the principal case, that failure of results in the use of a fertilizer is some evidence that the fertilizer did not conform to a standard which generally produced good results under similar circumstances, provided the matter is properly limited in instructions to the jury.

In Georgia it is held that the result upon the crop cannot be shown unless there is other evidence of the ingredients of the fertilizer (Hamlin v. Rogers, 78 Ga. 631, 3 S. E. 259); but that in such case it may be shown (De Loach v. Hardee's Son & Co. 64 Ga. 94; Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265).

In Hamlin v. Rogers, supra, cited in the principal case, the court approved the rejection, under a similar contract, of evidence of failure to benefit the defendant's crops although the crops were properly cultivated, the soil suitable and the seasons propitious, and the plaintiff had testified that if the fertilizer was "as represented by the analysis on the sacks, it would have benefited the crops, with good seasons." The court said: "The evidence offered and rejected would not per se have shown that the fertilizer was deficient as to any of such ingredients; without being offered in aid of other testimony to establish this fact, it would be immaterial. At best, it is only ad-minicular in its character. Where, for instance, another analysis is given or offered in evidence to show that the fertilizer does not come up to the standard laid down by the state chemist, those facts may be used in aid of such other analysis; but here there was nothing which the evidence offered could sustain. This is the extent to which former decisions of this court have gone."

In Scott v. McDonald, 83 Ga. 28, 9 S. E. 770, where it does not appear that there was any particular form of warranty, the court, in holding that the defendant's evidence was not sufficient where the plaintiff showed that some of the same lot of guano had benefited his crops and the defendant showed its lack of benefit to his crops, said: "The law does not require the seller to guarantee its effects upon crops. It only requires him to warrant that it contains such a per cent of certain ingredients. The purchaser must determine for himself whether those ingredients will benefit his crops. . . . It is necessary for him to go further than

Statement by Walker, J.:

This civil action was tried before Whedbee, judge, and a jury, at November term, 1914, of Franklin superior court.

Plaintiff is a manufacturer of fertilizers, and defendant a merchant of Louisburg, who deals in fertilizers, selling them on credit to farmers. On January 31, 1913, defendant purchased fertilizers from plaintiff under a written contract; the provisions thereof, material to this case, being as follows:

"And it is further understood and agreed that the fertilizer named is furnished with the guaranty of analysis printed on the sack, but not of results from its use. Verbal promises that conflict with the terms of this contract are unauthorized, and will not be recognized by this company."

Under this contract, in the spring of 1913, plaintiff shipped and delivered to defendant 80 tons of 8-2-2 fertilizer. On July 1, 1913, in payment therefor, defendant executed to plaintiff notes aggregating $1,050.75, which said notes were indorsed by K. P. and J. P. Hill, and were payable in January and February, 1914. Upon maturity of said notes, and long after the crops, under which the fertilizer was used, had been harvested, defendant wrote plaintiff several times and promised to pay the notes, as will appear from letters written from January to May, 1914, and set out in the record. In January, 1914, defendant sought to renew its contract with plaintiff, to show that it had no effect on his crops. He must show by this and by other proof that it did not contain the ingredients of the guaranteed analysis. If he only shows that it did not have any effect on his crop, that is not sufficient, under the ruling of this court in the case of Hamlin v. Rogers, supra."

Allen v. Young, 62 Ga. 617, is sufficiently dealt with in the principal case.

In De Loach v. Hardee's Son & Co. 64 Ga. 94, under a contract which so far as our subject is concerned was substantially similar to that in the Allen Case, it was held that it was error to refuse to allow the plaintiff to show the effect of the fertilizer on his crops as strengthening the testimony of a chemist that the fertilizer was below standard,—especially where there was evidence that when up to the standard it had helped production. The court considered this holding as in accord with the Allen Case, and said: "While by the express terms of his contract the defendant cannot plead that the practical result of the use of the guano was that it made nothing, and defend himself on that ground, and therefore cannot introduce evidence for that purpose; yet such evidence is admissible to strengthen the testimony of the chemist that the guano did not come up to the stipulated standard, and to show that by its failure to meet the standard agreed upon the defendant was damaged. If it came up to the stipulated standard, it is wholly immaterial whether it made a lock of cotton or grain of corn; but the fact that it made neither is evidence that it did not come up to that standard, especially where the evidence is, as in this case, that other sea fowl guano which came up to the standard, or nearly so, did help the production largely."

In Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265, quoted from in the principal case, it was held that evidence of the failure of the guano to benefit the defendant's crops would be admissible after evidence of an analysis by an expert.

While the cases are distinguishable on the facts the holding in the principal case L.R.A.1915D.

seems to differ from the view expressed by the same court in Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 274, 73 S. E. 883, where it was held that the measure of damages was the difference in price between the fertilizer contracted for and that furnished, and the court, in approving the exclusion of evidence of "the difference in the looks and nature of crops on different farms on which this fertilizer was used, and the crops under which he used other fertilizers," said: "The only pertinency of such evidence would be the inference that the ingredients were not as represented. This would be too remote, depending upon the nature of the soil, weather, cultivation, and the like. The best evidence is the analysis by the Agricultural Department. When the defendant ascertained therefrom the deficiency in the quality of the fertilizers, it was his duty to have bought fertilizing materials or ingredients to make good the deficiency. Not having done so, he can properly claim only the abatement of the price by reason of such deficiency, and that he has been allowed."

But HAMPTON GUANO CO. v. HILL LIVE STOCK CO. has been followed in Carter v. McGill, — N. C. —, 84 S. E. 802, holding that a breach of a warranty that the fertilizer should be of "the standard grade" might be shown by proof that the fertilizer was worthless by showing the results of its use. The court said: "The purchaser of the fertilizer may show a breach by the effect of the use of it upon his crops, provided he first lays the foundation for such proof by showing that it was used under conditions favorable to a correct test of its value, such as land adapted to the growth of the cotton, proper cultivation and tillage, propitious weather or seasons; the general purpose being to exclude any element which would render the evidence uncertain as to the cause of the loss or diminution of the crop or rid it of its speculative character. It may be somewhat difficult in practice to apply the rule, but it can be done by proper attention to the limitations on this kind of evidence, and we have so held, at this term, in HAMPTON GUANO CO. v. HILL LIVE STOCK CO." and to purchase 250 tons of the same fertilizer (being over three times as much as it had purchased in 1913) under a contract identical with the first one, but plaintiff refused to ship the goods because defendant had not paid for those purchased under the contract above referred to. At no time prior to the institution of this action did defendants ever claim or contend that the fertilizer delivered in 1913 was defective in quality or otherwise, or that they had any defense against said notes; on the other hand, they recognized their liability upon said notes, and promised to pay the same, expressing regret that a scarcity of money had prevented them from making payment at maturity. Defendants failing to comply with their promises to pay said notes, this action was instituted on June 18, 1914, to recover the amount due thereon. Defendants answered, admitting the execution and nonpayment of the notes, but pleading as a counterclaim that it had sold the fertilizer to its customers under warranties that the goods were in every respect highly efficient, suitable and fit for the fertilization of the crops for which they were recommended; that their customers complained to them that the goods were not fit or suitable and did not measure up to the standard and quality warranted; and that defendant had suffered damage thereby.

B. B. B.

Upon the trial defendant, over the objection of plaintiff, offered evidence from persons who had used fertilizers purchased from defendant in 1913, tending to show that the fertilizer so purchased was in bad mechanical condition, being lumpy and off color; that it did not assimilate or was not taken up by the soil and did not fertilize the crops; that they had used it under their crops with poor results and made bad crops; and that in their opinion the fertilizer was not worth as much as they were charged for it. Plaintiff objected to all this evidence, repeating the objections, until the court ruled that all such testimony should be considered as objected to. It was objected to: First, because the effect thereof was to vary the written contract between the parties, which expressly provides that the plaintiff did not in any way guarantee the effect or results from the use of the fertilizer; second, because said testimony tended to set up a new contract guarantying results from its use, whereas the written contract expressly limited the warranty to the analysis appearing on the sacks; third, because said testimony in no way tended to show that the fertilizer did not contain the constituents in the quantities guaranteed by the analysis; fourth, because there was no evidence of any chemical analysis by the state chemist or other person, and that, until such analysis was offered, evidence as to its effect upon crops was incompetent and inadmissible; and, fifth, because Revisal, §§ 3949-3951, as amended by Public Laws of 1911, chap. 92, provides that the analysis therein referred to is the best evidence of the contents of said fertilizers. There were some other specific grounds, not necessary to be stated. The contract between the parties was introduced in evidence, and shows that the fertilizer was guaranteed to contain the ingredients and in the proportion stated on the certificate of analysis printed on the sack, before the sale by plaintiffs, which shows the contents to be 8 per cent of phosphoric acid, 2 per cent of ammonia, and 2 per cent of potash. Plaintiff demurred ore tenus to the answer and counterclaim, upon the following grounds:

"(1) It failed to state or allege wherein the defendants, or either of them, had been damaged. (2) It fails to allege or state, except in general terms, that defendants, or either of them, have suffered any damage whatever, actual or special. (3) It fails to specify or allege any grounds upon which defendants base their claim for damages. (4) It fails to specify wherein defendants, or either of them, have been damaged in any manner whatsoever, even if the fertilizer was not as guaranteed in the contract. (5) It fails to allege that any chemical analysis has been made by the Agricultural Department, or anyone else, and any of the ingredients found to be deficient. (6) It admits the execution of the contract containing an express warranty as to analysis as shown on the sacks, and no implied warranty as to results can be set up or considered."

The demurrer was overruled, and plaintiff excepted.

The jury returned the following verdict.

"(1) Are the defendants indebted to the plaintiff on account of the notes sued on, and, if so, in what sum? Answer: $1,060.28, with 6 per cent interest on $525 from January 15, 1914, until paid, and 6 per cent interest on $525.75 from February 14, 1914, until paid, and interest on $9.53 from May 4, 1914, until paid.

"(2) Did the plaintiff warrant the fertilizer to contain 8 per cent available phosphoric acid, 2 per cent ammonia, and 2 per cent potash, and suitable for use as a fertilizer of crops? Answer: Yes.

"(3) If yes, was said fertilizer, when delivered to defendant, as warranted? Answer: No.

"(4) What damages, if any, are defendants entitled to recover of plaintiff? Answer: $1,061.25."

The court gave the following instructions upon the second and third issues, to which exception was taken:

"The contract itself says that it is guaranteed, and warrants the purchaser that it contains 8 per cent phosphoric acid, 2 per cent ammonia, and 2 per cent potash; and the law says, in addition, that it is suitable for the purpose for which it is sold."

"If you believe this evidence, I charge you, as a matter of fact, to answer this issue, 'Yes,' that the plaintiff did warrant the fertilizer to contain 8 per cent phosphoric acid, 2 per cent ammonia, and 2 per cent potash, and that it was suitable for use as a fertilizer of crops."

"If the evidence satisfies you by its greater weight that it did not contain 8 per cent phosphoric acid, 2 per cent ammonia, and 2 per cent potash, or that it was unfit for use as a fertilizer, and you are satisfied of either of these facts by the greater weight of the evidence, I charge you to answer the third issue, 'No.'"

Plaintiff excepted to the judgment, which was entered upon the verdict, and appealed.

Messrs. A. C. Zollicoffer, J. P. Zollicoffer, and McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, for appellant:

The evidence as to the effect of the fertilizer and of results from its use was incompetent and should have been excluded, because the effect thereof was to vary and contradict the written contract.

Basnight v. Southern Jobbing Co. 148 N. C. 356, 62 S. E. 420; Dr. Shoop Medicine Co. v. J. A. Mizell & Co. 148 N. C. 384, 62 S. E. 511; Walker v. Venters, 148 N. C. 289, 62 S. E. 510; Walker v. Cooper, 150 N. C. 128, 63 S. E. 681; Woodson v. Beck, 151 N. C. 144, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235, 65 S. E. 751; Cobb v. Clegg, 137 N. C. 153, 49 S. E. 80; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. McClamrock, 152 N. C. 405, 67 S. E. 991; Anderson v. American Suburban Corp. 155 N. C. 131, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 896, 71 S. E. 221; Leonard v. Southern Power Co. 155 N. C. 10, 70 S. E. 1061; Jeffords v. Albemarle Waterworks, 157 N. C. 10, 72 S. E. 624; S. F. Bowser & Co. v. Tarry, 156 N. C. 35, 72 S. E. 74; Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 275, 73 S. E. 883; Lytton Mfg. Co. v. House Mfg. Co. 161 N. C. 430, 77 S. E. 233; Allen v. Young, 62 Ga. 619.

There being no evidence that the fertilizer had been analyzed by the state chemist, evidence of the effect of the fertilizer upon crops was insufficient and incompetent to show a breach of warranty under the contract, or to show that the goods did not come up to the guaranteed analysis.

O'Kelly v. Williams, 84 N. C. 285; L.R.A.1915D.

Wooten v. Hill, 98 N. C. 53, 3 S. E. 846; Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 552, 18 L. ed. 409; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 391, 30 L. ed. 1060, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; Armour Fertilizer Works Co. v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 274, 73 S. E. 883; Hamlin v. Rogers, 78 Ga. 631, 3 S. E. 259; Scott v. McDonald, 83 Ga. 28, 9 S. E. 770; Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265; Yarborough v. Hughes, 139 N. C. 209, 51 S. E. 904.

Independent of the statute requiring an analysis by the state chemist, the evidence offered by defendant was so speculative and uncertain that a verdict should not be allowed to be predicated thereon.

Roberts v. Cole, 82 N. C. 294; Bell v. Reynolds, 78 Ala. 511, 56 Am. Rep. 52; G. Ober & Sons Co. v. Blalock, 40 S. C. 31, 18 S. E. 266; Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 274, 73 S. E. 883.

There is no implied warranty of fitness in the sale of personal property.

Lanier v. Auld, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 138; Dickson v. Jordan, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 166, 53 Am. Dec. 403; Woodridge v. Brown, 149 N. C. 299, 62 S. E. 1076; 35 Cyc. 409; Rasin v. Conley, 58 Md. 59; Walker v. Pue, 57 Md. 155; G. Ober & Sons Co. v. Blalock, 40 S. C. 31, 18 S. E. 264; Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572; Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392; Wilcox v. Owens, 64 Ga. 601.

As the contract is in writing and contains an express warranty of quality, this excludes any implied warranty of fitness.

DeWitt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 3 L. ed. 896, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. f36; Chase Hackley Piano Co. v. Kennedy, 152 N. C. 196, 67 S. E. 488; W. F. Main Co. v. Griffin-Bynum Co. 141 N. C. 43, 53 S. E. 727; Robinson v. Huffstetler, 165 N. C. 459, 81 S. E. f53; Brooks Bros. Lumber Co. v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 136 Ga. 754, 72 S. E. 40; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. McKay, 161 N. C. 586, 77 S. E. 848; Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392; Farrow v. Andrews, 69 Ala. 96; Springfield Shingle Co. v. Edgecomb Mill Co. 52 Wash. 620, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 275, 101 Pac. 233.

If damages were otherwise recoverable, there could be no recovery based upon the evidence herein, because such damages are too vague, indefinite and conjectural to form a basis from which the jury could estimate the same.

Boyle v. Reeder, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 607; Roberts v. Cole, 82 N. C. 292; Reiger v. Worth, 127 N. C. 230, 52 L.R.A. 362, 80 Am. St. Rep. 798, 37 S. E. 217; Winston Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Wells Whitehead Tobacco Co. 141 N. C. 284, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255, 53 S. E. 885; Walser v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 114 N. C. 440, 19 S. E. 366; Hardison v. Reel, 154 N. C. 277, 34 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 1098, 70 S. E. 463; Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 274, 73 S. E. 883; Carson v. Bunting, 154 N. C. 530, 70 S. E. 923; G. Ober & Sons Co. v. Katzenstein, 160 N. C. 439, 76 S. E. 476; Bowen v. King, 146 N. C. 391, 59 S. E. 1044; Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co. 143 N. C. 57, 55 S. E. 422; Pender Lumber Co. v. Wilmington Iron Works, 130 N. C. 589, 41 S. E. 797; Willis v. Branch, 94 N. C. 149. Messrs. Ben. T. Holden, William H. Ruffin, W. H. Yarborough, Jr., and W. M. Person, for appellee:

The analysis by the state chemist is the best evidence of the constituent parts of fertilizers offered for sale, but such analysis is not the only evidence admissible.

Tomlinson & Co. v. Morgan, 166 N. C. 557, 82 S. E. 953; Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265.

There was no contradiction or variation of the terms of the written contract by the admission of the evidence excepted to.

Defendant relied upon that implied warranty which runs with all sales of personalty, that the article sold was merchantable and that it was fit for some use or purpose, or the purpose for which it was sold, if sold for a particular purpose.

Benjamin, Sales, § 186; Main v. Field, 144 N. C. 311, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 245, 119 Am. St. Rep. 956, 56 S. E. 943; Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 163 N. C. 296, 79 S. E. 602; Ashford v. H. C. Shrader Co. 167 N. C. 45, 83 S. E. 29.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

When a person buys an article of personal property, he can require an express warranty as to its quality, or he may rely upon the warranty which the law implies in certain sales; but it has been well said that:

"When he takes an express warranty, it will exclude an implied warranty on the same or a closely related subject. Thus an express warranty of quality will exclude an implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended, but an express warranty on one subject does not exclude an implied warranty on an entirely different subject,"—an illustration of the latter being that an express warranty of title will not exclude an implied warranty of soundness or merchantability. 35 Cyc. 392.

It was held in the early case of Lanier v. Auld, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 138, 3 Am. Dec. 680:

"That the law will not imply what is not expressed, where there is a formal contract. Evan's Essay, 32; 1 Fonbl. 364; Bree v. Holbech, 2 Dougl. K. B. 654; Cripps v. L.R.A. 1915D.

Reade, 6 T. R. 806, 3 Revised Rep. 273. Express warranty as to soundness and age excludes any implied warranty as to other qualities."

What was said by Justice Brown in Chase Hackley Piano Co. v. Kennedy, 152 N. C. 196, 67 S. E. 488, is very pertinent here:

"We have recognized the principle that there can be no implied warranty of quality in the sale of personal property where there is an express warranty, and that, where a party sets up and relies upon a written warranty, he is bound by its terms and must comply with them. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 199; W. F. Main Co. v. Griffin-Bynum Co. 141 N. C. 43, 53 S. E. 727. We recognize the further principle, applied by us in that case, that a failure by the purchaser to comply with the conditions of the warranty is fatal to a recovery for breach of the warranty in an action on it, or where, as in this case, damages for the breach are pleaded as a counterclaim in an action by the seller for the purchase money."

"There are numerous well-considered cases that an express warranty of quality excludes any implied warranty that the articles sold were merchantable or fit for their intended use." De Witt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 33 L. ed. 896, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536.

See also W. F. Main Co. v. Griffin-Bynum Co. supra; Robinson v. Huffstetler, 165 N. C. 459, 81 S. E. 753; Brooks Bros. Lumber Co. v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 136 Ga. 754, 72 S. E. 40.

It has been held that an implied warranty cannot be set up, even under a code provision, where the parties, by their contract, have expressly agreed upon a different warranty, whether it be more or less extensive or limited (Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392; Farrow v. Andrews, 69 Ala. 96), and also that if a specific kind of fertilizer, or other article of a certain description or name, is ordered, there is no implied warranty of fitness, but only one that it is the kind designated (35 Cyc. 409; Rasin v. Conley, 58 Md. 59; G. Ober & Sons Co. v. Blalock, 40 S. C. 31, 18 S. E. 264; Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572; Walker v. Pue, 57 Md. 155; Wilcox v. Owens, 64 Ga. 601). A party who relies upon a written contract of warranty as to quality or description of the property he has purchased is bound by the terms of the warranty. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. McKay, 161 N. C. 586, 77 S. E. 848. He is not only held to the terms of the contract into which he has deliberately entered, but he is not permitted to contradict or vary its terms by parol evidence, as "the written word must abide" and be considered as the only standard by which to measure the obligations of the respective parties to the agreement, in the absence of fraud or mistake, or other equitable element. 35 Cyc. 379. There are numerous cases decided by this court, illustrative of this elementary rule in the law, as to written contracts. Moffitt v. Maness, 102 N. C. 457, 9 S. E. 399; Cobb v. Clegg, 137 N. C. 153, 49 S. E. 80; Basnight v. Southern Jobbing Co. 148 N. C. 356, 62 S. E. 420; Walker v. Venters, 148 N. C. 389, 62 S. E. 510; Dr. Shoop Medicine Co. v. J. A. Mizell & Co. 148 N. C. 384, 62 S. E. 511; Walker v. Cooper, 150 N. C. 128, 63 S. E. 681; Woodson v. Beek, 151 N. C. 144, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235, 65 S. E. 751; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. McClamrock, 152 N. C. 405, 67 S. E. 991; and especially Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 275, 73 S. E. 883. There are authorities which hold that there is no implied warranty of quality in the sale of goods, but some of these are reviewed by this court in the late case of Ashford v. H. C. Shrader Co. 167 N. C. 45, 83 S. E. 29, and a warranty was said to be implied in certain excepted instances, but they all relate to contracts which do not contain any express warranty of quality. The subject is fully considered in that case, and further comment, therefore, is not required.

Let us now examine the facts of this case in the light of the foregoing principles. The main inquiry is as to the nature and scope of the special warranty and the rights and obligations of the parties springing therefrom: The warranty is made up of three elements: (1) That the fertilizer shall contain the ingredients in a specified proportion, as stated in the analysis printed on each bag. (2) That the seller should not be held responsible for results in its actual use. (3) That the whole contract is therein expressed, and all other terms are unauthorized. No language could be more explicit and no contractual obligation and right more definitely fixed. The warranty was drawn for the very purpose of preventing the recovery of such damages as are, in their nature, very speculative, if not imaginary, and out of all proportion to the amount of money or price received by the seller for the fertilizer. If fertilizer companies can be mulcted in damages for the failure of the crop of every farmer who may buy from them, they would very soon be driven into insolvency or be compelled to withdraw from the state, as the aggregate damages, if the supposed doctrine be carried to its logical conclusion, would be ruinous, and the farmers in the end would suffer incalculable harm. In view, then, of the probable results flowing from such L.R.A.1915D.

a construction of the contract, we should hesitate very long before adopting it, with its disastrous consequences to both parties, which we cannot suppose they contemplated. The court, therefore, erred in charging the jury that if the fertilizer did not contain the ingredients, and in the quantities, as warranted, or if it was not suited to the purpose for which it was sold, they should answer the third issue in the negative, for the special warranty and the provisions against any liability for results excluded any implied warranty as to its suitability for use in fertilizing crops.

In Allen v. Young, 62 Ga. 617, where the contract and statute of the state were much like ours, it was said:

"The notes given to the company for the price of the fertilizer having upon their face a stipulation that the fertilizer was purchased 'entirely upon the basis of the analytical standard guaranteed by the company, and that I [the buyer] will in no event hold it responsible beyond such standard, nor in any wise for practical results,' the precise right of the purchaser was to receive an article containing the chemical and fertilizing properties enumerated in the guaranty, and these in the proportions and up to the degree of strength held out as a standard."

The same court, in that and other cases, discusses the competency and probative force of evidence as to the effect of the particular fertilizer, when used upon land, in producing crops, and strongly intimates that such evidence is not admissible, where the contract contains a provision that the seller is not to be liable for results, and that, if it is competent, it should be received with caution and in connection with more direct evidence that the fertilizer did not contain the ingredients guaranteed by the analysis, or as much of them as the analysis and certificate required. Hamlin v. Rogers, 78 Ga. 631, 3 S. E. 259; Scott v. McDonald, 83 Ga. 28, 9 S. E. 770; Jones v. Cordels Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265.

The court said in Hamlin v. Rogers, supra: "All that the party selling is required by law to guarantee is that the fertilizer contains . . . the ingredients [it is represented to contain]. [He] may or may not guarantee its effect upon crops. . . . Parties have a right to make their own contracts. . . . Under the limited guaranty contained in this contract and that imposed by law, the defendant could have shown that the fertilizer . . . did not contain the ingredients . . . indicated by the analysis made by the state chemist."

Our statute (Revisal §§ 3945 to 3957) provides for an analysis by the Department of Agriculture of all fertilizers sold in the state, and makes the certificate of the state chemist prima facie evidence of their contents. We are of the opinion that, notwithstanding the stipulation as to nonliability for results, evidence of the effect of any particular fertilizer upon crops is competent, under certain conditions, to prove that it did not contain the guaranteed ingredients or in the proportion specified in the label put on the bag.

The court, in Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265, referring to a contract similar to the one in question, said:

"While it is true that the note sued on in the present case contained an express stipulation that the makers purchased on their own judgment and waived any guaranty as to the effects of the fertilizer on their crops, we think they were nevertheless entitled to show that their crops derived no benefit from the use of the fertilizer in question. It was competent for them to do this, not for the purpose of repudiating or varying the terms of their written contract, or of holding the guano company to a guaranty it had expressly declined to make, but to show that in point of fact the guano did not come up to the guaranteed analysis branded on the sacks, as required by law. In other words, it was the right of the defendants to show that this guano did not contain the chemical ingredients set forth in that analysis. If the guano failed to produce any beneficial effect on the crops under favorable auspices, this fact would at least tend to show it did not contain the fertilizing elements in the proportions specified in the analysis branded on the sacks."

But when there is an offer of such evidence, the kind of soil, manner of cultivation, accidents of season, and other pertinent facts should be first shown, so that a foundation may be laid for admitting testimony of actual production, with a view of disparaging the fertilizers, and the jury should be carefully instructed that they can consider the evidence only for the purpose of showing the absence of the guaranteed ingredients or the represented quantities of each, and not at all for the purpose of assessing damages, either directly or indirectly, because of any loss or diminution of the crops, as the measure of damages depends upon quite a different principle.

The extent of the recovery must be restricted to the difference, not necessarily between the price and the value of the article purchased, but to the difference between the article delivered under the contract of warranty and its value or market price if it had been such as it was warranted to be. Hardie-Tynes Mfg. Co. v. L.R.A.1915D.

Easton Cotton Oil Co. 150 N. C. 150, 134 Am. St. Rep. 899, 63 S. E. 676, citing Parker v. Fenwick, 138 N. C. 209, 50 S. E. 627; Marsh v. McPherson, 105 U. S. 709, 26 L. ed. 1139; Huyett-Smith Mfg. Co. v. Gray, 129 N. C. 438, 57 L.R.A. 193, 40 S. E. 178. The principle is thus stated in 35 Cyc. p. 468:

"The general rule as to the measure of damages on a breach of warranty is that the buyer is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of the goods and what the value would have been if the goods had been as warranted, and in the application of the rule it is held that the fact that the goods were actually worth the price which was paid for them is immaterial. The difference between the purchase price and the actual value cannot be regarded as the measure of damages, as in such case the purchaser recovers too small a sum if he has made a bad bargain and paid more than the goods were worth, and too great a sum if he has made a good bargain, paying less than the goods were worth. It is true that in some cases the rule has been stated that the measure of damages is the difference between the purchase price and the actual value of the goods, but in nearly all of these cases the theory undoubtedly is that in accordance with the general rule, if there is no other evidence of the actual value of the goods, the purchase price will be regarded as such value."

The elementary rule, as above stated, is the best rule, leaving the price to be considered, when necessary, in the final adjustment between the parties to ascertain what is due by one to the other on account of the transaction, when there has been a breach of the warranty. We have mentioned this subject for the purpose of showing that no part of the recovery, under this contract, should be assessed for the failure of crops, as there is an express stipulation that plaintiff should not be held liable for any results from the use of the fertilizer, and the charge, in this respect, was erroneous. This court said in Armour Fertilizer Works v. McLawhorn, 158 N. C. 274, 276, 73 S. E. 883:

"The deficiency in value was allowed him in abatement of price. The claim of consequential damages resulting in the alleged shortage in his crop was properly disallowed by the court. Carson v. Bunting, 154 N. C. 532, 70 S. E. 923, where the court holds that the measure of damages is in the abatement of the price, as is also provided by Revisal, § 3949."

It must not be understood that we are dealing with a case where a farmer is suing his merchant for a breach of contract in the sale of fertilizers, alleging that they were deficient in quality, and thereby he has sustained a loss or diminution of his crop, in the cultivation of which it was used. The sale in such a case may have been made upon an express or an implied warranty as to the quality of the fertilizer, and does not fall within the principles we have discussed. With reference to such a case, Justice Hoke said in Tomlinson & Co. v. Morgan, 166 N. C. 557, 82 S. E. 953:

"The court does not understand that plaintiff seriously contends that a warranty has not been established by the verdict, but it is chiefly urged for error that there is no proper evidence tending to show a breach of the warranty—i. e., that the guano sold was off grade; and, second, that, under our decisions, a loss claimed in diminution of the crop is too remote and uncertain to be made the basis for an award of damages. Undoubtedly, a counterclaim of this character presents such an inviting field for litigation and is so liable to abuse that it should not be entertained unless it is clearly established that there has been a definite breach of the warranty, and satisfactory evidence is offered that the loss claimed is directly attributable to the breach, and the amount can be ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty. While the court should always be careful to see that these rules are not transgressed to the injury of a litigant, when the facts in evidence clearly meet the requirements, authority in this state is to the effect that the loss suffered in diminution of a given crop, when it is clearly attributable to a definite breach of warranty as to the quality of a fertilizer, that it is within the contemplation of the parties and capable of being ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty, may be made the basis for an award of damages"—citing Herring v. Armwood, 130 N. C. 177, 57 L.R.A. 958, 41 S. E. 96; Spencer v. Hamilton, 113 N. C. 49, 37 Am. St. Rep. 611, 18 S. E. 167.

The Tomlinson Case, it has been suggested, is somewhat in conflict with our views, but we think it clearly is not, but entirely consistent therewith. In that case it appeared that there was an express warranty "that the fertilizer was suitable for tobacco," which meant, if properly construed, that if it was used in the cultivation of tobacco it would produce good results and increase the yield. Besides, there was no limited warranty as in our case, and no restriction of liability for results, and it appeared that a member of the plaintiff's firm had said that he had seen as much as he had wanted to see, and he thought there must have been a mistake made in the factory by putting in acid instead of phosphate. These facts show a radical difference between the two cases.

If the merchant who buys from the fertilizer company chooses to sell to the farmer with a warranty different from that which has been given to him, and broader in its scope, he may do so, but he cannot thereby increase the liability of the fertilizer company upon its warranty to him. That will remain as fixed by the terms of the contract, and will not be altered by any future conduct or action of the merchant in his dealings with others.

The effect of the judge's instruction upon the third issue, which, by the way, is not in proper form, was to add a term to the contract not inserted therein by the parties, and to charge the plaintiff upon a warranty, for the performance of which he was not bound, and for any breach of which he was therefore not liable.

It has been suggested that the court, in Jones v. Cordele Guano Co. supra, decided that evidence as to the use of the fertilizer upon lands and its effect upon crops was admissible only as corroborative or discrediting testimony, after there had been evidence of an analysis of the fertilizer; but we think it is substantive evidence, and for the reason given by the court in that case for admitting it as corroborative. It has been held to be substantive evidence in Tomlinson & Co. v. Morgan, supra. Cervantes wisely said, in his Don Quixote, that "the proof of the pudding is the eating," and so by analogy the proof of the fertilizer is the using of it. It is practical instead of scientific proof, but the evidence should be admitted cautiously and with proper and full safeguards, so as, by eliminating the speculative elements, to show clearly the causal connection between the fertilizer used and the loss or diminution of the crop. Unless the foundation for such proof is well laid, it lacks in probative force, as it has not been removed from the realm of speculation and is only conjectural, and, of course, unreliable.

We direct that there must be a new trial, because of the errors indicated.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

BENNIE LORIN EASLER, by Guardian ad Litem, Resp't.,

v.

COLUMBIA RAILWAY, GAS, & ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.

(— S. C. —, 84 S. E. 417.)

Carriers — compulsory treatment of passenger — liability.

1. A carrier which, after injury to a boy upon its car, takes him, against the protest of his guardian, to its own surgeon for treatment, is liable for any injury which the surgeon may inflict upon him through malpractice, whether it used care in the selection of a surgeon or not.

Same — aggravation of injury by treatment.

2. A carrier is liable for injury to a passenger thrown from its car through its sole negligence, although proper recovery from the injury may have been prevented by the incompetency of the attending surgeon.

(March 10, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Richland County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Elliott & Herbert, for appellant:

The employer is not responsible for the negligence or malpractice of the physician or surgeon, provided the employer has discharged his duty by exercising reasonable care to the end of employing a physician or surgeon who possesses the ability and skill ordinarily possessed by other members of his profession.

Youngstown Park & F. S. R. Co. v. Kessler, 84 Ohio St. 74, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, 95 N. E. 509, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 933; Quinn v. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. 94 Tenn. 713, 28 L.R.A. 554, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767, 30 S. W. 1036; Laubheim v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche S. B. Maatschappy Co. 107 N. Y. 228, 1 Am. St. Rep. 815, 13 N. E. 781; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 23 L.R.A. 581, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365; Big Stone Gap Iron Co. v. Ketron, 102 Va. 23, 102 Am. St. Rep. 839, 45 S. E. 741; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 141 Ind. 83, 27 L.R.A. 840, 50 Am. St. Rep. 317, 40 N. E. 138; O'Brien v. Cunard S. S. Co. 154 Mass. 272, 13 L.R.A. 329, 28 N. E. 266; Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 223, 3d ed. § 1388; Guy v. Lanark Fuel Co. 72 W. Va. 728, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 536, 79 S. E. 941; Lindler v. Columbia Hospital, 98 S. E. C. 25, 81 S. E. 512.

Mr. J. B. McLauchlin for respondent.

Gage, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for tort to the person; verdict for plaintiff for $1,000; appeal by defendant.

History: The electric car was running towards College place in the northern suburbs of Columbia. The plaintiff, a boy fourteen years old, was a passenger. He rang for the car to stop, rose and went forward to the platform occupied by the motorman, and got upon the step. He was thrown to the ground and his shoulder bones injured. His mother, living hard by, came out to the scene, and, it is alleged, desired to take the boy into her house. The conductor, it is alleged, demurred, and carried the boy to the end of the line and back into the city to the company's surgeon for treatment, as he was bound to do by the company's rules. He was treated by that surgeon and discharged for well.

Note. — Duty and liability of one other than a physician or surgeon who contracts to provide medical or surgical attention for another.

Earlier cases covering the subject under annotation will be found in note attached to Youngstown Park & F. S. R. Co. v. Kessler, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50. Later cases are in accord with the rule which received the unanimous support of the authorities collected in the earlier note, that if one who assumes to furnish medical or surgical attention to another acts in good faith and with reasonable care in the selection of a physician or surgeon, and has no knowledge of incompetency or lack of skill or want of ability on the part of the person employed, but selects an authorized physician in good standing in his profession, he has fulfilled the full measure of his contract and cannot be held liable for any want of skill on the part of the person employed. Allegar v. American Car & Foundry Co. 124 C. C. A. 319, 206 Fed. 437, affirming 198 Fed. 447; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 62 Fla. 124, 56 So. 937; Tippecanoe Loan & T. Co. v. Cleveland, C. L.R.A.1915D.

C. & St. L. R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 104 N. E. 866; Wharton v. Warner, 75 Wash. 470, 135 Pac. 235; Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 958 [1909] 2 K. B. 820, 101 L. T. N. S. 368, 25 Times L. R. 762, 53 Sol. Jo. 714; Foote v. Greenock Hospital [1912] S. C. 69.

And it will be noticed that this rule is expressly admitted in EASLER v. COLUMBIA R. GAS & ELECTRIC CO., the liability for malpractice in that case being predicated on the fact that the railroad company took the injured boy to its physician against the protest of his mother.

And a knowledge of the failings of the physician or surgeon must be brought home to a railway company employing him. His general reputation may be so bad that the law will impute knowledge; but nothing short of this will make it liable. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 62 Fla. 124, 56 So. 937.

And so, where the evidence showed that a hospital exercised reasonable care in selecting a surgeon, it was held in Wharton v. Warner, 75 Wash. 470, 135 Pac. 235, that it could not be held responsible for his negligence where, in performing the opera-

There are two exceptions, but the second was withdrawn, and the first only was argued, and on it turns the case.

The defendant's fifth request was this: "In the complaint it is alleged that the defendant, through its doctor, negligently treated the plaintiff. I charge you there is no evidence in this case which will warrant you in giving any verdict on account of such alleged treatment on the part of the physicians employed by defendant."

The court declined to charge the request, and that is the issue here.

The exception thereabout indicates the error of the refusal, to wit: "The error being that there was no act of omission or commission shown on the part of defendant's physician, and defendant had no power to direct the medical services of its physician, and was only chargeable with reasonable care in employing said physician, and the evidence therefore failed to show any negligence, and the request was proper, and should have been charged."

The exact issue the appellant has made in argument is this: That the defendant acquits itself when it has used ordinary care in the gratuitous employment of a reasonably competent surgeon; and, that done, the company is not liable for the surgeon's tort.

The respondent contends at the outset that the request embodied no such idea, and that no such idea was expressed in argument to the court below, and that the issue which it embodied may not now be made here.

It is true the complaint contained no allegation of negligent employment, nor did the answer contain any allegation of competency. And it is true that no witness for the defendant was asked to testify to the competency of the surgeon; but no witness for the plaintiff testified directly to his incompetency, and the burden of proving that was on the plaintiff. There was no reference in the court's charge to the matter of negligent employment.

A critical construction of the request doubtless sustains respondent's view; but the exception, made after the trial, it is true, suggests the idea; and we shall consider the issue now suggested in appellant's argument, but in the light of the testimony of the witnesses.

It is true that if a carrier shall (1) employ a surgeon to treat a patient, (2) and if the surgeon be reasonably competent, (3) and if the service to the patient be gratuitous, and (4) if the surgeon neglect the patient, then the master is not liable for the ill consequences to the patient. In that case, if the carrier owed any duty, he performed it when he selected a reasonably competent surgeon. In that case the carrier, as the alleged master of the surgeon, is not held liable for maltreatment, and on the theory that he has no power to direct the surgeon about his work.

But in the case at bar there was testimony—denied by the defendant, it is true—that the boy was taken away from the mother against her consent. Her testimony is short, and this is the pith of it: "I went out immediately, and the conductor had the boy up and was pushing him to the tion of curettement of the uterus, he allowed a metallic spring, 12 inches long, to be detached from an instrument used in packing, and left in the body of the patient.

And in Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 958 [1909] 2 K. B. 820, 101 L. T. N. S. 368, 25 Times L. R. 762, 53 Sol. Jo. 714, it was held that there being no evidence of any breach of duty of using reasonable care in selecting as members of the staff persons who were competent, either as surgeons or as nurses, properly to perform their respective parts in the surgical operations, the governors of the hospital were not liable for injury to a patient during an operation.

And following Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital as authority, it was held in Foot v. Greenock Hospital [1912] S. C. 69, that, apart from special contract, the managers of a public hospital are not responsible to the patients whom they receive (whether paying or not paying) for unskillful or negligent medical treatment, provided they have exercised due care in the selection of a competent staff.

Where, for its own purposes, a telephone company employs a physician to take an X-ray picture of the injury of an employee, who protests against such action, but finally consents, if, in the taking of such picture, injury results to the employee, the physician is the agent or servant of the telephone company, and the rule of respondet superior applies. Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 118 Minn. 217, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485, 136 N. W. 741, 4 N. C. C. A. 832.

A hospital conducted as a charity is not liable to a patient paying for board a sum less than the per capita cost of maintenance for an unauthorized operation upon him by a physician of its staff, serving without pay from it, although the operation constitutes an assault for which the physician may be personally liable, since the relation between the hospital and the physician is not that of master and servant. Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 505.

Generally as to liability of charitable institutions for personal injury, see note to Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, and notes therein referred to.

Generally as to liability of master for negligence of physician employed, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, § 59.

J. H. B.

car. Conductor said his arm was broke. I kept pleading with him to let me take him to the house, and he said it was against the rules of the company to let him go without some of the officers was there. They put him back on the car and took him to the end of the line—about three quarters of a mile. I protested against this. He didn't offer to bring me back with the boy. Mr. Davis, who works for the company, brought the boy back home later. His arm was broken; he was bandaged up and suffered awful. Dr. Boyd came out one time. He said for the boy to come down every day. Boy started back to work, and father had to stop him. I never told the company not to take him and treat him free, and did not tell them to do so. They gave me no chance to do so. The boy kept on going down there to be treated."

If that be true, and of it the jury judged, then there was evidence which warrants the jury in giving a verdict on account of the treatment of the physicians. (Language of request.)

It may be the duty of the carrier to call a surgeon to serve an injured passenger in a sudden emergency; but it is not the duty of the carrier to do so when the natural guardian of the injured passenger is present and dissents therefrom.

It is manifest the defendant had no right to the custody of the boy against the mother's consent; the forcible taking of custody was in itself a wrong; the relation of carrier and passenger was not immediately terminated; and, if the boy was injured while thus in defendant's custody, no matter if by a surgeon, then the defendant is liable for such injury. The carrier is estopped to deny that it inflicted the injury. The court, in effect, so charged the jury, and there is no exception thereabout.

Thereupon follows another inquiry necessary to be proved to sustain the plaintiff's action: Was the boy injured by malpractice of the surgeon? Certain surgeons swore that he was; three swore that he was not; and betwixt them the jury decided for the plaintiff.

But the verdict may be sustained independently of the alleged tort of the surgeon. If the plaintiff was flung from the car and his shoulder broken, and if he was so thrown by the sole negligence of the company, then the defendant is liable.

The verdict is conclusive against the defendant on those issues. In any view of the case, the verdict must be sustained, and the judgment affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Gary, Ch. J., and Hydrick, Watts, and Fraser, JJ., concur.
L.R.A.1915D.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACHINE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ROBERTS COUNTY, South Dakota, Resp.

(34 S. D. 498, 149 N. W. 163.)

Tax — priority to purchase money mortgage.

1. Under a statute making all taxes upon personal property a first lien on all personal property of the person against whom they are assessed, an assessment of a personal property tax will take precedence, as to the entire tax on the owner's personalty, of an existing chattel mortgage given to secure the purchase price of a particular article of machinery.

Mortgage — priority of tax lien — existing statute.

2. A chattel mortgagee cannot complain of a statute existing when his mortgage was taken, which makes all personal taxes a lien on all personal property of the taxpayer.

(Whiting and McCoy, JJ., dissent.)

(October 29, 1914.)

Note. — Priority of lien for personal taxes over pre-existing liens on property of the taxpayer.

No attempt has been made to collect the cases passing upon the priority of taxes over the lien of an execution or attachment. Generally, as to priority of claims for taxes against the assets of a debtor, see note to Bibbins v. Clark, 29 L.R.A. 278.

On personal property.

The proposition expressly held by the court in MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. Co. v. ROBERTS COUNTY, that it is competent for the legislature to declare a lien for personal tax superior to a pre-existing lien on specific items of personal property of the owner, seems to be generally conceded, or at least not denied by the cases, although none of the other cases has construed the local statute to give a lien for the whole amount of personal taxes priority over a pre-existing lien upon specific personal or real property of the person against whom the tax is assessed. In this connection there is an obvious difference between the situation as to real property taxes and that as to personal property taxes. The lien on real property attaches to each particular tract for the portion of the tax assessed against it, while in the case of personal property the lien for taxes is not confined to the specific articles assessed, but attaches to all the personal property of the taxpayer. The extension of a preference to the lien for real property taxes over a pre-existing lien on the property merely imposes a burden of definite and comparatively small amount, the

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Roberts County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover taxes paid by plaintiff under protest which had been assessed against certain mortgaged property the title to which had been acquired by it through foreclosure proceedings. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. W. Murphy and Howard Babcock, for appellant:

The fact that plaintiff held chattel mortgages against the property at the time the taxes in question were levied does not give the defendant county the right to sell said property or to deal with the same as plaintiff's, but gives to it a lien prior and paramount to any tax lien.

extent of which can be approximately anticipated at the time the pre-existing lien is taken, whereas the extension of a preference to the lien for personal taxes over a pre-existing lien upon the personal or real property of the owner may impose a burden of an indefinite amount that may exceed the value of the specific property upon which the pre-existing lien rests, and the extent of which cannot be anticipated at the time the pre-existing lien is taken. The practice of enforcement of such a policy with respect to personal property taxes, unless the policy were also changed so as to limit the extent of the lien to a definite amount assessed against the particular item of personal property, would seem to hamper the freedom of dealing with personal property in a manner contrary to sound public policy.

In Burflend v. Hamilton, 20 Mont. 343, 51 Pac. 161, it is held that the legislature has power to enact laws declaring license taxes a paramount lien on the property used in the business. The court said: "It would greatly embarrass the state in the collection of its revenues if it could not, by appropriate legislation, secure to itself the payment of taxes by making them a first lien on the property of the person whose duty it is to pay the same, whether the tax be a property or a license tax. No thoughtful person, we think, would contend that the state, in a case like the one before us, should be driven to the necessity of paying off mortgages on property subject to taxation or a lien for taxes, before it could collect its revenues. Any person situated like Hirschman in this case, who wished to avoid the payment of legal taxes, would only have to execute a mortgage on the property used in his business, in order to compel the state either to pay off the mortgage or lose the taxes due. We cannot consent to a construction of the law that would produce such disastrous results to the state. When the mortgagees took the mortgage they rely on in this case, they knew what the law was. They will not be permitted to say that they did not know that the law made the license tax due from the mortgagor a L.R.A.1915D.

Northwestern Port Huron Co. v. Iverson, 22 S. D. 314, 133 Am. St. Rep. 920, 117 N. W. 372; Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, 21 N. D. 55, 128 N. W. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 517; State, Macknet, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 42 N. J. L. 38; Bibbins v. Clark, 90 Iowa, 230, 29 L.R.A. 278, 57 N. W. 884, 59 N. W. 290; Parsons v. East St. Louis Gaslight & Coke Co. 108 Ill. 380; Garr, S. & Co v. Sorum, 11 N. D. 164, 90 N. W. 799; St. Anthony & D. Elevator Co. v. Bottineau County (St. Anthony & D. Elevator Co. v. Soucie) 9 N. D. 346, 50 L.R.A. 262, 83 N. W. 212; Martin County v. Drake, 40 Minn. 137, 41 N. W. 942; State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 80 Minn. 17, 82 N. W. 1090; State ex rel. Bauer v. Edwards, 136 Mo. 360, 38 S. W. 73; Polk County v. Kauff- first lien on the property he was using in his business as retail liquor dealer. The law entered into the mortgage contract."

And in Berry v. Davis, 158 N. C. 170, 73 S. E. 900, it was held competent for the legislature to provide, at least as to subsequent mortgages, that no mortgage or deed of trust executed upon personal property shall have the effect of creating a lien thereon superior to the lien acquired by a subsequent levy upon the property for the payment of taxes assessed against the same.

But a statute imposing a liquor tax, which declared the tax superior to "liens, mortgages, conveyances, and encumbrances," does not supersede liens, mortgages, or encumbrances created before the passage of the statute. Finn v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 63.

So, in Hulin v. Butte County, 18 S. D. 339, 100 N. W. 739, it is held that the statute providing that "taxes assessed upon personal property within this state shall be a first lien on all personal property of the person against whom personal taxes are assessed, from and after December 1st in each year," has no application to taxes assessed prior to its enactment, in the absence of language clearly showing it to have been the intention of the legislature that it should operate retrospectively.

No other case has been found which holds like MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. CO. v. ROBERTS COUNTY, that the statute declaring all taxes upon personal property a first lien on all personal property of the tax debtor will give all personal property taxes, such as school taxes, dog taxes, and poll taxes, priority over an existing chattel mortgage upon a particular article.

It is true that in Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 214, 94 Fed. 244, writ of certiorari denied in 174 U. S. 803, 43 L. ed. 1188, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 883, relied upon in the majority opinion in MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. CO. v. ROBERTS COUNTY, the court did say, in effect, that, so far as the question of the priority of a tax over a pre-existing mortgage was concerned, it makes no difference whether the tax lien is for the tax assessed against the identical property covered by the mortgage, man, 104 Iowa, 639, 74 N. W. 8; Hayden v. Roe, 66 Wis. 288, 28 N. W. 186.

Messrs. J. J. Batterton and Thomas Mani, for respondent:

Plaintiff is liable for all the taxes complained of, and for the recovery of which the action was brought.

37 Cyc. 1143; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 939; Crawford v. Koch, 169 Mich. 372, 135 N. W. 339; Hoyt v. Hughes County, 32 S. D. 117, 142 N. W. 471; Thomas v. Douglas County, 13 S. D. 520, 83 N. W. 580; Clark v. Darlington, 11 S. D. 418, 78 N. W. 997; Campbell v. Equitable Loan & T. Co. 14 S. D. 483, 85 N. W. 1015; McKinney v. Minnehaha County, 17 S. D. 407, 97 N. W. 15; Pettigrew v. Moody County, 17 S. D. 275, 96 N. W. 94; Salmer v. Clay County, 20 S. D. 307, 105 N. W. 623; McHenry v. Kidder County, 8 N. D. 413, 79 N. W. 875; Brule County v. King, 11 S. D. 295, 77 N. W. 107; Hanson County v. Gray, 12 S. D. 124, 76 Am. St. Rep. 591; Iowa Land Co. v. Douglas County, 8 S. D. 504, 67 N. W. 52; Danforth v. McCook County, 11 S. D. 258, 74 Am. St. Rep. 808, 76 N. W. 940.

Polley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant sold threshing machinery, consisting of separators, engines, etc., to various parties in different townships in Roberts county; and, to secure the payment of the purchase price thereof, took chattel mortgages upon said machinery. There-or for all taxes assessed against the personal property of the owner. It is to be observed in this case, however, that the mortgage in question expressly covered all the property of the corporation, real, personal, and mixed; so that upon its facts, as suggested in the dissenting opinion in MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. CO. V. ROBERTS COUNTY, above reported, the decision does not seem to go beyond the point that the subsequent tax lien based on an assessment of the identical property covered by the antecedent mortgage will take precedence of that mortgage.

In Woody v. Jones, 113 N. C. 253, 18 S. E. 205, it is held that the seizure and sale of mortgaged personal property in the possession of the mortgagor for general taxes assessed against the latter do not divest the lien of the mortgage. (The form of the statute does not appear in the report of this case.)

Under the Arkansas statute giving taxes a "preference over all judgments, executions, encumbrances, or liens whatsoever created," and providing that "all taxes assessed shall be a lien upon and bind the property assessed from the first Monday in February of the year in which the assessment shall be made," to continue until the taxes are paid, it was held in Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73, that personal property in the hands of a subsequent purchaser could be seized for the payment of taxes, but that the property was not liable for the whole amount of the taxes assessed upon the personal property, but for the amount of taxes assessed upon the class to which it belonged, where the statute provided for the listing of personal property according to the several classes of property specified in the statute, with the value of each class. The court said: "If, then, the taxes are a lien upon the property as it is assessed or valued, as seems to be contemplated in the second provision last above quoted, we must look to the assessment of the property for the extent of the lien. As each class, whether comprised of one or more articles or items, is valued as a whole, the taxes assessed upon this value are the extent of the lien L.R.A.1915D.

or charge upon the class; but the taxes being assessed upon it as a whole, each several part is liable in solido for the taxes of the class to which it belongs, just as they would be if all were included in a mortgage or condemned by decree of court. The intent of the legislature to give the lien this extent is clear. To seek to limit it further, and confine it to each article as though assessed and taxed alone, would lead to inextricable confusion."

And in Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, 21 N. D. 55, 128 N. W. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 517, it is held that a statute (N. D. Comp. Laws 1913, § 2171) providing that the right of the state and county to enforce the collection of personal property taxes shall have precedence over any and all liens on or against personal property of the tax debtor creates such preference right only to the extent of the taxes assessed and levied against the particular property, and property included in the same class and assessed with it as one indivisible item as disclosed by the assessment list. The court said that it is proper for the legislature to provide that taxes assessed against each class of personal property shall have priority over all other liens thereon, but that it would be grossly unjust, if not in excess of legislative power, to give to the tax lien for one class of property priority over all other liens on property of another and entirely distinct class.

In Crawford v. Koch, 169 Mich. 372, 135 N. W. 339, it is held that pianos consigned by a nonresident to a dealer for sale could be seized and held for the whole amount of personal taxes assessed against the dealer on the stock of merchandise contained in his store, and that one who purchased the pianos in good faith from the consignor after the taxes were assessed took them subject to the lien for taxes, by virtue of a statute which provided that "personal property of nonresidents of the state . . . shall be assessed in the township or ward where the same may be, to the person having control of the premises, store . . . where such property is situated in such township on the second Monday in April of the year when the assessment is made," and after, and while the said chattel mortgages were still in force, said property, together with other personal property of the same parties, was assessed to the owners thereof, and certain personal taxes levied thereon. The said chattel mortgages were not paid, and appellant, from time to time, foreclosed the same and became the owner of the said property through foreclosure proceedings. After appellant had acquired title through such foreclosure proceedings, the sheriff of the county, by virtue of distress warrants issued by the county treasurer, levied upon and seized said property and threatened to sell the same for the payment of said personal taxes. These warrants not only called for the collection of the personal tax that has been levied upon the mortgaged property and other property owned by the same parties, but, in certain cases, said warrants called for the payment of school, poll, and dog taxes that had been levied against the owners of said mortgaged machines. In order to prevent such sales being made, appellant was obliged to, and did, pay all of the said various taxes, but paid the same under protest, and now brings this action—making each redemption the basis of a separate cause of action—to recover from the county the amounts so paid by appellant. The county recovered judgment in the trial court, and plaintiff appeals.

In each instance involved in this case, the appellant's mortgage was in force and of record before the tax involved had been levied or become a lien, and it is claimed by which declared such taxes a lien on all personal property of such persons so assessed, which should take precedence of any sale, chattel mortgage, or other lien, it appearing that the property was taxed as a whole. The court said with reference to the contention that the property was liable only for the tax assessed against the specific property: "It will be borne in mind that the property is taxed as a whole. The taxes assessed upon this property are the extent of the lien or charge upon the class; but, the taxes being assessed upon it as a whole, each several article is liable in solido for the taxes of the class to which it belongs, just as they would be if all were included in a mortgage, or condemned by the decree of the court. In this respect the rule is not different from that applied in this state to log lien cases, where it has been repeatedly held that any part of the property is liable and subject to lien for work done on any other part of the property."

It will be observed that the statute under consideration in MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. CO. v. ROBERTS COUNTY provides that the taxes "shall be a first lien on all personal property of the person against whom personal taxes are assessed, from and after December 1st in each year," and the court holds that the lien for taxes takes priority over an existing chattel mortgage. Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 214, 94 Fed. 244, appears to be the only case supporting this view. The majority of the cases hold that the tax lien is not superior to a transfer or lien which attached upon the property prior to the time mentioned in the statute for the tax lien to attach.

A lien for city taxes is not superior to the lien of a chattel mortgage given before the assessment of the taxes, by virtue of a charter provision that "all city taxes upon personal property shall be and remain a lien thereon until paid, and no transfer of the personal property assessed shall operate to divest or destroy such lien." Lucking v. Ballantyne, 132 Mich. 584, 94 N. W. 8. The court said: "The provision, 'No transfer of the personal property assessed shall operate to divest or destroy such lien,' unquestion-ably refers to transfers made after the lien attaches. It does not apply to transfers made before. Such transfers might prevent the lien attaching, but by no possibility could they 'divest or destroy' it. The legislature, having in express terms made this tax lien superior to subsequent transfers, clearly indicates, by omitting to specify its effect on prior transfers, an intent that it shall not be superior to them. The argument that the tax lien under consideration is superior to prior liens and transfers, because a tax lien on land is superior to such transfers, assumes a resemblance between taxes on land and taxes on personalty which does not exist. In the case of a tax on land, it may be stated as a general proposition that the land, and not the owner, is taxed. Purchasers and all persons interested in land understand this, and must pay the taxes as a condition of enjoying their property. It is otherwise with personal property. There the tax is against the person because he owns personal property. It has always been the policy of the law—supposedly in the interest of trade—to make personal property easily transferable, and to secure to purchasers and mortgagees the entire title of the seller and mortgagor. It would be a radical change, indeed, in that policy, if their title is to be destroyed by a tax subsequently assessed against the person from whom that title was acquired."

Likewise, under the Illinois statute declaring that "the taxes assessed upon personal property shall be a lien upon the personal property of the person assessed from and after the tax books are received by the collector," it is held that if, after such assessment, and before the warrant for the collection of the taxes comes to the collector's hands, the tax debtor in good faith sells or mortgages the property, the purchaser or mortgagee will take the property free from any claim for taxes. Gaar, S. & Co. v. Hurd, 92 Ill. 331; Binkert v. Wabash R. Co. 98 Ill. 205; Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 224; Jack v. Weiennett, 115 Ill. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 129, 3 N. E. 445 (obiter).

Thus, in Binkert v. Wabash R. Co. 98 Ill. 205, supra, it was held that a tax on the appellant that, because of this fact, its lien took precedence over the lien of the tax, but that, in any event, the mortgaged property could not be burdened with the taxes that had been levied on other property owned by the same parties, nor with the school, poll, nor dog tax of the owner of the mortgaged property.

The statute under which the treasurer and sheriff were proceeding reads as follows: "All taxes assessed upon personal property within this state shall be a first lien on all personal property of the person against whom personal taxes are assessed, from and after December 1st in each year." Pol. Code, § 2191.

This statute is too plain to require construction. It is clear that the legislative intent was to make all personal taxes assessed against a party a paramount lien upon all personal property owned by such tax debtor. The result of this is to burden each and every article of personal property belonging to such tax debtor with all of the personal taxes levied against him until the same has, in some manner, been discharged; and, this lien, having once attached to such personal property, would necessarily follow each article thereof in its transmission to others.

This section of the statute was in effect when appellant's mortgages were executed, and is therefore controlling upon the parties to such mortgage. It became a part of the contract, and such mortgages must be treated as though the said section had been capital stock of a railroad company (the same being a personal tax) was inferior to the lien of a chattel mortgage which was executed and recorded before the tax book containing the tax was delivered to the collector, upon the ground that the lien given for the personal taxes had no reference to the property originally assessed, but was a lien on all the personal property that the tax debtor owned at the time of the delivery of the tax book to the collector, without regard to whether it was previously assessed or not. It was said by the court that the words of the statute negative the construction that the lien follows the assessed property, or that it creates any lien upon such property, unless it belongs to the tax debtor at the time of the receipt of the tax books by the collector; that had the legislature intended otherwise, it would have provided a lien upon the property assessed, and not, as in this case, upon the property of the person assessed; that when the tax books come to the collector's hands, the personal taxes at once, and not before, just like an execution, become a lien upon all the personal property of the tax debtor, without regard to what he may have owned when the assessment was made. This reasoning was quoted with approval by Cobb, Ch. J., in Hill v. Palmer, 32 Neb. 632, 49 N. W. 718.

But an assignment by an insolvent debtor for the benefit of creditors before the delivery of the tax books to the collector will not defeat the right of the state to subject the property in the hands of the assignee to the payment of taxes, to the same extent as if in the possession of the assignor. Jack v. Wiennett, 115 Ill. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 129, 3 N. E. 445.

And in Nebraska it is held that a lien for personal property taxes does not attach to the identical personal property of the taxpayer within the county, under a similar statute providing that "taxes assessed upon personal property shall be a first lien upon the personal property of the person to whom assessed, from and after the time the tax books are received by the collector." Hill v. Palmer, 32 Neb. 632, 49 N. W. 718; L.R.A.1915D.

Reynolds v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 172, 61 N. W. 695; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Memminger, 48 Neb. 17, 66 N. W. 1014; Foster & S. Lumber Co. v. Leisure, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 237, 91 N. W. 556; Chamberlain Bkg. House v. Woolsey, 60 Neb. 516, 83 N. W. 729; a. c. subsequent appeal, 70 Neb. 194, 97 N. W. 241. To the same effect is Midland Guaranty & T. Co. v. Douglas County, 217 Fed. 358, construing the Nebraska statute (Cobbey's Anno. Stat. 1911, § 10914) which now provides the taxes shall be a first lien "from and after the 1st day of November of the year in which they are assessed, until paid."

In Foster & S. Lumber Co. v. Leisure, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 237, 91 N. W. 556, supra, it is held that the tax lien covered property acquired after the assessment of the taxes, but before the delivery of the tax books to the collector, and that a subsequent purchaser took it subject to the lien for taxes.

In Hill v. Palmer, 32 Neb. 632, 49 N. W. 718, supra, it was held that personal property sold without notice of taxes due, prior to a levy, was not subject to the lien, there being no proof submitted as to the delivery of the tax books to the collector.

But in Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 214, 94 Fed. 244, writ of certiorari denied in 174 U. S. 803, 43 L. ed. 1188, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 883, it is held under a similar statute that the lien declared by the statute (Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 1623) providing that "the taxes assessed upon personal property shall be a lien upon the personal property of the person assessed from and after the time the tax books are received by the county treasurer" takes precedence over a prior chattel mortgage held by private persons on personalty of which the taxpayer is the owner when the tax lists are delivered to the county treasurer. The court said: "We are of opinion that it cannot be inferred that the lien for personal taxes declared by § 1623, supra, was intended to be subordinate to all prior private liens, because the legislature failed to say that it should be deemed paramount. On the contrary, considering the character of the obligation and the dignity usually accorded to such liens in public estimation, and above all consider-incorporated therein. The power of the legislature to make personal taxes a paramount lien on the property of the tax debtor cannot be seriously questioned at this day. Statutes giving tax liens priority over all other liens and encumbrances are not in contravention of any constitutional prohibition. Re Prince (D. C.) 131 Fed. 546; Central Trust Co. v. Third Ave. R. Co. 110 C. C. A. 1, 186 Fed. 291; Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73; California Loan & T. Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 50 Pac. 697; Albany Brewing Co. v. Meriden, 48 Conn. 243; Geren v. Gruber, 26 La. Ann. 694; Hopper v. Malleson, 16 N. J. Eq. 386; Morrow v. Dows, 28 N. J. Eq. 459; Public School v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667; Howell v. Essex County Road Board, 32 N. J. Eq. 672;

ing the necessity which exists for giving them priority in order that the public revenues may be promptly and faithfully collected, we conclude that the inference should be that the lien was intended by the legislature to be superior to all liens, prior or subsequent, claimed by individuals, and that nothing should be allowed to overcome this inference but a plain expression of a different purpose found in the statute itself."

Under the Nebraska statute the tax lien is superior to the lien of a chattel mortgage executed subsequently to the delivery of the tax books to the collector. Reynolds v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 172, 61 N. W. 695, supra; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Memminger, 48 Neb. 17, 66 N. W. 1014, supra.

Likewise, the tax lien is paramount to the liens of levies of attachment writs, made subsequently to the delivery of the tax list to the collector. Reynolds v. McMillan, 43 Neb. 183, 61 N. W. 699.

In Woolsey v. Chamberlain Bkg. House, 70 Neb. 194, 97 N. W. 241, it is held that while the lien for taxes upon personal property is inferior to a chattel mortgage given after the taxes were levied, but before the lien attached by virtue of the delivery of the tax books into the hands of the collector, the lien for taxes levied and assessed against the mortgagor for subsequent years upon the mortgaged property remaining in his possession is superior to the lien of such mortgage. The court says its former opinion, 60 Neb. 516, 83 N. W. 729, is not contrary to the conclusion here reached. The expression in Blanchard v. Logan County, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 516, 89 N. W. 376, to the effect that subsequent personal taxes levied against the mortgagor were subject to the existing mortgage, must be regarded as overruled.

Following Woolsey v. Chamberlain Bkg. House, supra, it is held in Platte Valley Mill. Co. v. Malmsten, 79 Neb. 730, 113 N. W. 229, 116 N. W. 962, 117 N. W. 885, that the lien of a chattel mortgage taken before the tax books are delivered to the treasurer for collection is superior to the lien for taxes for that year, created by such delivery, L.R.A.1915D.

Lydecker v. Palisade Land Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 415; Snyder v. Mogart, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 148; and in Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Siefken, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 860, 96 N. W. 603, the court said: "And every piece of real estate, as well as personal property, in the state, should contribute its share towards the support of the state, county, and municipality where situated. Anyone taking a mortgage, or securing a lien of any other character upon property, must take it with knowledge that such property is bound to pay its proportionate share of the taxes necessary to the maintenance of the government, and must understand that the obligation to contribute to the support of the government is something that attaches to the property itself, and that must, in the very but that it is inferior to the lien for taxes for subsequent years.

But in Fidelity Trust Co. v. Pumroy, — Okla. —, 144 Pac. 1052, it is held that a lien for taxes upon the property of the tax debtor is inferior to that of a chattel mortgage lien antedating the time the tax lien attaches, following Blanchard v. Logan County, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 516, 89 N. W. 376. It appears that the mortgaged property (cattle) remained in the possession of the mortgagor, and was assessed in his name, and that part of the cattle was seized under a tax warrant for the mortgagor's taxes, and the court held in an action of replevin that the mortgagee was entitled to recover the possession of the property under the clause in the mortgage to the effect that in case the cattle were seized under process of court, the whole debt became at once payable and the mortgagee could foreclose. The court said that while it was within the power of the legislature to make the tax lien superior to that of the mortgage, there was no statute to that effect in that jurisdiction. To the same effect is Interstate Nat. Bank v. Pumroy, — Okla. —, 145 Pac. 416.

A purchaser and a pledgee of bank stock takes the stock free from a lien for taxes prior to the 1st day of December, under a statute (Mich. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 40) which provided that all personal taxes become a lien on personal property on the 1st day of December in each year, "and shall take precedence of any sale, assignment, or chattel mortgage, levy, or other lien on such personal property, executed or made after said 1st day of December." St. Johns Nat. Bank v. Bingham Twp. 113 Mich. 203, 71 N. W. 588.

The lien for taxes will follow the personal property in the hands of a purchaser under a statute (Wash. Laws 1895, p. 520, § 21) providing that "taxes assessed on personal property shall be a lien upon all the personal property of the persons assessed, and also upon the property so assessed if the possession thereof shall have been transferred, from and after the 1st day of January next succeeding the date of the levy nature of things, be superior to the lien he is about to take. For this reason it is no injustice to make the lien for taxes superior to all other liens."

It is essential, in order that the state may collect its revenue and carry on the public business, to make such a tax a paramount lien; and, in justice to property owners and taxpayers generally, such tax ought to be a paramount lien, and the same ought to be enforced. The power of the legislature to levy taxes is almost unlimited. They are often levied in disregard of personal rights, and individual rights ought not to stand in the way of their collection.

It is laid down as a general rule in 37 Cyc. 1143, that it is competent for the legislature to make, and in many states they have made, taxes a paramount lien on the property of the taxpayer, the "consequence being that the lien for taxes takes precedence of every other lien or claim upon the property of whatsoever kind, however created, and whether attaching before or after the assessment of the taxes" (citing cases from many states in support thereof).

Because of the dissimilarity of the statutes in this and other states, Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, 21 N. D. 55, 128 N. W. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 517, and Anderson v. State, 23 Miss. 459, relied upon by appellant, are not in point. The Mississippi statute involved reads as follows: "Taxes imposed by the act shall be preferred to of such taxes." Mills v. Thurston County, 16 Wash. 378, 47 Pac. 759. The contention was that the only transfer after which the statute authorizes the lien to continue and follow the property is a transfer of "possession," not of title, as in this case.

But under the above statute the lien does not attach until the date last mentioned, and property transferred after the assessment of taxes, but before the lien attaches, is not liable for satisfaction of the taxes. Phelan v. Smith, 22 Wash. 397, 61 Pac. 31.

As against a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer, only the property to which the lien has attached can be seized, under a statute (Colo. Gen. Stat. § 2819) providing that all taxes levied or assessed upon personal property of any kind shall be and remain a perpetual lien upon the property so levied upon, until the whole amount of such taxes is paid, and if such taxes are not paid before a certain date any personal property of the person assessed may be taken. Chicago Bazaar Co. v. McNichols, 13 Colo. App. 154, 56 Pac. 672; Lee v. Stanard, 15 Colo. App. 101, 61 Pac. 234.

Thus, a lien for taxes assessed upon a stock of merchandise does not attach to merchandise afterward added to the stock by a vendee, by virtue of another statute providing that the lien for taxes assessed upon merchandise should extend so as to embrace any stock of merchandise held by the person taxed while engaged in the business of merchandising, whether it was the identical stock which had been assessed or not. Chicago Bazaar Co. v. McNichols, supra.

And where the statute provided that stock running at large should be assessed for purposes of taxation in the county in which they are being herded or kept, on the 1st day of May in each year, the lien for taxes assessed upon a portion of a herd of horses which was ranging in two counties could not be enforced against a subsequent encumbrancer of the herd without showing that the particular animals seized were in the county when the assessment and levy of taxes were made. Lee v. Stanard, supra.

A charter provision to the effect that from L.R.A.1915D.

a certain date a lien shall exist in favor of the city upon all property subject to municipal taxation, to secure the payment of all taxes levied for that year against said property, and that the lien should be prior to all other liens upon such property, confers a lien upon the particular property against which the taxes are assessed, and the lien for taxes does not extend to such part of a stock of merchandise as was acquired subsequently to the given year for which the tax was levied, so that in a suit involving the superiority of a landlord's lien upon the whole stock of general merchandise which was daily exposed to sale and renewed from time to time as necessity required, and the lien of the city for taxes for several different years, the burden was upon the city to point out and identify the particular goods or portion of the whole stock upon which its different liens attached, and a failure to do so entitled the landlord's lien to priority, since the confusion was the result of the city's negligence in failing to promptly enforce its tax claims, and it must suffer the inconvenience and loss arising therefrom. Ft. Worth v. Boulware, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 76, 62 S. W. 928.

In Mills v. Thurston County, 16 Wash. 378, 47 Pac. 759, it is held that a purchaser of a stock of merchandise upon which there was a lien for taxes, who sold a portion of the stock and added other goods, rendered the whole stock liable for the payment of the taxes, where it appeared that he intermingled the goods so that the portion subject to the lien could not be segregated.

Where taxes are not a lien upon personal property until a distraint therefor is levied, it is held in Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed. 180, that "a mortgagee of personal property who takes possession under his mortgages and sells the property, either directly or through the decree or order of a court, before any distraint is made, is entitled to the proceeds so far as may be necessary to pay his claim, as against the taxes assessed against the mortgagor."

The lien of a license tax is superior to the lien of a prior chattel mortgage upon all payments, executions, encumbrances, and liens of any description whatsoever. . . ."

This does not purport to create a paramount lien, nor, in fact, a lien at all; and therefore no lien would attach to personal property until it had been levied upon or in some manner reduced to subjection. The North Dakota statute is as follows: "The right of the state and each and every county thereof to enforce the collection of personal property taxes shall take and have precedence of any and all liens on or against personal property of a tax debtor; provided, that any person holding a lien on personal property of any tax debtor may demand and require the property of the tax debtor not covered by a lien to be first exhausted in the payment of such taxes." [Rev. Codes 1905, § 1557.]

Under this law, which is designated as vague and uncertain by the supreme court of that state, it was held that, as against an encumbrancer, personal property could only be charged with the taxes levied upon the identical property involved or other property in the same class, the court saying: "This appears to us to be a reasonable construction of this somewhat vague statute, and such construction obviates the constitutional objections urged by appellant's counsel against the same. It is concededly proper for the legislature to provide that taxes assessed against each class of personal property should have priority over all other liens thereon. This is in harmony the furniture and fixtures of a billiard hall and a saloon, under Mont. Pol. Code, § 4049, providing that "all property held or used in any trade, occupation, or profession for which a license is required by the provisions of this chapter is liable for such license, and subject to a lien for the amount thereof, which lien has precedence of any other lien, claim, or other demand." Burfield v. Hamilton, 20 Mont. 343, 51 N. W. 161.

A provision "that taxes imposed by the act shall be preferred to all payments, executions, encumbrances, and liens of any description whatsoever" does not operate as a lien upon the personal property of the taxpayer, and a bona fide transfer of the property before seizure or advertisement of the property for sale for taxes will not be affected thereby. Anderson v. State, 23 Miss. 459.

On real property.

This subdivision is, of course, not concerned with the question of the priority of the tax lien on real property for the taxes assessed against such property, but only with the priority of the tax lien on such property for taxes assessed against the personal property.

It has been held in a number of cases that a statute providing that taxes assessed on account of personal property shall be a lien upon the real estate does not give such lien priority over an existing mortgage, in the absence of express provision to that effect. Gifford v. Callaway, 8 Colo. App. 359, 46 Pac. 626; Bibbins v. Clark, 90 Iowa, 230, 29 L.R.A. 278, 57 N. W. 884, 59 N. W. 290; Bibbins v. Polk County, 100 Iowa, 493, 69 N. W. 1007; State, Macknet, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 42 N. J. L. 38; Miller v. Anderson, 1 S. D. 539, 11 L.R.A. 317, 47 N. W. 957; Lobban v. State, 9 Wyo. 377, 64 Pac. 82.

In Gifford v. Callaway, 8 Colo. App. 359, 46 Pac. 626, supra, it was held, under a statute authorizing the sale of land for the taxes assessed against the owner of personal property, which used very general language, that, if it gave a lien on realty for personal taxes, which the court expressly declined to decide, it was inferior to that of a prior mortgage on the real estate. The court took occasion to say: "The fundamental right of all governments to levy taxes is universally recognized. The power is broad enough to include authority to make the taxes a lien which shall override any other security or encumbrance, whether created anterior to the levy, or subsequent to the assessment. To ascertain whether it has been exercised in any given case, we must resort to the particular legislation respecting it in the jurisdiction wherein the lien is asserted. In the absence of legislation, the state must first look to the personal property of the taxpayer for the satisfaction of its imposts, and only resort to the land when that remedy has been fully exhausted. . . .

Legislation directly charging the realty is prerequisite to its existence; without it taxes are not thus collectable, either as against the owner or an encumbrancer. . . .

In the absence of a direct act declaring that the taxes shall be a lien superior to all antecedent encumbrances, we do not believe these revenue laws can be held to cut out and destroy the contractual rights acquired by a third person who is under no obligation to pay the tax."

In Bibbins v. Clark, 90 Iowa, 230, 29 L.R.A. 278, 57 N. W. 884, 59 N. W. 290, supra, it was held that a statute simply making personal property taxes a lien on the real estate of the owner does not give them priority over mortgage liens existing at the time they attach; overruling New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, 81 Iowa, 732, 10 L.R.A. 478, 39 N. W. 116, 46 N. W. 1103. The court said: "All that the statute provides as to personal tax being a lien upon real estate is that it shall be a lien, and as such it must be held to come within the general rule that its priority is to be determined as of the time the lien attached. . . .

The mortgage lien of plaintiff, having attached to the lots prior to the time the taxes on the personalty became a lien thereon, must be held to be superior to the tax lien. The case of New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, heretofore referred to, in with the law relating to real estate taxes. But, as before stated, it would be grossly unjust, if not in excess of legislative power, to give to the tax lien for taxes on one class of property priority over all other liens on property of another and entirely distinct class. In the absence of a statute clearly disclosing such intent, we are unwilling to attribute such a purpose to the legislature." Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, supra.

Just why the court should have drawn the line at taxes assessed against other property of the same class does not appear. Certainly no such distinction could be made under our law, for it was clearly the intent of our legislature to make the taxes on one article or class of personal property a lien upon other articles and classes of personal property belonging to the same person. In so doing, the legislature was acting within its constitutional powers. Nor are we willing to concede that it is "grossly unjust" to burden one article or class of personal property with taxes levied against another; and, if it were unjust, the remedy must come from the legislature, and not from the court.

In Minnesota, the statute covering this subject reads as follows: "The taxes assessed upon personal property shall be a lien upon the personal property of the person assessed from and after the tax books are received by the county treasurer." [Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 1623.]

This statute is different from ours, in that it does not say that "all" personal taxes shall be a "first" lien on "all" personal property, as ours does. Yet the circuit court of appeals, in a case from Minnesota where this statute was involved, held that the "inference should be that the lien was intended by the legislature to be superior to all liens, prior or subsequent, claimed by individuals, and that nothing should be allowed to overcome this inference but a plain expression of a different purpose found in the statute itself." Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 214, 94 Fed. 244.

Our statute leaves nothing to inference, but, in terms, makes the tax lien superior to all others, and it is our conclusion that the lien for personal taxes is superior to appellant's mortgage lien, not only on the particular property upon which the tax was levied, but upon other personal property owned by the person against whom the tax was levied. A similar conclusion is reached in Michigan, under a statute somewhat similar to ours (Crawford v. Koch, 169 Mich. 372, 135 N. W. 339); and for analogous cases, see Mills v. Thurston County, 16 so far as it holds that taxes assessed against personal property, and which become a lien upon real estate, are a lien thereon prior and superior to existing liens thereon, must be and is overruled."

In Miller v. Anderson, 1 S. D. 539, 11 L.R.A. 317, 47 N. W. 957, supra, after an able review of the cases, the court said: "Section 1612, Comp. Laws, declaring in general terms that 'taxes due from any person upon personal property shall be a lien upon real property owned by such person, or to which he may acquire a title,' creates a lien in favor of the tax creditor upon such real estate, but that such lien, depending alone upon this statute, has no greater force than the statute expressly gives it, and, the legislature having manifested no intention of giving it peculiar or extraordinary force, or of defining its rank as a lien, such questions must be governed by the general statutes of the state upon the subject of liens." The court pointed out that § 4335, Comp. Laws, provided: "Other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation, except in cases of bottomry and respondentia," and concluded that the lien for taxes did not take priority over an existing mortgage.

In Lobban v. State, 9 Wyo. 377, 64 Pac. 82, supra, the statute (Rev. Stat. § 1870) provided: "Taxes due from any person or corporation on personal property shall be a lien on real estate owned by such person or corporation." The court took occasion to say: "Although, by the terms of § 1870, taxes levied upon personal property are a lien upon the real estate owned by the person from whom such personal taxes are due, it is to be observed that the lien thus provided for is not expressly made prior or superior to any other existing lien or encumbrance. A lien is created merely, without any attempt to fix its priority in respect to other liens. It would seem that, had the legislature intended to impart to the lien of the personal tax upon land of the taxpayer a priority over antecedent liens placed upon the property by the owner in good faith, that intention would have been expressed by plain and apt language. Indeed, we think the duty to have done so to be clear."

In State, Macknet, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 42 N. J. L. 38, it was held that a city charter provision: "That every assessment of taxes hereafter made in the city of Newark against any person or persons shall be and remain a lien on all lands and real estate of such person," etc., did not make such taxes a superior lien over existing mortgages. The court said: "To declare that a mortgage on land shall be subsequent and subject to all after taxes assessed upon the personal estate of the owner of the equity of redemption differs but slightly from taking the property of one citizen to pay the debt of another. The injustice of such a proceeding would be so striking as to cast a doubt upon the correctness of the interpretation which established such a rule.

Wash. 378, 47 1 ac. 759; Burflend v. Hamilton, 20 Mont. 343, 51 Pac. 161; Reynolds v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 172, 61 N. W. 695; Reynolds v. McMillan, 43 Neb. 183, 61 N. W. 699; Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73; Morey v. Duluth, 75 Minn. 221, 77 N. W. 829; Porter v. Yakima County, 77 Wash. 299, 137 Pac. 466.

It is argued by appellant that, if the statute under consideration is given the construction contended for by respondent, it will burden personal property with secret liens to an extent to be abhorred; that it will act as a restraint upon the free exchange and alienation of personal property, and render it unsafe to deal in personal property; that it will violate contract obligations and result in the taking of property without due process of law. While the latter objection might be good in regard to contracts that were made prior to the enactment of the statute, it is without force when applied to contracts entered into since its enactment. The results complained of are presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. If the statute is obnoxious because it acts as a restraint upon the free exchange or alienation of personal property, or renders it unsafe to deal in such property, then it should be repealed or amended, but this relief must be sought from the legislature, and not from the court.

Other alleged errors are assigned and presented in the brief of appellant, but the facts contained in the record are not sufficient to enable us to say whether the court erred or not, and therefore we are unable to review the same.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Smith, P. J., concurring:

I concur in the views of Justices Polley and Gates. The dissent of Justices Whiting and McCoy seems to be based upon some idea of the proper "construction" to be given our statute. I think the language of the statute is so plain as to leave no possible room for the application of any rule of construction. I think the dissent challenges the justice of the law, rather than the power of the legislature to enact it. Doubtless it was intended to lessen the possibilities of evasion of payment of taxes on personal property. The constitutionality of such a statute is fully sustained by decisions of the courts. But if the enforcement of the statute as plainly written would work out "unconscionable" results, as suggested, and if justice demands limitations or modifications of the law as written,

A fair construction of the 77th section of the charter before cited will not lead to that result."

In Smith v. Skow, 97 Iowa, 640, 66 N. W. 893, it is held that a license tax exacted for the privilege of carrying on the business of vending liquors, which is made by statute a lien upon all property, both personal and real, used or connected with the business, is inferior to the lien of a prior mortgage upon the real property. The opinion pointed out that, as two of the judges who dissented from the holding in Bibbins v. Clark, supra, still adhere to their former opinions, it was desirable to rest the determination of the question in this case upon another ground upon which all agree, and that was "that this sum which it is provided shall be a lien upon property, both personal and real, is not in fact a tax, as we usually use that word," and concluded that, the charge or license not being in the nature of a general tax, and the statute not undertaking to make it a lien upon real property superior to existing liens, there was no reason for holding it to be superior to a prior mortgage.

In Com. v. Walker, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2122, 80 S. W. 185, it is held that the state cannot assert a lien upon land in the hands of the grantee for whisky taxes assessed against the grantor after the conveyance of the land, by virtue of a statute providing that the state shall have a lien on property assessed for taxes, which shall not be defeated by alienation, though the lien could be enforced against the land to collect whisky taxes assessed before conveyance.

But in California Loan & T. Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 50 Pac. 697, it was held that a tax due upon personal property was a lien superior to that of a prior mortgage upon the real estate, by virtue of the statute (Cal. Pol. Code, § 3717), which provided: "Every tax due upon personal property is a lien upon the real property of the owner thereof from and after 12 o'clock M. of the first Monday in March in each year," and the other provision of the Code to the effect that "every lien" created by the statute remains until the taxes are paid or the property sold, and that the title which the purchaser gets under the enforcement of any tax lien by sale is free from all encumbrances.

In Bodertha v. Spencer, 40 Ind. 353, it is held that the lien for personal taxes assessed against the mortgagor is superior to the lien of a prior purchase money mortgage, under a statute providing that the lien of the state for all taxes shall attach on all real estate on the 1st day of January, annually; and such lien shall in nowise be affected or destroyed by any sale or transfer of any such real estate. Following the above case it was held in Isaacs v. Decker, 41 Ind. 410, that the lien for poll taxes and personal property taxes was a lien on the real estate superior to a prior mortgage.

A. L. R.

the remedy lies with the legislature, and not the courts.

Whitting, J., dissenting:

I feel compelled to dissent from the foregoing opinion. If the taxing officers of the state take advantage of the construction placed upon this law by the majority of this court, it will, of necessity, in not a few cases, lead to most intolerable and unconscionable results. In the words of the court in Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73: "This construction . . . would be a restraint upon the free exchange and alienation of personal property that ought not to be drawn from the statute, when the meaning is not clearly manifested."

I believe that the Nebraska court, in the quotation found in the majority decision, has given a statement of the law of taxation perfectly consistent with the theory of taxation adopted in our Constitution. Certainly under our theory of taxation, every article of nonexempt property should pay its share of the public burden, but that is far different from saying that one piece of property should pay a portion of the public burden that has been levied against another piece of property. Inasmuch as each piece of personal property should bear its proportionate share of the public burdens, its said share may well be made a lien on such piece of property, and a lien superior to all other liens thereon, whether they be prior or subsequent in date. Under our theory of taxation, not only should each piece of property contribute its share towards the public burdens, but, owing to the transient nature of personal property, the owner thereof should himself be charged with the payment of the taxes thereon, and therefore it is right and proper to make each particular item of one's personal property not only liable for the taxes upon such property, but to make the owner's interest in any particular piece liable for the unpaid taxes upon all his other personal property; and I believe that all personal property taxes might well be a lien upon all of the owner's property, superior to all liens placed thereon or transfers thereof made, subsequent to the time when such taxes are declared to become a lien. The real question presented to this court is whether the statute in question should be construed as though it read, "All taxes assessed upon personal property within this state shall, from and after December 1st in each year, be a lien on all the personal property of the person against whom taxes are assessed, first or superior to all other liens thereon either prior or subsequent in date;" or as though it read, "All taxes assessed upon personal property within this state shall, from and after December 1st in each year, be a lien on all the personal property of the person against whom taxes are assessed, first or superior to all liens acquired thereon after said December 1st."

Under the construction of this law given in the majority decision, if A owns a horse at the time fixed for assessment, and it is assessed to him, and he afterwards, either before or after December 1st of the same year, sells such horse to B, who chances to be the owner of a large amount of personal property which has been assessed to him, and A takes back a chattel mortgage to secure a part of the purchase price, and then B, prior to the time taxes become delinquent, becomes bankrupt and has left no property from which his taxes could be collected except the horse in question, then this horse, though the taxes on him have been paid, could be taken and sold to pay B's taxes, and A deprived of his security. I do not believe that robbery should be committed by the state any more than by an individual, and I cannot bring myself to believe that the lawmakers of this state intended to enact a law which might bring such unconscionable wrongs upon the people of this state. The above is but one of many illustrations that one could give of the utterly intolerable and unconscionable results that might flow from such a law.

In the latter part of the majority opinion are cited several cases which are claimed to support the conclusion reached in such opinion. When carefully analyzed it will be found that not one of them is an authority for the majority opinion. The main case relied upon seems to be that of Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 214, 94 Fed. 244. It must be conceded that there are statements contained in such decision which, if they were not in the nature of obiter dictum, would be authority for the majority opinion; but a careful examination reveals that no such question was presented in that case as is presented in the case before us. In order to determine just what was before the Federal court, it is well to note just what was before the lower court. On page 246 the Federal court states: "It is contended in behalf of appellee, and so the lower court appears to have held, that the lien created by the mortgage in favor of the Central Trust Company, from the time when that instrument was recorded, to wit, February 23, 1899, was and is paramount, so far as the personal property conveyed by the mortgage is concerned, to any lien thereon which the state can assert under a subsequent assessment of such personal property for taxation."

Analyzing this statement closely it is seen that what the lower court decided was that the lien of the mortgage was superior to a subsequent tax lien based on an assessment of the identical property covered by the mortgage. I concede that such holding was wrong; there can be no question but that the tax upon property can be made a lien thereon superior to any other lien prior or subsequent against the identical property taxed; and the Federal court, in reversing the lower court, did what there is ample authority to support. It appearing, therefore, that the real question before that court was not the question presented upon this appeal, all statements in such opinion, which go farther than was necessary to decide the particular question before that court, should be treated as but obiter dictum.

The majority opinion states that "a similar conclusion is reached in Michigan under a statute somewhat similar to ours," and cites Crawford v. Koch, 169 Mich. 372, 135 N. W. 339. An examination of that case reveals that the holding therein has not the remotest bearing upon the question now before us. There was a statute in Michigan providing that personal property should be assessed against the person in possession thereof, regardless of whether such person was the owner or not. The property in question in the Michigan case was ten pianos. These pianos had been in the possession of one S., and were in his possession at the time when they were assessed for taxation, though the pianos belonged to another party. The taxes were assessed and levied against S. and, under such statute, became a lien against these pianos. Not only that, but the other personal taxes of S. became a lien upon these pianos, as well as upon any other property in S.'s possession. After such taxes had become a lien upon the personal property in S.'s possession, the true owner of such property, who, by placing the pianos in S.'s possession, had allowed them to become subject to such tax lien, sold the pianos to the plaintiff Crawford. Thereafter they were seized and taken out of Crawford's possession by the officers, under the alleged tax lien, and Crawford brought this action to recover the possession of such pianos. It will thus be seen that the question presented was the validity of a statute under which property could be assessed in the name of one not the owner thereof, but who was in the possession thereof, and under which statute any personal property in one's possession became subject to a lien for all the personal property taxes of such person. There is absolutely no question of priority of liens, and, as before stated, the decision has no bearing upon the question before us at this time.

Reference is also made to Burfiend v. L.R.A. 1915D.

Hamilton, 20 Mont. 343, 51 Pac. 161. This is a case wherein it was held that, where a license was required for the conducting of a certain occupation, and such license is made a lien upon the property used in such occupation, such statute makes such license a lien upon such property superior to any mortgage lien against the same property. While it does not appear whether the mortgage involved antedated the license lien, yet, conceding that it did, it is a far different situation than is presented in this case. There are many liens against personal property which, owing to the nature of the lien, should take precedence over any mortgage on the same property, such as a tax lien for taxes upon the identical property, or, as held in some states, an agister's lien upon live stock; such also would be a seed grain lien, a thresher's lien, or a blacksmith's lien.

The case of Reynolds v. McMillan, 43 Neb. 183, 61 N. W. 699, is cited. The decision in this case rests upon that of Reynolds v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 172, 61 N. W. 695. An examination of this case reveals that their statute is like that of Minnesota, and that the court construed the same exactly as I believe our statute should be construed. It in no manner supports the views of the majority of this court.

The case of Mills v. Thurston County, 16 Wash. 378, 47 Pac. 759, is cited. The sole question in that case was whether or not, where a stock of goods had been assessed for taxes and a part of the same afterwards sold in the regular course of business and other goods intermingled with the remainder, and such stock of goods, including the new goods, sold to another party after the time when, under the statute, it was declared the tax should be a lien upon the personal property of the owner, such stock of goods in the hands of said second party—not only the remainder of the goods taxed, but the new goods mixed therewith—could be held for such taxes. The court held that all of said goods were liable for such taxes. It will thus be seen that, in this case, there was no question of the priority of tax liens over other liens, and the decision therein in no manner bears upon the question now before us. So with the later case of Porter v. Yakima County, 77 Wash. 299, 137 Pac. 466. It has absolutely no bearing upon the question now before us.

In the case of Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73, also cited in the majority opinion, the sole question was whether, where a party owned various classes of personal property and had been assessed therefor, and the tax had become a lien against all of such property, and such party had afterwards sold a part thereof, such part, in the hands of the purchaser, could be holden for all of the former owner's personal property tax. In this case the court held that it could not be so holden, but that each class of personal property could be holden for the tax against such class. It will thus be seen that this decision, if it has any bearing whatsoever upon the question now before us, would be an authority against the proposition that a threshing machine in the hands of one who purchased same from the party owning same at the time it was taxed could be holden for any tax of the former owner, excepting such tax as was levied against that class of property to which the threshing machine belonged; and certainly there is nothing in this decision in any manner touching the real question before us, to wit, whether or not a tax lien is superior to prior liens against other personal property.

There is also cited Morey v. Duluth, 75 Minn. 221, 77 N. W. 829. All that is holden in this case is that a real estate tax for special improvements takes priority over a mortgage against the real estate, exactly the same as the ordinary real estate tax lien takes priority over other liens and encumbrances against such real estate.

Remembering that the right to a lien for taxes is to be found in the express provision of the statute, and that the provisions of such statute should not be enlarged by implication, it would seem that this statute should be construed to mean simply this: Taxes assessed upon personal property shall, from and after December 1st in each year, be a first or superior lien on all of the personal property of the person as against any and all liens that may be created against such property after such date. The word "first" as used in our statute should be construed as meaning nothing more nor less than "superior;" and we should hold it was not intended to make this lien superior to liens already against such property, but simply to make it superior to any and all liens that may thereafter be placed upon such property. By so construing it, no unconscionable results will follow, and the statute will also be practicable in its workings. While it is clear that the legislature might make the tax upon any item of personal property a lien superior to all other liens, either prior or subsequent, upon such item of property, yet, unless the express words of the statute so provide, it should not be held that the statute makes it superior to those prior in date of time even as against the particular property assessed.

I am therefore of the opinion that we should hold that this statute means nothing more nor less than that the tax assessed against any personal property does, upon L.R.A.1915D.

the 1st day of December thereafter, become a lien against not only the particular item taxed and still owned by such party, but against each and every piece of personal property then owned by such party, even though acquired after the date of assessment; that such lien should stand as a first or superior lien from the said 1st day of December as against any and all liens thereafter created or sales thereafter made. If the legislators intended it to be a first lien over all encumbrances and liens, whether prior or subsequent, they should have used unambiguous language.

McCoy, J.: I concur in the views expressed by Whitting, J.

Petition for rehearing denied.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

H. SCHWARTZ, Appt.,

v.

J. T. BLACK.

(131 Tenn. 360, 174 S. W. 1146.)

Covenant — breach — existing railroad track.

1. An existing railroad track across the property may be treated as a breach of covenant against encumbrances in a conveyance thereof, if the purchaser was misled into the belief that the railroad had merely a leasehold interest in the right of way.

Damages — breach of covenant against encumbrances — benefit.

2. Nominal damages only can be recovered for breach of covenant against encumbrances in a deed of real estate because of an existing railroad track upon the property, if the track is an actual benefit to the property.

(April 3, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for Davidson County dismissing a bill filed to recover damages for breach of a covenant of warranty against encumbrances in a deed of real estate. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to existence of railroad right of way, public highway, or private way across land at time of conveyance as breach of covenant, see notes to Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 833, and Sandum v. Johnson, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, and other notes there referred to. See also note to First Unitarian Soc. v. Citizens' Sav. & T. Co. 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428, as to existence of water right on land at time of conveyance as breach of covenant.

Messrs. William O. Vertrees and John J. Vertrees, for appellant:

The deed to plaintiff contains express warranties as to seisin and encumbrances, and he can recover even though he had knowledge that these easements belonged to the railroad company and to Mr. Ryman, instead of believing that they were merely rented by them.

Note to Browne v. Taylor, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 309; note to Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 844; Cornelius v. Kinnard, 157 Ky. 50, 162 S. W. 624.

A railroad right of way over land conveyed is a breach of the covenants against encumbrances in the deed conveying it.

Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 844, note, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 650, note; 11 Cyc. 1116; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 3d ed. 391, 396; Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 206, 2 Am. Rep. 290; Farrington v. Tourtelott, 39 Fed. 738; Pryor v. Buffalo, 197 N. Y. 123, 90 N. E. 423; Pierce v. Houghton, 122 Iowa, 477, 98 N. W. 306; Barlow v. McKinley, 24 Iowa, 69; Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Burk v. Hill, 48 Ind. 52, 17 Am. Rep. 731; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19 Iowa, 422; Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 426; Herrick v. Moore, 19 Me. 313; Lamb v. Danforth, 59 Me. 322, 8 Am. Rep. 426; Pilcher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 38 Kan. 516, 5 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Pac. 945; Whiteside v. Magruder, 75 Mo. App. 364.

Even if the presence of the railways enhances the value of the land, inasmuch as they constitute a breach of the covenant against encumbrances, the complainant is entitled to recover nominal damages and the costs of the case.

Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46; Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 744, note.

The measure of damages is the diminution in value by reason of the presence and location of these railways.

11 Cyc. 1166; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 179; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 623.

Mr. Samuel N. Harwood, for appellee:

Physical conditions of land are not encumbrances within the meaning of covenants against encumbrances.

Hines v. State, 126 Tenn. 5, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1138, 149 S. W. 1058; Robertson v. Mt. Olivet Cemetery Co. 116 Tenn. 221, 93 S. W. 574; Gardner v. Swan Point Cemetery, 20 R. I. 646, 78 Am. St. Rep. 897, 40 Atl. 871; Waldron's Petition, 26 R. I. 84, 67 L.R.A. 118, 106 Am. St. Rep. 688, 58 Atl. 453; Thompson v. Hickey, 59 How. Pr. 434; Stewart v. Garrett, 119 Ga. 386, 64 L.R.A. 99, 100 Am. St. Rep. 179, 46 S. E. 427; Perry v. Williamson, — Tenn. —, L.R.A.1915D.

47 S. W. 189; Maupin, Marketable Title to Real Estate, § 127; Rawle, Covenants, § 83; First Unitarian Soc. v. Citizens' Sav. & T. Co. 162 Iowa, 389, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428, 142 N. W. 87; Bennett v. Booth, 70 W. Va. 264, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618, 73 S. E. 909; Stuhr v. Butterfield, 151 Iowa, 736, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321, 130 N. W. 897; Rollo v. Nelson, 34 Utah, 116, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 96 Pac. 263; Weller v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1136, 64 S. W. 843; Clark v. Mossman, 58 Neb. 87, 78 N. W. 399; Omaha Southern R. Co. v. Beeson, 36 Neb. 361, 54 N. W. 557; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Shepherd, 39 Neb. 525, 58 N. W. 189; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 3 L.R.A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432, 20 N. E. 581; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Scribner v. Holmes, 16 Ind. 142; Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Burbach v. Schweinler, 56 Wis. 386, 14 N. W. 449; Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 60 Fla. 284, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 833, 53 So. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 647; Desvergers v. Willis, 56 Ga. 515, 21 Am. Rep. 289; Moore v. Johnston, 87 Ala. 220, 6 So. 50; Brown v. Young, 69 Iowa, 625, 29 N. W. 941; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Smith v. Hughes, 50 Wis. 620, 7 N. W. 653; Memmert v. McKeen, 112 Pa. 315, 4 Atl. 542; Jones v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300; Pomeroy v. Chicago & M. R. Co. 25 Wis. 641; Ireton v. Thomas, 84 Kan. 70, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 737, 113 Pac. 306; Lallande v. Wentz, 18 La. Ann. 289; Hallandane v. Sweet, 55 Mich. 196, 20 N. W. 902; Harrison v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. 91 Iowa, 114, 58 N. W. 1081; Holmes v. Danforth, 83 Me. 139, 21 Atl. 845; Denman v. Mentz, 63 N. J. Eq. 613, 52 Atl. 1117; Bacharach v. Von Eiff, 74 Hun, 533, 26 N. Y. Supp. 842; Bonebrake v. Summers, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 55; Re Whitlock, 32 Barb. 48; Ake v. Mason, 101 Pa. 17; Hubbard v. Norton, 10 Conn. 422; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Bourg v. Niles, 6 La. Ann. 77; Neeson v. Bray, 46 N. Y. S. R. 914, 19 N. Y. Supp. 841; Hymes v. Estey, 116 N. Y. 501, 15 Am. St. Rep. 421, 22 N. E. 1087, 133 N. Y. 342, 31 N. E. 105; Howell v. Northampton R. Co. 211 Pa. 284, 60 Atl. 793; Patton v. Quarrier, 18 W. Va. 447; Barre v. Fleming, 29 W. Va. 314, 1 S. E. 731; Newmyer v. Roush, 21 Idaho, 106, 120 Pac. 464, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 433; Schurger v. Moorman, 20 Idaho, 97, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313, 117 Pac. 122, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1114; Crans v. Durdall, 154 Iowa, 468, 134 N. W. 1086; Geren v. Caldarera, 99 Ark. 260, 138 S. W. 335; Sandum v. Johnson, 122 Minn. 368, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, 142 N. W. 878, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1007; Goodman v.

Heilig, 157 N. C. 6, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1004, 72 S. E. 866.

Mr. Louis Leftwich also for appellee.

Nell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in the present case was filed to recover of defendant damages for breach of a general covenant of warranty, and against encumbrances, contained in a deed which defendant made to complainant on October 14, 1911, for certain land lying in East Nashville on the bank of Cumberland river, just north of the Woodland street bridge. The action is based on the fact that, when the deed was made, there were two railway tracks and rights of way on the lot, as follows: The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company owned a track and right of way running across the lot in a diagonal direction, thence south to other lots and industries located thereon, the track at its northern end joining another track of the railway at Main street, in East Nashville. The conveyance was of a strip of ground sufficiently wide for the construction of a single track railroad, and it provided that, in case the said strip of ground should ever cease to be used for railroad purposes, the title should revert to the makers of the deed, William Sutherland and Charles Graves, the predecessors in title of defendant Black. The consideration was $3,000. This instrument was made May 11, 1889, and filed for registration in Davidson county May 15th of the same year, and duly registered. Subsequently, on the 17th of February, 1904, the Standard Lumber & Box Company, then the owners of the lot, supplemented the previous instrument by definitely fixing the limits of the right of way at 25 feet; that is to say, 12½ feet on each side of the track. This deed was registered in Davidson county April 19, 1914. There was also a spur track built by the Standard Lumber & Box Company, running out from the diagonal track above mentioned in an eastwardly direction across the lot. The diagonal track referred to was constructed long prior to 1904, and was used by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as a spur track from its main line to numerous industries lying to the south of the lot in question, also to industries operated on the lot in question.

The other track is known as the Ryman track; the facts concerning which are as follows: The Ryman elevator is located on the bank of the Cumberland river below this lot, and Mr. Ryman and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company desired to extend the "water track" of the railroad company from the elevator up the river, over the frontage of this lot. On July 5, 1903, L.R.A.1915D.

Sutherland and Graves, the then owners of the lot, for the consideration of $1,000, conveyed to Thomas G. Ryman a right of way along the river front on this lot from its northern boundary to within 55 feet of its southern boundary, subject to several reservations, only two of which need be mentioned. One of these was that Sutherland and Graves were to have the right to cross the track with a "movable track," so as to permit them to draw up and let down timber and lumber from their factory, but not in a manner to obstruct the proper use of the road by the railway company; the other was the right to load and unload cars on the track, but not so as to conflict with the operation of Ryman's boats and elevators. The owners of the lot, when using the cars on the Ryman track for industries located on said lot, paid, as did all other persons, $1 per car for any car of lumber loaded and unloaded on the said track, and more per car for all other kinds of merchandise. But the evidence shows that this was cheaper than hauling the merchandise in wagons to and from the landing.

The contention of the complainant is that these railroads are encumbrances within the terms of the warranty, and that, as located, they diminish the value of the property at least $10,000. The defendant contends that the railroads are not encumbrances within the meaning of the deed, and that, as a matter of fact, they do not diminish the value of the property at all.

There is much evidence on both sides of the question, but we are of the opinion that the weight of the evidence shows that the railroads are not only not injurious to the lot, but of great benefit. The lot is flat and low, lying on the bank of the river, and is useful only for factories. The evidence shows that without the roads this lot would be practically useless, and that these roads add to its value from 25 to 50 per cent. On the other hand, there is evidence to the effect that the roads, considering the way in which they are located or placed on the land, are an injury to it. But, as stated, the weight of the evidence decidedly sustains the conclusion that the roads are of great benefit to the land. It follows, therefore, that complainants are not entitled to any substantial damages.

It is insisted, however, that at all events the roads are technically encumbrances, and that complainants are entitled to recover their costs.

There is a controversy in the authorities on this subject. In the New England states it is held that even a public road running across the land, in use, open and visible, is an encumbrance, falling within a covenant against encumbrances, and must be accounted for in damages. Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Hubbard v. Norton, 10 Conn. 422; Alling v. Burlock, 46 Conn. 504; Herrick v. Moore, 19 Me. 313; Lamb v. Danforth, 59 Me. 322, 8 Am. Rep. 426; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Prichard v. Atkinson, 3 N. H. 335; Haynes v. Stevens, 11 N. H. 28. The general reason assigned is that it deprives the owner of that dominion over the land to which he is entitled. A different view is taken in other states. Memmert v. McKeen, 112 Pa. 315, 4 Atl. 542, and cases cited; Howell v. Northampton R. Co. 211 Pa. 284, 60 Atl. 793; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 3 L.R.A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432, 20 N. E. 581; Hymes v. Estey, 116 N. Y. 501, 15 Am. St. Rep. 421, 22 N. E. 1087; Hymes v. Estey, 133 N. Y. 342, 31 N. E. 105; Jordan v. Eve, 31 Gratt. 1; Trice v. Kayton, 84 Va. 217, 10 Am. St. Rep. 836, 4 S. E. 377; Patton v. Quarrier, 18 W. Va. 447; Barre v. Fleming, 29 W. Va. 314, 1 S. E. 731; Desvergers v. Willis, 56 Ga. 516, 21 Am. Rep. 289; Haldane v. Sweet, 55 Mich. 196, 20 N. W. 902. The ground on which these cases rest is that when the road is a public one, actually open and in use, the parties must be presumed to have taken it into account in fixing the price of the land, and therefore the covenant must be construed as not intended to embrace the easement. The same rule is followed in some other states as to other open and visible easements. In Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85, it appears that the easement held not to be an encumbrance was the right to overflow the land with a mill pond; the overflow being, of course, open and visible. The court said that this was equally as obvious as a public road, and that, in case of a public road, the doctrine did not rest on the fact that the road was in favor of the public, but that the easement was obvious and notorious in its character, and therefore the purchaser must be presumed to have seen it, and to have fixed his price for the land with reference to the situation as thus presented. The same rule was followed in Bennett v. Booth, 70 W. Va. 264, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618, 73 S. E. 909, the easement complained of there being the right to overflow by a milldam (Ireton v. Thomas, 84 Kan. 70, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 737, 113 Pac. 306, a levee covering several acres; Schurger v. Moorman, 20 Idaho, 97, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313, 117 Pac. 122, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1114, an irrigation ditch; James v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300, the right to the use of open windows looking across a lot which the vendor of the latter had retained, at which time the windows were obvious. Public L.R.A.1915D.

roads are excluded in some other states, not on the ground that their existence is open and obvious, but because the court judicially knows that they are necessary, and hence useful. Harrison v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. 91 Iowa, 114, 58 N. W. 1081; Killen v. Funk, 83 Neb. 622, 131 Am. St. Rep. 658, 120 N. W. 189; Sandum v. Johnson, 122 Minn. 368, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, 142 N. W. 878, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1007. The same reasoning was applied to the existence of a drainage ditch in Stuhr v. Butterfield, 151 Iowa, 736, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321, 130 N. W. 897, and to a public sewer 5 feet under ground in First Unitarian Soc. v. Citizens Sav. & T. Co. 162 Iowa, 389, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428, 142 N. W. 87. In the following cases it is held that the existence of a railroad right of way is an encumbrance, regardless of its open and obvious character: Pierce v. Houghton, 122 Iowa, 477, 98 N. W. 306; Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 209, 2 Am. Rep. 290; Burk v. Hill, 48 Ind. 52, 17 Am. Rep. 731; Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 426; Tuskegee Land & Secur. Co. v. Birmingham Realty Co. 161 Ala. 542, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 992, 49 So. 378. The Missouri cases were followed to same effect in Farrington v. Tourtelott (C. C.) 39 Fed. 738, as substantially binding on the point, but with observations indicating that the doctrine did not wholly meet the approval of the court. Pilcher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 38 Kan. 516, 5 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Pac. 945, is cited in the brief before us, but there was no question of knowledge from the obvious existence of the railroad discussed. Pryor v. Buffalo, 197 N. Y. 123, 90 N. E. 423, is also cited, but the facts in that case were such as to render it inapplicable to the point we now have under examination. The covenant was of a very special character; and, while it appeared that the covenantee had knowledge of the existence of the railway on the ground contracted for, it was that very ground that had to be furnished by the city, and hence compliance with the covenant necessarily involved the removal of that railway and the delivery of the land to the covenantee. Still we do not doubt that, from the reasoning of the New York cases on the subject of public roads, the doctrine applicable to that class of improvements could not be extended to railroads. On the other hand, it is held in the following cases that existing railways in actual operation stand on the same ground as to their public and obvious character as do public highways: Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co. 60 Fla. 284, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 833, 53 So. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 647; Goodman v. Heilig, 157 N. C. 6, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1004, 72 S. E. 866; Ex parte Alexander, 122

N. C. 727, 30 S. E. 336. The same doctrine was substantially laid down in Geren v. Caldara, 90 Ark. 280, 138 S. W. 335, but the case is put not only on the ground that the purchaser knew that the switch track was on the land, but also that it was shown that the track in question was a direct inducement to his purchase.

We have held that where an intending purchaser inspected the land which he proposed to buy, and saw upon it in operation a line of railway, he could not thereafter complain that the land was so encumbered, and recover therefor under his covenant against encumbrances. Rich v. Scales, 116 Tenn. 57, 66, 69, 91 S. W. 50. In that case the court said: "But if a part of the land purporting to be conveyed by the deed be held in adverse possession at the time of the conveyance, and the vendee have knowledge of such adverse possession at the time he takes his conveyance, he can have no relief, either upon his covenants at law or in any form in equity; otherwise, if he have no knowledge of such adverse possession at the time."

Again: "Treating the case really presented in the bill, an action on the covenant of the deed, upon the ground that a part of the land embraced within the calls was at the time of the conveyance held by an outstanding and better title, that of the railroad company, two insuperable objections are apparent: Firstly, as already said, the representation by bounds would control that made by the calls for distance, and it follows that none of the land described was held by better title, and that the complainant obtained all that he had contracted for; secondly, assuming that the strip claimed in the bill really fell within all the descriptive words of the deed, still the complainant could not recover, because that strip was, when the conveyance was taken, then in the adverse possession of the railroad company in a manner open and obvious to the complainant, and under such circumstances he could assert no rights either at law or in equity in respect thereof based upon the deed in question." 116 Tenn. 69.

The reason is substantially the same as that which applies to the existence of public highways. Perry v. Williamson, — Tenn. —, 47 S. W. 189.

In the case last cited it was held that the rule would not apply to the existence of a private way, when it did not appear that the purchaser had knowledge of the legal existence of such way.

Similarly, in the case now before us, it is insisted that although complainant inspected the premises before he made his purchase, and had an abstract of title, he L.R.A.1915D.

was misled by defendant into believing that one of the railroads was paying him rent for the use of the right of way. The evidence sustains this contention as to the Ryman track. That is to say, the owners of the Ryman track were paying rent for the right to use a certain part of the lot adjoining the track for loading and unloading, the sum of $8.33 per month. This was so stated to complainant as reasonably to lead him to believe that the rent was being paid for the use of the track, and hence that the track was subject to the control and disposal of the owner of the lot; and it seems that he did believe this, and actually demanded rent for it from the Ryman people a few months after his purchase, and after the time had expired for which the Ryman people had rented the space adjoining the track. The latter informed him of his mistake, referred him to the contract under which they had obtained the right of way, and refused longer to rent the space of ground they had previously used for the loading and unloading. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that the inference to be drawn from the open and obvious character of the Ryman track is rebutted, and that this track must be treated as an encumbrance; and although complainant is entitled to no substantial damages therefor, since the evidence shows that it was beneficial to the land, still he is entitled to nominal damages, and to the costs of the cause. Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46.

A decree will therefore be entered so modifying the decree of the Chancellor as to adjudge that, although complainant is not entitled to any substantial damages, he is entitled to nominal damages, and to the costs of the cause.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

MRS. ALICE McCABE PILCHER

v.

JOHN M. PILCHER, Plff. in Err.

(— Va. —, 84 S. E. 667.)

Will — signature — signing by initials.

1. Signature by initials is sufficient to Note. — Wills: what amounts to signature by testator.

I. In general.

- a. Generally, 903.
- b. Omission of letter, 904.
- c. Initials, 904.
- d. First name, 904.
- e. Assumed name, 904.
- f. Use of name of first husband by married woman, 905.

validate a holographic will under a statute providing that no will shall be valid unless signed in such manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended as a signature.

Evidence — communication between husband and wife.

2. Evidence of communication by a man to his wife in the presence of others is not inadmissible on the ground of confidence or privilege.

Will — revocation — later instrument.

3. A will is not revoked by the unexecuted draft of a later one.

(March 11, 1915.)

ERROR to the Chancery Court of the City of Richmond to review a decree admitting to probate a paper offered by proponent as the will of Edwin M. Pilcher, deceased. Affirmed.

Statement by Whittle, J.:

I shall make use of the clear and accurate outline of the occurrences in this case found in the brief of counsel for the defendant in error as furnishing a sufficient presentation of the material facts. It is as follows:

"Edwin M. Pilcher died in the city of Richmond, Virginia, on the 16th day of January, 1913, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Worsham, at the age of forty-six years, after an illness of about six months, from an affection of the heart known as endocarditis, leaving surviving him his widow, the appellee, and his father, the Rev. John M. Pilcher, his sole heir at law and next

I.—continued.

g. Use of two names, 905.

h. Use of mark to name other than true one, 905.

i. Stamp, 906.

j. Sealing as signing, 906.

II. Hand guided by another, 906.

I. In general.

a. Generally.

The present note is limited to an investigation of what constitutes a signature by the testator apart from signing by mark, that is to say, what form is sufficient to amount to a signature. It does not include the question of the place of the signature. As to that question, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, "Wills," § 23.

The effect of a signature different from that ordinarily used by a testator as evidence of mental incapacity or fraud is not considered.

The use of any signature intended by the testator to authenticate the instrument renders the will sufficiently signed by the testator. In fact, it is not even necessary that it be a signature, but any mark or character intended as a signing is sufficient.

An illegible scrawl intended as a signature is sufficient. Sheehan v. Kearney, 82 Misc. 688, 35 L.R.A. 102, 21 So. 41.

In this connection a Code provision that the signature of a testator should be in his "proper handwriting" was held to mean merely that the signature shall be written as contradistinguished from engraved, lithographed, or printed, in case the party be able to write, and if he be not able to write, the signature referred to is intended to be made by his proper mark, and not printed, engraved, or lithographed. Ibid.

Where there appeared at the place where the testator's name was intended to be signed a seal and two characters, one in the form of a cross and the other designed perhaps as one stroke or mark of another cross, these marks being made while the pen was held in the fingers of the testator and his L.R.A.1915D.

hand guided by another, and the testator stated that the seal was his, and, upon being asked if he wished the two marks to be understood as his signature, indicated that he did, and then declared the instrument to be his will, and requested the two gentlemen who had aided him in its execution to become subscribing witnesses, the will was held sufficiently signed by the testator. VanHanswyck v. Wiese, 44 Barb. 494.

An indistinct subscription is stated to be unsustainable as the mark of the testator, in Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389.

That it is sufficient for at least part of the name to be signed by making an impression on the paper with a pen without ink, see Re Jakob, 21 W. N. C. 510, infra.

Where the testator did not intend the mark or character on the paper as his signature, it will not be so treated. Thus, where he started to write his name to a codicil, and after making two lines, apparently the beginning of his name, stopped and said, "I can't sign it now," the intention that the mark should be his signature is affirmatively disproved, and will not be so treated. Plate's Estate, 148 Pa. 55, 33 Am. St. Rep. 805, 23 Atl. 1038.

So, in another case of physical disability, the testator was unable to sign and made only a small mark or scratch on the paper; there were also two small marks or dots on another part of the paper not the usual place for signing; the testator stated that he made and published the paper as his last will and testament. The court states that it is true a testator may sign his will by making a mark, but he must intend the mark as a substitute for his name, and when there is no name written or anything indicating who made the mark, and especially when the mark is made at an unusual place for the signature, it ought to require very satisfactory evidence that the mark was intended by the testator as his signature or as a substitute for it. The paper was accordingly denied probate as a will. Everhart v. Everhart, 34 Fed. 82.

In Knapp v. Reilly, 3 Dem. 427, the testator, after writing the first three letters of of kin. He had been a member of the bar of that city for about twenty years, and, for some years preceding his death, was a commissioner in chancery of the chancery court of the city of Richmond. He was regarded as an accurate and careful lawyer, and experienced in the drawing of legal papers.

"For seven years prior to his last illness he had been engaged to be married to the lady who is now his widow, who lived in Wheeling, West Virginia, but their marriage had been postponed from time to time because her mother's health was bad, and she was the only daughter at home. Early in December, 1912, when Mr. Pilcher's condition had become very serious, his fiancée came to Richmond and they decided to be married at once, so that she might remain with him and help nurse him. They were accordingly married in his sick chamber on December 10, 1912, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Worsham.

"On December 15, 1912, Mrs. Pilcher's sister, Mrs. Belle K. Woods, came to Richmond and stayed with Mrs. Pilcher for about a week. On December 17th or 18th, while Mrs. Woods was alone with Mr. Pilcher in his sick chamber, he told her that he wished to make his will, and requested her to get him a piece of paper for that purpose. She was making some objection to his undertaking to write his will then, when Mrs. Pilcher entered the room, took her seat beside his bed, and proceeded to finish in pencil a letter to her mother, which his name, dropped the pen saying he could go no further. Another then finished the signature and made a mark for the testator. There was held to be no subscribing by the testator, since he did not intend what he had written to be an authentication of the will.

So, the signing of a letter which is offered as a testamentary instrument, by the initial of the writer's Christian name, is not a sufficient signing, at least where in the letter an intention to conceal the identity of the writer appears. McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 476.

The test is thus seen to be whether the testator intended what he did, to be his signature to the will. If he did so intend, it will be taken as his signature; if he did not, that is, if he intended to take some further action in signing the will, what he did will not be taken as his signature.

A number of French decisions on this question are referred to in Bradford's Succession, 124 La. 44, 49 So. 972, 18 Ann. Cas. 766.

b. Omission of letter.

Where the testator intended to sign his will, the omission of the letter "n" in the signature of the testator's first name, "Emanuel," on one of the sheets of his will, does not affect its validity. Boone v. Boone, — Ark. —, 169 S. W. 779.

Nor does the omission of the letter "i" in the surname, so that it is written "A. J. Whpps," instead of "A. J. Whipps," amount to a failure to subscribe the will. Word v. Whipps, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 403, 28 S. W. 151.

The signature of a testator, J. W. Bradford, as "J. W. Bradfor," is a sufficient signature. Bradford's Succession, 124 La. 44, 49 So. 972, 18 Ann. Cas. 766 (holographic will). It is stated by the court that, the name being phonetically spelled and approximately correct, there is no doubt as to the sufficiency of the signature.

The will of a testatrix named "Dougherty," signed "Doherty," was sustained in Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. 218, but apparently no objection was made on the difference in spelling. L.R.A.1915D.

c. Initials.

A signature made by the testatrix writing her initials only was sustained in Savory's Goods, 15 Jur. 1042.

Alterations signed by initials only were held validly executed under a statute requiring alterations to be executed in like manner as is required for the execution of the will. Blewitt's Goods, L. R. 5 Prob. Div. 116, 49 L. J. Prob. N. S. 31, 42 L. T. N. S. 329, 28 Week. Rep. 520, 44 J. P. 768.

Both in Savory's Goods and Blewitt's Goods there were witnesses, but no point is made of this fact.

In Emerson's Goods, Ir. L. R. 9 Eq. 443, the affixing in the presence of the subscribing witnesses to a will written entirely by the testator, of a seal marked with his initial, and placing his finger on such impression and stating that it was his last will and that "this is my hand and seal," were held a sufficient signing of the will.

See also PILCHER v. PILCHER, where there were no witnesses.

A will has been admitted to probate where it was signed so that the initials of the Christian name and surname were plainly written in ink and the remaining letters of the full name could be seen somewhat indistinctly impressed upon the paper by the pen without any ink marks whatever. Upon examining with a magnifying glass, the full name could be distinctly seen, the initials being in ink and the remaining letters being impressed upon the paper by the pen without ink. Re Jakob, 21 W. N. C. 510.

d. First name.

A holographic will signed by the testatrix by her first name is sufficiently signed where such signing was intended as a complete execution of the instrument. Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. 220, 6 L.R.A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 18 Atl. 1021.

e. Assumed name.

The use in the execution and signing of a nuncupative testament by public act, of a name adopted by the testator for political she had already partly written in ink. Mr. Pilcher then said to his wife, 'I am going to make my will,' and asked her for a piece of paper. She, too, tried to dissuade him, but he reached over and took from Mrs. Pilcher her pencil, her uncompleted letter, and the book or magazine upon which she was writing, and, resting the book or magazine against his knee, wrote with the pencil upon the back of the sheet on which Mrs. Pilcher had already written part of her letter in ink, the following words:

"I give to my wife, Alice McCabe Pilcher, all of my property, real and personal. E. M. P."

"He then tore off that part of the paper on which these words were written and, holding it up, said, 'Girls, this is my will.

I have left Allie everything I have.' Mrs. Woods commented on the brevity of the document, and he replied, 'The shorter, the better.' Mrs. Woods then commented on the use of his initials, and he replied: 'Why, that is as good a will as any man can make; that will hold in any court, almost a mark will go, Belle.' He then said to Mrs. Woods: 'I want you to preserve this. That is my will. I have left everything to Alice. I want you to see that she takes care of it.' Mrs. Pilcher then placed the paper in a book or magazine in which she was pressing some violets, and Mrs. Woods did not see it again until it was found in Mr. Pilcher's bag in February, 1914, although Mr. Pilcher within the next day or two asked her where the paper was.

reasons instead of his true name, is a sufficient signing. Ripoll v. Morina, 12 Rob. (La.) 552 (testator's name was Sebastian Ripoll; assumed name Francisco Ballesta).

In Reeding's Goods, 14 Jur. 1052, 2 Rob. Eccl. Rep. 339, a will drawn up for a woman when she was passing by the name of Higgins, describing her as "C. Higgins," and being executed by signing it "C. Higgins," was admitted to probate in this form, although after signing, and before the death of the testatrix, who had in the meantime without any assigned reason dropped the name of Higgins and assumed that of Redding, she requested the person who drew the will for her to alter it, and accordingly the name Higgins was turned into Redding in the body of the will and the signature was erased with a knife, and the testatrix then signed the will "C. Redding" the court stating that the testatrix had no intention of revoking her will, and, her second signature not being attested, probate must pass as originally executed.

f. Use of name of first husband by married woman.

The will of a married woman signed by her with the surname of her first husband, instead of the name of the husband she had at the date of the will, is valid. Glover's Goods, 11 Jur. 1022, 5 Notes of Cases, 553.

As to a mark made by a married woman to her maiden name, see infra, I. h.

g. Use of two names.

Upon the construction of the will of a testator of German nationality, who had changed his name when he came to America, it was urged that a devise in remainder to "the lawful heirs of Charles F. Tyler in the United States of America, or the lawful heirs of Carl F. Theilig, formerly of Noulitz, Saxon Altenburg," being in the alternative, was void. Tyler v. Theilig, 124 Ga. 204, 52 S. E. 606. In holding that these names were intended for the same person and used for purposes of identification merely, the court holds the devise in remainder good, and L.R.A.1915D.

adds that this idea is further borne out by the fact that the testator signed the will by using both names. It does not appear in the body of the opinion that any question was raised as to the signature rendering the will invalid, but in the syllabus, which was prepared by the court, it is stated that a signature by using both names does not render the devise in remainder void.

h. Use of mark to name other than true one.

The general question as to signing by mark is not within the scope of the note.

In case of the use of a mark by the testator, it is not necessary that the mark be made to the correct name of the testator.

A mark made by a testator named Shadrach J. Bailey, to the name "John S. Bailey," is sufficient. Bailey v. Bailey, 35 Ala. 687.

A mark made to the name "John Douse" by Thomas Douse is good. Douse's Goods, 31 L. J. Prob. N. S. 172, 2 Swabey & T. 593, 8 Jur. N. S. 723, 6 L. T. N. S. 789.

A mark made to the name "James Rook, testator," by Samuel Rook, is sufficient. Rook v. Wilson, 142 Ind. 24, 41 N. E. 311.

A mark of a married woman to her maiden name written for her by another is a valid signing. Clarke's Goods, 1 Swabey & T. 22, 27 L. J. Prob. N. S. 18, 4 Jur. N. S. 24, 6 Week. Rep. 307.

A mark of David Long to the name "Jacob Long" does not invalidate the mark. Long v. Zook, 13 Pa. 400.

It is the theory of Long v. Zook, that the mark alone is sufficient and the name can be rejected. Nothing is said as to the effect of using the wrong name except that such mistake cannot vitiate what would constitute a perfect signature. This is also the theory underlying at least some of the other cases cited above holding a mark to a wrong name a sufficient signing. On the general question of signing by mark, see note to Re Guilfoyle, 22 L.R.A. 370. As to whether ability to write invalidates a signature by mark or by aid of other person guiding the pen, see note to Re Pope, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1193.

"On Christmas day, 1912, a friend came to see Mr. Pilcher while he was taking his bath, and, in hurriedly removing the basin, Mrs. Pilcher knocked off the table the magazine containing this paper, and the paper fell into the water. Mr. Pilcher made an effort to rescue it, but Mrs. Pilcher picked it up, and, in the effort to dry it, the writing was blurred. Mrs. Pilcher does not remember what became of the paper after that, although she does remember looking for it. She says that she did not see it again until it was found fourteen months afterwards under the circumstances to be hereinafter narrated.

"After this paper fell into the water, although it does not appear exactly when, at the request of Mr. Pilcher, Mrs. Pilcher brought to his bedside a package of his private papers, which he had expressed the wish to have preserved, and left them with him, and it was in that package that the will was subsequently found.

"On December 26, 1912, Mr. Pilcher wrote in pencil a formal holograph will, leaving all of his property to his wife, and appointing her as executrix thereof, but affixed to this paper neither his name nor initials. On cross-examination, Mrs. Pilcher stated that she knew why he wrote this paper, and that she did not think that he considered it as a will, but upon objection of counsel for contestant, she was not permitted to testify as to why it was written. This paper of December 26th was laid aside by Mrs. Pilcher, and was found after Mr. Pilcher's death in the drawer of the dresser in her room.

"Mr. Pilcher died on January 16, 1913, and Judge Daniel Grinnan, who was then a practising attorney and had for many years been a warm personal friend of Mr. Pilcher, took charge of, and undertook for Mrs. Pilcher, the management of his affairs and estate, as she, because of her mental distress and agitation, was in no condition to do so. The paper dated December 26, 1912, above referred to, was found in Mrs. Pilcher's dresser and turned over to Judge Grinnan. The fact that this paper was

t. Stamp.

Codicils executed by stamping the name of the testator are valid where deceased intended the name so stamped to stand for and represent his signature. Jenkyns v. Gaisford, 9 Jur. N. S. 630, 3 Swabey & T. 93, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 122, 8 L. T. N. S. 517, 11 Week. Rep. 854. The stamp was affixed by another, as appears from the statement of facts shown in 9 Jur. N. S. 311, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 71, 11 Week. Rep. 501, and this is treated as a signing by another in testator's presence and by his direction. The general question as to the effect of another signing for testator is not discussed in this note.

j. Sealing as signing.

Sealing was held to be a signing in Warneford v. Warneford, 2 Strange, 764, but this was doubted in Smith v. Evans, 1 Wils. K. B. 313.

See Emerson's Goods, Ir. L. R. 9 Eq. 443, supra.

II. Hand guided by another.

A signature made by the hand of an illiterate testator incapable of making his own signature, while guided by another at testator's request, is the testator's signature, where he desired and intended to execute the will. Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 466, approved in Sheehan v. Kearney, 82 Miss. 688, 35 L.R.A. 102, 21 So. 41. It is stated that a signature made in this manner is good whether the incapacity to write arises from ignorance, or is caused by accident or disease.

In accordance with the above statement, it is held that the fact that the testator is so assisted in making his signature because of physical weakness makes it none the less his L.R.A.1915D.

individual conscious and voluntary act. Vines v. Clingfoot, 21 Ark. 309 (with testator's consent); Re Allen, 25 Minn. 39 (no request appears); Re Miller, 37 Mont. 545, 97 Pac. 935 (testator requested assistance); Fritz v. Turner, 46 N. J. Eq. 515, 22 Atl. 125 (no request for assistance appears), reversed without opinion, as appears in 49 N. J. Eq. 343, 25 Atl. 963, on the ground that a full and proper hearing had not been given in the lower courts; Re Knight, 87 Misc. 577, 150 N. Y. Supp. 137; Vandruft v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. 232; Cozzens's Will, 61 Pa. 196 (assisted in making mark); Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. 217 (assisted in making mark); Shotwell's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 444 (knowingly accepted aid); Perchment v. Dietrich, 1 Am. L. Reg. 125, cited in 49 Century Dig. col. 335; Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. 27 R. I. 295, 61 Atl. 757 (no request appears); Trezevant v. Rains, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 567 (requested assistance); McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682 (stating that no express request is necessary; that a request may be inferred from circumstances). The signature of a testator while being assisted by another was sustained in Re Van Houten, 15 Misc. 196, 37 N. Y. Supp. 39; but there seems to have been no contest over the signature by the testator, the objection being upon another ground.

See VanHanswyck v. Wiese, 44 Barb. 494, supra.

Prickett's Estate, 1 Phila. 306, was decided under a peculiar statute providing that every will shall be in writing, and, unless the person making the same shall be prevented by the extremity of his sickness, shall be signed by the testator at the end thereof, or by some person in his presence and by his express direction. There was held to be no valid execution under such a not signed escaped the attention of all of the family, and even of Judge Grinnan, who, on January 23, 1913, accompanied Mrs. Pilcher and Mrs. Woods to the chancery court of the city of Richmond for the purpose of having said paper admitted to probate as Mr. Pilcher's will. Upon reaching the court the paper was shown to the presiding judge, who called Judge Grinnan's attention to the absence of any signature. Thereupon Judge Grinnan abandoned the idea of offering the paper for probate and instead immediately moved on behalf of Mrs. Pilcher for her qualification as administratrix, and she at once qualified as such, although on account of a mistake in her name in the bond it was necessary for her to sign another bond on January 24th. In qualifying as administratrix, the clerk administered to her the formal oath to the effect that as far as she knew or believed Mr. Pilcher left no will. A few days later Mrs. Pilcher returned with her sister to her old home in Wheeling, West Virginia.

"Several weeks thereafter, in the latter part of February, 1913, Mrs. Pilcher was reminded by her sister, Mrs. Woods, of the will executed by Mr. Pilcher on December 17 or 18, 1912, and she at once wrote to Judge Grinnan telling him that such a paper had been drawn by Mr. Pilcher, and Judge Grinnan replied urging her to make a search for it, and to let him know if she found it.

"At that time her mother was very ill, requiring the constant attention of Mrs. Pilcher, her sister, and two trained nurses, and this condition remained unaltered until her mother died in October, 1918. In accordance, however, with Judge Grinnan's advice, Mrs. Pilcher and her sister then made such search for the will as their mother's condition permitted, but without success.

"After her mother's death in October, 1913, it was determined to break up the family home in Wheeling, and in February, 1914, while preparing to move, Mrs. Pilcher and Mrs. Woods came across a satchel of Mr. Pilcher's, which Mrs. Pilcher had carried from Richmond after his death, and in which they found a bundle of his pri-statute where the testator was able to indicate a desire to sign his will, and in accordance with this indication another guided his hand while he made his mark. Compare with Cozzens's Will, 61 Pa. 196, and Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. 217.

It has been held that an express request for assistance need not be made. Vandruff v. Rinehart, 29 Pa. 232.

Such a request may be inferred from the circumstances of the case. McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682; Re Knight, 87 Misc. 577, 150 N. Y. Supp. 137.

If testator knowingly accepts the aid, it is sufficient. Shotwell's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 444.

It is stated in Fritz v. Turner, 46 N. J. Eq. 515, 22 Atl. 125, that it is not necessary to reconcile contradictory testimony upon the subject of the testator's ability to write, nor to determine precisely how far the one assisting controlled the hand of the testator; the important question is whether the testator had the purpose to write his name or make his mark upon the will as his signature to it, and whether in fact he did make such a physical effort to sign as resulted in a mark upon the paper by which the paper could be identified. The statute of this state as interpreted by the courts requires that the testator himself must sign his will, and he cannot direct or authorize another to sign it for him.

It is stated by the court in Fritz v. Turner that the statute could not have intended that the testator's signature must be his unaided act.

In Re Kearney, 69 App. Div. 481, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1045, it is stated that the extent of the aid, so long as it is assistance, does not make the signature invalid, if the signing is in any degree an act of the testator acquiesced in and adopted by him. The L.R.A.1915D.

question whether the signature is the act of the testator does not turn upon the extent of the aid, but whether the aid was assistance or control. If, against the wish of the alleged testator at the time, or without his consciousness as to the purpose, another writes the name with a pen which is merely in physical contact with the hand of the alleged testator, then the signature is not recognized as made by the testator. In this case an expert in handwriting who had compared the signature of the will with two normal signatures of the testator testified that he failed to see a particle of the testator's handwriting in the signature, and that in his opinion the testator had no superintendence, either mental or physical, of the act, although he may have touched the pen; it is stated by the court that this testimony should not prevail against the positive testimony of intelligent and comparatively disinterested witnesses, that not only did the testator direct the terms of his will, but that it was read over to him, that he attempted to sign it unassisted, that only when he failed did he accept an offer of assistance, that he took part in the signing of the will, and that he published it. This statement of the law was approved in Re Baumann, 85 Misc. 656, 148 N. Y. Supp. 1049.

It is sometimes stated that where the hand of the testator is guided by another at testator's request, this amounts at least to an express direction to the other to sign his name. Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 466; Trezevant v. Rains, — Tex. —, 19 S. W. 567; Den ex dem. Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. C. C. 262, Fed. Cas. No. 13,412.

The question, however, of signature by another, is not considered in this note.

As to signature made by hand of unconscious person, see note to Barkey v. Barkey, L.R.A. 1915B, 678. W. A. E.

vate papers which he valued very highly, the same bundle which Mrs. Pilcher had handed to him at his request some time after Christmas day, 1912. In sorting over this bundle of papers they found an envelop upon which was written in the handwriting of Mr. Pilcher, but unsigned, this indorsement, 'My will, keep.' The envelop contained the paper which had been written by Mr. Pilcher on December 17 and 18, 1912, together with memoranda of certain personal directions to Mrs. Pilcher. At that time Mrs. Pilcher had no reason to think that there would be any contest over the validity of the paper as Mr. Pilcher's will, she attached no special value to the envelop and therefore did not preserve it.

"Mrs. Pilcher at once showed the will to her father's attorney in Wheeling, who advised her to take it in person to Richmond. She was then quite sick and unable to leave home, but as soon as her physician would allow her to travel, which was in the early spring, she brought the will to Richmond, where it was offered for probate on April 10, 1914.

"After notice to the Rev. John M. Pilcher, the father, sole heir and next of kin of E. M. Pilcher, deceased, as provided by law, and upon an issue of devisavit vel non, both parties waiving a jury, the court heard the evidence, and admitted the said paper to probate as the will of E. M. Pilcher by order entered on the 9th day of June, 1914, from which order this appeal has been taken."

Mr. George Bryan, for plaintiff in error:

The alleged will was not signed, as required by § 2514 of the Code, with the name of the decedent, and should have been rejected.

McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 476; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 551; Re Rand, 61 Cal. 468, 44 Am. Rep. 555; Armant's Succession, 43 La. Ann. 314, 26 Am. St. Rep. 183, 9 So. 50; Wade v. State, 22 Tex. App. 256, 2 S. W. 594; Mills v. Howland, 2 N. D. 30, 49 N. W. 413; Vines v. Clingfost, 21 Ark. 309; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Seventh Street Colored M. E. Church v. Campbell, 48 La. Ann. 1543, 21 So. 184; Davis v. Sanders, 40 S. C. 507, 19 S. E. 138; Plate's Estate, 148 Pa. 55, 33 Am. St. Rep. 805, 23 Atl. 1038; Smith v. Smith, 112 Va. 208, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018, 70 S. E. 491; Murguiondo v. Nowland, 115 Va. 160, 78 S. E. 600; Waller v. Waller, 1 Gratt. 465, 42 Am. Dec. 564; Warwick v. Warwick, 86 Va. 596, 6 L.R.A. 775, 10 S. E. 843; Dinning v. Dinning, 102 Va. 467, 46 S. E. 473; Wall v. Wall, 123 Pa. 545, 10 Am. St. Rep. 549, 16 Atl. 598; Slingluff v. Gainer, 49 W. Va. L.R.A.1915D.

7, 37 S. E. 771; Bascom v. Toner, 5 Ind. App. 220, 31 N. E. 856; Loser v. Plainfield Sav. Bank, 149 Iowa, 672, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1112, 128 N. W. 1101; Koth v. Pallachucola Club, 79 S. C. 514, 61 S. E. 77; State, Elbertson, Prosecutrix, v. Richards, 42 N. J. L. 69; Laflin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler, 146 Pa. 434, 14 L.R.A. 690, 23 Atl. 215; Moon v. Stone, 19 Gratt. 130; Jarman, Wills, p. 156; Brett v. Donaghe, 101 Va. 788, 45 S. E. 324; Re Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011; Maris v. Adams, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 166 S. W. 485.

The lower court erred in admitting as competent, over the objections based upon the provisions of § 3346-a of the Code, certain testimony of the widow of decedent.

Wilkes v. Wilkes, 115 Va. 886, 80 S. E. 745; Reeves v. Herr, 59 Ill. 81.

The alleged will was not the last will and testament of Edwin M. Pilcher, deceased.

The burden of proving her allegation was upon proponent, which she failed to sustain.

Bibb v. American Coal & I. Co. 109 Va. 264, 64 S. E. 32; Porterfield v. Com. 91 Va. 801, 22 S. E. 352; Moore v. West Virginia Heat & L. Co. 65 W. Va. 558, 64 S. E. 721; 2 Enc. Ev. 785.

Mr. John B. Minor, for defendant in error:

The use of his initials by the testator, animo signandi, is a signing within the meaning of the statute of wills.

McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 476; Blewitt's Goods, L. R. 5 Prob. Div. 116, 49 L. J. Prob. N. S. 31, 42 L. T. N. S. 329, 28 Week. Rep. 520, 44 J. B. 768; Margary v. Robinson, L. R. 12 Prob. Div. 8, 56 L. J. Prob. N. S. 42, 57 L. T. N. S. 281, 35 Week. Rep. 350, 51 J. P. 407; 2 Minor, Real Pron. § 1252; Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. (Va.) 36; Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh, 14; Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. 1, 52 Am. Dec. 97; Page, Wills, § 172; 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th Am. ed. 106-108; Schouler, Wills, 3d. § 303; 1 Redfield, Wills, 3d ed. 203-205; Rood, Wills, § 254; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. 220, 6 L.R.A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 18 Atl. 1021; Plate's Estate, 148 Pa. 55, 33 Am. St. Rep. 805, 23 Atl. 1038; Bradford's Succession, 18 Ann. Cas. 766, and note, 124 La. 44, 49 So. 972; Adams v. Chaplin, 1 Hill, Eq. 265; Smith v. Howell, 11 N. J. Eq. 349; Waller v. Waller, 1 Gratt. 454, 42 Am. Dec. 564; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Denio, 478; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446, 454, 14 L. ed. 493, 496; Barry v. Coombe, 1 Pet. 640, 7 L. ed. 295.

The placing of his initials by the testator at the end of the will, animo signandi, makes it manifest that the initials were intended as a signature, within the meaning of the statute.

Lemayne v. Stanley, 3 Lev. 1; Waller v. Waller, 1 Gratt. 454, 42 Am. Dec. 564; 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 1012; Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. 664, 70 Am. Dec. 438; Roy v. Roy, 16 Gratt. 418, 84 Am. Dec. 696; McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 476; Dinning v. Dinning, 102 Va. 467, 46 S. E. 473.

Contestant could not have been prejudiced by the ruling admitting testimony of decedent's widow.

New York, P. & N. M. R. Co. v. Wilson, 109 Va. 754, 64 S. E. 1060; Lynchburg Mill Co. v. National Exch. Bank, 109 Va. 639, 64 S. E. 980; Barnes v. Crockett, 111 Va. 240, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 464, 68 S. E. 983.

The alleged will was the last will and testament of Edwin M. Pilcher, deceased. McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 480.

Whittle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Stripped of immaterialities, the dominant question presented by this record for our decision is the validity of a holograph will, at the end of which the writer, to authenticate the paper, has attached his initials by way of signature, instead of his full name. At the outset it is conceded that the precise question is of first impression in this jurisdiction, though affirmative precedent for the proposition is not lacking elsewhere. The circumstance is stressed by counsel for plaintiff in error that in McBride v. McBride, 26 Gratt. 476, Judge Staples, who delivered the opinion of the court, expressed doubt whether signing a holograph will with the initials of the testator's name constituted a sufficient signing. In that case, McBride had caused the draft of a will to be prepared by his attorney, with the terms of which he had expressed his approval, but postponed its execution until he could secure two particular persons to act as subscribing witnesses. A few days later he wrote a letter to his brother in Texas, informing him of his domestic troubles, and assigning reasons for wishing to disinherit a certain child. After directing his brother to burn the letter, he concluded as follows: "I don't know where to direct this letter, and don't like much to send it on uncertainties, and will not sign it. You know who it is from if you get ——" and signed the letter, "J." an initial of his Christian name. Two months after reading the draft of the proposed will, McBride was accidentally killed, not having executed the paper. The court held that the letter was not a testamentary paper, either alone or as connected with the draft of the will.

It is obvious that no other conclusion could have been reached on those facts. L.R.A.1915D.

The proposed will was never signed, and the fact that McBride did not intend the initial "J." as a signing of the letter conclusively appears on its face. He directed his brother to burn the letter, and expressly declared that he would not sign it, and did not wish to be identified with the paper in any way. The learned judge, in discussing the question of signing by "initials," at page 487 of 26 Gratt., observes: "In determining whether this letter constitutes a valid testamentary act, there is one other view which ought not to be omitted. It has been held in England that a will is valid if signed with the initials of the testator's name, or even his mark without any signature. It must be borne in mind, however, that under the English statute every will, even though written wholly by the testator, must be attested by witnesses. When, therefore, in England, an initial is used only, the attestation of the witnesses very clearly indicates that the testator designed that this form of signature should be a signing. Under our statute, an autograph will is valid without witnesses. Whether we can recognize an initial as sufficient, to the same extent as the English courts, may not be so clear. Upon that question we express no opinion. Its decision is not necessary for any of the purposes of this case."

The dictum of a lawyer of Judge Staples' acknowledged ability and learning is entitled to, and certainly would receive from this court, most respectful consideration. But Judge Staples not only expressed no opinion on the question, but explicitly declined to do so on the ground that it was not necessary for any of the purposes of that case. He does, however, refer to the fact that it is held in England "that a will is valid if signed with the initials of a testator's name, or even his mark without any signature." He also calls attention to the fact that the English statute requires attesting witnesses to holograph wills as well as others, and makes the suggestion that it may be the attestation of the subscribing witnesses that gives assurance that the use of initials was designed as a signature. But the English cases holding the initials of the testator to be a sufficient signature are not confined to instances where the names of attesting witnesses are written in full. The cases go further and hold that the signature of the testator by initials is sufficient when the attesting witnesses also sign by initials.

Thus, in Blewitt's Goods (1880) L. R. 5 Prob. Div. p. 116, the court said: "The only question then, is whether the signature subscription by initials only are sufficient. A mark is sufficient though the testator can write. Baker v. Denning, 8 Ad. &

El. 94, 3 Nev. & P. 228, 1 W. W. & H. 148, 7 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 137, 2 Jur. 775. Initials, if intended to represent the name, must be equally good. The language of the lord chancellor in Hindmarsh v. Charlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160, at page 167, seems equally applicable to the testator's signature as to the witnesses' subscription: 'I will lay down this as to my notion of the law, that to make a valid subscription of a witness there must either be the name or some mark which is intended to represent the name;' and Lord Chelmsford says: 'The subscription must mean such a signature as is descriptive of the witness, whether by a mark or by initials, or by writing the name in full.'

So, in Margary v. Robinson (1886) L. R. 12 Prob. Div. p. 8, 56 L. J. Prob. N. S. 42, 57 L. T. N. S. 287, 35 Week. Rep. 350, 51 J. P. 407, where the signature of the testator was by mark and that of the attesting witnesses by initials, it was held that the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses were sufficient.

Having noticed what is required by the English statute of wills, and the construction placed upon it by the courts of that country, let us turn now to our own statute, the correct interpretation of which, at last, must control the case in judgment.

Virginia Code 1904, § 2514, reads as follows: "No will shall be valid unless it be in writing and signed by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, in such manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended as a signature; and moreover, unless it be wholly written by the testator, the signature shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two competent witnesses, present at the same time; and such witnesses shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary."

It will be observed that the statute makes no distinction in the character of the signature, or what constitutes a sufficient signature, between holograph and attested wills. It gives precisely the same force and effect to the former that it accords to the latter. By force of the statute one is made the equivalent of the other, though the manner of proving the two kinds of instruments is different; nevertheless, each possesses the same authenticity.

Now, all the authorities, English and American (including the quære in McBride v. McBride), agree that if this will had been attested, it would have been well signed under the English statute. Therefore, being holograph, it must follow that it is well signed under the Virginia statute, L.R.A.1915D.

since that statute does not require attestation in such case.

Nor does the Virginia statute define what shall constitute a "signature," but only prescribes that the will shall be signed "in such manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended as a signature."

Webster's New International Dictionary defines "signature" to be: "A sign, stamp, or mark impressed, as by a seal. . . ." Also: "The name of any person written in his own hand, to signify that the writing which precedes accords with his wishes or intentions; a sign manual; an autograph."

The Standard Dictionary defines it to be: "The name of a person, or something representing his name, written, stamped, or inscribed by himself, or by deputy. . . ."

No dictionary, so far as we are advised, restricts the meaning of "signature" to a written name; therefore, according to these definitions, what constitutes a signature must largely depend upon the circumstances of each particular case, though in all cases the intent is a vital factor. Whatever symbol is employed, it must appear that it "is intended as a signature."

Although, as remarked, there is no decision of this court directly in point, authority in this country is abundant for the proposition that the use of his initials by a testator animo signandi is a sufficient signing of his name.

The discussion of the subject in Knox's Estate (1890) 131 Pa. 220, 6 L.R.A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 18 Atl. 1021, is instructive. In that case a letter testamentary in character, in the handwriting of the deceased and signed by her with her Christian name only, was held to be a valid will. And the court was of opinion that a will signed by the testator with his initials made a stronger case for upholding the instrument. It quotes with approval from Browne on the Statute of Frauds, § 362, as follows: "In cases where the initials only of the party are signed, it is quite clear that, with the aid of parol evidence which is admitted to apply to them, the signature is to be held valid."

In 1 Jarman on Wills, 6th Am. ed. 106-108, it is said: "It has been decided that a mark is sufficient, . . . notwithstanding the testator is able to write, and though his name does not appear on the face of the will. A mark being sufficient, of course, the initials of the testator's name would also suffice."

The leading text writers speak with one voice on the subject. Jarman on Wills, supra; Page on Wills, § 172; Schouler on Wills, 3d ed. § 303; 1 Redfield on Wills, 3d ed. pp. 203, 205; Rood on Wills, §§ 254, 255.

That testator's signature by a mark is sufficient is well settled by the Virginia authorities. Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. (Va.) 36; Clarke v. Dunnivant, 10 Leigh, 14; Roeser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. 1, 52 Am. Dec. 97; 3 Lomax's Dig. 2d ed. pp. 38, 70; 2 Minor, Real Prop. § 1252; Long's Notes on Law of Wills (1910), p. 17.

Adverting for a moment to the facts: We have before us a paper which, though exceedingly brief, is distinctly testamentary in character and terms, and by which the disposition of the property, in the circumstances, was a natural one. Testator was a lawyer in full possession of his mental faculties, and there is no question that the paper was wholly written by him, and signed with his initials at the appropriate place for his signature, the end of the instrument. Immediately before the paper was written, testator said to his wife and her sister, Mrs. Woods: "I am going to make my will," and after it was written, holding the paper up, he said: "Girls, this is my will. I have left Allie everything I have." In response to Mrs. Woods's comment on the brevity of the document, he remarked, "The shorter the better." When she called attention to the use of his initials, he replied: "Why, that is as good a will as any man can make; that will hold in any court, almost a mark will go, Belle." He then said to Mrs. Woods: "I want you to preserve this. That is my will. I have left everything to Alice. I want you to see that she takes care of it." This evidence, and it is uncontradicted, plainly establishes testamentary intent and that the initials were used animo signandi.

The decisions of this court hold that the position of the signature at the end of the will furnishes sufficient internal evidence of finality or completion of intent. Ramsey v. Ramsey, 13 Gratt. 664, 70 Am. Dec. 438; Roy v. Roy, 16 Gratt. 418, 419, 84 Am. Dec. 696; McBride v. McBride, 28 Gratt. 476, 487; Dinning v. Dinning, 102 Va. 467, 469, 470, 46 S. E. 473.

We entertain no doubt, either from the standpoint of reason or authority, that the writing in controversy was executed in substantial compliance with the statute, and, as the chancery court held, is the true last will and testament of Edwin Pilcher, deceased.

There are two other subordinate assignments of error which may be briefly noticed.

(1) The first involves the ruling of the trial court on the admissibility of certain testimony of Mrs. Pilcher, under § 3348a, cl. (3), of the Code. The observations on that point by his Honor, Judge Beverley T. Crump, who presided at the trial below, show a correct conception of the restrictive features of the statute. He sedulously safe-L.R.A.1915D.

guarded the admission of such communications between husband and wife as the statute was intended to protect, and confined the examination of the wife strictly to matters with respect to which she was clearly a competent witness. The communications to the admission of which exception was taken were made in the presence of a third person, and in no just sense were either confidential or privileged.

(2) We attach no significance to the circumstance that some ten days after the first will was executed Mr. Pilcher prepared the draft of a more formal will. Admittedly he did not sign it, and the paper indicates no change of purpose on his part, since by the last paper, as by the first, he leaves all his property to his wife. Besides, Mrs. Pilcher, in response to the question on cross-examination, ". . . Can you tell the court what induced Mr. Pilcher to write the paper of December 26th, if he considered the first paper his will?" answered: "I do not think he considered this last paper he wrote as a will. He told me—" Mr. Bryan (the propounder of the question): "I object." Witness: "I do know what induced him to do it." But, at that point, an objection was again interposed and sustained by the court.

It thus appears that the information was at hand, but was excluded on technical grounds. Whatever may have been the intention of the testator, however, in writing the second paper, it was never signed by him and could not have had the effect of revoking his will.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the sentence of the Chancery court is plainly right and must be affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

RUFUS PACKWOOD and Wife, Respts.,
v.
MENDOTA COAL & COKE COMPANY et al, Appts.,

(— Wash. —, 146 Pac. 163.)

Water — pollution of stream — liability.

The use by an upper riparian owner of water from the stream to wash for the market coal taken from his mine, which is then turned back into the stream and pollutes it to such an extent as to render it unfit to water stock on a lower riparian farm, gives the owner of the latter a right of action.

Note. — Pollution of stream by mining operations.

This note is supplementary to notes to Drake v. Lady Ensley Coal, Iron & R. Co. 24 L.R.A. 64; Straight v. Hover, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 276; and Arminius Chemical Co. v. Landrum, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 272.

(February 5, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendants from orders of the Superior Court for Lewis County denying motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the pollution of a certain stream running through plaintiffs' farm, by defendants' wrongful acts. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dysart & Ellsbury and C. D. Cunningham, for appellants.

Before a lower proprietor can recover damages resulting from the use of a stream by an upper proprietor, the former must establish that the use to which the stream is put by the latter is an unreasonable use, and that because of such unreasonable use on the part of the upper proprietor the lower owner has suffered appreciable injury.

McEvoy v. Taylor, 56 Wash. 357, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 222, 105 Pac. 851; Parsons v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. — Ala. —, 64 So. 591.

No person is entitled to recover from another for damages which have been occasioned by his own act or his own neglect.

Bowman v. Humphrey, 132 Iowa, 234, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 109 N. W. 714, 1 Ann. Cas. 131.

PACKWOOD v. MENDOTA COAL & COKE CO. and the other recent cases seem to be in accord with the law on this subject as stated in the earlier notes. Thus, it has been held that "the proprietor of a mining operation has no right to discharge culm and other refuse of the mine into a stream, or to leave it where it will be carried, by ordinary floods, onto the land of other persons. If he does so dispose of it, he renders himself liable for any damages resulting therefrom to such owner. And where the material is unlawfully put into the stream, the fact that an extraordinary flood was a contributing cause in carrying it onto the plaintiff's land does not relieve the tortfeasor from responsibility for his wrongful act." Eckman v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co. 50 Pa. Super. Ct. 427.

And "one operating a coal mine on his own land is liable in damages where it appears that the mine water is diverted from its natural outlet and by artificial means raised to the surface and discharged into a stream of pure water which, by reason of its higher elevation, does not form the natural drainage of the mine." McCune v. Pittsburgh & B. Coal Co. 238 Pa. 83, 85 Atl. 1102.

Nor does a statute declaring all streams to be public, and giving the right to use L.R.A.1915D.

It is not under all circumstances an unreasonable or unlawful use of a stream to throw or discharge into it waste or impure matter, and whether, in any given case, such use would be reasonable or not, is a question for the jury.

Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L.R.A. 568, 41 Am. St. Rep. 454, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453.

An upper proprietor has a right to use the water of a stream in a reasonable manner.

People v. Hulbert, 131 Mich. 156, 64 L.R.A. 265, 100 Am. St. Rep. 588, 91 N. W. 211; Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. p. 427; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 219, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Dumont v. Kellogg, 29 Mich. 420, 18 Am. Rep. 102; 2 Farnham, Waters, p. 1689.

Messrs. Forney & Ponder, for respondents:

If the offensive matter, in the inevitable course of things, must and does reach and pollute the stream, so as to materially impair its value, the cause of action is complete.

1 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 428; Trevett v. Prison Asso. 98 Va. 332, 50 L.R.A. 564, 81 Am. St. Rep. 727, 36 S. E. 373; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L.R.A. 714, 25 N. E. 246; Columbus & H. Coal & I. Co. v. Tucker, 48 Ohio St. 41, 12 L.R.A. 577, 29 Am. St. Rep. 528, 26 N. E. 630; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 733, 734; them for mining purposes, give to one so using a stream the right to send his waste material or débris down the stream, to the destruction or substantial injury of the riparian rights of users of water below for irrigation purposes. Arizona Copper Co. v. Gillespie, 230 U. S. 46, 57 L. ed. 1384, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1104, affirming 12 Ariz. 190, 100 Pac. 465, which is cited in note in 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 278.

And under a statute making it unlawful to throw into, or allow to enter, any stream in the state, any matter deleterious to the propagation of fish, an operator of a coal mine has no right to drain sulphur or mine water, deleterious to the propagation of fish, from his mine into a stream, even though such water is a product of nature, and the operator is under the legal duty to drain it from the mine, and the stream in question is the natural receptacle of such drainage, and there is no known reasonable or practical way to eliminate the sulphur and other objectionable ingredients in such water before discharging it from the mine and letting it enter the stream. State v. Southern Coal & Transp. Co. 71 W. Va. 470, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 401, 76 S. E. 970.

But a riparian owner who, in order to gain the benefit of water from a stream, turns it out of its course over his land, Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co. 42 S. C. 402, 26 L.R.A. 693, 46 Am. St. Rep. 736, 20 S. E. 280; 29 Cyc. 1183; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 699; Brown & Bros. v. Illius, 27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49; Lowe v. Prospect Hill Cemetery Assn. 58 Neb. 94, 46 L.R.A. 237, 78 N. W. 488; Merrifield v. Lombard, 13 Allen, 16; 90 Am. Dec. 172; Strobel v. Kerr Salt Co. 164 N. Y. 303, 51 L.R.A. 687, 79 Am. St. Rep. 643, 58 N. E. 142, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 38.

The substantial impairment by one of the legal rights of another is unreasonable, and therefore not to be permitted.

Cooley, Torts, 588; Jackman v. Arlington Mills, 137 Mass. 277; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L.R.A. 711, 25 N. E. 246; Tetherington v. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. 232 Ill. 522, 83 N. E. 1048.

One who so uses his property as to directly and substantially injure another is made to respond in damages.

Straight v. Hover, 79 Ohio St. 263, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 276, 87 N. E. 174; Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co. 42 S. C. 402, 26 L.R.A. 693, 46 Am. St. Rep. 736, 20 S. E. 280; Trevett v. Prison Assn. 98 Va. 332, 50 L.R.A. 564, 81 Am. St. Rep. 727, 36 S. E. 373; York v. Davidson, 39 Or. 81, 65 Pac. 819, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 452; Gavigan v. Atlantic Ref. Co. 186 Pa. 604, 40 Atl. 834; Faulkenbury v. Wells, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 621, 68 S. W. 327; Day v. Louisville Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 27, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 167, 53 S. E. 776; Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 65, 33 Atl. 286;

H. B. Bowling Coal Co. v. Ruffner, 117 Tenn. 180, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923, 100 S. W. 116, 10 Ann. Cas. 581; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 733, 734; Columbus & H. Coal & I. Co. v. Tucker, 48 Ohio St. 41, 12 L.R.A. 577, 29 Am. St. Rep. 528, 26 N. E. 630; Brandenburg v. Zeigler, 62 S. C. 18, 55 L.R.A. 414, 89 Am. St. Rep. 887, 39 S. E. 792; Lavner v. Independent Light & Water Co. 74 Wash. 373, 133 Pac. 592; Patrick v. Smith, 75 Wash. 411, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740, 134 Pac. 1076, 6 N. C. C. A. 108.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs seek recovery of damages which they claim resulted from the pollution of a natural stream of water running through their farm, by the unlawful acts of the defendants. Trial before the court and a jury resulted in verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $1,000, from which the defendants have appealed.

Respondents have been for some forty years past the owners of a farm in Lewis county, which in recent years they have developed into a valuable dairy farm through which flows a natural stream of water known as Packwood creek. The water flowing in this stream is by nature pure and fresh, well suited for domestic and farm purposes, and especially for watering stock of all kinds. It has a continuous flow at all seasons of the year, and in its natural state of purity adds materiknowing that it is impregnated with mineral matter from a mine, cannot hold the mine owner liable for the injury caused to his land and vegetation by such mineral matter. Glenn v. Crescent Coal Co. 145 Ky. 137, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197, 140 S. W. 43.

And "a joint action cannot be maintained against several proprietors of coal operations acting independently, who . . . cast culm into a stream, which is washed onto the land of another, but each is liable for the proportion of damages he caused, and that only;" and "the difficulty of ascertaining with mathematical exactness the proportion of damages caused by each tortfeasor—a difficulty caused by himself—is not ground for denying the plaintiff the right to recover a substantial sum; evidence which reasonably tends to show the relative proportion, and is the best evidence of which the case is susceptible, is sufficient to warrant submission of the question to the jury under appropriate instructions." Eckman v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co. supra. As to joint liability in such circumstances, see notes in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 167, and 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102.

An injunction, also, will lie to prevent the further pollution of a stream of pure water at a higher elevation than a coal mine, and not forming the natural drainage thereof, L.R.A.1915D.

by diverting the water in the mine from its natural outlet and by artificial means raising it to the surface and discharging it into the stream, unless it is clearly shown that the natural conditions make it impracticable to discharge the water in any other way, or that the expense of so doing would be so great as substantially to deprive the mine owner of his property. McCune v. Pittsburgh & B. Coal Co. supra.

And a lower riparian owner who has suffered, and will continue to suffer, a special injury not borne by the public, from the pollution of a river by mining operations, is entitled to injunctive relief, notwithstanding the contamination of the waters of the river constitutes a public nuisance affecting a large community of riparian owners and users of the water for purposes of irrigation, for the abatement of which a public prosecution might be maintained. Arizona Copper Co. v. Gillespie, supra.

But injunction will not lie to restrain the casting of mine water into a stream to the injury of lower riparian land, where the land is not injured except when the water is turned out of its course by the complainant, or the channel is permitted by him to fill up so as to cause the water to spread over the adjoining land. Glenn v. Crescent Coal Co. supra. A. C. W.

ally to the value of respondents' farm. Appellant Mendota Coal & Coke Company, hereinafter called the company, has since the year 1910 owned and operated a coal mine near Packwood creek, some 2 miles above respondents' farm. Appellant Johnson has had the active management of the company's mine during the whole of this period. In preparing the coal for market, the company washes it by the use of water taken from Packwood creek, which, after flowing through the washing machinery, flows back into the stream, carrying with it quantities of fine coal, rendering, as the evidence tends to show, the water flowing in the stream through respondents' farm unfit for domestic and farm purposes, and especially unfit for watering stock, which is its principal value to respondents. In the operation of its mine the company maintains some fifty dwelling houses for its employees, from which the sewage is drained to cesspools situated a short distance from the banks of Packwood creek. This is also alleged by respondents in their complaint to contribute to the pollution of the water of the stream flowing through their farm. The company is the owner of the land upon which its mine and washing machine and dwelling houses are situated, and by virtue of the ownership of that land has riparian rights, in the water of Packwood creek equal with the riparian rights of respondents.

Contention is made by counsel for appellants that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment, and that, in any event, the verdict is excessive. After a careful review of all the evidence in the record before us, we have reached the conclusion that neither of these contentions can be sustained. We do not feel called upon to analyze the evidence here. We deem it sufficient to say that we are satisfied that the evidence is ample to sustain the conclusion that respondents were damaged in the sum of $1,000 by the pollution of the waters of the creek from the washing of the coal, though the evidence is not free from conflict upon that question. The evidence tending to show damage from the maintenance of cesspools in connection with the dwelling houses of the employees of the company, it must be conceded, is not at all convincing, even assuming that it is uncontradicted. This, however, would not warrant our interfering with the verdict upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, since the evidence of damage from the washing of the coal is sufficient to sustain the verdict. It may be here remarked that the record, read as a whole, renders it quite apparent that the principal damage claimed by respondents was that resulting from the washing of the coal, especially in that the water of the stream was thereby rendered unfit for stock watering purposes. This, we think, must have been equally apparent to the jury.

Several of the assignments of error made and relied upon by counsel for appellants challenge the ruling of the trial court in giving instructions and refusing to give others requested. Instructions requested by counsel for appellants rest upon the theory of the company's right to the reasonable use of the water of Packwood creek, even if the water should by such use become materially polluted and respondents substantially damaged thereby. The court gave to the jury, among others, the following instructions: "I instruct you that, although you find that the contamination or pollution complained of is not poisonous nor deleterious to stock or to human beings, nevertheless if it is of such nature as to render the water less fit for use for domestic, farm, or dairy purposes, either by man or beast, then in law the said stream has been polluted and contaminated, for which plaintiffs are entitled to recover damages, if they have suffered any damages, and, if you find that defendants have done such acts as to render said stream less fit for such uses, your verdict must be for the plaintiffs in such amount as you shall find that defendants have injured the plaintiffs in that respect."

This instruction is complained of as rendering appellants liable for even the slightest pollution of the water of Packwood creek, and thereby depriving the company of the reasonable use of the water as a riparian owner. It is possible there would be some merit in this contention if this instruction stood alone. It is, however, only a very general statement of the company's liability touching its right to the use of the water. It was followed by an instruction given to the jury by the court, as follows: "It is indeed the right of a riparian owner to have the water of a stream come to him in its natural purity, and this rule is recognized, as well as the right to have it flow to his land in its natural flow in volume, but in reference to this, as well as the air, it is not every interference with the water that imparts impurities that is actionable, but only such as imparts to the water such impurities as substantially impair its value for the ordinary purposes of life, and render it measurably unfit for domestic purposes, and thus impairs the comfortable or beneficial enjoyment of property in the vicinity. So, even though you should find that the water of Packwood creek, as it now flows, is not as pure and wholesome as it was previous to the time the Mendota Coal & Coke Company commenced the operation of its mine at Mendota, yet if, by the operation of that mine, the defendants have not substantially or materially polluted the water of said Packwood creek, then under the law your verdict must be for the defendants."

These instructions, read together, we think, state the correct measure of the limit of the company's riparian right to the use of the water of Packwood creek, in the light of respondents' equal riparian right therein, and in view of the fact that the company's use of the water was concededly not for domestic or farm purposes. Putting aside, for the moment, consideration of the possible pollution of the stream by cesspools maintained by the company, we are constrained to hold that, in view of the fact that the pollution of the water was caused, as the jury evidently found, from the washing of coal by the company, its liability for damages to respondents depends upon the extent of detriment to them from that cause. That is, if the acts of the company resulted in the pollution of the water of the stream flowing through respondents' farm to a substantial degree, and rendered it materially less suitable for domestic and farm purposes, and they thereby suffered substantial damages, appellants became liable therefor, though this might not be the limit of the company's right to the use of the water as riparian owner, were it putting the water to ordinary domestic and farm uses, under the law as announced by us in McEvoy v. Taylor, 56 Wash. 357, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 222, 105 Pac. 851, where we held in effect that the use of the water of a stream by a riparian owner for ordinary farm and domestic purposes, such as allowing his horses, cattle, and fowl free access thereto, was a reasonable use, and did not render him liable in damages to a lower riparian owner entitled to the use of the water for farm and domestic purposes, though such use rendered the water materially less pure, to such lower riparian owner's substantial damage.

The use of the water of a stream for industrial or manufacturing purposes by a riparian owner, by which it is polluted with a foreign substance, we think, is quite another matter, when it comes to testing such owner's right as against a lower riparian owner entitled to the use of the water for farm and domestic purposes. In such cases at least, and possibly some others, we believe the law to be that the right to the reasonable use of water by a riparian owner for manufacturing or industrial purposes, resulting in the pollution of the water with foreign substances, is limited to the extent that such use must not materially pollute the water, to the substantial damage of the L.R.A.1915D.

lower riparian owner. This, we think, is the fair import of these instructions.

In Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459, 482, 67 Am. Dec. 723, in considering the alleged pollution of a stream by a manufacturing plant, Chief Justice Redfield, speaking for the court, said: "The reasonableness of such use must determine the right, and this must depend upon the extent of detriment to the riparian proprietors below. If it essentially impairs the use below, then it is unreasonable and unlawful, unless it is a thing altogether indispensable to any beneficial use at every point of the stream. An extent of deposit which might be of no account in some streams might seriously affect the usefulness of others. So, too, a kind of deposit which would affect one stream seriously would be of little importance in another. There is no doubt one must be allowed to use a stream in such a manner as to make it useful to himself, even if it do produce slight inconvenience to those below. This is true of everything which we use in common with others. The air is somewhat corrupted by the most ordinary use; large manufacturing establishments affect it still more seriously; and some, by reason of their vicinity to a numerous population, become so offensive and destructive of comfort, and health even, as to be regarded as common nuisances. Within reasonable limits, those who have a common interest in the use of air and running water must submit to small inconveniences to afford a disproportionate advantage to others. It seems to us that this question of the reasonableness of the use of a stream, when it is not settled by custom, and is in its nature doubtful, should always be regarded as one of fact, to be determined by the tribunal trying the facts."

These observations of the learned chief justice are quoted with approval in the text of 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 1216.

In Merrifield v. Lombard, 13 Allen, 16, 90 Am. Dec. 172, Chief Justice Bigelow, considering the alleged pollution of a stream by a manufacturing plant, observed: "The law requires of a party through whose land a natural water course passes, that he should use the water in such manner as not to destroy, impair, or materially affect the beneficial appropriation of it by the proprietors of land below on the same stream. Each riparian owner has the right to use the water for any reasonable and proper purpose, as it flows through his land, subject to the restriction that he shall not thereby deprive others of a like use and enjoyment of the stream as it runs through their land. Any diversion or obstruction of the water which substantially diminishes the volume of the stream, so that it does not flow ut currere solebat, or which defiles and corrupts it to such a degree as essentially to impair its purity and prevent the use of it for any of the reasonable and proper purposes to which running water is usually applied, such as irrigation, the propulsion of machinery, or consumption for domestic use, is an infringement of the right of other owners of land through which a water course runs, and creates a nuisance, for which those thereby injured are entitled to a remedy. An injury to the purity or quality of the water, to the detriment of other riparian owners, constitutes, in legal effect, a wrong and an invasion of private right, in like manner as a permanent obstruction or diversion of the water."

In Day v. Louisville Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 27, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 167, 53 S. E. 778, there was involved the pollution of a stream by the casting of coal and coke refuse from a mine and coke ovens in and near the water of a stream, to the damage of a lower riparian owner of farm lands bordering thereon, rendering the water "unfit for agricultural and domestic purposes." Discussing the company's claimed right to make such use of the stream by virtue of its riparian ownership, Justice Brannon very pertinently observed: "This case involves principles very important everywhere, but especially important in this state at present and in the future; but those principles are old and have been called into requisition through many, many years in actions for the pollution of streams, and casting into them hurtful things, and depositing them upon lands of riparian owners on the stream below. The defendant contends that, as it was using its property in carrying on a lawful business very useful to the public, it is exempt from liability, as it was only exercising its rights. We are told by the able brief of the defendant's counsel that the affirmance of this judgment will be vastly hurtful and disastrous to the mining and coke interests of West Virginia, and have a tendency to detract from the value of our land, and hinder the development of the great wealth of coal and iron in the bowels of our mountains, and will be subversive of great public policy, which demands the development of our wealth therein, and tends to the weal of the whole people of the state, and that a few individuals injured thereby must be without redress. We cannot accede to this broad proposition. The established maxim of centuries is Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas (so use your own property that you do not injure another). That rule is almost equal to the Golden Rule in importance, and must never be lost sight of in the daily doings and transactions of organized society. A man has land upon a stream. He is its sole lord. L.R.A.1915D.

No one has a right to injure that land. It is protected by the Constitution. If one up the stream in his works, be they ever so lawful, honorable, and necessary for private weal or public weal, do thereby injure the land of that owner further down by unlawful invasion of it, by casting upon it things damaging it, or by polluting the purity of the water, rendering it unfit for the owner's consumption, as it passes through his land, the man up the stream must answer in damages. One man without fault is injured by another. That is enough for liability." Greene v. Nunnemacher, 36 Wis. 50; Tetherington v. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. 232 Ill. 522, 83 N. E. 1048; Bowman v. Humphrey, 124 Iowa, 744, 100 N. W. 854; Strobel v. Kerr Salt Co. 164 N. Y. 303, 51 L.R.A. 687, 79 Am. St. Rep. 643, 58 N. E. 142, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 38; H. B. Bowling Coal Co. v. Ruffner, 117 Tenn. 180, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 923, 100 S. W. 116, 10 Ann. Cas. 581; Drake v. Lady Ensley Coal, Iron & R. Co. 24 L.R.A. 64, and note, (102 Ala. 501, 48 Am. St. Rep. 77, 14 So. 749); Young v. Bankier Distillery Co. [1893] A. C. 691, 69 L. T. N. S. 838, 58 J. P. 100.

It has been well said: "It is difficult, if not impossible, to declare a rule in language so clear and precise as that it can be applied with certainty to every case that may arise." Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hamilton, 100 Ala. 252, 261, 46 Am. St. Rep. 48, 14 So. 167.

We believe it safe, however, to say that, in the absence of rights resting upon prescription or custom, neither of which is here involved, there can be no more practical or just rule of liability resting upon riparian owners using the water of a stream for industrial or manufacturing purposes, and thereby polluting the water with foreign substances, than that damage caused by such use and pollution of the water renders such user liable to a lower riparian owner entitled to use of the water for domestic and farm purposes, whenever such damage is of a substantial nature. This of necessity results in the question being one for the jury, except in cases where the evidence is such as to leave no room for honest difference of opinion as to the substantial nature of the damage.

Our attention is called to the case of Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453, which counsel for appellants principally rely upon in support of their contentions in this branch of the case. That decision has received some criticism from the courts both in this country and England. We think, however, it is, in any event, distinguishable from the case before us. The stream involved in that case was polluted by the flow of water by gravity alone from a coal company's mine. As said at page 147 of 113 Pa. of the opinion: "It is clear that for the consequence of this flow, which by the mere force of gravity naturally, and without any fault of the defendants, carried the water into the brook and thence to the plaintiff's pond, there could be no responsibility as damages on the part of the defendants."

And on page 155 of 113 Pa. it is said: "The defendants introduced nothing into the water to corrupt it. The water flowed into Meadow brook just as it was found in the mine. Its impurities were from natural, and not from artificial, causes."

The water was not taken from the stream, used in washing the coal, and returned to the stream in a polluted condition, carrying foreign substances, as in this case. Even the Pennsylvania court in the later case of Lentz v. Carnegie Bros. 145 Pa. 612, 27 Am. St. Rep. 717, 23 Atl. 219, disposed of a question similar to that here involved, upon a theory not materially out of harmony with our present conclusion.

Some contention is made by counsel for appellant against certain instructions given by the court to the jury, which, it is contended, in effect permit the jury to ignore the evidence tending to show pollution of the stream from other sources than the company's mining plant. The instructions, as a whole, however, we think, render it quite clear that the jury were plainly given to understand that appellants were to be held liable only for their own acts and to the extent of the damage attributable thereto.

It is contended that the trial court erred in the admission of evidence over objections of counsel for appellants, tending to show the maintenance of cesspools in connection with the dwellings of the company's employees near the stream. We have noticed that this was one of the claimed causes of the pollution of the stream alleged in respondents' complaint. It seems to us that the objection to this evidence goes only to its weight, and therefore that its admission must rest largely in the discretion of the trial court. Evidence is not inadmissible merely because it does not within itself prove all that the party offering it is contending for as to the particular item of damage claimed. We are not able to see that the evidence was irrelevant at the time it was offered, though we must confess that, if respondents' right of recovery rested alone upon their claimed pollution of the stream from this source, appellants probably would have been entitled to a nonsuit. However, we do not find in the record any motion to exclude this evidence from the consideration of the jury made after its admission, L.R.A.1915D.

nor do we find any request for instructions touching the consideration of this evidence by the jury. Upon the whole record, we are not able to see that any error has been committed in this regard which counsel for appellants can now complain of. It is apparent from the record before us, viewed as a whole, that this claim of pollution of the stream was all but lost sight of in the trial of the case; and it is hard to believe that it had any influence upon the minds of the jury as a contributing cause of the pollution of the stream. Upon the whole record, we do not feel warranted in disturbing the judgment upon this ground.

We conclude that the record is free from prejudicial errors, and that the judgment must be affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Holcomb, Mount, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ALLEN WALTON, Intervener, Appt.,
v.

F. G. PROUTT, Receiver of Blytheville
Water Company.

(— Ark. —, 174 S. W. 1152.)

Water — municipal supply — right of consumer to enforce contract.

1. A consumer may maintain an action to enforce the rates provided in a contract between a municipal corporation and a corporation for supplying water to the inhabitants.

Same — rates — sliding scale — construction.

2. A contract establishing meter rates for water for a certain amount of consumption or less per month, a less rate for a consumption between the amount specified and a larger maximum quantity, and so on until a rate is fixed for all consumption over the final maximum specified, with a provision that the minimum amount of bill under one rate shall not be less than the maximum under the preceding rate, does not require payment of the rates fixed for all consumption between the divisions specified, but fixes classes of consumers to be charged a single rate according to the total amount of their consumption.

(March 15, 1915.)

Note. — Consumer's right to compel public service corporation to respect rates stipulated in contract with municipality.

For a discussion of the earlier cases involving consumer's right to compel water company to furnish water at rates stipu-

APPEAL by intervener from a decree of the Chancery Court for Mississippi County, construing a contract between the water company and the city of Blytheville with respect to rates to be charged to consumers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Allen Walton in propria persona.

Mr. J. S. Allen, for appellee:

The provisions of the franchise ordinance as to meter rates to be charged private consumers were essentially a contract between the water company and the city.

Cleburne Water, Ice & Lighting Co. v. Cleburne, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 35 S. W. 734.

The statutory remedy in cases of this character is exclusive, and resort cannot be had to the courts until the relief to which a consumer is entitled has been denied him under the remedy provided by statute.

Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 45 L.R.A. 113, 76 N. W. 171; State ex rel. Moore v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 19 Neb. 476, 27 N. W. 434.

Recovery will not be allowed on a conlated in contract with municipality, see note to Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958.

See also Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 963, on the same question.

The cases involving the right of a consumer to compel a public service corporation to respect the rates stipulated in the contract between it and the city are extremely few. Of the cases actually discussing this question, Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. supra, and WALTON v. PROUTT are the most satisfactory. These cases agree that the consumer has the right to bring such an action.

In Wood v. New York Inter-Urban Water Co. 157 App. Div. 407, 142 N. Y. Supp. 626, holding that a consumer of water has a right of action against the water company for the enforcement of rates stipulated in its contract with the city, the court does not stop to discuss the question, but cites Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. supra, as authority.

In Farnsworth v. Boro Oil & Gas Co. 76 Misc. 37, 134 N. Y. Supp. 348, affirmed on the opinion of the court below in 155 App. Div. 79, 139 N. Y. Supp. 736, it is held that an inhabitant of a town who takes gas from a public service corporation is a proper party to maintain an action to restrain the gas company from charging a higher rate than that agreed upon at the time it received consent from the town board to construct its pipe lines. It does not appear from the case, however, that the gas company raised any question as to the right of the plaintiff to bring the action, and the court therefore dismisses the subject with a sentence.

In Cleburne Water, Ice, & Lighting Co. L.R.A.1915D.

tract to which the plaintiff is not a party, and where there is no privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant.

Howsmen v. Trenton Water Co. 119 Mo. 304, 23 L.R.A. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 654, 24 S. W. 784; Davis v. Clinton Waterworks Co. 54 Iowa, 59, 37 Am. Rep. 185, 6 N. W. 126; Becker v. Keokuk Waterworks, 79 Iowa, 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 377, 44 N. W. 694; Fowler v. Athens City Waterworks Co. 83 Ga. 219, 20 Am. St. Rep. 313, 9 S. E. 673; Mott v. Cherryvale Water & Mfg. Co. 48 Kan. 12, 15 L.R.A. 375, 30 Am. St. Rep. 267, 28 Pac. 989; Jefferson v. Asch, 53 Minn. 446, 25 L.R.A. 257, 39 Am. St. Rep. 618, 55 N. W. 604; Eaton v. Fairbury Waterworks Co. 37 Neb. 546, 21 L.R.A. 653, 40 Am. St. Rep. 510, 56 N. W. 201.

The construction of the franchise adopted by the lower court is correct, and without regard to the technical bar to Walton's suit, and the technical defects in the manner in which he sought to present the issue, his appeal must be dismissed.

Straus v. Wanamaker, 175 Pa. 213, 34 Atl. 648; 2 Bl. Com. p. 380; Hazle-

v. Cleburne, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 35 S. W. 733, an action by a city to enjoin a public service corporation from charging a higher rate for water than that authorized by the contract between the parties, the court declares that no citizen has the right to bring the action, and bases thereupon the conclusion that the city must therefore be the proper party to bring the action. The court says: "We think it clear . . . that no public duty was imposed upon the appellant [water company] by the contract with the city, nor did any contractual relations exist between the appellant and the citizens of Cleburne that would give them the right to recover for a breach of the contract. It follows, we think, that, as the city had undertaken to supply the citizens with water, and having contracted with appellant to perform that undertaking, and as the citizens could not sue, the city had the right to sue to enforce the performance thereof. The city not only had the right to sue to enforce the contract, but it was its duty to see that the contract was enforced, and the rights of the citizens protected thereunder."

See, upon the question of the right of a property owner to maintain an action against a water company for failure to supply sufficient water for fire purposes, as required by its contract with the municipality, the note to Hone v. Presque Isle Water Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1021. And see later cases cited in notes to Baum v. Somerville Water Co. 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, and Howsmen v. Trenton Water Co. 23 L.R.A. 146.

As to the establishment and regulation of municipal water supply, generally, see note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33. E. L. D.

ton Coal Co. v. Buck Mountain Coal Co. 57 Pa. 301, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 389; Ft. Smith Light & Traction Co. v. Kelley, 94 Ark. 461, 127 S. W. 975; Phoenix Cement Sidewalk Co. v. Russellville Water & Light Co. 101 Ark. 22, 140 S. W. 996.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves a construction of the language of a franchise granted by the city of Blytheville to a private corporation, authorizing said corporation to furnish water to the inhabitants of said city. The controversy relates to the rates authorized to be charged for the consumption of water. The first question presented, however, is whether or not appellant, a citizen of the city, has a right to maintain an action to compel those acting under the franchise to comply with the terms thereof. Creditors of the water company instituted an action in the chancery court of Mississippi county, and a receiver was appointed by the court to take charge of the plant and operate it during the pendency of the litigation. The receiver filed a petition asking the court to construe the contract between the company and the city, with respect to the scale of charges to be made against the consumers of water, and to give instructions to the receiver on that score. Appellant, who was a citizen of the city, intervened, and asked that the contract be construed, and the receiver be ordered to carry out the contract according to the court's construction of it. The court refused to place upon the contract the interpretation contended for by appellant, and an appeal is prosecuted to this court.

We are of the opinion that appellant, as a citizen and user of water in the city, has a right to maintain an action to compel the water company to comply with its contract. There are authorities which clearly sustain that view, and we think they are correct. 1 Farnham, Waters, § 160, B; Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. 183 N. Y. 330, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, 76 N. E. 211, 5 Ann. Cas. 504; Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. 100 Me. 496, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 963, 62 Atl. 136. The New York court of appeals, in the case cited above, based its conclusion on the ground that the contract was made for the benefit of the citizens of the municipality, and that a citizen had a right to sue on the contract. The Maine court based its conclusion on the ground that mandamus was the proper remedy to compel the performance of the contract, and that an individual had the right to sue to compel the performance of the public duty. Both of those decisions distinguish the question of the right of a citizen to sue for damages resulting from a breach of the contract. This court has followed the great weight of authority in holding that a citizen cannot maintain a suit for damages resulting from a breach of a contract of this kind, putting it on the ground that the citizens of the municipality are not parties to the contract. Collier v. Newport Water, Light & P. Co. 100 Ark. 47, 139 S. W. 635, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 458. The question now presented is different from that, and we hold that, while there is no right of action for a breach of the contract, a citizen of the municipality, notwithstanding the fact that he cannot be treated as a party to the contract, has a right to sue to compel the performance of the public duty which rests upon the holder of the franchise. We are not concerned at this time about whether the proper remedy is in equity or at law by mandamus. No suit could be maintained either at law or in equity against the corporation in the hands of the receiver without first obtaining the consent of the court, and a citizen had a right to come into the court of equity where the affairs of the corporation are being administered through an agency of the court.

The controversy arises over the interpretation of the following clause of the contract regulating rates:

"Any consumer whose annual rental under the flat rate for any single connection equals $15 per annum may elect to have his service metered.

Meter Rates.

2,500 gallons or less per month, per
M gal.30
2,500 to 5,000 gal. per month, per
M gal.25
5,000 to 10,000 gal. per month, per
M gal.20
Above 10,000 gal. per month, per
M gal.15

"The minimum amount of bill under one rate shall not be less than the maximum under the preceding rate. The minimum meter rate to be 75¢ per month. The water company may make special contracts with private concerns for the use of water for unusual, special, or peculiar purposes or for purposes not specified in the foregoing table of rates, but it will not be required to furnish any service connection of less than $6 per annum."

It is contended on behalf of the appellee that the proper interpretation of the contract means that what is called the "accumulative" or "sliding" scale means that a consumer must pay 30 cents per 1,000 gallons for the first 2,500 gallons used, and 25 cents per 1,000 for excess over 2,500 gallons up to 5,000 gallons, and so on up to the maximum amount provided for. On the other hand, it is contended by appellant that the contract should be construed as adopting what is termed the "flat" scale, which constitutes a division of customers into classes according to the amount of water consumed, and provides a rate for each class. The court adopted appellee's contention, but we think that is an erroneous interpretation of the contract. Much plainer language could have been used if the framers of the franchise had intended what the court interprets the language to mean. It could easily have been stated that the rate of 30 cents per 1,000 should be charged for the first 2,500 gallons, and the lower rates for the excess, on up to the maximum; but, instead of that, the language has, we think, been employed which means quite another thing. If that was the correct view, no meaning whatever could be given to the clause which provides for a minimum amount under each classification of rates. In other words, if the framers of the city ordinance had intended it to mean that such a rate should be charged up to a certain amount, and another rate for the excess, it would have been useless to have prescribed a minimum rate on each separate classification. When the whole of this scale of rates is read together, we are convinced that it means what the appellant contends for,—that is to say, the flat scale, which divides the customers into classes according to the quantity of water used per month,—and that the consumers are entitled to have water furnished according to the rates fixed for the class within which each falls.

The decree is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

GISH BANKING COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

SAM LEACHMAN'S ADMINISTRATOR
et al.

(163 Ky. 720, 174 S. W. 492.)

Bank — joint account — payment of individual checks.

A bank which pays upon the checks of the wife alone a man's money deposited to the joint account of himself and wife is liable to him therefor except so far as he may have ratified the checks or received the benefit of them.

(March 23, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Muhlenberg County, overruling a motion for a new trial in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to have been deposited to the joint credit of plaintiffs in defendant's bank, and which it refused to pay. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walker Wilkins and O'Rear & Williams for appellant.

Messrs. H. N. Lukins and Miller & Sandidge, for appellees:

If several persons make a deposit to their joint credit in bank, it must have the signature of all of them appended to the check before paying it.

2 Bolles, Bkg. p. 593; Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 435; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1612; Coote v. Bank of United States, 3 Cranch, C. C. 50, Fed. Cas. No. 3,203; Tompkins v. McGinn, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 85 S. W. 452; Denigan v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389; Columbia Finance & T. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ky. 374, 76 S. W. 156; Neiman v. Beacon Trust Co. 170 Mass. 452, 64 Am. St. Rep. 315, 49 N. E. 748.

The money in controversy was in Blandford's hands, as agent, being held by him for Sam Leachman, which fact was known by the cashier of the bank. The bank would not be excused even if the money was deposited by him, at the instance of the cashier, to the credit of Lizzie Leachman.

Duckett v. National Mechanics' Bank, 86 Md. 400, 39 L.R.A. 84, 63 Am. St. Rep. 513, 38 Atl. 983; Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333, 30 Am. St. Rep. 159, 14 S. E. 554; State Nat. Bank v. Reilly, 124 Ill. 464, 14 N. E. 657; Essex County v. Newark City Nat. Bank, 48 N. J. Eq. 51, 21 Atl. 185; Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. 255; 1 Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 317; Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 237, 11 Atl. 835.

Note. — Banks: payment of money deposited on joint account.

This note does not include questions arising upon the death of one of two or more depositors, nor cases of deposits by public officers. Deposits by partnerships are also excluded as involving the general agency of partners in the use of the firm name.

Violations of agreements to pay out trust funds only on the assent of the trustee's surety are not included. For validity of L.R.A.1915D.

agreement with surety as to custody or control of trust funds, see the note to Fidelity & D. Co. v. Butler, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 994.

Generally as to liability of coexecutor for default of one permitted to manage estate, see the note to Cheever v. Ellis, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 296.

In general.

Withdrawals from a joint deposit in bank require the authority of all the depositors. GISH BKG. CO. v. LEACHMAN; Columbia Hurt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Gish Banking Company is a banking corporation at Central City, and doing a general banking business. Sam Leachman owned a house and lot in the town, which was conveyed to him by deed on May 25, 1901. About the year 1908, he executed a note to appellant for a loan, and to secure it he gave appellant a mortgage upon this house and lot, in which his wife, Lizzie Leachman, joined. She also, jointly with Sam Leachman, executed the note sued on, but for what purpose it does not appear, as she seems to have owned no property of her own. This note was not paid off, but was renewed every four months, until the year 1913. In the meantime Leachman and his wife and son and daughter had removed to the city of Louisville. A short time previous to June, 1913, Samuel Leachman entered into a contract with C. H. Blandford & Company, real estate agents in Greenville, to procure a sale for him of the house and lot at the sum of $2,000; they to have a commission of 5 per cent for making the sale. The contract was in writing, and was signed by Samuel Leachman and his wife, Lizzie Leachman. Shortly before the 19th of June, C. H. Blandford & Company notified Samuel Leachman that they could make a sale of his property for him for $1,700. The real estate firm received a telegram from Louisville, signed by Sam-

Finance & T. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ky. 374, 76 S. W. 156; Neiman v. Beacon Trust Co. 170 Mass. 452, 64 Am. St. Rep. 315, 49 N. E. 748 (infra, next subdivision); Dixon's Case, 2 Lewin, C. C. 178.

Thus, in Dixon's Case, supra, it was held that where a banker holds a joint deposit for three persons, which, by the agreement, requires the three persons to draw it, and one of the depositors obtains the money by securing others to personate his codepositors, he commits a fraud on the banker.

In Columbia Finance & T. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ky. 374, 76 S. W. 156, cited and quoted in GISH BKG. CO. v. LEACHMAN, the bank, on the direction of one of the three depositors, had appropriated part of the deposit to the payment of a debt of that depositor to it.

In Mulcahy v. Devlin, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 218, the court observed that if an account be in the name of "A or B," on notice of one of them not to pay the other the bank may interplead, as such a payment after such notice would mean liability for the amount belonging to the notifying party.

But in Carr v. Fidelity Bank, 126 N. C. 186, 35 S. E. 246, where the agent of two tenants in common deposited their rents under the name of "A and B," and one of such tenants in common drew most of the money out by a check signed "A and B" it was held that the bank was not liable, as the form of the account was that of a partnership, and therefore one party had the right to draw it out by check signed in this form.

Similarly, when checks require a counter signature, the bank is liable if it pays without it.

Thus, where a partnership notified a bank not to pay its checks unless they were countersigned by its bookkeeper, and the bank nevertheless paid certain checks without being so countersigned, it was held that the bank, suing for an overdraft, could not recover the amount of these checks without showing that the firm received the benefit of the payment. Gladstone Exch. Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429, 53 N. W. 1110.

Where a bank in which a receiver deposited money under an order of the court directing that it be not withdrawn except on checks countersigned by the order of the court pays out money on uncounersigned checks of the receiver, although aware of the order, it is liable for the money so paid out and misappropriated by the receiver. American Nat. Bank v. Fidelity & D. Co. 129 Ga. 126, 58 S. E. 867, 12 Ann. Cas. 666, dictum, as the remedy against the bank had been lost by the statute of limitations.

—extent of liability where payment is made to one joint depositor.

It is the extent of the interest of the wronged depositor at the time of the withdrawal which determines the amount of liability of the bank which has paid out the joint deposit on the order of the other depositor. Thus, where two persons made a joint deposit in a bank which agreed not to pay any part thereof except upon the joint check of both depositors, and a few days later the bank, on the representation of one of the depositors that she had become the owner of the whole deposit, paid her the entire amount thereof, the bank was held liable to the other depositor for his interest in the deposit at the time of its withdrawal. He, as a matter of fact, owned one half of the deposit when made and three fourths at the time of the withdrawal, but the bank was not aware at the time of the deposit of the respective rights of the parties, and made no inquiry. Neiman v. Beacon Trust Co. 170 Mass. 452, 64 Am. St. Rep. 315, 49 N. E. 748.

Trustees.

Generally speaking, money deposited with a bank to the credit of more than one trustee cannot be lawfully withdrawn without the order of all the trustees. Swift v. Williams, infra.

Thus in Innes v. Stephenson, 1 Moody & R. 145, it was held that bankers paying money on the signature of one assignee in bankruptcy and on the forged signature of the other are liable for the money.

uel Leachman and his son, H. T. Leachman, and dated 19th-20th day of June, directing them to make the sale at that price, and to deposit the money, less the commission to be paid, in the bank of Gish Banking Company. The telegram further notified the real estate firm that the deeds were in the Gish Banking Company. As soon as the trade was closed, Samuel Leachman and his wife, Lizzie Leachman, executed a deed to the purchaser for the land, and on the 23d day of June C. H. Blandford, representing the real estate firm, after paying the taxes due upon the property, and taking out his commission for the sale, executed a check on the 23d day of June to the Gish Banking Company for $1,591.55, on "account of S. and Lizzie Leachman." In order to prepare this deed, Blandford had gone into the bank and obtained the mortgage, which it held against Leachman, to obtain the boundary of the property, for the purpose of preparing the deed. When he deposited this check, D. H. Lam, the cashier of the bank, made out a deposit slip, showing the deposit of $1,211.55 in the bank to the credit of Lizzie Leachman.

It seems that the note which Samuel Leachman owed at the bank amounted to Compare Stone v. Union Sav. Bank, infra, "Executors."

Where one of two trustees being about to depart for Europe obtained an order from the court, authorizing his cotrustee, in his absence, to receive the purchase money of a sale which the trustees had made of trust property, "and in all respects to act as fully in all matters pertaining to said trust as if both were present and acting," and the other trustee received a check for such purchase money indorsed to the order of both trustees, which was deposited to their joint credit, and thereafter he drew out and misappropriated a considerable portion of the money by check signed by himself, trustee, and which he also signed in the name of the other trustee, by himself, it was held that the bank must respond to the trust fund for the money. (The check given by the defaulting trustee was a check originally signed by himself as trustee, to pay a claim due from him as "Trustee" of a certain business concern, and the bank paid this check by an arrangement with him by which he was to add the other signature; and the court paid particular attention to the fact that the bank paid the check as originally drawn by one trustee, and permitted it to pass through the clearing house, to be paid after having first notified the payee's bank that the check was not good, but would probably be made right during the day, and later it instructed the payee to redeposit it. The court pointed out that if the check had come to the payee with the names of both trustees, very likely he would have refused to receive it, and the misapplication of the proceeds might thus have been avoided.) Swift v. Williams, 68 Md. 236, 11 Atl. 835.

In Hill on Trustees, 4th Am. ed. *308, it is said that it is in the power of trustees to require that checks shall be signed by all or any one of their number.

While it is not intended in this note to take up the general question of the powers of one of two trustees, it may be noted that it has been stated in one case that the case of bankers was one standing upon special grounds. Thus, in Husband v. Davis, 10 C. B. 645, the court, in holding that where two are jointly entitled to the money on a bond as trustees, a payment to one of them is L.R.A.1915D.

good, distinguished the case of bankers, and said: "There can be no doubt that a man may pay a debt to one of several to whom he is indebted jointly. The case of bankers stands upon special grounds. Where trustees or others have a joint account with them as bankers, it is usual to require the authority of the whole to pay the money. But that arises from the peculiar contract and relation between bankers and their customers."

But while, as just stated, it is not intended to take up the general question of the powers of one of two trustees, the foregoing case ought not to be passed without referring to some of the other authorities. In Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 63, Lord Eldon said: "Without going through all the cases, it is obvious that prima facie there is this distinction between executors and trustees: that one executor can, and one trustee cannot, give a discharge." In Can v. Read, 3 Atk. 695, it was held that a debtor to a bankrupt who has three assignees is entitled to pay the money into court where there is a dispute between the assignees, two of them claiming the property as the property of the bankrupt, and the other joining with the other defendant in claiming the property as held by the bankrupt simply as a factor or agent. The lord chancellor held that the payment would not be an absolute discharge unless all the assignees should join in the receipt, as he considered that the assignees were in the nature of trustees, and not executors, who were considered as distinct persons. And in Ex parte Rigby, 19 Ves. Jr. 463, 2 Rose, 224, where it was held that one of two trustees in bankruptcy could not sign the bankrupt certificate, Eldon, Ld. Ch., said that one executor can do any act, but that it is not so as to trustees, (but the petition stood over on its being stated that the cotrustee had given authority to the other to act for him, the court saying that this would be sufficient on proof of it).

—orders of court.

In Ex parte Collins, 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 427, where five assignees in bankruptcy paid the money into a bank, one of them died, and another one went abroad and did not an-

$380, which was subtracted from the amount of the check, which left $1,211.55. When Blandford observed that the deposit slip showed the deposit to be made in the name of Lizzie Leachman, he made objection to having the deposit made in that way, and said that he wanted it deposited to the credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman, as he wanted that day to send to Leachman a statement of the transaction, and to send a deposit ticket, showing what had been done with the money. Thereupon Lam made out a deposit slip, showing that the $1,211.55 was deposited to the credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman, and signed it as cashier of the bank, and delivered it to Blandford, who, upon the same day, sent it in a letter to Leachman, and also a statement of his own, showing the amount of money he had received for the land, and the items of taxes paid out of it, and the amount of the note which the bank held against Leachman, and the amount deposited. It seems that this was all the information received by the Leachmans covering the transaction. Thereafter a check for the sum of $70; and dated June 21st, and payable to Fred Woodfull, was deposited in the Southern National Bank, in Louisville, Kentucky, by Woodfull, and swear applications for a power of attorney in favor of his coassignees, the court, against the objection of the bank, granted an order that the bank be directed to pay the money to the remaining three assignees. Loughborough, Ld. Ch., observed that he never would permit another shilling of a bankrupt's property to be paid into the bank if it were not to be subject to his control afterwards.

Similarly, where three assignees opened an account in a bank, and one of them absconded, and the bank declined to pay on checks signed by the other two, the court, on authority of Ex parte Collins, supra, made the order directing the bank to pay checks so signed. Ex parte Hunter, 1 Meriv. 408, 2 Rose, 363.

In this connection it may be noted that where dividends of a trust fund standing in the name of the accountant general were payable to five trustees residing in various localities, the fund being a small balance, it was ordered that it might be paid to the trustees or to one of them. Shortbridge's Case, 12 Ves. Jr. 28. And that in Atty. Gen. v. Brickdale, 8 Beav. 223, the trustees of a charity being very numerous, it was ordered that dividends from a fund in court might be paid to the trustees or to any two of them.

Executors.

While there is no doubt that a bank may lawfully pay to one of several executors its debt to the decedent, the authorities are not entirely agreed as to whether a bank may pay out on the order of one executor money of the estate deposited by more than one executor. That all the executors should join in the order is held in De Haven v. Williams, 80 Pa. 480, 21 Am. Rep. 107, and in Allen v. Louisiana Nat. Bank, 50 La. Ann. 366, 23 So. 360. The contrary view is taken in Stone v. Union Sav. Bank, 13 R. I. 25, where, however, it is not clear from the report whether the deposit may not have been originally made by the decedent.

In De Haven v. Williams, supra, where two executors deposited money with bankers, and later one of the executors joined in a composition of the bankers with their creditors, by the terms of which agreement all the property of the bankers passed to a trustee for their creditors, it being thereby agreed that the bankers should be released, it was held that one of the executors could not thus release the bankers. The supreme court affirmed the judgment for the reasons given by the court below, which said: "It were futile to open a joint account, if one of the depositors could withdraw the money. All must, therefore, unite in the receipt or check, in order to discharge the banker; and it follows that he cannot rely on a compromise or release by one as a defense. . . . It results from what has been said that the right of executors to sever in the execution of the trust is a concession to expediency, which should not be made when the case is one for care and judgment, and it is possible for all to unite without inconvenience. It does not, therefore, exist, where a fund arising from the collection or sale of the assets comes to the hands of two or more executors or administrators, or has been deposited to their account."

(See also an observation of Ashman, J., in Power's Estate, 15 Phila. 539, suggesting that one executor is chargeable with the amount of a deposit of moneys of the estate in the joint names of himself and the other executor.)

In Allen v. Louisiana Nat. Bank, supra, where three executors opened an account with a bank, and two of them gave the third a power of attorney to draw, and later, one of those giving the power notified the bank not to honor any checks which were not signed by him, and also that he had canceled and withdrawn the power, it was held on a mandamus, that the bank would not be forced to pay a check signed by only two of the executors, but the court ordered that the cause should be remanded in order that the executor who had refused his permission, might be joined. (It may be noted that it seems that in Louisiana an action may be sustained by one of several joint obligees. See Hincks v. Converse, 38 La. Ann. 871.)

In Stone v. Union Sav. Bank, supra, it was held that a bank was not liable for paying money on a check to which one of the two executors' names had been forged, although it had been notified by such executor not to honor checks without his signature, thereafter presented to the appellant, and was paid by appellant out of the funds deposited with it by C. H. Blandford & Company. This check was signed by Lizzie Leachman alone. On June 28th a draft for $1,211, signed by Lizzie Leachman, and drawn on the Gish Banking Company, and sent to another bank in Greenville for collection by the Southern National Bank at Louisville, was presented to appellant for payment. The appellant declined to pay this draft, and returned it to the bank at Louisville. This draft was dated June 26th. Thereafter Woodfull deposited in the Southern National Bank, at Louisville, two other checks, signed by Lizzie Leachman, and drawn on the Gish Banking Company, and payable to Woodfull, one of which was for the sum of $800, and dated June 26th, the other was for $200, and dated June 30th, and were both deposited by Woodfull for collection in the Southern National Bank on June 30th. These checks were paid out of the funds in the bank, which had been deposited by Blandford to the credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman. This left in the bank, to the credit of that fund, $141.55. It should be stated that the Gish Banking Company did not deposit this check to the credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman, as was directed by Blandford, but deposited it to the credit of Lizzie Leachman alone, and on the day of the deposit made out a deposit slip, showing that it was deposited to the credit of Lizzie Leachman, and also entered it upon their loose leaf ledger, as being the funds of Lizzie Leachman, which was explained by the cashier of the bank in the following way: That he knew Samuel Leachman to be in very feeble health, and had received information from Leachman's son a short time previous that he was expected to very shortly die, and that for two years past, in the renewal of his note to the bank, he had not signed his own name, and that he suggested to Blandford, after he had made out the deposit slip at Blandford's request, in the name of S. and Lizzie Leachman, that it was better to deposit it in the name of Lizzie Leachman alone, and that Blandford agreed thereto, but by mistake he and the other executor had committed the forgery, and had died without accounting to the estate for the money so collected. There the surviving executor of a testatrix brought an action against the bank "to recover the balance of a deposit which formerly stood in the bank to her credit or to the credit of her estate." The plaintiff had formerly given the bank notice not to pay over the deposit to his coexecutor without the plaintiff's signature. Thereafter, the other executor presented a check to the bank which was refused on the ground that it was not countersigned, and such executor thereupon took away the check and brought it back later, apparently with the plaintiff's signature upon it, and the bank paid the check.

In Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Molloy, 186, the court, in holding that an executor who deposited funds with a banker to the executors' account was not liable for moneys drawn out by his coexecutor, said: "It is the custom of bankers that what is deposited by one to the joint account may be withdrawn by the check of the other; and for convenience of business it is necessary this risk should be incurred, for it would be very hard to transact business if every check should be signed by all the executors."

Miscellaneous.

Where A paid into a certain bank money with directions to pay it to the joint order of B and C, and thereafter certain suits were brought against B and judgment recovered, and the sum in the bank garnisheed, and the justice ordered the bank to pay the money into court on the judgment, which it did, it was held that sixteen months after the deposit, A had a right to recover the L.R.A.1915D.

money from the bank, as it might fairly be presumed that B and C after that interval did not intend to submit any joint order for the money, and it appeared that A had been compelled to pay the same money in another action to C. Bank of Le Roy v. Harding, 1 Kan. App. 389, 41 Pac. 680.

Where the plaintiff went with her husband to a savings bank, where she had her individual account, and authorized the transfer of the account to a joint account, and the signature book of the bank contained the entry, "both signatures required to draw," it was held that the husband was a necessary party to an action by the wife against the bank for the money. Murphy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 131 App. Div. 759, 116 N. Y. Supp. 228.

It may be noted that in Rand v. State Nat. Bank, 77 N. C. 152, where two administrators, together with a third person, jointly made a deposit, it being agreed that the same should be drawn out upon the joint order of the three, it was considered that the administrators alone could not recover the money; the court, however, stated that this decision was not necessary to the result, as the plaintiffs' case was bad on their pleading, which alleged that they had made the deposit, and they admitted that the allegation of the answer, alleging the deposit by the three persons, was correct.

In Re Bank of Toronto, 8 Ont. Week. Rep. 323, it seems to be held that where executors dispute as to a deposit in a bank, and one sues the banker, the bank may interplead, but the case is not very clearly reported. It is generally laid down in the text-books that an action by less than all of the executors is subject to a plea in abatement.

B. B. B.

gave to Blandford the slip showing the deposit made to S. and Lizzie Leachman. This, however, was flatly denied by Blandford, who stated the facts to be as first above stated.

It seems that Woodfull and Samuel Leachman were brothers-in-law, their wives being sisters, and that Woodfull, shortly before these transactions, had moved into the house with Leachman in Louisville, and that they had arranged to buy a dwelling house in Louisville, jointly, and were to pay for it on the 2d day of July. On the 2d day of July, Woodfull went to the party with whom they had negotiated the purchase of the house and lot, and proposed to him that, if he would extend the time for closing the deal to the 10th of July, all the money would be paid. This proposition was refused, unless $150 of the price was paid then, and Woodfull gave a check for that amount on his account in the Southern National Bank. Between that time and the 8th of July, Woodfull drew all the proceeds of the $200 check, the $800 check, and the $70 check, excepting $11, out of the bank, and he and his wife then disappeared out of the country, and do not seem to have been heard of since. All the funds deposited to Woodfull in the Southern National Bank were the proceeds of the three above-named checks. Leachman's son, in order to try to carry out the trade to purchase the property in Louisville, telegraphed to the Gish Banking Company to know what sum of money was there to the credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman, and received information that there was only $140 there, and that it had been drawn out by checks payable to Woodfull.

Thereafter Sam Leachman and Lizzie Leachman instituted this suit in the Muhlenberg circuit court against the Gish Banking Company, to recover of it the sum of $1,211.55, which they alleged had been deposited there to their joint credit, and that the bank refused to pay it. The bank filed an answer, traversing the facts that the appellees had deposited any money there, or that either of them had made any deposit there, except in the following way: That on the 23d day of June, 1913, C. H. Blandford deposited with it the sum of $1,211.55, to the credit of Lizzie Leachman, and that by mistake the cashier had written upon the duplicate deposit slip, which it delivered to Blandford, the names of S. and Lizzie Leachman, when in fact the deposit and account were made in the name of Lizzie Leachman, and that since that time it had been paid out upon checks drawn by Lizzie Leachman, and payable to Fred Woodfull, the sums of $70, $800 and $200; that there was left on deposit of said account $141.55; and that Lizzie Leachman had never made any demand for the payment of that sum to her. It further pleaded that the checks upon which the money was paid were written and signed by Lizzie Leachman, and that the appellees had full knowledge of the execution of the checks, and used and received the benefits of the money, and were therefore estopped to make any further claim against it for the money. The appellees, by reply, traversed all of the allegations of the answer, and denied that the $800 check or the $200 check were either of them drawn or signed by Lizzie Leachman, or that they had received any of said money, or any benefit of it, or had any knowledge that said checks were written, or drawn, or signed, or that the appellant had paid any of the checks, or that they had received or used any of the money.

Upon the trial of the case, a jury was not demanded, and the circuit court adjudged that the appellees recover the amount that they had sued for, less the amounts of the $70 check and the $150 check given by Woodfull as a payment on the house and lot in Louisville. The trial judge filed an opinion, setting out his conclusions of law separate from his finding of facts, and, the appellant having filed grounds for a new trial, its motion was overruled by the court. It excepted to the judgment of the court against it, and to each of the conclusions of law and finding of facts, and has appealed to this court.

The proof in this case, without controversy, shows that the entire sum of money deposited by Blandford & Company was the property of Samuel Leachman. The appellant had actual knowledge that the land for the sale of which the money was obtained was the property of Samuel Leachman, and that Lizzie Leachman had no interest in it whatever, except that she had a potential right of dower in the land, with which she parted, when she executed the deed. The appellant paid the note which Samuel Leachman and Lizzie Leachman executed to it, out of the funds. However, Blandford & Company being the agent of appellees, and directing the deposit to be made to the use of the appellees, and notifying Samuel Leachman of this fact, and he acquiescing in same, he could not be heard to complain of the money being so deposited; neither could he complain if the bank should have paid out the money upon checks signed by him and Lizzie Leachman. Whether the deposit was made to the joint credit of S. and Lizzie Leachman was an issue of fact determined by the trial court, and its judgment was that the funds were so deposited.

The evidence and all the circumstances seem to fully warrant that conclusion.

The funds being so deposited, the bank, in the absence of special authority so to do, was not authorized to pay out the funds, except upon a check signed by both Samuel and Lizzie Leachman. The appellant does not claim or pretend that it had any authority or permission from Samuel Leachman to pay out the funds upon checks signed by Lizzie Leachman alone. It relies for its authority so to do upon the claim that Blandford & Company, being the agents of S. and Lizzie Leachman, authorized it to deposit the check to the credit of Lizzie Leachman alone. This issue of fact was, however, determined against appellant, as above stated.

Funds deposited in a bank to the credit of a partnership may be lawfully paid out upon checks signed with the partnership name, although it is done by one of the partners. This may be done, because each one of the partners is the agent for the partnership, and the fund is not jointly but singly owned. The joint owners of property are not, by reason of that fact alone, agents for each other, for the purpose of a sale or disposition of the property. As to whether a bank is authorized to pay out funds deposited to the joint credit of two or more persons, upon checks signed by some of the depositors, and not by others, was before this court in the case of Columbia Finance & T. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ky. 374, 76 S. W. 156. In that case a deposit had been made by three persons to their joint credit, and with a parol agreement between themselves and the bank that the funds were to be drawn out only upon checks which were signed by all of the three. This court said: "The purpose of depositing the money, as it was, to the credit of the three, was to prevent any one of them from appropriating it without the consent of the other two. The form of deposit showed this, outside of the parol agreement. The rule is that, if several persons made a deposit to their joint credit, the bank must have the signatures of all of them appended to the check before paying it, or it takes the risk. 2 Morse, Bkg. §§ 425-436."

In the absence of any parol agreement, however, it seems that the rights and liabilities of the parties in the case, supra, would have been the same, upon the common and well-known principles of the common law. The text writers all concur in the doctrine that, where a deposit is made to the joint credit of several persons, the bank cannot justify itself in paying out the funds, except upon a check to which the names of all the depositors are appended. 2 Bolles, Bkg. 593; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 1612. L.R.A.1915D.

This is the common sense applying to the proposition. When a deposit is made to a joint account, notice is thereby fully given to the bank that each of the persons has an interest in the funds, although the bank may not know the extent of the interest of any particular one. To honor checks drawn upon the joint fund by any one of the depositors would enable such a one to appropriate the entire fund, without the knowledge or consent of his codepositors. If one or more of the persons making the joint deposit should abscond, and could not be found, or if one or more should perversely refuse to join his codepositors in signing checks upon the joint fund the bank would be fully within its rights to refuse to pay out the funds, until a court of equity should be applied to, and the bank could then pay out the funds in accordance with its directions.

While it has been held that where a deposit is made to the joint account of two or more persons, and there is nothing to show that the interests of the parties in the deposit are otherwise, the presumption will be indulged that each of them has an interest in it, equal to the interest of any other. It would necessarily follow, as a logical sequence, that if a bank, without authority, should pay out the deposit made to the joint account of several persons, its liability to each of the joint depositors would be in accordance with the interest of the depositor in the joint deposit. If one of the joint depositors had received the benefit of any part of the fund, although improperly paid out, equal to his interest in the deposit, in good conscience, he would have no grievance against the bank. Neiman v. Beacon Trust Co. 170 Mass. 452, 64 Am. St. Rep. 315, 49 N. E. 748.

Samuel Leachman and Lizzie Leachman were not a partnership. The bank had no authority from Samuel Leachman to pay out the fund deposited to their joint account upon the check of Lizzie Leachman alone. The entire deposit was the property of Samuel Leachman, and he should therefore recover the entire sum from the appellant, unless he received the benefit of the funds, although wrongfully paid out by the bank. The proof shows very conclusively that Samuel Leachman did not receive any benefits from the money paid by appellant on the $200 check nor the $800 check, which were signed with the name of Lizzie Leachman, except that Woodfull paid $150 of the proceeds of those checks, upon the purchase price of the house which he and Samuel Leachman were contemplating buying in Louisville. Samuel Leachman was occupying this house, and, when the owner learned the facts in the case, he credited this sum upon his account for rent against Samuel Leachman. Samuel Leachman thus received the benefit of it. Neither did Lizzie Leachman receive any of the benefits of any of these checks, which she is alleged to have signed, in favor of Woodfull. Woodfull seems to have received $1,070 of the money upon the three checks alleged to have been signed by Lizzie Leachman, and in four or five days squandered it, and drew it from the bank together, and then fled the country. Lizzie Leachman admitted executing the $70 check, and proof conduces to show that Samuel Leachman assented to this, and the court below held that the bank was entitled to credit by it. Samuel Leachman did not except to that finding, and his personal representative is not complaining of it here. Lizzie Leachman denied that she signed the $200 check or the $800 check. No one saw her sign them, nor is any circumstance proven which conduces to prove that she did so. A number of persons alleged to have been experts in regard to handwriting testified that in their opinion the signature made to these checks is the handwriting of Lizzie Leachman. They arrived at this conclusion, not from being acquainted with her handwriting, or from having seen her write, but from a comparison of the signature to the $800 check and the $200 check with the signature to the $70 check and the contract authorizing Blandford & Company to sell the house and lot. The trial court, as one of its findings of fact found that she did sign the $800 check and $200 check. The fact that the $800 check bears the same date as the $1,211.55 draft, which it is alleged that Lizzie Leachman signed, although she denies same, is a strong circumstance in favor of the truth of her denial that she did not sign the $800 check. Woodfull appears to have been a great rascal, and he either forged the signature of Lizzie Leachman to the $800 and $200 checks, or else, by some fraudulent device, procured her signature to them; but, with our views of the law of this case, it is immaterial whether Lizzie Leachman executed the checks or not. The deposit being made to the joint account of Samuel Leachman and Lizzie Leachman, the bank was not authorized to pay out the funds upon the checks of Lizzie Leachman alone, and in doing so took whatever risk that might follow as to the ownership of the fund. It appearing, furthermore, that Samuel Leachman was the owner of the fund, and that Lizzie Leachman had no interest in it, Samuel Leachman is entitled to recover of appellant an amount equal to all of it, of which he did not receive the benefit. There is no doubt, however, if the bank had paid out the funds upon a check signed by both Samuel and

L.R.A.1915D.

Lizzie Leachman, it would have fully discharged its obligation.

The judgment should have been rendered in favor of Samuel Leachman alone, as the written opinion of the trial judge adjudges that he is entitled to the recovery, but it seems from a clerical misprision the judgment is entered in favor of the plaintiff, which might be construed to include Lizzie Leachman, but the appellant is in no way prejudiced by this fact, and this might have been corrected in the court below. The only person whom the fact can prejudice was Samuel Leachman, and neither he nor his personal representative complains of it here. Gardner v. Alexander, 159 Ky. 713, 169 S. W. 486.

The judgment below being in accordance with the views set out in this opinion, it is therefore affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

BENJAMIN RICE FORMAN

v.

SEWERAGE AND WATER BOARD OF
NEW ORLEANS.

(135 La. 1031, 66 So. 351.)

Municipal corporation — compelling payment of debt.

1. The legislature may compel a municipal corporation to pay a debt which is equitable in character, though not binding in law, but it has no power to compel such a corporation to pay a claim with respect to which it is under no obligation, moral or equitable; and the less so where the issue of obligation vel non has been finally decided between the parties by a court of last resort, and where the fund from which the payment is claimed has been placed by the Constitution under a particular control, and dedicated to particular uses which do not include the payment of the claim in question. Same — costs of suit — benefit.

2. A municipal corporation incurs no obligation, legal, moral, or equitable, with respect to the costs and attorneys' fees in a suit instituted by the state to forfeit the charter of a private corporation and to withdraw a monopolistic franchise which it had Headnotes by MONROE, Ch. J.

Note. — Power of legislature to compel payment by municipal corporations of nonlegal demands.

The earlier cases on this question are contained in the note to State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams, 48 L.R.A. 465, covering the general subject, "Power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities and to granted, and the holder of which it found violating the terms of the grant and using the franchise for the oppression of those whom it was intended to benefit, even though, as a result of the suit, the municipal corporation obtained without expense a privilege (of establishing a water, sewerage, and drainage system) for which otherwise, in expropriating the franchise in question, it would have had to pay heavily.

(October 19, 1914.)

A PPEAL by the executor and heirs of B. R. Forman, deceased, from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans, in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover compensation for services rendered by decedent in a suit in-control their local administration and property."

The present note is strictly limited to cases treating of the power of the legislature to compel a municipal corporation to pay a debt or demand equitable in character, but not binding in law, and also debts or demands with respect to which the municipality is under no obligation, moral or equitable. It does not cover the question as to the constitutionality of statutes purporting to cure defects or irregularities in municipal contracts or proceedings. For cases on that question, see note in 48 L.R.A. 476.

Generally, as to rights and remedies where contracts, bonds, or other instruments of municipal corporation are invalid, see note to Hagerman v. Hagerman, L.R.A. 1915A, 904, and notes there referred to.

Equitable or moral claims not binding in law.

The rule as stated by McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 1, § 237, is that the payment of a debt may be enforced when equitable in character, although it may not be binding in law, and is even unenforceable in law or equity.

And as said by Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th ed. vol. 1, § 123, the cases on this subject, when carefully examined, seem to the author to go no further, probably, than to assert the doctrine that it is competent for the legislature to compel municipal corporations to recognize or pay debts or claims which are not binding in strict law, and which, for technical reasons, could not be enforced in equity, but which nevertheless are just and equitable in their character and involve a moral obligation.

The following cases support the proposition that the legislature may compel municipalities to pay debts or claims not strictly binding in law, but just and equitable in their character and involving a moral obligation:

Thus, an act validating and providing for the enforcement of equitable and just claims for materials furnished to complete a natural gas plant after the exhaustion of L.R.A. 1915D.

stituted by the State against the New Orleans Waterworks Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. L. Hughes, Hall, Monroe, & Lemann, M. D. Dimitry, and Joseph Lautenschlaeger, for appellants:

The power to impose upon the sewerage and water board the duty of paying Mr. Forman for his services rests in the legislature, unless there is some particular constitutional inhibition preventing same.

New Orleans v. Clark (Jefferson City Gaslight Co. v. Clark) 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521; People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343; Guilford v. Chenango County, 18 Barb. 615, 13 N. Y. 143; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 379, 380; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 685, 698; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 123; bonds under an enabling act was in Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. Toledo, 53 Fed. 329, held not invalid as conferring upon the city burdens without consent or consideration, or as conferring new corporate powers.

So, statutes validating contracts for service made by counties without authority were in Erskine v. Steele County, 87 Fed. 630, affirmed in 39 C. C. A. 173, 98 Fed. 215, held not unconstitutional as an exercise of judicial power, or as depriving the county of its property without due process of law, or as violating the provision forbidding donations to individuals. The court said that "seizing upon the duty that, in good conscience, rested upon the county to pay for the service which it had received, the legislature, by virtue of its authority over the municipality as a public agency of the state, ratified its act, and thereby changed its moral duty into a legal obligation. Its act was formative, not judicial. The want of power in a municipal corporation to enter into a contract is usually disclosed for the first time by an adverse decision in the courts, and if it should be held that such a decision precludes the legislature from curing the defect, retroactive legislation would be defeated in those cases in which it has heretofore been most frequently used, and in which it has its highest justification. Such is not the law."

It is decided in Merchants' Nat. Bank v. East Grand Forks, 94 Minn. 246, 102 N. W. 703, that the state can compel any of its political subdivisions to recognize and pay obligations which are not cognizable in any court of law, but which are based upon considerations so thoroughly equitable and moral as to deserve and receive favorable legislative consideration; that an act of the legislature may constitutionally require a city to pay a third person to whom a contractor assigned outstanding warrants signed by a mayor and indorsed by the city treasurer as payable in the future, which are based on estimates issued by a city engineer, upon whom the contract confers large, if not conclusive, powers of determination, and approved by the city council; the curative effect of such an act is here held ap-

United States v. Realty Co. 163 U. S. 427-443, 41 L. ed. 215-220, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1120; Erskine v. Steele County, 87 Fed. 630; 1 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 237, p. 536; Utter v. Franklin, 172 U. S. 424, 43 L. ed. 501, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 183; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 43 L. ed. 796, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513.

There is no violation of the Constitution, as such contract or agreement as Mr. Forman had with the state through the attorney general was not without, but precisely with, "express authority of law," and was a legally authorized agreement.

State v. Russell, 26 La. Ann. 68; State ex rel. Stewart v. Reid, 113 La. 890, 37 So. 866.

Mr. Walter L. Gleason for appellee.

Monroe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by the late B. R. Forman, shortly before his death, and is now prosecuted by the dative executor of his last will and his heirs of age, under the authority of act No. 115 of 1912, which is entitled and reads as follows:

"An Act to Provide for the Compensation of Benjamin Rice Forman for his Services in the Case of the State of Louisiana v. New Orleans Waterworks Company, and to Make it the Duty of the Sewerage and Water Board of New Orleans to Pay Such Compensation as May Be Agreed on or Fixed by Final Judgment of Court, with 5 Per Cent Interest from 5 June, 1902. The Judgment Fixing plicable to the right of recovery based on a detailed examination of the legal effects of the facts that the warrants exceeded the statutory limits of city indebtedness; that no money was in the city treasury to pay the warrants and no provision made for obtaining it; that no bond was given as required by statute, to pay claims for work and material; and of the legal effect of the claim that the contract was not performed, and that the work done was of no value, but was a positive injury, to the city.

It is held in Vasser v. George, 47 Miss. 713, competent for the legislature to tax the district, which is the real debtor, for debts contracted for levees on the Mississippi river, and that it may determine in favor of the creditor's claim, upon grounds of equity and justice, without regard to its validity in a court of law.

Although the court had declared invalid a claim against a town for the construction of a bridge, because of failure of a town officer to strictly pursue statutory proceedings, an act of the legislature empowering the contractor to bring suit against the town to recover a fair and reasonable compensation for work done and material furnished was, in Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Attica, 119 N. Y. 204, 23 N. E. 542, held constitutional. The court stated that the principle that claims supported by a moral obligation and founded in justice, where the power exists to create them, but the proper statutory proceedings are not strictly pursued, or for any reason are informal and effective, may be legalized by the legislature and enforced against the municipality through the judicial tribunal, is now well settled.

While it was not proved in Re 80th Street, 31 How. Pr. 99, that a contract to grade a street which was to go to the lowest bidder was procured by a fraudulent conspiracy and collusion between the contractor and street commissioner, the court stated that even had such been the case, the legislature could have legalized the assessment and required the city to pay the money due on the contract.

In People ex rel. Kellmer v. New York, 3 Misc. 131, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1060, a certain L.R.A.1915D.

firm supplied furniture to the city fire department. One of the members of the firm was at the time an alderman, and by force of statute prohibiting certain officers therein named from being interested in any contract with the city, the transaction with such firm was made illegal, so that no recovery could be had upon it. To remove this obstacle to the collection of the demand, the legislature passed an enabling act authorizing the board of estimate and apportionment to examine the claim and to fix and determine what sum was justly due and owing, and right in equity and justice to be paid to the firm, and a statute of limitation was not to be regarded as a bar to the demand. The act was upheld as a valid exercise of legislative power. As said in Guilford v. Chenango County, 13 N. Y. 149: "The legislature is not confined in its appropriation of the public moneys . . . to cases in which a legal demand exists. . . . It can thus recognize claims founded in equity and justice in the largest sense of these terms, or in gratitude or charity."

The legislature may impose upon a city the liability for the service of counsel employed by its chamberlain to obtain possession of books, papers, and securities which his predecessor after removal refused to hand over, the city being interested in the result of the contest for the funds, and the expense of the litigation being indirectly advantageous to the defendant, who had exercised the power of removal and appointment. Stemmler v. New York, 179 N. Y. 473, 72 N. E. 581.

Where a city incurred liability largely in excess of appropriations and charter limitations, it was held in Syracuse v. Hubbard, 64 App. Div. 587, 72 N. Y. Supp. 802, appeal dismissed in 168 N. Y. 668, 61 N. E. 1128, that the legislature had power to charge upon the city the payment of the claims constituting the deficiency, so far as there was a legal or equitable basis for the same.

An act of the legislature, in recognizing a claim technically illegal, but morally meritorious, in that the city had the benefit of the materials charged for, namely, feed used for its horses was in People ex rel.

the Amount May be Enforced by Mandamus and May Be Satisfied by the Delivery of an Equal Amount of Public Improvement Bonds.

"Section 1. . . . That it is hereby made the legal duty of the sewerage and water board of New Orleans, created by act No. 6, of 1899, to pay to Benjamin Rice Forman a just compensation for his services rendered in the case of the State of Louisiana v. New Orleans Waterworks Company, in the civil district court, parish of Orleans, in the supreme court of Louisiana and in the Supreme Court of the United States, the amount to be fixed by consent, or, in case they cannot agree, then, by final judgment of court, with 5 per cent per annum interest, from 5 June, 1902, when the mandate from the Supreme Court of the United States was filed in the supreme court of Louisiana.

"Section 2. . . . The judgment that may be rendered in the favor of Benjamin Rice Forman, against the sewerage and water board under this act, may be enforced by mandamus against it, and, in the judgment fixing the amount, the court shall order the sewerage and water board to issue warrants or drafts on the board of liquidation of the city debt for the amount thereof, with interest and costs added, and it shall be the duty of said board of liquidation of city debt to pay such warrants or drafts.

"Section 3. . . . That the amount of such compensation agreed on, or the amount Wiffler v. Miller, 68 Misc. 445, 124 N. Y. Supp. 368, held to be within the constitutional power of that body, within the doctrine of the court of appeals in Re Borup, 182 N. Y. 222, 108 Am. St. Rep. 796, 74 N. E. 838. In that case the court held that it was competent for the legislature to pass an act requiring towns to pay to landowners damages for changes of highway grades previously made, although, when such a change was made, no such liability existed, or could under any law have been imposed or assumed. The court in that case said: "There is no provision of the Constitution that restricts the legislature from providing for the payment by a municipality of claims against it that are founded in equity and justice and which could have been authorized originally."

A statute which compelled a city to assess as part of the cost, work done under a contract which was fraudulent in its inception, was never complied with, and was finally abandoned, was upheld in Re Cullen, 53 Hun, 534, 6 N. Y. Supp. 625, affirmed without opinion in 119 N. Y. 628. The court stated that the case of the town of Guilford v. Chenango County, 13 N. Y. 143, set out in note in 48 L.R.A. 474, has been followed and cited with approval in too many cases to be now questioned, and upholds the constitutional right of the legislature to pass such an act.

The legislature may legalize an equitable claim for work constituting a city purpose, invalid because not in conformity to charter regulations, although such claim has been judicially determined invalid. People ex rel. Dady v. Prendergast, 144 App. Div. 308, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1082, modified in 203 N. Y. 1, 96 N. E. 103, with respect to comptroller's consideration and certification of illegal claims. This court, speaking of the cases Conlin v. San Francisco, 99 Cal. 17, 21 L.R.A. 474, 37 Am. St. Rep. 17, 33 Pac. 753, and Conlin v. San Francisco, 114 Cal. 404, 33 L.R.A. 752, 46 Pac. 279, states that "each of these decisions relates to a statute which directed a board of supervisors to audit and allow at a defined sum a claim against the county for work done for the L.R.A.1915D.

county, but which was invalid because of failure to observe the statutory regulations as to the letting of public contracts. The legislation in question was held unconstitutional by the supreme court of California as an attempt to make a gift or gratuity of public funds. . . . In both of these cases the California court declined to recognize any distinction between a mere gratuity and the payment of a claim resting upon a moral obligation, but without enforceable legal basis. As before indicated, a broader rule of interpretation has been applied in this state, and one which commends itself to a common sense of justice."

The principle that the legislature may render valid a contract made by a municipal corporation, though ultra vires at the time it was made, if the contract is one which the legislature might originally have authorized, applies with peculiar force to the case of a contract relating to a work in which the public is interested and which is for the public benefit, after it has been executed. O'Brian v. Baltimore County, 51 Md. 15.

A statute is valid that requires a township to pay a debt that is morally, but not legally, due from it to an individual, for work done upon a public street. Union Twp. v. Rader, 39 N. J. L. 509. In the above case the court said: "Antecedently, then, to the enactment of this second law, a duty existed in a portion of the inhabitants of this township to pay this claim; and it has been repeatedly decided by the courts of the highest authority that the legislature has the undoubted right to compel a corporation of this character to pay a debt which, although not legally enforceable, carries with it the force of a moral obligation. . . . The contract out of which the debt in question issued was palpably ultra vires as it was made by a body having no legal existence; but it was nevertheless an object beneficial to the locality now sought to be burdened for its payment, and which object could, beyond all question, have been legislatively authorized."

It is within the power of the legislature to dispense with formalities contained in of such judgment as may be rendered by authority of this act, may be satisfied by the delivery of an equal amount of public improvement bonds authorized by act No. 6, 1899, and subsequent acts, amendatory thereof."

The general assembly had previously passed a somewhat similar act (No. 210 of 1906), and a somewhat similar suit was instituted and prosecuted to final judgment in this court. Forman v. Sewerage & Water Bd. 119 La. 49, 43 So. 908, 909, 910, 12 Ann. Cas. 773. But the act so passed concluded as follows: "Provided that nothing in this act shall be construed to mean that a right or cause of action is created in favor of said Forman against said board. The intention being to give him the right to enforce any cause of action that he may have either in law or equity."

And this court, in deciding the case, said: "There can be no doubt that the services of plaintiff were immensely valuable, and insured enormously to the benefit of the defendant board and of the people of the city of New Orleans, and, incidentally, of the whole state. There can be no doubt, also, that the task which plaintiff undertook and successfully accomplished was gigantic, in respect both of the mountain of work to be done and of the legal ability required to do it, and there can be no doubt that plaintiff ought to be remunerated from some source; but it is equally plain that no right of action has ever arisen in his favor against the defendant board. Plaintiff was the charter, and give contractors their equitable right to compensation for services rendered or materials furnished in good faith for the public benefit. State ex rel. Cleveland v. Board of Finance & Taxn. 38 N. J. L. 259.

It is stated in Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okla. 188, 21 L.R.A. 841, 31 Pac. 190, that the legislature may compel a municipal corporation to pay a debt which has any moral or meritorious basis to rest on. It is held in this case that a statute providing for the payment by a village of debts of a provisional organization which it has succeeded is not special legislation changing or amending a charter, or granting special privileges or immunities within the prohibition of 24 Stat. at L. 170, chap. 818, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 3479, relating to territorial legislatures. The act, states the court, simply recognizes a moral obligation on its part to pay certain debts created by its predecessor, from which it receives some advantage or benefit, and for which it is not legally liable, and provides a speedy and inexpensive method of determining the amount, and authorizes the levy of taxes for raising the revenues to meet and pay the same (compensation due referees for adjudging claims against a city).

The power of the city to legalize a moral obligation is upheld in Lycoming County v. Union County, 15 Pa. 166, 53 Am. Dec. 575, where an act providing that due proportions of the expense incurred by one county in all causes removed for trial thereto, under a certain act, shall be reimbursed to such county by the counties, in their proportion, from which said causes were removed for trial.

The legislature may compel a county to pay just school claims, although barred by the statute of limitation. Caldwell County v. Harbert, 68 Tex. 321, 4 S. W. 807. In the above case the court states that there can be no constitutional objection to the power of the legislature to require a municipal subdivision of the state, such as a county, to provide for and pay any just claim against it after the lapse of such time as would ordinarily bar the claim. That, in L.R.A.1915D.

favor of and against counties, limitation will run in the absence of some statute to the contrary, does not affect the question.

The legislature may compel a city to pay a claim in favor of the state for a percentage of the liquor license fees, although barred by the statute of limitation. State v. Aberdeen, 34 Wash. 61, 74 Pac. 1022. The court states that it would be difficult to conceive of a more well-grounded moral or equitable obligation than that of the city to pay this money to the state; the state, through its legislature, has the power to say to its subordinate municipalities that what is morally and equitably due to the state shall become legally due.

So, it is held in State ex rel. McCullough v. Seattle, 60 Wash. 241, 110 Pac. 1008, that the excess of assessments over and above the legitimate costs and expense of local improvement, when collected by the city, rightfully, equitably, and morally belongs to the property owners in proportion to their payments into the special fund, and that the legislature had authority to require repayments even though the statute of limitations had fully run.

Both of the two cases last above mentioned hold that the legislature may remove the statutory bar without violating vested rights or the constitutional prohibition against the taking of property without due process of law.

Where towns illegally organized incurred an indebtedness for street improvement, and were subsequently validly reincorporated, it was held in Abernethy v. Medical Lake, 9 Wash. 112, 37 Pac. 306, and State ex rel. Traders' Nat. Bank v. Winter, 15 Wash. 407, 46 Pac. 644, that the legislature could direct such reincorporated towns to assume and pay the indebtedness.

In holding it competent for the legislature to create municipal corporations and provide that they should pay the just debts and obligations supposed to have been duly incurred by the voluntary and unauthorized organization to whose property they have succeeded, the court in Winneconne v. Winneconne, 111 Wis. 13, 86 N. W. 590, said that the legislature has plenary power to employed by the state, and not by the defendant board, and was the attorney of the state, and not of the defendant board. The suit was by the state to forfeit the charter of one of her corporations. The defendant board not only was not a party to it, but, for over a year after it had been brought, was not even in existence. The following authorities are distinctly in point, and are conclusive against a right of action of any kind, equitable or legal, arising in favor of an attorney at law for legal services without his having been employed. . . . Knowing how arduous and valuable and meritorious were the services of Mr. Forman, it is with regret that the court finds itself compelled to decide against him."

And it was held (quoting from the syllabus) that "the right of an attorney at law to demand payment for his services depends upon whether he was or not employed. He cannot recover from one who did not employ him; however valuable the result of his services may have been to such person, and especially if the person was not even a party to the suit."

provide for the organization of cities and villages by general law. It may, in the exercise of such power, attach such conditions or obligations to the grant of municipal powers and privileges as it sees fit, and may compel the recognition and assumption of obligations not binding in law, but just and equitable in their character.

Claims neither moral nor equitable.

The legislature, however, has no power to compel a municipal corporation to pay a claim against it, which it is under no obligation, moral or equitable, to pay; nor can the legislature require a court to render judgment for such claim upon proof of the amount thereof. McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 237. See also FORMAN v. SEWERAGE & WATER BD.

Thus, an act which assumes to create and impose on the county a liability for services not rendered to it, but to private individuals, in a contest in which they were in antagonism to the county as a political entity, and in which the official representatives of the county were their adversaries, is unconstitutional. Thus, it was held in Warren County v. Cowan, 60 Miss. 876, 45 Am. Rep. 424, that the legislature could not compel a county to pay for services rendered by attorneys employed by taxpayers to lower a tax rate, the court stating that if the right of the legislature to compel payments of a moral claim is conceded, such concession will not support this act, for no sort of obligation exists upon the county in question to pay for services rendered against the county as a political organism. The laborer is worthy of his hire, but to be paid by his employer.
L.R.A.1915D.

The act of 1912 under which this suit has been brought contains no such proviso as that which was contained in the act of 1906. It simply declares, without proviso or condition, that "it is hereby made the legal duty of the sewerage and water board . . . to pay to Benjamin Rice Forman a just compensation for his services rendered in the case of the State of Louisiana v. New Orleans Waterworks Company," that what may constitute such "just compensation" shall be determined by consent, or, if the parties are unable to agree, by final judgment of court, and that the payment of the judgment may be made by the sewerage and water board, or enforced against it, in a particular way. So far, therefore, as the courts are concerned, the duty which the act purports to impose upon them is merely to determine the value of the services rendered by Mr. Forman, and give judgment accordingly; and all that stands in the way of the discharge of that duty is the plea of res judicata, predicated upon the judgment above cited, and herein filed by the sewerage and water board, and the objection interposed by that board, that the

There is a class of claims against a municipal corporation which under the Constitution cannot be legalized by statute, and these claims are invalid or void because they do not arise from the performance of a "county, city, town, or village purpose" as provided by the Constitution.

Thus, a statute requiring a city to pay counsel fees expended by an officer in successfully defending against a proceeding to remove him from office or to convict him of a crime is in matter of Chapman v. New York, 168 N. Y. 80, 56 L.R.A. 846, 85 Am. St. Rep. 661, 61 N. E. 108, held unconstitutional as contravening that provision of the Constitution which declares that no county, city, town, or village shall give any moneys, or lend its name or credit in aid of any individual or corporation, nor be allowed to incur any indebtedness, except for a county, city, town, or village purpose. The court stated that there was no legal liability or moral obligation on the part of the city to pay his expenses, which were not necessary for the common good and general welfare of the municipality, nor public in character, nor so far as appears sanctioned by its citizens.

So, the passage of a statute authorizing the issuance of revenue bonds to be met by taxation, for the payment of the necessary expenses which had been previously incurred by a municipal officer in defending himself from a charge of official misconduct, is precluded by a constitutional provision forbidding any municipality to give any money to any individual, or to incur indebtedness for other than municipal purposes. Ibid. In the above case the court stated that no benefit was conferred upon the city, and there was never a legal or act of 1912 is unauthorized and unconstitutional.

The plea of res judicata covers part, but not the whole, of the case here presented, since the judgment relied on as supporting it merely held that neither the services rendered by Mr. Forman nor the act of 1906 created any cause of action, legal or equitable, in his favor, and against the sewerage and water board; whereas the suit now before the court is prosecuted under the act of 1912, and, upon the pleadings of the defendant, presents the questions whether that act, purporting, as it does, to create such cause of action, is competent and constitutional legislation.

It is clear that the judgment, to the effect that Mr. Forman had no claim, legal or equitable, against the sewerage and water board, is conclusive upon that issue, and as entirely beyond legislative control as is any other final judgment of this court, quoad persons and issues with respect to whom, and to which, the court was vested with jurisdiction, and, as completely beyond the control of the court as of the legislature; and hence there is no power lodged anywhere that can now so change the situation as to give the heirs of Mr. Forman the status of creditors, in any sense, of the sewerage and water board for the compensation here claimed.

The remaining question, and the only question left for decision, then, is whether it is competent and constitutional for the general assembly to require, and for this court to decree, that the sewerage and water board shall devote a fund which the Constitution has placed under a particular control for a particular use, to the payment of a claim, the holder of which, as thus ascertained and determined by final judgment, has no right, legal or equitable, in or to such fund. The learned counsel for plaintiffs, however, ignore the narrow compass within which the case here presented must be restricted, and, arguing at length to show that their clients have an equitable claim against the defendant, cite authorities in support of the power of the general assembly to compel its payment. Thus they say: "Briefly stated, our contention is that the sewerage and water board, being a municipal corporation, is subject to moral obligation on the part of the city to pay the claim in question.

So, it is not within the power of the legislature to require a city to pay the legal expenses of an official who has successfully defended himself against an indictment, the city being under no legal or moral obligation to reimburse the official. Re Straus, 44 App. Div. 425, 61 N. Y. Supp. 37, see also Re Jensen, 28 Misc. 378, 59 N. Y. Supp. 653, affirmed in 44 App. Div. 509, 60 N. Y. Supp. 933, and set out in note in 48 L.R.A. 476.

A statute rendering a municipality liable to a de facto officer for salary paid to a de facto officer is held unconstitutional in Stemmler v. New York, 179 N. Y. 473, 72 N. E. 581. The court in the above case states that, while this case might fall within the broad doctrine laid down in Guilford v. Chenango County, 13 N. Y. 143, and similar cases, yet with the amendments of the Constitution of 1846, adopted in 1874, the rule is now quite different. Those amendments were new, and for the first time forbade any city to give or loan its money or credit in aid of an individual, prohibited the legislature or any city from granting any extra compensation to public officers, and prevented them from employing or requiring the use of city funds for any but city purposes. The statute in question clearly falls within the inhibition of the Constitution as amended in 1874, as it required the city of New York to pay an amount for which it was not liable, legally nor in equity or in justice. It in effect provided for a mere gratuity or extra compensation to a public officer who had performed no service for the city, and had done nothing which entitled him, as against the city, to any such L.R.A.1915D.

compensation, and directed the employment of the city funds for other than city purposes.

The board of apportionment was in People ex rel. Pomeroy v. Green, 83 Barb. 390, directed to audit and allow a claim against the city of New York for services of a publisher performed under color of legal authority, and necessary and beneficial to the city, such services coming within the provisions of an act requiring the comptroller "to allow and pay the bills of the several proprietors of the newspapers in said city and county, for all city and county advertising actually done prior to January 1st, 1872." The object of this act, said the court, so far as the newspapers were concerned, evidently was to provide an appropriate procedure with an adequate remedy for the speedy liquidation and payment of all strictly legal obligations, and also of all just and honest claims of an equitable, if not of a technically legal, character. There was the fullest intention of providing for publishers who had acted under legal authority, or at least in good faith under color of such authority, but not of presenting any part of the public funds to those who had acted in palpable violation of law and without a shadow of authority. Further on the court said that a large part of the publications for which claims were presented were made apparently without any contract, express or implied, and without any legal authority or even official request. The allowance of such claims would be a pure gratuity, and the court would not by mandamus—a writ which issues only in cases of unquestionable legal right—direct the board even to consider them.

J. D. C.

the control of the legislature in all respects, save in so far as the act creating it was embedded in the organic law of the state and thereby taken beyond the domain of legislative control. The dedication of the funds arising from the tax to the purpose of acquiring a water system either by construction or purchase was, no doubt, crystallized in this manner, and therefore removed from the possibility of legislative interference. But that crystallization went no further. It did not preclude the legislature from applying those funds to the very purposes to which the tax was dedicated. Some control over the subject-matter by the legislature was undoubtedly reserved. This reservation justly appears in the carefully reserved right to amend the act of 1899, a right which is expressly ratified and confirmed by the constitutional amendment itself. The purpose was served, no doubt; the make-up of the board was sacred."

Both points were so decided in State ex rel. Saunders v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838, 33 So. 793; but beyond this the legislature was free. Let us now ascertain what the "sacred purpose" was. It was: "To acquire by construction or purchase a waterworks system for the city of New Orleans."

A recognized part of such an undertaking was the clearing of "the ground for the new edifice. . . ."

"Before the new water system could be constructed, it was essential to clear the site. The site was obstructed by the monopoly franchise of the old waterworks company. The removal of that obstruction was so plainly necessary, and the cost of the removal so plainly a part of the object for which the special tax was levied, that act No. 6 of 1899 carried, as § 15, a special provision expressly authorizing the purchase, or the expropriation, of that franchise, and expressly reciting that same could be paid for by the assumption of the outstanding bonds of the old company. The public valued the property of the old company at between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. If, therefore, the site had been cleared by expropriation, that clearance would have cost the special tax fund that sum of money. . . ."

"If Mr. Forman's services in removing the monopoly franchise of the New Orleans Waterworks Company were not strictly in line with the purpose of the people and their petition to construct a water, sewerage, and drainage system, there is nothing 'strictly in line' with it. It was the suit brought by Mr. Forman that provoked and inspired the taxpayers' petition. The people awoke to the fact that maybe they could hope to own a system which had previously owned them. . . ."

"There can be no question that it [the claim here asserted] is founded on the receipt and acceptance of property and the obligation, thence arising, to pay for the same. . . ."

"As to the point that 'the sewerage and water board was not in existence when the suit [to forfeit the charter of the waterworks company] was brought,' there is nothing to it. If there is such an equitable foundation for the act as to warrant the legislature in directing payment for the service, it may impose the duty upon the board, whether then created or not."

They then quote McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 1, § 237, p. 536, to the effect that "the payment of legitimate claims against the municipal corporation may be compelled by the legislature. The courts permit the legislature to use the power of compulsory taxation for this purpose. The payment of a debt may be enforced when equitable in character, although it may not be binding in law, and even unenforceable in law or equity."

But, no doubt, considering it inapplicable to their case, the counsel do not quote the following from the same volume and section, to wit: "But the legislature has no power to compel a municipal corporation to pay a claim made against it, and which it is under no obligation, moral or equitable, to pay; nor can the legislature require a court to render judgment for such claim upon proof of the amount thereof."

The instant case is the more clearly within the rule last above stated, for the additional reason that the fund from which it is proposed that the claim of the plaintiff shall be paid, and the only fund upon which the sewerage and water board can draw, is placed, not by legislative action alone, but by the Constitution of the state, in the custody of the board of liquidation of the city debt, to be drawn upon only for the establishment and maintenance of the water, sewerage, and drainage systems of New Orleans, and for the payment in principal and interest of the bonds issued in that behalf. The contention that the compensation of Mr. Forman should, from an equitable point of view, be regarded as among those uses presented the main, if not the sole, issue in the case heretofore decided, and that issue, as we have seen, was decided adversely to the contention, and became a "thing adjudged." The decisions cited by the learned counsel support the doctrine as stated in the excerpt from McQuillin, quoted by them, but do not bear upon this case, since the defendant now before the court incurred no obligation whatever with respect to the cost of the proceeding by the state to withdraw the monopolistic franchise which it had granted to the waterworks company, when it found that company violating the terms of the grant and using the franchise as a means of oppression; and we find no authorities which hold that a legislature can compel the diversion of a fund, the destination of which has been fixed by the Constitution, to the payment of a claim which quoad, and contradictorily with, the parties by and against whom, respectively, it is made, there has been a final judgment decreeing it to be neither legal nor equitable. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

O'Neill, J., takes no part, not having been a member of the court when the case was argued.

Petition for rehearing denied November 16, 1914.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

H. H. KENNEDY

v.

W. L. YOUNG, State Examiner of State Banks, Appt.

J. S. BROCK, Jr., Intervener.

(136 La. 674, 67 So. 547.)

Estoppel — of bank to deny statements of officers.

The officers of a bank will not be heard

Headnote by SOMMERVILLE, J.

Note. — Right of bank to contradict entries in its books or statements in public reports.

It will be observed that this note is not concerned with the personal liability of officers of the bank, but only with that of the bank itself.

As to the power of a bank officer to bind his bank by an agreement that the liability of a party to commercial paper shall not be enforced, see State Bank v. Forsyth, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 501, and note.

The only case found in which the facts are similar to those involved in KENNEDY v. YOUNG is Rankin v. City Nat. Bank, 208 U. S. 541, 52 L. ed. 610, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346, affirming 75 C. C. A. 343, 144 Fed. 587, in which it appeared that the National Bank of Guthrie had made excessive loans to certain individuals; that the bank examiner complained and directed that the loans be reduced; that thereupon the president wrote to the defendant bank explaining the situation and proposing to give his personal note to defendant for $30,000, which sum was to be credited to his bank in a special account not subject to check, but to be kept until the note was retired; that the proposition was accepted, the note taken and credited to the president's personal account with defendant, in which account the money of the Guthrie bank was habitually kept as a special deposit, apart from the general deposit subject to check; that the president then gave his check against the account to the Guthrie bank, which credited it to bills receivable, the whole amount on deposit with defendant, the general deposit subject to check, and the special deposit not subject to check, being made to appear on the books aggregated as a general account, obviously for the purpose of deceiving the bank examiner; the objectionable loans were then taken off the books; but it does not appear

(February 8, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Washington, in favor of plaintiff and intervener in a suit to prevent the payment to the special liquidator of the Commercial Bank of a certain amount appearing on the books of the Bank of Angie to its credit as a deposit. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. St. Clair Adams, for appellant:

Officers and directors of a bank who have made sworn statements to the state examiner of state banks, and published the same, cannot be permitted thereafter to contradict these statements and testify as to the falsity of the record so made by them.

Wright v. Gurley, 133 La. 745, 63 So. 310; Pauly v. O'Brien, 69 Fed. 460; Brodrick v. Brown, 69 Fed. 497; Briggs v. Stafford, 14 La. 381; Florance v. Twichell, 5 La. Ann. 16.

A bank officer is estopped from denying his sworn statements, published reports, books, and papers, upon which the state examiner of state banks, third persons, and the public in general have acted.

Wright v. Gurley, 133 La. 745, 63 So. 310.

The courts will not extricate a bank from a situation created by the deceit, fraud, and misconduct of its officers, but will "leave him bound who has bound himself."

Pauly v. O'Brien, 69 Fed. 480; Landwirth v. Shaphran, 47 La. Ann. 336, 16 So. 839; Wright v. Gurley, supra.

Messrs. Ott, Johnson, & Ott, for appellees:

The cashier of a bank has the authority to pledge the bank's deposits to secure its obligations.

Coats v. Donnell, 94 N. Y. 168.

The mere bringing of the suit in support of which the estoppel is invoked cannot be said to constitute the change of position within the meaning of the law of estoppel.

Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co. 117 La. 1, 41 So. 332.

Sommerville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Bank of Angie and the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, being in insolvent circumstances, were closed by order of the state examiner of state banks, and special agents were duly appointed to liquidate them.

whether the notes evidencing them were actually surrendered by the bank; it further appears that when the $30,000 note became due it was replaced by a demand note for $25,000 signed by the president personally, and the same agreement as to the special deposit was renewed in writing signed by the president for the Guthrie bank; that later, without knowledge of the Guthrie bank's failing condition, defendant charged the demand note to the special account, returned the note canceled, and closed the account, and on the same day the Guthrie bank failed.

This suit was brought by the receiver to recover the amount of the deposit, claiming that the transaction was a loan to the president with an attempted pledge of a deposit of the Guthrie bank, and that defendant had unlawfully appropriated the deposit to its own use in payment of the note. In addition to the agreement being signed by the president of the Guthrie bank as president, that bank recognized the special deposit in the statements of account between the banks. The court found that as between the banks no one got any money, the transaction being merely a juggle with books and paper to deceive the bank examiner; that the defendant received nothing of value, and the Guthrie bank parted with nothing of value, unless it did in fact surrender the notes evidencing the objectionable loans, which, if it did, was a transaction between it and its president with which defendant had no connection; that the transaction concerning the credit was made between the two banks, and therefore defendant was not liable. As to the illegality of the contract the court said: "In view of the statement of counsel at the argument, to the circuit L.R.A.1915D.

The plaintiff, H. H. Kennedy, a depositor in the Bank of Angie to the extent of some $7,000, presented a petition to the said examiner, objecting to the payment to the special liquidator of the Commercial Bank of the sum of $11,000, appearing on the books of the Bank of Angie to the credit of the deposit account of said Commercial Bank, for reasons which may be stated as follows:

That said sum is and was held by the Bank of Angie as collateral security for a loan of $11,660 from said bank to the Commercial Bank; that said loan was negotiated by H. D. Bickham, president of the Commercial Bank, who on January 7, 1913, signed a note for said sum in favor of the Bank of Angie, and the proceeds, the sum of $11,000, were placed directly to the credit of the Commercial Bank, under a contemporaneous agreement between said Bickham, president, and the president and cashier of the Bank of Angie, that the same were for the benefit of the Commercial Bank, and were to remain on deposit in the Bank of Angie without being subject judge, that they did not contend that the contract was illegal, a disclaimer repeated to us, and in view of the possibility that the facts were found as they were with that agreement in view, we shall not consider that aspect of the case. It would not help the plaintiff." Rankin v. City Nat. Bank, 208 U. S. 541, 52 L. ed. 610, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346.

While the transactions involved in this case and in KENNEDY v. YOUNG were quite similar, both as to the objects sought, i. e., the deception of the banking officials, and the methods used, and, in view of the statement of the Supreme Court in the Rankin Case as to the illegal feature of the transaction, there would seem to be room for an inference that it would have decided the KENNEDY CASE differently than did the supreme court of Louisiana, there is the distinguishing feature in the facts of the KENNEDY CASE as found by the court, that the agreement that the deposit should not actually be subject to check, though ostensibly so, was made between the Bank of Angie and the president of the Commercial Bank as an individual, not in behalf of his bank, so there was some ground for holding that the Commercial Bank was not a party to the fraudulent transaction, and that its books represented the transaction as it supposed it to be, while actual fraudulent reports of it were made by the bank of Angie, while in the Rankin Case the defendant bank apparently carried the account in question on its books as a special deposit not subject to check, and the bank of which plaintiff was receiver fraudulently falsified its books to deceive the bank examiner by entering the amount in question as a general deposit.

R. L. S.

to check, and as collateral security for said loan. That subsequently, on January 14, 1913, "said loan was shifted by substitution, in lieu of the H. L. Bickham note, one note of the Angie Mercantile Company, and one note of W. E. Douglas, for $5,830 each." That said substitution was agreed upon between Bickham, president of the Commercial Bank, and Douglas, individually, and as president of the Angie Mercantile Company, and as a director of said bank on one part, and W. W. Warner and R. V. McCarthy, president and cashier, respectively, of the Bank of Angie, on the other part; all subject to the same understanding and with reference to the said deposit and note of Bickham. Neither he nor Douglas nor the Angie Mercantile Company derived any benefit from said transaction; "and it was merely a subterfuge which was adopted for the purpose of obtaining money and credit for the benefit of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa."

"That all the transactions and arrangements were made without the knowledge or consent of the board of directors of the Bank of Angie. That after they had become known to the said board of directors of the Bank of Angie, they immediately began to demand the recalling of said transaction. That the president of the Bank of Angie, W. W. Warner, and the cashier, R. V. McCarthy, had no authority to bind the bank in this matter, the said loan being for an amount almost equal to the capital stock of the said Bank of Angie."

That the said Bickham, president, was acting in behalf of the said Commercial Bank, and that the said bank is estopped from claiming said credit of $11,000, "for the reason that the entire proceeds of said loan went for the benefit of the said Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, and the directors of the said Commercial Bank of Bogalusa knew or could have known that such was the case, and they further knew or could have known that at no time since said loan was made would it have been possible for the said Bank of Angie to have paid said ostensible deposit."

That the said Bickham endeavored to secure a release of a portion of said ostensible deposit for the use of the Commercial Bank, and for that purpose communicated with the president and cashier of the Bank of Angie, who emphatically refused to release any of said deposit.

The petition closes as follows: "Petitioner submits further that the purported or ostensible claim of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa against the said Bank of Angie for $11,000, as herein set out, has not been rejected, and he therefore prays L.R.A.1915D.

that you submit this objection to the payment of same to the honorable twenty-sixth judicial district court of Louisiana for Washington parish, in accordance with the provisions of § 5 of act No. 300 of the general assembly of Louisiana, for adjudication thereon."

On receiving this petition the state examiner of state banks presented his petition to the judge of said court, who ordered the same to be filed, and service made on the special agents in charge of said banks.

J. S. Brock, Jr., special agent in charge of the Bank of Angie in liquidation, intervened, and joined the plaintiff in opposing the allowance of the claim of the Commercial Bank to said deposit, and prayed that the same be rejected.

Daniel T. Cushing, special agent in charge of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, filed an answer which may be stated as follows:

1. Respondent admits that the books of the Bank of Angie show a credit of $11,000 in favor of the Commercial Bank, but denies that that sum is held by said Bank of Angie as collateral security as alleged in the petition, and further denies that the Commercial Bank borrowed said sum, or any part thereof, from the Bank of Angie.

Respondent further averred that, on the contrary, said Bank of Angie is and was indebted unto the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa in the full sum of $11,000, for the reasons:

That in December, 1912, the state examiner of state banks, on examination, found that the capital of the Commercial Bank had been impaired to the extent of $10,684, and thereupon so notified the state auditor of public accounts, who notified the officers of the bank that, unless said impairment was made good or restored within the time required by law, the bank would be closed in accordance with § 17, act No. 179 of 1902, which act was amended by act No. 152 of 1910.

That a meeting of the board of directors of the Commercial Bank was held on January 3, 1913, at which Houston D. Bickham, president, and owner of a majority of the stock of said bank, stated that he would agree individually to raise, donate, and make good to the Commercial Bank the sum of $11,000 to cover said impairment of the capital stock.

That said Bickham, pursuant to said agreement, on January 7, 1913, negotiated a loan at the Bank of Angie for $11,000 on his personal promissory note, secured by 110 shares of the capital stock of said Commercial Bank belonging to him. That by direction of Bickham the said sum was placed to the credit of the deposit account of the Commercial Bank on the books of the Angie Bank, and was also credited on the books of the Commercial Bank for the purpose of making good the impairment of its capital stock.

That the Commercial Bank notified the state bank examiner that the impairment of the capital stock had been made good in cash as required by that official, and that said deposit of $11,000 has ever since been carried on the books of the Commercial Bank as one of its live assets. That thereafter the said bank continued in business until May 28, 1913, when it was closed by the said state bank examiner.

Respondent denied the alleged parol agreement between Bickham, president, and the Bank of Angie, as set forth in the petition, and averred that the officers of the Angie bank well knew that the money was borrowed for the purpose of making good the impairment of the capital stock of the Commercial Bank, and that said bank could not borrow money on its own capital stock, and that said Bickham in said transaction was acting in his individual and personal capacity. That the Bank of Angie, its officers and agents, have always carried said deposit on their books as belonging to the Commercial Bank, and as one of the liabilities of said Bank of Angie. That said deposit was included in the liabilities of said bank, in a sworn statement furnished by its president to the state examiner of state banks on March 1, 1913, which a few days later was published in a newspaper in the parish of Washington, as directed by the statute.

Respondent pleaded that the facts stated estopped the Bank of Angie and its officers to deny said deposit, and to assert that there was any secret oral agreement that said deposit should be held as collateral security to secure the payment of the note of Bickham, as alleged in the petition. Respondent denied that the Commercial Bank was a party to the substitution of the notes on January 24, 1913, as alleged in the petition, or had any interest therein, or was privy to any of the alleged parol agreements or understandings set forth in the petition.

Respondent further averred that, if H. D. Bickham and Warner, president, and McCarthy, cashier, of the Bank of Angie, made any such agreement as set forth in article 1 of the petition, the same was against good morals, and a wilful fraud practised upon the banking department of the state of Louisiana, and that the said Bank of Angie and its officers and agents are bound by their own acts and declarations, and are estopped to urge their own turpitude.

Respondent further averred that the president and cashier of the Bank of Angie did have power and authority under its charter and by-laws to bind said bank in said transaction, as to which the Commercial Bank was an innocent third person. Respondent prayed that the plaintiff's demand be rejected, and for judgment recognizing the Commercial Bank as the owner of said deposit of $11,000, and, as such, entitled to demand and receive payment thereof. Respondent made a like answer to the petition of intervention. The case was tried, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and the intervenor as prayed for. The defendant has appealed. It was admitted that H. H. Kennedy was a depositor of the Bank of Angie, as alleged in the petition.

On January 7, 1913, Bickham executed his individual note for $11,660 to the order of the Bank of Angie, secured by shares of stock of the Commercial Bank, which was owned by him. The Bank of Angie discounted the note, and the net proceeds ($11,000) were credited to the account of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, and $660 was credited to the interest account of the Bank of Angie.

McCarthy's testimony on the subject-matter of the alleged parol agreement with H. D. Bickham is, in effect, as follows: He was cashier of the Bank of Angie on January 7, 1913, and after that date the Commercial Bank never had, on the books of the Bank of Angie, a credit of less than $11,000. The agreement between Mr. Bickham and Dr. Warner, president, was: "That the proceeds of the note were to be placed to the credit of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, and they were not to be checked against, or that they would not draw below $11,000." That the proceeds of the note were pledged to the Bank of Angie. In May, 1913, said bank refused to permit Bickham, as president of the Commercial Bank, to draw on said deposit. The witness supposed that he was dealing with Bickham as an officer of the Commercial Bank. The note of Bickham was taken up by two notes, one signed by the Angie Mercantile Company, per W. E. Douglas, president, and the other by W. E. Douglas, who was also a director of the Angie bank. Notes aggregating $11,660 were received by said bank, and charged to bills receivable. The Bickham note was marked paid, canceled, and returned to him. The debt was novated. The capital stock of the Bank of Angie was only $15,000, and the above transaction showed a loan of $11,000 to one person. On cross-examination McCarthy said: The note of Bickham was discounted, and $660 was earned as interest by the Bank of Angie. The Bickham note for $11,660 was secured by 110 shares of the stock of the Commercial Bank standing in Bickham's name. This collateral was indorsed on the back of the note, but nothing was indorsed thereon showing that the money was to be held by the Bank of Angie. There was no written agreement between Bickham and the officers of the Bank of Angie. The cashier knew nothing of Bickham's authority in the premises, except from the transaction and agreement. The loan was made as Bickham negotiated it, and the agreement was that the $11,000 was to be held by the Bank of Angie as collateral to secure the Bickham note. The cashier considered the transaction as a loan. Bickham said that he wanted the loan to use as a reserve, and that he would leave the money at the Bank of Angie as a reserve.

The sworn statement of the condition of the bank, on February 25, 1913, signed by the president and cashier, was taken from the books of the Angie bank, and was a true statement of its affairs as they stood on the books at that time. The item of liabilities in said statement was made up in part of the item of $11,000 due the Commercial Bank, which appeared on the books as an individual deposit subject to check.

The substitution of the notes was made at Bickham's suggestion, because one loan of $11,000 looked too large.

The cashier understood that the loan was for the benefit of the Commercial Bank, which appeared in the transaction only as the donee of the proceeds of the Bickham note.

The two substituted notes were secured by the same 110 shares of stock pledged to secure the Bickham note.

The cashier acted in good faith in this transaction, and the Angie bank refused to make the loan until the agreement was made to allow the money to remain in said bank as security.

Dr. W. W. Warner, former president of the Bank of Angie, as a witness, corroborated the testimony of R. V. McCarthy, the former cashier, as to the transaction of January 7, 1913, with Mr. Bickham, president of the Commercial Bank. Dr. Warner stated that the transaction was had with Mr. Bickham as the representative of the Commercial Bank, and as having entire control of its affairs; that Mr. Douglas refused to sign the two substituted notes until he knew that the money was to remain in the Bank of Angie.

Dr. Warner further testified that the L.R.A.1915D.

transaction was not fictitious, but real, and that Mr. Bickham wanted the credit "to show up as a reserve for the Commercial Bank; that the transaction was only an accommodation to said bank, and the entries on the books of the Bank of Angie did not represent real money; that said bank made no profit on the transaction, and has never received one cent from the Commercial Bank for the credit of $11,000.

Mr. Rives, assistant state bank examiner, testified that the greater part of the $11,000 went directly to the credit of interest and discount on the books of the Commercial Bank, and they do not show that said credit was the result of any check that could have been given. Mr. Rives further testified that the payment of said sum of $11,000 would have taken all the cash and reserve of the Bank of Angie.

Mr. Houston D. Bickham did not testify, and it was admitted by counsel in argument at the bar that Mr. Bickham is confined in the state penitentiary for certain violations of the banking laws, which have nothing to do with the instant case.

L. L. Richardson, former cashier of the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, testified in behalf of the defendant, in substance, as follows: "The Commercial Bank had to its credit with the Bank of Angie on January 7, 1913, more than $11,000, and the account was subject to check. Mr. McCarthy told him so. Mr. Bickham went to the Bank of Angie and got $11,000 to make good the impairment of the capital stock of the Commercial Bank, and brought back a deposit slip for that amount signed by McCarthy, cashier, reading as follows: 'Commercial Bank as a depositor with the Bank of Angie on note No. 1223 for $11,000.' This checking account never got below $11,000. The money represented by the deposit slip was credited as follows: 'Undivided profits of $10,684.83,' and $316 to the personal account of Houston D. Bickham. The Commercial Bank did not borrow any money to make good the impairment of its capital stock. The item of resources of said bank on February 25, 1913, sworn to by witness and Bickham, and published, did not include an item of $11,000 borrowed from the Bank of Angie."

On cross-examination the same witness testified that the $11,000 was the personal money of Mr. Bickham, out of which he donated $10,684 to the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa; that he knew that Mr. Bickham borrowed the money, because he left the bank to go to the Bank of Angie for that purpose, but that he did not know what agreement there was between Mr.

Bickham and said bank; and that Mr. Bickham said that he had borrowed the money himself. The witness further testified that his bank got no interest on the loan from the Bank of Angie, but paid interest on the loan after January 1st, because "we carried it as a reserve."

Mr. McCarthy, in rebuttal, testified that he never told Mr. Richardson that the deposit of $11,000 was subject to check, but, on the contrary, informed him of the details of the agreement of January 7, 1913.

Mr. W. L. Young's testimony shows that he, as state bank examiner, notified the Commercial Bank to make good the impairment of its capital, and told Bickham, the president, that his bank could not borrow money for that purpose, and that any sum of money advanced by officers or stockholders of said bank to make good said impairment would be considered a donation.

It appears from the minutes of the board of directors of the Commercial Bank that Bickham, as an individual, undertook to raise the sum of $11,000 to make good the impairment of the capital stock of said bank. The evidence shows that he discounted his own note, secured by his own shares of stock, and that he had the proceeds put to the credit of the Commercial Bank in the Bank of Angie.

The Bank of Angie issued a deposit slip for the $11,000 in the name of the Commercial Bank, which was delivered to and accepted by the Commercial Bank.

This was, in effect, a donation made by Bickham to the Commercial Bank, of which he was president, in accordance with the requirement of the state examiner of state banks, in order that the capital stock of that bank should be restored, so that it might continue to do business.

A similar condition of affairs existed in the case of the People's Bank of New Orleans, which is reported in 133 La. 745, 63 So. 310, in the case entitled Wright v. Gurley, where it was held that the deposits of checks of stockholders to make good the capital stock were donations to the bank, and could not be recovered by the stockholders making the deposits.

If there was a secret oral agreement between Bickham and the officers of the Bank of Angie, as testified to by the latter, and as already set forth herein, the Commercial Bank was not a party thereto, and it is not bound thereby. It was an innocent third person to such agreement, and it is not estopped to claim the donation made by Bickham to it.

The Bank of Angie, through its officers, sent to the state examiner of state banks L.R.A.1915D.

a sworn statement, and under the heading of "Liabilities" was $11,000 among the "individual deposits subject to check." That statement was duly published in a newspaper of Franklinton. The books of the bank showed, and the cashier swore to the assistant bank examiner, that this deposit belonged to the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa. The latter bank made a similar statement, and its cashier swore on the trial of the cause that said amount was subject to check by his bank.

These entries on the books of the banks and these sworn statements must prevail over a secret oral agreement which may have been made between the president of one bank with the officers of another bank, which had for its object the concealing of the truth and the deception of the public and the state officials charged with the examination of the said banks with a view of ascertaining their solvency. It would be against public policy and good conscience to hold otherwise.

The Bank of Angie was a quasi public institution, conducting business under limitations and restrictions contained in statutes of the state, and it was subject to examination by, and supervision of, state officers. Its regularly published statements were sworn to by its officers, and these officers will not be permitted to afterwards contradict these statements, and be heard to testify to the falsity of the records made by them.

If such a course of conduct were sanctioned, it would be impossible for the state officers, the public, and the court to ascertain the true condition of any bank. Rev. Stat. 877; Wright v. Gurley, 133 La. 745, 63 So. 310; Landwirth v. Shaphran, 47 La. Ann. 336, 16 So. 839; Pauly v. O'Brien (C. C.) 69 Fed. 460.

The policy of the law will not allow the officers of the Bank of Angie to gainsay or deny that which they have said and done in their written documents, book entries, and sworn statements to officers of the state and to the public. Briggs v. Stafford, 14 La. 381; Mathews v. Boland, 5 Rob. (La.) 200; Garthwaite v. Seip, 23 La. Ann. 218; Freeman v. Savage, 2 La. Ann. 269; Morse v. United States, 98 C. C. A. 321, 174 Fed. 539, 20 Ann. Cas. 938.

The legal title to the $11,000 was vested in the Commercial Bank at the time that Bickham, the president, proposed to make good the impairment of the capital stock of the bank by a donation, which was agreed to by resolution of the board of directors, and when he (Bickham) deposited that sum in the Bank of Angie to the credit of the Commercial Bank, and a deposit slip for the amount was issued by the former to the latter bank, and was accepted.

The resolution of the board of directors referred to, in accepting the donation from Bickham, provided "that this amount be paid in as required by law." The bank examiner required that it be paid in cash. And this resolution shows that the Commercial Bank was a stranger to the oral agreement sworn to by the officers of the Bank of Angie which they said existed between them and Bickham.

If the depositors and stockholders of the Bank of Angie sustain loss, it is by reason of the fault and wrongdoings of those to whom they intrusted the management of their business; and they must look to the makers of the notes whose notes were substituted for that of Bickham, when he borrowed the $11,000 and had it placed to the credit of the Commercial Bank, on the books of the Bank of Angie.

It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment appealed from be reversed, and that there be judgment in favor of D. T. Cushing, special agent, liquidating the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, Louisiana, and against petitioner, H. H. Kennedy, and intervener, J. S. Brook, Jr., special agent, liquidating the Bank of Angie, rejecting their demands.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Commercial Bank of Bogalusa, in liquidation, is the owner, and as such entitled to the deposit of $11,000, appearing on the books of the Bank of Angie, and that said Commercial Bank is entitled to demand and receive same from the Bank of Angie in due course of the liquidation of that bank, with costs in both courts.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

S. L. HEROLD et al.

v.

PARISH BOARD OF SCHOOL DIRECTORS et al.

(136 La. 1034, 68 So. 116.)

Constitutional law — religious liberty.

1. The Constitution of the state of Louisiana.

Headnotes by SOMMERVILLE, J.

Note. — Religious exercises or instructions in public schools.

This is a continuation of a note on the same subject, appended to Church v. Bullock, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 860.

Except HEROLD v. PARISH BOARD, the only case in point, decided since the earlier note, is People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 442, 92 L.R.A. 1915D.

iana provides that every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, and that no preference shall ever be given to, or any discrimination made against, any church, sect, or creed of religion, or any form of religious faith or worship.

School — reading Bible — validity.

2. The reading of the Bible, including the Old and New Testaments, in the public schools of the state, is a preference given to Christians, and a discrimination made against Jews.

(March 22, 1915.)

CERTIFICATION by the Court of Appeals for the Parish of Caddo to the Supreme Court of questions arising upon appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court setting aside a judgment enjoining defendants from enforcing or carrying into effect a resolution requesting the principals and teachers to open morning sessions of the public schools by reading from the Bible, without comment, and the offering of the Lord's Prayer. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thigpen & Herold, for plaintiffs:

The exercises complained of cannot be conducted without violating article 4 of the Constitution.

Cooley, Const. 6th ed. pp. 571 et seq.

It is the established jurisprudence of Louisiana that Christianity is not part of the law of the state, which treats all religions alike, and accords to their followers equal rights in every respect.

State v. Bott, 31 La. Ann. 665, 33 Am. Rep. 224; Minden v. Silverstein, 36 La. Ann. 917; Lehman v. Lehman, 130 La. 962, 58 So. 829; Shreveport v. Levy, 26 La. Ann. 671, 21 Am. Rep. 553.

Exercises in the public schools, consisting of Bible reading, constitute a violation of and infringement upon the religious liberty and religious equality of the Jewish and Catholic children attending the public schools.

1 Jones, Ev. § 130, p. 637; Abbott, Proof of Facts, 634; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 392, 19 L.R.A. 433, 32 L.R.A. 838, 33

N. E. 251, 19 Ann. Cas. 220, in which it was held that the reading of the King James version of the Bible, repeating the Lord's Prayer in the language used in that version, and singing hymns, as a part of the exercises of a public school, violates a provision in the state Constitution forbidding the appropriation of any public fund or the donation of money by the state in aid of sectarian purposes, and that requiring the N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; Hilton v. Roy-lance, 25 Utah, 129, 58 L.R.A. 723, 95 Am. St. Rep. 821, 69 Pac. 660; People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 445, 92 N. E. 251, 19 Ann. Cas. 220.

Stated exercises consisting of reading from the Bible and the offering of the Lord's Prayer constitute a Protestant form of religious worship, and, hence, that preference in its favor is prohibited by law.

People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 446, 92 N. E. 251, 19 Ann. Cas. 220; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 338, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967.

Messrs. Foster & Webb and J. D. Wilkinson, for defendants:

It is not in violation of the constitutional provisions of the state to open the school exercises by reading passages from the Bible.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 30; Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560, 42 L.R.A. 536, 77 N. W. 250; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 470, 578, 579; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256; State ex rel. Freeman v. Scheve, 65 Neb. 853, 59 L.R.A. 927, 91 N. W. 846, 93 N. W. 169; Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist. 120 Ky. 608, 69 L.R.A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 539, 87 S. W. 792, 9 Ann. Cas. 36; Moore v. Monroe, 64 Iowa, 367, 52 Am. Rep. 444, 20 N. W. 475; Church v. Bullock, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 860, 109 S. W. 115; Billard v. Board of Education, 69 Kan. 53, 66 L.R.A. 166, 105 Am. St. Rep. 148, 76 Pac. 422, 2 Ann. Cas. 521; Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 228, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; 2 Story, Const. p. 605; Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 233.

Sommerville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The judges of the court of appeals, second circuit, certify certain questions to the court in this case, with a request for instructions. The entire record was ordered up for consideration by the court; and the case will now be disposed of.

The three plaintiffs are resident taxpayers of Caddo parish. Two of them are parents of children who are in attendance at the public schools of that parish; and the third is the parent of children whom he expects and intends to send to said schools for their education.

Sidney L. Herold and Henry Heilperin, two of the plaintiffs, are Jews; and the third plaintiff, James B. Marston, is a Catholic. They complain of the action of the parish board of school directors in adopting the following resolution:

"Whereas, it is a fact well established among us that the children in our public schools are at the most impressionable age for receiving and retaining good or evil; and

"Whereas, the lessons and truths contained within the Holy Bible are acknowledged by right-thinking people as being of paramount value in creating and maintaining a better moral atmosphere in every community, and also in the individual life: Therefore, be it

"Resolved that the principals and teachers be requested to open daily sessions of the public schools of Caddo parish with readings from the Bible, without note or comment, and, when the leader is willing to do so, the Lord's Prayer shall be offered."

They allege that the Bible referred to in the foregoing resolution is the King James version, including the New, as well as the Old, Testament; that the reading of the Bible and the offering of the Lord's Prayer are exercises which are prohibited by the Constitution of the state, in articles 4 and 53, which provide that "every person has the natural right to worship God, according to the dictates of his conscience, and no law shall be passed respecting an establishment of religion."

And that ". . . No preference shall ever be given to, nor any discrimination made against, any church, sect, or creed of religion, or any form of religious faith or worship. . . ."

They further allege that the resolution of the board "compels the children of our petitioners Marston and Heilperin to join in forms of worship which are contrary to the dictates of their own consciences, and that it interferes with their natural right to children to listen to the reading and join in the prayer and hymns violates a provision in the state Constitution guarantying "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination." The court discusses many of the decisions by the courts of other states from its own point of view, thereby assisting materially to clarify the question. See opinion in that case for further discussion.

On question of public aid to sectarian in- L.R.A.1915D.

stitutions, see note to Dakota Synod v. State, 14 L.R.A. 418.

On the question of use of school buildings for religious meetings, etc., see note in 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593. Also see State ex rel. Gilbert v. Dilley, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1182.

On question of wearing religious garb or uniforms in public schools, see note to Connell v. Gray, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 337, and note to which reference is there made.

J. W. M.

worship God according to their own religious conviction;" "that such services constitute a sectarian form of worship; namely, the form of worship adhered to by the Protestant sects of the Christian religion; and such action constitutes a preference in its favor, and a discrimination against the Catholic and Jewish forms of worship;" and that it is an establishment of religion; that petitioners disbelieve, upon religious conviction, in such services; further, that such action is prohibited by statute No. 214 of 1912, p. 464, for the reason that there is vested in the state board of education alone power or authority to make rules, by-laws, and regulations for the government of the public schools of the state, and to give directions as to the branches of study which shall be taught. And they pray that an injunction issue to prevent defendants from enforcing and carrying into effect the resolution referred to; and they further ask that the defendants be enjoined "from having religious exercises of any character whatsoever in said schools."

The prayer of the petition, and the preliminary injunction issued in accordance therewith, are too broad in their terms. The schoolhouses of the parish belong to the people of that parish, and they are under the control of the school authorities of the parish. If, at the time when the schoolhouses are not being occupied or used for school purposes, the school board were to permit the schoolhouses to be used for religious or other purposes, the rights of plaintiffs would not be infringed in any way, and they might not be heard to complain of such action by the school authorities.

In an amended petition plaintiffs allege that the word "Bible," in said resolution, refers to a Protestant version thereof, including the Old and New Testament, and that the reading thereof will be the actual practice under said resolution.

The parish school board and the parish superintendent answered, admitted the passage of the resolution referred to, and alleged that it was their intention to put the same into effect; but they denied "that the effect of said resolution will be to force conducting religion daily in the public schools, or that it will result, or was intended to result, in reading solely from the Protestant Bible; on the contrary, they aver that it was not intended as a religious worship, nor did they intend thereby to force or require anyone to read any Bible or to conduct any form of religious worship."

And they further aver: "That any Bible, Catholic or Protestant, Jewish or otherwise, may have been read by the teachers under said resolution."

L.R.A.1915D.

They deny that the Bible is a sectarian book, and they allege: "That they had no intention of permitting any teacher to resort to any sectarian practice in said schools; and, were one to do so, or attempt to do so, under the guise of said resolution, that they would immediately order the same discontinued."

There was judgment setting aside the preliminary injunction, and plaintiffs appealed to the court of appeals, from which court the case has been ordered up to this court.

"Courts take judicial notice of the contents of the Bible, of the numerous sects into which the religious world is divided, and also of the general doctrines maintained by each sect." 1 Jones, Ev. § 131, p. 274; Abbott, Proof of Facts, p. 634; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L.R.A. 433, 32 L.R.A. 838, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 368; Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah, 129, 58 L.R.A. 723, 95 Am. St. Rep. 821, 69 Pac. 660.

It is generally accepted that the Old Testament was originally written in Hebrew, and that the New Testament was originally written in Greek. The first complete English translation is said to have appeared about the year 1383. The Geneva Bible, embracing the New and Old Testaments, was translated into English at Geneva in 1560, and in London in 1576; it was the first to omit the Apocrypha. There is the King James version, or translation, of the year 1604; the Douay version or translation of the New Testament at Rheims in 1582; and the Old Testament at Douai in 1609. There is Luther's Bible, 1521; and then there is the Rabbinical Bible. There is also the Koran, often called the Mohammedan Bible.

There are doubtless differences in the several translations of the Bible just referred to. But it is not within the province of the court in this case to point out these differences, or to give them consideration. The court recognizes the difference between the Rabbinical Bible and the Christian Bible, in that the latter adds to the former the New Testament Scriptures, which are the bases of the Christian religion. There may be other differences, such as the inclusion in the one, and the exclusion from the other, of the Apocrypha. But this difference is immaterial in the matter before the court. Christians make daily use of the Old Testament Scriptures, and the differences between the Rabbinical and Christian editions are not known to the ordinary lay reader beyond the fact that the Christian Bible contains the New Testament.

The same condition of mind exists with reference to the Douay and the King James translations. There are said to be some differences and some errors in translation, but they are not known to the ordinary lay reader; and the court is not called upon to point out these differences. They are both Christian Bibles, or the Bibles of the Christians. And, when Mr. Heilperin alleges that the resolution complained of compels his children "to join in forms of worship which are contrary to the dictates of their own consciences, and that it interferes with their natural right to worship according to their own religious convictions," we recognize that his complaint is made against the use of the New Testament Scriptures in the public school where his children attend; and, while he admits that God made us, and that we are taught to serve him in both the Old and New Testaments, he shows that the latter teaches that the Messiah has come; the divinity of Christ; that God is three in one—the Trinity; and that the Old Testament Scriptures teach that the Messiah is yet to come; he denies the divinity of Christ. While Jews and Christians believe that the Bible is the inspired Word of God, they differ as to what that Word is; and the Jew accepts only the Old Testament, while the Christian accepts both the Old and the New. But the complaint of Mr. Marston that the reading of the Bible would be contrary to the dictates of his conscience is not clear. He fails to point out in his petition wherein his conscience would be violated. On the brief of plaintiffs it is declared: "We are making no fight against the Bible. But what we do contend is that its teaching finds its proper place in the home, in the church, and in the Sunday school, and that it cannot be injected into the public schools without constituting and creating religious persecution."

Again: "It is said that the Catholic version might be used, but without note or comment. Such use is an equal violation of the rights of the Catholic, as well as of the Protestant."

And: "Likewise to the Catholic child, in whom has been inculcated the doctrine which prohibits the reading of the Bible without authoritative comment from the head of his own church, such daily exercises not only subject him to a form of worship of which his parents do not approve, but teach him that such form of worship is proper."

It is not alleged in the petition, and there is no evidence whatever in the record, in support of that portion of the brief to the effect that there is a doctrine in the Catholic Church which prohibits the reading of the Bible without comment from the head of that branch of the Christian church. It is found only on the brief of plaintiffs.

It was agreed between plaintiffs and defendants "that all questions that may arise as to the history of the Bible and of the different versions thereof, and other matters pertaining thereto, as well as all matters relating to the beliefs, creeds, and modes of worship of different religions, including the different forms of the Christian religion, are proper matters for judicial notice."

We notice that the Catholic Church stands for a complete Word, made up partly of the sacred Scriptures and partly of oral tradition. But we do not find the "doctrine" set forth on the brief to be a dogma of that church. The Catholic child may or may not be prohibited from reading the Bible without authoritative comment, but such prohibition would not be a doctrine of that church or creed. And, in view of the very recent utterances of His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, one would not think that such prohibition can exist. That eminent man of God and high churchman, in a recent sermon, pointed to his own college days, when he says he carried a New Testament at all times, and read one chapter every day. He urged the importance of this plan for all devout Christians. In the course of his sermon he is reported to have said: "The timely recollection of a fitting text of the Scriptures is the best antidote against temptation." "But we cannot have such texts occur to us unless we are filled with the Word of God and accustomed to frequently and regularly read the Book."

The Cardinal gave a striking exhibition of his own memory for texts by quoting many to fit into all situations. He would mention some sin, and then, after quoting the more familiar text that referred to it, would bring up other texts not so well known, but equally fitting and equally forcible in wording. He further said: "There was a great philosopher who would say that he never left men without feeling less a man. Now, it is true of the faithful lover of the Word that he never leaves the Bible without feeling more of a man."

We further read of the work of the "Society of St. Jerome," which was formed for the purpose of translating and disseminating the New Testament in the vernacular of Italy. The work was under the patronage of influential clericals, some of whom were said to be members of the College of Cardinals. The president of the society is said to have been Mgr. Della Chiesa, now Pope Benedict XV. The translation is said to be a beautiful one, and that a million copies were sold in a short time. Recently Pope Benedict XV. in a letter answering an address on behalf of the Society of St. Jerome, is quoted as saying in part, with reference to their work: "They are doing a work of supreme advantage for the forming for Christian perfection of the minds of those who, like you [addressing Cardinal Cassetta], are waiting eagerly for the diffusion of the Divine Gospels, and we have therefore reason to rejoice in the enterprise, so excellent in itself and so grateful to us."

Continuing, His Holiness said: "We ardently desire, and make it a matter of earnest exhortation, that you gather the fruit of a very wide diffusion of the Books of the Gospels, and that you may also be able to obtain another advantage, which would form one of our ideals, that is to say, that the sacred books enter into the bosom of Christian families, and be there like the piece of silver mentioned in the parable, which all shall seek for attentively and guard jealously, so that the faithful may accustom themselves to read the Holy Gospels and comment on them every day, learning thus to live holily, conformed in everything to the Divine Will."

We will assume that the Bible referred to by these eminent churchmen was the Douay version, or translation. But we cannot conclude that it is a doctrine of the Catholic Church to prohibit the reading of the Bible without authoritative comment of the head of that church, further than as contained in the Douay version itself.

The Douay Bible published in New York has the approbation of His Eminence James Cardinal Gibbons printed at the beginning of the Book in these words: "We hereby approve of the publication by John Murphy Company of the Catholic Bible, which is an accurate reprint of the Rheims and Douay edition with Dr. Challoner's Notes.

"The sacred volume is printed in an attractive style."

And His Eminence John Cardinal Farley expresses his approbation and recommendation in the following words: "I heartily indorse your publication of the Holy Bible. It is well edited and should commend itself to all Catholics."

And, as the court will not concern itself with the differences, or alleged errors, in the different translations of the Christian Bible, or the Bibles of the Christians, we cannot conclude that plaintiff Marston or his children would have their consciences violated by the reading of the Bible, or of the offering of the Lord's Prayer, which prayer is contained in all versions or translations of the New Testament.

Turning again to the consideration of the case of Messrs. Herold and Heilperin, we note that the United States government provides in part for the education of the citizens of the country. Education is one of the functions of government; and the public school system is a department of the government. Education insures domestic tranquillity, provides for the common defense, promotes the general welfare, and it secures the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. The state of Louisiana from the earliest time has made provision for the support of education, beginning with the Constitution of 1845, §§ 135 and 136.

Education in this country embraces the training of both mind and heart. Through it character is formed and developed. It includes the primary and the higher branches; there are literary and scientific courses; also the mechanical and vocational schools; industry and morality form parts of the system; love of fellow man, love of country, and love of God are taught in the public schools of the land.

There have been differences in expressions of opinion as to whether this is a Christian land or not, in a strictly limited sense; but there is not, and there has not been, a question as to its being a godly land, or that we are a religious people. In the Declaration of Independence He was acknowledged as the God over all and the giver of all good gifts, in the following language:

"When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," etc.

And in the closing paragraph He is appealed to as follows: "We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do," etc. "And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

In the Articles of Confederation, No. 13, God was recognized in the following language: "And whereas it has pleased the Great Governor of the world to incline the hearts of the legislatures we respectively represent in Congress," etc.

And, while there is no express mention made of His Son, Jesus Christ, He is referred to in the date of that instrument as follows: "Done at Philadelphia, in the state of Pennsylvania, the 9th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight, and in the third year of the independence of America."

A similar reference is made to "our" Lord in the Constitution of the United States. But, while making this indirect recognition, the first Amendment to the Constitution provides that: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," etc.

And Congress, in stating the qualifications to hold office for the purpose of discharging the governmental duties and functions devolving upon those holding office under the national government, provided that they should ask the help of God to discharge those duties, in an oath of office closing with: "So help me God." Rev. Stat. §§ 1756, 1757, Comp. St. 1913, § 3218.

The Constitution of Delaware, in prescribing the formal oath, uses the following: "I, A. B., do profess faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, and in the Holy Ghost, one God, blessed forevermore; and I do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures in the Old and New Testament to be given by divine inspiration." Const. 1776, art. 22.

In discussing the above, together with other evidences, the Supreme Court, in the case of Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 471, 36 L. ed. 226, 232, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, proceeded to say: "If we pass beyond these matters to a view of American life as expressed by its laws, its business, its customs, and its society, we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth. Among other matters, note the following: The form of oath universally prevailing, concluding with an appeal to the Almighty; the custom of opening sessions of all deliberative bodies and most conventions with prayer; the prefatory words of all wills, 'In the name of God, amen;' the laws respecting the observance of the Sabbath, with the general cessation of all secular business, and the closing of courts, legislatures, and other similar public assemblies on that day; the churches and church organizations which abound in every city, town, and hamlet; the multitude of charitable organizations existing everywhere under Christian auspices; the gigantic missionary associations, with general support, and aiming to establish Christian missions in every quarter of the globe. These, and many other matters which might be noticed, add a volume of unofficial declarations to the mass of organic utterances that this is a Christian nation."

L.R.A.1915D.

Mr. Story, in treating of the first Amendment to the Constitution, says, in part:

"Section 1874. Probably at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and of the Amendment to it now under consideration, the general if not universal sentiment in America was that Christianity ought to receive encouragement from the state so far as it was not incompatible with the private rights of conscience and the freedom of religious worship. An attempt to level all religions, and to make it a matter of state polity to hold all in utter indifference, would have created universal disapprobation, if not universal indignation."

"Section 1876. But the duty of supporting religion, and especially the Christian religion, is very different from the right to force the consciences of other men, or to punish them for worshiping God in the manner in which they believe their accountability to Him requires. It has been truly said that 'religion, or the duty we owe to our Creator and the manner of discharging it, can be dictated only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence.' . . . The rights of conscience are, indeed, beyond the just reach of any human power. They are given by God, and cannot be encroached upon by human authority without a criminal disobedience of the precepts of natural as well as of revealed religion."

"Section 1877. The real object of the Amendment was not to countenance, much less to advance, Mahometanism, or Judaism, or infidelity, by prostrating Christianity; but to exclude all rivalry among Christian sects, and to prevent any national ecclesiastical establishment which should give to a hierarchy the exclusive patronage of the national government."

Story, Const.

The Code of Practice of this state requires that "the witnesses . . . must be sworn on the Bible, in open court." Article 478.

The Constitution of this state, in the preamble, places God before the state, in the following language: "We, the people of the state of Louisiana, grateful to Almighty God for the civil, political and religious liberties we enjoy and desiring to secure the continuance of these blessings, do ordain and establish this Constitution."

And, with real Christian gratitude for the blessing of religious liberties to us, the worship of God is recognized, and in article 4 of that instrument it is ordained: "Every person has the natural right to worship God, according to the dictates of his conscience, and no law shall be passed respecting an establishment of religion."

And, again, in article 53: "No money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect or denomination of religion, or in aid of any priest, preacher, minister or teacher thereof, as such, and no preference shall ever be given to, or any discrimination made against, any church, sect or creed of religion, or any form of religious faith or worship," etc.

Therefore, while we are grateful to God for religious freedom, with other blessings, we may not interfere with any citizen's natural right to also worship that same God according to the dictates of his own conscience. The Jew will be permitted without interference to worship God according to his conscience, and so will all others.

Does the resolution under consideration interfere with the natural rights of these plaintiffs to worship God, or to have their children worship God, according to the dictates of their consciences, or does it give a preference to Christians, and discriminate against Jews?

While the resolution simply requests principals and teachers of the public schools of Caddo parish to open the daily sessions with reading from the Bible, without note or comment, the preamble to the resolution shows that this reading is for the purpose of teaching children "at the most impressionable age" "lessons and truths contained within the Holy Bible" as being "of paramount value in creating and maintaining a better moral atmosphere" in the community at large, and also in the individual life.

The "lessons and truths" may be taught from the New Testament, as well as the Old Testament. The Christian parents might not be heard to object to "the lessons and truths contained within the Holy Bible" being taught to their children for the purpose of inculcating morals, because they profess to believe in the inspiration of the whole Word. But with the Jew it is different. He denies that the New Testament is the word of God, and he denies our Savior. He does not deny most of the moral teachings of Jesus Christ, but he denies His divinity and His resurrection.

And, as he is guaranteed "the natural right to worship God, according to the dictates of his conscience," and as the resolution in question permits "lessons and truths" to be read or taught from the New Testament, particularly concerning the Son of God and His resurrection from the dead, etc., it gives a preference to the children of the Christian parents, and discriminates against the children of the Jews. The resolution is therefore violative of the Constitution.

The request made by the board of school directors of Caddo parish that the principals and teachers in its employ and under its control "open daily sessions of the public L.R.A.1915D.

schools of Caddo parish with reading from the Bible" is the equivalent of a command to them to do so. To request that the daily session should be opened with Bible reading and the offering of the Lord's Prayer is to say that the exercises for the day shall begin with such reading and prayer. And the request of the employer that the employees should do so as a part of the regular exercises in the schools is an order to that effect.

The "lessons and truths" contained in the Holy Bible to be taught through reading by the teachers from the Bible to the children of the school, for the purpose of teaching morality, are read and taught as teachings from the inspired Word of God Himself. To read the Bible for the purpose stated requires that it be read reverently and worshipfully. As God is the author of the Book, He is necessarily worshipped in the reading of it. And the reading of it forms part of all religious services in the Christian and Jewish churches, which use the Word. It is as much a part of the religious worship of the churches of the land as is the offering of prayer to God.

The general policy of the government always is to avoid with care any compulsion which infringes on the religious scruples of any, however little reason may seem to others to underlie them. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 585. The reading of the New Testament as the Word of God infringes on the religious scruples of the Jews. The discrimination against them, and the inequality of rights and privileges, are manifest by such requirement.

The subjection by school authorities of Jewish children to Christian worship is forbidden by the Constitution, which guarantees to every person the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. "Before the Constitution Jews and Gentiles are equal; by the law they must be treated alike; and the ordinance . . . which gives to one sect a privilege which it denies to another, violates both the Constitution and the law, and is therefore null and void." Shreveport v. Levy, 26 La. Ann. 671, 21 Am. Rep. 553.

It is a fact that the reading of the Bible is religious instruction, and that when the New Testament is read it is Christian instruction. The character of the Book is that it is a pious one, and it is essentially religious. It is not adapted for use as a textbook for the teaching alone of reading, history, or of literature, without regard to its religious character. Such use would be inconsistent with the true character and the reverence in which the Scriptures are held, and should be held.

To permit the teacher to select the part of the Bible to be read without test whereby to determine the selection is to allow any part, or all parts, to be selected. One of the most important forms of instruction is that of reading; and it is impossible to read from the New Testament without giving instructions in Christianity. It (the New Testament) is the foundation and text-book of Christianity, based on the teachings contained therein that Christ is divine. And the lessons therefrom give a preference to Christians, and at the same time make a discrimination against the Jews. "The more enlightened opinion of the present day denies the duty [to teach religion in the public schools], and affirms that any step in that direction is in greater or less degree a species of persecution of those whose views are not favored, and therefore incompetent, in any country whose political institutions are based upon the principles of equality before the law. Religious instruction is, therefore, . . . referred exclusively to the voluntary action of the people." Cooley, Taxn. 197.

The answer made by defendants that "in all of said schools the said teachers might with due propriety have excused from attendance on such exercises the children of said plaintiffs and others of similar belief, if so requested by the students or their parents or guardians," is an admission of discrimination against the children of those citizens whose consciences would not permit them to worship God as taught in the particular portion of the Scriptures selected and read by the teacher of the class in which the children of said citizens happened to be.

Under such circumstances, the children would be excused from the opening exercises of the school because of their religious beliefs. And excusing such children on religious grounds, although the number excused might be very small, would be a distinct preference in favor of the religious beliefs of the majority, and would work a discrimination against those who were excused. The exclusion of a pupil under such circumstances puts him in a class by himself; it subjects him to a religious stigma; and all because of his religious belief. Equality in public education would be destroyed by such act, under a Constitution which seeks to establish equality and freedom in religious matters. The Constitution forbids that this shall be done.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the District Court be annulled, avoided, and reversed.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that there be judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants, enjoining the board of school directors of the parish L.R.A.1916D.

of Caddo and the parish superintendent from enforcing or carrying into effect the resolution of said board requesting the principals and teachers to open the morning sessions of the public schools of Caddo parish by reading from the Bible, without note or comment, and the offering of the Lord's Prayer. In all other respects the petition of plaintiffs is denied; defendants to pay costs in all courts.

Land, J., recused on account of relationship to one of the parties.

Provosty, J., concurs in the opinion, adding, however, that according to his understanding the objection of the Catholic Church to the popular reading of the Bible relates only to the Old Testament, owing to certain passages therein, the reading whereof might do more harm than good to the uninstructed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 12, 1915.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

H. J. LENDERINK, Admr., etc., of Robert Reed, Deceased,
v.

B. F. SAWYER et al., Appts.

(92 Neb. 587, 138 N. W. 744.)

Coroner — sale of decedent's property — liability.

1. Where the defendant, who was the coroner of Dakota county, and his surety, the defendant company, were sued by the administrator of the estate of one Robert Reed, deceased, who sought to recover from them the value of certain personal property which had belonged to said Reed at the time of his death, and which had been sold by the defendant coroner immediately after the death of the deceased, and to enable him to pay the necessary expenses of the funeral, and he had sold the property for its full and fair value, and had used the proceeds for that purpose, and at the request of the nephew of the deceased and his son, held: (1) That the defendants were entitled to Note. — Allowance to executor de son tort of disbursements or payments.

In general.

"An executor de son tort is a person who, without authority, intermeddles with the estate of a decedent, and does such acts as properly belong to the office of an executor or administrator, and thereby becomes a sort of quasi executor, although only for the purpose of being sued or made liable for the assets with which he has intermeddled.

set off the money paid out for the necessary expenses of the funeral against the plaintiff's claim. (2) That the district court having the parties before it, and having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, should adjudicate and determine the whole matter, instead of rendering judgment against the defendants and then sending the coroner to the county court to file claims against the estate, thereby unnecessarily increasing the expenses of the litigation.

Executor — de son tort — personal liability.

2. Under the facts shown, the defendant Sawyer was at most an executor de son tort. The true representative is bound by those acts of an executor de son tort which are lawful and such as the true representative would be bound to perform in the due course of administration. As the administrator of the estate of the deceased would be bound to pay the funeral expenses, if they were not already paid, he cannot complain because the coroner paid them.

(November 27, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Dakota County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of personal property of deceased sold by defendant Sawyer for the payment of funeral expenses. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Paul Pizey, for appellants:

The demand on Sawyer should have been for the property, not for an accounting, and upon a refusal of the demand, the action

The designation is inapt in that it applies the term 'executor' to intestate as well as testate estates, and also in that it gives to a person who has merely incurred a certain liability by reason of his intermeddling an official title corresponding with that of a duly appointed representative, and in many states the so-called office of executor de son tort has been abolished by statute, while in others it is considered inconsistent with the prevalent system of administration." 18 Cyc. 1354.

The question under investigation in this note, as the title indicates, is whether or not, and in what circumstances, an executor de son tort is entitled to an allowance or credit for disbursements or payments made by him in respect to the estate with which he has intermeddled. In the main the note, while including a few cases decided under modern statutes abrogating or modifying the common-law office of executor de son tort, is not concerned with the rights of intermeddlers under such statutes to credits; although it is believed, from the few exemplary cases here included, that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the rules of the common law would apply. And cases like Spruance v. Darlington, 7 Del. Ch. 111, 30 Atl. 663, as to the right of an executor under a revoked will to credits in an action by the executor or administrator under the revoking will, and like Ellis v. Ellis [1905] 1 Ch. 613, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 296, 53 Week. Rep. 617, 92 L. T. N. S. 727, as to an administrator appointed by suppressing a will appointing an executor, are not regarded as within the scope of this article.

As the very name itself indicates, an executor de son tort is a wrongdoer, an intruder, and intermeddler; but frequently his acts are prompted by good motives, and often result in no detriment either to the estate or to the rights of creditors thereof or other interested parties. This being the situation, it is interesting to know what course the law, in the light of its policy of discouraging wrongdoing and fostering fair play, pursues in regard to such executor.

It suggests itself at once and quite naturally, it seems, that, upon reason and principle, while an executor de son tort should receive no benefit from his wrongful interference with the estate, as, for instance, by being allowed to retain for a debt owing to him by the deceased, he should nevertheless, as general rule, be entitled to protection in those disbursements and payments made by him which a rightful representative in the due course of administration would have been bound to make. For while in a few cases, at least, where the common law is still in force, the wrongful executor, by interfering and making such disbursements or payments, may deprive the rightful representative of his right to retain for his own debt (a right which has been greatly modified in this country by statute), his interference in such a manner as a usual thing constitutes no detriment either to the estate itself, or to the rights of parties interested therein. It seems, therefore, that the principle enunciated is sufficient to discourage indiscriminate interference with decedent estates, and at the same time accord justice where justice is due; and such, apparently, is the view taken by the great majority of courts.

And since ordinarily, in the due course of administration, where the estate is insolvent, the rightful representative would be bound to pay only that proportion of the debts which the law allows, an executor de son tort, it would seem, should receive credit only for that proportion of the debts which the rightful representative would be bound to make. See Leach v. Prebster, 35 Ind. 419; but see also, in the same connection, De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 183, and McCarthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. Rep. 195.

In accord with the principle that an executor de son tort shall receive no benefit from his wrongful interference, and to discourage a race between creditors to get possession of decedent estates, the rule is well established that such an executor is not entitled to retain in satisfaction of his own debt. Alexander v. Lane, Yelv. 137; Prince v. Rowson, 1 Mod. 208; Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587, 2 H. Bl. 18, 1 Revised Rep should have been brought for the value of the property, not the amount received by Sawyer.

Kendall v. Duluth, 64 Minn. 295, 66 N. W. 1150; Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 163, 42 Pac. 568; Moynahan v. Prentiss, 10 Colo. App. 295, 51 Pac. 94; Saratoga Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Hazard, 55 Hun, 251, 7 N. Y. Supp. 844.

If there is any liability it would be personal with Sawyer, and this suit is only upon the bond.

Ottenstein v. Alpaugh, 9 Neb. 237, 2 N. W. 219; Dewey v. Kavanaugh, 45 Neb. 233, 63 N. W. 396; State v. Moore, 56 Neb. 82, 76 N. W. 474; State v. Porter, 69 Neb. 203, 95 N. W. 769.

There can be no liability on the part of the defendants, for conversion, for the reason that defendant Sawyer could at most be regarded merely as an executor de son tort, and as such would be permitted an offset to the extent of his reasonable charges, against any claim of the estate against him.

18 Cyc. 1363; Crispin v. Winkleman, 57 Iowa, 523, 10 N. W. 910.

Mr. J. J. McCarthy, for appellee:

The action is one that the plaintiff could not have brought in his individual capacity, and it makes a difference whether he is described "administrator" or "as administrator of the estate of Robert Reed, deceased."

18 Cyc. 978; Williams v. Eikenbary, 36 Neb. 478, 54 N. W. 852.

The statute under which this action was 774; Oxenham v. Clapp, 2 Barn. & Ad. 309, 9 L. J. K. B. 229; Coulter's Case, 5 Coke, 30a; Ayre v. Ayre, 1 Ch. Cas. 33; Featherstone v. West, Ir. Rep. 6 Eq. 86; De la Guerra v. Packard, supra; Leach v. House, 1 Bail. L. 42; Cook v. Sanders, 15 Rich. L. 63, 94 Am. Dec. 139; McMeekin v. Hynes, 80 Ky. 343; Partee v. Caughran, 9 Yerg. 460; Sharp v. Caldwell, 7 Humph. 415; Winn v. Slaughter, 5 Heisk. 191; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Baumgartner v. Haas, 68 Md. 32, 11 Atl. 588; Neal v. Baker, 2 N. H. 477; Turner v. Child, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 331, 17 Am. Dec. 555; Hill v. Henderson, 13 Smedes & M. 688.

An executor of his own wrong cannot retain any part of the deceased's goods to satisfy his own debt, for, as the court in Coulter's Case, 5 Coke, 30a, points out: "From thence would ensue great inconvenience and confusion, for every creditor (and chiefly when the goods of the deceased are not sufficient to satisfy all the creditors) would contend to make himself executor of his own wrong, to the intent to satisfy himself by retainer, by which others would be barred. And it is not reasonable that one should take advantage of his own wrong; and if the law should give him such power, the law would be the cause and occasion of wrong, and of the wrongful taking of the goods of the deceased. And the law of God saith, non facias malum ut inde fiat bonum, & melius est omnia mala pati, quam malo consentire."

Suit by rightful representative.

At common law, where the rightful executor or administrator sues the executor de son tort, if the action be trover for the goods of the deceased, the defendant cannot plead payment of debts to the value, or that he has given the goods in satisfaction of the debts; but, on the general issues pleaded, he may give in evidence such payments, and they will be recouped in damages if they be such as the plaintiff would have been bound to make; or, in the language of some of the books, made in the due course of administration. Whitehall v. Squire, Carth. 104; M'Carthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. Rep. 195; Carpenter v. Going, 20 Ala. 587; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Weeks v. Gibbs, 9 Mass. 74; Hardy v. Thomas, 23 Miss. 544, 57 Am. Dec. 152; Rutherford v. Thompson, 14 Or. 236, 12 Pac. 382; Saam v. Saam, 4 Watts, 432; Cooper v. Eyrych, 41 W. N. C. 370; Gilfillen's Appeal, 170 Pa. 185, 50 Am. St. Rep. 760, 32 Atl. 585 (dicta); Roumfort v. McAlarney, 82 Pa. 193 (dicta). And see infra, Roggenkamp v. Roggenkamp, 15 C. C. A. 600, 32 U. S. App. 453, 68 Fed. 605; and McConnell v. McConnell, 94 Ill. 295.

In Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452, the court, after stating that if sued by a creditor an executor de son tort may plead plene administravit, said: "There is, however, a difference between a suit by a creditor against an executor de son tort and one by a rightful executor or administrator. If the action by the latter be trover for the goods of the deceased, the defendant cannot plead payment of debts to the value, or that he has given the goods in satisfaction of the debts. But on the general issue pleaded, he may give in evidence such payments, and they will be recouped in damages, if they be such as the plaintiff would have been bound to make, or, in the language of some of the books, made in the due course of administration.

In Whitehall v. Squire, Carth. 104, it was said that the wrongful executor could not plead payment of debts to the value, or that he had given the goods in satisfaction of the debts, because no man ought to obtrude himself on the office of the other.

Quoting from Williams on Executors, 5th ed. p. 236, Monahan, Ch. J., in M'Carthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. Rep. 195, says: "With respect to the liability of an executor de son tort, at the suit of the lawful representative of the deceased, there are several authorities to show that if the rightful executor or administrator bring an action of trover or trespass, the executor de son tort may give in evidence, under the general issue and in mitigation of damages, pay-brought embraces such property as was sold by Sawyer, and the defendant bonding company must be held liable.

Harris v. Allen, 15 Fed. 106; McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50, 1 Ann. Crim. Rep. 81; People v. Treadway, 17 Mich. 480; Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, 2d ed. § 530; Dewey v. Kavanaugh, 45 Neb. 233, 63 N. W. 396; Huffman v. Kopplekom, 8 Neb. 344, 1 N. W. 243.

Hamer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the district court of Dakota county against the coroner of that county and the surety on his official bond. The suit was brought by the administrator of the estate of Robert

Reed, deceased. It appears that one Robert Reed died intestate at his home in Dakota county while living alone; that when his body was found the defendant Sawyer, at the request of the nephew of the deceased, took charge of the body and gave it a Christian burial; that he took possession of certain personal property of the deceased, sold it for its full value, and applied the proceeds to the payment of the expenses necessarily incurred for the burial casket, the lot in the cemetery, etc. The plaintiff, as administrator, brought this action to recover the value of the personal property so sold. On the trial the defendant offered to prove as a matter of set-off that the expenses incurred by him were proper and necessary, and were just and reasonable in amount;

ments made by him in the rightful course of administration, upon the ground that the payments, which are thus, as it is termed, 'recouped in damages,' were such as the lawful executor or administrator would have been bound to make, and therefore it cannot be considered as any detriment to him that they were made by an executor de son tort."

But in the same case the court said that if the sums due to creditors should be larger in amount than the assets, an executor de son tort, it seems, would not get credit for the sums he had disbursed; because in the event of the question of priority being raised, the rightful executor might, by such wrongful interference, be debarred from making a selection in his payments. Ibid. But see infra this section, Leach v. Prebster and De la Guerra v. Packard.

In Saam v. Saam, 4 Watts, 432, the court said: "It is said there is no defense by an administrator de son tort to the action of a rightful representative; that is, he cannot plead payment of debts to the value; yet it seems to be agreed that he may plead the general issue, and give such payments in evidence in mitigation of damages; and that if they amount to the value, the plaintiff shall be nonsuited. The present is an action of trover against the representatives of an executor de son tort, and the defense attempted would doubtless be competent, if it were supported by competent proof." The defendant in this case offered to prove that he had paid debts to an amount equal to the value of goods, but the proof, as above intimated, was incompetent.

And in Meigan v. M'Donough, 10 Watts, 287, it was stated that an executor de son tort is liable to the rightful representative for all beyond rightful payments by retainer or disbursement.

And see Collier v. Jones, 86 Ind. 342, to the effect that in a suit by the administrator of decedent's estate against an executor de son tort of the same estate, a plea of payment of "all debts and liabilities on account of the matters and things set forth in the complaint in this suit" is an improper answer.

L.R.A.1915D.

In trover and trespass by the rightful administrator against an executor de son tort, the latter cannot plead by way of equitable defense plene administravit before the grant of administration to the former. Elworthy v. Sanford, 3 Hurlst. & C. 330. Against this plea counsel, in support of his demurrer thereto, said: "The defendant might give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, payments made by him in the rightful course of administration, because the plaintiff, as executor, would have been bound to make such payments, and therefore it can be no detriment to him that they were made by an executor de son tort; but an executor de son tort cannot plead, in bar to an action by the rightful executor, payment of debts to the value of the assets, or of the goods sought to be recovered in trespass or trover. 1 Williams, Exrs. 5th ed. pp. 236, 237. As an equitable defense the plea is bad for not stating that the assets were sufficient to satisfy all the debts of the deceased. An executor de son tort cannot plead in mitigation of damages payments made in the due course of administration, unless the assets were sufficient to satisfy all the debts, for otherwise the rightful executor would be precluded not only from giving preference to one creditor over others of equal degree, but also of satisfying his own debt in priority to all others of equal degree. 1 Williams, Exrs. 5th ed. p. 238." And Bramwell, B., said: "The ninth plea is clearly bad. The defendant, who had wrongfully taken possession of the assets of the deceased, says that he has exhausted them in the payment of debts; but for anything that appears he may have paid his own debt while the rightful executor was also a creditor of the deceased."

In Howell v. Smith, 2 M'Cord, L. 516, it was held in an action by the administrator for money had and received that disbursements made by the wrongful executor in payment of debts of the deceased would not be allowed in discount. What the nature of these were does not appear, but the court said: "It is due to the defendant to state my full persuasion that his motives that the property was sold with the consent of the nephew and a son of the deceased, or at least the son ratified the sale; that the amount realized from the sale was the full value of the property; and the defendant sought to set off his expenses against the sum received by him for the sale of the property. The proposed evidence was rejected, and the court directed the jury to return a verdict against the defendants for the amount that the defendant Sawyer realized from the sale of the property. The verdict and judgment rendered were for $499.72. For the rejection of the evidence so proffered and the giving of the peremptory instruction, the defendants assign error.

It is claimed by the defendants that the administrator is estopped from prosecuting the action; that all the charges made by the defendant were reasonable and just; and there seems to be no controversy concerning the fact that defendant Sawyer sold the property and paid the funeral expenses with the proceeds. One purpose of an administrator is to take charge of the property belonging to the estate. He becomes the means by which the property belonging to the estate is applied to the payment of debts, if there are any, and the surplus remaining is distributed among the heirs. The statute in this case seems to contemplate that those of the relatives who are near the deceased are charged with the duty of taking care of the body and burying it. If the defendant Sawyer carried out the wishes of the relatives who were there, it would appear that in taking upon himself to act in behalf of the estate were honorable, but it would be productive of infinite confusion in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons if the acts of unauthorized agents were to be recognized as valid; more especially in the courts of common pleas, who have no original jurisdiction in the settlement of estates."

In an action of trover brought by the rightful administrator, an executor de son tort will not be permitted to give in evidence in mitigation of damages payments of debts to the value of goods still in his possession. Nor will he be permitted to retain them in satisfaction of his own debt. Hardy v. Thomas, 23 Miss. 544, 57 Am. Dec. 152. The court said: "It is true it is laid down in some of the elementary writers, that an executor de son tort, in an action of trover brought against him by the rightful administrator, cannot plead payment of debts, etc., to the value, etc., or that he hath given the goods in satisfaction of the debts, etc., yet that he may, upon the general issue pleaded, recover such payments in damages, and if they amount to the full value, he may nonsuit the plaintiff. Bull. N. P. 48. But the rule is also laid down that in trover, by a rightful administrator against an executor de son tort, he could not give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, payment of debts to the value of the goods still in his possession, but only such as were sold. Ibid; Lomax, Exrs. 363, 364. Nor could he retain in satisfaction of his own debt, because he would not be permitted to profit by his own tortious acts. Lomax, Exrs. 365. The proof in this case showed that the defendant was still in possession of the goods, and had not parted with them in payment of debts, and he could not, therefore, prevent a recovery by showing payment of debts to their value, upon the most favorable rule before laid down. But it may well be questioned whether, under our statutes prohibiting administrators to sell without an order of the probate court, and declaring a sale void without such an order, an executor de son tort could give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, the fact that he had sold the goods in payment of debts. At common law, an administrator or executor might sell goods at private sale, and hence it was held, if the rightful administrator brought trover against the executor de son tort, he thereby admitted his possession of the goods to be lawful, and if the executor de son tort showed a sale of the goods in payment of debts, that was a distribution of them in accordance with the law, and negatived a conversion. But it would seem, where a sale even by a rightful administrator of this kind would be void, a sale by an executor de son tort could not be otherwise than illegal and void; and therefore would amount to a conversion. Any other rule than this would enable an executor de son tort to convert the whole estate to the payment of a single creditor, and in case the estate proved insolvent, would enable such creditor to obtain payment of his debt to the exclusion of all other creditors. The impolicy of such a rule is manifest. If a party see fit, without authority of law, to intermeddle with an estate to pay debts, and sell property for that purpose, all he can rightfully ask is the privilege of proving a claim against the estate for the sums so paid, and demanding payment from the administrator ratably with the other creditors."

"Though an executor de son tort pay debts duly, with all the assets that come into his hands, yet the rightful executor shall maintain trespass against him; but he may give such payment in mitigation of damages; yet the right of the action and verdict shall go against him." Anonymous, 12 Mod. 441.

In Reagan v. Long, 21 Ind. 264, an action in the nature of trespass by the administratrix to recover the value of assets of the estate which defendant had converted to his own use, or disposed of, it was held that, conceding defendant to have been executor de son tort, he should have been allowed, in reduction of damages, the amount he proved he had not converted to his own use, but to the use of the plaintiff in her fiduciary character, being that in which she sued.

In such an action, the defendant, under the other relatives would have no reason to complain. As the administrator represents the creditors and the heirs, and is only a trustee, it would seem that he is estopped from maintaining an action against the defendant Sawyer and his bondsmen for doing that which Sawyer was requested to do, and which he actually did, in taking charge of the body of the deceased and burying it. In Dame, Probate & Administration, § 231, it is said: "All courts generally hold that the personal representatives may pay the same [funeral claims] directly, without their being exhibited." If this be true with respect to personal representatives, it should be true of the coroner, who is requested by the personal representatives to discharge the duties which are a natural burden upon them.

It is altogether probable that when Sawyer sold the property he thought he was authorized to do so by § 110, chap. 18, art. 1, Comp. Stat. 1909: "When any valuable personal property, money, or papers are found upon or near the body upon which an inquest is held, the coroner shall take charge of the same and deliver the same to those entitled to its care or possession; but if not claimed, or if the same shall be necessary to defray expenses of the burial, the coroner shall, after giving ten days' notice of the time and place of sale, sell such property, and after deducting coroner's fees and funeral expenses, deposit the proceeds thereof, and the money and papers so found, with the county treasurer, taking his receipt therefor, there to remain subject to the order of the legal the general denial of the complaint, may give evidence generally tending to disprove plaintiff's right to recover or to damages. Ibid.

An executor de son tort, when sued by the rightful representative, is entitled to be allowed for amounts paid by him to the proper uses of the estate, as the payment of debts, etc. Leach v. Prebster, 35 Ind. 419. And see Dorsett v. Frith, 25 Ga. 537.

But this can only be allowed where there are sufficient assets to pay all the debts of the deceased; for otherwise one creditor would be paid in full, and others nothing. If there be a deficiency of assets, he should be allowed only the proportionate share of the debts which he paid. Leach v. Prebster, supra.

But see De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 183, where it is stated that if the estate be insolvent, it is no answer to an action to recover the assets that he has paid debts equal to or exceeding their value. And see also supra, this section, M'Carthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. Rep. 195.

Buller, J., said (obiter dictum) in Padget v. Priest, 2 T. R. 100: "The courts have gone thus far, that if an action be brought by a rightful administrator against an executor de son tort, whatever may have been disposed of in the course of administration, as by paying debts, etc., shall be allowed to him in damages." And see Graysbrook v. Fox, 1 Plowd. 275; Mountford v. Gibson, 4 East, 441, 1 Smith, 129; Parker v. Kett, 12 Mod. 466.

In Tobey v. Miller, 54 Me. 480, which was an action of trover by the rightful administrator of an intestate's estate to recover the value of the goods and effects of the estate taken by an executor de son tort, it was held that the defendant could not in that form of action file an account in set-off. But holding that under the statute about to be referred to, the defendant might retain for the necessary funeral expenses paid by him, the court said: "When an executor in his own wrong is sued, it is provided by Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 64, § 32, that he shall not be allowed to retain any part of the goods or effects, except for such funeral expenses, debts of the deceased, or other charges actually paid by him as the rightful executor or administrator would have to pay." That is, he is permitted to retain to the extent indicated. The word 'retain' was used to protect the defendant, whatever may be the form of the action when sounding in damages, by enabling him to retain what, if not paid by him, the administrator or executor would have been compelled to pay. Nor is this provision materially different in its spirit from the common law. The executor is entitled to deduct reasonable funeral expenses from the assets that come into his hands. Yardley v. Arnold, 2 Dowl. N. S. 311, 10 Mees. & W. 141, Car. & M. 434. Where the rightful executor or administrator sues the executor de son tort, if the action 'be trover for the goods of the deceased, the defendant,' observes Buchanan, Ch. J., in Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452, 'cannot plead payment of debts to the value, or that he has given the goods in satisfaction of the debts. But, on the general issue pleaded, he may give in evidence such payments, and they will be recouped in damages, if they be such as the plaintiff would have been bound to make, or, in the language of some of the books, made in due course of administration. Whitehall v. Squire, Carth. 104; Bull. N. P. 48; 2 Bl. Com. 507; Mountford v. Gibson, and Parker v. Kett, supra. This recoupment is allowed when the debts are just and there is no deficiency of assets."

And Pettengill v. Abbott, 167 Mass. 307, 45 N. E. 748, says that if the widow was an executor in her own wrong, "she might be allowed to retain funeral expenses actually paid by her."

But see Walton v. Hall, 66 Vt. 455, 29 Atl. 803, following Shaw v. Hallihan, 46 Vt. 389, 14 Am. Rep. 628, and refusing an allowance to the estate of a widow for funeral expenses of her husband and cost of grave-stone over his grave, incurred by her where she became an executor de son tort by intermeddling with his estate in other respects.

Generally as to liability of decedent's estate for funeral expenses, see notes to representatives of the deceased, if claimed within five years thereafter, or if not claimed within that time, to vest in the school fund of the county." He was brought face to face with the problem of giving the body of the deceased decent and immediate Christian burial. The sale of the property would furnish the means of paying the very necessary expenses of the funeral. He sold it, got the money, and used it. The dead man seems to have been decently and properly buried according to Christian rites. The defendant is equitably entitled to his pay for it, and it is not quite right that the plaintiff should have judgment against him. We do not intend to hold that the section quoted justified the conduct of the coroner. The same is justifiable upon other grounds. We think that if the defendant Sawyer was requested by the nephew, Bert Reed, to take charge of the body and to prepare it for burial, and that he did so because of such request, and that he sold the property for its full and fair value, which is not questioned, and used the money which he received therefor in payment of the necessary funeral expenses, then that he is equitably entitled to pay therefor, and he is further equitably entitled to set off the money so paid out by him against the plaintiff's claim for the value of the property sold. The same is true if the matter was ratified and adjusted

Fogg v. Holbrook, 33 L.R.A. 680, and Golden Gate Undertaking Co. v. Taylor, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1152.

In Layfield v. Layfield, 7 Sim. 172, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 2, where payments were made in the course of the bill for an accounting, by persons without taking administration, to one who, in the course of the cause, became the administrator of the estate, such payments were not allowed.

An executor de son tort, when sued in equity by the rightful representative, can show that there are no debts outstanding against the intestate, and that he has applied the assets for the use and benefit of the distributees, as they must have been applied if he had been the rightful representative. Brown v. Walter, 58 Ala. 310. The court said: "While an executor de son tort cannot, by his wrongful acts, acquire any benefit, he is protected in all acts, not for his own benefit, which the rightful representative may do; and it may be laid down, as a general rule, that all his lawful acts are good, affording him full protection. He could not at common law, as the rightful representative could, retain for his own debt; but this exception rested on the policy of preventing a race between creditors, to obtain possession of the assets, without taking administration. It would have enabled him to derive an advantage from his own wrongful acts. 4 Bacon, Abr. 31-34; 1 Lomax, Exrs. 177-185. There being no debts, no necessity for a rightful administration, except to make distribution, if the executor de son tort has applied the assets to the benefit of the distributees, in equity, he should be protected. The rightful administration is an unnecessary and expensive ceremony, from which no good can result. Vanderveer v. Alston, 16 Ala. 494. If the distributees had, in the present case, as they might have done, sought from the defendants an account of the assets, it will not be doubted the defendants could have retained for the advancements made in their maintenance and education. The appellant, there being no creditors, is in equity but a trustee for the distributees. If he received the assets from the respondents, he would be compelled to hand them over to the distributees, and they would be compelled to pay them back to the respondents in reimbursement of the advancements. There is no reason for any such process, which could result in benefit to no one, and would result in loss to the respondents."

Even if the executor de son tort is himself a creditor of the decedent, he cannot, when called to account by the rightful representative, apply any part of the assets to the payment of his own debt. Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Baumgartner v. Haas, 68 Md. 32, 11 Atl. 588; Leach v. House, 1 Bail. L. 42; Sharp v. Caldwell, 7 Humph. 415; Partee v. Caughran, 9 Yerg. 460; Hardy v. Thomas, 23 Miss. 544, 57 Am. Dec. 152; Brown v. Walter, 58 Ala. 310; Alexander v. Lane, Yelv. 137; Prince v. Rowson, 1 Mod. 208; Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587, 2 H. Bl. 18, 1 Revised Rep. 774; Elworthy v. Sandford, 3 Hurlst. & C. 330, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 42, 10 L. T. N. S. 654, 12 Week. Rep. 1008.

Though he be a creditor of a superior nature, an executor de son tort cannot retain in satisfaction of his own debt. Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587, 2 H. Bl. 18, 1 Revised Rep. 774.

In Leach v. House, 1 Bail. L. 42, the court said: "In Curtis v. Vernon, supra, Lord Kenyon says that though an executor de son tort be a creditor of superior nature, it is clear from all the authorities that he cannot retain for his own debt. And such is conceded to be the rule at law; but it is said that the rule is otherwise in equity, and the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace being equitable, as well as legal, it ought to have been allowed here. No case has been cited in support of this position, nor have I been able to lay my hand on any one in which it has been allowed. In 2 Fonbl. Eq. 240, the general rule is laid down that an executor de son tort cannot retain, and the reasons on which it rests preclude the idea that a different rule prevails in equity. Any intermeddling with the goods of a deceased person without lawful authority is, as before observed, a wrong,—a trespass,—for which an action lies at the suit of him who has the legal right of possession; and the right to retain is wholly inconsistent with this remedy. The right to retain would be the leading, if not the only, motive between the defendant Sawyer and the son of the deceased, Earnest Reed. We do not undertake to say what, if any, steps should have been taken before the county court towards proving these claims, because that question is not before us.

"The true representative is bound by those acts of an executor de son tort which are lawful and such as the true representative would be bound to perform in the due course of administration." 18 Cyc. 1361. Among the authorities cited is Thompson v. Harding, 2 El. & Bl. 630, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 448, 18 Jur. 58, 1 Week. Rep. 468, holding that a proper payment to a creditor of the estate will bind the true representative. In that case Richard Smith was employed to receive the rents of the deceased in his lifetime, and after his death continued to receive the rents due to the deceased. No other representative of the deceased appearing, Smith paid various debts due from the deceased. Among other things, he paid the defendants, who were bankers of the deceased. A considerable time after payment administration was granted to the plaintiff, who brought the action. The court held, under the facts, "that the rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff ought to be discharged."

In Outlaw v. Farmer, 71 N. C. 31, John Farmer gave his promise in writing to pay to such intermeddling; and if it were allowed, the administration of the estate of one who died indebted would be according to the laws of force, and not of reason. It would lead directly and inevitably to a contest between the creditors for the possession of the goods of the deceased, and the rights of all being equal, the strongest would bear off the spoil. The law has prescribed the order in which debts are to be paid and estates administered, and it is but just that he who attempts by force or fraud to divert the assets from their legitimate channel should be compelled to forego the advantages which he has acquired by his own wrong. It is not impossible that, under very peculiar circumstances, a retainer may have been allowed in the courts of equity. Those courts exercise a very latitudinarian discretion in cases consisting of circumstances which are not reducible to any rule; but if such cases do exist, they will rather support than impugn the general rule."

Discussing the effect of the Oregon statute amending the common-law rule, and of the right of an executor de son tort to be credited with payments which he may have made that are tantamount to a due administration of a decedent's estate, the court, in Rutherford v. Thompson, 14 Or. 236, 12 Pac. 382, said: "The person who intermeddles with the goods of the deceased is now only responsible to answer in an action to the rightful executor or administrator. And whether we consider the intermeddler as an executor de son tort, or as a wrongdoer, the liability to respond to the rightful executor or administrator is the same, and unaffected, and the law unchanged. The fiction of office may be gone, but the unauthorized act of intermeddling remains, to be dealt with judicially, according to the principles of right and justice, as applied by the law in such cases. Now, from the fact that the intermeddler with the goods of a deceased is only liable to respond to the rightful executor or administrator for the value of the goods, etc., it by no means follows, if what he did was of benefit, and not injury, to the estate, as the payment of funeral expenses, or debts of the deceased, or charges such as the rightful representative might have been compelled to pay, he would not be allowed to show the same in mitigation of damages in an action of trover, instituted by such executor or administrator. In thus compelling him to account with only the rightful representative, the statute does not purport or undertake to deprive him of any proper or legitimate defense. The title of executor de son tort may be repudiated, but the justice of the law will remain, to distinguish between acts which are beneficial and those which are injurious to an estate."

This language is quoted with approval in Slate v. Henkle, 45 Or. 430, 78 Pac. 325; and see also to the same effect, Merrill v. Comstock, 154 Wis. 434, 143 N. W. 313.

The acts of the wrongdoer complained of, it seems, must be treated with reference to their beneficial or injurious character. If debts paid by him are debts which the rightful representative would be bound to pay in the due course of administration, they create an equity against the estate; they are not injurious, but must be considered as beneficial, making it competent for the defendant to give such payments in evidence, which operate by way of recoupment. Rutherford v. Thompson, supra.

This right of the wrongdoer or executor de son tort to recoup in damages for disbursements or payments made in the due course of administration when sued in an action for conversion by the legal representative of the decedent affords him an adequate remedy at law, so that he cannot maintain a cross suit in equity to recover the value of his expenditures. Slate v. Henkle, supra.

An executor de son tort, or a wrongdoer, is not entitled on an accounting to an allowance for sums paid to a surety company, and for appraisers' and justices' fees for services that could never have been any benefit to the estate. Ibid.

Neither is he entitled to an allowance for attorneys' fees unless the service rendered was in preserving the estate, resulting in a benefit thereto. Ibid.

And a sum claimed by such executor de son tort, or wrongdoer, stands on the same footing. Ibid.

John Lewis or James Parker, agents, by agreement with the heirs of Anna Herring, deceased, the sum of $125.50. Lewis and Parker were appointed agents by the heirs of Anna Herring. As the agents of such heirs, they had charge of the entire beneficial interest in the estate. In a suit by the duly appointed administrator of the estate against the makers of the promise, it was held: "administration was only the technical form of passing the legal estate from the intestate to the distributees. Without administration they had the potential dominion over the estate, and could dispose of it by sale, gift, or testament. Therefore a sale by their agent conferred upon the purchaser a title which the courts will protect. The bond given for the property was given on a valuable consideration and is valid, both as to the principal and as to the sureties." The court further said: "Where the equitable as well as legal rights of parties are administered, the bond sued on will be upheld as valid against the defendant, and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment thereon."

"Although an executor de son tort cannot by his own wrongful act acquire any benefit, yet he is protected in all acts, not for his

And on an accounting by such executor de son tort or wrongdoer, he is not entitled to any sum as administrator's fees, and if the fees have been paid they must be returned, such executor being liable to the de jure executor therefor. Ibid.

"The statute 43 Eliz. chap. 8, . . . enacted 'that all and every person and persons that hereafter shall obtain, receive and have any goods or debts of any person dying intestate, or a release or other discharge, or any debt or duty that belonged to the intestate, . . . shall be charged and chargeable as executor of his own wrong; and so far only as all such goods and debts coming to his hands, or whereof he is released or discharged by such administrator, will satisfy deducting nevertheless to and for himself allowance . . . of all other payments made by him, which lawful executors or administrators may and ought to have and pay by the laws and statutes of this realm.' 4 Bacon, Abr. Bouvier's Notes, 28." Slate v. Henkle, supra; Winn v. Slaughter, 5 Heisk. 191.

The enactment of this statute probably gave rise to the rule adopted by courts that just debts of a decedent which have been paid by an executor de son tort according to their legal priority may be set off against the amount of damages for which his intermeddling has made him liable. Slate v. Henkle, supra.

In Crispin v. Winkleman, 57 Iowa, 523, 10 N. W. 919, where the action was by the administratrix against one who had intermeddled with decedent's estate, but who is not therein expressly termed an executor de son tort, the court said: "But the defendant paid two bills for medical services rendered the decedent, and these payments were not allowed. The defendant in his argument complains of the action of the court in this respect. In our opinion there are two grounds upon either of which the ruling can be sustained. It was not the defendant's right to use the money of the estate in paying its debts. Portman v. Klemish, 54 Iowa, 198, 6 N. W. 265. It is true that in that case the defendant was not charged with money so used; but the court expressly disapproved the acts of the defendant, and sustained the ruling of the court below, only by reason of the peculiar circumstances of the case. The decedent's widow had been made sole devisee and appointed executrix. For some reason she failed to qualify. The defendant undertook to assist her in the management and disposition of the estate. The payments were made with that view. The duly appointed administrator received money enough to pay all the proven debts. If a recovery had been allowed from the defendant it would have been solely for the benefit of the devisee, who did not appear to be in a condition to complain. While the result was favorable to the defendant in that case, the general doctrine of the opinion is against the defendant in this. Besides in no case could an intermeddler be allowed to escape liability for using money of the estate in the payment of its debts, without an affirmative showing that the amounts paid were correct. In this case we find no evidence of the value of the services paid for, but merely of the amounts paid." And see Elder v. Littler, 15 Iowa, 65.
L.R.A.1915D.

In Tuite v. Tuite, 72 N. J. Eq. 740, 66 Atl. 1090, it was held that under the statute of that state (title, "Executors & Administrators," Gen. Stat. vol. 2, p. 1426, § 3), a widow, who, without taking out administration thereon, took possession of the personal property possessed by her deceased husband at the time of his death, was chargeable with the value of all such property, less all payments made which a lawful administrator might have been credited with under the laws of that state. The widow was not proceeded against in this case as an executrix de son tort, and no personal representative of the decedent was a party thereto, and the form of the bill was not such as to raise the proper issues and secure appropriate relief from her as such. But the court was willing to permit the complainants, if they so desired, to move to amend their bill so as to seek an accounting from her for the property of the deceased which came into her hands at his death, making a representative of his estate a party, if they should be so advised. Bill in this case was to decree a trust of certain lands held by defendant for the benefit of the complainants.

Suit by creditor.

While an executor de son tort, when sued own benefit, which a rightful executor might do." 18 Cyc. 1363.

In Brown v. Walter, 58 Ala. 310, it was held: "Where one has received and used assets of an intestate, under circumstances constituting him an executor de son tort, he may show, when called to account in equity by the rightful representative, that there are no outstanding debts, and that he has applied the assets for the use and benefit of the distributees, as they must have been applied in due course of administration."

In Risk v. Risk, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 566, 9 S. W. 712, R., having paid the first installment on land, died, leaving a widow and six children, and the defendant, without administering on the estate, but with the concurrence of the plaintiff, undertook to pay the deferred payments and to support the widow and minor children, and he failed to make the third payment, and the land was sold under a judgment by the vendors; and when A. advanced to the defendant money to redeem the land, and the widow and heirs obtained an order for the sale of the land to pay A., who purchased and offered to permit the widow and heirs to redeem, and he conveyed the land to defendant, who paid the balance of the purchase money, in an action by plaintiff for the settlement of the

by the rightful representative of the estate, is not permitted to plead payment of debts to the value, or that he has given the goods in satisfaction of the debts, when the action is by a creditor, such executor may plead plene administravit, and give in evidence the payment of just debts. Whitehall v. Squire, Carth. 104; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Cook v. Sanders, 15 Rich. L. 63, 94 Am. Dec. 139; Turner v. Child, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 331, 17 Am. Dec. 555; Leach v. House, 1 Bail. L. 44.

As stated in Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452, as against creditors an executor de son tort is justified in paying the debts of the deceased; and if sued by a creditor he may plead plene administravit, and will be allowed all payments made of just debts, to any other creditors in equal or a superior degree, or in the due course of administration; though he cannot in any case retain any part of the goods of the deceased in satisfaction of a debt due to himself. See, to the same effect, Cook v. Sanders, 15 Rich. L. 63, 94 Am. Dec. 139.

But he cannot defend himself by showing that he has paid debts of the deceased to the amount of what he has received, unless he pleads plene administravit. Turner v. Child, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 331, 17 Am. Dec. 555, citing Whitehall v. Squire, Carth. 104.

An executor de son tort may, after action brought by a simple contract creditor, pay a specialty debt, and plead the payment of that debt in bar of action. Oxenham v. Clapp, 2 Barn. & Ad. 309. Patteson, J., said: "A wrongful and a rightful executor only differ in this respect: that the first is to take no benefit by his own wrongful act; as regards other creditors there is no difference; an executor de son tort, as well as a rightful executor, may administer the assets in due course of law, and may, therefore, justify the payment of a bond debt of which he has notice, before a simple contract debt."

Such executor must plead specially payment after action brought. Ibid.

Such executor, under a plea of plene administravit, may give in evidence, that before action brought he had exhausted the L.R.A.1915D.

assets by payment of debts of the deceased not inferior to that of the plaintiff. Ibid.

In Hobby v. Ruell, 1 Car. & K. 716, it appeared that the defendant, sued as executor de son tort by a creditor, had ordered a pair of boots of the deceased and had paid him for them in his lifetime, but the boots had not been delivered, and the defendant, to get possession of them after the deceased's death, was obliged to pay the journeyman the price of making them. It was held that defendant was liable for the price of the boots, but that he was entitled to be allowed the sum he paid the journeyman, as that individual had a lien on the boots to that amount.

It appeared in the same case that at the time of decedent's death a cow and calf were agisted with a certain individual, and that the defendant paid this person for their agistment in order to obtain possession of them. It was held that the defendant was not entitled to any allowance in this respect, as the individual had no lien on the cattle for their agistment. Ibid.

If an executor or administrator, appointed in a neighboring state, collects the effects of his testator or intestate, and takes them to another state, and collects debts there without lawful administration, he may be sued as an executor de son tort by a creditor, and is chargeable with all assets which he has not applied in the due course of administration, whether received in the state of the forum, or originally received in the foreign state and brought to the state of the forum. Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 64.

To the effect that when a voluntary or a fraudulent donee is proceeded against as an executor de son tort—the theory on which a bill in equity is maintained against him by one claiming to be a creditor of the deceased donor or grantor—he may make any defense against the demand with which he is sought to be charged, that the decedent, or a rightful representative, could make, see Means v. Hicks, 65 Ala. 241.

If a party who has taken possession of the assets of an estate undertakes to justify himself for his unlawful intermeddling when sued by a creditor, by showing that he has applied them to the payment of the debts of the deceased, he does so at his estate of the father, a division of the land, and allotment of dower, held, that the acts of defendant should be treated as those of a duly appointed administrator from the date of the father's death; and that he holds the land in trust for the widow and heirs.

It is incumbent upon the executor de son tort to show that he has applied the assets which have come into his hands in the same manner in which they would have been lawfully applied by a rightful representative. 18 Cyc. 1363. Among the authorities cited in support of the doctrine stated is that of Gay v. Lemle, 32 Miss. 309, holding that, where it appears that he has paid one particular debt not entitled to preference, leaving others unpaid, he cannot claim that he has done what the law required to be done with the assets in due course of administration, but must be liable as executor de son tort to the other creditors. But in that case the doctrine announced emphasizes the contention that the executor de son tort is entitled to fair treatment if he has acted justly. The syllabus in that case reads: "If an executor de son tort, when sued by a creditor, attempt to justify his unlawful intermeddling with the assets of the deceased by showing that he has applied them to the payment of his debts, he must show that he peril, and must show that he has applied them in the same manner in which they could have been lawfully applied by the rightful executor; and if it appear that he has paid one particular debt not entitled to preference, leaving others unpaid, he cannot claim that he has done what the law required to be done with the assets, in a due course of administration, but must be liable as an executor de son tort to the other creditors. Gay v. Lemle, 32 Miss. 309. The court said: "The rule is well settled, that an executor de son tort is not liable beyond the assets which came to his hands, and that he is protected in all acts, not for his own benefit, which a rightful executor may do. 1 Williams, Exrs. 154. And in England he could discharge himself by showing payment of debts of the intestate in the same or of a superior degree, as a rightful executor would have been justified in making such payment. But there is no authority and there can be no reason, for holding that he is justified in applying the assets to the payment of debts which the rightful executor would not have been authorized to pay; and therefore he would not have been justifiable in England in paying the debts of an inferior degree, in preference to those of a superior degree."

If an executor de son tort exhausts an insolvent estate in the due and orderly payment of debts entitled to priority and is sued by a creditor for a debt of inferior degree to those paid, he may safely stand upon the plea of plene administravit, because the assets have thus been duly administered. But if he has exhausted the assets in the payment of debts not entitled to priority to the plaintiffs, that plea will not avail him, because he has not administered the estate in due course of law. Bennett v. Ives, 30 Conn. 329. And see, in the same connection, Winn v. Slaughter, 5 Heisk. 191.

But holding that, if the estate with which an executor de son tort has intermeddled be insolvent, it is no defense, when sued by a creditor, that he has paid debts to double the amount of the assets which he received, the court, in Neal v. Baker, 2 N. H. 477, said: "There seems to be no doubt that an executor de son tort may plead plene administravit, and support the plea by showing in evidence that before the commencement of the suit he had paid over to the rightful executor or administrator all that was in his hands. Padget v. Priest, 2 T. R. 97, 1 Revised Rep. 440. And in England, when the suit is by a creditor against an executor de son tort, it is a good defense that he has paid the amount of assets come to his hands, to creditors of equal or superior degree, himself only excepted. Loveless, Wills, 51; Coulter's Case, 5 Coke, 30a; Wentworth, Exrs. 180. By our statute of February 3, 1789, § 14 (1) goods, etc., become, in the hands of executors de son tort, assets to the amount of double their value, and we have no doubt that in this state, upon plene administravit pleaded, an executor de son tort might show a recovery against him by a creditor, or by the rightful executor or administrator, to the amount of the assets in his hands, and that this would support his plea. A plea of plene administravit by a rightful executor might, perhaps, be supported by proof that the whole estate had been expended in paying debts due to the state, debts due for the last sickness and funeral charges, and a reasonable allowance by the judge of probate to the widow; these being entitled to priority of payment, by the statute relative to insolvent estates. But we are of opinion that proof that the whole estate had been exhausted in the payment of other debts would not support such a plea. If, after paying the claims entitled to priority of payment, anything remain, it must be shown to have been expended in a distribution among all the creditors, in the insolvent course, in order to support such a plea. And we think that an executor de son tort stands on no better ground in this respect than a rightful executor. When an action is brought against an executor de son tort, it is, in our opinion, no defense, if the estate be insolvent, that he paid, voluntarily, debts to double the amount he has received. Because he has no right to elect whom we will pay. A payment upon a collusive recovery against him would stand upon the same ground. But when there is bona fide a recovery against him to double the amount received, he then pays by order of law and will be discharged. Whether, in case of a solvent estate, payment of just has applied them in the same manner that they would have been lawfully applied by the rightful executor; and if it appear that he has expended the assets in the payment of one particular debt, not being a lien on them, leaving others unpaid, he will be liable to the other creditors." The body of the opinion fully sustains the syllabus, and requires only that the executor de son tort "must show that he has applied them [the assets of the estate] in the same manner in which they could have been lawfully applied by the rightful executor."

In Holeton v. Thayer, 89 Ill. App. 184, it was held that, where a person named as executor in a will acts without qualifying, and receives proceeds of the sales of lands and rents, the burden is upon him to account for the same; and if he assumes to pay debts, without having them probated against the estate, he assumes the burden of producing evidence that would be sufficient to prove such claims in the probate court in case of objection.

In Crispin v. Winkleman, 57 Iowa, 523, 10 N. W. 919, it was held: "One who intermeddles with the estate of a decedent, without having been appointed administrator, has no right to pay claims out of the assets of the estate; and in no case can he escape debts to double the amount received would be a defense to an action brought by a creditor against an executor de son tort need not now be decided. In the present case it is agreed that the estate was insolvent, and we are of opinion that there must be judgment for the plaintiff."

The doctrine of the common law in regard to the liability of an individual who, without being appointed executor or taking letters of administration, intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person, is recognized as applicable and operative in Connecticut, so far as it is not inconsistent with the general principles and policy of the law of that state regarding the settlement of estates. Bacon v. Parker, 12 Conn. 212; Bennett v. Ives, 30 Conn. 329.

An executor de son tort has all of the liabilities but none of the privileges of a rightful executor, and therefore cannot retain his own debt as against the claim of any other creditor, but he may show that he has exhausted the assets by the payment of just debts of the decedent, other than his own. McMeekin v. Hynes, 80 Ky. 343. To the same effect, see Alexander v. Lane, Yelv. 137; Prince v. Rowson, 1 Mod. 208; Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587, 2 H. Bl. 18, 1 Revised Rep. 774; Leach v. House, 1 Bail. L. 42; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Partee v. Caughran, 9 Yerg. 460; Sharp v. Caldwell, 7 Humph. 415; Turner v. Child, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 331, 17 Am. Dec. 555.

An executor de son tort cannot retain for his own debt, but, with this exception, he may pay debts, even one to which he is surety, in the same order in which a rightful executor is required to pay them. Kinard v. Young, 2 Rich. Eq. 247.

And in Kinard v. Young, supra, an executor de son tort was entitled to credit for a coffin for his testator, upon the ground that "all the authorities say that payments or expenditures which a rightful executor might lawfully make are good acts of administration in a wrongful executor."

A wrongful and rightful executor differ, it seems, in this respect only,—that the first is to take no benefit of his own wrongful act. As regards the creditors there is no difference; both may administer the assets in due course of law. Bennett v. Ives, L.R.A.1915D.

supra; and see Tweedy v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 276.

An executor de son tort sued at law as such by a creditor of the deceased is not allowed to retain for his own debt, and the rule is the same in equity. And refusing to allow such executor to retain in payment of his own debt does not violate the rule that a court will never enforce a penalty. Baumgartner v. Haas, 68 Md. 32, 11 Atl. 588. The court said: "Now an executor de son tort, sued at law as such by a creditor of the deceased, is not allowed to retain for his own debt. The current of authorities is uniform on this point, and it is enough for us to refer to the case of Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452, where the law is definitely settled in this state. It is true that that case, as all the others within our notice, were cases at law, and it has been very strenuously argued that a different rule should prevail in equity. It is insisted that, in refusing to allow Gunther to retain any portion of the property in controversy in payment of his own debt, a court of equity would be enforcing a penalty upon him, which a court of equity will never do. The rule of the common law, which refuses to allow executors de son tort to retain for their own debts until the other creditors are paid, is based upon sound public policy. To allow it (2 Bl. Com. 511) would tend to encourage creditors to strive who should first take possession of the goods of the deceased, and would allow a creditor to take advantage of his own wrongful act by paying himself first. Such is unquestionably the rule of the common law from time immemorial. Can a court of equity annul this rule? A quotation from an eminent American writer (Story) will answer this question: 'For example (1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 11), the first proposition, that equity will relieve against a general rule of law, is neither sanctioned by principle nor by authority. For though it may be true that equity has in many cases decided differently from courts of law, yet it will be found that these cases involved circumstances to which a court of law could not advert, but which, in point of substantial justice, were deserving of particular consideration, and which a court of equity, proceeding on principles of substantial jus-liability for so using the money of the estate, without an affirmative showing that the amounts paid were correct."

Since the district court has acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and the whole subject-matter is presented for adjudication, nothing can be gained by rendering a judgment against the defendant and compelling him to file his claim against the estate, thus unnecessarily increasing the litigation and costs. We think that the district court should dispose of the whole case before it.

There is no showing that the deceased was in any way indebted. The estate is solvent. The defendant is not shown to have injured anyone by reason of what he did. The claim of no creditor is endangered.

It follows that the district court erred in excluding evidence tending to show that the money received from the sale of the property was expended in and about the burial of the deceased.

The judgment of the District Court of Dakota County is reversed.

Letton and Fawcett, JJ. (concurring in result only):

We think the principles announced in Phillips v. Phillips, 87 Me. 324, 32 Atl. 963, and Adams v. Butts, 16 Pick. 343, apply, and hence concur in the result.

Sedgwick, J., concurs in the conclusion.

tice, felt itself bound to respect.' This is a bill in equity, and it has been argued that when the decree was passed against Gunther, requiring him to account for this property, and bring it into court for distribution among the creditors of the deceased, that Gunther, being a creditor, should participate in the distribution. If the creditor liaas had brought suit at law and recovered, the defendant could not certainly have retained anything for his own debt. The plaintiff, if his debt amounted to the whole value of the property, would have taken it all. This is unquestionably the rule at law. Should an honest and meritorious creditor of the deceased be placed in a worse position when he seeks the aid of a court of equity? Or should a manifest wrongdoer fare better in equity than at law? We think the answer to these propositions must be in the negative. To allow the defendant to come in and participate in the division of the property recovered from him is practically to allow him to retain a share of it for his own debt, and thus relieve him from the operation of the rule of the common law that forbids such a retainer."

Although, under the Georgia Code, executors de son tort can get no credit for any debt voluntarily paid by them, yet, if, in good faith, they have furnished the widow her year's support, they may set that off. The claim of the widow is not a debt, but a special provision allowed by law, in preference to any liens or debts held by creditors. Barron v. Burney, 38 Ga. 264.

If, previously to an action brought against the defendants, as executors de son tort, by creditors, they had paid the money over to the rightful administrator, that would be a good defense, because then they would have applied the money properly. Padget v. Priest, 2 T. R. 100, 1 Revised Rep. 440; Hill v. Curtis, L. R. 1 Eq. 90, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 133, 12 Jur. N. S. 4, 13 L. T. N. S. 584, 14 Week. Rep. 125; Kinard v. Young, supra; Anonymous, 1 Salk. 313. And to this end they may plead plene administravit. Kinard v. Young and Anonymous, supra.

But an executor of his own wrong cannot discharge himself from an action by L.R.A.1915D.

a creditor by delivering over the effects to the rightful executor after the action is brought. Curtis v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 587, 2 H. Bl. 18, 1 Revised Rep. 774; Hill v. Curtis, supra. And see Carmichael v. Carmichael, 10 Jur. 908, 2 Phill. Ch. 101, which seems to hold that the wrongful executor cannot discharge himself by coming to an account with the lawful representative.

The rule in equity, it seems, follows the rule at law; so that if an executor de son tort can prove a settled account with the rightful representative before suit, that is a sufficient answer to a bill in equity against him for an account. Hill v. Curtis, supra.

Suit by distributee, etc.

Since § 2441, Georgia Code, debts voluntarily paid by an executor de son tort cannot be set off by him against an action by a distributee of the estate for his share of the property. Bryant v. Helton, 66 Ga. 477.

But in a suit by such distributee against such an executor de son tort, he can set off the widow's year's support. Ibid.

In Roggenkamp v. Roggenkamp, 15 C. C. A. 600, 32 U. S. App. 453, 68 Fed. 605, which was an action by the heir's guardian to recover certain real estate, the court said: "Under the common law, one who intermeddles with the personal property of a deceased person, and disposes of it, or does any other act of administration of the assets without the authority or direction of the proper court, or of the will of the deceased, thereby constitutes himself an executor de son tort. He cannot by his wrongful act acquire any benefit for himself. The rightful executor or administrator, or any creditor or legatee, may maintain an action against him for the property of the deceased which he has taken, and may compel him to account for its disposition and value; but in all acts that are not for his own benefit, and that a lawful executor might do, he is protected. He cannot be charged beyond the assets which come to his hands, and against these he may set off the just debts which he has paid. 1 Williams Exrs. pp. 296, 305, 308; Bacon v. Parker, 12 Conn.

213; Emery v. Berry, 28 N. H. 473, 61 Am. Dec. 622; Bellows v. Goodall, 32 N. H. 97; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Weeks v. Gibbs, 9 Mass. 74; Winn v. Slaughter, 5 Heisk. 191; Tobey v. Miller, 54 Me. 480; Olmsted v. Clark, 30 Conn. 108. It is unnecessary to inquire in this case whether or not an intermeddler with the personal estate of a deceased person becomes an executor de son tort, and liable to account at the suit of a creditor or legatee under the statutes of the state of Nebraska. It is certain that the appellant, by undertaking to administer the estate of his deceased son without the sanction of the probate court, made himself liable to account to the rightful administrator for the value of the personal property he obtained from that estate. Consol. Stat. (Neb.) 1891, § 1244. But it would have been a perfect defense to a suit by the administrator for such an accounting that the appellant had paid all the just debts of the deceased, and that he had exhausted all the assets he had received from the estate in paying these debts. The heir had no right to or equity in the personal property of his father, as against a stranger, superior to those of the lawful administrator. He alleged in this suit that the appellant had appropriated the proceeds of the personal property of the estate to the purchase of the land he sought to recover. The appellant denied this, averred that he had used all the property of the deceased and some of his own to pay the just debts of the deceased, and that he paid for this land with his own money. The appellant was entitled to a fair accounting that would determine this issue, and find what balance, if any, of the value of the personal property he received, remained in his hands after he was credited with the payments he made on just debts of the deceased. He was not liable to be charged with the use of any more property of the deceased in the purchase of this land than the amount of such a balance. We have searched the record in this case in vain for the statement of such an account, or of evidence that an accounting upon this basis has been had in the court below, and we are unwilling to affirm the decree without it."

In Weaver v. Williams, 75 Miss. 945, 23 So. 649, which was a proceeding for the partition of certain lands belonging to the estate of the decedent, and for the recovery in personam against executors de son tort for moneys and notes alleged to have been taken possession of by such executors of the estate, and used for their own benefit, it was said: "The contention that these executors de son tort have paid debts which should have been credited on the personal decree is also untenable, for the obvious reason that the proof utterly fails to show that the debts which they claimed to have paid were valid charges against the estate,—charges such as a rightful executor would have been protected in paying. We have said, in Gay v. Lemle, 32 Miss. 312, 'There is no authority, and L.R.A.1915D.

there can be no reason, for holding that he [an executor de son tort] is justified in applying the assets to the payment of debts which the rightful executor would not have been authorized to pay.' The loose, vague, uncertain testimony here on this point is utterly unsatisfactory. The observations of the court in Hardy v. Thomas, 23 Miss. 547, 57 Am. Dec. 152, are to be especially noted, the court declaring: 'If a party see fit, without authority of law, to intermeddle with an estate, to pay debts, and sell property for that purpose, all he can rightfully ask is the privilege of proving a claim against the estate for the sums so paid, and demanding payment from the administrator, ratably with the other creditors.' We do not, of course, mean to be understood as saying that if the claims were legal charges against the estate, and have been paid by the executors de son tort, they could not here diminish the recovery by their amount. We call attention merely to the case in 23 Miss., supra, in view of the dealing with these notes, resting our approval of the chancellor's action in this respect upon the total failure of the testimony to show that any claims alleged to have been paid were such as were legal charges against the estate."

It is the well-settled doctrine that an executor de son tort of a solvent estate may discharge himself, even against the demand of the rightful executor, by proving debts paid to the amount of the goods received which had belonged to deceased. McConnell v. McConnell, 94 Ill. 295.

So, where a widow took a United States government bond of $1,000 belonging to her deceased husband estate, and never accounted for the same, but paid the same on a note of $1,500 against the estate, she was not liable to the heir at law for the amount of the bond. Ibid.

Sharland v. Mildon, 10 Jur. 771, 5 Hare, 469, 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 434, holds that one acting as the agent of an executor de son tort in collecting the assets, and knowing at the time that his principal is not the legal personal representative, is himself liable as executor de son tort; and that although he may have duly accounted to his principal for the assets which he has received. The bill in this case was against the personal representative and the agent of the executor de son tort by a party claiming under the will of the testator for a general account of his estate.

Suit by executor de son tort against rightful representative.

In Ayre v. Ayre, 1 Ch. Cas. 33, "the plaintiff being the widow of her husband, sued the defendant, who was his executor, to have allowance of satisfaction for several debts of the testator's (which she, having possessed herself of his estate, had paid) the executor having gotten all the estate out of her hands. It was much controverted, whether she should be helped herein? For tho' executor of his own wrong shall be allowed all payments made to any but himself, yet she was not executrix of her own wrong; for where there is a rightful executor, as here, there can be no executor de son tort. Yet it resembled that case; and the court doubting much what to do in this case, decreed by consent of counsel, that she should be allowed for all payments that she had made which were incumbent on the executor to pay, according to the course of law, but that if she had made any payments out of order and rule that the law left the executor liable to, that such payments she should not be allowed for, if they were to the prejudice of the executors."

An executor de son tort at common law has no rights, and payments made by him over and above the value of the assets which come into his hands are entirely voluntary. He cannot by such payments place himself in the position of a creditor of the estate. De la Guerra v. Packard, 17 Cal. 183.

W. W. A.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

MURPHY HUTTO

v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al.,
Appts.

(— S. C. —, 84 S. E. 719.)

Railroad — crossing signals — failure to give — injury to person near crossing.

A statute requiring railroad companies to give signals when trains approach high-

Note. — Duty of railroad company to give crossing signals for the benefit of persons near crossing, but not about to use the same.

The earlier cases on this question may be found in notes to Loneragan v. Illinois C. R. Co. 17 L.R.A. 254; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Saunders, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 998; and Warn v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667, of which this note is a continuation.

As to duty of railroad company operating trains or cars longitudinally along public street as to signals, see note to Southern R. Co. v. Caplinger, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 672.

As to duty of railroad to give crossing signals at place not technically a highway crossing, but used as such, see Midland Valley R. Co. v. Shores, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 814.

As to duty to give crossing signals for protection of animals, see note to Campbell v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 881.

As to the places and operations to which statutes or ordinances requiring lookout on trains apply, see note to King v. Tennessee C. R. Co. 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618.

As to right of employee to rely on statute requiring signal to be given by train L.R.A.1915D.

way crossings creates no duty in favor of persons working near the crossing, and therefore a railroad company which fails to give the required signal is not liable for injury to one at work near the crossing, through the frightening of his horse, although at the time of the injury he had taken the horse onto the highway on his way home, to reach which required traveling away from the railroad track.

(March 12, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Lexington County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Johnstone & Cromer, for appellants:

If persons know of the approach of trains without any signals being given, and have an opportunity to take precautions for their protection, they are in no position to complain that the signals were not given.

Barber v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 34 S. C. 450, 13 S. E. 630; Lee v. Northwestern R. Co. 84 S. C. 137, 65 S. E. 1031.

The violation of a statutory duty is the foundation of an action for negligence in favor of such persons only as belong to the class intended by the legislature to be protected by the statute.

Everett v. Great Northern R. Co. 100 Minn. 309, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 703, 111 N. W. 281, 10 Ann. Cas. 294; Williams v. Chicago

approaching crossing, see Lepard v. Michigan C. R. Co. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1105.

Duty as to persons on parallel road, not intending to cross track.

Supplementary notes in 17 L.R.A. 255; 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1000; and 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 668.

Proof of a failure to give the statutory signals before reaching a public crossing will not sustain an allegation that a person was injured on a road parallel to a railroad by his horse becoming frightened at a whistle on a passing train. Rowe v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 143 Ky. 823, 137 S. W. 511.

When a railroad train on approaching a highway fails to begin at the statutory distance to give the statutory signals, and it appears that if such signals had been given at the proper point, one driving along the parallel highway near the crossover would have had time and opportunity to guard against danger, a tardy blowing of the locomotive whistle which, concurring with the noise of the moving train, frightens the driven horse and increases the brute's terror, so that the driver is injured while trying to restrain and calm the animal, ren-

& A. R. Co. 135 Ill. 491, 11 L.R.A. 353, 25 Am. St. Rep. 397, 26 N. E. 661; Hughes v. Southern R. Co. 82 S. C. 45, 61 S. E. 1079, 63 S. E. 5; Cooper v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 65 S. C. 214, 43 S. E. 682; Thompson v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 338, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 426, 62 S. E. 396; 2 L.R.A. Extra Anno. 630; Neely v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 139, 11 S. E. 636.

Mr. W. H. Sharpe also for appellants.

Messrs. Melton & Sturkie and Thummond, Timmerman, & Callison for respondent.

Hydrick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff was plowing in his field about 55 feet from defendant's track. The rows ran parallel with the track. Along the end of the rows there was a neighborhood road which crossed the track. There was evidence tending to prove that the crossing was "a traveled place," within the meaning of the statute. Plaintiff drove out into the road and stopped, intending to quit work for the day and go to his house, which was on the same side of the railroad, about 200 yards from the crossing. He had taken hold of his horse's bridle preparatory to unhitching him from the plow, when one of defendant's trains ran by without giving the statutory signals. The horse was so frightened by the noise of the train that he jumped and jerked plaintiff down across the plow stock and injured him, for which ders the railroad company liable for the injury. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Kilman, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 107, 86 S. W. 1050.

Duty as to persons using near-by private crossing.

Supplementing notes in 17 L.R.A. 254, and 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1000.

It is to be observed that the cases in point under this heading are merely those in which the person using the private crossing relied upon the duty of the railroad company to give the signals at a near-by public crossing; cases that turn upon the duty of the railroad company to give the signal for the private crossing are not within the scope of these notes.

Where a private crossing at which signals of the approach of trains are not accustomed to be given is contiguous to a public crossing at which such signals are customary and required to be given, and a person using the private crossing is accustomed to rely upon the signals for the public crossing as a means of knowing of the approach of trains to the private crossing, and such person is injured at the private crossing by a train, the coming of which was not made known to him because of the negligence of its engineer in failing to give the customary signals of its approach at the public crossing, such failure renders the railroad company liable for his injuries. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Young, 146 Ky. 317, 142 S. W. 709.

While it is the rule in Kentucky that persons using a private crossing who are in the habit of depending upon signals required to be given for a near-by public crossing are entitled to the benefit and protection of such signals, and if the company fails to give the required public crossing signals, and the traveler using the near-by private crossing is injured as a result of this failure while exercising care for his own safety, he may recover damages for the injury thus sustained, it was held in Thacker v. Norfolk L.R.A.1915D, & W. R. Co. 162 Ky. 337, 172 S. W. 653, where a person was injured by a train at a private crossing, that the failure to give the statutory signals for a public crossing a few hundred yards distant did not render the railroad company liable, the case being controlled by the law of West Virginia, under which train signals at public crossings are not intended for warning or protection of travelers at private crossings, and so a traveler at a private crossing who is struck by a passing train cannot maintain an action against the company because it has failed to give the statutory signal for a near-by public crossing, as a result of which failure he was struck and injured. It may be observed that some of the cases cited in the opinion in support of the Kentucky rule did not involve the question whether one using a private crossing near a public crossing may rely upon the duty to give signals for the public crossing, but the question whether the railroad company is bound to give signals for the private crossing when that has been the custom. These cases are therefore not within the scope of the present note. The statement as to the Kentucky rule is, however, borne out by Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 92 Ky. 345, 18 S. W. 2, and the Young Case, and other Kentucky cases cited at page 1000 of the note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.).

In Wavle v. Michigan United R. Co. 170 Mich. 81, 135 N. W. 914, it was held that an interurban railroad company under no statutory duty to give signals at highway or other crossings was not bound to signal the approach of a car to a highway crossing for the benefit of one using a near-by private crossing on his farm, even though the custom of whistling at the highway crossing was known to those living in the vicinity thereof; whether the whistle was in fact sounded at the public crossing was, however, material as affecting the question of contributory negligence, because the public crossing was so near the private crossing. The court stated: "In the absence of a statute, the duty of defendant to sound a whistle before pro-he recovered judgment against defendant for $800.

The only negligence alleged as the ground of recovery was the failure to give the signals required by § 3222 of the Civil Code, which reads: "A bell of at least 30 pounds weight and a steam whistle shall be placed on each locomotive engine, and such bell shall be rung, or such whistle sounded, by the engineer or fireman, at the distance of at least 500 yards from the place where the railroad crosses any public highway or street or traveled place, and be kept ringing or whistling until the engine has crossed such highway or street or traveled place; and if such engine or cars shall be at a standstill, within a less distance than 100 rods of such crossing, such bell shall be rung, or such whistle sounded, for at least thirty seconds before such engine shall be moved; and shall be kept ringing or sounding until such engine shall have crossed such public highway or street or traveled place."

The sole question therefore is: Did defendant's negligence in failing to give the signals required by the statute at such crossings give plaintiff a cause of action?

The intention to be gathered from the language of the statute is that the signals were required for the protection of persons who may be using a highway, street, or traveled place, against the dangers incident to the crossing thereof by engines and cars.

pulling a car over a public highway, assuming there is such a duty, arises out of the fact that it is about to cross the highway at speed, of which fact others having equal right to use the highway, and desiring to do so, should in prudence be warned. It is the relation of the owners of the car to the highway and its use, and to the passengers on the car, which creates and defines the duty. Outside of those relations, it owes no duty to signify an intention to cross a highway. Failure to perform the duty is negligence as matter of law only when injury results therefrom to someone to whom the duty is owing."

In Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McKey, 13 Ga. App. 477, 79 S. E. 378, reported only by syllabi, it is declared that a railroad company, relating to a person not upon or approaching a public crossing, is under no duty to comply with the statutory requirements as to giving signals and checking the speed of its train; and its failure to comply with such requirements is not as to such person negligence for which damages may be recovered. As the facts are not reported it is not clear whether the court was speaking of a person near a public crossing, but not about to use the same, or of a person near or upon the track at a point where there was no public crossing.

Duty as to trespassers and licensees.

Supplementing notes in 17 L.R.A. 254; 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 998; and 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667.

Generally, as to duty of railroad company to keep lookout for trespassers on tracks, see notes to Frye v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1069, and Martin v. Hughes Creek Coal Co. 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 264.

It was held in Seymour v. Illinois Southern R. Co. 173 Ill. App. 326, that the statute requiring a signal to be given by a locomotive 80 rods before reaching a highway crossing was not intended to impose a duty towards people at the side of a railroad, whether lawful or unlawful, but was enacted for the protection of passengers and of persons upon the public highway who were about to cross the railroad or enter upon its crossing; consequently where one, while unloading stone at the side of a track, was injured when an engine struck his horse, it was held that such a statute did not extend to the case.

In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Houston, 27 Okla. 719, 117 Pac. 184, plaintiff was injured when a passenger train struck his team while he was loading a car on a side track. There was no contention that the engineer violated the section of the statute which makes it a misdemeanor for an engineer to omit to cause the bell to ring or a steam whistle to sound at a certain distance from the place where the track crosses a public way, and there was no instruction asked or given presenting that theory to the jury. The evidence as to giving signals seems to have been introduced for the purpose of showing that the railway company neglected some duty that it owed the plaintiff in the situation in which he was found. Ringing the bell and sounding the whistle of a locomotive, said the court, are the ordinary methods of warning persons and animals who seem to be in a place of danger from approaching trains, of their peril, and in such cases evidence tending to prove a failure to do so is proper to go to the jury on the question of negligence, whether the signals were required by the statute or not.

Duty as to persons lately using crossings.

Supplementing notes in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 999.

The failure to signal the approach of a train to a public crossing was held in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Survant, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1576, 44 S. W. 88, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 655, not to be the proximate cause of an injury to a person by her horse becoming frightened at a train while she was driving along a road parallel to the track after having safely crossed a private crossing a mile distant from the public crossing, her failure to look along the line of the railroad before attempting to cross the track being an act of negligence directly contributing to the fright of her horse, which was the cause of the accident and consequent injury.

J. D. C.

This is the uniform construction which has been given to it by this court, and the same construction has been given similar statutes by other courts and by the text writers. Williams v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 135 Ill. 491, 11 L.R.A. 352, 25 Am. St. Rep. 397, 26 N. E. 661, where numerous authorities are cited. In some of the cases such statutes are given a restricted construction, and it is held that the signals are required to protect travelers against actual collision with passing engines or cars. In others, they are given a more liberal construction, and it is held that they are intended also to enable them to secure their horses against taking fright at passing trains. This court has adopted the latter view. Clifford v. Southern R. Co. 87 S. C. 325, 69 S. E. 513; Spears v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 92 S. C. 297, 75 S. E. 498.

Certainly, the statute was not intended for the protection of all persons who may be on or near a railroad at any and all places, for, if it had been, signals of approach would have been required all along the railroad, and not merely for the distance of 500 yards before reaching such crossings, and until the engines or cars had crossed them. The same inference is to be drawn from the provision that, if engines or cars are standing still within 100 rods of such crossings, the signals must be given for thirty seconds before they are moved, and must be continued until they shall have crossed, which is not required when engines or cars are standing still at all places. Nor was it intended for the protection of all persons who may be on a highway, street, or traveled place which is crossed by a railroad, without regard to their use thereof, as the same may be affected by the dangers incident to such crossings. If it could be extended to the protection of plaintiff under the circumstances stated, there would be no reason why it should not be extended to protect him, if he had been at the other end of his field. Such an enlargement of the scope of the legislative intention would not be warranted by any fair and legitimate construction of the language used.

In the Clifford Case, which is relied upon by the respondent, Miss Clifford was traveling along the highway, and was on the crossing before she had any warning of the approach of the train, and had just cleared the track when the train passed without having given any signal of its approach, and missed the hind wheels of her buggy only a few inches. Her horse was so frightened that he threw her out and injured her. She was clearly within the danger against which the statute was intended to protect those using the highway, with respect to the crossing thereof by the railroad, for, if the signals had been given, she might have delayed her crossing until the train had passed, or being upon the crossing, or having just crossed, she might have hurried away to a safe distance, or have guarded against the danger of fright to her horse in several ways which will readily suggest themselves.
L.R.A.1915D.

The difference between that case and this does not lie wholly in the fact that the one was brought under the common law and the other under the statute, for, as was said in that case, the statute is cumulative of the common law. And therefore, in actions under the common law, proof of the failure to give the signals required by the statute at near-by crossings has been held in numerous cases to be competent evidence in support of the charge of negligence. But such failure has never been held to be negligence per se, except as to those using or intending to use such crossings. The true difference lies in the duty which the railroad companies owed to the parties in their respective situations. In Miss Clifford's case, the company owed her the duty, in her situation, to give the crossing signals. In this case, the company owed no such duty to the plaintiff, because his injury had no connection with the use or intended use of the crossing. His situation with reference to it was merely casual, and so was the fact that he happened to be actually in the road, because he was not using the road with respect to the crossing. His situation, therefore, is the same as if he had been in his field some distance from the road, and yet near enough for the signals to have afforded him protection. The signals were not required for the benefit of one so situated, for clearly, if they had been, they would have been required all along the road.

The question which has been considered is not whether the defendant owed plaintiff any duty, or, more specifically, the duty of giving him any signal of the approach of its train, for the allegation is that the defendant owed him the duty, in his situation, to give the crossing signals required by the statute, and, for its neglect in respect of that supposed duty, his action was sustained.

It is elementary that a duty may be owing to one in a given situation which would not be owing to him in another. In Stone v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 96 S. C. 228, 80 S. E. 433, it was held that the railroad company owed Stone, a car repairer, no duty to exercise care for his protection while under a car in its yard without the protection of a blue flag, in violation of a rule of the company. In that case, the court quoted with approval the principle as thus stated in 29 Cyc. 419: "The duty must be owing to the person injured, and must be in respect of the very matter or act charged as negligence."

In the Clifford Case, it was pointed out that § 3222, which requires the signals at crossings, is independent of § 3230, which materially modifies the principles of the common law in actions for damages in cases of injury to persons or property by actual collision with engines or cars at such crossings, when the signals required by § 3222 have not been given. And while those cases in which there has been a collision, as well as those in which the question has been considered whether the injury must be "at the crossing," are not directly in point, consideration of them shows that this court has uniformly held that the section requiring the signals is not applicable in case of injuries to persons or property when there was no use or intended use of the crossings therein mentioned. Sims v. Southern R. Co. 59 S. C. 246, 37 S. E. 836; Cooper v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 65 S. C. 214, 43 S. E. 682; Fowles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 73 S. C. 306, 53 S. E. 534; Hughes v. Southern R. Co. 82 S. C. 45, 61 S. E. 1079, 63 S. E. 5. In the Cooper Case, it was held that the section did not apply to crossings at different levels.

In the same case, the court said that, "independently of statute, it is the duty of those in charge of a train to give notice of its approach at all points of known or reasonably apprehended danger."

In this case there was no evidence that the place at which plaintiff was at work was one of known or reasonably apprehended danger. So that, even if we could view the case in its common-law aspect, there was no evidence of negligence.

Judgment reversed.

Gary, Ch. J., and Fraser, Watts, and Gage, JJ., concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

MRS. JOSIE A. CROUCH, Admr., etc., of Peter W. Crouch, Deceased,
v.

SOUTHERN SURETY COMPANY, Appt.

(131 Tenn. 260, 174 S. W. 1116.)

Insurance — fidelity — return of unearned premium.

No return of unearned premium upon a bond insuring the fidelity of a public officer for a yearly premium can be had, although he dies in the middle of the year; at least, where duties involving the principal hazard have all been performed before his death.

Note. — The decision in CROUCH v. SOUTHERN SURETY Co. appears to be one of first impression as to the right to the return of part of the premium on a policy insuring the fidelity of an officer or employee upon his death or the premature termination. L.R.A.1915D.

(March 20, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Davidson County overruling a demurrer to a bill filed to recover a part of the premium paid to defendant by plaintiff's intestate for becoming surety on his bond. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Aust & McGugin, for appellant:

The contract was an entirety, the risk attached, and the complainant is not entitled to any refund of premium because Captain Crouch did not live out the full term of his office.

May, Ins. § 567; Joyce, Ins. § 1420; Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. pt. 2, p. 666, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; Lorraine v. Thomlinson, 2 Dougl. K. B. 585; Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Dougl. K. B. 781; Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch, 357, 2 L. ed. 466; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lynch, 11 Johns. 233; Mailhoit v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 87 Me. 374, 47 Am. St. Rep. 336, 32 Atl. 989; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Houser, 89 Ind. 258, reaffirmed in 111 Ind. 266, 12 N. E. 481; Standley v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 95 Ind. 254; 19 Cyc. 609; Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v. American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. 86 Cal. 248, 21 Am. St. Rep. 33, 24 Pac. 1018; People ex rel. Kasson v. Rose, 174 Ill. 310, 44 L.R.A. 124, 61 N. E. 246; Bostick v. Maxey, 5 Sneed, 173.

Defendant did not agree to make any refund of premium if Captain Crouch should die before the expiration of his term.

Upon his death his right ceased, and he could not transmit to his estate any interest in the office or any right to fees for services which he had not performed and earned.

Haynes v. State, 3 Humph. 480, 30 Am. Dec. 187; Moore v. Sharp, 98 Tenn. 68, 38 S. W. 411; Nelson v. Sneed, 112 Tenn. 48, 83 S. W. 786.

If an insurance risk once attaches, the whole premium is earned, unless the policy is avoided by some wrongful act of the insurer.

American Surety Co. v. Folk, 124 Tenn. 140, 135 S. W. 778, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1024; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 52 C. C. A. 154, 114 Fed. 268; Dickerson v. Northwestern of his office or employment. It seems to be correct upon reason and principle, and will doubtlessly be considered worthy authority should the same question again be presented for judicial determination.

Mut. L. Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 65 N. E. 694; Harris v. Schrivener, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 78 S. W. 705; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. 56; Hearne v. New England Mut. Ins. Co. 20 Wall. 488, 22 L. ed. 395; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Kuhlman, 58 Neb. 488, 76 Am. St. Rep. 111, 78 N. W. 936; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Coleman, 6 Dak. 458, 6 L.R.A. 87, 43 N. W. 693.

Mr. A. G. Moseley also for appellant.

Messrs. Larkin E. Crouch, Litton Hickman, and Thomas H. Malone, for appellee:

In cases of compensated suretyship, where the public official has died during the continuance of his term, the surety company is thereby discharged from any future liability, and a promise on its part to return the unearned premiums is implied in law.

Bostick v. Maxey, 5 Sneed, 173; Frost, Guaranty Ins. 2d ed. § 153.

There was a contract implied in fact, whereby the defendant, for a valuable consideration, bound itself to return the unearned premiums.

Hill v. Childress, 10 Yerg. 514; Heffron v. Brown, 155 Ill. 322, 40 N. E. 583; Bixby v. Moor, 51 N. H. 402.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Peter W. Crouch was elected trustee of Davidson county at the August election in 1912. He was inducted into office in September, 1912, and gave bond in the sum of $1,000,000 to the state and county, to secure the faithful performance of his duties during his term, with the defendant company as surety on his bond. At the same time a contract was entered into between Mr. Crouch and the defendant company, whereby the latter agreed to become his surety for a premium of $4,000 per annum. The first year's premium was paid in advance.

Mr. Crouch died in February, 1913, about six months after he qualified as trustee. This suit was brought by his widow, as administratrix, to recover $2,000, or one half of the first annual premium paid to defendant company as aforesaid.

A demurrer was interposed by the defendant, which was overruled by the chancellor, and defendant permitted to appeal.

The first ground of demurrer makes the point that, when Mr. Crouch took charge of the office, the entire risk was assumed by the defendant and the entire premium earned under the contract; that the premium was not apportionable, and complainant was not entitled to a return of any part thereof, even though Mr. Crouch died when about one half of the year for which he was bonded remained.

L.R.A.1915D.

The defendant invokes the rule applicable to marine insurance, life insurance, and fire insurance, that, where a risk has once attached, even for a moment, the insured is not entitled to a return of any part of the premium paid.

This rule seems to have been first announced by Lord Mansfield in the case of Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. pt. 2, p. 666, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502. In that case a ship was insured for twelve months at a stipulated premium, but was captured by an enemy in about two months after sailing, and suit was brought against the insurer for a return of a proportionate part of the premium.

Lord Mansfield said: "If that risk of the contract of indemnity has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. For, though the premium is estimated, and the risk depends upon the nature and length of the voyage, yet, if it has commenced, though it be only for twenty-four hours or less, the risk is run; the contract is for the whole entire risk, and no part of the consideration shall be returned. . . . They might have insured from two months to twelve months, or in any less or greater proportion, if they had thought proper so to do; but the fact is that they have made no division of time at all, but the contract entered into is one entire contract from the 19th of August, 1776, to the 19th of August, 1777, which is the same as if it had expressly said: . . . 'If you, the underwriter, will insure me for twelve months, I will give you the entire sum; but I will not have any apportionment.' The ship sails, and the underwriter runs the risk for two months. No part of the premium shall be returned."

This case has been universally followed, and the rule therein stated has been applied to life insurance, fire insurance, and casualty insurance contracts. May, Ins. § 567; Joyce, Ins. § 1420; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 52 C. C. A. 154, 114 Fed. 268; Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 65 N. E. 694; New York F. M. Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 4 Duer, 141; Waters v. Allen, 5 Hill, 421; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 44 Ohio St. 19, 58 Am. Rep. 781, 4 N. E. 465; Hoyt v. Gilman, 8 Mass. 336; Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v. American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. 86 Cal. 248, 21 Am. St. Rep. 33, 24 Pac. 1018; Blaeser v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. 37 Wis. 31, 19 Am. Rep. 747.

This rule, in fact, seems not to have been questioned in any American case, but has been accepted and applied by the courts as settled law.

This rule is said to be based on just and equitable principles, for the insurer has, by taking upon himself the whole peril, become entitled to the whole premium, and, although the application of the rule may result in profit to the insurer, it is but a just compensation for the dangers or perils assumed. It has also been pointed out that the danger incurred may be greater in one moment than during the entire voyage, and it would be extremely difficult to fairly apportion the premium, if a recovery of any part thereof were permissible. Joyce, Ins. § 97.

It is difficult to see why this rule should not apply with equal vigor to fidelity insurance. Upon what fair basis can the premium, the consideration paid for undertaking the risk of fidelity, be apportioned?

This hazard is proportioned to the fallibility of the subject of insurance, and its extent is measured by the amount of funds in his custody. Moral stamina is a varying quantity, even in the same person. It is influenced by many things. It is impossible to say at what time the temptation of an individual bonded is greatest and the greatest risk is being run by the surety. Likewise, the amount of money in the hands of the official or the employee fluctuates from day to day, and it is difficult and often impossible to determine on what day the liability of the surety is greatest in extent.

Who can say how much of the surety's risk was run during any given period? How then can it be determined what part of the premium has been earned during any given period? A premium cannot be apportioned where a risk is unapportionable. Premium and risk are interdependent and inseparable. It being impossible to say what part of a risk has been run, it is likewise impossible to say what part of a premium is unearned,—what part should be returned.

The case before us illustrates the difficulty of attempting an apportionment of premiums in fidelity insurance, for it here appears that the great bulk of the funds passing through this official's hands were collected and disbursed by him on one month of the twelve for which he was bonded. That is to say, this surety's risk was greater in extent for this one month than during the remaining eleven months combined.

An argument is made on behalf of Mrs. Crouch in which it is urged that this contract of suretyship should be treated as a contract for personal services, which it became impossible to execute by reason of the death of one of the parties, and it is insisted that only so much of the consideration should be retained as might be recovered on a quantum meruit.
L.R.A.1915D.

All insurance, fire and life, as well as guaranty, is somewhat personal in its nature, resting to a great extent on the reputation and character of the insured, but all such contracts are essentially entire. It is impossible to say what part of the risk has been run, or how much of the consideration has been earned, at any particular time during the period of insurance. Even though, therefore, the completion of such a contract becomes impossible, there is no way to fix the value of the services rendered.

We think, therefore, the chancellor was in error in overruling the first ground of demurrer. It is impossible to apportion such a hazard, and, the whole risk having attached, there can be no return of any part of the premium, upon the facts so far stated.

The bill contains other features which we have not commented upon, with reference to certain dealings between the complainant and the surety company after the death of Mr. Crouch. In these negotiations it is averred that Mrs. Crouch permitted the defendant to take charge of the trustee's office and obtain certain fees therefrom, after her husband's death, with the understanding that a portion of this premium was to be returned to her. Some questions of estoppel and waiver are made by the bill which the demurrer does not reach. At any rate, the matters so alleged require an answer. The chancellor correctly so held, overruling other grounds of demurrer.

The case will therefore be remanded for answer and further proceedings, and the surety company will pay the costs of this appeal.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES LUDKE, Resp't.,

v.

DIEDRICH BURCK, Appt.

(160 Wis. 440, 152 N. W. 190.)

Automobile — exceeding speed limit — contributory negligence.

1. Violation of a statute fixing under penalty a speed limit for automobiles on a highway does not deprive one of the defense of contributory negligence on the part of one injured by collision with the automobile, unless his conduct is such under all the circumstances as to amount to gross negligence.

Note. — Automobile: defendant's violation of law as affecting defense of contributory negligence.

Generally, as to operating automobile on highway without license, see notes to Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 561; Hemming v. New Haven, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 734; Lindsay v. Cecchi, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 699; Atlantic Coast Line R.

New trial — withdrawal of issue from jury.

2. Withdrawing from the jury the question whether or not defendant in an action to recover damages for injuries inflicted by a moving automobile was exceeding the speed limit is ground for new trial at the instance of plaintiff, whose award of compensatory damages was small, even though he was found to be guilty of contributory negligence, since the withdrawal of such issue would deprive plaintiff of the benefit of evidence in support of it in determining the question of his negligence.

(April 13, 1915.)

Co. v. Wier, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307; Conroy v. Mather, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 801; and Armstead v. Lounsberry, ante, 628.

As to reciprocal duty of operator of automobile and pedestrian to use care, see note to Deputy v. Kimmell, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, and notes there referred to.

As to duty and liability of operator of automobile with respect to horses encountered on the highway, see notes to Messer v. Bruening, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946.

For notes as to rules of road governing vehicles, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, "Negligence," § 25.

This note does not deal with the question as to what amounts to contributory negligence on the part of a plaintiff injured by an automobile, but is concerned solely with the consideration whether a violation of law by the driver of an automobile will prevent him from taking advantage of the plaintiff's contributory negligence as a defense.

Little direct authority exists upon the question, but it seems clear that the mere violation of an ordinance by the operator of a car should not preclude him from setting up the contributory negligence of one suffering an injury by the operation of the machine as a defense.

In some cases it is impliedly recognized that a violation of an ordinance by a defendant in an action to recover for the negligent operation of his automobile will not preclude him from defending on the ground of the plaintiff's contributory negligence. Thus, in the following cases, brought to recover for an injury sustained by reason of the negligent operation of an automobile, in which it appeared that the defendant had violated an ordinance in operating his car, it seems to have been assumed that no recovery could be had if the plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to this injury, there apparently having been no contention or suggestion that the defendant's act would allow the plaintiff to recover if he was guilty of contributory negligence: Grier v. Samuel, — Del. —, 86 Atl. 209; Fox v. Barekman, 178 Ind. 572, 99 N. E. 989; Hartje v. Moxley, 235 Ill. 164, 85 N. L.R.A.1916D.

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County awarding plaintiff a new trial after a verdict in his favor for a less sum than demanded, in an action brought to recover damages for loss of services of his minor son arising from injuries inflicted by an automobile alleged to have been negligently driven by defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Siebecker, J.:

This is an action by Charles Lucke to recover for loss of services of his minor son, Herbert Lucke, who was injured by an automobile owned and driven by the defendant. The boy was thirteen years of age. The accident occurred June 8, 1913, upon Forrest Home avenue near the intersection

E. 216; Bouma v. Dubois, 169 Mich. 422, 135 N. W. 322; Kurtz v. Tourison, 241 Pa. 425, 88 Atl. 656; Posener v. Long, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 591; Coughlin v. Weeks, 75 Wash. 568, 135 Pac. 649; Lloyd v. Calhoun, 78 Wash. 438, 139 Pac. 231.

And in Davis v. John Breuner Co. 167 Cal. 683, 140 Pac. 586, the mere fact that the defendant in an action to recover for personal injuries caused by an automobile was violating a speed ordinance, and therefore as a matter of law guilty of negligence, did not preclude the court from finding that the plaintiff's contributory negligence in heedlessly walking into the street was the efficient and proximate cause of the injuries suffered by him.

In Banks v. Braman, 188 Mass. 367, 74 N. E. 594, which was an action to recover for injuries received by being struck by an automobile alleged to have been run at an excessive speed, an instruction which laid down the principle that if the defendant ran his automobile with gross and wanton negligence, and with a reckless disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, the latter was not required to show an exercise of due care on his part in order to recover, was held insufficient, because the court failed to point out clearly the difference between ordinary negligence and gross negligence. With reference to the plaintiff's right to recover in cases involving wilful negligence, without showing an exercise of due care on his part, the court said: "The ground on which it is held that, when an act of the defendant shows an injury inflicted in this way, the plaintiff need introduce no affirmative evidence of due care, is that such a wrong is a cause so independent of previous conduct of the plaintiff, which, in a general sense, may fall short of due care, that this previous conduct cannot be considered a directly contributing cause of the injury, and, reference to such an injury, the plaintiff, without introducing evidence, is assumed to be in a position to claim his rights and to have compensation. So far as the cause of his injury is concerned, he is in the position of one who exercises due care." J. T. W.

of Fourteenth avenue, in the city of Milwaukee. It appears that a person riding in a passing automobile had lost his hat, and that the boy endeavored to recover it, and, while doing so, was struck and seriously injured by the automobile owned and driven by the defendant. The complaint alleges that defendant was negligent in that he was operating his car at a high and dangerous rate of speed; that he operated it recklessly; and that he endangered property and life and limb of people who might be upon the street, by such negligent operation of the car.

The court submitted a special verdict to the jury. After deliberating over twenty-four hours on their verdict, the jury announced that they had agreed upon only two questions, and that questions 2 and 3 were among those upon which they had been unable to agree. The court thereupon, of its own motion, withdrew questions 2 and 3, and the jury were instructed to resume their deliberations upon the other questions of the verdict. The questions withdrawn were:

"(2) At the time of that collision, was the defendant operating his automobile at a speed exceeding 15 miles per hour?

"(3) If you answer question No. 2, 'Yes,' then answer this question: Was the operation of the automobile at that time at a speed exceeding 15 miles per hour a proximate cause of the injury to Herbert Ludke?"

After the withdrawal of these two questions, the jury returned a verdict finding that defendant failed to exercise ordinary care in observing plaintiff's son, and thereby proximately caused the collision, and that the boy's negligence contributed to produce the collision. They awarded compensatory damages in the sum of $369.70.

The defendant moved for judgment upon the verdict, which motion was denied. The plaintiff's motion to set aside the verdict and for a new trial was granted, and a new trial ordered. The court announced that the new trial was granted for the reason that the withdrawal of questions 2 and 3 from the special verdict and the consideration of the jury operated to the prejudice of plaintiff's legal rights. From such order this appeal is taken.

Messrs. Doerfler, Green, & Bender, for appellant:

The evidence neither necessitated nor warranted the submission to the jury of the issues involved in the second and third questions of the special verdict.

Kawiecka v. Superior, 136 Wis. 613, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1020, 118 N. W. 192; Habeck L.R.A.1915D.

v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 146 Wis. 645, 132 N. W. 618, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 485.

The evidence did not present a jury issue as to the violation by the defendant of the speed limit—15 miles per hour—at the time of the accident.

Samulski v. Menasha Paper Co. 147 Wis. 285, 133 N. W. 142; Jeffers v. Green Bay & W. R. Co. 148 Wis. 315, 134 N. W. 900; Neale v. State, 138 Wis. 484, 120 N. W. 345; Wanta v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 148 Wis. 295, 134 N. W. 133; Milwaukee Trust Co. v. Milwaukee, 151 Wis. 224, 138 N. W. 707; Baxter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 746; Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357, 21 N. W. 227.

The act of driving an automobile at a rate of speed greater than 15 miles an hour is classable as an act of inadvertence, rather than of advertence, and hence constitutes ordinary rather than gross negligence.

Pinoza v. Northern Chair Co. 152 Wis. 473, 140 N. W. 84; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766; Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 109 Wis. 384, 85 N. W. 271, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 403; Barlow v. Foster, 149 Wis. 613, 136 N. W. 822; Quinn v. Ross Motor Car Co. 157 Wis. 543, 147 N. W. 1000.

The act of driving an automobile at a speed greater than 15 miles an hour does not constitute either a felony or a misdemeanor, and therefore does not constitute gross negligence.

State ex rel. Cooper v. Brazee, 139 Wis. 538, 121 N. W. 247; Milwaukee v. Beatty, 149 Wis. 349, 135 N. W. 873; Milwaukee v. Ruplinger, 155 Wis. 391, 145 N. W. 42; Natalie v. Chicago & M. E. R. Co. — Wis. —, 149 N. W. 697, 7 N. C. C. A. 879; Bonnell v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 158 Wis. 153, 147 N. W. 1046.

Messrs. Glicksman, Gold, & Corrigan and A. J. Pellette, for respondent:

It is fatal error for the trial court to refuse to submit to the jury a pleaded issuable fact in the case.

Sadowski v. Thomas Furnace Co. 157 Wis. 443, 146 N. W. 770; Bugajski v. Milwaukee Western Fuel Co. 158 Wis. 454, 149 N. W. 277; Wawrzyniakowski v. Hoffman & B. Mfg. Co. 146 Wis. 153, 131 N. W. 429.

Where a defendant is charged and convicted of negligent conduct which consists of the violation of a statute, for the violation of which punishment may follow, contributory negligence is no defense.

Pinoza v. Northern Chair Co. 152 Wis. 473, 140 N. W. 84; Pizzo v. Wiemann, 149 Wis. 235, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 678, 134 N. W. 892, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 803, 3 N. C. C. A. 149.

Siebeck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The ruling of the trial court presents the question whether or not the contributory negligence of a traveler upon a city street is available as a defense in an action for personal injury alleged to have been caused to such traveler by a person who negligently drives an automobile in excess of the legal speed limit. The trial court held that if a violation of § 1036—49, prescribing a speed limit of 15 miles per hour for running automobiles on city streets, resulted in personal injuries to a traveler on such streets, then the defense of contributory negligence of such injured traveler is not available in an action for recovery of damages for such injury. The court based the ruling upon the authority of the decisions in Pizzo v. Wiemann, 149 Wis. 235, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 678, 134 N. W. 899, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 803, 3 N. C. C. A. 149, and Pinoza v. Northern Chair Co. 152 Wis. 473, 140 N. W. 84, wherein it was held that "where the violation of a statute designed to protect persons against bodily injuries is made a criminal offense, such a violation should be classed with gross negligence, and for injuries resulting therefrom the guilty person should be held liable in a civil action, regardless of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured." (Headnote.)

These cases dealt with statutes prohibiting the sale of firearms and the employment of minors under sixteen years of age in certain specified employments. The doctrine of these and similar cases is that the violation of these statutes is of such gravity that public policy requires, in the interest of protecting life and limb, that persons violating them be held to strict accountability for the consequences flowing therefrom, regardless of the fault of the injured person, and therefore the persons violating them, and thereby producing personal injuries to another, were to be treated as guilty of wilfully injuring another, as matter of law. Does this principle apply in cases where a statute prohibits something innocent in itself, but made unlawful, and violation thereof penalized, to compel a higher standard of care as regards person and property? Of this latter class are regulations penalizing persons for violation of laws governing the duties to build fire escapes to buildings; of railroads to give warning of approaching trains at public crossings in densely populated districts; forbidding the running of trains in excess of a limited speed over streets in incorporated villages and cities; the using of city streets as speedways for horses and vehicles; and similar laws. The law in question here is of the latter class. It regulates the use of the streets for operating motor vehicles in incorporated villages and cities, and forbids operating or driving such vehicles in the streets of such villages and cities at a speed exceeding 15 miles per hour, and prescribes punishments for violations thereof. The law regulates the conduct of persons who are exercising the common right of using public highways as travelers, for the purpose of compelling greater care for the protection and safety of all travelers. The operation of motor vehicles on streets is as lawful a use thereof as that of any other traveler; and the object of the statute is to restrict this use to such ways as will lessen the dangers to travelers from high speed and other hazardous practices. Such regulations are not intended to abrogate the duties of travelers recognized by the common law for their mutual safety, and leaves them subject to its accepted rules of ordinary care and the duties that spring from their relations as travelers on a public highway. In the light of this relation and the duties arising therefrom, it may well be that a person operating a motor vehicle at a speed much less than that denounced by the statute, on a street crowded with men, women, and children, and thereby inflicting some personal injuries on another, would be guilty of wilfully injuring such person, while another operating such a vehicle slightly in excess of the statutory speed might do so under conditions and circumstances as to show that the care exercised, in the light of such conditions and circumstances, did not constitute a wanton and reckless disregard of the rights of another who suffered an injury by colliding with such motor vehicle. This court has held that a violation of the commands of a statute of this class, causing personal injury to another, is not to be treated as a wilful injury, as matter of law, but that the fact of such violation is negligence per se, and that the defense of contributory negligence is not abrogated.

The case of Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 109 Wis. 384, 85 N. W. 271, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 403, wherein the alleged injury was claimed to be caused by the railroad company running its trains in excess of the speed fixed by law, is one of this class of cases. It is therein stated that "the act was negligence per se, . . . but not necessarily actionable negligence. To constitute an actionable wrong, the conduct must be the proximate cause of an injury, without any want of ordinary care on the part of the injured person contributing thereto."

True, the punishment imposed by the statute here involved is more severe than by those regulating railroad operation and others of a similar nature, but this severity of punishment for a violation of such statutes cannot be regarded as controlling to take this class of cases out of the rules which impose the duties of ordinary care established by the common law of negligence. From this it results that in all cases where it is shown that a person operating a motor vehicle in excess of the speed fixed by law, causes another traveler personal injuries, the question presented is whether, under all the facts and circumstances shown, his conduct amounts to gross negligence, and thus precludes him from asserting the defense of contributory negligence; and if such operator is found guilty only of a want of ordinary care, which proximately caused the collision and consequent injury, then he is entitled to assert the defense of contributory negligence.

An examination of the record of the case shows that there is a conflict in the evidence upon the question of the speed at which defendant was operating the car, which should be resolved by the jury. We are of the opinion that the court properly awarded a new trial, though the jury found that Herbert Ludke was guilty of contributory negligence. It is apparent that the jury were probably misled by the court's action in withdrawing from their consideration the question of defendant's violation of the statutory speed limit. This action of the court would naturally lead the jury to believe that this element of the case had no bearing on the issue presented for their consideration, and thus deprive plaintiff of the benefit of such evidence in determining whether or not the boy was guilty of a want of ordinary care proximately contributing to produce the injuries.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Timlin, J., took no part.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CRIT LAWSON et al., Appts.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(160 Ky. 180, 169 S. W. 587.)

Evidence — exclusion of affidavits — denial of continuance.

1. Refusal to admit in evidence an af-

Note. — Breaking out as the equivalent of breaking in for purposes of burglary or housebreaking.

There appears to have been a conflict of opinion amongst the early English judges as L.R.A.1915D.

fidavit, the truth of which has been admitted, to prevent a continuance, is not error where it is directed at the credibility of a state's witness who has not been introduced.

Same — guilt of someone other than accused.

2. Upon trial for burglary evidence is inadmissible that witness learned that someone other than accused had placed the stolen property near the house of accused to cast suspicion on him.

Burglary — breaking out.

3. Burglary may be established by proof of breaking out as well as breaking in, under statutes providing punishment for anyone who shall feloniously break any dwelling house and take away anything of value, and requiring statutes in derogation of the common law to be liberally construed with a view to promote their objects.

Witness — wife of one of two accused persons.

4. The wife of one of two persons indicted for burglary should be permitted to testify in behalf of the other, with a caution that the evidence is not to be considered as affecting the case of her husband.

(October 8, 1914.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Whitley County convicting them of housebreaking. Affirmed as to defendant Lawson. Reversed as to the other defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rose & Pope for appellants.

Messrs. James Garnett, Attorney General, and R. T. Caldwell, for the Commonwealth:

The continuance should not have been granted.

Jones v. Com. 154 Ky. 640, 157 S. W. 1079; Toliver v. Com. 104 Ky. 760, 47 S. W. 1082.

A wife should be permitted to testify under an admonition to the jury that her testimony is to be considered only on behalf of the other defendants than her husband.

Dovey v. Lam, 117 Ky. 19, 77 S. W. 383, 4 Ann. Cas. 16.

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants, Crit Lawson and Greene Lawson, were indicted and convicted for housebreaking, and sentenced to the penitentiary one to five years. The indictment was returned on the 18th day of Feb-to whether breaking out was burglary at common law, Lord Bacon holding that it was (4 Bl. Com. 227, citing Bacon, Elm. 65), and Sir Matthew Hale that it was not. (1 Hale, P. C. 554). Sir Matthew Hale said: "If a man enters in the nighttime ruary, and charges that on the 16th day of February Crit and Greene Lawson "did unlawfully, wilfully, feloniously, and forcibly break open and into the dwelling house owned by Joe Perkins, and in the possession of A. Sawyer, and used as a dwelling house, and did take, steal, and carry away flour and lard of value therefrom," etc.

The case was set for trial February 21st. Appellants sought a continuance on account of absent witnesses, and in support of it filed their affidavit showing that Jim Carr and Alonzo Satterfield, if present, would swear that bad feelings existed between the defendants and Nathan Sullivan, alleged chief witness for the commonwealth, and Carr would also swear that, just after the defendants were arrested, he heard Nathan Sullivan talking, and in that way "learned that through the instrumentality of said Nathan Sullivan and others, and by either them directly or through them by their connivance, the flour, lard, and other property said to have been obtained by breaking into the outhouse controlled by Antony Sawyer was carried from said outhouse to near the home of Crit Lawson, at least some of same, and placed there for the purpose of afterward instituting this prosecution against said Crit Lawson. . . . I do not know exactly, from said conversation and said statement of said Nathan Sullivan at said time, whether it was done through his or others' procurement."

by doors opened with the intent to steal, and is pursued whereby he opens another door to make his escape, this I think is not burglary, for fregit et exivit is not fregit et intravit," and stated that this opinion was contrary to the opinion of Lord Bacon. Because of this conflict of opinion, the statute of 12 Anne, chap. 7, § 3, was passed, providing: "Whereas there has been some doubt whether the entering into the mansion house of another, without breaking the same, with an intent to commit some felony, and breaking the said house in the nighttime to get out, be burglary, be it declared and enacted, that if any person shall enter into the mansion or dwelling house of another, by day or by night, without breaking the same, with an intent to commit felony; or being in such house shall commit any felony, and shall in the nighttime break the said house to get out of the same, such person is and shall be adjudged to be guilty of burglary," and this statute was in effect, re-enacted in 7 and 8 Geo. IV. chap. 29, § 11, and 24 and 25 Vict. chap. 96, § 51.

Since the enactment of these statutes the question involved in English cases generally has been what is sufficient to amount to a breaking out. See cases cited infra.

The same doubt as to whether breaking out constituted burglary at common law, which existed among the early English judges, has arisen among the American judges. Thus, it was the opinion of the court in State v. Ward, 43 Conn. 489, 21 Am. Rep. 665, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 27, that it did constitute burglary at common law, and that the statute of Anne should be regarded simply as declaratory of that law. On the contrary, in Rolland v. Com. 82 Pa. 306, the court said that it did not think that breaking out was ever burglary at common law, admitting that there was a difference of opinion among the early English judges which led to the passage of the statute of 12 Anne, which was strong evidence that it was not the common law. And in State v. McPherson, 70 N. C. 239, 16 Am. Rep. 769, the court said: "At common law it was at least doubtful L.R.A.1915D.

whether one could be convicted of burglary even when charged with breaking out of a house. The better opinion seemed to be that the breaking must be for the purpose of effecting an entrance, and not for the purpose of effecting an escape. And therefore the statute of 12 Anne was passed, which made it burglary to break out of a house the same as to break into it." And in Edwards v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 387, 37 S. W. 438, the court said that not until the statute of 12 Anne was it burglary to break out of a house.

In State v. Ward, supra, one who entered a dwelling house for the purpose of committing a felony, without breaking in, but who in making his escape broke out, was held guilty of burglary. The court said that "if each and every of the acts constituting a crime are committed, and all the evils consequent on the crime are produced, the precise order in which the acts are done cannot be material. Now, burglary is the breaking and entering the house of another in the night season with an intent to commit a felony. The jury have found that, coupled with the guilty intent, the accused committed every act going to make up this crime. The accused stood not on the doing of these acts, nor on the order of doing them, except so far forth as was convenient and necessary to accomplish his guilty purpose. That this offense is burglary we can have no doubt."

See also LAWSON v. COM.

And in State v. Bee, 29 S. C. 81, 6 S. E. 911, where it was contended that as accused may have entered a room through an open door, there being no proof that doors were closed until the proprietor thereof retired for the night, a requested charge should have been given that there was no burglary, it was held that there was no error in declining to give such charge as there was evidence showing that accused was found in the room at a very unreasonable hour; that personal property disappeared, and that accused, when discovered, jumped through a window onto a piazza and thence to the ground, making his escape from the premises through a gate

The trial being at the indicting term, the commonwealth admitted the truth of the affidavit, subject to competency and relevancy. Toliver v. Com. 104 Ky. 760, 47 S. W. 1082.

The commonwealth did not introduce Nathan Sullivan in chief. Defendant, in offering his evidence in chief, asked to have read the affidavit. The appellants say that the court erred to their prejudice in refusing. It will be noticed that the affidavit was directed at Nathan Sullivan, "a chief witness for the commonwealth," and he was not introduced. It undertakes to show bad feelings between the accused and this Sullivan. Such testimony ordinarily goes to affect the credibility of a witness, and that state of feeling was freely admitted in this case, although Sullivan had not been introduced. As to the carrying of the lard and flour to Crit Lawson's place in order to cast suspicion upon him and cause his arrest and prosecution, the witness does not say that Sullivan did it, or that he heard him say he did it, or had it done. He heard Sullivan in a conversation, and in that way "learned" someone had done this through Sullivan's instrumentality. It is not substantive or tangible evidence that the offense was committed by another than Lawson. He does not relate the conversation. The affidavit amounts to no more than a conclusion of the witness, without the facts as a basis for it. The defendants proved by certain witnesses that, on the night the offense was committed, they met which was usually kept locked, and had not been opened for two weeks. The court cited authorities to the proposition that a person who breaks out of a dwelling house by night is guilty of burglary if he entered by day with intent to commit a felony, or if a felony was committed therein before breaking out.

And in State v. Manluff, Houst. Crim. Rep. (Del.) 208, it was held that the breaking and entering, to constitute burglary by law, is complete where there is a breaking out to escape.

But mere unlatching or breaking of a door in an attempt to escape is not burglary in Pennsylvania. Rolland v. Com. 82 Pa. 308, 22 Am. Rep. 758. In the course of its opinion, the court said: "In the fifth report of the English commissioners on criminal law, we find the following remarks on burglary, which are so forcible and bear so directly upon this point as to justify their admission here: 'By the statute of 12 Anne, chap. 1, § 7 (subsequently repealed and re-enacted), the crime of burglary was extended to the case of an offender who, having committed a felony in a dwelling house, or having entered therein with intent to commit a felony, afterwards broke out of such dwelling house in the nighttime. This extension does not, we think, rest upon just principles. After a felony has been committed within the dwelling house, the offense is not in reality aggravated by lifting the latch of a door or the sash of a window in the nighttime in order to enable the offender to escape. A breaking out, indeed, may be an innocent act, as it may be committed by one desirous of retiring from the further prosecution of a crime, and the extension of the law of burglary to such a case is not warranted by the principles upon which the law is founded, inasmuch as a circumstance not essential to the guilt of the offender or the mischief of the act is made deeply essential to the crime. It is ineffectual even with a view to the object proposed; the pretext for the conviction fails in the absence of a breaking out which is a casual and uncertain circumstance.'" *L.R.A.*1915D.

Some of the cases holding that a breaking out is insufficient were decided under statutes which declare one guilty of burglary who breaks and enters.

Thus, in Wine v. State, 25 Ohio St. 69, it was held that the unlawful breaking must precede the entry, under a statute which provides: "If any person shall in the night wilfully, maliciously and forcibly break and enter into any . . . barn . . . with intent to steal, etc.," and so the crime of burglary was not committed where a person, without either an actual or constructive breaking, entered a barn with intent to steal; and afterwards broke out of the barn in making his exit therefrom.

So, in White v. State, 51 Ga. 285, it was held that under a statute declaring burglary to be the breaking and entering into, etc., conviction of burglary could not be had where one, for the purpose of committing a felony, entered a house through an open door, but in making his escape broke out. The court stated that the statute of 12 Anne was not in force in Georgia; that had it been the legislative will that such statute should remain in force, or that the words "breaking and entering into" should be subject to the construction insisted upon, the failure to express it in some of the Codes or in some of the acts modifying and extending the crime of burglary is inexplicable. The court further said: "Our statute defines burglary. We go to the common law to get the meaning of the words used, as, for instance, that raising a window or opening a closed door is breaking, and that entering does not require that the whole body go in. But to say that where the words used are 'breaking and entering into,' this may mean entering into and breaking out, because, by the statute of Anne, this was also made burglary, is pushing the admitted right to go to the common law for the meaning of words to an unwarranted extent. It required a statute in England to do this; our statute uses the common-law words as they stood before the statute of Anne, and we think they are to be taken to mean what their plain language imports."

Sullivan near to Lawson's house, and going in the direction of it, carrying a can of lard on his shoulder. Then the commonwealth introduced in rebuttal Nathan Sullivan, and he denied that he carried any lard that night in the direction of Crit Lawson's house. The defendant did not ask him anything about the statements in the affidavit for continuance, nor did they then or afterwards offer to read the affidavit.

The appellants insist that the court should have given a peremptory instruction in their favor, because the proof failed to show a breaking in. The lard and flour was in a two-room house, into which Sawyer expected to move in a few days. The barrel of flour was against the front room door and held it fast. The partition door stood open. The rear or kitchen door was latched, and also fastened with a peg at the floor. There was an open window in the front room. There was a trail of flour leading from the barrel at the front door through the open partition door, and out the kitchen door. When the theft was discovered, the kitchen door was latched, and fastened at the floor as usual. These circumstances indicate that the thief entered through the open window, stole the flour and lard, opened and carried it out through the kitchen door, then closed and fastened it from the inside, and made his exit through the open window. It may be said that there was no proof of a "breaking in," and defendants therefore argue that,

And following as authority White v. State, it was held in Lockhart v. State, 3 Ga. App. 480, 60 S. E. 215, that breaking out is not burglary under the statute.

So, under a statute providing that "any person who, either in the night or day time, with intent to steal, or to commit a felony, breaks into and enters a . . . store . . . is guilty of burglary," one who enters a store through the open door, secretes himself until the store is closed and locked, and then, committing a larceny, opens or breaks a window and escapes with the stolen property, cannot be convicted of burglary. Brown v. State, 55 Ala. 123, 28 Am. Rep. 693.

In Edwards v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 387, 37 S. W. 438, it was held that under a statute providing that "burglary is constituted by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night or in like manner by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed therein until night with the intent in either case to commit a felony or the crime of theft," a breaking out did not constitute burglary.

And in St. Louis v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 889, and Smith v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 60 S. W. 668, prosecutions under the same statute, it was held that the offense of burglary is not committed where one enters a store during business hours, remains concealed therein, and after the store is closed, commits a theft and breaks out, although it should be stated the decision probably turned on the question as to whether the subsequent theft related back to the entry so as to make it a fraudulent entry.

In order to convict one of burglary by breaking out of a building, the indictment must allege a breaking out, and so one cannot be convicted of burglary by breaking out of a building under an indictment alleging a breaking and entering a building. State v. McPherson, 70 N. C. 239, 16 Am. Rep. 769.

Under statutes contemplating breaking out.

Under the English statutes previously L.R.A.1915D.

referred to, it has been held that unlocking and opening a hall door and running away are sufficient to constitute a breaking out of the house. Rex v. Lawrence, 4 Car. & P. 231.

So, in Rex v. McKearney, Jebb, C. C. 99, where accused, being discovered at 11 P. M., hid in the cellar; fled from the cellar and locked himself in a room which had a shed roof and skylight, and had broken the skylight and gotten his head through, endeavoring to escape, when he was seen and forced back, it was held that there was a sufficient breaking out of the house to constitute the crime of burglary.

So, also, if a lodger commits a felony, and in the nighttime even lifts a latch to get out of the house with stolen property, that is a burglarious breaking out of the house, the court stating that it is the purpose for which he undoes the fastening that makes the act unlawful. Reg. v. Wheeldon, 8 Car. & P. 747.

But that the lifting of a trapdoor over a cellar, which was held down by its own weight merely, was not a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary, was held in Rex v. Lawrence, supra.

And in Rex v. Callan, Russ. & R. C. C. 157, where accused broke out of a cellar by lifting a very heavy flap which was not bolted, though it had bolts, six judges were of the opinion that there was a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary, as the weight of the flap was intended as security, it not being the common entrance; but six judges were of a contrary opinion.

Counts in an indictment for burglary that the prisoner "did break to get out," and "did break and get out," were held insufficient, in Rex v. Compton, 7 Car. & P. 139, under a statute which uses the words "break out."

In People v. Toland, 165 App. Div. 795, 151 N. Y. Supp. 482, where accused with accomplices entered a barn through an open door for the purpose of stealing a heifer therein, and while securing and killing the heifer closed the barn door, and opened the same when making his escape with the stolen property, it was held that as it takes a breaking in to constitute the offense of burglary, the case fails for want of proof. On this proposition, the question is whether, under our statute, the offense is committed, if, in stealing articles, the house is either broken into or broken out of.

Section 1162 of the Kentucky Statutes, with reference to this matter says: "If any person . . . shall feloniously break any dwelling house . . . and feloniously take away anything of value. . . ."

Section 1164 says: "If any person shall feloniously . . . break any warehouse, . . . with intent to steal, or shall feloniously take therefrom or destroy any goods. . . ."

Section 460 of the statute provides as follows: "The rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed is not to apply to this revision; on the contrary, its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to promote its objects. . . ."

The breaking and the stealing are the two ingredients of this offense, as described by the statutes above referred to, and the purpose of the law was to punish theft of goods from such houses. The moral wrong is done when the two elements appear, without regard to which was done first.

such opening of the door was not a breaking out so as to constitute burglary within the meaning of § 404 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "A person who, . . . being in any building, commits a crime therein and breaks out of the same, is guilty of burglary in the third degree." The court said the door was found open. "It was not shut by the owner or anyone else as against intruders. It was closed, if entirely closed, by the defendant and his accomplices temporarily, and for the purpose of securing the object of their larceny. If the door had not been closed, the crime would simply have been larceny. . . . Because they themselves closed the door, wholly or partly, for the purpose either of concealment or of making more sure of their theft, can hardly be deemed to have altered their crime, and to hold that the opening of the door which they themselves had closed had increased their crime would seem to be a characterization of a greater crime without any additional invasion of the rights of the owner. The criminal law should be strictly construed. Under this rule of construction, I am unwilling to hold that the breaking out of a building is an element of a crime, unless through the opening of a door not closed by the defendant himself." But in a well-reasoned dissenting opinion, in which Woodward, J., concurred, Kellogg, J., said, in construing this section of the Penal Code: "The language is not ambiguous and the meaning L.R.A.1915D.

Giving to the statutes that construction required by § 460, we are of the opinion that, if the goods be stolen, it is immaterial whether the theft be accomplished by breaking in or breaking out. Proof of breaking of some sort is essential. Breaking is established in the mere turning of a knob or opening of a latched door, but whether that breaking occurs before or after the theft does not alter or lessen the degree of the offense. When the thief opened the kitchen door, he broke the house, although it was a breaking out.

Entry by breaking is not a requisite by our statute. Under the English common law, the old offense was committed by breaking and entering, and it was then held that it was not an offense to enter without breaking, and afterwards break out in order to make an escape. To obviate this, the statute of 12 Anne was enacted, in which it was declared that one was guilty of burglary if he broke out of a house with intent to commit a felony, so that to-day in England the offender is prosecuted under the common law if he breaks in, and by statute if he breaks out. Some American states have enacted special statutes making it burglary to break out, but in our opinion the Kentucky statute was written to cover the offense with-seems plain. The crime depends upon the acts of the party accused, and not upon the acts of the owner of the building. If a thief breaks the door of a building with intent to steal therein, it is immaterial who closed the door, because the statute is silent upon that question. The material facts are the thief, the closed door, and the opening of the door with a criminal intent. Under subdivision 2 it is immaterial who closed the door or when it was closed. The material facts are, so far as we are interested in the question, a person (either lawfully or unlawfully) in the building who commits a crime therein and opens a door in order to get out. We cannot use force upon the statute and warp it from its plain meaning by finding exceptions not warranted by its language or the clear legislative intent. The facts in this case do not invite such action. Here the owner left the barn door open so that the heifers could go in or out at will. The defendant and his accomplices entered the barn for the purpose of killing a heifer therein. The first heifer sought to be killed escaped through the open door. Then they closed and fastened the door, one of them guarding it while the others proceeded to kill the remaining heifer. The door was closed to keep the heifer from escaping and also probably to lessen the chance of detection. They made use of the closed door in committing and in protecting themselves while committing the larceny. Their act is thus out regard to the sequence of the breaking. It is only necessary that the house be broken.

2 Bishop's New Criminal Law, 8th ed. § 100, subsec. 2, in speaking of this English statute, uses this language: "The date of this statute of 12 Anne is 1713, too recent to be absolute common law in all our states. Yet everywhere it must have weight as declaratory of the opinion of the English parliament upon the earlier common law. As to which common law, no distinct reason appears for holding it to be burglary to break into a dwelling house to commit a felony, and not burglary to get in by stealth and break out to escape; in other words, for invariably requiring the breaking to precede the entry, and never permitting it to follow. Probably in most of our states the question is settled by the express or implied terms of the statutes; as in Georgia, where the words are 'breaking and entering into,' the consequence whereof is that a breaking out is not adequate in this state."

The wording of our statutes does not require the entry to be by breaking; hence we conclude the lower court rightly refused to give defendants a peremptory instruction.

The next error complained of is that the wife of Crit Lawson was not permitted to testify. After the goods were stolen, search warrant was procured, and under it officers proceeded to search the home of Crit and Greene Lawson. Two witnesses who accompanied the officers did not go to the house, but waited a distance of 200 yards until the search was completed. They swear that, as soon as the officers entered the house, they saw a woman leave it from rear, and carry something to a place near the pigpen. The officers say they did not know a woman left the house, but they went to the pigpen and found the lard. The wife of Crit Lawson was offered as a witness, and, when her testimony was refused, an avowal was made that she would swear she did not leave or carry anything out of the house. She was not a competent witness in behalf of her husband, Crit Lawson, but his codefendant, Greene Lawson, was entitled to the benefit of her evidence, and the court should have permitted her to testify with a caution to consider it only as it might affect the case of Greene Lawson. Thompson v. Com. 1 Met. (Ky.) 13; Dovey v. Lam, 117 Ky. 19, 77 S. W. 383, 4 Ann. Cas. 16.

For this reason the case must be reversed as to the appellant Greene Lawson, but, as to Crit Lawson, the judgment is affirmed.

closing the door was an illegal act, and does not enable them to violate the clear letter and spirit of the burglary statute. When the heifer was killed, they found themselves confined to the barn unable to take away the stolen property or to gain their own liberty without breaking the building. If they had opened another door and escaped by it, their liability would not seriously be questioned. It is immaterial by what door they escaped, so long as they and the stolen property were imprisoned in the barn and it was necessary for them to remain in or break out. The same result would follow if the door had remained open while they were killing the heifer and the wind had caused it to close. They could not get out without breaking the building. The owner of a house purposely leaves the front door open; a sneak thief enters it, closes the door so as to avoid detection from the outside, steals an overcoat, raises a back window and jumps out. He is clearly within the intent and spirit of the burglary statute. It is immaterial whether he jumps out of the back window, or returns and opens the door which he had closed to hide his acts."

And in Atkinson v. State, 5 Baxt. 569, 30 Am. Rep. 69, one who, for the purpose of committing a felony, entered a house without breaking, but who in making his escape broke out, was held not to be guilty of burglary under a provision of the Code which provided that "any person who, after having entered any of the premises mentioned in the 1st section, of this article with intent to commit a felony, break such premises, he shall be punished in the same way as if he had broken into the premises in the first instance." The court stated that this is nothing more than the principle of the common law that breaking in furtherance of the design, that is, felonious purpose after entry, makes out the offense; that it cannot mean that breaking after abandonment of the purpose, and for a different purpose than the commission of a felony, shall be referred arbitrarily to the felonious design; otherwise, a party who, by trespass, enters a house with design to steal, who changes his mind and abandons that purpose, but in going out of the house unlocks a door for egress, would be guilty of burglary, to which view the court said it could not give its assent. The court added that the door in this case was unlocked for escape from the house, not for entrance or in forwarding a felonious design, and that there was no felonious breaking in this view, and distinguished cases which held that breaking out was burglary as being cases where the indictment had a count for breaking out of a house, which was expressly made burglary by statute.

As to breaking as affected by defendant's authority to enter the building, see note to State v. Corcoran, post, 1015.

J. H. B.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

RE TOWN OF AFTON.

(43 Okla. 720, 144 Pac. 184.)

Constitutional law — municipal refunding warrants.

1. Section 1, chap. 117, Sess. Laws 1910, is in conflict with § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, and is void.

Municipal corporations — indebtedness — validity.

2. The officials of the town of Afton issued warrants to take up an indebtedness in an amount approximating $8,000, created in excess of the revenue and income provided for the payment of current expenses of said town for the years in which said warrants were issued. Held, that said indebtedness was created in violation of § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, and the same is a nullity, and constitutes no liability against such municipality.

Same — warrants — validity.

3. Said warrants, having been issued in violation of § 26, art. 10, Const., are a nullity, and the court is powerless to validate same.

Same — ratification.

4. The warrants issued as evidence of said indebtedness, being utterly void for want of power to create said indebtedness, were not subject to ratification, and could not be made valid by a vote of three fifths of the legal voters of said municipality, nor by a decree of the court, since the power to authorize originally is a condition precedent to the power to ratify subsequently.

Same — notice of powers.

5. One who deals with a municipality does so with notice of the limitations on its or its agents' powers. All are presumed to know the law, and those who contract with a municipality or furnish it supplies do so with such knowledge; and if they go beyond the limitations imposed, they do so at their peril.

Same — limitation of indebtedness.

6. It is plain that the intention of § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, is to require municipalities to carry on their corporate operations upon a cash basis. The revenues and income provided for each year must pay the expenditures of such year; and any debt or contract sought to be created in excess of such revenues and income provided creates no liability against such municipality, unless it be authorized by a vote of three fifths of the legal voters before or at the time of creating same, and comes within the limitations therein expressed.

(November 10, 1914.)

ERROR to the District Court for Ottawa County to review a judgment refusing to approve certain alleged indebtedness and warrants issued as evidence thereof, created by petitioner, and to validate said warrants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles A. Loomis for plaintiff in error.

Riddle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding in error is prosecuted from a judgment of the district court of Ottawa county refusing to approve certain alleged indebtedness and warrants issued as evidence thereof, created by the town of Afton, and in refusing to validate said outstanding warrants by decree of said court. On the 19th day of January, 1914, the town of Afton, through its officers, filed its amended petition in the district court, wherein it is alleged in substance that on said date said town had an outstanding indebtedness aggregating $7,950.60, evidenced by certain warrants issued in excess of the annual revenue and income of said town in payment of services and material furnished said town; that said town received the benefit of same; that the amount paid for such services and material was fair and reasonable; that said indebtedness was ratified and approved by said town at an election held for that purpose on the 15th day of April, 1913, under and by virtue of § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, and an act of the legislature, approved March 28, 1910, entitled "An Act Providing for the Validation of Certain Outstanding Warrants in Incorporated Towns and Cities, etc.;" that said town has no funds with which to pay said outstanding warrants; that by an ordinance passed by the president and board of trustees of said town on the 21st day of April, 1913, the negotiable coupons of said town, in an amount aggregating $8,000, were authorized and directed to be issued upon the approval by the court and a judgment validating said indebtedness. Ordinance No. 19, Headnotes by RIDDLE, J.

Note. — As to ratification by public corporation of invalid contract, see note to Weil, R. & Co. v. Newbern, L.R.A.1915A, 1023.

Generally, as to rights and remedies where contracts, bonds, or other instruments of a public corporation are invalid, see note to Hagerman v. Hagerman, L.R.A. L.R.A.1916D.

1915A, 904, and other notes there referred to on specific phases of the subject.

Notes on various questions relating to limitation of municipal indebtedness may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Municipal Corporations," §§ 65-67.

referred to in said petition, authorized the calling of a special election, and states that the purpose of same is to issue bonds in the sum of $8,000, to pay the indebtedness of said town, which was evidenced by warrants issued in excess of the annual revenue and income provided. An itemized statement of said warrants appears in the record, running from March, 1910, which shows that they were issued to pay the current expenses of said town for the years 1910 and 1911. A copy of the official ballot, as disclosed by the record, shows that the purpose of said bond issue was to pay an indebtedness evidenced by warrants issued in excess of the annual revenue and income provided by the proper authorities for paying the running expenses of said town. Ordinance No. 120 of said town, providing for the issuance of said negotiable coupon bonds, also shows that the purpose is to pay an indebtedness of said town, evidenced by said warrants issued in excess of the income and revenues provided.

Upon a hearing of said matter by the court, the relief prayed was denied, upon the ground and for the reason that said indebtedness was created in excess of the revenue and income of said town, and the warrants issued as evidence thereof were issued in payment of services and material furnished said town for the fiscal year in which said material and services were so furnished; that said indebtedness was incurred without the assent of three fifths of the voters of said town first having been obtained; that said indebtedness was therefore void and of no force and effect, as the debt was created in violation of §§ 26 and 27 of article 10 of the Constitution, and the court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. The court further held that chapter 117, Sess. Laws 1910, was in conflict with § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, and was void.

The petitioner has filed its petition in error in this court, with original case made attached. The only errors assigned which need to be considered are: (1) That the decision of the court is contrary to law; (2) That the decision of the court is contrary to the law and the evidence. This record presents two propositions for our consideration: (1) Is the act of the legislature contained in chapter 117, Sess. Laws 1910, in conflict with § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution? (2) Is the indebtedness and the warrants issued as evidence thereof sought to be refunded by this proceeding, void, for the reason that the same was an attempt to create a debt contrary to § 26, art. 10, Const., and contrary to § 9, chap. 80, Sess. Laws 1910-11?

Section 26, art. 10, Const., provides: "No L.R.A.1915D.

county, city, town, township, school district, or other political corporation, or subdivision of the state, shall be allowed to become indebted, in any manner, or for any purpose, to an amount exceeding, in any year, the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of three fifths of the voters thereof, voting at an election, to be held for that purpose, nor in cases requiring such assent, shall any indebtedness be allowed to be incurred to an amount including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding 5 per centum of the valuation of the taxable property therein to be ascertained from the last assessment for state and county purposes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness: Provided, that any county, city, town, township, school district, or other political corporation, or subdivision of the state, incurring any indebtedness, requiring the assent of the voters as aforesaid, shall, before or at the time of doing so, provide for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within twenty-five years from the time of contracting the same."

It cannot be questioned that the alleged indebtedness evidenced by the warrants sought to be refunded by this proceeding was in excess of the income and revenue provided for such town for the year in which said indebtedness was attempted to be created, and that no election was held before or at the time of the incurring of same for the purpose of securing the assent of three fifths of the voters of such town to the creation of said indebtedness.

Section 1, chap. 117, p. 244, Sess. Laws 1910, provides: "If any incorporated town or cities shall now or may hereafter have outstanding warrants issued in payment of current expenses for any year, and shall desire to refund such indebtedness in the manner now provided by law, and it shall appear that any such warrants were issued in excess of the annual revenues and income of such city or incorporated town, then the court which shall be petitioned for authority to refund such indebtedness shall inquire whether or not such city or incorporated town received actual benefit by way of services or material furnished said city or incorporated town in payment of which said warrant was issued, and that the amount so paid was the fair and reasonable value for such services or material, and if it shall be so determined by said court, then the court shall so state in its decree, and said decree shall validate said warrants and permit such city or incorporated town to refund the indebtedness represented by said warrants, provided that no such warrants shall be refunded until the close of the fiscal year during which they were issued."

If it was the purpose of this act to authorize the court to give its approval to any municipal corporation to issue bonds in payment of an indebtedness which did not exceed the revenue and income which had been provided by the proper officials for such year, although such indebtedness may have exceeded the actual revenue and income collected by said municipality, then it would doubtless be valid. On the other hand, if, construing the act as a whole, it is made clear that it was the intent of the legislature to authorize the court to make valid a pretended obligation of the municipality, which was attempted to be created in violation of § 26, art. 10, of the Constitution, and which was, as a matter of law, invalid, then such act is in conflict with both the letter and spirit of said provision of the Constitution, supra, and must fall. Considering every part of said section, it is apparent that the purpose in passing the same was an attempt on the part of the legislature to authorize the court to validate indebtedness attempted to be created, which is invalid under the Constitution. This the legislature has no power to do. It could not authorize the court to give life and validity to something which never had any legal existence. If the debt was not created in violation of the provision of the Constitution, quoted supra, then this act of the legislature is superfluous, in that said debt or contract would need no decree of the court to validate it. It would be valid, if created in compliance with the Constitution and law, without a decree of the court to validate same, and would only require the approval of the court to the issuance of refunding bonds in the manner provided for by law. It cannot be said that this act is necessary in order to authorize the funding of said indebtedness or outstanding warrants, if it was in fact a valid indebtedness, for the reason that § 362, Rev. Laws 1910 (§ 372, Comp. Laws 1909) contains complete provisions for refunding outstanding warrants and indebtedness, if the same are a legal obligation, and full power is given to the court to determine such issues; and it must be conceded that, if the indebtedness is illegal and void by reason of having been contracted in violation of the plain provision of the Constitution, the court would be unauthorized to sanction the bond issue. The legality of the indebtedness is one of the issues the court must determine in a proceeding to refund outstanding L.R.A.1915D.

warrants. It is argued, however, that this is a debt of honor; that it is conceded that the town and its citizens received the benefit of and full value for this indebtedness; and, inasmuch as the people have ratified the same, that the court should refuse to hold that it is void as being in conflict with the Constitution.

If we were authorized to inaugurate policies and to amend the organic law to meet such contingencies, this argument might appeal to us with some force. The framers of the Constitution, and the people in approving same, have deemed it wise to place a limitation upon all the people and upon every political subdivision of the state; and if the legislature, or any political subdivision of the state, may, by its acts, exceed the limitations placed upon it by the Constitution, create a debt in conflict therewith, and thereafter ratify such debt and thereby make it valid, it would simply mean the destruction of this provision of the Constitution. If the town of Afton can contract a debt and bind its people to the amount of $8,000 in excess of the limitations imposed by the Constitution, then it necessarily follows it may create a debt of $80,000 or $800,000. If one town may, in violation of the Constitution, contract an obligation for which the people may be held liable, then every other town in the state may do likewise. If this court authorizes or permits this provision of the Constitution to be nullified in this manner, as a logical sequence, every other provision of the Constitution may likewise be disregarded and violated.

28 Cyc. p. 1540, states the rule as follows:

"'Pay as you go' expresses a municipal rule prevailing in some states that annual expenditures must be restricted to annual revenue, of which every person contracting with a municipal corporation must take notice at his peril."

Again, on page 1560, id: "A contract made by a municipality in excess of its debt limit as fixed by the Constitution or by statute is void, at least as to the excess; and everyone dealing with a municipality is charged with notice of a limitation upon the amount of its indebtedness. Municipal indebtedness in excess of a constitutional limitation cannot be made good by ratification, since power to authorize originally is a condition precedent to the power to ratify subsequently. . . . A municipal contract, expenditure, or appropriation, invalid when made, may be cured by subsequent legislation, unless the invalidity result from a violation of a constitutional inhibition."

It will be seen from this that a debt attempted to be created in excess of a limitation in the Constitution cannot be ratified by a vote of the people. O'Neil Engineering Co. v. Ryan, 32 Okla. 738, 124 Pac. 19. We therefore hold that chapter 117, Sess. Laws 1910, is in conflict with § 28, art. 10, of the Constitution, hence is unconstitutional and void.

The record shows affirmatively that the warrants sought to be refunded by this proceeding were issued in excess of the income and revenue provided for the town of Afton for the year in which said debt was attempted to be created, and are clearly void, under the provision of the Constitution, quoted supra, and did not create a liability against the town. If the statute, which we hold to be in conflict with the Constitution and void, had been held to be valid, yet the court could not have validated the indebtedness or the warrants issued in payment of same, for the reason the same is clearly in violation of § 28, art. 10, Const., supra. It is clear that it is the policy of our government and the spirit of the Constitution that debts shall not be contracted or in any way recognized as legal, when created in excess of the limitations of the Constitution. The legislature, in enacting chapter 80, Sess. Laws 1910-11, clearly recognizes this spirit; and certainly, in the face of § 9 of said statute, the court could not validate or authorize the issuance of bonds in payment of the warrants in question. Said section provides: "It shall be unlawful for the board of county commissioners, the city council, or the commissioners of any city, the trustees of any town, board of education, township board, school district board, or any member or members of the aforesaid commissioners, or of any of the above named boards, to make any contract for, incur, acknowledge, approve, allow, or authorize any indebtedness against their respective municipality, or authorize it to be done by others, in excess of the estimate made and approved by the excise board for such purpose for such current fiscal year, or in excess of the specific amount authorized for such purpose by a bond issue. Any such indebtedness, contracts incurred, acknowledged, approved, allowed, or authorized in excess of the estimate made and approved for such purpose for such current fiscal year, or in excess of the specific amount authorized for such purpose by a bond issue, shall not be a charge against the municipality whose officer or officers contracted, incurred, acknowledged, approved, allowed or authorized or attested the evidence of said indebtedness, but may be collected by civil action from any official contracting, incurring, acknowledging, approving or au- L.R.A.1915D.

thorizing or attesting such indebtedness, or from his bondsmen."

Section 10 of said act provides that any such officer violating § 9 shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined no less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and shall forfeit and be removed from his office.

It is suggested that to hold this debt to be void will impair the credit of the state and cause a great hardship to fall upon the parties who are holding these warrants for value, and who relied upon the integrity of the people to pay this debt of honor; and inasmuch as the legal voters of said town have shown, by their vote, that they recognize a moral, as well as a legal, obligation to pay said debt, the court should not require them to repudiate same. To this suggestion we reply that when the question of enforcing a plain provision of the organic law is presented on one side, and policies and hardships on the other, our duty is clear, and we have no choice. The plain provision of the Constitution must be obeyed and followed, not only by the courts, but by everyone; and it is the solemn duty of this court, when its jurisdiction is properly invoked, to maintain, and not destroy or impair, the wise provisions of this sacred document. It is better that the courts preserve the organic law and protect the rights of all the people at the expense and hardship of a few rather than to relieve the few of this expense and hardship, and in so doing destroy the Constitution and jeopardize the rights of all the people. No one could have been misled in connection with this transaction, for, as we have seen, this debt was created and the warrants issued in open violation of the Constitution, and all must be presumed to have known the law.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed, and it is ordered.

All the Justices concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

MAX ROBINOVITZ, Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. G. HAMILL.

(— Okla. —, 144 Pac. 1024.)

Partnership — statutes — fictitious name.

1. Sections 5023 and 5025, Comp. Laws 1909, and § 2444, Id., relate to partnerships composed of two or more persons, and are not intended to apply to one person who, being the sole person interested in a business, adopts a business or trade name under which the business is conducted.

Headnotes by HARRISON, C.

Name — right to assume.

2. A person, being the sole owner and manager of a business, has, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the right to assume any name under which he chooses to conduct his business, so long as such business is conducted under such name in good faith, and may maintain an action for breach of contracts made under such business name.

(December 8, 1914.)

ERROR to the County Court for Creek County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to re-

Note. — Right of individual to change name or to transact business and make contracts under an assumed name.

I. Scope, 982.

II. Right to change name.

a. At common law, 982.

b. As affected by statutes providing for change of name by judicial proceedings, 983.

III. Assumption of business name, 983.

I. Scope.

The earlier cases on this question will be found in subdivisions (pages 692, 693) of a note to Laffin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler, 14 L.R.A. 690, on the acquisition and use by an individual of a name.

As to use of fictitious name as affecting validity of instrument, see note to Wichl v. Robertson, 39 L.R.A. 423.

And as to validity of contracts made by individual or partnership under an assumed name, in violation of a statute requiring the filing or publishing of the true name, see note to Hunter v. Patterson, post, 987.

The question as to when a negotiable instrument is deemed payable to the order of a fictitious person, within the rule which regards such an instrument as payable to bearer, is treated in a note to Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 499.

This note does not include the question as to the name under which an individual may sue or be sued (see notes in 14 L.R.A. 693, and 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1089): nor does it include cases dealing merely with the question of the right of an individual to transact business and make contracts under a fictitious or business name as affected by the right of other persons to the exclusive use of the name (see Index to L.R.A. Notes, Names, §§ 17-19, and the title "Trade-names"). Cases passing upon the question of the right of an individual to add to his own name for business purposes the words "and Co." "and Company," or other partnership designation, when in fact there is L.R.A. 1915D.

cover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note and on an open account for supplies purchased by defendant from plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. C. F. Chapman, for plaintiff in error:

Without abandoning his real name, a person may adopt any name, style, or signature wholly different from his own name, by which he may transact business, execute contracts, issue negotiable papers, and sue and be sued.

29 Cyc. 270; Carlisle v. People's Bank, 122 Ala. 446, 26 So. 115; Pease v. Pease, 35 Conn. 131, 95 Am. Dec. 225; Graham v. Eiszner, 28 Ill. App. 269; Re Pelican Ins.

no actual partner, as affected by statutes regulating the use of partnership names, are also excluded.

A distinction should be observed between the right of an individual to make a complete change of name and transact business under an adopted name by which he is generally known, and the right, without such a change, to adopt an additional name for business purposes. The courts, however, have generally not made a distinction, and, reasoning from the doctrine that one has a right to change his name and adopt any name he sees fit, which as a general proposition is well established, have held that he can assume an additional name under which he may transact business and make valid contracts. A distinction should be observed also between the right of an individual to enforce a contract entered into by him under an assumed name and his liability thereon, but, in many of the cases of the latter sort, the language and reasoning of the court would lead to the conclusion that the right to enforce the contract would also have been upheld. The cases in general support the conclusion reached in ROBINOVITZ v. HAMILL.

II. Right to change name.

a. At common law.

Supplementing note in 14 L.R.A. 692.

As stated in the earlier note on this question (14 L.R.A. 692), it seems that a man may change either his Christian or surname as radically and as often as he desires, if for an honest purpose, and without injury to third persons.

"It is well established that a man may lawfully change his name without resorting to legal proceedings, and for all purposes the name thus assumed by him will constitute his legal name, just as much as if he had borne it from birth; and legal proceedings instituted against him under the assumed name will bind him and those claiming under him." Christianson v. King County, 196 Fed. 791, affirmed in 122 C. C. A. 188, 203 Fed. 894.

Co. 47 La. Ann. 935, 17 So. 427; Sparks v. Despatch Transfer Co. 104 Mo. 531, 12 L.R.A. 714, 24 Am. St. Rep. 351, 15 S. W. 417; England v. New York Pub. Co. 8 Daly, 375; Snook's Petition, 2 Hilt. 566; Rich v. Mayer, 26 N. Y. S. R. 107, 7 N. Y. Supp. 69; Linton v. First Nat. Bank, 10 Fed. 894.

Plaintiff, in doing business under the name of the Producers Supply Company, is not doing business in violation of the letter of the statute in question.

Leader Printing Co. v. Lowry, 9 Okla. 89, 50 Pac. 242; Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533; Bull's Head Bank v. McFeeters, 9 Jones & S. 218; Swords v. Owen, 43 How. Pr. 176, 2 Jones & S. 277; Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 496, 18 Am. St. Rep. 833, 24 N. E. 707; Barron v. Yost, 16 Daly, 441, 12 N. Y. Supp. 455; Rosenheim v. Rosenfield, 37 N. Y. S. R. 551, 13 N. Y. Supp. 720; Blake v. Barnes, 26 Abb. N. C. 215, 12 N. Y. Supp. 69; Martino v. Kirk, 55 Hun, 474, 8 N. Y. Supp. 758; Delvin v. Peek, 135 Fed. 167; Lauferty v. Wheeler, 11 Daly, 194; 1 Bates, Partn. 205; Kent v. Mojonier, 36 La. Ann. 259; 30 Cyc. 420; Wolfe v. Joubert, 45 La. Ann. 1100, 21 L.R.A. 772, 13 So. 806; Sinnott v. German-American Bank, 164 N. Y. 386, 58 N. E. 286, affirming 33 App. Div. 641, 54 N. Y. Supp. 1110; Zimmerman v. Erhard, 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396, affirming 8 Daly, 311, 58 How. Pr. 11; Wood v. Erie R. Co. 72 N. Y. 196, 28 Am. Rep. 125, affirming 9 Hun, 648; Pollard v. Brady, 16 Jones & S. 476; Bau-

A person has the right to adopt any name he sees fit. Delaney v. Gaylord, 131 N. Y. Supp. 890.

"A man may change his name at will, and sue or be sued in any name in which he is known and recognized. . . . So, a person may adopt any name in which to prosecute business, and may sue or be sued in such a name." Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 97 Pac. 17, 16 Ann. Cas. 792.

Supporting the right of an individual at common law to change his name in good faith without resort to formal proceedings for that purpose, and to adopt a new name under which he may transact business and make valid contracts, are also the following cases: Milbra v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & I. Co. 182 Ala. 622, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 274, 62 So. 176; Shain v. DuJardin, 4 Cal. Unrep. 905, 38 Pac. 529; Loser v. Plainfield Sav. Bank, 149 Iowa, 672, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1112, 128 N. W. 1101; Coplin v. Woodmen of the World, 105 Miss. 115, 62 So. 7; Smith v. United States Casualty Co. 197 N. Y. 420, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167, 90 N. E. 947, 18 Ann. Cas. 701; Re Burstein, 69 Misc. 41, 124 N. Y. Supp. 989; Roberts v. Mosier, 35 Okla. 691, 132 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 423; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 66 Or. 272, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 252, 126 Pac. 982, 133 Pac. 1169; Re McUlla, 189 Fed. 250.

b. As affected by statutes providing for change of name by judicial proceedings.

The earlier cases on this question will be found in a note to Smith v. United States Casualty Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167.

The conclusion reached in the cases cited in that note, that statutes providing a mode of changing one's name do not abrogate, but are in affirmance and aid of, the common law, is supported by the later cases of Re Burstein, 69 Misc. 41, 124 N. Y. Supp. 989, and Re McUlla, 189 Fed. 250.

In Re Burstein, supra, the court intimated, however, that in one respect the statute might limit the common-law right in that it provides that on and after the day specified in the order of the court for the change to take effect, the applicant shall "be known by the name which is thereby authorized to be assumed, and by no other name," and that it might well be, therefore, that after a man has acquired a name by judicial decree, he cannot acquire another without resorting to the courts. See, to a similar effect, Smith v. United States Casualty Co. supra.

III. Assumption of business name.

See also cases in note in 14 L.R.A. 693.

It is the established rule that in business matters a contract may be entered into by a person by any name he may choose to assume; all the law looks to is the identity of the individual. Scanlan v. Grimmer, 71 Minn. 351, 70 Am. St. Rep. 326, 74 N. W. 146.

So, in White v. Hartman, — Colo. App. —, 145 Pac. 716, it was said that "a person may adopt or assume any name in which he prefers to do business, or may consummate any individual transaction in any name he may adopt, and will thereafter be responsible in the assumed name."

"It is a general principle of law that one in the transaction of business may use a purely artificial name, or assume the proper name of some other natural person, and the person who thus adopts a fictitious name or who uses the name of the other person will be held liable on the contracts, where the evidence clearly shows that the name is artificial, or that the name of the other person was used without his authority, and that only the party using it is interested in the transaction of the business and in the contract so made." Tuggle v. Bank of Cave Spring, 8 Ga. App. 291, 68 S. E. 1070. In this case the administratrix of one who signed a note in a name other than his own was held liable in an action on the note as the individual contract of the intestate, the name signed being that of another person who had not authorized the signature.

And in Roberts v. Mosier, 35 Okla. 691, 132 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 423, it was said (syllabus) that "a contract or obligamann v. De Logerot, 58 N. Y. S. R. 151, 26 N. Y. Supp. 986.

Messrs. Thompson & Smith, for defendant in error:

Plaintiff is doing business in violation of the statute making it a misdemeanor to do business under a fictitious partnership name.

Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co. 4 Misc. 172, 23 N. Y. Supp. 675; Mattox v. State, 115 Ga. 212, 41 S. E. 709; Leader Printing Co. v. Lowry, 9 Okla. 89, 59 Pac. 242; Palmer v. Pinkham, 33 Me. 32; People v. Strauss, 97 Ill. App. 47; Kilbourn City v. Southern Wisconsin Power Co. 149 Wis. 168, 135 N. W. 499.

The note and account are void and will tion may be entered into by a person by any name he may choose to assume. The law only looks to the identity of the individual, and when that is clearly established, the act, when free from fraud, will be binding."

"It is true if one signs and delivers a contract in the name of a fictitious person, or a real person whom he assumes to be, he will be held liable on such contract." Radley v. Meeks, 178 Mo. App. 238, 165 S. W. 1192, holding, however, that in this instance the defendant had not assumed a fictitious name.

In holding that an individual cannot avoid liability on a contract entered into under an assumed name, the court in Preiss v. Le Poidevin, 19 Abb. N. C. 123, 9 N. Y. S. R. 695, said: "The courts have held that a person can have two names. Can one contract with another under a name she represents to be her name, and then avoid liability on the contract when her identity is unquestioned, by claiming that the name she held out to be her own was not the name by which she was best known to the world? Admitting that she was known by the assumed name to the contracting party by her own representation to him, we think the name under which she contracted was her name for the purpose of the contract, and she is estopped from denying or repudiating the same for the purpose of relieving herself from the obligations of the contract and covenants made by her under such name. There is nothing so sacred in a name that right and justice should be sacrificed to its sanctity. There is nothing in the law prohibiting one from taking another name if he desires, and contracting under the name he may choose to assume."

To a similar effect are Pease v. Pease, 35 Conn. 131, 95 Am. Dec. 225, and Gotthelf v. Shapiro, 136 App. Div. 1, 120 N. Y. Supp. 210, subsequent proceedings in 146 App. Div. 918, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1117, and 210 N. Y. 538, 103 N. E. 1124, holding also that the principle is not affected by the fact that there is a living person who bears the assumed name. In Pease v. Pease, supra, the court said that the weight of the evidence not support an action in behalf of the plaintiff against the defendant.

Huston v. Scott, 20 Okla. 142, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 721, 94 Pac. 512; Light v. Conover, 10 Okla. 732, 63 Pac. 966; Bass v. Smith, 12 Okla. 485, 71 Pac. 628; Watt v. Amos, 14 Okla. 178, 79 Pac. 109; Williams v. Steinmetz, 16 Okla. 104, 82 Pac. 986; Jackson v. Baker, 48 Or. 155, 85 Pac. 512; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holmes, 180 Okla. 92, 90 Pac. 22; McLaughlin v. Ardmore Loan & T. Co. 21 Okla. 173, 95 Pac. 779.

Harrison, C., filed the following opinion:

Max Robinovitz was engaged in the business of furnishing supplies for oil wells and well drilling outfits under the name of the

that the defendant had assumed a certain name as its business name would doubtless be impaired by the fact that the business name employed was not a purely artificial one, as is usual in such cases, but the name of a natural person who, in the eye of the law, was competent to contract on his own account; but that "in principle there is no difference between assuming a purely artificial name by which to transact business, and assuming the proper name of some other natural person; only this, that in the latter case, the proof ought to be very clear to show that the contract was not designed to be a personal contract of such natural person."

As to the length of time the party must have used the assumed name, it was said in Preiss v. Le Poidevin, supra: "Does any length of time have to transpire before the person contracting under the name he chooses and by which he introduces himself to the other contracting party is obligated by the terms of the contract? We hardly believe the courts are called upon to deal in such refinement, if by so doing solemn contracts are avoided and great wrong worked."

It was conceded in Sheridan v. Nation, 159 Mo. 27, 59 S. W. 972, that an individual may do business in any name he chooses, the contention being that when such a party institutes a suit, it must be brought in his real name, a point not within the scope of the note.

"If an individual assume a name for the purpose of making a written contract, and put that name to the contract with a view to bind himself, there seems to be no reason why courts should not consider the name thus assumed as his name pro hac vice, and hold him to fulfil the contract. And it must now be considered as settled that he is bound by such a contract." Grafton Bank v. Flanders, 4 N. H. 239. See also David v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 265, 38 Am. Rep. 418.

The validity of an assignment made by an individual under a fictitious business name was upheld in William Gilligan Co. v. Casey, 205 Mass. 26, 91 N. E. 124, as against an attaching creditor who had given credit Producers' Supply Company. The defendant owed plaintiff $125 on a promissory note and $30.63 on an open account for supplies purchased by defendant from plaintiff, and all of which defendant refused to pay. Plaintiff sued defendant on the note and account. At the close of the testimony defendant moved to dismiss plaintiff's action on the ground that plaintiff was doing business under a fictitious name, to wit, the Producers' Supply Company, and, not having complied with § 5023 and § 5025, Comp. Laws 1909, he could not maintain an action, and on the further ground that the contract, being made in violation of § 2444, Comp. Laws 1909, was null and void. The court sustained the motion to dismiss, and the cause comes here on appeal for determination of the question whether a person can conduct a mercantile business under an assumed name without violating § 2444, Comp. Laws 1909, and whether he can maintain an action for breach of contract made under such assumed name without having first complied with § 5023 and § 5025, Comp. Laws 1909.

Section 5023, Comp. Laws 1909 (§ 4469, Rev. Laws 1910), is as follows: "Except as otherwise provided in the next section, every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the district court of the county or subdivision in which its principal place of business is to the party individually in ignorance apparently of the fact that he was also doing business under an assumed name. In this instance one Casey, a contractor, was doing business under the name, "Bay State Contracting Company, Thomas Hurley, President," and under that name made a contract with a city for construction work. There was in fact no such corporation, the contractor being the only person interested in the business, and having in his employ a foreman named Thomas Hurley. The contractor individually, and without disclosure of the assumed name, purchased materials from the plaintiff, who it was held had no right to money due the contractor from the city as against a third party to whom the debt had been assigned in good faith for advances to a larger amount, although the assignment was in the fictitious business name.

The contention was overruled in William Gilligan Co. v. Casey, supra, that there could be no valid assignment which would be good against attaching creditors, unless the assignment was made and recorded by the assignor in his own name, or, if in another name under which he was doing business, unless that name was one under which he was equally as well known as by his individual name; and the law was declared to be that a person or corporation may assume or be known by different names and contract accordingly; that contracts so entered into will be valid and binding if unaffected by fraud; and that the validity, so far as third persons are concerned, of contracts entered into by a person or corporation under a name other than his proper name, does not depend upon whether he is as well known by that name as by his true name, but whether as to the particular transaction the name is used in good faith by the party adopting it as a descriptio personæ.

"Assuming a firm name, though in fact it represents only one man, is much too common a device in use for business purposes to say that a man cannot be bound by any such name he chooses to adopt. Usually the man doing so carries on for a longer or shorter period, as the case may be, his business in that way. But is length of time in the use thereof the measure of its efficacy in binding him who uses such a business name? McMeekin v. Furry, 39 Can. S. C. 378. In this case it was held that an agreement entered into by Leopold Boscowitz in the name of "J. Boscowitz & Sons" was binding on the maker, although it does not appear but that the transaction in question was the only instance of the use of the firm name.

Where James Derby was carrying on business under the name of "New England Steam & Gas Pipe Company" (a company by this name having been incorporated, but never organized or engaged in business), and a note was given for a debt contracted with him under this name, payable to the company, it was held in Bryant v. Eastman, 7 Cush. 111, that if the name was assumed in good faith, the note should be treated as payable to Derby, and he could transfer a legal title by an indorsement in his own name. The court said there was certainly an inconvenience in an individual carrying on business by a name or description other than his own, but it was not prepared to say that this was illegal.

C. M. Leonard may do business and make valid contracts under the name of "Leonard Construction Co. not Inc.," if the name is assumed in good faith. Leonard v. Howard, 87 Or. 203, 135 Pac. 549. In this instance the action was brought by C. M. Leonard, doing business as the Leonard Construction Company, for the breach of a contract entered into under the assumed name, and the court said that, aside from statutory provisions, there was nothing to prohibit a person from transacting business under any name or style he saw fit.

M. J. Gill, who assumes for business purposes the name of M. J. Gill Construction Company, and under that name enters into contracts, may be sued on the contracts under the assumed name. National Surety Co. v. Oklahoma Presby. College, 38 Okla. 429, 132 Pac. 652.

"A person may adopt and use, as indicative of his negotiable and other con-stated, a certificate, stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership, and their places of residence, and publish the same once a week for four successive weeks, in a newspaper published in the county, if there be one, and if there be none in such county, then in a newspaper published in an adjoining county."

Section 5025, Comp. Laws 1909 (§ 4471, Rev. Laws 1910), reads: "The certificate filed with the clerk of the district court provided in § 5023, must be signed by the partners and acknowledged before some officer authorized to take acknowledgments of conveyances of real property. Persons doing business as partners, contrary to the provisions of this article, shall not maintain any action on or on account of any contracts made or transactions had in their partnership name in any court of this state until they have first filed the certificate and made the publication herein required: Provided, however, that if such partners shall at any time comply with the provisions of this article, then such partnership shall have the right to maintain an action in all such partnership . . . transactions."

Section 2444, Comp. Laws 1909, under the topic, "Fictitious copartnership," reads: "Every person transacting business in the tracts, a business name or style entirely different from his own proper name, and when he, by himself or a general agent, enters into a negotiable or other contract under such adopted business name, he will be bound by such contract as effectually as though it had been entered into and executed under his own proper name and signature. 'In such case the adopted name is equivalent in law to the actual name of the party.'" Union Brewing Co. v. Inter-State Bank & T. Co. 240 Ill. 454, 88 N. E. 997, where the individual was the sole owner of an unincorporated "People's Savings Bank," this fact, however, being known to the other parties in the suit.

And the right of an individual to transact business under an assumed name was recognized in Carlisle v. People's Bank, 122 Ala. 446, 26 So. 115, where it was alleged that a certain person was doing business under the name of "The People's Bank," and the court said that if this was true the legal title under a mortgage made to the bank vested in the individual.

In some states the transacting of business under a fictitious name or under an assumed name, without filing a certificate setting forth the true name or names, is prohibited by statute. See cases in note to Hunter v. Patterson, post, 902, cited supra.

In Alabama a statute prohibits under penalty any person from changing or altering his name except in the manner provided by law, with the intent to defraud or avoid the payment of any debt or to conceal his name of a person as a partner who is not interested in his firm, or transacting business under a firm name in which the designation 'and Company,' or '& Co.' is used without representing an actual partner except in the cases in which the continued use of a copartnership name is authorized by law, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

It is contended by defendant in error, in support of the action of the trial court in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, that plaintiff, by doing business under the assumed name Producers' Supply Company, without first having filed the certificate and made the publication required under § 5023, supra, was precluded under § 5025, supra, from maintaining an action; and also that having conducted his business under an assumed name in violation of § 2444, supra, the contract was void and the plaintiff guilty of a misdemeanor. Neither of these contentions can be sustained, because neither of the provisions of statute, supra, are applicable to the facts in the case at bar. Robinovitz alleged in his petition, and testified on the stand, that he was the owner and proprietor of the business; that no one else was interested in it; that he owned and controlled the Producers' Supply Company, and that such name comprised him and none other; that defendant identity. Morris v. State, 144 Ala. 81, 39 So. 973, holding that the statute was a valid exercise of the police power of the state, and did not violate a constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt.

And in Illinois the wrongful use of a corporate name by an individual is prohibited by a statute providing that any company, association, or person putting forth any sign or advertisement, and therein assuming, for the purpose of soliciting business, a corporate name, without being incorporated, shall be subject to a fine. Among possibly other cases construing and applying the statute are Kantsky v. Atwood, 79 Ill. 204; People ex rel. Power v. Rose, 219 Ill. 46, 76 N. E. 42; Edgerton v. Preston, 15 Ill. App. 23; Imperial Mfg. Co. v. Schwartz, 105 Ill. App. 525; First Nat. Bank v. Cox, 140 Ill. App. 98; Turnes v. Johnson, 179 Ill. App. 32; People v. Carp, 180 Ill. App. 673.

An attorney at law cannot justify the practice of his profession under the name of a firm which was composed of two members, one of whom is dead and the other suspended from practice, on the ground that he has complied with a statute making it a misdemeanor to transact business under an assumed name without filing the required certificate, the statute having no application to such a case. Re Kaffenburgh, 115 App. Div. 346, 101 N. Y. Supp. 507, affirmed in 188 N. Y. 49, 80 N. E. 570.

R. E. H.

had purchased supplies from him doing business under the tradename aforesaid; that the contract for such supplies was entered into between him as an individual under the assumed name of Producers' Supply Company and the defendant under his own name; that the supplies were furnished, part on a promissory note and part on an open account, and that defendant had promised to pay said note and said account, but had never done so. To this state of facts §§ 5023 and 5025, supra, are not applicable because they are clearly intended to apply to partnerships composed of two or more persons who are doing business under a fictitious name which does not disclose the names of the individual members of the partnership, and do not apply to an individual person not engaged in a partnership business, but who merely assumes a business name under which he chooses to conduct his business. For the same reason § 2444 is not applicable, as it very clearly contemplates a copartnership composed of two or more persons. That an action may be maintained against a person conducting a business under an assumed name has been decided by the court in National Surety Co. v. Oklahoma Presby. College, 38 Okla. 429, on page 433, 132 Pac. 652, in which Chief Justice Hayes, speaking for the court, said: "It would have been better practice for plaintiffs to have brought their action against M. J. Gill, doing business under the name of M. J. Gill Construction Company; but that they may maintain an action against him in the names of the M. J. Gill Construction Company has not been questioned in the proceeding here; and such a procedure is sustained by respectable authorities upon reasons which appear satisfactory to us. Graham v. Eiszner, 28 Ill. App. 269; Sheridan v. Nation, 159 Mo. 27, 59 S. W. 972; Wooster v. Lyons, 5 Blackf. 60; Baumeister v. Markham, 101 Ky. 122, 72 Am. St. Rep. 397, 39 S. W. 844, 41 S. W. 816, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 363; School Dist. v. Pillsbury, 58 N. H. 423."

And as to whether a person doing business under an assumed name can himself maintain an action was decided by this court in Roberts v. Mosier, 35 Okla. 691, 132 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 423, in which Justice Williams, speaking for the court, said: "If, as stated in the petition, he adopted it some years ago, engaged in business by that name, and is known among his business acquaintances and customers by that designation, there is no reason why he should not continue to use it. Any contract or obligation he may enter into, or which others may enter into with him, by that name, or any grant or devise he may hereafter make by it, would be valid and L.R.A.1915D.

binding; for, as an acquired and known designation, it has become as effectually his name as the one which he previously bore. I have no hesitation, therefore, in saying that I think he may lawfully use it hereafter, in all transactions, as his name or designation."

In 29 Cyc. 270, under the title "Assumed names," etc.: "Without abandoning his real name, a person may adopt any name, style, or signature wholly different from his own name, by which he may transact business, execute contracts, issue negotiable paper, and sue or be sued."

In 14 Pl. & Pr. 277, under the title "Assumed names," etc.: "Notwithstanding a person may not change his name without a proper proceeding for that purpose, where it is so prescribed by statute, he may, as at common law, adopt any name he pleases in his business transactions, and such name, or any name by which he is usually known and called, is sufficient by which to designate him in civil or criminal proceedings instituted against him; and he is estopped from repudiating a name under which he contracts, for the purpose of relieving himself of the obligation of the contract. There is nothing so sacred in a name that right and justice should be sacrificed to its sanctity. So a person may sue in any name in which he may contract, as well as in any name by which he is generally known."

We are satisfied, therefore, that the plaintiff, Robinovitz, had the right to assume any name under which he chose to conduct his business, so long as such business was conducted in good faith, and that he had a right to maintain an action for breach of contracts made under such business name, and that the trial court erred in sustaining the motion to dismiss, and, as there was no other defense to plaintiff's action except that he was doing business under an assumed name, the judgment is reversed, with instructions to reinstate the action and render judgment in favor of plaintiff.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. P. HUNTER et al., Appts.,

v.

P. L. PATTERSON et al., Doing Business as Big Four Auto Company.

(162 Ky. 778, 173 S. W. 120.)

Action — assumed name — effect.

Persons who carry on business under an assumed name without complying with a statute requiring them under penalty to file their true names in the office of the clerk of the county cannot maintain actions in the courts to enforce payment for goods sold by them.

(February 16, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County in plaintiffs' favor and from an order sustaining a demurrer to the plea in abatement, in a suit to recover the amount of two notes given in part payment of a motor car sold by plaintiffs to defendants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note.—Validity of contracts made by individual or partnership under an assumed name in violation of statute.

As to right of individual to change name or to transact business under an assumed name, see note to Robinovitz v. Hamill, ante, 981, and notes therein referred to.

Generally, as to validity of contracts in business which it is a misdemeanor to transact, see note to Levison v. Boas, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 575.

As to effect of provision for penalty for noncompliance by a foreign corporation with conditions of the right to do business within the state, upon the validity or enforceability of a contract by a foreign corporation which has not complied with such conditions, see notes to Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 688, and Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterson, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 857, and later case Model Heating Co. v. Magarity, L.R.A. 1915B, 665.

For other aspects of the effect of non-compliance with a statute upon the validity of a contract, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, "Contracts," §§ 74, 75.

It is assumed for the purposes of the note that the name adopted is fictitious, the note not including the question as to what constitutes a fictitious name or the transaction of business within the meaning of the statutes.

The cases are not in accord upon the question indicated in the title to the note. The weight of authority, at least in a number of cases, appears, however, to oppose the conclusion reached in HUNTER v. PATTERSON. Supporting that decision and cited therein, is Cashin v. Pliter, 168 Mich. 386, 134 N. W. 482, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 697, in which it was held that recovery by members of a partnership of the balance due on a house built by them for the defendant was precluded because of the violation of a statute prohibiting the transaction of business under an assumed name unless a certificate was filed setting forth the true name or names of the owners of the business, and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor. L.R.A. 1915D.

Messrs. T. W. Thomas and R. C. P. Thomas, for appellants:

Plaintiffs did not have legal capacity to sue, and their alleged contract was illegal and void.

Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. 156 Ky. 628, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 293, 161 S. W. 570.

Defendants are not estopped from insisting that the contracts are void and that the plaintiffs herein are without legal capacity to sue.

Ibid.; Smith v. Robertson, 106 Ky. 472, 45 L.R.A. 510, 50 S. W. 852.

Messrs. Sims, Rodes, & Sims, for appellees:

The object of the legislature in passing

The object of the statute was said in Cashin v. Pliter, supra, to be the protection of the public against imposition and fraud, and the prohibiting of persons from concealing their identity by doing business under an assumed name, and was not limited to facilitating the collection of debts or to the protection of those giving credit to persons doing business under such a name. "It is not unilateral in its application. It applies to debtor and creditor, contractor and contractee, alike. Parties doing business with those acting under an assumed name, whether they buy or sell, have a right under the law to know who they are, and whom to hold responsible in case the question of damages for failure to perform or breach of warranty should arise. The general rule is well settled that, where statutes enacted to protect the public against fraud or imposition, or to safeguard the public health or morals, contain a prohibition and imposed a penalty, all contracts in violation thereof are void."

It was said, however, in Cashin v. Pliter, supra, that the statute should be construed as rendering contracts made in violation of it unlawful and unenforceable at the instance of the offending party only, and not as designed to take away the rights of innocent parties who might have dealt with the offenders in ignorance of their having violated the statute.

It was held also in Cashin v. Pliter, supra, that the plaintiffs could not recover on an implied promise to pay the reasonable value of the labor and materials furnished. See quotation from this case in HUNTER v. PATTERSON.

The Michigan statute was, however, held in Robbins v. Vandermaiden, — Mich. —, 148 N. W. 747, not to apply to a case where the parties violating it were not seeking affirmative relief, but were merely brought into court in a garnishee proceeding by an order interpleading them as claimants of the fund which the garnishee contended he owed to them instead of to the principal defendant.

On the other hand, under the New York statutes forbidding the transaction of business in the name of a partner not interested § 199b, Ky. Stat., was to prevent a partnership from obtaining false credit.

Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Iowa, 546; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 81; Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 126, 45 L.R.A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31, 57 Pac. 777; Zimmerman v. Erhard, 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396; Wood v. Erie R. Co. 72 N. Y. 196, 28 Am. Rep. 125; Wolfe v. Joubert, 45 La. Ann. 1100, 21 L.R.A. 772, 13 So. 806.

Defendants, having entered into this contract and obtained an automobile thereby, are not estopped from denying plaintiffs' capacity to make such a contract.

Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatter-in the firm, or the use in the firm name of the words "and company" unless an actual partner is represented thereby, and making violation thereof a misdemeanor, it has been generally held that persons doing business in violation of the statute are not thereby precluded from enforcing contracts made by them, at least if reliance is not placed by the other party to the contract upon the false designation, and he is not injured thereby. Baron v. Yost, 16 Daly, 441, 12 N. Y. Supp. 455 (holding that violation of the statute by the plaintiff is not a defense to an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, but that, to render the contract illegal, it must appear also that credit was given and reliance placed upon the false designation); Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533 (holding that recovery on the bond of an employee is not defeated by reason of violation of the statute, where at the time it was executed the defendant knew who the real partners were, and no credit was given or reliance placed upon the false designation); Baumann v. De Logerot, 58 N. Y. S. R. 151, 26 N. Y. Supp. 986 (action for price of goods sold); Adee v. Crow, 7 Misc. 256, 27 N. Y. Supp. 973 (action on note made by the defendant and assigned by payee to plaintiff); Donlon v. English, 89 Hun, 67, 2 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 299, 35 N. Y. Supp. 82 (holding violation of the statute by the plaintiff not a defense to an action for goods sold to the defendant, if the latter knew at the time of the purchase who composed the firm, and did not deal with it in reliance on the apparent membership of a third party who in fact had no interest therein); Kennedy v. Budd, 5 App. Div. 140, 39 N. Y. Supp. 81 (action by stockbroker for balance due in purchase and sale of stock upon a margin); Taylor v. Bell & B. Soap Co. 18 App. Div. 175, 45 N. Y. Supp. 939 (action for damages for refusal to accept goods sold); McLean v. Wohltien, 25 Misc. 742, 55 N. Y. Supp. 632 (action for breach of contract of guaranty); Vandegrift v. Bertron, 83 App. Div. 548, 82 N. Y. Supp. 153 (action to enforce mechanics' lien); see also Sinnott v. German-American Bank, 164 N. Y. 386, 58 N. E. 286, the L.R.A.1915D.

son, 146 Ky. 504, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 857, 143 S. W. 6.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by P. L. Patterson, Joe Lucas, James Massey, and S. A. Kelly, partners, doing business under the assumed name of the "Big Four Auto Company," against the appellants, as defendants, to recover $284, the amount of two notes executed by the defendants to the Big Four Auto Company, growing out of some transactions between the parties about an automobile.

The defendants, for the purpose of defeating the action, pleaded and relied on § 199b court saying that the statute did not apply to executed contracts, and holding that one selling goods to a violator of the statute could not recover the same where the right of a bona fide purchaser had intervened.

It should be observed that in the majority of the above cases the contract had been executed on the part of the plaintiff, who, it was claimed, was violating the statute. But in McArdle v. Thames Iron Works, 96 App. Div. 139, 89 N. Y. Supp. 485, it was held that the same rule applied to executory contracts, at least if no injury to the defendant was alleged or proved because of the plaintiff's use of the fictitious name.

In Doyle v. Shuttleworth, 41 Misc. 42, 83 N. Y. Supp. 609, it was held that the right, as established by the above decisions, of one doing business in violation of the statute to recover for goods sold and delivered, was not changed by the statute of 1900 (chap. 216, p. 452), which added to the Penal Code a provision that no person should transact business under an assumed name without filing a certificate setting forth the true names and addresses of those conducting the business, and that violation of the statute would be a misdemeanor.

The same conclusion, that one is not prevented from recovering on an executed contract because of violation of the statute, has been reached under the New York Consolidated Laws, providing that "no person shall hereafter transact business in the name of a partner not interested in his firm, and when the designation 'and company' or '& Co.' is used, it shall represent an actual partner; but a violation of this section shall not be a defense in an action or proceeding brought by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, or by a receiver of the property of, or by an executor or administrator of, a person who has violated the same." Black v. New York L. Ins. Co. 70 Misc. 532, 127 N. Y. Supp. 409.

That under the statute of 1900 above cited one cannot legally transact business under a firm name in which the words "and company" are used, if no actual partner is represented thereby, although he files the of the Kentucky Statutes, the 1st subsection of which reads as follows: "No person or persons shall hereafter carry on or conduct or transact business in this state under an assumed name, or under any designation, name, or style, corporate or otherwise, other than the real name or names of the individual or individuals conducting or transacting such business, unless such person or persons shall file in the office of the clerk of the county or counties in which such person or persons conduct or transact, or intend to conduct or transact, such business, a certificate setting forth the name under which said business is, or is to be, conducted or transacted, and the true or real full name or names of the person or persons owning, conducting, or transacting the same, with the postoffice address or addresses of said person or persons. Said certificate shall be executed and duly acknowledged by the person or persons so conducting, or intending to conduct, said business."

Subsections 2 and 3 relate to the certificate. Subsection 4 exempts corporations and partnerships from the application of the statute, with the proviso that "such partnership name or designation shall include the true real name of at least one of such persons transacting business."

Subsection 5, prescribing a penalty for the violation of the statute, reads: "Any person or persons carrying on, conducting, or transacting business as aforesaid, who shall fail to comply with the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon certificate contemplated by the statute, the earlier statutes not being repealed or modified thereby, see Jenner v. Shope, 205 N. Y. 66, 98 N. E. 325.

Although the rule in New York as shown by the above cases seems now well established, there are several earlier cases in that state where a contrary conclusion was reached,—contracts made by persons who were doing business in a firm name in violation of the statute being regarded as unenforceable by them. O'Loole v. Garvin, 1 Hun, 92; Ellison v. Smoller, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 484; Lunt v. Lunt, 8 Abb. N. C. 83 (holding violation of the statute a defense to a breach of contract to repay insurance money in case of claims by other parties); Lane v. Arnold, 11 Daly, 293 (holding that a firm, by doing business in violation of the statute, had lost the right to recover the value of goods sold and delivered to the defendant. On appeal, however, in 99 N. Y. 648, the judgment was reversed, but not on the merits); Swords v. Owen, 2 Jones & S. 277, 43 How. Pr. 176 (holding that the plaintiff, who was transacting business in violation of the statute, could not recover damages for the defendant's refusal to accept stock which the plaintiff as a broker had purchased for him, because of the invalidity of the contract between the parties); see also Bull's Head Bank v. McFeeters, 9 Jones & S. 215, where the court, while holding that one could not avoid liability on a contract on the ground that it was made in violation of the statute, was apparently of the opinion that a violator of the statute could not invoke the aid of the courts to enforce the contract.

In Swords v. Owen, supra, the court said that the prohibition did not, nor did the penalty, in terms apply to contracts made by firms doing business in violation of the statute, and did not in terms declare such contract void; but that it did make it unlawful for any person to transact business in the name of a fictitious firm; that it is not necessary that a penal statute should contain prohibitory words; but that a penalty implies a prohibition, and every act done against it is not only illegal, but absolutely void. Any other application of the statute, it was said, would render it wholly ineffectual, as the desire of the legislature, as expressed in the title of the act, was to "prevent persons from transacting business under a fictitious name."

The fact that one carried on the business of purchasing and selling carriages in violation of a statute making it a misdemeanor to transact business in the name of a partner not interested in the firm was held in Wood v. Erie R. Co. 72 N. Y. 196, 28 Am. Rep. 125, not to be a defense to an action by him against a railroad company for damages for injuries to a carriage in transportation, although the carriage was purchased in the firm name, and was marked with that name. The court was of the opinion that the statute was not intended for the protection of such parties as a common carrier, which are secured by a lien on the property transported.

The purpose of the New York statute providing that no person shall transact business in the name of a partner not interested in the firm was said in Wood v. Erie R. Co. supra, to be the prevention of an individual engaged in business from continuing to use the name of a member of the firm with whom he had been associated, after such member had retired from the firm, or from using the name of a person not interested in the firm, thus inducing credit to be given by those trading with him, and imposing upon the public; that it was to prevent a person from obtaining a false credit on the strength of a name which had been withdrawn, or which he had no authority to use.

And in Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533, it was said that the purpose of the statute was obviously to protect persons giving credit to the fictitious firm on the faith of the fictitious designation, and was not needed to protect those who obtained credit from such a firm. To a similar effect are Kennedy v. Budd, 5 App. Div. 140, 39 N. Y. Supp. 81; Black v. New York L. Ins. Co. 70 Misc. 532, 127 N. Y. Supp. 409. See also Ryan v. Hardy, 26 Hun, 176, and Zimmerman v. Erhard, 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396.

conviction, shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, or imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten days nor more than thirty days, or both so fined and imprisoned, and each day any person or persons continue to conduct business in violation of this act shall be deemed a separate offense."

The trial court sustained a general demurrer to this answer, and the defendants appeal.

This act does not in terms say that it shall be "unlawful" for any person to carry on or transact business under an assumed name, but it is manifest that it was the purpose of the act to make it unlawful, or else the penalty prescribed by subsection 5 would not have been imposed. In view of the fact that this section expressly provides that any person who fails to comply with the provisions of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine and imprisonment, it would be disregarding the purpose of the act, when considered as a whole, to say that the legislature did not intend to make it unlawful to transact business without observing the requirements of the act. If the legislature had said in so many words in subsection 1 that "it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to carry on or transact business under an assumed name," it would not have made any plainer the fact that the legislature intended to make this method of transacting business unlawful.

It being then the intention of the legislature to make the transaction of business

All the cases agree, it was said in McArdle v. Thames Iron Works, 96 App. Div. 139, 89 N. Y. Supp. 485, that the statute making it a misdemeanor to transact business under a fictitious copartnership name must be strictly construed because of its highly penal character, and that it had its foundation in public policy for the protection of the commercial community.

In holding that one doing business under a fictitious partnership name in violation of the statute is not thereby precluded from maintaining an action on an executory contract, the court in McArdle v. Thames Iron Works, supra, said that the contract was not illegal, but that the illegality consisted in the use by the plaintiff of a fictitious name; that he might be punished for his violation of the law in holding out a false name to the community, and that one misled into giving him credit by reason of the name, or because of his misrepresentation, could doubtless rescind the contract, but (citing Sinnott v. German-American Bank, 164 N. Y. 386, 58 N. E. 286) that even this could not be done where the rights of bona fide purchasers had intervened.

Cases in which unregistered plumbers and physicians have been defeated in their attempt to collect for work done were distinguished in Doyle v. Shuttleworth, 41 Misc. 42, 83 N. Y. Supp. 609, from those cases in which persons carrying on business under an assumed firm name without filing the required certificates have succeeded in recovering for goods sold and delivered. It was said that the purpose of the statute requiring plumbers and physicians to procure and file a certificate before practising their calling or profession is to protect the community against unqualified and incompetent persons, and that to permit them to recover for work done in violation of the law would defeat its purpose; but that the purpose of the statute forbidding the use of a fictitious firm name without the filing of a certificate is to protect persons giving credit to the firm or individual in reliance upon the false designation, and it can have no application where the credit is given by,

and not to, the person using the designation.

On the other hand, in Cashin v. Pliter, 168 Mich. 386, 134 N. W. 482, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 697, the court rejected the contention that a distinction should be made between the right to recover on a contract where the statute violated was one prohibiting the transaction of business under an assumed name without filing a certificate, and where it was one prohibiting, in the interest of public health and safety, the carrying on of such business as that of a pharmacist without a license. The court said it was true that the object of the statute relating to the transaction of business under an assumed name was not to safeguard life or health; but that both laws were founded on public policy; that they were acts of the same class coming within the police power of the state, one being to protect the public health, and the other to protect the public from imposition and fraud.

The Louisiana courts have followed the decisions of the New York courts in upholding the validity of contracts made in violation of a statute relating to the transaction of business under fictitious names, the statute in Louisiana being, it was said, borrowed from New York. Kent v. Mojonier, 36 La. Ann. 259 (action for price of goods sold and delivered); Wolfe v. Joubert, 45 La. Ann. 1100, 21 L.R.A. 772, 13 So. 806.

And in New Jersey, the courts have reached the same conclusion as in New York and Louisiana, it being held in Rutkowsky v. Bozza, 77 N. J. L. 724, 73 Atl. 502, that the plaintiff was not prevented from recovering the value of goods sold and delivered, because he was carrying on business under an assumed name without filing the certificate required by the statute in such cases, a violation of the statute being a misdemeanor. The purpose of the statute, as stated in the New York cases, was approved, the court saying that it was obviously to protect persons giving credit on the faith of the fictitious designation, and was not needed to protect those who obtained credit from persons doing business under an assumed name unlawful unless the requirements of the statute are observed, the only remaining question is: Does the fact that the legislature has made the doing of a thing unlawful prohibit the person engaged in the unlawful thing from maintaining an action to enforce a contract right wholly created in the doing of this unlawful and forbidden thing?

In Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterton, 146 Ky. 504, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 857, 143 S. W. 6, a question so similar to the one here presented that no distinction can be made between them was before the court, and in the course of the opinion, it was said: "The statute does not provide that contracts entered into before it has been complied with shall be void or nonenforceable, nor does it use any language in reference to the contract; but when a statute makes it unlawful to do business under certain conditions, it seems to necessarily and logically follow that the doing of the business under the prohibited conditions is in itself unlawful. When the doing of the act is made unlawful, there is no reason why the statute should also declare that contracts made in violation of it should also be unlawful. When the law prohibits a thing, it is unlawful to do it, and the courts should not lend their aid to the enforcement of prohibited contracts. Courts are established to afford remedies to litigants who seek relief growing out of lawful transactions, and not to aid those who would invoke their assistance to enforce contracts under the fictitious name; and the statute, it was said, was highly penal, and must be strictly construed.

A similar conclusion was reached in a recent case in Connecticut, Sagel v. Kylar, — Conn. —, L.R.A. —, 93 Atl. 1027.

To the same effect is Smith v. Finch, 12 B. C. 186, construing a statute somewhat similar to those above indicated. In this case, where the plaintiff, who was doing business under a fictitious partnership name without having registered a declaration that no other person was associated with him in the partnership, as required by the statute (a penalty of $100 being provided for violation of the statute), sought to recover for work done by him for the defendant, it was held that violation of the statute was not a defense to the action.

And contracts are valid although made without filing the certificate required by the Washington statute which provides that no person shall transact business under an assumed name without filing a certificate setting forth the true name, and that no person so transacting business shall be entitled to maintain a suit without alleging and proving that he has filed the certificate, it being sufficient if the certificate is filed before bringing suit, though after the making of the contract. Sutton v. Coast Trading Co. 49 Wash. 694, 96 Pac. 428.

It was said in Sutton v. Coast Trading Co. supra, that a stronger reason existed for holding that contracts of partnerships should not be construed as invalid for failure to file the certificate required by the statute, than for holding that contracts were not void though made by foreign corporations without complying with a statute recognizing their right to do business in the state on filing a copy of the charter and appointing an agent, because the right of such corporations to do business in the state was by grace of the state, and not by a common-law right, as in the case of partnerships. The statute requiring the filing of the certificate in the case of a partnership doing business under an assumed name was said to be a regulation of the exercise of the power to contract already existing L.R.A.1915D.

under the common law, and not an act conferring the power to make contracts.

And in Smith v. Finch, supra, the court called attention to a distinction that had been made "between certain requisites to be done before or at the time of entering into the individual contract, which requisites are to precede the contract and to make it out, and certain other duties imposed on one of the parties, which last mentioned duties are entirely collateral to the individual contract." As illustrative of the former class, cases were cited in which it was held that actions could not be maintained for the price of goods sold, if they did not conform to a certain measure or were not properly branded or marked. But the case before it was regarded by the court as belonging to the latter class, the penalty imposed by the statute for doing business in a fictitious partnership name without registration being, it was said, something not contemplated by the contract. The court also held that the fact that the statute imposed a penalty once for all, and not a recurring penalty, was material as tending to show that the intent in its enactment was not to prohibit the contract.

The only penalty for doing business without warrant under a corporate name was said in Turnes v. Johnson, 179 Ill. App. 32, to be that provided by the corporation act, that the person or persons so doing business are jointly and severally liable for all debts contracted by them in the name of the pretended corporation; and that a contract made by one doing business as a corporation is not rendered void by the statute, nor by the section of the Criminal Code providing that if any person puts forth any sign or advertisement and therein assumes, for the purpose of soliciting business, a corporate name without being incorporated, he may be punished by a fine.

It has been said that, although one may be doing business generally in violation of a statute making it a misdemeanor to transact business under a fictitious partnership name, a violation of the statute may not be predicated of any transaction in which made in violation of law. Their chief purpose is to secure the observance of laws enacted for the safety and protection of life and property, and the general well-being of the people, and it would be a startling departure from this purpose if they should also give relief to parties who were seeking to enforce contracts made in violation of law. Such a course of procedure would be a perversion of justice, and convert the courts into instruments to aid lawbreakers, in place of punishing them."

Again, in Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. 156 Ky. 628, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 161 S. W. 570, the question was thoroughly considered, and the ruling in the Chatterson Case adopted and approved. And it seems to us that these decisions control this case.

the false designation is not used. Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533.

And in Loeb v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 78 App. Div. 113, 79 N. Y. Supp. 510, the court said it would seem that a person dealing with a copartnership doing business in violation of a statute making it a misdemeanor to transact business under the designation "& Co." could take advantage of such a violation only when the person violating it used the false designation in the particular transaction out of which the controversy arose. Accordingly, it was held in this case that an insurance company which had insured a firm composed of L. & Co. could not prevent recovery upon the policy on the ground that after its issuance one of the partners had sold his interest to the other, who continued the business under the firm name in violation of the statute.

So, in Hoyt v. Allen, 2 Hill, 322, it was held in an action against a carrier for injury to goods delivered to it for transportation, that a plea was bad which averred in general words that the plaintiff transacted business under a fictitious firm name, because, to bring the case within the statute forbidding the transaction of business in the name of a fictitious firm, the plea should have averred that the transaction in which the fictitious name was used related to the goods in question.

In Pollard v. Brady, 16 Jones & S. 476, affirmed without opinion in 89 N. Y. 628, it was held that the fact that the plaintiffs were doing business under a firm name in violation of the statute prohibiting the transaction of business in the name of a partner not interested in the firm, and providing that where the designation "and company" is used, it shall represent an actual partner, did not preclude them from recovering on a note made payable to the firm, where the note was taken in a transaction isolated from the business of buying and selling goods on commission, which was the general business of the plaintiffs, and had no connection with that business, but was taken in the process of adjusting the rights of the parties in a contract for the conveyance of real estate.

L.R.A.1915D.

In Cashin v. Pliter, 168 Mich. 386, 134 N. W. 482, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 697, the supreme court of Michigan had before it a question in all respects similar to the one here involved. The Michigan statute before the court prohibited the transaction of business under an assumed name or any other than the real name of the individual or owner conducting same, unless a certificate was filed such as is provided for in our act. It does not appear from the opinion that the act expressly made it unlawful to conduct the business without filing the required certificate, but it did make the violation of the act a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. It further appears that Cashin and certain other individuals were doing business in the firm name of Flint Contracts are not invalid under a statute prohibiting the use of the designation "& Co." when no actual partner is represented thereby, if in fact an actual partner is represented by the designation, although through inadvertence counsel may have declared the firm to be composed of only one member. Eugster & Co. v. La Compagnie Commerciale De Transports, 2 McGloin (La.) 163, 15 Dec. Dig. 1078.

In several of the states, the statutes regulating the transaction of business under fictitious names, instead of providing a penalty for a violation, prohibit the maintenance of an action by one who has not complied therewith. Some of these statutes expressly provide that, in case of compliance therewith at any time, actions may be maintained on contracts entered into prior as well as after such compliance, thereby recognizing the right to make contracts, but denying the right of action thereon without compliance with the statute. Even though the statute does not expressly recognize the right to make contracts and by subsequent compliance to enforce the same, the validity of contracts made without compliance with these statutes has generally been assumed, and the validity or invalidity of the contract not discussed, the only questions considered being as to the construction of the statute, as, for instance, the kind of actions to which it applies and the necessity of filing the certificate and completing the publication thereof before beginning the action. Cases dealing with some of the principal questions in regard to the construction of the statutes are here included, as involving the same subject-matter as the other cases in the note, although the question of the validity of the contract was not directly presented.

The California statute provides that every partnership transacting business in the state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in the business, must file a certificate stating the names of members of the partnership, and publish the same for four successive weeks in a newspaper; and that persons doing business as partners contrary to the pro-

Construction & Realty Company, and that in this name they entered into a contract with Pliter to build him a house for an agreed sum; that after they had completed the house according to contract Pliter refused to pay a balance due, whereupon suit was brought against him. His defense was that the plaintiffs were doing business in violation of the statute, and therefore could not recover. In that case, as in this, the argument was made on behalf of the plaintiffs that the act was a penal statute, not implying or intending any other punishment or loss to those violating it than that expressly provided by the fine and imprisonment; that it had no application in a case where the defendant knew who the members of the concern were with which he dealt; and that, as they had fully performed the contract, and he had received the benefits thereof, they were entitled to recover the amount sued for. But the court, rejecting this view and denying a recovery, said that the act was founded on public policy, came within the police power of the state, and was intended to protect the public from imposition and fraud; that the labor and material was furnished under an illegal contract, by virtue of which there could be no recovery.

visions of the statute shall not maintain an action upon any contract made in the partnership name until they have first filed the certificate and made the publication. North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 Pac. 1037.

The purpose of this statute was said in Meads v. Lasar, 92 Cal. 221, 28 Pac. 935, to be that public notice and record might be made of the individual members with such definiteness that those dealing with them might at all times know who are the individuals with whom they are dealing, or to whom they are giving credit or becoming bound.

Under this and other similar statutes, the question has sometimes arisen as to whether the filing and publication of the certificate must be completed before the bringing of the action. In Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61, the word "maintain" as used in the statute was construed as including the commencement of the action, and it was held that partners could not maintain an action on a contract made by them, where at the time the action was commenced they had not filed or published a certificate, although before the day of trial they filed the certificate and commenced the publication thereof. That the word "maintain" in such statutes should be construed as including the beginning of the action, see also New Carlisle Bank v. Brown, 5 Ohio C. D. 94, 11 Ohio C. C. 77; Hartzell v. Warren, 5 Ohio C. D. 183. In the latter case, however, it was held error to dismiss the action because of failure to comply with the statute, where it was com-

The case of Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 472, 49 Am. Rep. 533, is relied on by counsel for the appellees as taking a different view of this question from that announced by this court and the Michigan court, but an examination of this case shows that the court, in holding a contract that it was claimed violated a statute of New York in some particulars like ours, enforceable, put its decision distinctly on the ground that the statute was not intended to be applicable to a state of case such as was presented to the court, saying: "This case is not, therefore, within the purpose or intention of the statute, and such a transaction is not one of the mischiefs sought to be remedied by the statute. Therefore, although this transaction should be held to be within the letter of the statute, it is clearly not within the purpose and intention of the statute, and hence it is outside of the statute. It is a rule peculiarly applicable to the construction of penal statutes that a thing within the letter of a statute is not within the statute unless within the intention thereof; and so, too, in the construction of remedial statutes, it is generally held that a thing within the intention is within the statute, though not within the letter."

The case before us, however, comes not only directly within the letter, but directly mened by an attachment before the certificate was filed and there had been a compliance before the filing of the petition, the real question in such a case being simply one as to the costs.

But in Nicholson v. Auburn Gold Min. & Mill. Co. 6 Cal. App. 547, 92 Pac. 651, it was held that the plaintiffs were not precluded from maintaining an action for the value of goods, on the ground that they were a partnership transacting business under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners, and had not filed the required certificate, where it was filed on the same day as the complaint in the action, and the publication was completed before the answer was filed pleading the statute in abatement. The court distinguished the case before it from Byers v. Bourret, supra, in that in the latter case the publication was not completed until after the trial.

The disability to maintain an action imposed by the California statute upon partners violating it is of personal character, and does not prevent such partners from making a valid assignment of a chose in action, and the maintenance of an action by the assignee (Cheney v. Newberry, 67 Cal. 126, 7 Pac. 445; Wing Ho v. Baldwin, 70 Cal. 194, 11 Pac. 565; Trudel v. Butori, 19 Cal. App. 584, 127 Pac. 76), even though the assignee is a member of the partnership (Gray v. Wells, 118 Cal. 11, 50 Pac. 23). See also Kinsey v. Ohio Southern R. Co. 3 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 249, 2 Ohio N. P. 175, to a similar effect.

within the intention, of the statute. The statute was intended to prohibit exactly what the plaintiffs were doing, unless they filed the certificate required. The legislature undoubtedly had the power to enact this statute and prescribe a penalty for its violation. And when the legislature, within its authority, enacts a law making it a punishable offense to do certain things, it may be considered as a closed question that this court will not lend such aid to the persons doing the prohibited things as will enable them to violate the law with impunity. It is probable that a rule like this may, in some instances, work a hardship by permitting one person to get the benefit of another person's labor, service, or property without compensation. But, as said in Oliver Co. v. Louisville Realty Co. supra: "The fact that the enforcement of the statute may work hardships on corporations that fail to obey it . . . cannot, without ignoring the legislative intent, be allowed to defeat the object sought to be accomplished by the enactment of the law. Every person who violates the law puts himself in the attitude of being required to pay the penalty for the infraction, but, although the delinquency may subject him to punishments, civil or criminal, this, of course, furnishes no reason why the statute should not be enforced. The individual who violates a penal statute may expect to pay the penalty, and so a corporation that violates the civil features of a statute is not in any position to complain if it, too, must pay the penalty."

Also, in Cashin v. Pliter, supra, the court, in answer to the argument that the defendant should be estopped from relying on the statute to defeat the collection of a just debt, said: "In behalf of the plaintiffs, it is urged that the contract having been performed, and labor and material having been furnished, of which defendant retains the benefit, recovery can be had therefor under the common counts, on an implied promise to pay for the same what they are reasonably worth. But they were furnished under an illegal express contract, by virtue of which there can be no recovery. . . . In such a case the doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked by the plaintiff; but the law leaves the parties where it finds them, and refuses relief. It recognizes the defense of illegality, not as a protection to the defendant, but as a disability to the plaintiff."

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer, and for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

But in Choctaw Lumber Co. v. Gilmore, 11 Okla. 462, 68 Pac. 733, it was held that where a partnership had no right to begin an action because they had not made the publication required by the statute in the case of a partnership transacting business under a fictitious name, they could not, after the beginning of the action, assign their interest so as to entitle the assignee to maintain the action, the latter acquiring no greater right than his assignor.

In Phillips v. Goldtree, 74 Cal. 151, 13 Pac. 313, 15 Pac. 451, it was said that the only penalty attached by the statute in that state to a failure to file the certificate is the legal incapacity to maintain an action upon any contract made or transactions had in the partnership name; and that there is no disability imposed to make contracts, or to have transactions, or to own property, whether it consists in goods or choses in action; that it was on this ground, namely, that a valid cause of action existed, that persons who could not themselves maintain the action because of noncompliance with the statute could make a valid assignment to one who was under no incapacity to sue, and who could bring and maintain an action. To a somewhat similar effect, see Kinsey v. Ohio Southern R. Co. supra; Heegaard v. Dakota Loan & T. Co. 3 S. D. 569, 54 N. W. 656; and Bovee v. De Jong, 22 S. D. 163, 116 N. W. 83.

That partners cannot maintain an action under the California statute, where the filing and publishing of the certificate is denied, without evidence that they have complied with the statute, see Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. 444.

The Colorado statute provides that persons doing business as partners under any other than the personal name or names of the members shall file affidavits setting forth the names and addresses of the parties, and that on default of filing such affidavits, the parties shall not be permitted to prosecute a suit "for the collection of their debts" until such affidavits are filed. Elgin Jewelry Co. v. Wilson, 42 Colo. 270, 93 Pac. 1107.

It has been held that, as this is a penal statute, it should not be construed as embracing any penalty except that provided for by its terms, and that an action to recover possession of real property is not within the statute. Wallbrecht v. Blush, 43 Colo. 329, 95 Pac. 927.

So, an action for tort is not within the statute. Melcher v. Beeler, 48 Colo. 233, 139 Am. St. Rep. 273, 110 Pac. 181; Pedroni v. Eppstein, 17 Colo. App. 424, 68 Pac. 794. And to a similar effect under statutes of other states, see Ralph v. Lockwood, 61 Cal. 155, and Anonymous, 7 Ohio N. P. 568.

The Ohio statute provides that every partnership transacting business under a fictitious name or designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners must file a certificate stating the names in full of all the members of the partnership and their places of residence, and that any persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of the statute shall not commence or maintain an action on any contract made or transactions had in the partnership name, until they shall have filed the required certificate; provided that if the partners shall at any time comply with the provisions of the statute, they shall have the right to commence an action, or if such action has been commenced, to maintain the same on all partnership contracts entered into prior as well as after the compliance with the statute. Cobble v. Farmers' Bank, 63 Ohio St. 528, 59 N. E. 221; Doob v. Lovell Mfg. Co. 3 Ohio N. P. 169; Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Hulvershorn, 31 Ohio C. C. 444.

Somewhat similar is the Oklahoma statute requiring, in case of partners doing business under a fictitious name, the filing of a certificate stating the names in full of all members of the partnership, and the publication of the same once a week for four successive weeks; prohibiting the maintenance of an action or account of any contract until such partners have first filed the certificate and made the publication; but providing that if at any time the parties shall comply with the statute, they shall have the right to maintain an action on partnership contracts entered into prior as well as after such compliance. Baker v. Van Ness, 25 Okla. 34, 105 Pac. 660; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Swearingen, 31 Okla. 785, 123 Pac. 1122; Smith v. Woods, 33 Okla. 233, 124 Pac. 1088. In the latter case it was held that the provisions of the statute were mandatory, must be complied with literally, and that partners doing business under a fictitious name could not begin an action on a contract until they had filed the certificate and made the publication, publication after the beginning of the action not being sufficient. See also Drake v. Great Northern R. Co. 24 S. D. 19, 123 N. W. 82.

The rule in Oklahoma was, however, modified in Bleecker v. Miller, 40 Okla. 374, 138 Pac. 809, to the extent that the filing and the publishing of the certificate before the trial, though after the beginning of the action, was held sufficient compliance with the statute. See also Malfa v. Crisp, 52 Wash. 509, 100 Pac. 1012.

The Oklahoma statute does not apply to any individual who is the sole person interested in the business, although he does business under a firm name (Oklahoma Fire Ins. Co. v. Waglster, 38 Okla. 291, 132 Pac. 1071; Robinovitz v. Hamill, — Okla. —, ante, 981, 144 Pac. 1024); and it does not affect the right of action on a note made prior to statehood (Blanchard v. Ezell, 25 Okla. 434, 106 Pac. 960).

And in Swope v. Burnham, 6 Okla. 736, 52 Pac. 924, it was held that the Oklahoma statute did not apply to a nonresident mercantile partnership engaged in business in another state, which transacted its business in the territory from such outside location, and was not alleged to have any place of business in the territory. That L.R.A.1915D.

statutes of this kind do not apply to non-resident partnerships, see also Bofenschen's Succession, 29 La. Ann. 711; Ross v. Wigg, 34 Hun, 192; Cahn v. Gottschalk, 14 Daly, 542, 2 N. Y. Supp. 13, and Ridgeway v. Collier, Rap. Jud. Quebec 21 C. S. 473.

Under the Montana statute relating to the transaction of business by an individual under a fictitious name or designation purporting to be a firm name, it is not the right to begin the action, but to maintain it, that is withheld by the statute for failure to comply with its terms; so that it is sufficient if the plaintiff complies with the statute before the defense of noncompliance is interposed. Reilly v. Hatheway, 46 Mont. 1, 125 Pac. 417.

The Pennsylvania statute requires the filing of the names and location of the members of a partnership, and provides that if this is not done they cannot, in a suit against them, plead any misnomer, or the omission of the name of any member of the partnership, or the inclusion of the names of persons not members. Tilli v. Vandegrift, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 485 (holding that the nonjoinder or misjoinder of members of the partnership was not available as a defense by a partner, unless he alleged compliance with the provisions of the statute); Daniel v. Lance, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 454; Scrantonian v. Brown, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 170 (holding that the statute did not apply to persons who were not members of a partnership, and did not preclude them from setting up as a defense that no partnership existed). R. E. H.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

ZEKE BRYANT, Plff. in Err.,
v.

T. H. FREEMAN et al.

(131 Tenn. 87, 173 S. W. 863.)

Curtesy — action to protect — joinder of wife.

A man cannot, because of his curtesy initiate, sue, without joining his wife in the action, to recover possession of her real estate, and to recover damages for timber cut therefrom, and rents and profits, where Note. — Rights of husband as tenant by the curtesy initiate.

- I. In general, 997.
- II. To occupy land and receive profits, 999.
- III. To sell estate.
 - a. In general, 999.
 - b. By voluntary transfer, 1000.
 - c. For husband's debts, 1000.
- IV. To maintain action for possession, 1001.
- V. Effect of "married women's acts."
 - a. In general, 1004.
 - b. To abolish the estate, 1004.
 - c. To limit husband's rights, 1007.
 - d. To abolish all estates by the curtesy, 1009.

she has conveyed the property without his joining in the conveyance.

(February 9, 1915.)

ERROR to the Chancery Court for Wilson County to review a judgment dismissing a bill filed to recover possession of certain real estate, and to recover damages for cutting timber therefrom, and rents and profits. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. N. Adams and Seth M. Walker, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff on his marriage became seised of a freehold estate, and on the birth of issue capable of inheriting, he became a tenant by the curtesy initiate, which gave him the right to enjoy possession of, and entitled him to the emblements of, his wife's estate.

Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. 640; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 513; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 517; 12 Cyc. 1003; Brasfield v. Brasfield, 96 Tenn. 580, 36 S. W. 384; Ables v. Ables, 86 Tenn. 333, 9 S. W. 692.

Messrs. W. R. Chambers and Horace Ozment, for defendants in error.

The bill was properly dismissed.

Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head, 674; Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 298.

Fancher, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in the nature of ejectment,

I. In general.

"Tenant by the curtesy of England is where a man marries a woman seised of an estate of inheritance, that is, of lands and tenements in fee simple or fee tail, and has by her issue born alive, which was capable of inheriting her estate. In this case, he shall, on the death of his wife, hold the lands for his life, as tenant by the curtesy of England." 2 Blk. Com. 126. "The husband, by the birth of the child, becomes . . . tenant by the curtesy initiate, and may do many acts to charge the lands, but his estate is not consummate till the death of the wife." Id. 128. This note does not include cases involving an estate by curtesy consummate. It does not include the questions arising out of the husband's rights or estate jure uxoris. (See distinction stated under II. infra.) It includes only cases turning upon or involving the husband's rights as the owner of an estate by the curtesy initiate.

Many cases are cited herein as authorities on the rules and principles governing common-law curtesy initiate that are no longer authorities in the particular jurisdiction where decided, for the reason that there have been many statutory changes. Under V. infra, the effect of "married women's acts" is discussed with a view to illustrate the indirect effect of these statutes upon estates by the curtesy initiate, but there are a great many statutes abolishing estates by the curtesy consummate which of necessity also abolish estates by the curtesy initiate, and no consideration can be here given to such statutes.

The question as to a husband's insurable interest in his wife's real property by virtue of his estate by the curtesy initiate is considered in notes to Tyree v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 66 L.R.A. 659, and Kludt v. German Mut. F. Ins. Co. 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1131; and that of adverse possession as a bar of curtesy is treated in the note to Calvert v. Murphy, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 535. Questions as to how an estate by the curtesy initiate may be terminated (for instance, the effect of a divorce) are not L.R.A. 1915D.

considered in the present note. And the fact of tenancy by the curtesy initiate is here assumed.

An excellent statement setting forth many of the characteristics of an estate by the curtesy initiate is contained in National Metropolitan Bank v. Hitz, 1 Mackey, 111 (this case was reversed on the ground that an act of Congress had changed the law in regard to selling the property of a married woman to pay the debts of her husband. See 111 U. S. 722, 28 L. ed. 577, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613. But that fact does not destroy the value of the statement). The court said: "By the uniform declaration of every authorized exponent of the law, from its earliest ages to the present time, it is uncontestedly settled that by the common law the husband, from the moment of his marriage, became entitled by virtue of his marital rights to an estate in the lands of inheritance of his wife during their joint lives; that immediately upon the birth of a living child capable of inheriting the lands, the husband became entitled to an estate in all the lands of which she might be seised at any time during the coverture for the term of his own life; that this estate of the husband during the life of the wife, which was known as tenancy by the curtesy initiate, upon the death of the wife was called tenancy by the curtesy consummate, and that the tenancy by the curtesy initiate was one of the forms of estates known as freeholds, not of inheritance, which was created by construction and operation of law. 1 Co. Litt. § 35, p. 29a; 2 Kent, Com. 140; 4 Kent, Com. 27; 1 Roper, Husband & Wife, 3, 5. It is further settled beyond controversy that the husband was seised of this freehold as of his own right; that although his title was not consummate until the death of the wife, he might, during her life, do many acts to charge the lands. 2 Bl. Com. 120; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 128. That as such he became the tenant of the lord and did homage alone; and if, after issue, he made a feoffment in fee and the wife died, the feoffee would hold during the life of the husband, and the heir of the wife could not, during the hus-filed in the chancery court by Zeke Bryant without making his wife a party, to recover a tract of land owned by Isa Bryant, his wife, and to also recover for timber cut from the land, and for rents and profits.

The defendants claim to hold under a deed executed by Isa Bryant on September 22, 1910, for which she paid $800. The husband did not join in the deed. The bill avers the marriage, seisin of the wife, and birth of issue alive, which entitled complainant to an estate as tenant by the curtesy initiate, and it is in this right that the husband seeks to recover. The chancellor dismissed the bill for want of equity on the face.

Ables v. Ables, 86 Tenn. 333, 9 S. W. 692, relied on by complainant, was a controversy between husband and wife. The wife had rented to one Harlow 20 acres of her land, and placed him in possession. The husband objected to this, and brought a suit of forcible entry and detainer against the tenant. The wife then brought a bill to enjoin the prosecution of her husband's suit, claiming absolute control under the act of 1879 (Acts 1879, chap. 141), providing that the rents and profits of her land shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, except by her consent in writing. It was held that this act did not interfere with the ancient rights of the husband as governor of the family, but merely protects the wife's rents from the husband's creditors, and extinguishes band's life, recover the land. 1 Co. Litt. 558. That he might sell and convey his estate or mortgage it to a creditor. Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 320, 81 Am. Dec. 597; Babb v. Perley, 1 Me. 9. And that this interest would pass to his assignee in insolvency, who could sell and convey to the purchasers a valid title for the life of the husband. Dejarnatte v. Allen, 5 Gratt. 499. These common-law principles were undoubtedly in force in the District of Columbia at the time of the death of Michael Shanks, as they were the law in Maryland on the 29th of February, 1801, and no intervening acts of Congress had changed or modified their operation within the District of Columbia. Anderson v. Tydings, 8 Md. 443, 63 Am. Dec. 708; Logan v. McGill, 8 Md. 470; Rice v. Hoffman, 35 Md. 350.

"2. The next inquiry is, Was this estate of John Hitz such an interest as might be seized and sold under execution at common law for the payment of his debts? The answer to this, upon all the authorities, must again be in the affirmative. Says Chancellor Kent: 'The husband has an interest in the freehold estates of his wife, which may be seized and sold on execution; and if the assignee or creditor of the husband, who takes possession of the estate on a sale on execution of his freehold interest, commits waste, the wife has an action against him in which the husband must join; for though such assignee succeed to the husband's rights to the rents and profits, he cannot commit waste with impunity.' See also Dejarnatte v. Allen, supra. The effect of a levy and sale of the husband's interest is the same as that of a conveyance by him, which would pass the freehold leaving the reversion in his wife. Babb v. Perley, 1 Me. 6; Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. 23; 2 Kent, Com. 131; see also the numerous cases cited in Herman on Executions, 134. This doctrine has been repeatedly asserted, totidem verbis, by the courts of Maryland. Anderson v. Tydings, 8 Md. 427, 63 Am. Dec. 708; Logan v. McGill, 8 Md. 470. The legislature of that state, to abate the hardship of the possible ejection of the wife under such a sale from her own inherited landed estate, passed the statute of 1841, chap. 161; and in reference to the state of the law as thereafter existing, the court says in Rice v. Hoffman, 35 Md. 344: 'This interest of the husband (his curtesy initiate) was liable to be taken in execution and sold at any time for his debts until the act of 1841, chap. 161, which provided "that no real estate hereafter acquired by marriage shall be liable to execution during the life of the wife for debts of the husband." The effect of this act was not to destroy the tenancy by the curtesy, but to suspend the right of execution on the part of the husband's creditors during the life of the wife.'

Under the common law a tenant by the curtesy initiate has a vested freehold estate in the land. 1 Co. Litt. 30a, 67a; Evans v. Lobdale, 6 Houst. (Del.) 212, 22 Am. St. Rep. 358 (abolished by statute); Shortall v. Hinckley, 31 Ill. 219; Jacobs v. Rice, 33 Ill. 369; Mettler v. Miller, 129 Ill. 640, 22 N. E. 529 (changed by statute); Junction R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Ind. 184, 68 Am. Dec. 618; Mitchell v. Violet, 104 Ky. 77, 47 S. W. 195 (changed by statute in 1894); Beale v. Knowles, 45 Me. 479; Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60 (abolished by statute); Day v. Cochran, 24 Miss. 261; Foster v. Marshall, 22 N. H. 491; Robie v. Chapman, 59 N. H. 41; Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige, 366, 31 Am. Dec. 257; Sleight v. Read, 18 Barb. 159; Williams v. Lanier, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30; Thompson v. Green, 4 Ohio St. 223; Canby v. Porter, 12 Ohio, 79; Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 516 (abolished by statute); Pemberton v. Hicks, 3 Dall. 479, 1 L. ed. 687; Lancaster County Bank v. Stauffer, 10 Pa. 398; Crow v. Kightlinger, 25 Pa. 343; Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 341; Clarke's Appeal, 79 Pa. 376; Teacle's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 553, affirmed in 132 Pa. 533, 19 Atl. 274; Gamble's Estate, 5 Clark (Pa.) 4 (a statute abolishes the necessity for birth of issue); Martin v. Pepall, 6 R. I. 92; Ross v. North Providence, 10 R. I. 461; Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 136; McCorry v. King, 3 Humph. 267, 39 Am. Dec. 165; Gillispie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. 632; Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326; Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 230, 44 his right to contract them away. The wife's bill was dismissed.

The case of Brasfield v. Brasfield, 96 Tenn. 580, 36 S. W. 384, cited by complainant, was a divorce suit, and it was held that the husband was entitled to the rents of the wife's lands upon dissolution of the marriage at the suit of the husband, under the statute (Milliken & V. Code, § 3329).

In Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. 642, the wife had executed a power of attorney to the husband to convey her lands, under which he had executed a deed. The husband afterward abandoned the wife, and she obtained a divorce, thereafter bringing suit for the land. It was held that she could not recover, but the purchaser was vested with an estate of freehold, determinable on the death of the husband; that the husband, by the marriage, acquires, and during the coverture enjoys, a freehold interest in his wife's real estate during their joint lives, both being seised in her right by entirety, the effect of which is to put the ownership for the coverture entirely in the husband's power; that he can, as a consequence, alienate his ownership at pleasure, and his conveyance will pass the freehold without the wife's co-operation.

The case of Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head, 674, is a case where the husband, Porter, and wife, had been deprived of the wife's land by a deed executed by a cotenant of the wife. The heirs of Mrs. Porter brought suit more than three years after her death. It was said: "During the existence of the Am. Dec. 335; Dejarnatte v. Allen, 5 Gratt. 499; Breeding v. Davis, 77 Va. 639, 46 Am. Rep. 740. And the other cases cited herein assume the correctness of this proposition.

II. To occupy land and receive profits.

At common law the tenant by the curtesy initiate has the right to possession and absolute control of the property, and the right to receive the rents, issues, and profits therefrom. Neil v. Johnson, 11 Ala. 615; Shortall v. Hinckley, 31 Ill. 219; Jacobs v. Rice, 33 Ill. 369; Bozarth v. Largent, 128 Ill. 95, 21 N. E. 218 (changed by statute); Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51 (changed by statute); Beale v. Knowles, 45 Me. 479; Melvin v. Locks & Canals, 16 Pick. 161; Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 246 Mo. 711, 152 S. W. 38 (changed by statute); Foster v. Marshall, 22 N. H. 491; Williams v. Lanier, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30; Sleight v. Read, 18 Barb. 159; Corley v. Corley, 8 Baxt. 7; Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326; Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280, 44 Am. Dec. 335; Dejarnette v. Allen, 5 Gratt. 499; Breeding v. Davis, 77 Va. 639, 46 Am. Rep. 740 (changed by statute). And in other cases cited throughout this note the courts assume this proposition.

It should be noted that the husband would have this right independently of his estate by the curtesy initiate, by virtue of his estate jure uxoris, which estate was not dependent upon the birth of a child. This note does not include questions concerning estates jure uxoris, but, merely for the purpose of distinction, the following statement is quoted from the opinion in Bozarth v. Largent, 128 Ill. 95, 21 N. E. 218: "At the common law, a husband held, in right of his wife, all her lands in possession, and owned the rents and profits thereof absolutely. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 276; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 90; Haralson v. Bridges, 14 Ill. 37; Clapp v. Stoughton, 10 Pick. 463; Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. 479. The birth of issue was not necessary to this right of the husband, which continued during the joint lives of the husband and wife. L.R.A.1915D.

It was called an estate during coverture, or the husband's freehold estate jure uxoris. Kibbie v. Williams, 58 Ill. 30; Butterfield v. Beall, 3 Ind. 203; Montgomery v. Tate, 12 Ind. 615; Croft v. Wilbar, 7 Allen, 248. It differed from curtesy initiate in its being a vested estate in possession, while the latter is a contingent future estate, dependent upon the birth of issue. Wright v. Wright, 2 Md. 429, 56 Am. Dec. 723. It is held in right of the wife, and was not added to or diminished when curtesy initiate arose. Subject to the husband's beneficial enjoyment during coverture, the ownership remained in the wife, and on dissolution of the marriage was discharged from such estate of the husband. Stewart, Husb. & W. § 146. Where there was marriage, seisin of the wife, and birth of issue capable of inheriting, the husband, by the common law, took an estate in the wife's land during coverture. This was an estate of tenancy by the curtesy initiate, and which would become consummate upon the death of the wife in the lifetime of the tenant. Upon the death of the wife, a tenant by the curtesy was seised of an estate of freehold, which was subject to alienation, and was liable to be taken on execution for his debts. Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 101; Howey v. Goings, 13 Ill. 95, 54 Am. Dec. 427; Jacobs v. Rice, 33 Ill. 369; Cole v. Van Riper, 44 Ill. 58; Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 206, 2 Am. Rep. 290; Lang v. Hitchcock, 99 Ill. 550."

III. To sell estate.

a. In general.

If one is the owner of a freehold vested estate in land with the right to possession and all the incidents arising out of the ownership, it logically follows that he may sell and transfer his estate, or that his creditors may levy upon and sell it in payment of his debts. The fact that he has only a life estate in the land cannot prevent this result. This rule applied to estates by the curtesy initiate often deprived the wife of the use of her property during the life of the husband, and the injustice.

coverture he is not tenant by the curtesy, and cannot be unless he survive his wife, and therefore has no particular interest or estate separate from the fee simple estate in his wife. If there be a disseisin during the coverture, it is a disseisin of the entire joint estate, and they must jointly bring suit to recover the possession. And if they fail to do so, their joint right of action will be barred by seven years' adverse possession, and the husband's interest barred and extinguished, so that, if he even survive his wife, he has no estate or interest, and, if she survive him, she has, by the proviso in the statute, only three years next after their coverture shall cease within which to sue."

It was said further: "The case is entirely different where there is no joint right of suit in husband and wife, as where the husband makes a conveyance of the lands of the wife, she not joining therein. There the husband, by his deed, has estopped himself from suing, and the wife cannot sue alone; nor can she or her heirs sue the husband's vendee until after the husband's death, and the case becomes one of particular estate and remainder, with the right of seven years in the wife or her heirs, to sue next after the husband's death." Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head, 676, 677.

In Guion v. Anders the question was whether Guion, the husband, was barred by the statute of limitations by a disseisin during the lifetime of the wife and after her marriage to Guion. He claimed an es-thus wrought upon her soon inspired legislation designed to remedy the evil. It is questionable whether this rule is enforceable with respect to estates by the curtesy initiate in any of the states at the present time, but no effort has been made to determine that fact, as only the common-law rule is here being considered. And the question as to whether or not a creditor of the husband can, notwithstanding statutes that enlarge the wife's powers and limit those of the husband, acquire, during the life of the wife, a judgment or interest that would be binding upon the husband's estate by the curtesy after the death of the wife, is not here considered, it being a question that affects only estates by the curtesy consummate.

b. By voluntary transfer.

The husband as the owner of an estate by the curtesy initiate could, under the common law, sell and transfer his estate without the consent of the wife. 3 Bacon, Abr. Curtesy of England (E), citing 1 Co. Litt. 30a, 326a, and 3 Dyer, 363b (26); Greneley's Case, 8 Coke, 72; Evans v. Lobdale, 6 Houst. (Del.) 212, 22 Am. St. Rep. 358; Shortall v. Hinckley, 31 Ill. 219; Jacobs v. Rice, 33 Ill. 369; Mettler v. Miller, 129 Ill. 640, 22 N. E. 529 (changed by statute); Butterfield v. Beall, 3 Ind. 203; Junction R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Ind. 184, 68 Am. Dec. 618; Vanarsdall v. Fauntleroy, 7 B. Mon. 401; Melius v. Snowman, 21 Me. 201; Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305, 81 Am. Dec. 597 (by mortgage); Bruce v. Wood, 1 Met. 542, 35 Am. Dec. 380 (an indirect holding); Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 246 Mo. 711, 152 S. W. 38 (changed by statute); Foster v. Marshall, 22 N. H. 491; Williams v. Lanier, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30; Fagan v. Walker, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 634; Pember-ton v. Hicks, 3 Dall. 479, 1 L. ed. 687; McCorry v. King, 3 Humph. 267, 39 Am. Dec. 165; Corley v. Corley, 8 Baxt. 7 (changed by statute); Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. 636.

This right of alienation was indirectly recognized by an early Kentucky statute L.R.A.1915D.

(1798) which "provided that the husband's alienation of the wife's estate during the coverture, shall not prejudice her right, but that on his death, she may lawfully enter thereon, according to her title." Miller v. Shackelford, 4 Dana, 264.

c. For husband's debts.

The common-law rule is that creditors of the husband can cause a levy to be made upon his estate by the curtesy initiate, and sell the same under execution or other appropriate writs. Neil v. Johnson, 11 Ala. 615; Plumb v. Sawyer, 21 Conn. 351, citing Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 541, and Watson v. Watson, 10 Conn. 77; Evans v. Lobdale, 6 Houst. (Del.) 212, 22 Am. St. Rep. 358 (but statutes have changed the rule; see same case, V. infra); National Metropolitan Bank v. Hitz, 1 Mackey, 111, reversed in 111 U. S. 723, 28 L. ed. 577, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613, on the ground that an act of Congress changed the law; Shortall v. Hinckley, 31 Ill. 219; Rose v. Sanderson, 38 Ill. 247; Cole v. Van Riper, 44 Ill. 58; Lang v. Hitchcock, 99 Ill. 550; Gay v. Gay, 123 Ill. 221, 13 N. E. 813; Bozarth v. Largent, 128 Ill. 95, 21 N. E. 218 (changed by statute); Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51 (changed by statute); Mitchell v. Violet, 104 Ky. 77, 47 S. W. 195; Beale v. Knowles, 45 Me. 479; Rice v. Hoffman, 35 Md. 344; Gardner v. Hooper, 3 Gray, 398; Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. 23; Mechanics Bank v. Williams, 17 Pick. 438; Staples v. Brown, 13 Allen, 64 (changed by statute as to sole and separate estates); Day v. Cochran, 24 Miss. 261; Stewart v. Ross, 50 Miss. 776; Cunningham v. Gray, 20 Mo. 170 (modified by statute); Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 246 Mo. 711, 152 S. W. 38 (changed by statute); Churchill v. Hudson, 34 Fed. 14 (changed by a Missouri statute); Foster v. Marshall, 22 N. H. 491; Robie v. Chapman, 59 N. H. 41; Nicholls v. O'Neill, 10 N. J. Eq. 88; Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 6 Paige, 366, 31 Am. Dec. 257; Wickes v. Clarke, 8 Paige, 161; Schermerhorn v. Miller, 2 Cow. 439; Sleight v. Read, 18 Barb. 159; Williams v. Lanier, tate by the curtesy, the wife having died, there being issue born of the marriage to Guion. The court said: "In the language of the books, the estate is initiate on issue born, and consummate on the death of the wife. It cannot by possibility exist during the life of the wife, and may be defeated by alienation or death of the husband in her lifetime. At the time of the disseisin in this case it was entirely contingent and uncertain whether the interest of John Guion would continue beyond the coverture. He was not then seised of a particular interest or estate separate from the fee simple estate in his wife. By marriage the husband gains an estate of freehold in the inheritance of his wife, in her right, which may continue during their joint lives, and may, by possibility, last during his own life. He is not, however, solely seised, but jointly with his wife. The technical phraseology of the common-law pleaders to express the interest of the husband in the estate of his wife is 'that husband and wife are jointly seised in right of the wife.' Wood v. Savage, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 329." Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 325.

In Corley v. Corley, 8 Baxt. 8, it was held that, if there be a disseisin during coverture, it is a disseisin of the entire joint estate, and husband and wife must jointly sue to recover possession; but where the wife was forced by the cruel conduct of the husband to leave home, equity would grant her a fair proportion of the rents and profits secured for herself and children.

44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30; Jones v. Coffey, 109 N. C. 515, 14 S. E. 84 (changed by statute); Canby v. Porter, 12 Ohio, 79; Burd v. Dansdale, 2 Binn. 80; Lancaster County Bank v. Stauffer, 10 Pa. 398; Curry v. Bott, 53 Pa. 400 (changed by statute); Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 341 (changed by statute); Clarke's Appeal, 79 Pa. 376 (changed by statute); Gamble's Estate, 5 Clark (Pa.) 4 (changed by statute); Teacle's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 553, affirmed in 132 Pa. 533, 19 Atl. 274 (changed by statute); Martin v. Pepall, 6 R. I. 92 (modified by statute); Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 136 (modified by statute); Greenwich Nat. Bank v. Hall, 11 R. I. 124 (changed by statute); Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. 632 (changed by statute); Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326; Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280, 44 Am. Dec. 335; Dejernatte v. Allen, 5 Gratt. 499; Breeding v. Davis, 77 Va. 639, 46 Am. Rep. 740 (changed by statute); Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353, 1 L.R.A. 125, 7 S. E. 335 (changed by statute); Welsh v. Solenberger, 85 Va. 441, 8 S. E. 91 (changed by statute); Wyatt v. Smith, 25 W. Va. 813; Guernsey v. Lazear, 51 W. Va. 328, 41 S. E. 405 (changed by statute).

And it will pass by the husband's general assignment for the benefit of creditors under the insolvent laws. Gardner v. Hooper, 3 Gray, 398.

And the purchaser of an estate by the curtesy initiate, at a judicial sale, can, during the life of the wife, maintain ejectment for possession, unless such right of action is taken away by statute. Plumb v. Sawyer, 21 Conn. 351; Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326; Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280, 44 Am. Dec. 335.

A trust deed by the husband for the use of the wife, of his estate by the curtesy in her estate, may be set aside at the instance of prior creditors of the husband, as being a conveyance in fraud of their rights. Gay v. Gay, 123 Ill. 221, 13 N. E. 813.

The Pennsylvania statute quoted under V. c. infra, prohibits the sale of the husband's estate by the curtesy initiate on any writ for his debts, and that feature of the L.R.A.1915D.

act is strengthened by the act of 1863; but the creditor of the husband may by alleging title in the husband sell all his interest in the land in order to contest title with the wife on ejectment. If on the ejectment it appears that the husband's only interest is that of a tenant by the curtesy initiate, the purchaser of the husband's interest will hold nothing. So the husband cannot plead title in the wife in answer to a scire facias sur mechanics' lien against him, the allegation being that the property belonged to the husband.

IV. To maintain action for possession.

It seems to have been the common-law rule that, since the husband's estate by the curtesy initiate is a vested estate, he has the right to maintain an action in his own name for possession, for injuries to his estate, or infringements upon his rights as to the estate, but for injuries to the wife's reversion the action must be brought in her name and he be joined because of her incapacity.

In Williams v. Lanier, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30, the court adopted the rule as here stated and reviewed many earlier authorities. It said: "By way of further illustration, if husband dies, the growing crops belong to his personal representative as emblements. This supposes him to have a separate estate in his own right; for, if he held the estate as a whole, with the wife in her right, at his death she takes the land, and, of course, all that is a part of it. A trespasser takes away the growing crop—the husband is the party injured; for it is his crop, and the action of trespass q. c. f. should be in his own name. Several old authorities were cited to show that he may join the wife. Baker v. Brereman, Cro. Car. 419, W. Jones, 367; Harbin v. Green, Hobart, 189. In Frostick v. Sterling, 2 Mod. 269, it is said these cases warrant no more than that the wife may be joined, not that of necessity she must. But admit the wife may be joined, it proves nothing, because, to exclude the idea of a separate estate, it is necessary to show that the wife

Prior to the act of 1849-50, (Laws 1849-50, chap. 36; Shannon's Code, § 4234) it was held that the deed of the husband operated to convey his own estate in his wife's land; that his deed operated as a severance of their joint estate, and vested the purchaser with the husband's estate in the lands, and this purchaser was therefore in rightful possession during the continuance of the husband's estate. The result was to deprive the wife of her right during the life of the husband.

This act of 1849-50 secured to the wife her estate against any act or liability of the husband, and it was held after that time she could sue by next friend and recover her lands, independent of the husband, where he had attempted to convey or as against any sale by his creditors, and her lands could only be conveyed by joint deed of husband and wife in the manner prescribed by law in which married women shall convey their lands. Shannon's Code, § 4234; McCallum v. Petigrew, 10 Heisk. 394.

The husband, as governor of the family, and by virtue of the marriage, is entitled to the control of his wife's estate in land, and can sue for and collect the rents when must be joined, for if the husband may sue alone, it is on the ground that he has a separate estate in his own right. The cases in Comyn's Digest, under title, 'Baron & Feme,' when husband must sue alone, when he may join the wife, when he must join the wife, which are also cited in Bacon, Abr. 'Baron & Feme,' page 500, evidently conflict, and it is impossible to deduce any principle from them. In Bidgood v. Way, 2 W. Bl. 1236, they are called a 'farrago of cases.' This is, no doubt, because of the fact that at the time most of them were decided, the principle that a reversioner or remainderman might bring 'case in the nature of waste' against a stranger for an injury to the inheritance was not established; consequently, where an injury was done directly to the husband by destroying his crop, and also to the inheritance by cutting timber trees, inasmuch as no action of waste could be brought, he was ex necessitate allowed, by joining the wife, to recover in trespass quare clausum fregit, not only for the immediate injury to him, but also for the injury to the inheritance, in the same way as any particular tenant might recover, not only for the immediate injury, but also for the injury to the inheritance, by way of reimbursement for his liability over. So that, if the husband sued alone, he recovered damages for the immediate injury. If he joined his wife, besides these damages, he also recovered damages for the injury to the inheritance. But after the principle was established that the reversioner might sue a wrongdoer in case 'in the nature of waste,' the necessity no longer existed, and the practice of allowing the wife to be joined (which had originated in that necessity) no longer obtained, and the cases in which it had been allowed were considered of doubtful authority. It was said there was no more reason for allowing the husband, by joining his wife, to recover in trespass for an injury to his crops, and also for an injury to her inheritance, than there was for allowing a tenant for life to join the reversioner, and so recover for an injury to both in one action; because the husband might sue alone in trespass for the injury to his crop, and join his wife in case for the injury to her inheritance. Suppose a stranger injures the L.R.A.1915D.

crop and also the inheritance; the husband brings trespass in the name of himself and wife for both injuries; the husband dies; the action as to the crop must abate, for it belongs to his representatives; or the wife dies, then the action as to the injury to the inheritance must abate, for that belongs to the wife's representatives. And if in the one case the husband is allowed to proceed for his part of the injury, and in the other the wife may proceed for her part, it would be an unheard of mode of splitting up an action, and a novel species of abatement as to a part. Or, suppose the husband dies before suit, then it is clear that his representative and the wife cannot join. The former can bring trespass for the injury to his intestate's crop; what action can the wife bring for the injury to her inheritance? Certainly, it must be case 'in the nature of waste.' Upon what principle, then, other than that of necessity (which does not now exist), can the husband be allowed, in his lifetime, to join in one action that which, after his death, constitutes two distinct causes of action, belonging to two different persons? The counsel then assumed the position that in ejectment for the wife's land, she must be joined as one of the lessors; and the effect of it was to prevent the right of entry from being tolled under the saving in the statute in favor of femes covert. For this he cited Caldwell v. Black, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 463, and then very ingeniously deduced the conclusion that the husband had no estate in his own right. The case cited is an authority for the position that when the eviction is before the marriage, the wife must be joined, and her right of entry is saved. The reason is, her estate being divested at the time of the marriage, she had but a mere right, and the husband, not being seised during coverture, could take no estate in his own right. Gentry v. Wagstaff, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 270. Consequently she must be one of the lessors. The action is to assert her right, and the husband is joined merely because of her incapacity. In such a case the conclusion is a legitimate one, that the husband has no separate estate. But in our case the husband was seised during coverture; there was issue born alive, and the eviction took place afterwards; and the

there has been no disseisin of their joint estate. It is by virtue of the joint seisin of husband and wife that the husband controls. That joint seisin exists even though there be a controversy between husband and wife as to this control, when no one is holding the land adverse to her title. But, without some showing or equity which would take the case out of the common-law rule, the husband cannot sue in ejectment alone, in his own name, to recover his wife's land.

In the present case no effort is made to protect the wife as against her act by showing that she was imposed upon, and no excuse is given why she is not a party jointly complainant with her husband. The complainant sues in his own right independent of the wife. Under these circumstances he cannot recover. We do not mean to hold that the husband is powerless to protect his wife's property or his own rights in the property, nor to recover rents, under any and all circumstances where the wife has attempted to convey her land, but this court does hold that no recovery can be had in the manner here attempted.

The decree of the Chancellor must be affirmed.

question is, in this case, Must the wife be joined? It is true she may be joined, and it is usual to join her; but the conclusion that the husband has no separate estate is not supported, unless she must be joined. The husband can, without joining the wife, make a lease for years, which is valid until his death. This is clear. Bacon, Abr. 'Leases and Terms for Years.' Consequently, he may bring ejectment without joining the wife. In Bacon, Abr. 'Ejectment,' it is considered as settled that, although the husband may join the wife, as her contracts relating to her estate are but voidable during the coverture, yet it is not necessary that the husband and wife should join in a lease to try the title to her estate. He alone might make a lease for that purpose; and several cases are cited in which the husband has maintained ejectment on his own demise."

A tenant by the curtesy initiate can under the common law maintain an action to recover possession of the estate without the wife's joining as a plaintiff. Shortall v. Hincley, 31 Ill. 219 (statement arguendo); Jacobs v. Rice, 23 Ill. 369; Porter v. Bowers, 55 Md. 213; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418; Meriwether v. Howe, 48 Mo. App. 148; Williams v. Lanier, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 30; Doe ex dem. Childers v. Bumgarner, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 297; Wilson v. Arentz, 70 N. C. 670; Thompson v. Green, 4 Ohio St. 223; Crow v. Kightlinger, 25 Pa. 343.

The decision in BRYANT v. FREEMAN appears to be based upon a doctrine peculiar to the courts of Tennessee. Those courts appear to have confused or intermingled the attributes of an estate jure uxoris with those of the estate by the curtesy initiate, and out of the combination evolved the doctrine that the husband and wife should be jointly seised of the whole estate; hence, they must sue jointly for possession if disseised, neither being entitled to sue alone. If the husband alone conveys his estate, the wife cannot maintain an action during his life, for the reason, according to these courts, that the joint seisin has been severed. This point is best illustrated by the Tennessee decisions in respects to adverse possession to bar the wife and her heirs. It is held that if the defendant is in possession under a valid title by the husband alone, limitation does not run against the wife and her heirs until the estate conveyed by the husband is terminated, there being no right of joint action, and therefore no right of separate action, for possession until that time. McCorry v. King, 3 Humph. 267, 39 Am. Dec. 165; Stokely v. Slayden, 8 Baxt. 307. But if, for any reason, a joint action was not barred, limitation runs against the wife and her heirs (saving a statutory right for a short period after the husband's death) from the time of the disseisin. Thus, in Stokely v. Slayden, supra, the defendant was in possession under a title bond from the husband alone, and it was held that a joint action could have been maintained, hence limitation ran against the wife and her heirs. Other cases in which it was held that limitation runs against the wife and her heirs because there was a right of joint action are Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 298; Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head, 674. (The question of adverse possession as a bar of curtesy is treated in the note to Calvert v. Murphy, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 535, and as a distinct question is not considered in this note.) Other courts outside of Tennessee base their holdings in similar cases upon the disability of coverture, and upon the fact that the wife, like a remainderman, is not entitled to possession until the termination of the prior estate, neither of which reasons apply when the wife has transferred and the husband brings suit for possession. But the court in BRYANT v. FREEMAN applies its joint seisin theory against the husband's right to sue alone for possession. The court vaguely intimates that if he had avowed that he was suing to recover the joint seisin in order to share it with his wife as a protection to her, the decision might be the opposite. This is consistent with the theory upon which the Tennessee courts refuse to permit the wife to maintain an action for possession after the husband has conveyed his interest, but it is not consistent with the reason for the decisions of other courts, and it is inconsistent with the common-law theory of estates by the curtesy initiate. No doubt, in most jurisdictions the same conclusion as to the husband's right to sue would be reached, but it would be for the reason that statutes have in effect either abolished estates by the curtesy initiate, or decidedly limited the husband's powers and rights with respect to it. See V. infra. It may be that the court in BRYANT v. FREEMAN was influenced more by the statute to which it referred than it was by the theory of the cases it cited in support of its decision. The effect of that act to abolish or qualify the estate by the curtesy initiate is discussed, infra, V.

It logically follows, and it has been held, that a statute that has the effect of abolishing the estate of curtesy initiate, leaving only the estate of curtesy consummate, abolishes the husband's rights to sue in his own name for possession of the wife's real estate or for injuries thereto. (See V. b, infra.) Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 206, 2 Am. Rep. 290; Melvin v. Locks & Canala, 16 Pick. 161. And it will be observed that most of the statutes limiting the husband's right or enlarging the wife's powers expressly provide against sale of the property for the husband's debts. (See infra, V. c.) And as before noted many states have expressly abolished all estates by the curtesy.

V. Effect of "married women's acts."

a. In general.

Statutes commonly called "married women's acts" have been enacted in most, if not all, of the states. These statutes, of course, differ, but they all attempt to enlarge the rights of married women in respect to their real estate. Practically all of them prohibit the sale by the husband of his estate by the curtesy initiate without the consent of his wife, and protect the wife's property from levy and sale to pay the debts of the husband. Decisions are not uniform as to the effect of those statutes upon the husband's estate by the curtesy initiate. Probably a majority of the courts hold that all the attributes of an estate by the curtesy initiate have been destroyed by the statutes, so the estate itself no longer exists, but that the estate by the curtesy consummate is not destroyed, since the statutes do not destroy the attributes of the latter estate, and do not expressly destroy or abolish the estate. (This question, whether or not the estate by the curtesy consummate has been destroyed, is not covered by this note, except as it is involved in the question of abolishing curtesy initiate by the various married women's acts.) One or two states have held that these statutes or constitutional provisions have the effect of abolishing all estates by the curtesy. (See V. d, infra.) In quite a large number of jurisdictions it is held that the estate by the curtesy initiate still exists, restricted and limited according to the terms of the statutes.

The statutes here discussed have practically all been held to be prospective, and not retrospective. So, if a particular estate by the curtesy initiate had vested at the time of an enactment, it is held that that estate is not divested by the statute even though future estates by the curtesy initiate are abolished. The statutes have been given this interpretation on the theory that the legislature has no power, and therefore never intended, to divest vested estates. This feature of the statutes has been considered in Mitchell v. Violet, 104 Ky. 77, 47 S. W. 195; Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51; Beale v. Knowles, 45 Me. 479; Clay v. Mayr, 144 Mo. 376, 46 S. W. 157; Myers v. Hansbrough, 202 Mo. 495, 100 S. W. 1137; Sleight v. Read, 18 Barb. 159; Richardson v. Richardson, 150 N. C. 549, 134 Am. St. Rep. 948, 64 S. E. 510; Jenney v. Gray, 5 Ohio St. 45; Denny v. McCabe, 35 Ohio St. 576; Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 516; Peck v. Ward, 18 Pa. 509; Lefever v. Witmer, 10 Pa. 505; Burson's Appeal, 22 Pa. 164; Wyatt v. Smith, 25 Va. 813.

b. To abolish the estate.

It has been held that estates by the curtesy initiate have been abolished, leaving only the contingent right of the husband to become tenant by the curtesy consummate in case he survives his wife, by statutes which provide——"that the real and personal property of any married woman which has been heretofore acquired, is now held, or which she may hereafter acquire in any manner whatsoever, from any person other than her husband, shall be her sole and separate property, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor liable for his debts" (another section gives to the wife the right to dispose of her property, both real and personal, by will; "but such disposal shall not affect the rights of the husband as tenant by the curtesy; and if she die intestate, her property, both real and personal, shall descend to her heirs as now provided by law"), Evans v. Lobdale, 6 Houst. (Del.) 215, 22 Am. St. Rep. 358;

—"that "in the District the right of any married woman to any property, personal or real, belonging to her at the time of marriage or acquired during marriage in any other way than by gift or conveyance from her husband, shall be as absolute as if she were unmarried, and shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor be liable for his debts," Hitz v. National Metropolitan Bank, 111 U. S. 722-723, 28 L. ed. 577-580, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; Mattoon v. McGrew, 112 U. S. 713, 28 L. ed. 824, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; —"that all the property, both real and personal, belonging to any married woman as her sole and separate property, or which any woman hereafter married owns at the time of her marriage, or which any married woman, during coverture, acquires in good faith from any person other than her husband, by descent, devise, or otherwise, together with all the rents, issues, increase, and profits thereof, shall, notwithstanding her marriage, be and remain, during cover-ture, her sole and separate property, under her sole control, and be held, owned, possessed, and enjoyed by her the same as though she was sole and unmarried, and shall not be subject to the disposal, control, or interference of her husband, and shall be exempt from execution or attachment for the debts of her husband," Bozarth v. Largent, 128 Ill. 95, 21 N. E. 218; Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51 (see same case infra, as to a later statute); Cole v. Van Riper, 44 Ill. 58; Beach v. Miller, 51 Ill. 206, 2 Am. Rep. 290;

—that "a married woman, in respect to all property held by her to her sole and separate use, . . . shall have the same rights and powers as if she were unmarried" and that "the husband 'shall be entitled to his estate by the curtesy in all lands and tenements held by his wife, as if this act had not been passed'" (observe that this is limited to real estate held by her "to her sole and separate use"), Comer v. Chamberlain, 6 Allen, 166; Staples v. Brown, 13 Allen, 64;

—"that any real estate acquired by a female before marriage, or to which she may at any time after be entitled by inheritance, gift, grant, or devise, should be and continue her estate, and should not be liable for the debts or engagements of her husband." Hathorn v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 93; Hill v. Chambers, 30 Mich. 422; Brown v. Clark, 44 Mich. 309, 6 N. W. 679. But see Michigan cases cited under V. d, infra, as to effect of other statutes; —"that "it shall be lawful for any married female to receive, by gift, grant, devise, or bequest, and hold to her sole and separate use, as if she were a single female, real and personal property, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and the same shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor be liable to his debts," Ross v. Adams, 28 N. J. L. 160, reversed in 30 N. J. L. 505, 82 Am. Dec. 237, on the ground that the wife's estate was only a life estate, hence, independently of the estate, no estate by the curtesy, either initiate or consummate, could vest in the husband, Porch v. Fries, 18 N. J. Eq. 204;

—"that "any married female may take by inheritance, or by gift, grant, devise, or bequest from any person other than her husband, and hold to her sole and separate use, and convey and devise, real and personal property, and any interest or estate therein, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, in the same manner and with the like effect as if she were unmarried. And the same shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor be liable for his debts," Hurd v. Cass, 9 Barb. 366; Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, 149 N. Y. 71, 43 N. E. 427; Collins v. Russell, 96 App. Div. 136, 89 N. Y. Supp. 414, affirmed without reference to this point in 184 N. Y. 74, 112 Am. St. Rep. 569, 76 N. E. 731, 6 Ann. Cas. 92; Hope v. Seaman, 119 N. Y. Supp. 713, affirmed in 137 App. Div. 86, 122 N. Y. Supp. 127, affirmed without opinion L.R.A.1915D.

ion in 204 N. Y. 563, 97 N. E. 1106; Re Starbuck, 137 App. Div. 866, 122 N. Y. Supp. 584, affirmed without opinion in 201 N. Y. 531, 94 N. E. 1098; Clark v. Clark, 24 Barb. 581. There is considerable lack of harmony among the earlier New York decisions as to the effect of this statute upon the estate by the curtesy initiate, but the view here stated seems to have become the prevailing one. In Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, 149 N. Y. 71, 43 N. E. 427, the court said: "Since the acts allowing married women to sell and devise their lands, a husband's right as tenant by the curtesy initiate, as to lands acquired since the passage of those acts, consists simply of a status, which is never a vested right, and is not separately alienable during coverture, but may be modified or annulled at any time before it becomes consummate by the death of the wife." However, in Re Starbuck, 137 App. Div. 866, 122 N. Y. Supp. 584, affirmed without opinion in 201 N. Y. 531, 94 N. E. 1098, the court, in holding that an estate by the curtesy consummate is not inherited from the wife by the surviving husband, so as to be taxable as an inherited estate, took the view that the statute simply postpones the vesting of the estate until the death of the wife, and makes it contingent upon her failure to convey it, etc. But apparently it did not regard this view inconsistent with the view taken by the court in Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, as it said: "It is contended that curtesy initiate cannot exist, and that the husband has a mere status or possibility. Such was the decision in Collins v. Russell, 96 App. Div. 137, 89 N. Y. Supp. 414, affirmed without reference to this point in 184 N. Y. 74, 112 Am. St. Rep. 569, 76 N. E. 731, 6 Ann. Cas. 92, where, however, the court said that the common law 'still governs tenancy by the curtesy,' and Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, 149 N. Y. 85, 43 N. E. 427. What then? Does it follow that when the husband does have such an estate in right and enjoyment it is because he inherited it from her as if he were heir? That seems a non sequitur." This was probably the view taken by the court of appeals when it affirmed the decision. In Re Winne, 1 Lans. 508, it was held that the statute abolished estates by the curtesy consummate as well as estates by the curtesy initiate, but all of the decisions cited, supra, are contrary to this view, and in the Starbuck case the court said: "The authoritative decisions are that the acts of 1848 and 1849 [the quotation, supra, is the act of 1848 as amended by that of 1849] have not interfered with nor affected the husband's estate in his wife's real property, if not disposed of by her either during life or by will. Hatfield v. Sneden, 54 N. Y. 280; Burke v. Valentine, 52 Barb. 412, affirmed in (Ct. App.) 6 Alb. L. J. 167; Ransom v. Nichols, 22 N. Y. 110; Barnes v. Underwood, 47 N. Y. 351; Leach v. Leach, 21 Hun, 381."

—"that "any estate or interest, legal or equitable, in real property belonging to any woman at her marriage, or which may have come to her during coverture, by conveyance, gift, devise, or inheritance, or by purchase with her separate money or means, shall, together with all rents and issues thereof, be and remain her separate property and under her sole control; and she may in her own name during coverture lease the same for any period not exceeding three years. This act shall not affect the estate by the curtesy of any husband in the real property of his wife after her decease; but during the life of such wife or any heir of her body, such estate shall not be taken by any process of law for the payment of his debts, or be conveyed or encumbered by him unless she shall join therein with him in the manner prescribed by law in regard to her own estate." Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 529. This statute was construed in connection with a long series of acts which had been construed to abolish estates by the curtesy initiate, but had preserved to the husband his estate jure uxoris and his estate by the curtesy consummate, even though there had been no issue. In this particular case the husband's estate jure uxoris had vested under the prior acts, so it was held that the statute quoted did not divest him of that estate so as to make the rents and profits from the land belonging to the wife during her life subject to her debts, but as no estate by the curtesy initiate could vest in him under the prior statutes, the legislature could and did, by the act quoted, make her debts a lien upon her real property without regard to his prospective right to an estate by the curtesy consummate. It could do this only because estates by the curtesy initiate had been abolished prior to his wife's seisin, and his estate by the curtesy consummate had not vested. But the act quoted also abolishes estates jure uxoris not vested at the date of its passage.

—that "the property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of marriage, or afterward acquired by gift, devise, or inheritance, shall not be subject to the debts and contracts of the husband" (Constitution); that "the property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage, or afterwards acquired, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, and she may manage, sell, convey, or devise the same by will to the same extent and in the same manner that her husband can property belonging to him." Runyan v. Winstock, 55 Or. 202, 104 Pac. 417, rehearing denied in 55 Or. 209, 105 Pac. 895. The question before the court in this case was whether or not estates by the curtesy consummate had been abolished by these provisions, and it answered the question in the negative. There is no direct holding that estates by the curtesy initiate have been abolished by these provisions, but the court cites some cases to the proposition that the husband has no life estate in his wife's property during her life. The court also refers to an L.R.A.1915D.

other statute enacted in 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 152, chap. 87) that it says amends the Code so that "a new and different interest is given the husband in the realty of his wife in lieu of curtesy."

—"that the real and personal property of any female who may hereafter marry, and which she shall own at the time of her marriage, and the rent, issues, and profits thereof, and any property, real or personal, acquired by a married woman as a separate and sole trader, shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor be liable for his debts, and shall be and continue her separate and sole property; and any such married woman shall have power to contract in relation thereto, or for the disposal thereof, and may sue and be sued, as if she were a feme sole: Provided, that her husband shall join in any contract in reference to her real or personal property other than such as she may acquire as a sole trader, and shall be joined with her in any action by or against her; and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall deprive her of the power to create, without the concurrence of her husband, a charge upon such sole and separate estate as she would be empowered to charge without the concurrence of her husband if this act had not been passed.

"2. All real and personal estate hereafter acquired by any married woman, whether by gift, grant, purchase, inheritance, devise, or bequest, shall be and continue her sole and separate estate, subject to the provisions and limitations of the preceding section, although the marriage may have been solemnized previous to the passage of this act; and she may devise and bequeath the same as if she were unmarried, and it shall not be liable to the debts or liabilities of her husband: Provided, that nothing contained in this act shall be construed to deprive the husband of curtesy in the wife's real estate, to which he may be entitled by the laws now in force, and provided further, that the sole and separate estate created by any gift, grant, devise, or bequest shall be held according to the terms and powers, and be subject to the provisions and limitations thereof, and to the provisions and limitations of this act so far as they are in conflict therewith.

"3. Any married woman may, in her own name, or by her next friend, file a bill in equity in any court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, in the event of her husband's refusing, or being incompetent to unite in the conveyance or disposal of her separate estate; and if the court shall be of the opinion that the interest of the married woman will be promoted by a sale thereof, it may make such decree as may be necessary to convey absolute title thereto." Breeding v. Davis, 77 Va. 644, 46 Am. Rep. 740; Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353, 1 L.R.A. 125, 7 S. E. 335; Campbell v. McBee, 92 Va. 68, 22 S. E. 807.

—that the wife's separate property and its rents, issues, and increase shall be her sole and separate property in all respects as if she were a single woman, "and the same shall in no way be subject to the control of her husband nor liable to his debts," Guernsey v. Lazear, 51 W. Va. 328, 41 S. E. 405; McNeeley v. South Penn Oil Co. 52 W. Va. 616, 62 L.R.A. 562, 44 S. E. 508; Hudkins v. Crim, 64 W. Va. 225, 61 S. E. 166; Calvert v. Murphy, 73 W. Va. 731, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 534, 81 S. E. 403.

In Arkansas the Constitution of 1874 abolished estates by curtesy initiate, and left only the possibility of the estate by curtesy consummate. Lloyd v. Planters' Mut. Ins. Asso. 80 Ark. 486, 97 S. W. 658, citing Neely v. Lancaster, 47 Ark. 175, 58 Am. St. Rep. 752, 1 S. W. 66, and Hampton v. Cook, 64 Ark. 353, 62 Am. St. Rep. 194, 42 S. W. 535.

c. To limit husband's rights.

That the estate by the curtesy initiate has not been abolished, but that the rights and powers of the wife in respect to her real estate have been enlarged, and those of the husband correspondingly limited or qualified, has been held where the statute provides——that no real estate whereof any married woman was or may be seised or otherwise entitled to at the time of her marriage, or which she has or may fairly acquire during her coverture, or any interest therein, shall be liable for the debts of her husband, but the same, and all interest therein, and all rents and profits arising therefrom, shall be deemed and taken to be her separate property, free and clear from any and all claims of the creditors or legal representatives of her husband, as fully as if she had never been married: Provided, that this law shall not be so construed as to apply to debts contracted by such married woman before such marriage, but in all such cases her said property shall be first liable therefor," Junction R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Ind. 185, 68 Am. Dec. 618.

—that "the husband's contingent right of curtesy shall not be sold for, or otherwise subjected to, the payment of any separate debt or responsibility of his during her life," Campbell v. Campbell, 79 Ky. 398.

—that "where there was issue of the marriage born alive, the husband shall have an estate for his own life in all the real estate owned and possessed by the wife at the time of her death, or of which another may be then seised to her use. Such estates shall, however, be subject to the debts of the wife, whether contracted before or after her marriage," Mitchell v. Violet, 104 Ky. 79, 47 S. W. 195. This case reveals the fact that the estate by curtesy consummate, as well as that initiate, was abolished in 1894 by a statute similar to the Illinois statute quoted under V. d, infra.

—"that no real estate hereafter acquired by marriage shall be liable to execution, during the life of the wife, for debts due from her husband," Anderson v. Tydings, 8 Md. 427, 63 Am. Dec. 708; Logan v. McL.R.A. 1915D.

Gill, 8 Md. 461; Rice v. Hoffman, 35 Md. 344; Porter v. Bowers, 55 Md. 213.

—"that the property, real and personal, belonging to a woman at the time of her marriage, and all property which she may acquire or receive by purchase, gift, grant, devise, bequest, or in a course of distribution, shall be protected from the debts of the husband, and not in any way liable for the payment thereof," etc. Rice v. Hoffman, 35 Md. 350.

—that no real estate belonging to a married woman "shall be subject to be sold or leased by the husband, for the term of his own life, or any less term of years, except by and with the consent of the wife, first had and obtained, to be ascertained and effectuated by deed and privy examination, according to the rules required by law for the sale of lands belonging to femes covert. And no interest of the husband whatever in such real estate shall be subject to sale to satisfy any execution obtained against him, and every such sale is hereby declared null and void," Wilson v. Arentz, 70 N. C. 670, citing Houston v. Brown, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 161; Jones v. Carter, 73 N. C. 148; McGlennery v. Miller, 90 N. C. 215. In Richardson v. Richardson, 150 N. C. 549, 134 Am. St. Rep. 948, 64 S. E. 510, the court reviews the earlier decisions with reference to the statute here quoted, together with a constitutional provision. It said: "We are therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff acquired no right to the cotton as rent for the land of his wife by virtue of any estate in him as tenant by the curtesy initiate, because of the constitutional provision (art. 10, § 6) by which it is declared that a married woman's real and personal property shall be and remain her sole and separate estate, and that she may devise and bequeath the same, thus depriving her husband of any interest therein. Walker v. Long, 109 N. C. 510, 14 S. E. 299; Tiddy v. Graves, 126 N. C. 620, 36 S. E. 127. As that article of the Constitution was a valid enactment, under the facts and circumstances of this case, the plaintiff has no interest, either as tenant by the curtesy initiate or consummate, in rent which was reserved in the lease, his wife having bequeathed the same to other persons. Tiddy v. Graves, supra. It is true that at common law the husband, upon the marriage, was seised in right of his wife of a freehold interest in her lands during their joint lives, and that, either as tenant by marital right or as tenant by the curtesy initiate, he was entitled to the rents and profits, and might lease or convey his estate, and it might be sold under execution against him. But radical changes in this respect were effected by the act of 1848 (Revisal, § 2097). Construing this act, in Jones v. Coffey, 109 N. C. 515, 14 S. E. 84, the court said: 'Whatever may be the rights of the husband in the wife's land after she may die intestate, the authorities concur in the view that the husband holds no estate during the life of the wife as tenant by the curtesy initiate which is subject to execution, and which he can assert against the wife. He has the right of ingress and egress and marital occupancy, but can assume no dominion over her land, except as her properly constituted agent.' In Walker v. Long, supra, we find the following reference to the act: 'By virtue of the act of 1848, and the further modification made by the Constitution of 1868, the tenancy by the curtesy initiate is stripped of its common-law attributes until there only remain the husband's bare right of occupancy with his wife, with the right of ingress and egress (Manning v. Manning, 79 N. C. 293, 28 Am. Rep. 324), and the right to the curtesy consummate contingent upon his surviving her. . . . The husband is still seised in law of the realty of his wife, shorn of the right to take the rents and of the power to lease her lands. . . . He has by the curtesy initiate a freehold interest, but not an estate in the property.' It would seem that the more recent decision in Taylor v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 134, 16 S. E. 1019, is a direct authority against the claim asserted by the plaintiff. In that case the court, speaking by Shepherd, Ch. J., says: 'In all of these cases the actual decision (as distinguished from several expressions founded upon the common law) may, it is thought, be reconciled with the recent ruling of this court in Jones v. Coffey, supra, that under the act the husband has no right which he can assert against the wife in her real property. This appears to be in accord with the early declaration of the court that "the sole object of the act was to provide for her a home of which she could not be deprived, either by the husband or by his creditors." Conceding that the cases may not be altogether harmonious, we must adopt the later decisions, and according to these the plaintiff is entitled to recover; for, admitting that a divorce a mensa et thoro cannot, as it is claimed, affect the property rights of the parties (Taylor v. Taylor, 93 N. C. 418, 53 Am. Rep. 400), the defendant, as against the wife, had no property rights whatever, but simply a right of ingress and egress for the purpose of enjoying her society, and these he has forfeited during the coverture, or until a reconciliation, by his own misconduct. Taking the other view, however, and admitting that the husband had a right to the rents and possession of the land during coverture, we think that such rights must yield when they come in conflict with the paramount rights of the wife, as indicated by the act of 1848.' It appears in this case that there was a written lease signed by the plaintiff and his wife, but there was no privy examination of the latter, as required by the act of 1848 (Revisal, § 2097), and also by the Revisal, § 2096. The lease was therefore void as to the wife, and passes no interest to the husband in the rents and profits of the land, if otherwise he would have acquired an interest."

—that, "any married woman may dispose by her last will and testament of her separate property, real, personal or mixed, L.R.A.1915D.

whether the same accrues to her before or during her coverture. Provided, that said last will and testament be executed in the presence of two or more witnesses, neither of whom shall be her husband" (1848), and that "the true intent and meaning of the act of assembly to secure the rights of married women, passed the 11th day of April, 1848, is, and hereafter shall be, that the real estate of any married woman in this commonwealth shall not be subject to execution for any debt against her husband, or on account of any interest he may have, or may have had, therein as tenant by the curtesy, but the same shall be exempt from levy and sale for such debt during the life of said wife" (1850). It may be noted that prior to the enactment of these statutes the legislature of Pennsylvania had abolished the necessity for birth of issue as a prerequisite to the vesting of an estate by the curtesy. Clarke's Appeal, 79 Pa. 376; Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 341; Curry v. Bott, 53 Pa. 400; Woodward v. Wilson, 68 Pa. 208; Williams v. Baker, 71 Pa. 476; Gamble's Estate, 5 Clark (Pa.) 4; Teacle's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 553, affirmed in 132 Pa. 533, 19 Atl. 274. In Sharpless v. West Chester, 1 Grant, Cas. 257, there is an incidental holding contrary to the interpretation established by the cases here cited.

—that the real estate which is the property of any married woman before marriage, or which may become her property after marriage, shall be and is hereby so far secured to her sole and separate use that the same, and the rents, profits, and income thereof, shall not be liable to be attached, or in any manner taken, for the debts of the husband, either before or after his death, Martin v. Pepall, 6 R. I. 92; Ross v. North Providence, 10 R. I. 461; Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 136, citing Briggs v. Titus, 7 R. I. 441.

Statutes very similar to those quoted, supra, have been held to merely prevent the vesting of an estate in the husband until the death of the wife, and in this way her estate is protected, but it is said that estates by curtesy initiate are not abolished, but merely made contingent, instead of vested, estates. Stewart v. Ross, 50 Miss. 776; Hill v. Nash, 73 Miss. 849, 19 So. 707.

In Missouri a statute provides that the husband's interest in the wife's real estate cannot be conveyed by him unless the deed be "acknowledged by her in the manner now provided by law." Marshall v. Anderson, 78 Mo. 85; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418. So, it has been held that if the wife is not examined separately and apart according to statute when she acknowledges the deed by herself and husband for her property, the deed is ineffectual to convey even his interest as tenant by the curtesy initiate (Rust v. Goff, supra), and that the dedication to public use of the wife's real estate by the husband alone is ineffective to convey even the husband's estate by the curtesy initiate (Marshall v. Anderson, supra). But this rule appears to have been completely changed by the later statute, for in Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 246 Mo. 711, 152 S. W. 38, the court, with reference to the act of 1889 and prior acts, said: "Whether a husband's curtesy in such property of his wife is more than an estate for his life after her death contingent upon her failure to sell is a question not definitely settled in this state," and cited Farmers' Exch. Bank v. Hagelucken, 165 Mo. 443, 88 Am. St. Rep. 434, 65 S. W. 728, and Myers v. Hansbrough, 202 Mo. 495, 100 S. W. 1137. But from these holdings it is very apparent that the statutes have at least destroyed the incidents to or attributes of estates by the curtesy initiate. But it was held in Ennis v. Eager, 152 Mo. App. 493, 133 S. W. 850, that, notwithstanding the fact that by virtue of the statute the wife cannot convey or encumber her separate estate without the husband joining, a lease of her separate property in which her husband does not join does not convey "a complete or merchantable title thereto," on account of the husband's prospective right to curtesy therein. The holding appears to be inconsistent.

Some expressions used by the courts in Tennessee would lead to the conclusion that the statute referred to in BRYANT v. FREEMAN abolished estates by the curtesy initiate, or that the estate never existed (see quotations in BRYANT v. FREEMAN to the effect that curtesy cannot exist during coverture). And it has been held that the wife can maintain a separate action for possession in the lifetime of the husband. McCallum v. Petigrew, 10 Heisk. 394. On the other hand, there are many decisions by the Tennessee courts since the enactment of the statute in which the existence of the estate by the curtesy initiate has been recognized or assumed. In Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. , the court, while considering the effect of a divorce upon the estate by the curtesy initiate, refers to the statute of 1849 as having abolished the right of the creditors of the husband to sell his estate by the curtesy initiate on execution for his debts. In Corley v. Corley, 8 Baxt. 8, the court quotes with approval from Prater v. Hoover, 1 Coldw. 544, that "the spirit and intention of the act of 1849 is that wives shall not be deprived of their real estate by any act of their husbands, without their solemn and free concurrence in the single mode prescribed by law," and holds that if forced by the cruel and inhuman treatment to separate from him, the wife may, by bill in equity, have a suitable provision made for her support out of the rents and profits of her land. The court in Stokely v. Slayden, 8 Baxt. 307, recognizes or assumes the existence of an estate by the curtesy initiate.

d. To abolish all estates by the curtesy.

As stated, supra, this note does not deal with the general question of abolishing estates by the curtesy consummate. But there are a few decisions where the courts appear to have abandoned the well-established rule that estates by the curtesy consummate are not abolished unless the statute expressly so provides, and have held that the estate by the curtesy consummate has been abolished by statutes or constitutional provisions in the nature of married women's acts. For the purpose of illustrating the various interpretations placed upon this particular kind of statute, these cases are here cited. They have a direct bearing upon the effect of this class of legislation upon estates by the curtesy initiate.

In some cases it has been held that estates by the curtesy consummate have been abolished; this, of necessity, abolishes estates by the curtesy initiate. It has been so held where the statute provides——"that if the wife, seised of an estate in her own right, shall, at her death, leave issue by a former husband, to whom the estate may descend, such issue shall take the same, discharged from the right of the surviving husband as tenant by the curtesy" (limited to other than first husbands), Hathon v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 93;

—that the wife shall have full and absolute control of her real and personal estate, with power to contract, sell, transfer, mortgage, convey, devise, and bequeath the same in the same manner and with the like effect as if she were unmarried, Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60; Brown v. Clark, 44 Mich. 309, 6 N. W. 679;

In Deutsch v. Rohlfing, 22 Colo. App. 543, 126 Pac. 1123, the court said: "It is common knowledge that the husband's estate by curtesy, like the right of dower of the wife, has had no existence or recognition in this state; and there is no reason to suppose that principles applicable to curtesy or dower, as at common law, have influenced in any degree our legislation as it existed when the state was admitted, and has existed to the present time, concerning the property rights of either husband or wife. It has long been settled, by repeated decisions of our courts, that, under our laws, the husband has no vested right, inchoate or other, by reason of the marital relation, in the property belonging to his wife, and that she holds an absolute legal estate in her real and personal property, whether owned at the time of marriage or acquired during coverture, as free from any common-law right of her husband as if she were unmarried. 'As to her separate estate, she has no husband.' Wells v. Caywood, 3 Colo. 487; Palmer v. Hanna, 6 Colo. 55; Colorado C. R. Co. v. Allen, 13 Colo. 229, 22 Pac. 605; Knight v. Lawrence, 19 Colo. 425, 36 Pac. 242; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009, 94 Pac. 360."

An act to revise the law in relation to dower, which provides "that the estate of curtesy is hereby abolished and the surviving husband or wife shall be endowed with the third part of all lands whereof the deceased husband, or wife, was seised," abolishes estates by the curtesy, and substitutes dower instead. Jackson v. Jackson, 144 Ill. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 427, 33 N. E. 51. This statute does not come within the class of legislation here considered, as it expressly abolishes all estates by the curtesy, and substitutes another. It is here cited for the purpose of distinction only.

J. W. M.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

PATRICK F. HOWLEY

v.

GEORGE T. CHAFFEE, Impleaded, etc.,
Appt.

(— Vt. —, 93 Atl. 120.)

Easement — implied reservation in grant.

A grant by metes and bounds of a parcel of land over which a visible right of way exists in favor of remaining land of the grantor which is located on a public highway, by a deed containing full covenants of warranty and no express reservation, does not reserve the right of way by implication, although it is reasonably necessary for the full enjoyment of the grantor's remaining land, since under such circumstances a reservation of easement is implied only in case of strict necessity.

(January 23, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant Chaffee from a decree of the Chancery Court for Rutland County in favor of plaintiff in a suit to enjoin defendants from closing up an alleged right of way of necessity to plaintiff's buildings. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. S. Platt, W. B. C. Stickney, and T. W. Moloney, for appellant:

A way of necessity never exists where a man can get to his own property through his own land, however inconvenient the way through his own land may be.

Dee v. King, 73 Vt. 375, 50 Atl. 1109; Washb. Easements, § 233; Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 449; Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724; Goodall v. Godfrey, 53 Vt. 219, 38 Am. Rep. 671; Willey v. Thwing, 68 Vt. 128, 34 Atl. 428; Wiswell v. Minogue, 57 Vt. 620; Plimpton v. Converse, 42 Vt. 716; Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 21 N. J. L. 133, 47 Am. Dec. 156; Carbrey v.

Note. — As to easements created by severance of tract of land with apparent benefit existing, see notes to Rollo v. Nelson, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 315; Duvall v. Ridout, L.R.A. 1915C, 345; and Watson v. French, L.R.A. 1915C, 355.

As to way of necessity where other possible modes of access exist, see notes to Corea v. Higuera, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1018, and Doten v. Bartlett, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1075.

L.R.A.1915D.

Willis, 7 Allen, 370, 83 Am. Dec. 688; Whitehouse v. Cummings, 83 Me. 91, 23 Am. St. Rep. 756, 21 Atl. 743; Dolliff v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 Me. 173; Stevens v. Orr, 69 Me. 323; Stillwell v. Foster, 80 Me. 333, 14 Atl. 731; Allen v. Kincaid, 11 Me. 155; Seeley v. Bishop, 19 Conn. 128; Abbott v. Stewartstown, 47 N. H. 230; Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. 527; Root v. Wadhams, 107 N. Y. 385, 14 N. E. 281; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Batchelder v. State Capital Bank, 66 N. H. 386, 22 Atl. 592; Bonelli Bros. v. Blakemore, 66 Miss. 136, 14 Am. St. Rep. 554, 5 So. 228.

Messrs. J. C. Jones and Charles L. Howe, for appellee:

Upon the severance of a heritage, a grant will be implied of all those continuous and apparent easements which have in fact been used by the owner during the unity, though they have no legal existence as easements; and the law will imply a reservation of like easements in favor of the part of the heritage retained by the grantor.

Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724; Goodall v. Godfrey, 53 Vt. 219, 38 Am. Rep. 671; Willey v. Thwing, 68 Vt. 128, 34 Atl. 428; Dee v. King, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L.R.A. 860, 59 Atl. 839.

From the necessity of a right of way to the reasonable use and enjoyment of land granted or reserved, is to be found an implied grant or reservation of such right, in the absence of some expressed negation thereof in the deed.

Wiswell v. Minogue, 57 Vt. 616; Dee v. King, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L.R.A. 860, 59 Atl. 839; Rollo v. Nelson, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 315, and note.

Powers, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

George Richardson in his lifetime owned a large parcel of land on the south side of Center street in the city of Rutland. He also owned a 12-foot right of way to the east end of this land from Wales street, which crosses Center street east of this property. On May 23, 1883, Richardson conveyed a part of this land to one Martell. The land so conveyed, hereinafter called the Martell lot, is in the northeast corner of the original parcel, and is about 35 feet wide on Center street and 80 feet deep. On December 11, 1906, Addie Richardson, who became the owner of the remaining property at George Richardson's decease, conveyed to the defendant Chaffee all that remained of the original parcel, including the right of way, except a piece next west of the Martell lot. The piece so excepted has a frontage on Center street of 55 feet and is 80 feet deep. The land conveyed to Chaffee is irregular in shape, as will hereinafter appear. On July 18, 1912, Addie Richardson conveyed to the orator the land excepted from the deed to Chaffee, and the same is hereinafter called the Howley lot. At the time Mrs. Richardson deeded to Chaffee, the buildings and structures standing on the premises mentioned were located as follows: On the Martell lot was a brick block fronting on Center street, with a wooden addition on the rear. This structure occupied the whole width of the lot, and all of its depth, except about 7 or 8 feet. This left an open space between the Martell buildings and the south line of the lot about 35 feet east and west, and about 8 feet north and south. On the Howley lot was a brick block fronting on Center street. This block was 55 feet wide and 50 feet deep. It occupied the entire frontage of the lot, and had a wooden addition on the rear at the southeast corner. An old barn, hereinafter called the north barn, stood on the Howley lot in the rear of the block just mentioned. This barn extended practically (if not quite) to the west line of the Howley lot, and practically (if not quite) to the south barn, hereinafter described. There was an open space between the north barn and the Howley block of about 4 feet, extending from the west line of the lot to a point about 10 feet from the east line thereof, where it came to the wooden addition already referred to. This addition completely filled the space between this barn and the Martell lot to a point as far south as the addition of the Martell block extended. And from that point a platform extended south to the south line of the Richardson land, completely filling the space to the south barn and the east line of the Howley lot. This wooden addition to the Howley block was used for a harness shop. It thus appears that the Howley lot was completely covered with structures, except for the 4-foot space above mentioned. On the land conveyed to Chaffee was a livery stable fronting on Center street, occupied by one Morse as tenant. This stable was a rectangular, wooden building, extending from the Howley block to the west and south lines of the west part of the Chaffee lot. The Chaffee lot also included a strip of land lying south of the Howley and Martell lots and some land extending further south to the Bardwell stables, so-called. So the deed to Chaffee included 8 or 9 feet off the south side of the north barn and the platform at its east end. South of this barn, and on the Chaffee lot, stood another old barn, hereinafter called the south barn. This came nearly to the west line of the Chaffee lot at that point, and quite to the south line against the Bardwell stable. It extended east to a point about as far as the middle of the Martell lot, and had a shed attached at its southeast corner. There was an open space on the Chaffee lot in the rear of the Martell lot, extending from the east side of the platform to the east line of the lot, and the east part of this space extended south along the east end of south barn to the shed mentioned. The right of way from Wales street ran to the east line of this open space. It thus appears that the Chaffee lot was fully covered with buildings and structures, except this open space east of the platform and the south barn. By the deed to Chaffee, a 10-foot open space across the rear of the Howley lot was stipulated for, to be used for a common passageway; and for light, air, and fire escapes for both parties. The Howley block was divided on Center street into three stores and a stairway leading to the upper floors. The stores had basements which opened into the 4-foot space above mentioned. Ever since this block was built (1885), Richardson and his tenants have continuously used the right of way from Wales street. Their teams would come in from Wales street, swing around the northeast corner of the south barn to the platform above mentioned. This is as far as teams could go, as the north barn, the harness shop, and the platform blocked the way. The evidences of this use of a way by the occupants of the Howley block were plain to be seen upon the ground. Some use of the open space on the rear of the Martell lot was also made by these teams, especially in turning around, as the space next to the platform and on the Chaffee lot was only about 10 feet wide. There was no opening in either the north or east walls of either of the barns, except a door in the east end of the south barn nearly or quite opposite the right of way to Wales street. Notwithstanding the finding that at the times the Chaffee and Howley deeds were given, the Howley lot was fully covered with buildings and structures, except as noted, and teams could only go as far west as the platform, the chancellor finds that there was access to the rear of the Howley block, and the basements therein, by those on foot, and that a constant use was made of this way out from the basements. If this be so, such access must have been through the harness shop, for, as we have seen, there was no opening in the east or north walls of the north barn, and this barn and the harness shop filled the space on the Howley lot. The lease of the livery stable and old barns did not expire until April 1, 1913, so

Chaffee did not get possession of these buildings until that time. Immediately thereafter he began tearing down the old buildings to prepare the lot for an opera house. The chancellor reports that access to the rear of the Howley block over the right of way to the Chaffee lot, and thence around the corner of the south barn as described, is—"reasonably necessary for the full, convenient, and comfortable use and enjoyment of said block, and would add to the value of said block, and would materially benefit it."

The decree below was for the orator and against Chaffee only. The latter appealed. The defendants treat the orator's suit as a claim of a way of necessity, so-called, and rely upon Dee v. King, 73 Vt. 375, 50 Atl. 1100, wherein it is said that such a way is called into existence in cases of necessity only, and that mere convenience, however great, will not suffice.

For present purposes we may assume that the rule regulating such ways is correctly stated in Willey v. Thwing, 68 Vt. 128, 34 Atl. 428, in the following quotation: "If A conveys land to B, to which B can have access only by passing over other land of A, a way of necessity passes by the grant. If A conveys land to B, leaving other land of A, to which he can have access only by passing over the land granted, a way of necessity is reserved in the grant."

It thus appears that in the matter of these ways implied grants and implied reservations stand alike. The foundation of this rule regarding ways of necessity is said to be a fiction of law by which a grant or reservation is implied to meet a special emergency, on grounds of public policy, in order that no land be left inaccessible for the purposes of cultivation. Buss v. Dyer, 125 Mass. 291. It is apparent that the case in hand has no standing under this rule, for the orator's land fronts on one of the principal streets of the city, and is, of course, accessible therefrom. The claim of the orator is in fact founded upon a different, though somewhat related, ground,—a ground sometimes spoken of in the books as the doctrine of "visible servitudes," sometimes as the doctrine of "easements arising from severance with apparent benefit existing," and sometimes as the doctrine of "quasi easements." Much confusion of judicial thought has resulted from a failure to distinguish between ways of necessity and ways arising under this latter doctrine,—a confusion, it must be admitted, from which our own cases have not wholly escaped.

With the character and extent of implied grants, we now have nothing to do. We are here only concerned with determining the circumstances which will give rise to an implied reservation.

On this precise question the authorities are in conflict. Courts of high standing assert that the rule regarding implied grants and implied reservation of "visible servitudes" is reciprocal, and that it applies with equal force and in like circumstances to both grants and reservations. But upon a careful consideration of the whole subject, studied in the light of the many cases in which it is discussed, we are convinced that there is a clear distinction between implied grants and implied reservations, and that this distinction is well founded in principle and well supported by authority. It is apparent that no question of public policy is here involved, as we have seen is the case where a way of necessity is involved. To say that a grantor reserves to himself something out of the property granted, wholly by implication, not only offends the rule that one shall not derogate from his own grant, but conflicts with the grantor's language in the conveyance, which by the rule is to be taken against him, and is wholly inconsistent with the theory on which our registry laws are based. If such an illogical result is to follow an absolute grant, it must be by virtue of some legal rule of compelling force.

The correct rule is, we think, that where, as here, one grants a parcel of land by metes and bounds, by a deed containing full covenants of warranty and without any express reservation, there can be no reservation by implication, unless the easement claimed is one of "strict necessity," within the meaning of that term as explained in Dee v. King, supra.

While some of the older authorities attach to an implied reservation a less strict requirement of necessity than this, the decided tendency of the courts is toward the more logical and sensible rule above stated.

Thus, after some divergence of judicial opinion and consequent uncertainty in the law, strict necessity has come to be the settled rule of implied reservations in England. Suffield v. Brown, 4 De. G. J. & S. 185, 3 New Reports, 340, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 249, 10 Jur. N. S. 111, 9 L. T. N. S. 627, 12 Week. Rep. 356; Wheeldon v. Burrows, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 31, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 853, 41 L. T. N. S. 327, 28 Week. Rep. 196; Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 2 Ch. 478, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 584, 16 L. T. N. S. 438, 15 Week. Rep. 801.

So, too, in New York, though it was formerly thought (Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505) that the rule of visible servitudes worked both ways, the distinction between implied grants and implied reservations is now fully established, and it is held that an implied reservation only arises when the easement claimed is necessary in the strict sense of the term. Hill v. Bernheimer, 78 Misc. 472, 140 N. Y. Supp. 35; Lathrop v. Lytle, 84 Misc. 161, 145 N. Y. Supp. 906; Wells v. Garbutt, 132 N. Y. 430, 30 N. E. 978; Paine v. Chandler, 134 N. Y. 385, 19 L.R.A. 99, 32 N. E. 18.

It was said in Carbrey v. Willis, 7 Allen, 364, 83 Am. Dec. 688, that "where there is a grant of land by metes and bounds, without express reservation and with full covenants of warranty against encumbrances, we think there is no just reason for holding that there can be any reservation by implication, unless the easement is strictly one of necessity. Where the easement is only one of existing use and great convenience, but for which a substitute can be furnished by reasonable labor and expense, the grantor may certainly cut himself off from it by his deed, if such is the intention of the parties. And it is difficult to see how such an intention could be more clearly and distinctly intimated than by such a deed and warranty."

It should be noted in this connection that the Massachusetts court applies the rule of strict necessity to grants as well as reservations. Buss v. Dyer, 125 Mass. 289.

The Massachusetts rule prevails in Maine. In Warren v. Blake, 54 Me. 276, 89 Am. Dec. 748, the court quotes and adopts the rule of Carbrey v. Willis, as above, suggesting that to hold otherwise would open the door "to doubt and uncertainty, to the disturbance and questioning of titles, and to controversies as to matters of fact outside of the language or boundaries of the deed." This holding was approved as settled law in Stevens v. Orr, 69 Me. 323. See also Stillwell v. Foster, 80 Me. 333, 14 Atl. 731.

Mitchell v. Seipel, 53 Md. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 404, is a well-considered and instructive case in point. The owner of a lot built two houses on it. One was 15 feet wide; the other was 12½ feet wide on the ground, but 15 feet wide above the first story. This left between the houses an alley 2½ feet wide, extending from the street to the back yards of the houses. Above the alley the timbers of the narrow house extended across the alley and rested on the wall of the other house. The alley was used as a common passageway by the occupants of both houses. The narrow house was sold by a deed which included the alley, but without any reservation of any right therein. Then the other house was sold by a deed embracing no part of the alley. The court reviews the cases, English and American, and, "being satisfied the distinction so clearly drawn in those decisions between what has been called an implied grant and what has been attempted to be established under the name of an implied reservation is not only founded in reason, L.R.A.1915D.

but has existed almost as far back as the law upon the subject can be traced," reaches the conclusion that no implied right in the alley was reserved in the first sale, as use of the alley was not legally necessary to the other house. This rule is approved in Burns v. Gallagher, 62 Md. 462; Jay v. Michael, 92 Md. 210, 48 Atl. 61, and Mancuso v. Riddlemoser Co. 117 Md. 53, 82 Atl. 1051, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 84.

In Cherry v. Brizzolara, 89 Ark. 309, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 508, 116 S. W. 668, the distinction is recognized and the rule stated thus: "But there is a marked difference between an implied grant and an implied reservation of an easement in the conveyance of the dominant and servient estate. Where a man grants the dominant estate, he grants with it everything necessary to its enjoyment; and by the grant there passes by implication to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which have been, and are at the time of the grant, used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted.

. . . But where the owner has sold and granted the servient estate and attempts to retain by implied reservation the easement for the estate he retains, the matter stands on a different footing. The grant is taken most strongly against the grantor. . . . And so the [great] weight of authority is that where there is a grant of land with full covenants of warranty, and without express reservation of easement, there can be no reservation by implication, unless the easement is strictly one of absolute necessity."

Other cases recognizing this distinction between grants and reservations are Walker v. Clifford, 128 Ala. 67, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74, 29 So. 588; Brown v. Fuller, 165 Mich. 162, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 130 N. W. 621, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 853; Tooth v. Bryce, 50 N. J. Eq. 589, 25 Atl. 182; Denman v. Mentz, 63 N. J. Eq. 613, 52 Atl. 1117; Wilson v. Riggs, 27 App. D. C. 550; Crosland v. Rogers, 32 S. C. 130, 10 S. E. 874; Scott v. Beutel, 23 Gratt. 1.

The doctrine of visible servitudes is not new in this state. It was in Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724, that it was first recognized by this court. Judge Barrett therein calls attention to the rule that, while an owner of a parcel of land could not have an easement in one part in favor of another part thereof, yet, by force of his ownership, he could use it as he pleased and impress it with such conditions as he chose, which upon severance would survive. And it was accordingly there held that the parcel of land sold was subject to the seller's right to maintain his mill pond on the part reserved, though he thereby interfered with the full enjoyment of the premises conveyed.

The subject has been before the court in various cases since, including Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 256; Goodall v. Godfrey, 53 Vt. 219, 38 Am. Rep. 671; Wiswell v. Minogue, 57 Vt. 616; Willey v. Thwing, 68 Vt. 128, 34 Atl. 428; McElroy v. McLeay, 71 Vt. 396, 45 Atl. 898; and Dee v. King, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L.R.A. 860, 59 Atl. 839. Of these cases Harwood v. Benton and Wiswell v. Minogue and Willey v. Thwing were, alone, cases of implied reservations, which need be noticed in this discussion. It was said in the former, in speaking of Gale & Whatley on Easements, that the learned authors show that in this class of cases: "While the law will make all necessary implications to prevent the grantor from derogating from his own grant, it will reciprocally and equally make like implications to prevent the grantor from being shorn of his just rights in reference to the property which he retains."

So far as the opinion may be taken as an indorsement of this statement, it was a pure dictum, for it was wholly unnecessary to the decision. The case then before the court was manifestly one in which the easement reserved was one of strict necessity,—for a mill without a mill pond would be wholly useless, and no substitute could be provided. So this statement that the law would reciprocally and equally imply a reservation in favor of the grantor was outside the decision.

Again, in Wiswell v. Minogue, it is said that "it is now universally recognized that, from the necessity of a right of way to the reasonable use and enjoyment of land granted or reserved, is to be found an implied grant or reservation of such right, in the absence of some express negation thereof in the deed."

Here again the court, as the opinion says, was discussing a case wherein the easements were of strict necessity. When the farm was first sold a landlocked quarry was reserved,—a typical case of a way of necessity by implied reservation. When the $\frac{3}{4}$ -acre piece was conveyed to the quarry owner, the easement claimed was not reserved, but granted. And this, too, was a plain way of necessity, as the case shows that the quarry owner, even after the purchase of the $\frac{3}{4}$ -acre piece, had no other way out to the highway except over the way claimed. So no reference to the doctrine of visible servitudes was required, and the quotation above was wholly obiter.

Willey v. Thwing was apparently a way of L.R.A.1915D.

strict necessity. Both doctrines herein discussed were referred to in the opinion, but no attempt was made to define the degree of necessity required in visible servitudes reserved by implication.

We find, then, no binding precedent in this state to embarrass us in the adoption of the rule of the best considered cases hereinbefore stated. Indeed, the very distinction which we now adopt was referred to in Goodall v. Godfrey, 53 Vt. 219, 38 Am. Rep. 671, with a very broad intimation that it was sound in law. For Judge Veazey said in the opinion that if the owner of the property had in his lifetime divided it, and then "sold the east and west tenements to the plaintiff without reservation of a right of way for the middle tenement, then it might be argued, upon strong authority, that he did not retain such right of way by implication. . . . Although it may have been held that there is no distinction in legal effect between what has been called an implied grant and an implied reservation, such a distinction has been recognized in many well-considered cases. . . . This distinction is only alluded to, not passed upon."

It is a fair assumption from this language that the court did not then understand that the distinction had ever been passed upon in this state up to that time.

In this state of the law of the subject in this jurisdiction, we do not hesitate to put ourselves in line with the modern holdings.

That the way here in question is not necessary to the Howley block in the strict sense of the term is apparent. The finding is that it "is reasonably necessary for the full, convenient, and comfortable use and enjoyment" of the block. This is not enough under the rule herein adopted. It is apparent that the way is highly convenient, but it is not indispensable. For aught that appears a substitute through the stores can be prepared without unreasonable trouble or expense. It may be safely said that it appears that this can be done. At any rate, whatever inconvenience may result—whatever detriment to the Howley block may follow this decision,—it is attributable to the deliberate act of Mrs. Richardson, who could have (had she so desired or intended) averted it all by a stroke of her pen when she deeded to Chaffee. In reaching this result, we make no reference to several special circumstances tending strongly to show that Mrs. Richardson had, in fact, no idea that this way was to be kept open after the Chaffee deed was given.

Decree reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,
v.
JOHN CORCORAN, App't.

(82 Wash. 44, 143 Pac. 453.)

Evidence — intent of one charged with burglary — conduct.

1. To show intent of an employee charged with burglary of his employer's store, evidence is admissible that he padded the inventory, concealed articles about his work bench which were subsequently taken from

Note. — Burglary: breaking as affected by defendant's authority to enter building.

With the exception of the Texas cases which are governed by special statute, the cases in point divide themselves into two classes, namely, those in which, as in STATE v. CORCORAN, the decision turns on whether there was an unlimited and unrestricted right of entry, and those in which the decision turns on the intent of the employee at the time of entry, the entry itself being with right.

In Pointer v. State, 148 Ala. 676, 41 So. 929, holding that a servant in a hotel who has a right of access to a pantry in the performance of his menial duties as servant is nevertheless guilty of burglary if, after the pantry is locked for the night, he enters the same and steals provisions therefrom, the entry, in view of the time it was made, was apparently wrongful irrespective of its purpose.

That was also apparently true of Hild v. State, 67 Ala. 39, holding that a servant in charge of a house during his employer's absence is guilty of burglary if without right he enters a closed room and steals therefrom.

In Rex v. Gray, 1 Strange, 481, it was held to be burglary where a servant with design to commit rape opened the door of his mistress's room, which was fastened with a bolt.

So, also, for a servant at night to unlatch the door of his master's or mistress's bedroom for purpose of committing murder. Edmonds Case, Hutton, 20 J. Kelyng, 67; United States v. Bowen, 4 Cranch, 604, Fed. Cas. No. 14,629.

In STATE v. CORCORAN the court seems to have assumed, although it was not necessary to pass upon the point, that if the defendant had had the right to enter the store at any time of the day or night, he would not have been guilty of burglary even if the entry upon the particular occasion was with the preconceived intention to steal.

And this seems to have been the view of Sir Mathew Hale, who said that if the servant unlatches a door, or turns a key in a door, in the house, and steals goods out of that room, the opening of the door in L.R.A.1915D.

the building, and entered the building at an unusual hour and took articles therefrom at a time different from that charged in the indictment.

Burglary — opening building with key lawfully acquired.

2. An employee's opening a building at a time when his duties did not require him to do so, by means of a key furnished him by the employer for the limited purpose of opening the store for business in the morning, followed by his taking property of his employer therefrom with intent to convert it to his own use, is a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary.

(October 8, 1914.)

this manner is within his trust, and so no breaking of the house, and therefore not within the law of burglary; but if the servant breaks open a door, whether outward or inward (as for the purpose a closet, study, or counting house), and steals goods, this is a robbery and breaking the house,—such opening not being within his trust. 2 Hale, P. C. 354. But it is pointed out in Russell on Crimes, vol. 2, p. 10, note, that this view was in conflict with the Edmonds Case, supra.

But in State v. Howard, 64 S. C. 344, 58 L.R.A. 685, 92 Am. St. Rep. 804, 43 S. E. 173, it was held that a servant having a right to lodge in his master's house is guilty of burglary if he opens a closed door or raises a sash and enters the building, not for the purpose of using the same as a lodging house, but with intent to steal his master's goods. The court said: "A servant's right to enter his master's dwelling depends upon the purpose with which he enters. If he enters pursuant to the trust of his employment, being rightfully in, if he then conceives the felonious purpose, and attempts to carry it out without breaking any inner door, it is not burglary, for there is no breaking and entering with felonious intent; but if, being out of the dwelling, he does that which would constitute a breaking and entering in a stranger, and does it with the intent to steal or commit a felony, or if, being in without breaking, he breaks an inner door with such purpose, then he commits burglary, for the entrance for such purpose is in violation of his trust and employment."

So, in Lowder v. State, 63 Ala. 143, 35 Am. Rep. 9, the court holds that an office boy and servant of an attorney who goes into the office at nighttime for the purpose of going to bed, and has the right to do so from his employers, or is accustomed to sleep there at night with their knowledge, and without objection, is not guilty of burglary though, after entering the office for that purpose only, he forms the desire to steal his employer's money, which is in a bedroom off the office; it is clearly implied that he would be guilty if the entry were with the preconceived intent to steal, although not otherwise wrongful.

In Colbert v. State, 91 Ga. 705, 17 S. E.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County convicting him of burglary in the second degree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George H. Armitage, with Mr. W. C. Donovan, for appellant:

Evidence of other offenses not amounting to crimes and misdemeanors, the admission of which is calculated to prejudice the jury

State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889; State v. Oppenheimer, 41 Wash. 630, 84 Pac. 588; Collier v. State, — Miss. —, 64 So. 373; Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507.

Evidence of other offenses not amounting to crimes and misdemeanors, the admission of which is calculated to prejudice the jury 840, where a servant unlocked a door of a room and took certain articles therefrom, the court said that if the intent to steal was formed after he entered, his offense was only larceny from the house; but if the intent to steal was formed before entering, his offense was burglary. It is not clear, however, but that the latter alternative was upon the hypothesis that the entry was wrongful irrespective of its purpose.

As stated, the Texas cases are governed by a statute that provides that an entry into a house for the purpose of committing a theft, unless the same is effected by actual breaking, is not burglary when the same is done by a domestic servant or other inhabitant of such house, and the question involved generally is whether one is a domestic servant or inhabitant within the meaning of the statute.

In construing the terms "domestic servant or other inhabitant of such house," the court in Wakefield v. State, 41 Tex. 556, said that they did not extend to a servant whose employment is out of doors, and not in the house, or to a lodger or visitor, as distinguished from an inhabitant, and they do not therefore come within the classification of a domestic servant or an inhabitant of the house.

So, an entry into a house and a theft therefrom by a servant of a guest of a house, who had access to the house for the purpose of getting property of his master, constitute burglary. Ibid.

And a farm hand who does not sleep or eat in his employer's house, and who has only occasional duties to perform in the house, such as making fires and carrying water, is not a domestic servant of the owner of the house so as to require that there shall be an actual breaking to constitute burglary by such a one, and so he will be guilty of burglary if he enters the house not in the performance of such occasional duties and steals articles therefrom. Waterhouse v. State, 21 Tex. App. 663, 2 S. W. 889.

So, also, a servant of a hotel whose sole duties are to scour the floors of the corridors of the hotel and clean the spittoons against the person accused of a particular crime, is not admissible.

State v. Cottrell, 56 Wash. 544, 106 Pac. 179; Lowman v. State, 109 Ga. 501, 34 S. E. 1019, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 389; People v. Geyer, 196 N. Y. 364, 90 N. E. 48; Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 457, 12 Am. Rep. 731; State v. Gottfreedson, 24 Wash. 398, 64 Pac. 523; Underhill, Crim. Ev. 8th ed. § 88, p. 160.

A motive for committing a crime is admissible only where it is necessary to prove the defendant's connection with the commission of a crime apparently committed by someone by proof of the corpus delicti.

Shaffner v. Com. 72 Pa. 60, 13 Am. Rep. 649; People v. Molineux, 62 L.R.A. 193, and note, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286.

is not the servant of a saloon in the same building and under the same management, and in which he performs no duty whatever, so as to necessitate an actual breaking in order to constitute burglary where an entry is made by a domestic servant, and so such a servant who enters the saloon and steals therefrom is guilty of burglary, although actual force is not used, but entry is made by means of unlocking the door. Jackson v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 260, 64 S. W. 864.

And a lifting of the latch and opening a door do not constitute an actual breaking, within the meaning of the statute. Neiderluck v. State, 23 Tex. App. 38, 3 S. W. 573.

But where a domestic servant, in pursuance of a conspiracy with others who are not servants, lifts the latch and opens the door and enters the house, he is guilty of burglary though the breaking be not actual. Ibid.

Entry of place open for business.

Under a California statute which provides that "every person who enters any house, room, store, . . . with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony, is guilty of burglary," one who with intent to steal enters a store is guilty of burglary though it be during business hours. People v. Brittain, 142 Cal. 8, 100 Am. St. Rep. 95, 75 Pac. 314; People v. Barry, 94 Cal. 481, 29 Pac. 1026.

It was contended in the Barry Case that a store during business hours is a public place, and that the defendant as one of the public had a legal right to be there or rather to enter there; that the proprietors were doing business with the general public; the public were invited to enter, and that therefore the defendant entered under an invitation of the owners, and that consequently his entry was lawful, and therefore there could be no burglary when there is a lawful entry. But the court said that to this line of reasoning it could only say that a party who enters with the intention to commit a felony enters without

When evidence of a separate and independent crime or offense has been improperly introduced, and it is apparent that its reception must have been to prejudice the rights of the accused, a charge to the jury to disregard the evidence will not cure the error in admitting it.

Boyd v. United States, 142 U. S. 450, 35 L. ed. 1077, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292; People v. Molineux, 62 L.R.A. 355, note.

There can be no breaking, and therefore no burglary, where the entry is with the consent of the owner, or his invitation or sanction, express or implied.

6 Cyc. 180, 181; Neiderluck v. State, 23 Tex. App. 38, 3 S. W. 573; Lowder v. State, 63 Ala. 143, 35 Am. Rep. 9; State v. Newbegin, 25 Me. 500; State v. Moore, 12 N. H.

43; Stone v. State, 63 Ala. 115; Trevenio v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 42 S. W. 394; State v. Riggs, 74 Minn. 460, 77 N. W. 302, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 200.

If there was any evidence on the question of the right of the defendant to be in that store at the time laid in the information, or of any other material matter in the case, it was of such a meager character that the judgment should be set aside.

State v. Newton, 39 Wash. 491, 81 Pac. 1002; State v. Payne, 6 Wash. 563, 34 Pac. 317; State v. Pagano, 7 Wash. 549, 35 Pac. 387.

Messrs. George H. Crandall, F. M. Goodwin, and D. B. Hell, for the State:

If defendant's right to enter the building was limited, and he entered the building for an invitation. That he is not one of the public invited, nor is he entitled, to enter, and such a party could be refused admission at the threshold or ejected from the premises after the entry was accomplished. That if the presence of such party in the store is lawful, the fact that he gained ingress openly and publicly through the front door rather than clandestinely by way of the skylight or the cellar is not material, and the result would be that no burglary could be committed in a store during business hours regardless of the nature of the entry.

The court distinguished State v. Newbegin, 25 Me. 502, and Clarke v. Com. 25 Gratt. 908, as being cases under a statute which requires that, in order to constitute burglary, there must not only be an entry, but also a breaking.

The court also distinguished State v. Moore, 12 N. H. 42, stating that the primary question therein involved was as to sufficiency of the evidence to show a criminal intent in entering the building, and does not reach the matter of the character of the entry.

In the Brittain Case, supra, the court said: "It would be an impeachment of the common sense of mankind to say that a thief who enters a store with intent to steal does so with the owner's consent or upon his invitation. It is true the thief must have clothes and food, and may enter a store to procure them. And if after he enters he changes his mind and concludes to steal, and not purchase his supplies, it would be larceny. But if it be proven that he entered with intent to steal, the law will not, in the face of such proof, shield him from punishment as a burglar on the assumption that he has the consent and invitation of the proprietor to so enter."

So, also, in Pinson v. State, 91 Ark. 434, 121 S. W. 751, it was held that, under a statute providing that burglary is the unlawful entering a house in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, one who, with a preconceived purpose of committing a theft therein, enters a saloon during the night while it is open for business, is guilty L.R.A.1915D.

of burglary, the court stating that it adopted the reasoning of People v. Barry, supra.

And in Gonzales v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 50 S. W. 1018, it was held that one who, with intent to steal, lifts the latch and opens the door of a store and enters the same, is guilty of burglary, although at the time the store is open for business. In rendering its opinion the court said: "Appellant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: 'You are further instructed, if you believe from the evidence that defendant entered said house in the same manner and by the usual way and the usual place that customers entered, and that said house, at the time said defendant entered same, was open to the public for purposes of trade, and that defendant entered said house in the same way and at the same place, without force applied to said house to effect said entrance, you will acquit defendant, and say by your verdict "not guilty." ' The court had already charged the jury that before appellant could be convicted of burglary they must believe that he entered the house by force applied to the house. The evidence showed that the house in question was a storehouse, or a part of a storehouse, and that the front door through which appellant entered was fastened by the latch, but could be easily opened by turning the bolt, as the store had been unlocked for business, but the door had afterwards been closed and latched. Although the store had evidently been open for business, we do not understand a person can enter such store by opening the door that is latched, for the purpose of stealing, merely because customers are authorized to enter the store for the purpose of business. Of course, if a customer should enter the store by lifting a latch or removing a bolt in the usual way in which customers entered for the purpose of purchasing goods merely, and should thereafter commit theft, such a customer would not be guilty of burglary; but the requested charge was not of that character, but proceeded solely on the idea that, because the store was open for business, although the door was shut and latched, there could be no such thing a purpose other than the one for which he had been given the right to enter, then he is guilty of an unlawful breaking and entering under the statute.

Pointer v. State, 148 Ala. 676, 41 So. 929; Lowder v. State, 63 Ala. 143, 35 Am. Rep. 9; Young v. Com. 126 Ky. 474, 128 Am. St. Rep. 326, 104 S. W. 266, 15 Ann. Cas. 1022; United States v. Bowen, 4 Cranch, C. C. 604, Fed. Cas. No. 14,629; 6 Cyc. 180; 4 Bl. Com. 227.

If the state has evidence that the defendant entered with the intention of committing a crime, it is clearly competent. The court can govern the quantum of evidence a party shall introduce only as it becomes cumulative.

Higgins v. State, 157 Ind. 57, 60 N. E. 685; Jones, Ev. p. 166; Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 292; People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348, 61 Am. St. Rep. 326, 65 N. W. 203.

If evidence is relative to the issues in the case at bar, it cannot be excluded because it shows the commission of other crimes.

State v. Leroy, 61 Wash. 405, 112 Pac. 635; State v. Dana, 59 Wash. 30, 109 Pac.

191; State v. Thuna, 59 Wash. 689, 140 Am. St. Rep. 902, 109 Pac. 331, 111 Pac. 768.

The exceptions to the general rule of the admission of evidence as to other crimes have been applied to cases of burglary as well as to other cases.

State v. Leroy, 61 Wash. 405, 112 Pac. 635; 6 Cyc. 236; State v. Franke, 159 Mo. 535, 60 S. W. 1053; Com. v. Shepherd, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 345; State v. Valwell, 66 Vt. 558, 29 Atl. 1018; State v. Weldon, 39 S. C. 318, 24 L.R.A. 126, 17 S. E. 688; State v. Pit-tam, 32 Wash. 137, 72 Pac. 1042.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted upon a charge of burglary in the second degree. He appeals from a judgment pronounced upon the verdict of a jury. His counsel assigns several errors, which are argued under two heads, to the effect that the court erred in permitting certain evidence offered on behalf of the state, and in denying a motion to dismiss at the close of the state's evidence, in refusing to direct a verdict at the close of

as the burglary of a store in that condition. We do not understand this to be the law." Although there is no mention of the statute under which the charge was prosecuted, yet it is evident from the opinion that the element of force is necessary to constitute burglary, and so this case is apparently in conflict with Love v. State, infra.

But an indictment for breaking and entering a store, under a statute providing for punishment of one who with intent to commit a felony breaks and enters any office, shop, or warehouse, is not sustained by evidence that during the evening, while the store was lighted and open for business, except that the door was closed, accused, with intent to steal, carefully lifted the latch on the door and entered the store and stole goods therefrom. State v. Newbegin, supra. The court stated: "The offense of breaking is a violation of the security designed to exclude, and, coupled with an entrance into a shop with a felonious intent, it constitutes the crime charged in the indictment. The opening of a shop door in the daytime which had been closed only to exclude the dust or cold air, with a design that it should be opened by all who should be inclined to enter, could not be a violation of any security designed to exclude, and therefore not a breaking. It would not even be a trespass, for the custom of trade in it would be evidence of a general license to enter. The effect would not be different, if the entrance were made in the evening under like circumstances, while the shop continued to be lighted and prepared for trade."

Nor is there an entry by force to constitute the offense of burglary where one enters a public telephone booth and, breaking open the drawer, takes money therefrom. Love v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 84, 105 S. W. 791. The court stated that "this booth was open to the public indiscriminately, and was so arranged that parties who desired to talk over the phone from this booth could place their money in the drawer and talk from that booth instead of going to the central office. The booth seems to have been in one corner of the passenger waiting room, and was placed there for the accommodation of the public, and anybody and everybody could enter it at his will and pleasure, and was placed there for that specific purpose. This would prove the consent of the party in control of the booth for any and every body who desired to use it to enter it. If it be conceded that the booth was a house within the contemplation of the statute, appellant or any other party desiring to use it had the authority and consent and was invited to enter and use it by paying the customary charges. If he so entered the booth and took the money from the drawer into which it was dropped by those who used the booth, the mere breaking of the money drawer would not constitute burglary. If he did so, it would be theft, provided he took money from the drawer."

Miscellaneous cases.

In Clarke v. Com. 25 Gratt. 908, it was held that there could be no constructive breaking by conspiracy where one of the conspirators is a joint occupier of the room entered, the court distinguishing cases where one of the conspirators is a servant; and all the evidence, and in denying the appellant's motion for new trial.

It appears that the appellant was employed by the Pierce-Harness Company from about May, 1912, to July, 1913, as a cutter in the harness shop conducted by that company, in Spokane. At the time the appellant was employed by Mr. Muffett, manager of the harness company, a key was given to the appellant which permitted him to enter the store and harness shop. At the time the key was given to him, it was stated that he was to open up at about 7 o'clock in the morning. Thereafter, in January, 1913, an invoice of the stock on hand was made by the harness company. At that time the stock of goods in the basement of the building, and the stock about the work bench of the appellant, were inventoried by the appellant. Some time thereafter Mr. Muffett discovered that articles of finished harness were hidden away around the work bench of the appellant. These hidden articles were marked and left there by Mr. Muffett. They afterwards disappeared, or their hiding places were changed. Thereafter Mr. Muffett employed men to watch the store for two or three hours before opening time in the morning, and for three or four hours after closing time in the evening. Evidence was offered on the part of the state to the effect that the inventory made by the appellant was padded. That is, that a greater amount of goods were reported on hand than were actually there. Evidence on the part of the state was also admitted, to the effect that the appellant was seen upon different occasions to enter the store at 5 o'clock in the morning, remain there for a time, then leave and return to the store at the regular opening time; that he did the same thing upon certain evenings after closing time, and that upon one occasion, on the night of May 9, 1913, the appellant was seen to go into the store, stay in there for about an hour, take some chamois skins in his pocket, and go out. Upon another occasion, on May 24, 1913, at about 5 o'clock in the morning, he went into the store by the use of his key, remained there for a while, took a gunny sack filled with something into the alley, had a conversation in the alley with some person unknown, and returned to the store with the gunny sack. Thereafter, and about July 1st, so the offense of burglary was not committed where, in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into with a third person, one occupant of a room entered the same by means of his own key and stole therefrom property belonging to the co-occupant.

Nor is it burglarious breaking and entry if a guest at an inn who has a legal right to enter any public room of the house enters the barroom and steals therefrom. State v. Moore, 12 N. H. 42. The court stated that, having a legal right to enter the house, the subsequent larceny could not relate back and give a character to the entry into the house so as to make it criminal, and the prisoner punishable for it, upon reasoning similar to that which in a civil action would render him liable as a trespasser ab initio.

And where one who rented stalls in a stable, in which he kept his horses, and also a sleeping room inside the stable and in the rear of the stable office, in which he slept, lifted the door of a bin in the same building, adjoining his room, and belonging to other parties, and took therefrom oats which he fed to his horses, such entering did not constitute burglary, under a statute requiring actual breaking where entry of the building for purpose of theft is by an "inhabitant" thereof, he being an inhabitant of the livery stable, and so the lifting of the door of a bin did not constitute an actual breaking. Peters v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 170, 26 S. W. 61.

In Young v. Com. 126 Ky. 474, 128 Am. St. Rep. 326, 104 S. W. 266, 15 Ann. Cas. 1022, where a farm laborer who occupied the house with the owner's family obtained leave of absence for several days under a L.R.A.1915D.

pretense of visiting another point, and, the owners having locked up their house and left for the day, such laborer went to the wife of one of the owners and got from her the keys to the house, ostensibly to take away some of his clothing, and thus gaining admission to the house stole and carried therefrom property of another, it was held that he was guilty of housebreaking, under a statute which provides: "If any person . . . shall feloniously break any dwelling house or any part thereof or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and feloniously take away anything of value, although the owner or any person may not be there, he shall, etc."

The court said: "Conceding that appellant had the right to enter the house in question to take away his own clothes, and had he entered under such circumstances, and then formed and executed the intention to steal the landlord's clothes, he would not have been guilty under the statute, our case comes down to a narrower state of facts; for, appellant having gone away under arrangement with his landlord, his relation as cotenant of the house had ceased for the time being. Though he had the right notwithstanding to remove his clothes from the house, he had not the right to enter the house for that purpose except by the consent of the landlord. When, therefore, he simulated that he desired the key for that purpose, but in reality for the purpose of stealing from the house, he resorted to a trick that was a fraud upon the landlord, and one that gave him no right of entry, and therefore no protection." J. H. B.

Mr. Muffett confronted the appellant, and accused him of taking goods from the store. Mr. Muffett testifies that the appellant admitted having done so. The appellant, however, denied that he took goods from the store upon these occasions, or at any other time.

It is argued by the appellant that it was error for the court to permit evidence relating to the padding of the invoice, or to the taking of the chamois skins on May 9, 1913, or of finding the secreted articles in and about the work bench of the appellant. It is contended that this was error because it permitted the state to prove an independent crime, and thereby prejudice the jury against the appellant. There can be no doubt that, as a general rule, evidence of other distinct criminal acts cannot be introduced to prove a defendant guilty of an independent crime charged against him. This court has frequently so held. But there are exceptions to this rule. The exceptions are well stated in the case of Collier v. State, — Miss. —, 64 So. 373, where it was said: "Upon the trial of an indictment, a previous crime committed by defendant can be proved only: (a) Where it is connected with the one charged in the indictment, and sheds light upon the motive of defendant; or (b) where it forms a part of a chain of facts so intimately connected that the whole must be heard in order to interpret its several parts; or (c) in cases of conspiracy, uttering forged instruments or counterfeit coin, and receiving stolen goods, for the sole purpose of showing a criminal intention."

This court has held to the same effect. In State v. Pittam, 32 Wash. 137, 72 Pac. 1042, it was said: "It is a well-established rule that it is not competent to show the commission by the defendant of other distinct crimes for the purpose of proving that he is guilty of the crime charged; but, for the purpose of construing the actions or of ascertaining the intent of the defendant in the commission of the acts proven, other independent culpable acts are sometimes admissible in evidence. . . . We think it was competent to show that in the general scheme he adopted in keeping his accounts with his employer, the result was the appropriation by him of the funds of the employer, not for the purpose of prejudicing a jury against him by proving the commission of independent crimes, but to throw light on his intentions in the perpetration of the particular transaction constituting the crime charged."

And in State v. Dana, 59 Wash. 30, 109 Pac. 191, we said: "Of course, if the offered testimony was relevant to the issues in this case, the fact that it tended to show the L.R.A.1915D.

commission of another and different crime would not exclude it."

And in State v. Leroy, 61 Wash. 405, 112 Pac. 635, we said: "Testimony otherwise relevant does not become incompetent because it may tend incidentally to show that the accused has committed another crime."

It is true the statute provides at Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2580 (P. C. 135, § 653), that every person who shall unlawfully break and enter any building where property is kept for use, sale, or deposit shall be deemed to have broken and entered with intent to commit a crime therein, but this does not prevent the state from showing the intent of the person breaking and entering. The effect of the evidence which was introduced was to show a course of conduct on the part of the appellant. The padding of the inventory, the concealment of goods which were afterwards taken away, the fact that the appellant entered the store when no one else was present, and out of hours, and took articles from the store, tended to show the intent of the appellant upon entering the store at unusual hours, and upon the occasion charged. We are clearly of the opinion that for the purpose of showing intent, the course of conduct of the appellant was properly in evidence in this case, and falls within the exception to the rule rather than within the rule.

It is next strenuously argued by the appellant that the court should have granted the motion for a directed verdict at the close of the state's evidence, and at the close of all of the evidence. This argument is based upon the fact that the appellant was furnished with a key to the premises, and therefore had a right to enter the building whenever he saw fit, and that there could be no breaking, and therefore no burglary, when the entry was with the consent of the owner of the building, or upon his invitation, express or implied. There can be no doubt that if the furnishing of the key to the building by the prosecuting witness authorized the appellant to enter the store at any time of the day or night, then there could be no unlawful breaking or entering. The evidence upon this point was sufficient to take the case to the jury. The prosecuting witness testified that he furnished a key to the appellant, but told him at the time that he was to open the store in the morning. It was stated that the opening time in the morning was about 7 o'clock. The closing time was in the evening about 6 o'clock. The authority of appellant to enter the store, according to this evidence, was the usual hours of work. There was some testimony offered on behalf of the appellant to the effect that the prosecuting witness knew that the defendant had entered the store on different occasions after the time, and no objections were made thereto, but these were special occasions when appellant worked overtime, so that the question of whether or not appellant's authority to enter the store before the regular hours for opening, or after the hours for closing, was a question for the jury to determine under the evidence in the case. The court very properly instructed the jury upon this point, as follows:

"If one having the right to do so goes into a building, that would not be breaking and entering, no matter what his object was in going into the building. One's right to enter a building may be general or limited. If general, then, he may go into the building at any time or for any purpose and the entry would not be wrongful; but if the right is limited, then an entry would be wrongful unless made for a purpose for which he had been given the right. It will be your duty to determine from the evidence in this case whether the right which the defendant had in going into the building was general or limited. If you find that the defendant's right to enter was general, that is, not restricted to purposes of his employment, then he could not be found guilty of burglary, no matter what his object may have been in going into the building. In order to prove the defendant guilty as charged in the information, it will be necessary for the state to show that the entry was wrongful by the evidence, and beyond a reasonable doubt, and to show that it was wrongful the state must show that the defendant's right to enter the building was not a general and unrestricted right, but one that was limited; and they must further show that the defendant entered the store on May 24th, for some purpose other than that for which he had a right to enter."

The instructions were not excepted to, and are apparently conceded by the appellant to have been proper. This was the principal question in the case. If the appellant had the right to enter the store by the use of his key at any time in the day or night, that is, had an unrestricted and unlimited right of entrance, he could not be guilty of the crime of burglary, even though he carried away the goods from the store. In such event the crime would be larceny, and not burglary. But if his right to enter was limited to the usual hours of employment, and after hours of employment he used the key for the purpose of entering the store with intent to unlawfully take articles therefrom, he was clearly guilty of burglary. 6 Cyc. 180, and cases there cited.

We are satisfied from the whole record L.R.A.1915D.

that the evidence offered was admissible in this case, and that there was sufficient to take the case to the jury, and that the court did not err in denying the motions made by the appellant.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Crow, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Parker, and Morris, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES F. BAIN, Appt.,

v.

FORT SMITH LIGHT & TRACTION COMPANY.

(— Ark. —, 172 S. W. 843.)

Municipal corporation — power to create right of action in favor of individual.

1. A municipality which has not reserved, in granting a street railway franchise, the right to create liability to individuals for injuries arising from its acts, cannot, by enacting an ordinance giving mail carriers a right of way in the street superior to street cars, create a right of action in favor of a mail carrier for injuries due to a breach of the ordinance by the railway company.

Same — ordinance — enforcement.

2. A municipal ordinance giving wagons carrying the United States mail the right of way in the street superior to street cars is to be enforced merely by fine for its violation, and not by private action by a mail carrier injured by its nonobservance.

Evidence — violation of municipal ordinance — negligence.

3. In an action by a mail carrier to hold a street car company liable for injury due to collision with its car, the fact that at the Note. — Violation of statute or ordinance giving one vehicle right of way over another as affecting liability for injury.

As to the validity of a statute or ordinance giving superior rights in public streets to certain vehicles, see Louisville R. Co. v. Louisville Fire & Life Protective Assn. and note thereto in 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 600.

As to violation of statute or ordinance in relation to blocking railroad crossing as affecting liability for injury, see note to Denton v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 820.

Upon the general question as to violation of police ordinance as ground of private action, see note to Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co. 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 186; and as to private time of the collision the car was being operated in violation of an ordinance giving mail wagons the right of way may be shown as tending to establish negligence.

Trial — instruction — duty of street car driver.

4. A requested instruction in an action by a mail carrier injured by collision with a street car that the city ordinance gave the mail wagon the right of way, and that plaintiff, as the driver of the wagon, had the right to assume that the motorman, if he discovered, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered, the approach of the wagon, would accord the right of way to the wagon, is argumentative and calculated to mislead the jury.

Same — care by motorman — lookout.

5. An instruction in an action to recover damages for injury by collision with a street car, that the verdict should be for defendant if the motorman used ordinary care in the management of the car at and near the place of the injury, includes a requirement of constant lookout for persons on the track.

Same — conflict — ability to harmonize.

6. Instructions should not be considered as in conflict if they can be harmonized.

action for violation of statute not expressly conferring it, see note to Wolf v. Smith, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338.

Generally as to the rules of the road governing vehicles proceeding in opposite directions, see note to Smith v. Barnard, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 322.

As to rules of the road governing vehicles proceeding in the same direction, see note to Hackett v. Alamito Sanitary Dairy Co. 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 337.

As to rules of the road governing vehicles at intersection of streets and when turning across street, see note to Molin v. Wark, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346.

As to rule of the road as affecting street cars and vehicles meeting or passing, see note to Foster v. Curtis, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188.

The cases passing upon the effect of a violation of an ordinance giving fire apparatus going to a fire a superior right of way with reference to liability for collision with a street car are presented in the note to Dole v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626.

While the cases in the present note hold that the violation of a statute or ordinance giving a vehicle a superior right of way over another vehicle may be shown in evidence, in an action for injury, as a circumstance for the consideration of the jury from which negligence may be inferred in determining whether the parties were or were not guilty of negligence, attention is called to the fact that there is considerable conflict among the cases as to what extent a violation of a statute or ordinance may affect liability for injury. Thus it has been held that a violation of a statute or ordinance which is clearly for the benefit and protection of persons imposes a legal duty, L.R.A.1915D.

Street railway — driving in front of car — liability for injury.

7. Notwithstanding an ordinance giving wagons carrying United States mail a right of way over street cars on the public streets, the one in charge of such wagon, who, while looking at an approaching car, drives in front of it, cannot hold the railroad company liable for the resulting injury unless the motorman was negligent in failing to use due care in endeavoring to stop the car after discovering his peril.

Same — knowingly driving in front of approaching car — negligence of motorman — effect.

8. One who negligently drives onto a street car track in front of an approaching car cannot hold the railroad company liable for injuries due to the resulting collision, although the motorman was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, unless the motorman might, by the exercise of proper care, have avoided the collision after discovering his peril.

Appeal — order of introducing evidence — discretion.

9. It is not such an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to refuse to admit the neglect to discharge which gives any person injured thereby a right of action against persons violating its provisions. But if the duty enjoined is one due to the public at large only, no right of action accrues to an individual from a failure to discharge such duty. See notes in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 186; 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338; and 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 820.

In numerous cases it is held that a violation of an ordinance or statute is negligence per se. In other cases it is held that a violation of an ordinance or statute is only evidence of negligence to be considered by the jury, as is held in Bain v. Ft. Smith Light & Traction Co. It should be observed, however, that the cases quite generally hold that the violation of a statute or ordinance must be the proximate cause of the injury in order that it may be available in an action for the injury complained of.

A municipal ordinance giving ambulances the right of way over all other vehicles is admissible in evidence, in an action by an ambulance surgeon for personal injuries sustained by collision with a street car in a city street, as the violation of the ordinance is some evidence of the street railway company's negligence. Buy's v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 App. Div. 11, 61 N. Y. Supp. 113.

Under a statute (chap. 186, New York Laws 1879) giving an ambulance the right of way as against an ice wagon, the driver of the ambulance has the right to assume that the driver of the ice wagon will pay proper heed to the ringing of the ambulance bell and the driver's shouting. Byrne v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 24 Jones & S. 337, 4 N. Y. Supp. 531, affirmed without opinion in 121 N. Y. 700, 24 N. E. 1100.

A municipal ordinance which gives the right of way at street intersections to ve-evidence in rebuttal which, under the pleadings, is part of plaintiff's case in chief, for the nonintroduction of which in proper order no adequate excuse is offered so as to require a reversal.

(January 4, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Sebastian County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

The appellant was a United States mail collector, and under an ordinance of the city of Ft. Smith, in case of conflict, had the preferential right of way over the appellee in the use of the streets. While in the discharge of his duties, he drove his cart to the mail box at Manhattan Café on Garrison avenue, stopped the cart about 4 feet from the box, which was at the curb, gathered the mail from the box, and as he locked the box his horse started across the street, as he was in the habit of doing, to the mail box on the opposite side. Appellant jumped into the cart when same was 10 or 12 feet from the curb, and about the middle of the street between the curb and the first car track. At this time the street car was at or crossing Fifth street, about 75 feet away. Appellant did not know the speed the car was going. It increased its speed after crossing Fifth street, but appellant thought the motorman would check the speed and control the car so as not to run over him. This the motorman could have done had he applied the brakes in time, but the motorman did not check up the speed of the car until he was within 10 or 12 feet of appellant's cart, when he made a hurried effort to do so. Appellant's wagon nearly cleared the track, but the hind wheel was struck by the car, causing appellant's horse and cart to be dragged against the first trolley post east of the point of contact, which was more than 50 feet from where appellee's car struck the cart of appellant. Appellant was thrown hicles moving north and south over those going east and west is admissible in evidence in an action for damages caused by a collision at a crossing. H. E. Taylor & Co. v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 84 N. Y. Supp. 282. The exclusion of this evidence when offered by the defendant for the purpose of showing contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff was held to constitute reversible error in the above case. The court said: "Disregard of the duly established rule of the road would not necessarily constitute contributory negligence in the driver, but, if found, it would be a circumstance within the consideration of the jurors, as every man proceeding lawfully may rightfully assume that others will confirm their conduct to the requirements of statute, and regulations having the force of statute."

So, in Elbing Brewing Co. v. Linch, 80 Misc. 517, 141 N. Y. Supp. 480, it was said, in holding such an ordinance admissible in evidence in an action for injuries caused by a collision at a street crossing, that "the question of right of way had an important bearing, not alone upon the question of defendant's negligence, but upon the freedom of the plaintiff's chauffeur from contributory negligence."

In McCarragher v. Proal, 114 App. Div. 470, 100 N. Y. Supp. 208, it was held that when a municipal ordinance gives the right of way at street intersections to vehicles moving north and south over those going east and west, it is the duty of those moving in either of the latter directions and meeting those moving at right angles, to wait until the latter have passed; and a failure to do so, when a collision happens, is evidence of negligence for the jury.

In Quinn v. New York City R. Co. 94 N. Y. Supp. 560, it was held in an action for L.R.A.1915D.

injuries caused by a collision with a street car that a city ordinance which gave the street car a superior right of way was admissible as bearing upon the degree of caution imposed upon the motorman under the circumstances.

In Connor v. Electric Traction Co. 173 Pa. 602, 34 Atl. 238, it was held that the disobedience of a municipal ordinance regulating the movements of vehicles, and giving a right of way to those moving in certain directions at street intersections, is not necessarily negligence, but only evidence of negligence.

Although not strictly within the scope of the present note, attention is here called to Foulke v. Wilmington City R. Co. 5 Penn. (Del.) 363, 60 Atl. 973, where it was held, in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by a collision with a street car at a street crossing, that the uniform usage or practice of the street car company to stop its cars at crossings to permit funeral processions to pass without interruption, known to the driver of the injured team, and relied upon by him while going to a funeral at the time of the accident, may be taken into consideration by the jury in estimating the degree of diligence required by the driver in looking out for an approaching car before attempting to cross the railroad track, as he might reasonably presume or infer the continuance of that usage; but that the failure to observe such usage would not amount to negligence on the part of the street car company, and such usage would not relieve the driver of reasonable care in making the crossing. To the same effect is White v. Wilmington City R. Co. 6 Penn. (Del.) 105, 63 Atl. 931, which was an action growing out of the same accident. A. L. R.

against an iron rod around the top of the cart, and in this way he alleges that he received the injuries of which he complained. The distance from the west side of Fifth street, where the car first stopped or slowed up, was 93 feet from a point opposite the Manhattan box; the cart being struck a few feet west of that point. The appellant's official and usual route in collecting the mail was to go from the Manhattan box to the box on the corner of Fifth and Garrison avenue on the opposite side. That this was appellant's usual and official route was known to the motorman. From the curb to the first rail of the track was a little over 35 feet. The track was about 5 feet wide, and the horse and cart were about 15 feet long. There was nothing to obstruct the view of the motorman, and he could have seen the appellant collecting mail at the Manhattan box and could have seen appellant's cart in starting from the Manhattan box to the box on the opposite side of the street. The appellant sued the appellee for damages, alleging that its motorman was running the car at a dangerous and high rate of speed; that the motorman did not sound any bell or alarm; that he could have seen appellant by exercising ordinary care; that he ran upon appellant without warning, and by reason of these acts of negligence appellant was run down and seriously injured. The appellee denied the allegations of negligence and set up that the appellant was driving his cart in violation of the city ordinances, and that the collision was caused solely through the negligence of the appellant.

The testimony on behalf of appellant tended to establish the facts as above stated. The testimony on behalf of the appellee tended to show that appellant caught up with and jumped into his mail cart when same was on appellee's car track, directly in front of the street car; that the motorman, when the horse's neck was about across the first rail of the car track, applied the brakes and reversed the current to stop the car, at which time the same was 30 or 35 feet away, going at a speed of 4 or 5 miles an hour, the current having been shut off, and the car was being carried by its own momentum; that the car stopped within 2 feet of where it hit appellant's cart; that the motorman attempted to stop the car as soon as he discovered appellant's dangerous position, but was unable to stop it in time to prevent the collision. The car was a light single truck car, with one passenger. The motorman applied the brakes as soon as the neck of the horse crossed the first rail, sounded the bell, and made a good stop. Appellant was not thrown out of the cart, L.R.A.1915D.

which was pushed up to within 2 feet of the trolley post, but stepped out of the same and gathered up his mail, complained only of having his hand slightly hurt, went away, and afterwards during the day was seen gathering up the mail on his route. The testimony on behalf of the appellant tended to show that the injuries of which he complained at the time of the trial were produced by the collision, while the testimony on behalf of the appellee tended to show that the injuries and suffering of which he complained at the time of the trial were from other causes, and that appellant, by reason of the collision, only received a slight injury to his hand. The above were the issues and substantially the facts adduced in evidence on behalf of the respective parties, and upon which the case was sent to the jury, whose verdict was in favor of the appellee, and from the judgment rendered in appellee's favor this appeal has been duly prosecuted. Appellant complains of the rulings of the court in granting and refusing prayers for instructions and upon the admission and rejection of testimony. We will discuss the grounds urged for reversal in the opinion.

Mr. Ira D. Oglesby for appellant.

Messrs. Hill, Brizzolara, & Fitzhugh, for appellee:

The ordinance giving United States mail wagons the right of way created no liability upon the part of the company, nor did it give the plaintiff a cause of action.

1 Nellis, Street Railways, p. 493; Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 507; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baker, 126 Ala. 135, 28 So. 87; Louisiana & N. R. Co. v. Dalton, 102 Ky. 290, 43 S. W. 432.

If the words in the instruction, "carefully manage the car," did not include keeping a lookout for parties approaching the track, then it was the duty of the plaintiff to make specific objection to these words and point out to the court the defect therein.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Carter, 93 Ark. 589, 126 S. W. 99; Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. Duncan, 104 Ark. 409, 148 S. W. 647; Pettus v. Kerr, 87 Ark. 396, 112 S. W. 886.

It was the duty of the plaintiff to look and listen before going on the street car track.

Little Rock R. & Electric Co. v. Sledge, 108 Ark. 95, 158 S. W. 1096; Joyce, Electric Law, § 650.

If the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the motorman was only required to exercise ordinary care after discovering plaintiff's peril.

Barry v. Kansas City Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 77 Ark. 401, 91 S. W. 748; Johnson v. Stewart, 62 Ark. 104, 34 S. W. 889; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Bryant, 81 Ark. 368, 99 S. W. 693.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The appellant asked the court to tell the jury, in his prayer No. 4, that the city ordinance gave United States mail wagons when in use collecting mail the right of way, and that the appellant, as the driver of such wagon, had the right to assume that appellee's motorman, if he discovered, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have discovered, the approach of the mail wagon, would accord it and the driver the right of way. The court refused this prayer, but instructed the jury as follows: "The motorman and the driver of the mail wagon are presumed to have been familiar with the ordinance giving the United States mail wagons the right of way, and their conduct must be judged in the light of this provision."

And further, at appellant's request, prayer No. 10: "The jury, in determining whether defendant was guilty of negligence and whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, may take into consideration the ordinance introduced in evidence so far as same affects the rights of plaintiff and defendant."

The court further instructed the jury on its own motion No. A as follows: "The ordinance of the city of Ft. Smith introduced in evidence does not create any liability against the defendant and is only to be considered by the jury in passing upon the question as to whether there was negligence upon the part of either the plaintiff or defendant."

Did the court err? It is not within any of the general or special powers conferred upon municipal corporations in this state to create a right of action between third persons, nor to enlarge the common-law or statutory liability of citizens among themselves. This could only be done by contract between the municipality and the company sought to be charged with the violation of an ordinance alleged to be for the benefit of a citizen. Kirby's Dig. chap. 115; Holwerston v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 157 Mo. 216, 50 L.R.A. 850, 57 S. W. 770. Such power is not implied from any of the powers expressly conferred. A municipal corporation has no powers except those expressly conferred and those fairly implied for the attainment of declared purposes. Morrilton Waterworks Improv. Dist. v. Earl, 71 Ark. 4, 69 S. W. 577, 71 S. W. 666. See also Winchester v. Redmond, 93 Va. 711, 57 Am. St. Rep. 822, 25 S. E. 1001.

The city had the express power to authorize the construction of street railways (Kirby's Dig. § 5443), and in the ordinance granting the charter to the appellee the city could undoubtedly have reserved to itself the right as a condition or consideration for the granting of the franchise,—the power to pass ordinances for the protection of persons and property of individuals, and creating a liability in their favor against the company for a violation of such ordinances; and the company, if it accepted the franchise with these provisions, would be bound thereby and liable in damages to individuals for a violation of such ordinances. It is not shown that the city of Ft. Smith reserved to itself such power as a consideration for the grant of its franchise to the appellee, or that the company accepted the franchise with such power reserved as a consideration therefor. The violation of the ordinance, therefore, could not become the basis of the liability for personal injuries. See Byington v. St. Louis R. Co. 147 Mo. 673, 49 S. W. 876.

We have no statute creating a liability against street railway companies in favor of parties injured for breaches of ordinances passed for the protection of persons or property, and there is no statute conferring upon municipal corporations the power to pass such ordinances, as was the case in Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369. Therefore no power existed in the city to create a liability in favor of appellant against appellee for a violation of the ordinance under review, and, if the ordinance had created such liability, it would have been void for lack of power to enact it.

A city, under its general police power over the streets, could pass any reasonable and proper regulations prescribing the manner in which the franchise of street railways should be enjoyed, not inconsistent or in conflict with their charter rights. 36 Cyc. 1447, and note.

As we construe the ordinance, it does not undertake to create a liability in favor of United States mail collectors against the appellee for a violation of its terms. It is only a police regulation, to be enforced solely by fine, and was designed primarily for the benefit of the general public, to insure the United States mail free course. True, it operates incidentally to protect the mail carts and the persons of mail collectors while engaged in their duties, but it was not enacted for their special personal benefit in the sense of creating a right of action in their favor against the street railway company for a violation of the ordinance.

What effect, then, should be given the ordinance in this case?

In common-law actions for negligent injuries, where, at the time of the injury, a city ordinance is being violated, in some jurisdictions it is held that violation of the city ordinance is not evidence of negligence, and that the ordinance is not admissible in evidence. See Rockford City R. Co. v. Blake, 173 Ill. 354, 64 Am. St. Rep. 122, 50 N. E. 1070. See also Ford v. Paducah City R. Co. 124 Ky. 488, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1093, 124 Am. St. Rep. 412, 99 S. W. 355. In other jurisdictions it is held that the operation of cars in violation of a city ordinance is negligence per se. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Traction Co. 60 W. Va. 306, 55 S. E. 1016, 9 Ann. Cas. 836; Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. 194 Mo. 1, 92 S. W. 390; Memphis Street R. Co. v. Haynes, 112 Tenn. 712, 81 S. W. 374; Dallas Consol. Electric Street R. Co. v. Ison, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 83 S. W. 408. But in other jurisdictions it is held that, in a common-law action against street railway companies for injury alleged to have been caused by the company's negligence, if, at the time of the injury, the street car producing it was being operated in a manner that violated an ordinance of the city, such fact may be shown as tending to establish the allegations of negligence. The rule as last stated is supported by the weight of authority and the better reason. Without stating the rule or citing any authority to support it, we recognized and approved it in the recent case of Little Rock R. & Electric Co. v. Sledge, 108 Ark. 95-110, 158 S. W. 1096. Other authorities are as follows: Davis v. Durham Traction Co. 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617; Henderson v. Durham Traction Co. 132 N. C. 779, 44 S. E. 598; Meek v. Pennsylvania Co. 38 Ohio St. 632. See also Cumming v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 104 N. Y. 669, 674, 10 N. E. 858; Connor v. Electric Traction Co. 173 Pa. 602, 34 Atl. 238; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 534; Harrison v. Sutter Street R. Co. 116 Cal. 165, 47 Pac. 1019, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 403; Mahan v. Union Depot Street R. & Transfer Co. 34 Minn. 29, 24 N. W. 293; Hanlon v. South Boston Horse R. Co. 129 Mass. 310. See also Caswell v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 190 Mass. 527, 77 N. E. 380; Glassey v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 185 Mass. 315, 70 N. E. 199, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 86; Stevens v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 184 Mass. 476, 69 N. E. 338, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 338; Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Corletto, 100 Va. 353, 41 S. E. 740; and note to Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Traction Co. 9 Ann. Cas. 840-842, where the above cases are collated.

In a case where, at the time of the injury, a railroad train was being run at a greater rate of speed than that prescribed by a city ordinance, Mr. Justice Lamar, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in L.R.A.1915D.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 418, 36 L. ed. 485, 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, 683, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 659, said: "But perhaps the better and more generally accepted rule is that such an act on the part of the railroad company is always to be considered by the jury as at least a circumstance from which negligence may be inferred in determining whether the company was or was not guilty of negligence"—citing cases.

Now the court, in permitting the ordinance to be introduced, and in its instructions based thereon, conformed its rulings to the law as above announced and approved.

The prayer for instruction No. 4 was argumentative and calculated to mislead the jury.

In modifying and giving as modified, appellant's prayer No. 5, and in giving appellant's prayer No. 10 as requested, and in giving instruction No. A on its own motion, the court declared the law strictly in accord with the rule as above approved, and its rulings gave to the appellant the utmost to which he was entitled.

II. Instruction No. 5, given at the instance of appellee, was as follows: "The court instructs you that if you believe from the evidence that defendant's motorman in charge of its car used ordinary care in the management of said car at and near the place where plaintiff was injured, and that, as soon as he saw plaintiff in a position of danger, said motorman used such care and caution in stopping said car as to avoid injury to plaintiff as a person of ordinary care and prudence would have exercised under such circumstances, then your verdict must be for the defendant."

Appellant contends that this instruction was erroneous because it only required the motorman to use ordinary care after he saw plaintiff in a place of danger. The instruction, taken as a whole, is not open to this objection. The instruction required the jury to find that the motorman used ordinary care in the management of his car at and near the place of the injury. Ordinary care in the management of a street railway car requires a constant lookout to be kept for persons upon the track. This is a well-recognized duty of motormen under the law pertaining to the management of street railways and the instruction as offered, and the language used in the instruction, when fairly construed, must have conveyed the idea to the jury that such was the duty of the motorman. But if there was any doubt about it, the jury could not have been misled, for in prayer No. 13, given at appellant's request, the court told the jury that it was the duty of the motorman to keep a reasonable lookout and to exercise reasonable care to discover the approach of vehicles towards the car track at such places as said vehicles had the right to cross, and to take reasonable and timely precaution to prevent striking or colliding with same. These instructions, when considered together, as they should be, could not possibly have misled the jury.

Instructions should not be considered as in conflict where they can be harmonized, and instruction No. 13, given at the instance of the appellant, should be taken as not in conflict, but as supplementary to and explanatory of, what is meant in instruction No. 5, by the use of the words "ordinary care in the management of his car," etc. But if the words "ordinary care in the management of his car" did not include the duty upon the part of the motorman to keep a lookout for persons and property on the track, then it was a defect in the verbiage, which should have been reached by a specific objection. See St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Barnett, 65 Ark. 255, 45 S. W. 550, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 115; Pettus v. Kerr, 87 Ark. 396, 112 S. W. 886; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Carter, 93 Ark. 589, 126 S. W. 99; Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. Duncan, 104 Ark. 409, 148 S. W. 647.

Instruction No. 6, given at the instance of appellee, of which appellant complains, is as follows: "The court instructs you that it was the duty of plaintiff before going on or attempting to cross the tracks of defendant company, to look and listen for approaching cars, and if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff failed to do so, or if you believe that plaintiff saw or could have seen the approaching car, and drove or permitted his horse to go upon the track in front of said car, then you should find for the defendant, unless you further find from the evidence that defendant's motorman, after he saw plaintiff in a perilous position, failed to use such care and caution in stopping said car as a person of ordinary care and prudence would have exercised under like circumstances."

The appellant contends that the instruction was erroneous in telling the jury that it was the duty of plaintiff, before going on or attempting to cross the track of defendant, to look and listen for approaching cars, and further erroneous in telling the jury that if plaintiff saw or could have seen the approaching car, and drove or permitted his horse to go upon the track in front of said car, etc.

The undisputed facts show that the appellant's view of appellee's approaching car was unobstructed. There were no circumstances developed by the proof to prevent him from looking for the car or to excuse him for not doing so. The instruction, when viewed in the light of the uncontroverted facts, therefore, was in conformity with the law as announced by this court in Little Rock R. & Electric Co. v. Sledge, 108 Ark. 95-110, 158 S. W. 1096. Moreover, the instruction could not have been prejudicial in the particulars urged by the appellant, because the appellant himself testified that he was looking at the car; that he could see the motorman, and the motorman could see him; that he was looking at the motorman for some distance before the wagon was struck, and continued to look at the car before it struck his wagon; that part of the instruction which told the jury that, if plaintiff saw the approaching car and drove in front of it, then the motorman was only required to use such care to prevent the injury as a person of ordinary prudence would have exercised under like circumstances, in effect told the jury that, if appellant was guilty of contributory negligence, then the motorman was only required to use ordinary care and prudence, after discovering his peril, to avoid injuring him. This is a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts.

Instruction No. 8 was as follows: "It was the duty of plaintiff to keep a lookout for cars before going upon defendant's track immediately in front of its moving car, and, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff failed to keep such lookout for defendant's cars and went upon defendant's track in front of an approaching car, then the court instructs you that the defendant would not be liable in this action, although you might believe that its motorman carelessly failed to discover plaintiff's peril in time to have avoided a collision. If plaintiff was guilty of negligence in going upon defendant's track, then defendant's servant was only required to exercise ordinary care for plaintiff's safety after actually discovering him in a place of danger."

The above instruction, like instruction No. 6, preceding it, correctly declared the law relating to the liability of street railway companies, in cases where the evidence proves or tends to prove that the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence. In all such cases street railway companies are liable only where their servants in charge of the car fail to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury after the plaintiff's perilous position has been discovered. Johnson v. Stewart, 62 Ark. 164, 34 S. W. 889; Hot Springs Street R. Co. v. Johnson, 64 Ark. 421, 42 S. W. 833, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 323. See also Hot Springs Street R. Co. v. Hildreth, 72 Ark. 572, 82 S. W. 245. The court did not, in instruction 8, tell the jury that appellant was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law; it submitted the issue to the jury.

The lookout statute of May 26, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 275), amending § 6607 of Kirby's Digest, as construed by this court in Central R. Co. v. Lindley, 105 Ark. 294, 151 S. W. 246, and St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Gibson, 107 Ark. 431, 155 S. W. 510, and other cases, has no application to street railways.

The same may be said of instruction No. 14. The objection that this instruction assumes as a fact that "plaintiff got into his cart and made no effort to avoid a collision" is not well taken. The instruction is hypothetical, and states, "if you find from the evidence," etc., "that the plaintiff got into the cart."

The criticism of instruction No. 11, in regard to the burden of proof, and which told the jury that if the testimony is equally balanced on a certain point, leaving their minds in doubt, their verdict should be for the defendant, etc., is not obnoxious to the criticism that appellant makes of it; but, taken as a whole, it, in effect, tells the jury that the plaintiff must establish the material allegations of his complaint by a preponderance of the evidence.

Appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to grant certain prayers for instructions in regard to expert testimony, but the court had already given, at appellant's request, an instruction which contained all the law that appellant was entitled to on that subject. We are convinced that the instructions, as a whole, fairly and correctly submitted the issues to the jury.

III. The appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to permit him to prove by certain witnesses the distance in which a car going at the speed fixed by appellee's witnesses could be stopped, and that such stop could be made in a distance of from 4 to 6 feet. Appellant offered this testimony in rebuttal. Under the issues raised by the pleadings, the testimony was competent and proper to be introduced by the appellant in chief. The appellant had alleged that the car was being run at a dangerous and high rate of speed, was not supplied with proper power brakes by which it could be properly and quickly stopped, and that if the motorman had properly applied the brakes as he should have done the appellant would not have been run down and injured. The answer denied these allegations. To sustain these allegations of negligence it was competent for the appellant to prove, and the burden was upon him to show, that the motorman did not make a good stop. The offered testimony would have tended to show that appellee's motorman did not make a good stop. Appellant went partly into the proof on this subject, and, in fairness to the appellee, he should have discovered all that he then had to produce.

"When the burden of proving any matter is thrown upon a party by the pleadings, he must generally introduce, in the first instance, all the evidence upon which he relies; and he cannot, after going into part of his case, reserve the residue of his evidence for a subsequent opportunity." Jones Ev. § 809.

"Rebuttal testimony should rebut the testimony advanced by the other side, and should consist of nothing which might properly have been advanced as proof in chief." 2 Elliott, Ev. §§ 947, 948.

While the court, in its discretion, might have permitted the evidence to be introduced at the time it was offered, yet, since it was not rebuttal evidence, and no showing is made as to why it was not brought forward in chief, nothing to indicate that appellant was not in possession of the evidence at the time he was developing his case in chief, nothing to show that it had been discovered only after appellee had brought forward its testimony, the court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting it. It was within the discretion of the court to do so, and there was no error in its ruling. 2 Elliott, Ev. § 948, and cases cited in note 20; Underhill, Ev. p. 551.

The record, upon the whole, is free from prejudicial error, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS

v.

JOHN A. ARNOLD.

(35 R. I. 456, 87 Atl. 17.)

Pleading — statutory liability of directors — failure to file certificate of stock payment.

1. To render directors of a corporation

Note. — Liability of directors under statutes purporting to make them liable for contracting debts in excess of a fixed limit.

I. Introductory, 1029.

II. Forms of statute, 1030.

III. General rules of construction, 1031.

IV. Nature of liability.

a. In general, 1031.

b. Whether joint or several, 1033.

personally liable for failure to file a certificate of payment of the capital stock under a statute compelling them to do so within a certain time after payment of the last instalment of the stock "fixed and limited" by statute or vote of the corporation, the complaint must show that the capital was fixed and limited, and that the last instalment had been paid.

Corporation — director's liability — debt in excess of capital — bankruptcy dividend.

2. The statutory liability to creditors of directors of a corporation for contracting debts in excess of the paid-up capital is not affected by the fact that the debt had been reduced under the paid-up capital by dividends in bankruptcy proceeding.

(June 20, 1913.)

V. What directors are liable.

- a. Necessity that directors be such when excess occurs, 1033.
- b. Necessity of assent.
 1. In general, 1034.
 2. What constitutes assent, 1036.

VI. When liability arises.

- a. In general, 1037.
- b. Determination of amount of paid-in capital stock, subscribed capital stock, etc., 1037.
- c. Determination of amount of debts.
 1. In general, 1039.
 2. What debts included.
 - (a) In general, 1039.
 - (b) Ordinary debts, 1040.
 - (c) Bonded indebtedness, 1040.
 - (d) Mortgage indebtedness, 1040.
 - (e) Debts due a director, 1040.
 - (f) Debts due a stockholder, 1041.
 - (g) Advances made by factors, 1041.
 - (h) Certificates of deposit, 1042.
 - (i) Torts, 1042.
 3. Evidence as to debts, 1043.
- d. Effect of waste or destruction of assets by assignee, 1043.
- e. Effect of reduction of debts, 1043.

VII. To whom liability extends.

- a. In general, 1044.
- b. To what creditors.
 1. In general, 1045.
 2. Doctrine that liability extends only to creditors whose debts are contracted in excess of fixed limit, 1045.

VIII. Enforcement of the liability.

- a. Who may enforce, 1046.
- b. Where liability may be enforced, 1047.
- c. When liability may be enforced, 1048.

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties made during the trial of an action to enforce the statutory liability of a director in the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, which resulted in a verdict in defendant's favor. Sustained in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry E. Tiepke, Henry M. Boss, Jr., and Louis W. Dunn, for plaintiff:

Defendant is liable notwithstanding payments by the trustee in bankruptcy reduced the debts below the statutory limit.

Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232; Re O'Connor, 21 R. I. 465, 79 Am. St. Rep. 814, 44 Atl. 591; Sayles v. Bates, 15 R. I. 342, 5 Atl. 497; Flint v. Boston Woven

IX. Applicability of statute of limitations.

- a. In general, 1050.
- b. When statute begins to run, 1051.

X. Effect of expiration of corporate life, 1052.

I. Introductory.

As indicated in the title, the liability of directors under statutes which simply limit the indebtedness of the corporation without expressly making them liable in case this indebtedness is exceeded is not discussed. In this connection it has been held that where the statute limits the indebtedness, but does not make the directors liable for debts contracted in excess of the limit, they are not liable, there being no such liability at common law. Frost Mfg. Co. v. Foster, 76 Iowa, 535, 41 N. W. 212. It has been stated that the liability is of purely statutory origin. Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith, — Miss. —, 64 So. 929.

See in this connection the Kentucky cases discussed in II. infra.

The liability is limited to the amount of excess. This is assumed in the cases. It was expressly admitted in White v. How, 3 McLean, 111, Fed. Cas. No. 17,548.

That such a liability continues after the death of the directors against their property in the hands of an executor or administrator is apparently provided by statute in Massachusetts. Hudson v. J. B. Parker Mach. Co. 173 Mass. 242, 53 N. E. 867. See McComb v. Kellogg, 16 N. Y. S. R. 16, 1 N. Y. Supp. 206, infra, IV. a, in this connection.

The statute does not apply in case of an association exercising corporate powers without legal authority, but applies only in case of de jure corporations. Gay v. Kohlsaat, 223 Ill. 260, 79 N. E. 77.

Such statutes may be abrogated or repealed by other statutes extending the power of the corporation to create debts.

Thus, a statute fixing the maximum limit of corporate indebtedness at one half the capital stock paid in, and making the directors liable for any excess of debts and

Hose & Rubber Co. 183 Mass. 114, 66 N. E. 592; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398; Leighton v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 51, 9 L.R.A. 187, 20 Atl. 14.

In accordance with the Leighton Case, supra.

Margarge & Green Co. v. Ziegler, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 438; Frank P. Miller Paper Co. v. York Coated Paper Co. 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 315.

Messrs. William A. Spicer, Jr., Frank H. Swan, and Edwards & Angell, for defendant:

A party who seeks to enforce the liability of corporate officers under a statute must allege and prove affirmatively every fact, default, or contingency upon which his right to recover depends.

liabilities above this limit, is repealed as to a corporation which is authorized by the legislature of the state to issue its bonds and notes to such an amount as, in addition to means derived from its stock, should be necessary and sufficient for the construction and equipment of its road. Niagara Bridge Works v. Jose, 59 N. H. 81.

So, a statute providing that the capital stock or indebtedness, or both, of any corporation created by general or special law, may, with the consent of the persons or bodies corporate holding the larger amount of the value of its stock, be increased to such an amount in the aggregate of each as it shall be necessary to accomplish and carry on and enlarge the business and purposes of the corporation, repeals an existing statute limiting the amount of indebtedness of the corporation, and making the directors liable for any excess over this limit. Miller v. York Coated Paper Co. 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 538.

The statute governing the liability of directors was held repealed in Rice v. Kennedy, 76 Vt. 380, 57 Atl. 971; therefore the directors who had assented to an excess of indebtedness were held not liable.

II. Forms of statute.

There are two general forms of statutory provisions governing this question. First: There is the form which provides in substance that in case of an excess of debts over a stated limit, the directors shall be liable thereafter.

Second: Another form prohibits the contracting of debts above a stated limit, and then provides that in case of excess the directors shall be liable thereafter.

The variations of the statutes in other respects are numerous. The limit of debts is variously fixed at "50 per cent of the capital stock," "the paid-in capital stock," "the subscribed capital stock," "the solvent stock," and in some instances several times the capital stock.

Again, the statutes vary in making the directors liable generally; in making them liable generally, but providing that dis-

Nassau Bank v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 478; Continental Nat. Bank v. Buford, 107 Fed. 188; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398; Chambers v. Lewis, 28 N. Y. 454; Whitney v. Cammann, 137 N. Y. 342, 33 N. E. 305; Anfenger v. Anzeiger Pub. Co. 9 Colo. 377, 12 Pac. 400; 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 76; 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 1346, 1798.

"After the payment of the last installment" means after payment of the entire capital (fixed or increased).

Austin v. Berlin, 13 Colo. 198, 22 Pac. 433; Clow v. Brown, 150 Ind. 185, 48 N. E. 1034, 49 N. E. 1057; Leighton v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 51, 9 L.R.A. 187, 20 Atl. 14; Providence Steam-Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 101 U. S. 188, 25 L. ed. 786; 10 Cyc. 853; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398.

sending directors may be relieved of this liability. Others impose a liability only upon assenting directors, or upon directors who contracted the debt, or upon directors who consented to the indebtedness, or directors under whose administration the excess happened.

The liability is usually to the creditors of the corporation, but it has been fixed in favor of the corporation itself, and to the creditors in case of dissolution.

Many other variations in the statutes will be noticed in the discussion, infra. Many of the questions which arise within the scope of the present note are answered by the statute governing the case. In fact, a decision is valuable only in so far as the statute construed is similar to the one governing the case in which the user may be interested. Consequently, any examination of the question here annotated should begin with an examination of the statute governing the case in which the user may be interested. No attempt has been made in the note to set out all statutes governing the question, but only those discussed by the courts. There are doubtless many statutes that have never been construed by the courts, and it is doubtless a fact that many of the decisions have been rendered inapplicable even in the jurisdiction in which rendered by changes in the statute. The necessity for first examining the statute thus appears.

Certain forms of statutes do not expressly make the directors liable for incurring an excess indebtedness, but, after limiting the indebtedness, provide that the directors are liable for any intentional fraud for failing or refusing to comply substantially with the articles of incorporation. Under such a statute it was held in Stafford v. Cain, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 639, that directors who knowingly incurred an indebtedness in excess of the prescribed limit were guilty of an intentional fraud within the meaning of the statute, and a creditor whose debt was created with the knowledge on the part of the directors that the indebtedness had already reached the limit prescribed, and who failed to make his debt out of the corporate

The statute terminates directors' liability for a debt contracted while the indebtedness exceeds the paid-in capital, upon the reduction of such indebtedness to the amount of said capital.

Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. 183 Mass. 114, 66 N. E. 592; Slater v. Taylor, 146 Ill. App. 97, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271; Leighton v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 51, 9 L.R.A. 187, 20 Atl. 14; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097; Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232.

Dividends in bankruptcy are a reduction within the statute.

Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co.

property, could recover from the directors, and it was held no protection to them that they believed that the debt would be paid. Approved in Gunther v. Baskett Coal Co. 107 Ky. 44, 52 S. W. 931.

Nor does the fact that the existing indebtedness is secured by mortgage, and is therefore of record, charge the creditor with notice that the indebtedness had already exceeded the limit prescribed by the articles of incorporation. Stafford v. Cain, supra.

Under this statute directors who turn the management of the corporation over to a managing officer who runs the business without the knowledge or control of the directors concerning the creation of liabilities in excess of a charter limit, and who, upon their attention being called to the fact that an excess indebtedness had been incurred, ratified the same by giving a note therefor, are liable under such statute. Randolph v. Ballard County Bank, 142 Ky. 145, 134 S. W. 165.

That they must be directors at the time the debt was incurred, under the Kentucky form of statute, is held in Gunther v. Baskett Coal Co. supra.

III. General rules of construction.

A rule sustained by the practically uniform current of authorities is that such statutes as are the subject of this note are to be strictly construed. Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521, 23 N. E. 1007; Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880; Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271; Walker v. Birchard, 82 Iowa, 388, 48 N. W. 71.

It has been stated that, at least, the liability of the directors should clearly appear. Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875.

Every intendment and presumption is in favor of the director, who is to be held liable only on full and strict proof of all the facts by the statute made essential to create the liability. Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

The rule of strict construction is applied to such statutes by some courts for the reason L.R.A.1915D.

183 Mass. 114, 66 N. E. 592; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 235; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 1346; Leighton v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 53, 9 L.R.A. 187, 20 Atl. 14.

Parkhurst, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case, brought by the plaintiff, a creditor of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, a Rhode Island corporation created by special act of the general assembly, to enforce certain statutory liabilities alleged to have been incurred by the defendant as a director of said company, under the provisions of Pub. Stat. R. I. 1882, chap. 155, later re-enacted as Gen. Laws (R. I.) 1896, chap. 180.

The declaration contains three counts, but son that the statutes are regarded as creating a forfeiture or imposing a penalty. Ibid.; Schofield v. Henderson, 67 Ind. 258; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 7 Allen, 489; Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith, — Miss. —, 64 So. 929; Kritzer v. Woodson, 19 Mo. 327; Morimura v. Traeger, 11 Pa. Dist. R. 378; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

Any general characterization of such statutes as penal, however, at once meets with contradictions in the decisions. That such a statute imposes a penalty was denied in Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104, in determining whether the right to sue was barred by a special short term statute of limitations applicable to penalties, fines, or forfeitures. In this jurisdiction, however, it is treated as a statutory remedy which must be strictly pursued. Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

This strict construction is evidenced in Walker v. Birchard, 82 Iowa, 388, 48 N. W. 71, where, under a statute making the directors of a railroad company which has received taxes voted in aid thereof under statutory provisions, liable to the stockholders of the corporation for double the amount, estimated at its par value, of the stock held by them, for encumbering the road in excess of a stated sum, the directors were held not so liable where they encumbered the road in excess of the sum named in the statute prior to the voting of the tax. The court expressed the opinion that the directors are personally liable to stockholders only in cases where, after the company has received taxes voted in its aid, the bonds are issued by their authority in excess of the limits named in the statute, and the stock is thereby rendered of less value. The statute limited the right of the stockholders to recover to cases in which their stock was rendered of less value or lost by the incurring of the indebtedness.

IV. Nature of liability.

a. In general.

There is very little harmony in the decisions as to the nature of the liability the second, since abandoned by the plaintiff, need not be considered. In the first count the plaintiff attempts to set forth a case within that portion of the statute imposing a penalty upon directors for failure to make and file a certificate stating the amount of capital stock added and paid in, within ten days after the payment of the last installment of the increase thereof. To this count the defendant demurred, contending that the plaintiff had not stated a case within the terms of the statute. The third count seeks to impose upon the defendant a director's liability under the statute, on the ground that the total indebtedness of the company was allowed to exceed the amount of its capital stock actually paid in, while the defendant was one of its directors. To this count the defendant pleaded the general issue, and also filed a special plea stating that prior to the commencement of this suit the debts of the company had been reduced below the amount of the capital stock paid in, by the payment of certain dividends in bankruptcy. To this special plea the plaintiff demurred.

Both demurrers, that of the defendant to the first count and that of the plaintiff to the special plea to the third count, were decided on February 15, 1910, in favor of the defendant, and these rulings were duly excepted to. Subsequently, on October 20, 1910, the case was heard on its merits before a judge of the superior court and a jury, the defendant admitting for the purpose of the suit substantially all the allegacreated by such statutes. As stated in III. supra, such statutes have been regarded as penal in character. That such a statute is penal in character is sustained also in Motley v. Pratt, 13 Misc. 758, 35 N. Y. Supp. 184; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692, 42 N. E. 338; First Nat. Bank v. Price, infra.

So, a statute providing that the whole amount of the debts of a bank at any one time shall not exceed twice the capital stock actually paid in, exclusive of the sums due on deposits, and making, in case of any excess, the act of incorporation void, and the directors under whose administration it shall happen liable for the same, has been held to make the directors of the bank personally liable to an action of debt for a penalty. Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St. 215, 72 Am. Dec. 582.

A statute providing that a corporation shall not incur an indebtedness beyond the certain stated amount, and providing that the directors creating, or consenting to the creation of, a debt in excess of such limit, shall be personally liable therefor to the treasurer of the corporation, is penal in its nature, and an action thereon cannot be joined with one against the directors for failure of the corporation to file an annual report, since the two causes of action do not arise out of the same transaction. Motley v. Pratt, 13 Misc. 758, 35 N. Y. Supp. 184.

Again, the liability of directors has been held to be in the nature of a suretyship. Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271; see also Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521, 23 N. E. 1007, infra, IX. b.

The liability of directors under such statutes has also been stated to be in the nature of a specialty. Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104, approved in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318, where the court stated that as to the ground of demurrer that a suit by a creditor of the corporation against the director should have been for the excess, and that such a statutory provision was penal, and that any creditor of the corporation, even for $5, was entitled to recover the whole amount of L.R.A.1915D.

excess, leaving the rest remediless as to this particular security, it could not assent to such a construction of the act.

Again, it has been treated as contractual, and therefore the repeal of the statute imposing it after the directors assented to the excess indebtedness, and before the action is brought, does not terminate the liability. Charles E. Brown & Co. v. Ware, 87 Vt. 121, 88 Atl. 507.

In Farr v. Briggs, 72 Vt. 225, 82 Am. St. Rep. 930, 47 Atl. 793, a statute prohibiting the creation of debts beyond the subscribed capital stock by the directors of the corporation, and making them liable for a violation of the provision of such statute, was held not penal in its nature, but contractual, and therefore enforceable in a state other than that in which the corporation was organized.

A contrary holding appears in First Nat. Bank v. Price, 33 Md. 488, 3 Am. Rep. 204, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 485, where the liability was held to be penal, and therefore not enforceable in a state other than that of its enactment.

In McComb v. Kellogg, 16 N. Y. S. R. 16, 1 N. Y. Supp. 206, holding that a right of action under such statute survives against the estate of a deceased director, the court states that the liability of the assenting director under the statute is a contract, and not a penal, liability.

See Field v. Haines, 28 Fed. 919, infra, VIII. b, where such a statute was held to create a contractual liability.

With reference to the nature of the liability created by such a statute, the court in Knower v. Haines, 31 Fed. 513, states that such a liability, under a statute like this, before suit brought to fix it, is not a debt nor any fixed obligation to pay, but is only that from which by the prescribed course an obligation to pay may be raised.

The nature of the liability created by such a statute depends in a large measure upon the ultimate question before the court for decision. It has seemed advisable, therefore, not to treat the abstract question of the nature of the liability arising under such statutes exhaustively, but to refer to tions of the third count, including that of excess of indebtedness over paid-in capital stock, and that as to the amount of the debt which it was sought to recover. This debt was admitted by the defendant and proved by the plaintiff to be $1,154.28, with interest thereon from June 13, 1907. The only defense claimed was that set up under the special plea to the third count. Upon motion of the defendant, the jury was directed to return a verdict of not guilty in favor of the defendant, and thereupon the plaintiff preferred its bill of exceptions, on which the case is now before this court.

The bill contains six exceptions, which will be more fully set forth hereinafter. The first two are to the rulings sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the first count of the declaration, and overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the special plea to the third count. The other rulings excepted to relate to testimony excluded or admitted in accord with the rulings on the demurrers, and to the direction of a verdict for defendant.

The first exception was to the decision sustaining the demurrer to the first count. The provisions of the statute under which it is sought to charge the defendant with liability in the first count are as follows (Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 155, §§ 1, 2, 3; Gen. Laws 1896, chap. 180, §§ 1, 2, 3):

"Section 1. The members of every incorporated manufacturing company shall be jointly and severally liable for all debts and contracts made and entered into by such it in connection with the various questions in connection with which it arises.

b. Whether joint or several.

The action must be maintained against all the directors under a statute providing that if the indebtedness of the corporation at any time exceeds the amount of its capital stock, directors of such corporation creating such indebtedness shall be personally individually liable for such excess to the creditors of the corporation. McClave v. Thompson, 36 Hun, 365.

Under a charter provision making the directors under whose administration an excess shall occur liable for the same, without providing any means by which any one of the directors may escape this liability, an action cannot be brought against a single director, unless a sufficient averment is made showing why the others are left out. Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

But it is not necessary for the creditor to join the representatives of deceased directors under a statute authorizing him to sue the survivor alone, but giving him discretion to sue the survivor, or representative of the deceased person, or the survivor in the same action with the representative of such deceased person. Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580. Some of the deceased directors had personal representatives living in the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit was brought.

Where the directors knowingly incur the excess indebtedness, or, being ignorant, where such ignorance is inexcusable, an action for contribution will not be allowed in favor of some of the directors who are compelled to pay the debt, against other directors. Rogers v. Bonnett, 2 Okla. 553, 37 Pac. 1078.

The statute involved in Cornwall v. Eastham, 2 Bush, 561, provided that the directors shall be individually liable jointly and severally to the creditors of the company for the excess, and an action was maintained against one of the directors.

V. What directors are liable.

a. Necessity that directors be such when excess occurs.

The statutes regulating this subject usually provide that the directors who contracted the debts in excess of the limit fixed, or those under whose administration the excess happened, are liable therefor.

Even if the statutes do not expressly make those who were directors at the time of contracting the debt liable therefor, that construction is given.

Thus, under a statute providing that the company shall not contract debts exceeding three fourths the amount of its capital stock paid in, and that if such an indebtedness shall exceed the amount aforesaid, the directors and stockholders shall be personally holden to the creditors of such company, the directors and stockholders who were such at the time the debt was contracted are liable, and not those who occupied that position when suit was brought. Windham Provident Inst. for Sav. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502. Although the debt sued upon in this case was contracted in excess of the limit, at the time the directors held liable therefor ceased to be stockholders (and apparently directors) the debts of the company had been reduced within the limit, but the company was insolvent. The assets had been used in paying other claims, leaving the debt in question unpaid.

So, under the Kentucky form of statute set forth in II. supra, it is necessary that parties sought to be held liable were directors at time the debt was contracted. Gunther v. Baskett Coal Co. 107 Ky. 44, 52 S. W. 931.

If the term of office of certain directors has expired before debts are contracted in excess of the solvent stock, such directors are not liable, although the new board of directors proceeds to pay the bonds so issued in excess of the solvent stock, leaving the bonds issued during the term of the previous board unpaid. Schofield v. Henderson, 67 Ind. 258.

company, except as hereinafter provided, until the whole amount of the capital stock fixed and limited by the charter of said company, or by vote of the company in pursuance of the charter or of law, shall have been paid in and a certificate thereof shall have been made and recorded in a book kept for that purpose, in the office of the town clerk of the town wherein the manufactory is established, and no longer, except as hereinafter provided.

"Section 2. The president and directors, with the treasurer and clerk of such company, within ten days after the payment of the last instalment of the capital stock fixed and limited by the charter or by vote of the company, in pursuance of the charter or of law, shall make a certificate stating the amount of the capital so fixed and paid in, which certificate shall be signed and sworn to by the president, treasurer and clerk and by a majority of the directors, and they shall, within said ten days, lodge the same to be recorded in the book kept as aforesaid in the office of the town clerk of the town wherein the manufactory shall be established. In case of increase of the capital stock of said companies, like proceedings shall be had as to the amount added, and paid in.

"Section 3. If any of said officers shall refuse or neglect to perform the duties required of them as aforesaid, they shall be jointly and severally liable for all debts of the company contracted after the expiration

In Bole v. West View Oil Co. 29 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 98, it did not clearly appear at what time the indebtedness of the company became in excess of the amount of the capital stock. It did appear, however, that the excess existed at a certain stated date, and the directors who served at that time were held liable.

If the debt contracted by the directors in excess of the limit is paid off, the liability of the directors is terminated. Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226.

The giving of new notes in renewal of old ones is not such an increase of indebtedness as to render a director liable therefor, under a statute providing that no part of the capital stock shall be withdrawn or in any manner diverted from the legitimate business of the company, nor shall the company at any time contract debts to an amount greater than three fourths of the capital actually paid in, and making assenting directors liable for such excess to the creditors of the company, although the notes in question were executed by the company at a time when the debts contracted by it were greater than the limit fixed by the statute. National Bank v. Paige, 53 Vt. 452.

A complaint in an action against directors which alleged that the defendants were directors of the corporation, and that indebtedness was incurred which exceeded the amount of the limit fixed by statute, to the extent of about $150,000, and that this indebtedness was created by and with the consent of the defendants, states a cause of action against the directors. Lovelace v. Doran, 39 N. Y. S. R. 679, 15 N. Y. Supp. 278. It is stated that it is to be assumed from the facts stated in the complaint that the plaintiff was a creditor to whom the company had contracted the excess, or in other words that he held an indebtedness which was contracted by the company at a time when it was indebted in a sum that exceeded the limit fixed by statute, and that the defendant directors, as well as the corporation, assented to the creation of such indebtedness held and represented by the L.R.A.1915D.

plaintiff, and therefore became personally and individually liable to him.

That those sought to be held liable were directors when the excess happened must be shown by the creditor seeking to impose such liability. Aimen v. Hardin, 60 Ind. 119; Schofield v. Henderson, supra.

Under a statute imposing a liability upon directors under whose administration the excess happened, it is necessary that the creditor prove that debts were contracted under the administration of the directors sought to be held liable. Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

It must be alleged that the excess happened during the administration of the directors sought to be held liable, under a statute so requiring; a mere allegation that there was an excess is not sufficient. Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398.

This is sufficiently shown in a suit on a note which is signed by the parties sought to be held liable, as directors. It will not be presumed, in the absence of any averment or showing to that effect, that the debt was contracted previously to the execution of the note. Aimen v. Hardin, supra.

b. Necessity of assent.

1. In general.

Some statutes impose a liability merely upon assenting directors.

A similar form of statute provides that directors shall be liable for any debts they may contract in the name of the company over and above the solvent stock of such company. Under this statute, where it appears that the directors sought to be held liable protested and objected to the contracting of the excess debts, they cannot be held liable. Schofield v. Henderson, 67 Ind. 258.

It is not necessary that the protest and objection of the writers be reduced to writing and signed by them and entered of record in the proper books of the company. Ibid.

Directors who did not assent to the creation of certain indebtedness cannot be held of said ten days and before such certificate shall be recorded as aforesaid."

That part of the first count based on this statute, with which the demurrer is concerned, reads: "And the plaintiff avers that the said company was duly incorporated on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1890, by the general assembly of the state of Rhode Island, etc., and became subject to the provisions of chapters 152 and 155 of the Public Statutes of said state, the capital stock thereof not to exceed $100,000, to be fixed by a vote of the company from time to time, and thereupon the company was duly organized, and thereafterwards, on, to wit, the 1st day of September, A. D. 1891, by vote of the company, the capital stock was fixed at $50,000, and on, to wit, the 2d day of March, A. D. 1904, by vote of the said general assembly, the company was authorized to increase its capital stock to an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $150,000, and to issue said increase, to wit, $50,000, as first preferred 7 per cent stock. And said company actually increased the capital stock thereof, and prior to the 1st day of December, A. D. 1905, issued capital stock in the sum of $10,727 as first preferred 7 per cent stock, in addition to the amount of capital stock theretofore issued and paid in; and the president and directors, with the treasurer and clerk of said company, did not, within ten days after the payment of the last instalment of said increase of said capital stock as aforesaid, make a certificate stating the amount of the capital stock so to have assented to an increase in the indebtedness caused by interest accruing thereon. McClave v. Thompson, 36 Hun, 365.

It has been held, under a statute providing that if the indebtedness of any company exceed the paid-in capital stock, the directors assenting thereto shall be individually liable to the creditors for said excess, that the director sought to be held liable must have assented to the debt sued upon. Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226; Moulton v. Connell, H. McL. Co. 93 Tenn. 377, 27 S. W. 672; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

In some statutes dissenting directors who have caused their dissent to be entered at large on the directors' minutes are excepted from the liability imposed upon the directors generally.

Another form of statute provides that any director who objects to contracting such debts, and who shall as soon as may be after the fact comes to his knowledge file his objection in writing, shall be exempt.

Under these statutes the director is liable unless he has entered his protest as provided by statute. A director who has not signed a protest cannot claim exemption by reason thereof. Cornwall v. Eastham, 2 Bush, 561.

A protest once entered is not effectual against debts subsequently incurred in excess of the prescribed limits with the concurrence and sanction of the protesting director. Ibid. It is suggested in this case that such a protest may be constructively prospective against any future debts beyond the capital in the absence of concurrence or sanction.

A provision contained in the act of incorporation involved in Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104, and Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289, made dissenting directors liable to creditors, but provided that they in turn might recover of assenting directors.

Under a statute merely imposing a liability upon assenting directors, it is necessary to show that the directors whom it is L.R.A.1915D.

sought to hold liable assented to the excess indebtedness. Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880. It is stated generally in this case that such assent can be given only by some affirmative voluntary act on the part of the directors, or at least some active participation or co-operation in the particular transactions out of which the indebtedness arose.

The absence of a protest, although the director subsequently becomes aware of the action by which the excess debts were created, is not equivalent to an assent. Some affirmative act of assent must be shown. Patterson v. Robinson, 36 Hun, 622.

It has been stated that a statute making liable directors who have knowingly consented to the excessive indebtedness does not provide for a recovery on account of mere inattention or negligence on the part of the directors, but a personal liability can be enforced only where consent is given to the making of the indebtedness with actual knowledge that the limit has already been reached, or is by such act being exceeded. Constructive knowledge, or knowledge which might have been obtained had the directors not been negligent, is not enough. Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Marquardt, — Iowa, —, 117 N. W. 666.

Absent directors.

Directors who were absent when the excess debts for which the directors generally are made liable were incurred are by some statutes excepted from the liability.

Under a strict construction of such statutes it is necessary for a creditor seeking to hold a director liable for his debt, to show that the director was present when the excess debts were contracted. Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

Other forms provide that an absent director may release himself from liability under such a statute by giving notice of his absence.

A provision in the act of incorporation in Neal v. Moultrie and Moultrie v. Smiley, supra, made absent directors liable, but provided that they might recover of as-added and paid in, signed and sworn to by the president, treasurer, and clerk, and by a majority of the directors, and did not within said ten days lodge the same to be recorded in the book kept for that purpose in the office of the city clerk of said Pawtucket, wherein the manufactory of said company is established."

The grounds assigned for demurrer to this count are:

"(1) It does not appear from said declaration that payment of the last instalment of the increase of the capital stock of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, as authorized by an act of the general assembly entitled 'An Act Authorizing the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company to Increase its

Capital Stock,' passed March 2, 1904, had been made:

"(2) It does not appear that the debt owing by the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company was contracted at the expiration of ten days or thereafter after the payment of the last instalment of the increase of the capital stock of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, as authorized by vote of the general assembly on March 2, 1904.

"(3) It does not appear from the said declaration that the duty ever devolved upon the defendant to file the certificate provided for by chapter 180, § 2, of the General Laws of the state of Rhode Island."

At the hearing of the demurrer two questions were in issue: First, whether the first count is defective in not alleging pay-menting directors the amount they were compelled to pay.

Under a statute which makes no exception in case of absent directors, but provides simply in case of an excess of debts that the directors under whose administration it shall happen shall be liable for the same, the fact that a director sued was absent when the excess happened is immaterial; he is notwithstanding this fact liable. Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

2. What constitutes assent.

Such assent is not shown on the part of directors by showing that they appointed one of their number who had a majority of the shares of stock, general financial agent of the corporation, and gave him complete control of its business affairs. Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880.

In Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271, the directors of an elevator company authorized an agent to buy grain, which necessarily and to their knowledge would and did cause the corporation to become indebted in excess of the amount of the capital stock. It is not clear whether or not this was the only evidence of assent. The court states that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that there had been an assent.

See also Randolph v. Ballard County Bank, 142 Ky. 145, 134 S. W. 165, supra, as to appointment of agent.

A recognition of the indebtedness after its creation is not an assent. Lewis v. Montgomery and Slater v. Taylor, supra.

But under a statute making the directors liable in the first instance, but providing that a director may relieve himself of such liability by protesting against the contracting of the excess indebtedness, it has been held that a director who has thus protested cannot take advantage of such protest as against debts subsequently incurred in excess of the limit with his consent, and that such consent may be presumed. Cornwall v. Eastham, 2 Bush, 561.

In Cornwall v. Eastham, supra, it is L.R.A.1915D.

stated that the removal by a director of one person as president, and the substitution of another, "and his still continuing his own official agency and responsibility as a necessarily more vigilant and active director, his co-operation in still carrying on and extending the business, his presumed knowledge of the extension of the company's credit further beyond its capital as necessary to the continued operations, and consequently his knowledge of the fact that it was so extended, and his failure to certify any objection or to prove that he did not concur in or approve the contraction of the debts to the appellees, participating, as he must be presumed to have done, in the new administration of the company's affairs under his own chosen auspices,—these considerations sufficiently conduce to the presumption that these debts were contracted at his instance or with his sanction."

The assent necessary to render the directors liable must be given by them in their official capacity. It must be shown that the assent was given in the capacity as director acting concurrently with the majority of the official board. It is not necessary that this official assent be founded in the minutes of the board, but it must have been given at an official meeting, whether it appears in the minutes or otherwise. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

Assent of the directors is shown by a resolution of the corporation to which the directors assented, authorizing the purchase of certain machinery, in which debts beyond the limit were created. Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226.

So, under a statute imposing a liability for excess of debts contracted over the amount of paid-in capital stock, upon the directors "who contracted such debts," it must be shown that the director sought to be charged with liability assented to or contracted the debt officially as a director, acting concurrently with a majority of the board. Consequently, a director who was present, and assented to the purchase by ment of the entire increased capital. Second, whether, irrespective of the above question, the first count is defective in not alleging payment of any part of the increased capital, and generally in not stating a case within the statute.

This court is of opinion that the demurrer to the first count was properly sustained. This count states that the capital stock was originally fixed by vote of the corporation, September 1, 1891, at $50,000; but it does not state whether or not said stock to that amount was ever actually issued, or ever actually paid for, or whether or not any certificate of such payment was ever made. It further states authority from the general assembly in 1904 for an increase of $50,000 in preferred stock; but it does not show that any definite increase under this last authority was ever fixed and limited by vote of the company. It simply states that the company actually increased its capital stock, and issued $10,727 first preferred stock. It does not state that this last issue of stock was ever paid for. The count is fatally defective in these particulars, and clearly fails to state a case of liability against a director under §§ 2, 3, above quoted. There is nothing to show that the duty ever devolved upon the officers of the company to file any certificate as provided in the said sections. The statute plainly and clearly provides the same proceedings in case of an increase of stock as in case of original capital "fixed and limited." It must appear in both cases that the capital or the increase has been the manager of the company of a bill of merchandise, did not contract the debt within the meaning of this statute. Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith, — Miss., —, 64 So. 929.

See Lewis v. Montgomery; Patterson v. Robinson; and Hines Lumber Co. v. Marquardt,—supra, V. b, 1.

Directors who were present and voted for a motion authorizing the secretary and treasurer to borrow what money was necessary to carry on the operations of the company between the date of the resolution and a certain stated date in the future will be held to have assented to a debt evidenced by a note given for money borrowed after the stated date, for expenses and debts contracted prior thereto; it is stated that the secretary and treasurer, having authority to contract for operating expenses, etc., doubtless made arrangements to get the money, and on the face of this contracted debts in operating expenses which they were afterward enabled to pay by the execution of this note. Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn., —, 63 S. W. 290.

In Cross v. Fisher [1892] 1 Q. B. 467, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 609, 66 L. T. N. S. 448, 40 Week. Rep. 265, 56 J. P. 372, it was urged in an action to hold directors of a building society, a rule of which required receipts to be signed by two of the directors and countersigned by the secretary, liable for an excess of debts that had been incurred by the secretary by fraudulently concealing the excess, that only the directors who had received the deposits individually could be held liable. This contention was denied, the court stating that directors do not receive deposits in their individual capacity, but they can receive deposits only through the society's ordinary channel of receipts, and they would receive excess loans in the same manner as others, in this case by the person who was authorized to receive on their behalf.

The fact that the notes of a bank were fraudulently issued by an agent of the bank is no defense against the liability of directors under such a statute, in the absence of any connection of the creditor seeking to enforce the liability with the fraud. White v. How, 3 McLean, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 17,549.

VI. When liability arises.

a. In general.

The condition of liability of directors under these statutes, that the debts of the corporation exceed the limit fixed, involves a determination of the amount of the debts and the fixed limit. These will be taken up in inverse order and the limit fixed by statute first discussed. As stated above, supra, II., that limit is variously fixed at the capital stock, or a stated number of times the capital stock, the subscribed capital stock, the paid-in capital stock, the solvent stock, etc.

It is necessary for a creditor seeking to hold directors liable under a statute making the directors of a corporation liable for any debt they may contract in the name of the company over and above the solvent stock, to show that, at the time the debt was contracted, it exceeded the solvent stock of the company. Aimen v. Hardin, 60 Ind. 119. That it is necessary to show an excess, and that it happened during the administration of the directors sought to be held liable, is held in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

The statutes making directors liable for exceeding the limit of indebtedness fixed are not called into operation until the debts of the corporation exceed the limit. Albitz-tigui v. Guadalupe Y Caloo Min. Co. 92 Tenn. 598, 22 S. W. 739.

b. Determination of amount of paid-in capital stock, subscribed capital stock, etc.

The capital stock paid in is not determined by the assets on hand available for the payment of debts, but is the amount subscribed and paid by the stockholders. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

Where payments for stock are made in property upon the organization of the cor-added and paid in, signed and sworn to by the president, treasurer, and clerk, and by a majority of the directors, and did not within said ten days lodge the same to be recorded in the book kept for that purpose in the office of the city clerk of said Pawtucket, wherein the manufactory of said company is established."

The grounds assigned for demurrer to this count are:

"(1) It does not appear from said declaration that payment of the last instalment of the increase of the capital stock of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, as authorized by an act of the general assembly entitled 'An Act Authorizing the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company to Increase its

Capital Stock,' passed March 2, 1904, had been made:

"(2) It does not appear that the debt owing by the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company was contracted at the expiration of ten days or thereafter after the payment of the last instalment of the increase of the capital stock of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, as authorized by vote of the general assembly on March 2, 1904.

"(3) It does not appear from the said declaration that the duty ever devolved upon the defendant to file the certificate provided for by chapter 180, § 2, of the General Laws of the state of Rhode Island."

At the hearing of the demurrer two questions were in issue: First, whether the first count is defective in not alleging pay-menting directors the amount they were compelled to pay.

Under a statute which makes no exception in case of absent directors, but provides simply in case of an excess of debts that the directors under whose administration it shall happen shall be liable for the same, the fact that a director sued was absent when the excess happened is immaterial; he is notwithstanding this fact liable. Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

2. What constitutes assent.

Such assent is not shown on the part of directors by showing that they appointed one of their number who had a majority of the shares of stock, general financial agent of the corporation, and gave him complete control of its business affairs. Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880.

In Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271, the directors of an elevator company authorized an agent to buy grain, which necessarily and to their knowledge would and did cause the corporation to become indebted in excess of the amount of the capital stock. It is not clear whether or not this was the only evidence of assent. The court states that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that there had been an assent.

See also Randolph v. Ballard County Bank, 142 Ky. 145, 134 S. W. 165, supra, as to appointment of agent.

A recognition of the indebtedness after its creation is not an assent. Lewis v. Montgomery and Slater v. Taylor, supra.

But under a statute making the directors liable in the first instance, but providing that a director may relieve himself of such liability by protesting against the contracting of the excess indebtedness, it has been held that a director who has thus protested cannot take advantage of such protest as against debts subsequently incurred in excess of the limit with his consent, and that such consent may be presumed. Cornwall v. Eastham, 2 Bush, 561.

In Cornwall v. Eastham, supra, it is L.R.A.1915D.

stated that the removal by a director of one person as president, and the substitution of another, "and his still continuing his own official agency and responsibility as a necessarily more vigilant and active director, his co-operation in still carrying on and extending the business, his presumed knowledge of the extension of the company's credit further beyond its capital as necessary to the continued operations, and consequently his knowledge of the fact that it was so extended, and his failure to certify any objection or to prove that he did not concur in or approve the contraction of the debts to the appellees, participating, as he must be presumed to have done, in the new administration of the company's affairs under his own chosen auspices,—these considerations sufficiently conduce to the presumption that these debts were contracted at his instance or with his sanction."

The assent necessary to render the directors liable must be given by them in their official capacity. It must be shown that the assent was given in the capacity as director acting concurrently with the majority of the official board. It is not necessary that this official assent be founded in the minutes of the board, but it must have been given at an official meeting, whether it appears in the minutes or otherwise. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

Assent of the directors is shown by a resolution of the corporation to which the directors assented, authorizing the purchase of certain machinery, in which debts beyond the limit were created. Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226.

So, under a statute imposing a liability for excess of debts contracted over the amount of paid-in capital stock, upon the directors "who contracted such debts," it must be shown that the director sought to be charged with liability assented to or contracted the debt officially as a director, acting concurrently with a majority of the board. Consequently, a director who was present, and assented to the purchase by ment of the entire increased capital. Second, whether, irrespective of the above question, the first count is defective in not alleging payment of any part of the increased capital, and generally in not stating a case within the statute.

This court is of opinion that the demurrer to the first count was properly sustained. This count states that the capital stock was originally fixed by vote of the corporation, September 1, 1891, at $50,000; but it does not state whether or not said stock to that amount was ever actually issued, or ever actually paid for, or whether or not any certificate of such payment was ever made. It further states authority from the general assembly in 1904 for an increase of $50,000 in preferred stock; but it does not show that any definite increase under this last authority was ever fixed and limited by vote of the company. It simply states that the company actually increased its capital stock, and issued $10,727 first preferred stock. It does not state that this last issue of stock was ever paid for. The count is fatally defective in these particulars, and clearly fails to state a case of liability against a director under §§ 2, 3, above quoted. There is nothing to show that the duty ever devolved upon the officers of the company to file any certificate as provided in the said sections. The statute plainly and clearly provides the same proceedings in case of an increase of stock as in case of original capital "fixed and limited." It must appear in both cases that the capital or the increase has been the manager of the company of a bill of merchandise, did not contract the debt within the meaning of this statute. Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith, — Miss. —, 64 So. 929.

See Lewis v. Montgomery; Patterson v. Robinson; and Hines Lumber Co. v. Marquardt,—supra, V. b, 1.

Directors who were present and voted for a motion authorizing the secretary and treasurer to borrow what money was necessary to carry on the operations of the company between the date of the resolution and a certain stated date in the future will be held to have assented to a debt evidenced by a note given for money borrowed after the stated date, for expenses and debts contracted prior thereto; it is stated that the secretary and treasurer, having authority to contract for operating expenses, etc., doubtless made arrangements to get the money, and on the face of this contracted debts in operating expenses which they were afterward enabled to pay by the execution of this note. Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 290.

In Cross v. Fisher [1892] 1 Q. B. 467, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 609, 66 L. T. N. S. 448, 40 Week. Rep. 265, 56 J. P. 372, it was urged in an action to hold directors of a building society, a rule of which required receipts to be signed by two of the directors and countersigned by the secretary, liable for an excess of debts that had been incurred by the secretary by fraudulently concealing the excess, that only the directors who had received the deposits individually could be held liable. This contention was denied, the court stating that directors do not receive deposits in their individual capacity, but they can receive deposits only through the society's ordinary channel of receipts, and they would receive excess loans in the same manner as others, in this case by the person who was authorized to receive on their behalf.

The fact that the notes of a bank were fraudulently issued by an agent of the bank is no defense against the liability of directors under such a statute, in the absence of any connection of the creditor seeking to L.R.A.1915D.

enforce the liability with the fraud. White v. How, 3 McLean, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 17,549.

VI. When liability arises.

a. In general.

The condition of liability of directors under these statutes, that the debts of the corporation exceed the limit fixed, involves a determination of the amount of the debts and the fixed limit. These will be taken up in inverse order and the limit fixed by statute first discussed. As stated above, supra, II., that limit is variously fixed at the capital stock, or a stated number of times the capital stock, the subscribed capital stock, the paid-in capital stock, the solvent stock, etc.

It is necessary for a creditor seeking to hold directors liable under a statute making the directors of a corporation liable for any debt they may contract in the name of the company over and above the solvent stock, to show that, at the time the debt was contracted, it exceeded the solvent stock of the company. Aimen v. Hardin, 60 Ind. 119. That it is necessary to show an excess, and that it happened during the administration of the directors sought to be held liable, is held in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

The statutes making directors liable for exceeding the limit of indebtedness fixed are not called into operation until the debts of the corporation exceed the limit. Albitz-tigui v. Guadalupe Y Caloo Min. Co. 92 Tenn. 598, 22 S. W. 739.

b. Determination of amount of paid-in capital stock, subscribed capital stock, etc.

The capital stock paid in is not determined by the assets on hand available for the payment of debts, but is the amount subscribed and paid by the stockholders. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

Where payments for stock are made in property upon the organization of the cor-

"fixed and limited by the charter or by vote of the company," and that the last installment has been paid, before the officers can make the certificate. Until such time, and until the certificate is duly made, the liability for all debts and contracts rests upon the stockholders under § 1, above quoted.

The law is well settled that a party who seeks to enforce the liability of corporate officers under a statute must allege and prove affirmatively every fact, default, or contingency upon which his right to recover depends, so as to bring himself clearly within the statute. Nassau Bank v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 478; Continental Nat. Bank v. Buford (C. C.) 107 Fed. 188, 189; Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398, 403; Chambers v. Lewis, 28 N. Y. 454; Whitney v.

Cammann, 137 N. Y. 342, 33 N. E. 305; Anfenger v. Anzeiger Pub. Co. 9 Colo. 377, 12 Pac. 400, and cases infra; 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 76; 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 1346, 1798.

The plaintiff's first exception is therefore overruled.

The plaintiff's second exception was to the decision overruling the demurrer to the second plea to the third count. The provision of the statute under which it is sought to charge the defendant with liability in the third count is as follows (Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 155, § 15; Gen. Laws, 1896, chap. 180, § 15): "The whole amount of the debts which any such corporation shall at any time owe shall not exceed the amount of its capital stock actually paid in; and in case of any excess, the directors under whose administration it shall happen shall be poration, it is the real value of the property that is to be considered in determining the paid-up stock, and not the consideration named in the deed of the property, especially where the grantors are members of the newly organized corporation. Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

It was urged in Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875, that property purchased by the corporation was not worth what had been paid for it, but the court states that there was nothing in the record to show the value of the property at the time it was taken except the amount that was paid for it.

A corporation which assumed the indebtedness of two other corporations, the property of which it received, and in return therefor issued its stock to the stockholders of the two corporations, cannot be said to have issued its stock fictitiously, where the value of the property received was largely in excess of the indebtedness assumed. Smith v. Ferries & C. H. R. Co. 5 Cal. Unrep. 889, 51 Pac. 710. In this case the property was shown to be worth at least $1,200,000, the assumed indebtedness was $150,000, and the issue of stock was 24,750 shares of the par value of $100 per share.

So, under a statute fixing the maximum indebtedness at the amount of capital stock, it is the amount of the capital stock, not the value of the stock or assets or property of the corporation, that is the determining factor. Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271.

It is stated also in this case, that the amount of the capital stock is the amount contributed by the shareholders for the prosecution of the business, and the officers and directors may incur indebtedness equal to that amount without assuming liability. But it is not clear that this is the meaning intended to be conveyed by the court, as it seems under the form of the Illinois statute it is not necessary that the capital stock be actually paid.

A statute providing that directors shall not create debts "beyond the subscribed capital stock" applies to all the subscribed L.R.A.1915D.

capital stock, whether it all has been paid in or only part of it, and regardless of the disposition which may have been made of it. Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875. The court gives to the statute a literal meaning, and holds that, although the stock has all been issued for the property, it is subscribed capital stock.

Capital stock issued by a corporation to the stockholders of two other corporations, the property of which had been acquired by the first corporation, was held to be subscribed capital stock, within the meaning of this provision. Smith v. Ferries & C. H. R. Co. supra.

In Moore v. Lent, supra, a mining corporation issued its entire subscribed stock as full paid stock in part payment of mines and other property of the corporation. It was urged by a creditor that when the corporation issued all the subscribed capital stock in payment of this property, it no longer had any subscribed capital stock, and every dollar of indebtedness subsequently created was a debt created "beyond the subscribed capital stock." This contention was denied, and it was held that no liability would attach to the directors until the corporation became indebted in an amount in excess of the subscribed capital stock.

In Schofield v. Henderson, 67 Ind. 258, it was held proper to regard as solvent stock the amount of assessments for benefits to land to which a road company was entitled by virtue of a statute, and which under the statute were in the nature of subscriptions to the capital stock, even though such amount might be largely in excess of the capital stock of the company as expressed in the articles of incorporation.

Under the rule of strict construction, evidence of certain sums paid as capital stock without showing that these were all that was paid is not sufficient. Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472.

Evidence that a quartz mill and lode worth from $6,000 to $8,000 were put in a mining corporation, and that one stockholder put in $1,095, and that the debts of the company when it ceased to do business jointly and severally liable, to the extent of such excess, for all the debts of the company then existing and for all that shall be contracted as long as they shall respectively continue in office, and until the debts shall be reduced to the amount of the capital stock of such company paid in."

In the third count of the declaration the following facts are alleged: That the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, a Rhode Island corporation, on the 13th day of April, 1907, being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,778.51 for goods sold and delivered, in consideration thereof, promised to paid it said sum on request, which sum, though often requested, said company has yet refused to pay. Said company was duly incorporated June 20, 1890, by the general assembly of the state of Rhode Island, and became subject to the provisions of chapters 152 and 155 of the Public Statutes (1882) of said state, and was duly organized. That on May 4, 1907, the amount of the capital stock of said company actually paid in was not more than $60,727, and the total debts of said company at said time were not less than $65,528.02, said amount being in excess of the capital stock actually paid in to the amount of not less than $2,101. That the defendant was one of the directors of said company under whose administration the said company became so indebted in excess of the amount of the capital stock paid in as aforesaid. That the debt of said company to the plaintiff was owing to the plaintiff on May 4, 1907, and was existing amounted to $9,084, is not sufficient to show that the debts exceeded the amount of the capital paid in. Ibid.

c. Determination of amount of debts.

1. In general.

The general question of the debts included in such statutory provisions has two phases. First, there is the question of the debts included in determining whether there is an excess within the meaning of the statute, and second, that of the debts that may share in the distribution in case of recovery.

The amount of the debts is determined under the Tennessee rule, as of the time the debt sued upon was created. Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 290.

It is stated obiter in Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879, that it does not matter whether the debts are in excess of the capital stock at the time the suit is brought or not, under a statute making the directors of a corporation assenting to the indebtedness liable in case it "shall at any time" exceed the amount of its capital stock.

2. What debts included.

(a) In general.

The debts covered by such a statute must be valid claims against the corporation. Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith — Miss. —, 64 So. 929.

See Wolverton v. George H. Taylor & Co. and State Bank v. Pope, infra, VII. b, 1.

Although a director may, with other directors, have contracted debts which in their aggregate amount exceeded the limit fixed by statute, he is not liable under the statute where there was at no one time an indebtedness in excess of the limit. Kritzer v. Woodson, 19 Mo. 327.

Debts not yet due are to be considered in determining the amount of indebtedness. Robinson v. Attrill, 66 How. Pr. 121.

But see Webster v. Whitworth, infra, VI. c, 3.
L.R.A.1915D.

The case of Wilcox v. Davis, 7 Ind. 248, is very meagerly reported. The action was against the directors of a bridge and road company to recover a balance due upon a contract for building a bridge on the line of the road. A section of a statute relating to plank roads, which was made a part of the charter of the bridge and road company, enacted that the directors of any company shall be liable in their individual property for any debts they may contract in the name of the company over and above the solvent stock of the company. It was urged in this case that, as the debt in question had been contracted in and about the building of a bridge instead of a road, the directors were not liable. This contention was held untenable, and the directors held liable.

In Patterson v. Robinson, 116 N. Y. 193, 22 N. E. 272, a corporation which had contracted debts in excess of its capital stock entered into an agreement with a bank to which it owed a large part of its debt, that the debt should be treated as a dead or suspended debt; that the drafts should thereafter be drawn by the president of the corporation on the treasurer, which should, after being accepted by the treasurer, be indorsed by two of the directors; that they should also individually guarantee other paper of the company, and the proceeds of this paper so indorsed and guaranteed should be used in the purchase of supplies for the corporation, but when the supplies thus purchased should be manufactured, the manufactured articles should be the property of the directors indorsing the paper until disposed of, and the proceeds thereof should be applied to the payment of the supplies, labor, and current expenses of the corporation and of the paper so indorsed and guaranteed, and no part of the proceeds were to be applied to the payment of the old or suspended debt held by the bank until all outstanding claims for such paper, supplies, labor, and current expenses were satisfied. A new indebtedness was created under this arrangement which also exceeded the limit fixed by statute for the indebtedness of the corporation, the paper when the said company became indebted in said amount in excess of the amount of the capital stock paid in as aforesaid, and during the time the defendant was a director as aforesaid, and at no time thereafter were the debts of said company reduced to the amount of the capital stock paid in. That the defendant was not absent at the time of the contracting of the debt in excess of the amount of the capital stock paid in as aforesaid, and that he did not object thereto, and did not give notice of the fact to the stockholders at a meeting held for that purpose, and that no meeting was called for that purpose. Wherefore, under the statute, he became liable to pay to the plaintiff the aforesaid debt of said company to the plaintiff, which sum, though often requested, the defendant refused to pay, to the damage of the plaintiff $2,000.

To this count the defendant filed, besides the plea of the general issue, a special plea, the statements of which are substantially as follows: That after said time when, as alleged in the plaintiff's declaration, the total amount of the debts of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company exceeded the paid-in capital stock, but long prior to the commencement of this action, said company was adjudged a bankrupt, and its assets turned over to James Brennan as trustee in bankruptcy; that said trustee paid to the creditors of said company dividends amounting to $20,000, which were accepted by said creditors as 'part satisfaction of their claim against said company, thereby reducing the which was presented to and paid by the bank being held as a liability against the corporation instead of being canceled and charged to the account of the mill as agreed, so that the old indebtedness which had been suspended by the agreement was fully paid, and action was brought against the directors to recover on their statutory liability for the excess of the new indebtedness. Liability was denied, it being stated by the court that under it the commercial paper made by the corporation and paid by the bank after the agreement had been entered into was, as to the directors, paid, and no cause of action was established against them under the statute making directors liable for excess.

(b) Ordinary debts.

Under a statute imposing upon the directors joint and several liability in the event of the corporation incurring debts in excess of the amount of its capital stock actually paid in, the ordinary debts of the company, as well as the extraordinary or bonded indebtedness, are included. Green v. Whitehead, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 613. The statute in this case expressly excepted debts for unpaid purchase money for land bought, which debts shall be only a lien upon and collectable from the land.

(c) Bonded indebtedness.

Bonded indebtedness is included as well as floating. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

But bonds which have never been issued are not to be included in determining the amount of indebtedness, although they have been prepaid and signed. Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 290. Part of the issue had been sold and this part was counted.

A pleading which failed to show that bonds which were claimed as part of the indebtedness had been issued was held bad in Robinson v. Attrill, 66 How. Pr. 121, affirmed sub nom. McClave v. Thompson, 36 Hun, 335. L.R.A.1915D.

(d) Mortgage indebtedness.

A note given by the corporation secured by a mortgage upon its real estate is to be considered in determining the debts of the corporation, although it was given at a time when the corporation was solvent and had assets in excess of its liabilities to such an amount that the note secured by the mortgage did not impair the funds created by the paid-in capital stock, where it appears that the note was not paid by the corporation, but was satisfied by a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises after the corporation became insolvent. Smith & T. Co. v. Arnold, — R. I. —, 93 Atl. 656.

Nor can the amount for which the real estate was sold under the mortgage after bankruptcy be applied by way of reduction of the amount of debt owed by the corporation, where at the time of the sale there were no surplus assets of the corporation, it was insolvent, and its entire property in liquidation by the trustees in bankruptcy paid less than 50 per cent upon the total debt. Ibid.

Under a statute excepting from the indebtedness that secured by mortgage, it is necessary for a creditor who would hold the directors liable, to show that the indebtedness of the corporation not secured by mortgage exceeded the limit fixed. Irving Nat. Bank v. Moynihan, 84 App. Div. 301, 82 N. Y. Supp. 705.

(e) Debts due a director.

Debts due to a director of the corporation should be considered in determining the amount of the debts. Thacher v. King, 156 Mass. 490, 31 N. E. 648; Tallmadge v. Fishkill Iron Co. 4 Barb. 382. See Robinson v. Attrill, 66 How. Pr. 121, infra.

And this is true although the debts due the director cannot be proved in a suit by a creditor to enforce the statutory liability. Thacher v. King, supra.

But a judgment recovered against the corporation by a director for advances made by him cannot be considered in determining the liabilities of the company, although it total indebtedness of the said company below the amount of capital stock paid in; that at the time this action was commenced, the debts of said company had been reduced below the amount of the capital stock of said company paid in; and prayed judgment, etc.

The plaintiff demurred to this plea and the demurrer was overruled, and to this decision plaintiff duly excepted. We think this decision was error. This decision proceeds upon the theory that, under such circumstances as are set forth in the third count, although the directors have incurred debts to an amount in excess of "the amount of the capital stock actually paid in," in violation of the terms of § 15, above quoted, yet, if the corporation later goes into bankruptcy, and its trustee, in liquidation of its affairs and before suit is brought, pays to the creditors sums sufficient to reduce its indebtedness to the amount of paid-in capital stock, the directors are exonerated from liability.

It is apparent from a perusal of the sections of the statute above quoted that (§ 1) it was the intention of the general assembly that until the whole amount of capital stock fixed and limited, etc., has been paid in, and certificate duly filed, the members of every incorporated manufacturing company should be jointly and severally liable for all debts and contracts; that after all fixed capital stock or increase has been paid in (§ 2), the officers should make a certificate to that effect, which would exonerate the stock-has been assigned to a third person. McClave v. Thompson, 36 Hun, 365. This is a reversal of Robinson v. Thompson, 34 Hun, 634, which is apparently an affirmation of Robinson v. Attrill, 66 How. Pr. 121. In Robinson v. Attrill, debts due a director are taken into consideration in determining the liabilities of the company, but nothing is said as to a judgment such as is discussed in McClave v. Thompson.

A director who is a creditor of the corporation cannot share with other creditors who are not directors in the amount which he, or he and other directors, may be compelled to pay toward the debts in consequence of such excess. Thacher v. King, supra. The fact that the debt due the director is counted in ascertaining the excess is held not to conflict with this holding; the statute is stated to be not capable of a reasonable construction in any other way than as meaning that, as to the fund realized from the excess of indebtedness, the director is not regarded as a creditor at all. To hold that the officers are, as creditors, entitled to any part of it, would be to impair what is intended as security for the other creditors, and for them only. The debt in question was due a firm of which the director was a member, but was treated as if due the director.

But in Tallmadge v. Fishkill Iron Co. supra, directors who were creditors to a large amount, and other directors who were personally liable for the corporate debts, on account of which they subsequently were obliged to make large advances, were held entitled to take into consideration the amount owed them by the corporation in making payment on the liability incurred under the statute. The statute involved made the directors liable to the corporation in the first instance, and after dissolution of the corporation, the liability was to the creditors.

(f) Debts due a stockholder.

A debt contracted by the company in the prosecution of its business, with a firm of which a stockholder of the company is a member, is a debt for which a recovery may be had. Anderson v. Blattau, 43 Mo. 42. It is stated that the obligation differs in no essential particulars from any other incurred by the company, and if it were due and owing to the stockholder alone, there is no good reason for depriving him of the protection intended to be given to all creditors alike.

But a stockholder cannot, by paying his proportion of a judgment against the corporation on his statutory liability, make himself a creditor entitled to sue a director. Kritzer v. Woodson, 19 Mo. 327.

(g) Advances made by factors.

Advances made by a commission merchant to whom the corporation consigned goods for sale under an agreement that it should, on receipt of a consignment of goods, advance to the corporation in cash a certain per cent of the invoice price of the goods, and on making sale retain the amount of the advances, commissions, expenses, etc., and account to the corporation for the residue, are not to be considered in determining the amount of the debts of the corporation. Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880. These advances are stated to be not in the nature of loans of money to the corporation, but a payment in advance of a portion of the proceeds for which the commission merchant would be ultimately required to account to the corporation.

Advances made by the exclusive selling agents of a manufacturing company, which were not to be returned, but retained by the company, all the manufacturing products to be consigned to the selling agents, and the sums advanced, which were to be 60 per cent of the actual net market value of the consignment, being intended to cover less than the net value of the consignment, the margin being for commissions, expenses, and losses, the balance to be readjusted each month according to the amount of merchandise delivered, are not to be treated as debts of the corporation, beyond the amount found due, if any, from the con-holders from their liability (under § 1); and (§ 3) that the officers should be liable after ten days for their failure to file the certificate; and by § 15, above quoted, the directors are made liable for excess of debts, etc. It is manifest from a consideration of these provisions that the broad intent and scope of them is to make the capital stock paid in a fund for the payment of creditors, and that, whenever the directors incur debts in excess of said capital stock paid in, the directors are subjected to a joint and several liability, to the extent of the excess, for all the debts of the company, until the debts shall be reduced to the amount of the capital stock paid in. This liability of the directors is in the nature of the liability of sureties, and as such is held to be stricti juris; and the statute imposing it is subject to a strict construction. As was said in the case of Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, at 108, 89 N. E. 271, where the court was considering a similar statute: "The statute fixes a point where the directors become liable, and that point is when the indebtedness exceeds the amount of the capital stock. The liability is that of a surety, and if payment is made out of the assets, the officers and directors, who are sureties, are exonerated." And see also Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521, 23 N. E. 1007; Lewis v. Montgomery, 145 Ill. 30, 33 N. E. 880.

Counsel for defendant cites Slater v. Taylor, 146 Ill. App. 97, and also the same case on appeal (supra), apparently to support signor to the consignee upon the settlement of balances between the parties. Morimura v. Traeger, 11 Pa. Dist. R. 378.

On the contrary it has been held that advances made by a firm of which a director of the corporation is a member, as selling agent of the corporation, are to be considered in determining the amount of debts due by the corporation. Thacher v. King, 156 Mass. 490, 31 N. E. 648. The advances thus made were considered in determining the amount of debt, although the selling agents were expected to pay themselves for their advances out of the goods in their hands, and in fact did receive and apply from goods on hand, but not sold, or sold but not paid for, at the time when the debts were to be determined, a large part of the advances so made.

The master in Thacher v. King, supra, had found that the entire amount of the advances was the amount of money due to the director and his partner on the date on which the debts were to be determined, and disregarded the property received. In approving this finding it is stated by the court that if the commission merchants had a right to demand that amount in cash, it was none the less a debt because both parties expected that they would not do so, but would apply the property in their hands for sale as far as it would go. If that amount was the amount of the debt due in a popular and ordinary and legal sense, it was the amount of the debt within the statute imposing the liability upon directors.

(h) Certificates of deposit.

A certificate of deposit issued by a bank is a debt within the meaning of a charter provision that the total amount of debts which the corporation shall at any time owe, "whether by bond, bill, note, or other security," shall not exceed three times the amount of the capital stock actually paid in, over and above the amount of specie actually deposited in the vault for safe-keeping, and therefore the holder of such certificate may recover for the same of the director. *L.R.A.*1915D.

directors. Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580.

It was urged in Hargroves v. Chambers, supra, that there could not be an excessive indebtedness at the time of issuing certificates of deposit as to them, because, although they might be debts, yet the funds paid in for which they were issued were in the bank, and must be considered as balancing that indebtedness. In answer to this it is stated that the money deposited went at once into the general funds of the bank and constituted a fund as much for the payment of other debts as these. The court finally considered, whether that be true or not, that the certificates were debts within the meaning of the rule.

(i) Torts.

Upon the general question as to whether statutory liability of a stockholder or officer for debts of the corporation includes liability for tort, see note to B. F. Avery & Sons v. McClure, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 256.

It is uniformly held that liabilities incurred by a corporation because of its torts are not debts within the meaning of statutes making the directors liable in case the corporate debts exceed a fixed limit.

It has been stated that the debt, in order to become one within the meaning of a statute limiting the amount of corporate indebtedness to the amount of capital stock actually paid in, and in case of any excess making the directors under whose administration it shall happen liable to the extent of such excess for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted, must be a debt voluntarily created by the directors or under their authority. Cable v. Gaty, 34 Mo. 573, 86 Am. Dec. 126.

Consequently, a judgment obtained against the corporation for damages for loss of a steamboat through negligence is not one of the debts contemplated by the statute. Ibid. So that, even assuming that an excess in amount of undoubted debts exist, the directors are not liable for a debt created as above stated.

his contention that payment out of the assets, by an assignee in bankruptcy, whereby debts are reduced below the amount of the paid-in capital stock, exonerates the directors from liability; but a careful reading of that case, and of the Illinois cases cited therein, shows that, when payment of debts out of assets is referred to, the court had in mind cases where corporations with a limited amount of paid-in capital had an excess of assets beyond the amount of the paid-in capital stock; so that while, in those cases, directors might become liable for excess of debts, if the excess were paid out of surplus assets, the directors would cease to be liable. In all of these cases the corporations had become insolvent, and in none of them was it suggested that payment by the assignee after insolvency would exonerate the directors. See also Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 655, et seq., 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097; Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875. It may be noted that these cases are all in equity, in the nature of general creditors' bills, and are required to be brought in equity under the construction of the peculiar statutes of the states referred to or under express provisions thereof. We have cited them only to show the general principles applicable to directors' liability, and to refute the apparent claim, albeit somewhat vaguely made by defendant's counsel, that they support his main contention.

Only two cases from courts of last resort

The liability of a corporation for infringement of a patent is not a debt contracted or debt existing within the meaning of a statute making the directors liable for debts contracted in excess of amount of capital stock. B. F. Avery & Sons v. McClure, 94 Miss. 172, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 256, 47 So. 901, 19 Ann. Cas. 134; Roberts v. Reed, 4 W. N. C. 417; Child v. Boston & F. Iron Works, 137 Mass. 516, 50 Am. Rep. 328. Nor does the reduction to judgment of such a claim make it a debt within the meaning of this statute. B. F. Avery & Sons v. McClure, supra. The claim in Child v. Boston & F. Iron Works, supra, had been reduced to judgment, but no point is made of this.

3. Evidence as to debts.

Evidence that at the time of the failure or assignment of the corporation the debts were largely in excess of the limit fixed by statute is not evidence that they thus exceeded the limit fifteen or sixteen months previously, when the debt sued on was created. Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 290.

Evidence of a debt contracted by the company for supplies, to become due at a future date, is not sufficient evidence of the existence of a debt at a date prior to the time when the estimates were to become due, where it is not shown that any of the supplies had been delivered. Ibid.

See Robinson v. Attrill, supra, VI. c. 2 (e).

A schedule of the debts of the corporation filed by it in bankruptcy proceedings, and proved under the oath of its treasurer, is prima facie evidence of the amount of the debts as of the time of the filing of the schedule. If there are any debts included in the schedule which do not come within the statute imposing a liability upon the directors for contracting debts in excess of a certain fixed limit, such must be shown in defense. Smith & T. Co. v. Arnold, — R. I. —, 93 Atl. 656.

The prima facie case made by the schedule in bankruptcy was held sufficient although the action was not begun by the creditor to enforce the director's liability until about two years after the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy, it being stated that the creditor, having proven the bankruptcy of the corporation and the amount of the debt owed, was entitled to a prima facie presumption that this state of things continued; and that if in fact the excess of debts had been paid so as to exonerate the director, it was a matter for him to prove. Ibid.

It is stated that the director sued in this case, who was president of the corporation, was actively interested in its affairs and was fully cognizant of the affairs and proceedings of the corporation at the date of its failure, and it was competent for him to have produced any facts which would have been available for his defense, if such facts existed. The statute involved in this case provided that the whole amount of the debts which any corporation shall at any time owe shall not exceed the amount of its capital stock, actually paid in, and it was further provided that the directors who are made liable for contracting such excess shall continue liable until the debts shall be reduced to the amount of the capital stock of such company paid in. Ibid.

d. Effect of waste or destruction of assets by assignee.

The waste or destruction of the assets of a corporation by the assignee thereof does not release the directors from their liability to a creditor under such statute. Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580.

e. Effect of reduction of debts.

The reduction by the directors of a corporation, of the debts by the confession of judgments against the corporation on which executions were issued and all the corporate property sold, so that the debts at the time of the maturity of the claim of the plaintiff did not exceed the capital stock, is not such a reduction as will relieve the directors from liability, under a statute providing that the whole amount of the directly considering the questions here involved have been cited on the briefs before us. In the case of Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232, a suit at law was brought against directors of a manufacturing corporation to enforce directors' liability for excess of debts over amount of capital stock actually paid in, under Rev. Stat. Mass. chap. 38, § 25, which is almost word for word identical with our statute here under consideration. Demurrer to the declaration was upon two grounds: First, that it appeared from the declaration and stipulated facts that, although the debts had exceeded the paid-in capital at the time when the debt in suit was contracted and at the time of the proceedings in insolvency, the whole amount of the debts had been, before suit was brought, reduced by the payment by assignees of preferred debts and dividends, to less than the amount of such paid-in capital stock. The second ground of demurrer was in effect that suit at law could not be maintained, but remedy was only in equity. The decision was by Chief Justice Shaw, and substantially overruled the first demurrer, as follows: "The reduction of the debts within the capital stock by dividends and payments by the assignees" (in insolvency) "was not such a reduction, within the meaning of the statute, as to exempt the defendants from liability." The decision then goes on to show that the suit should have been brought in equity under the subsequent provisions of the statute, and sustained the demurrer on that ground.

debts which any corporation may contract shall not exceed the amount of capital stock actually paid in, and in case of any excess the directors shall be liable to the extent of such excess for the debts then existing, and for all that are contracted, until the debts are reduced to the amount of the capital stock. Margarge & G. Co. v. Ziegler, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 438, approved in Roth v. Playford, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 345.

It is stated in Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232, that the reduction of the debt within the limit fixed by statute, by dividends and payment by the assignees in insolvency, is not such a reduction as to exempt the defendants from liability under a statute making the directors under whose administration an excess shall happen jointly and severally liable to the extent of such excess so long as they shall respectively continue in office, and till the debt shall be reduced to the said amount of the capital stock; but a demurrer to the petition of the creditors was sustained in this case, so that the above statement was not necessary to the decision. Compare with Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. infra.

The statute under which Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson was decided is set out in Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. infra, and provides as follows: That "the whole amount of the debts, which any such company shall at any time owe, shall not exceed the amount of its capital stock actually paid in; and in case of any excess, the directors, under whose administration it shall happen shall be jointly and severally liable to the extent of such excess, for all the debts of the company then existing and for all that shall be contracted, so long as they shall respectively continue in office, and until the debts shall be reduced to the said amount of the capital stock."

The debt in Windham Provident Inst. for Sav. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502, had been reduced within the limit at the time the suit was brought, but there is no discussion on this point in the opinion, which holds the directors liable nevertheless.

See J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS v. ARNOLD, L.R.A.1915D.

The statute involved in Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. 183 Mass. 114, 66 N. E. 592, provided that the president and directors of the company shall be liable when the debts of the corporation exceed its capital, to the extent of such excess existing at the time of the commencement of the suit against the corporation, upon the judgment in which the suit in equity to enforce such liability is brought, as hereinafter provided. Under this statute, where the debts of the corporation had been reduced below the amount of its capital by dividends paid to its creditors by an assignee at the time of the commencement of the suit against the corporation, no action will lie under the statute.

And see also in this connection Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226, supra, V. a.

That the contracting of indebtedness by a subsequent board of directors in excess of the solvent stock, and the payment of the indebtedness so contracted in preference to the indebtedness lawfully contracted by the previous board, do not render the previous board liable, see Schofield v. Henderson, 87 Ind. 258, supra, V. a.

VII. To whom liability extends.

a. In general.

Some statutes make the directors liable only to creditors.

The fact that a creditor seeking to hold the directors liable under such a statute was manager of the company, and participated in creating indebtedness by buying grain for the company, does not prevent his holding the directors liable where there is no claim that the corporation was not liable to him, since under his contract he was entitled to his commissions and expenditures the same as any other creditor. Slater v. Taylor, 241 Ill. 102, 89 N. E. 271.

But under a statute making the directors in case of any excess jointly and severally liable for such excess for all debts of the company then existing and for all that shall be contracted, the directors of a corporation are not liable to a stockholder thereof who

The suit was subsequently brought in equity for the same claim, and the bill was demurred to, and demurrer sustained, on the ground that it did not clearly state that the excess of debts happened during the administration of the corporation by the defendants. Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398. The question as to effect of payments by the assignees in insolvency was not again raised in the equity case. Later, in the same case (7 Allen, 489), leave to amend the bill to cure the defect shown by the demurrer was asked and refused on the ground of laches, since the complainant had allowed so much time to elapse before seeking to amend the bill, and it was dismissed. It cannot fairly be said that the decision of Chief Justice Shaw was obiter dictum. The question was raised by the first demurrer, was argued on the brief of counsel, and was a fair question in the case. This demurrer was overruled (although counsel seems to treat it as if sustained with other demurrers), and the mere fact that other demurrers were sustained does not remove the question properly raised by the first demurrer from the case.

The only case cited and relied upon in the case at bar by the justice of the superior court in his decision overruling this demurrer is the case of Flint v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. 183 Mass. 114, 66 N. E. 592. This case was decided in 1903 under the Public Statutes of Massachusetts of 1882, chap. 106, § 60, which, so far as is material, reads as follows: "The has been compelled to pay his proportion of the unsatisfied balance of a judgment held against the corporation. Kritzer v. Woodson, 19 Mo. 327. It is stated that the purpose of the statute is to protect the creditors of the corporation; that it was not intended to regulate the liability of the directors to the corporation nor to the individual stockholder.

Other statutes prescribe that the directors are liable to the corporation in the first instance, and in the event of the dissolution of the corporation, to the creditors.

That the liability is to the creditors as distinguished from the state, see Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104, infra.

Temporary receivers appointed in an action for the voluntary dissolution of a corporation are proper parties in an action by creditors on behalf of themselves and all other creditors to enforce this liability of the directors. Whitney v. Wilcox, 58 App. Div. 57, 68 N. Y. Supp. 667.

b. To what creditors.

1. In general.

The directors are liable only to bona fide creditors. Thus, if accommodation notes given by the corporation are taken up by an officer of the corporation to which they are given, with knowledge of their character, such officer cannot enforce the statutory liability. Wolverton v. George H. Taylor & Co. 157 Ill. 485, 42 N. E. 49.

Nor can a mere assignee for collection enforce such liability. Ibid.

Nor can a creditor whose debt is contingent upon the existence of assets of the corporation enforce such statutory liability without alleging the existence of assets of the corporation. State Bank v. Pope, 179 Ill. App. 282.

See Manns Mercantile Co. v. Smith, — Miss. —, 64 So. 929, VI. c. 2 (a).

2. Doctrine that liability extends only to creditors whose debts are contracted in excess of fixed limit.

That the directors are liable only to the L.R.A.1915D.

creditors to whom the excess is owed is the doctrine of the Tennessee cases. Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226, supra. But all such creditors must join. Moulton v. Connell, H. McL. Co. 93 Tenn. 377, 27 S. W. 672; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

The statute in this state provides that if the indebtedness of the corporation shall at any time exceed the capital stock paid in, the directors assenting thereto shall be individually liable to the creditors for said excess. This is interpreted in Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. supra, to make the assenting directors individually liable only to a creditor whose debt was made with the assent of such directors in excess of the capital stock, and if the debt of such a creditor is subsequently paid he has not suffered by such breach, and no subsequent creditor can enforce in his own favor a liability discharged by such payment. The court continued: "In other words, the liability of the director depends upon three conditions: First, assent by him to the creation of the debt upon which he is sued; second, that the debt has not been paid; third, that the corporation is insolvent. Unless the very debt upon which it is sought to hold the director to individual liability was created by the assent of the director, it is not the case provided for by the charter." It is stated to be no answer to say that the old debts may have been paid off by the creation of a new one. If this should be so, then the directors who assented to the new debt, if beyond the capital stock, are liable individually to the creditor whose money paid off the old debt, and his remedy is against them on this latter assent, and not upon the former breach of trust.

A creditor whose debt was created in excess of the limit was allowed to maintain an action in Stafford v. Cain, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 639. This case is approved in Gunter v. Baskett Coal Co. 107 Ky. 44, 52 S. W. 931, but it does not clearly appear in the latter case that the creditors allowed to recover were excess creditors, nor does officers of any corporation which is subject to this chapter shall be jointly and severally liable for its debts and contracts in the following cases, and not otherwise: . . . When the debts of a corporation exceed its capital, to the extent of such excess existing at the time of the commencement of the suit against the corporation upon the judgment in which the suit in equity to enforce such liability is brought as hereinafter provided." Judge Lathrop, referring to the above-quoted words of Judge Shaw, says the remark of the chief justice (in the Merchants' Bank Case) "was not necessary to the decision, which sustained the defendants' demurrers on another ground, and the proposition appears in the headnote prefixed by the words, 'it seems that.'" A careful reading of the Merchants' Bank Case shows that the first demurrer was overruled, and that the other demurrers were sustained, as above shown; and the first demurrer raised the exact question raised in this case. Furthermore, the question was decided by the chief justice without using the prefatory words, "it seems that," which words were interpolated in the headnote by the reporter. It is further to be noted that Judge Lathrop, in his opinion, after quoting the statute under which Judge Shaw made his decision, says (page 116 of 183 Mass.): "We do not deem it necessary in this case to determine whether the remark of Chief Justice Shaw above cited was an obiter remark or a decision. The statute which he was then considering differs es-it appear that it was intended to limit the right to recover to creditors whose debts were contracted in excess of the limit.

The doctrine announced in Patterson v. Robinson, 36 Hun, 622, approved on reargument in 37 Hun, 341, followed in Lovelace v. Doran, 39 N. Y. S. R. 679, 15 N. Y. Supp. 278, that the liability of directors is only to those creditors to whom the excess is owing, was overruled in National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692, 42 N. E. 338, although in the latter case some distinction is made between the statute in force when that case was decided and the statute in force when the Patterson Case was decided. But Anderson v. Speers, 21 Hun, 568, 59 How. Pr. 421, is cited with approval, and it was decided under the same statute as Patterson v. Robinson.

Under a statute making the directors in case of excess liable for such excess to the corporation, and in the event of its dissolution to any of the creditors thereof, it was held in the early New York case of Tallmadge v. Fishkill Iron Co. 4 Barb. 382, that the liability might be enforced by any creditor of the corporation, and was not confined to those creditors whose debts were contracted or remained unpaid while the excess of the indebtedness existed.

That the creditor suing need not be one whose debt forms a part of the excess is held also in Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St. 215, 72 Am. Dec. 582.

That the liability is not confined to those creditors whose debts are in excess of the limit is the necessary implication from the cases generally, apart from those noticed above to the contrary. See cases bearing on this question in VIII. a and b, infra.

VIII. Enforcement of the liability.

a. Who may enforce.

It is well settled that a single creditor cannot sue to enforce the statutory liability. Low v. Buchanan, 94 Ill. 76; Buchanan v. Bartow Iron Co. 3 Ill. App. 191; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. L.R.A.1915D.

603, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692, 42 N. E. 338; Anderson v. Speers, 21 Hun, 568, 59 How. Pr. 421; Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879; Lyman v. Hilliard, 83 C. C. A. 117, 154 Fed. 339, reversing 138 Fed. 469.

Such a statute providing that if the indebtedness of any stock corporation exceeds the amount of its capital stock, the directors and officers of such corporation assenting thereto shall be personally and individually liable for such excess to the "creditors" of such corporation, is designed for the benefit of all the creditors. The claims arising under the provisions of such statute are to be regarded in the nature of a trust fund to be collected and divided pro rata among all the creditors. Consequently, one creditor alone cannot maintain an action of assumpsit against a director to recover under this statute. Low v. Buchanan, 94 Ill. 76. It is stated that the distribution of the funds under this statute can be made only in a court of equity. A similar holding appears in Buchanan v. Bartow Iron Co. 3 Ill. App. 191.

No presumption will be indulged in that there is only one creditor where the creditor seeking to recover at law alleges that at the time of the incurring of his indebtedness, about nine months previously to the commencement of the suit, the corporation was indebted to various persons, without any allegation or proof to the effect that there are no other creditors at the time of suit. Low v. Buchanan, supra. It is stated, without expressing any opinion whether an action at law would lie in case of only a single creditor, that it is clear that the creditor would be bound to set forth by proper averment in his declaration, and prove on the trial, the special circumstances warranting such an action.

Where it does not appear that there are other creditors, a demurrer to the complaint cannot be sustained for this reason. McComb v. Kellogg, 16 N. Y. S. R. 16, 1 N. Y. Supp. 206.

Under the Tennessee doctrine limiting the right to recover against the director to entially from the one before us. Instead of the complicated provisions of the Revised Statutes, the statute before us fixes a single date, namely, when the suit is brought on which judgment is recovered. If the debts on that day exceed the capital stock, there is liability; otherwise, not. . . . 'The legislature saw fit to use plain words, which we must take plainly as we find them.' The provisions of the Public Statutes do not prohibit a corporation from incurring an indebtedness in excess of its capital, but merely provide that if such an excess exists when a suit is brought, the president and directors shall be liable."

We do not regard the decision of Judge Shaw in the Stevenson Case as obiter dictum; nor do we regard it as overruled in the Flint Case, as claimed by the defendant's counsel. It is expressly saved, as shown by the above extract, as relating to a statute, essentially different from the one considered in the Flint Case, but essentially the same as our statute now under consideration. We are entirely in accord with the decision of Chief Justice Shaw in the Stevenson Case, 10 Gray, 232, supra, after mature consideration. As we have endeavored to show herein, the capital stock paid in is under the policy of our law, as under similar laws of other states above referred to, and generally, regarded as a fund for the security of creditors; it is the duty of the directors to keep it intact for such security, and they are expressly made liable for their acts in exceeding the debt creditors whose debts were created in excess of the limit fixed, all such creditors must join. Moulton v. Connell, H. McL. Co. 93 Tenn. 377, 27 S. W. 672; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

A single creditor maintained a bill in equity in Margarge & G. Co. v. Ziegler, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 438, but was allowed to recover only that proportion of his demand which the excess indebtedness bore to the entire indebtedness.

Under the statute involved in Cornwall v. Eastham, 2 Bush, 561, it was held that a single creditor might maintain a separate suit without inquiring for other creditors, or requiring them, if there are any, to be made parties. It is stated, however, that an action may be maintained by a single creditor according to the nature of the case, the court apparently being of the opinion that the action might be maintained separately independently of any statute, but apparently this is obiter under the facts involved. The provision of the statute is not set out in the opinion. See First Nat. Bank v. Hingham Mfg. Co. 127 Mass. 563, infra.

See Thacher v. King, 156 Mass. 490, 31 N. E. 648, infra.

b. Where liability may be enforced.

The liability incurred by directors under such a statute being to all the creditors, and the claims arising under the statute being in the nature of a trust fund to be collected and divided pro rata among all the creditors, the liability must be enforced in equity. Low v. Buchanan, 94 Ill. 76; Buchanan v. Bartow Iron Co. 3 Ill. App. 191; Gay v. Kohlsaat, 223 Ill. 260, 79 N. E. 77; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692, 42 N. E. 338; Margarge & G. Co. v. Ziegler, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 438; Charles E. Brown & Co. v. Ware, 87 Vt. 121, 88 Atl. 507; Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879; Stone v. Chisolm, 113 U. S. 302, 28 L. ed. 991, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 497; Lyman v. Hilliard, 83 L.R.A.1915D.

C. C. A. 117, 154 Fed. 339, reversing 138 Fed. 469.

In Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 10 Gray, 232, the statute provided that any person to whom the directors were so liable might have an action on the case against any one or more of the said officers, but a subsequent section in the same statute authorized a bill in equity instead of such action at law, and still another section of the statute gave the court jurisdiction in equity in all cases in which there were more than two persons having distinct rights or interests which could not be justly and definitely decided and adjusted in one action at the common law.

A single qualified creditor, for himself and all other creditors, may sue every delinquent director, and thus create the fund to be distributed among the creditors. The distribution of the liability, and the apportionment to each creditor of his share of the fund, are matters to be determined on the accounting. Whitney v. Pugh, 58 App. Div. 316, 68 N. Y. Supp. 992.

In Charles E. Brown & Co. v. Ware, 87 Vt. 121, 88 Atl. 507, the declaration in the action at law alleged that the indebtedness to the plaintiff was a part of the indebtedness assented to by the defendants as directors in excess of the sum fixed by the statute; that the corporation was then insolvent and unable to pay its said indebtedness to an amount stated. The court, upon these allegations, states that from them it clearly appears that the excess to which the directors assented is comprised in part of the debt to the plaintiff and in part of debts to other creditors; that the creation of these debts may or may not have been severally assented to by all and the same directors, or the assent in more or less instances may have been by directors in part different; that individual liability depends upon individual assent to violation of the law; consequently, personal responsibility for the debts entering into the excess may not be the same as to any two of the directors. In such circumstances the same judgment cannot be rendered against all, and several judgments cannot be had at limit; and their liability is in the nature of a surety fund for the protection of creditors in the event of such excess. If we should construe the law as contended by the defendant, it would be possible for the directors, by their careless or reckless management of a corporation in incurring debts beyond the limit, to bring about the insolvency or bankruptcy of the corporation, and then, having put the property into the hands of assignees, to exonerate themselves from liability by showing that the assignees, far from paying the debts incurred under the management of the directors in full, have been able in the course of liquidation to pay just enough so that the total unpaid debt falls below the limit of the paid-in capital, while exhausting the very fund an action at law, but can in a court of equity. It was accordingly held that the action should be brought in equity.

In construing a statute providing that if the indebtedness of any company organized under the act shall at any time exceed the amount of its capital stock, the trustees of such company assenting thereto shall be personally and individually liable for such excess to the creditors of the company, the court in Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879, states that the fair and reasonable construction of the act is that the trustees who assented to an increase of the indebtedness of the corporation beyond its capital stock are to be held guilty of a violation of their trust; that the Congress intended that, so far as this excessive indebtedness over capital stock was necessary, they should make good the debts of the creditors who had been the sufferers by the breach of trust, but that this liability constitutes a fund for the benefit of all the creditors who are entitled to share in it in proportion to the amount of their debts, so far as may be necessary to pay these debts. The court concluded by stating that the remedy for this violation of duty as trustee is in its nature appropriate to a court of chancery.

It was held in James H. Rice Co. v. Libbey, 85 Fed. 821, that in the suit in equity the corporation is a necessary party and the action must be so brought that all directors who are liable to contribute may have their liability determined in the same action,—a bill of complaint which is merely equitable to the extent of suing in behalf of the plaintiff and all creditors of the corporation who may come in, leaving the liability of the defendant to be determined as at law and as a several obligation, not being sufficient.

But this decision was reversed in the circuit court of appeals (45 C. C. A. 73, 105 Fed. 825) on the ground that the corporation was not an indispensable party to the action.

Such a statute was held to impose a contractual liability in Field v. Haines, 28 Fed. 919, and therefore to be enforceable L.R.A.1915D.

which it was the duty of the directors to preserve for the security of creditors. It is our opinion that such a construction is quite contrary to the general scope and intent of the law, and we have found no case under a statute like our own which so holds. Such a construction would, we think, be quite contrary to the plain purpose and intent of the law, and would deprive the creditors of the very security which the law intends to give them.

Under a statute of Pennsylvania practically identical with ours, the liability of directors to make good the excess of indebtedness over the amount of paid-in capital stock was quite carefully considered in the case of Margarge & G. Co. v. Ziegler, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 438. After reciting the stat-by trustee process, under a statute authorizing actions on contracts to be enforced by trustee process.

Where the statute imposing the liability upon directors also prescribes a remedy, such remedy is exclusive. Pond v. Newell, 162 Fed. 579. It was accordingly held under the Rhode Island statute, which gave the creditor to whom a director rendered himself liable an action on the case against any one or more of the said officers, that the action at law could be maintained. That a bill in equity could not be maintained under the statute was held in Legg v. Dewing, 25 R. I. 568, 57 Atl. 373. The right to proceed in equity when the statute authorized an action at law was denied also in Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co. 47 Vt. 313.

Several creditors may maintain an action under a statute providing that "the judgment creditor, or any other creditor," may maintain the action on behalf of himself and all other creditors, especially where a general statute provides that, in the construction of statutes, words importing the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature or repugnant to the context of the statute. First Nat. Bank v. Hingham Mfg. Co. 127 Mass. 563.

As to enforcing outside of the state which enacted the statute, see Farr v. Briggs, 72 Vt. 225, 82 Am. St. Rep. 930, 47 Atl. 793, and First Nat. Bank v. Price, 33 Md. 488, 3 Am. Rep. 204, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 485, supra, IV. a.

c. When liability may be enforced.

A judgment against the corporation was held not a prerequisite to the maintenance of a bill in equity to enforce the statutory liability under a statute providing that the "whole amount of the debts which any such company shall at any time owe shall not exceed the amount of its capital stock actually paid in, and in case of any excess the directors under whose administration ute the court, (page 442) goes on to say: "The assets of a corporation are represented by its capital stock, and their value presumably equals the amount of the stock issued. The evident purpose of the section quoted is to forbid a corporate indebtedness greater than can be met with the assets, and to enforce the prohibition by making the directors who contract such indebtedness individually liable for the excess. In the present case, the directors, having contracted an indebtedness of $27,000 in excess of the capital stock, became to this extent personally liable. An answer in equity presenting affirmative matter of defense must set forth everything necessary to such a defense; what is not averred or necessarily implied is taken not to exist. Here it does not appear, by either averment or implication, that the directors have paid the whole amount of the excess of indebtedness which they unlawfully contracted, and for which they incurred a personal liability. Such implication as arises is to the contrary. Before the plaintiff's claim matured, the directors confessed judgments against the corporation, on which executions were issued and all the corporate property sold. Except that the proceeds of this sale were insufficient to pay the judgments, their amount is not stated. From all that appears in the case, it might be inferred that the directors have taken credit for this amount as a reduction of the corporate indebtedness for which they were liable, and have paid only enough more to reduce the indebted-it shall happen shall be jointly and severally liable to the extent of such excess for all the debts of the company then existing and for all that shall be contracted so long as they shall respectively continue in office and until the debts shall be reduced to the said amount of the capital stock." Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 5 Allen, 398.

There must be a compliance with a statute requiring a judgment and return of an execution unsatisfied, before proceeding to enforce this liability. Frank P. Miller Paper Co. v. York Coated Paper Co. 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 315.

Adjudging the corporation a bankrupt does not relieve of the necessity of complying with this statute. Ibid.

Where a statute imposes as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an equitable action against the directors to enforce this liability, that a judgment should have been recovered against the corporation and an execution returned unsatisfied, a judgment creditor who has begun a suit in equity to enforce the directors' liability may in such suit prove simple contract debts due him. Thacher v. King, 156 Mass. 490, 31 N. E. 648. It is stated that the statute requires only that a judgment should have been recovered and an execution returned unsatisfied in order that the suit in equity may be maintained against the directors, and that when that condition exists, any creditor may file the bill, and it is to be on behalf of himself and all other creditors; that even if it be necessary that the plaintiff bringing the bill should have recovered the judgment, which the statute does not require, still the benefit of the bill is not confined to judgment creditors, and if other simple contract creditors can join them, there is no reason why the judgment creditors should not join their simple contract claims.

The failure of the plaintiff creditor in an action to enforce the liability of the directors on behalf of himself and other creditors, to obtain a judgment against the corporation, is excused where it is shown that he was enjoined from so doing, and that the injunction was operative when the creditors' action was brought. Whitney v. Pugh, 58 App. Div. 316, 88 N. Y. Supp. 902.

That the assets of the company have been exhausted is stated to be one of the conditions of the right of a creditor to enforce the statutory liability. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L.R.A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097, approved in Webster v. Whitworth, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 290.

See also Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 228, supra, VII. b, 2.

Effect of insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings.

It is no objection to the maintenance of a bill in equity against directors to enforce their liability growing out of the fact that the debts of the corporation exceeded the amount of the capital stock, that another bill in equity was brought by the same creditors against the directors as stockholders to enforce their liability on the ground that the capital stock was never paid in. First Nat. Bank v. Hingham Mfg. Co. 127 Mass. 563.

The fact that the corporation was in bankruptcy and its property assigned does not affect the right of the creditors to proceed by a bill against the directors, and after the corporation has neglected to pay the amount due the creditors within a stated time, under a statute authorizing the filing of a bill against the directors when the corporation shall have neglected for a stated time after demand made on execution to pay the amount due, or exhibit property sufficient to satisfy the execution, and requiring further that the bill be brought against the corporation and the directors, although the main purpose of the proceedings is to hold the directors liable. Ibid.

The fact that creditors have proved their demands in bankruptcy against the corporation, and have received dividends thereon, is no bar to a bill against the directors to enforce their liability. Ibid.

ness within the lawful limit. We cannot regard such an application of the corporate assets as within the spirit and purpose of the statute. By such a process, instead of payment by the directors of the unlawful excess for which they were liable, the assets of the corporation are made to pay the debt which the statute places on the directors, and this to the extent of their total exhaustion. The insolvency of a corporation does not necessarily work its dissolution, yet when left without the means of continuing its business it is practically lifeless. An application of its property, which in effect extinguished the corporation, cannot be viewed as a reduction of its indebtedness in relief of the liability of the directors for the indebtedness unlawfully contracted. When it does not appear that the directors have, by payment of the unlawful excess, become discharged from further liability, they must be deemed still responsible for the debt which they contracted to the plaintiff."

We think the principle of this decision is quite applicable to the case at bar. In the case cited the debts were reduced by the sale of the entire corporate property on execution upon judgments confessed by the directors. In the case at bar the entire corporate property was sold by the trustee in bankruptcy, and paid in dividends to creditors in part payment of debts. We are unable to see that the directors are entitled in either case to have credit for the sums so realized as against the excess of debts unlawfully contracted. See also Frank P. Miller Paper Co. v. York Coated Paper Co. 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 315, 322.

For the reasons above set forth, the plaintiff's second exception is sustained.

It follows that the plaintiff's exceptions 3 to 6, inclusive, should be sustained. Exception 3 (transcript, pp. 3-5) relates to

The fact that the notes sued upon by a creditor had been filed with the receiver of the corporation in an insolvency proceeding does not constitute a defense to the director, where it does not appear that the notes had been paid, or that there were any corporate assets with which to pay them. White v. How, 3 McLean, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 17,549.

The fact that a director has received a certificate of discharge in bankruptcy under proceedings begun before bills were filed to enforce the director's liability, and before the suit of a creditor against the corporation on which a judgment was obtained was begun, is no defense to the bill to enforce the director's liability, since this is not such a liability as might have been proved in the bankruptcy proceeding. First Nat. Bank v. Hingham Mfg. Co. supra.

The creditors of the corporation can reach funds in hands of the trustee under an assignment by one of the directors for the benefit of creditors, on condition that those creditors who signed their assent to it within sixty days should share in the assets, where it does not appear that any of the director's creditors had become parties to the assignment when the bill by the creditor was brought. Hudson v. J. B. Parker Mach. Co. 173 Mass. 242, 53 N. E. 867.

The assent by the creditors of a corporation to an assignment made by it, in which assent the creditors expressly reserve to themselves all rights necessary to the maintenance of their claims against the officers of the corporation, does not prevent their holding the directors liable in case the debts exceeded the limit fixed by statute. Ibid. It is stated that, notwithstanding the assignment of the corporation and the qualified assent of the creditors, they are entitled to have a decree in equity against the officers for the amount for which they were liable at the time of the commencement of L.R.A.1915D.

the suit at law against the corporation, less such sum as the plaintiffs received as a dividend under the assignment of the corporation.

As to when the cause of action accrues under such a statute, see IX. a, infra.

IX. Applicability of statute of limitations.

a. In general.

The liability imposed by such a statute is not penal, and is therefore not governed by the statute of limitations applicable to penalties. Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521, 23 N. E. 1007.

A provision contained in the charter of a bank, that the amount of the debts which the corporation shall at any time owe shall not exceed three times the amount its stock paid in, over and above the amount of money actually deposited in its vault for safe-keeping, and in case of excess making the directors under whose administration it shall happen liable for the same, and providing further that an action of debt may in such a case be brought against the directors or any of them by any creditor or creditors of the corporation, and may be prosecuted to judgment and execution, imposes a statutory liability in the nature of a specialty upon the directors of the corporation, and not a penalty; and in the absence of a statute it is governed by the common law in relation to domestic judgments, which presumes payment or satisfaction after twenty years. Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104. "The charter," says the court, "creates the liability in favor of individuals, and that distinguishes it from a penalty." A similar decision appears in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318.

It was urged in Neal v. Moultrie, supra, that the liability incurred by the directors under such a statute was governed by a spe-exclusion of testimony of Henry E. Tiepke as to the indebtedness of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, on May 4, 1907, in excess of capital stock actually paid in. In our view of the case the testimony was pertinent and should have been admitted. Exceptions 4 and 5 were to rulings admitting testimony of Wm. P. Cross, clerk of the United States district court, showing amount of dividends in bankruptcy paid to creditors (transcript, pp. 7-9). In our view, this testimony was immaterial and should have been excluded. Exception 6 was to the direction of verdict for the defendant. Under our view of the case, such direction of verdict was error; and the only ground of such direction was upon the erroneous decision of the presiding justice in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the second plea to the third count of the declaration (exception 2, as above set forth).

The first exception is overruled; exceptions 2 to 6, inclusive, are sustained. And as the record contains full and explicit proof of the exact amount of the indebtedness and of the excess thereof over the amount of the paid-in capital stock, showing the liability of the defendant as a director as set forth in the third count of the declaration, and also undisputed proof that the debt due the plaintiff was the sum of $1,154.28, with interest from June 13, 1907, we are of the opinion that this case does not need a new trial, but that the verdict which was directed for the defendant should be set aside, and that the case should be remitted to the superior court, with direction to enter judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $1,154.28, with interest from June 13, 1907, at 6 per cent per annum, and for costs.

The defendant may show cause, if any he has, why this order should not be made, on June 30, 1913, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

missed upon application made to the court, no explanation or excuse for such laches having been made. Merchants' Bank v. Stevenson, 7 Allen, 489. It is stated by the court that, taken by itself, perhaps no one of these grounds would be sufficient to warrant the court in denying a motion to amend, but in combination they may constitute a decisive and insuperable objection to the allowance of an amendment which in effect would restore to the plaintiff a remedy which, by his own negligence, he has lost.

b. When statute begins to run.

The liability of directors under such statutes is in the nature of a suretyship liability; it does not accrue until the corporation has failed to pay; therefore, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the maturity of the debt. Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521, 23 N. E. 1007. Under the doctrine of Illinois, an action can be maintained in equity only for and on behalf of all the creditors; it was urged in the above case that if the cause of action is held not to accrue until the maturity of the debt, a bill cannot be maintained until all the debts of the corporation are due, because the liability is for the benefit of all creditors, and must be enforced by a single bill. This contention was denied, the court being of the opinion that the court of chancery had power to bring before it the corporation and all its officers who had assented to excessive indebtedness, as well as all its creditors, and ascertain the excess of the indebtedness over the capital stock, the amount of excess to which each trustee may have assented, and the extent to which the funds of the corporation may be resorted to for the payment of the debts, also the number and names of creditors, the amount of their several debts, and to determine the sum to be re-special short-term statute of limitation relating to penalties, fines, or forfeitures, and that it was barred by the time fixed in that statute, that is, six months. As stated above this contention was denied.

In Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580, a statute applicable to specialty contracts, but not specialties generally, was held not applicable to the liability incurred by directors under the statute making them liable for an excess of debt. The liability imposed by this statute is stated to be statutory, and not to be dependent upon any special contract between the corporator and the person with whom he deals. It was accordingly held that the right of action was not barred until after a period of twenty years.

In Tallmadge v. Fishkill Iron Co. 4 Barb. 382, it is stated that where the debts exceed the limit fixed by statute, the amount of the excess becomes at once a debt due from the directors; that to maintain an action for such debt it is necessary to show only the fact that such excess at any time existed, and that it happened under the administration of the defendant as a director. It is further stated that no lapse of time, no statute of limitation, will avail to bar the liability.

It is provided in some statutes that the statute of limitation shall not bar a suit against directors for any sum of money for which they are thus made liable.

An amendment to a bill in equity against the directors to enforce this liability, to which a demurrer has been sustained, will not be allowed after the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, where the plaintiff had been guilty of very gross laches in commencing and prosecuting the suit, and especially in omitting to apply for an amendment to the bill after the demurrer was sustained for a period of eight months, during which time the suit was practically out of court and the bill liable to be discovered of the trustees and apportioned among the creditors.

A different view is taken, or rather it was not denied, in Swan v. Burnham, 70 N. H. 580, 49 Atl. 93, that a cause of action against the directors accrued to existing creditors at the time an indebtedness exceeding the statutory limit was incurred, and, the conditions continuing, to subsequent creditors when their debts were created. It was urged, however, that as to existing creditors new causes of action accrued whenever the indebtedness of the corporation was increased after the debt limit had been passed. This, however, was denied, and the right of action held to accrue as to existing creditors at the time the indebtedness passed the statutory limit, and as to subsequent creditors when their debts were created. Nothing is said as to the statute of limitations not beginning to run until the debts became due. The fact that the claims of some of the creditors were reduced to judgment against the corporation within the statutory period was held not to stop the running of the statute of limitations against the directors on their statutory liability.

X. Effect of expiration of corporate life.

The dissolution of the corporation by the expiration of its charter, as limited in the act of incorporation, does not relieve the directors of a liability incurred under a statute making them liable in case the debts of the corporation exceed three times the amount of the stock paid in, over and above the amount of money actually deposited in its vault for safe-keeping. Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289. The charter expired after the suit had been begun, but this is not made the controlling fact.

A similar holding appears in Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580. In this case there was the additional fact that a judgment of forfeiture had been rendered under a statute which saved the right to collect debts and settle up the affairs of the corporation generally, and the decision is finally rested upon the theory that this abrogated the rule of extinguishment held to apply to corporations upon dissolution at common law.

A contrary decision appears in Moultrie v. Hoge, 21 Ga. 513, where it was held that by the expiration of the charter of a bank a creditor's cause of action against the director was extinguished, and no recovery could be had.

As stated above, where a corporation is dissolved in a forfeiture proceeding begun under a statute reserving the right to collect debts and settle up the affairs of the corporation in general, such a dissolution does not extinguish the liability of director. Hargroves v. Chambers, supra.

And this is true even though the judgment of forfeiture which is pronounced does not contain the saving of the statute. Ibid.

W. A. E.

L.R.A.1915D.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
Resp't.

(212 N. Y. 360, 106 N. E. 92.)

Corporation — profits from investments as capital — rights of preferred stockholders.

Profits made by a railroad company by investments in stocks of other corporations, and by converting its bonds into stock, need not be dealt with as an accretion to capital, to be distributed among all stockholders, but may be treated as earnings, and distributed as dividends, within the application of a clause in its articles of association by which the dividends to preferred stock shall not exceed a specified per cent per annum, and therefore, when that per cent has been paid to preferred stock, the remainder may be distributed amongst common stockholders.

(July 14, 1914.)

Note. — Corporations: accretions in value of corporate assets as basis of dividends.

As to rights as between life tenant and remainderman in dividends or distributions by corporation, see the notes to Holbrook v. Holbrook, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 768; Newport Trust Co. v. VanKensselaer, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563; Re Osborne, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510.

As to right of preferred stock to preference as to capital on dissolution, see the notes to Field v. Lamson & G. Mfg. Co. 27 L.R.A. 136; Lloyd v. Pennsylvania Electric Vehicle Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 228; Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007.

As to right of holder of preferred stock, in absence of express statutory provision or agreement on the point, to share in earnings in addition to the stipulated dividends, see the note to Sternbergh v. Brock, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1078.

As to accumulations in arrears on preferred stock, see the note to Roberts v. Roberts-Wicks Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1034.

As to assets of corporation as consideration for increase of stock, see the note to Lantz v. Moeller, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 68.

As to validity of guaranty of dividends, see the note to Jorguson v. Apex Gold Mines, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 637.

There are certain accretions or increases of a different character from the ordinary routine earnings of a business. They are gains, and in a sense profits; but there is some difference of opinion as to whether they are properly called profits, and perhaps the principal case is not entirely convincing on this point. These increases often seem as much a part of the capital as the

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of a Special Term, Part III. for New York County, granting defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings in an action brought to enjoin the distribution by defendant of moneys as a dividend among its common stockholders. Affirmed.

The question certified was as follows:

Does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action?

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles W. Pierson, Allan McCulloh, and Campbell E. Locke, with Messrs. Alexander & Green, for appellant:

The item in defendant's surplus of $15,- new part of a growing tree, and in practical accounting the figure perhaps remains good as long as the investment stands. But when the investment is realized and enough is set aside to make up the par value of the capital, is the balance free for distribution as dividends? The comparatively few cases on the subject do not seem to have reached any general rules. On the contrary, they seem to take the view in general that the result is to be sought in the peculiar facts of each case rather than in abstract rules.

Thus it will be seen that the decisions are not to be reconciled. Indeed, it has been asserted in a work by an accountant, that "the law on the subject of profits is not well settled and will not be, so long as the majority of lawyers retain their profound ignorance of accounts." Montgomery, Auditing Theory & Practice, p. 194.

It is difficult to obtain an abstract view of the subject. Some discussions proceed from the point of view of the attorney general or visitor who is concerned simply with finding 100 cents on the par value of the capital stock, while others relate to the construction of a particular contract with preferred stockholders, or with the peculiar situation of some particular asset.

The opinion in EQUITABLE LIFE ASSUR. Soc. v. UNION P. R. Co. wisely observes that the cases on the respective rights of life tenant and remaindermen are not helpful to this discussion. The court refers to Re Osborne, 209 N. Y. 450, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 103 N. E. 723, 823, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 298, where it is made clear that in the case of a fund in trust or in which there is a life estate, it is the capital of the fund which is to be protected, and if, at the time of the establishment of the fund, it was invested in stocks which had a capital and surplus, both the capital and the surplus must be reckoned in estimating the then value of the fund which is to be kept intact as between life tenant and remainderman; while, on the other hand, as regards the corporation considered by itself, the surplus might have been of such a character as to be divisible in dividends. L.R.A.1915D.

868,200, representing the difference between the face value of convertible bonds and the par value of the stock into which they were converted, is surplus capital as distinguished from "profits."

Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. 284, 286, 22 L. ed. 651, 652; Roberts v. Roberts-Wicks Co. 184 N. Y. 257, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1034, 112 Am. St. Rep. 607, 77 N. E. 13, 6 Ann. Cas. 213.

Accretions of capital are not "profits" within the meaning of the provisions in defendant's charter limiting the right of the preferred stock to share in the profits.

32 Cyc. 585 et seq.; Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 450, 9 N. E. 235; Duclos v. Benner, 62 Hun, 428, 17 N. Y. Supp. 168; Re Bridgewater Nav. Co. L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 1, 57 L. J. Ch. N. S. 809, modified on appeal in L. R. 14 App. Cas. 525, 59 L. J. Ch. N. S. 122, 61

The question of charges on income from ordinary assets (as distinguished from wasting assets) is not within the scope of this note; see, for example: on overcharging income for improvements, Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 34 Fed. 582; on wrongly charging to income new freight engines and coal cars, steel rails and improvements to steamers, Ibid.; on the question of whether interest on loans during construction of works should be charged to principal or capital account for dividend purposes, Gratz v. Redd, 4 B. Mon. 178; Bloxam v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 3 Ch. 337, 18 L. T. N. S. 41, 16 Week. Rep. 490; Bardwell v. Sheffield Waterworks Co. L. R. 14 Eq. 517, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 700, 20 Week. Rep. 939; Hinds v. Buenos Ayres Grand Nat. Tramways Co. [1906] 2 Ch. 654, 23 Times L. R. 6, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 17, 95 L. T. N. S. 780, 13 Manson, 411.

Accretions to principal in general.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSUR. Soc. v. UNION P. R. Co. is an example of the cases of this class, and holds that the accretion of principal from favorable investments may be distributed in dividends.

Where a company sells part of its undertaking and receives therefor, besides the amount of its paid-up capital, a certain surplus in addition thereto, there is no objection to dividing a part of this surplus as profits in the form of dividends. Lubbock v. British Bank, [1892] 2 Ch. 198, 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. 498, 67 L. T. N. S. 74, 41 Week. Rep. 103, cited in the principal case.

In Verner v. General & C. Invest. Trust, [1894] 2 Ch. 239, Stirling, J., in the court below, remarked that it followed, from his view of the nature of the company as not an ordinary trading company, that the shareholders would not be entitled to divide for the purpose of dividends any increase in the value of investments, however great; and he distinguished the Lubbock Case, supra, on the ground that there the company was evidently considered as an ordinary trading company; but Kay, L. J., L. T. N. S. 621, 38 Week. Rep. 401, 1 Me-gone, 372; Will v. United Lankat Planta-tions Co. [1912] 2 Ch. 571, 81 L. J. Ch. N. S. 718, 107 L. T. N. S. 360, 28 Times L. R. 566, 56 Sol. Jo. 648, 19 Manson, 298; Niles v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co. 196 Fed. 994; Thayer v. Burr, 201 N. Y. 155, 94 N. E. 604; Re Osborne, 209 N. Y. 450, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 510, 103 N. E. 723, 823, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 298; Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 5414; Re Clark, 62 Hun, 275, 17 N. Y. Supp. 93; Cross v. Long Island Loan & T. Co. 75 Hun, 533, 27 N. Y. Supp. 495; Re Gerry, 103 N. Y. 445, 9 N. E. 235; Re Proctor, 85 Hun, 572, 33 N. Y. Supp. 196; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 19 L.R.A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189, 20 S. W. 778; 10 Cyc. 560; Gray v. Darling-ton, 15 Wall. 63, 21 L. ed. 45.

said, in the court of appeal (in the Verner Case): "If the capital had been increased by a rise in the value of the investments, I conceive that they might have realized some part of that increase and distributed it as dividend." (It was held in the Verner Case that a limited company whose business was to some extent the investment in securities might declare a dividend out of the profits of the year, although, owing to depreciation in the value of securities, there had been a depreciation in their assets below the par value of the capital stock.)

In Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. supra, it was held that receipts or revenues from surplus land assets of a reorganized railroad company, including sales of land, were income or earnings applicable to the payment of dividends on the preferred stock,—operating expenses having already been charged with the repairs and renewals etc.,—and that it was unjust to the holders of the certificates for common stock under such circumstances to credit such surplus land assets to general depreciation account, where the holders of certificates for common stock were not to get their shares of stock or dividends until the preferred stock had received five successive yearly dividends of 7 per cent, and the preferred stockholders were in charge of the road and paid dividends on the preferred stock of less than 7 per cent, but paid from time to time very large amounts in the improvement of the property, which they charged to operating expenses or to earnings; and it was held that the accounts must be re-stated, and those who held the certificates for the common stock must be let in, as there was ample to pay the five successive dividends provided for. Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. supra. The court considered that the meaning of the charter of the company was properly contemporaneously construed in a resolution passed at the first meeting of the board of directors, "that, under the head of operating expenses, only such improvements and additions shall be included as are necessary, in the judgment of the directors, to keep the property up to the proper standard of efficiency, and L.R.A.1915D.

Messrs. John G. Milburn, Henry W. Clark, and George A. Ellis, for respondent:

Any excess of value of a corporation's assets over its liabilities and capital stock constitutes a profit available for dividends. The classification of stock as common and preferred does not affect the determination of the existence of profits available for dividends, but presents a second and distinct question as to how such profits shall be apportioned between the two classes of stock in the declaration of dividends.

Barry v. Merchants' Exch. Co. 1 Sandf. Ch. 280; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162; Hubbard v. Wear, 79 Iowa, 678, 44 N. W. 915; Machen, Corp. §§ 1314-1320; Excelsior Water & Min. Co. v. Pierce, that such portion of additions and extensions beyond this, as the board decides, shall be provided for out of funds other than net earnings; that the stockholders are entitled to the benefit of all net earnings after paying expenses and coupons," particularly as the reorganization scheme provided for the issue of reorganized first mortgage 6 per cent bonds, "to be used only to fund the past-due and maturing interest on the prior bonds, and for such permanent construction and improvement as may be deemed desirable by the board of directors of the new company."

In Murray v. Beattie Mfg. Co. 79 N. J. Eq. 322, 82 Atl. 1041, it is not very clear whether or not it was directly decided that the proceeds of sales of real property owned by the corporation as part of its capital were the proper subject of dividends to its stockholders, but it seems that the amount of property retained by the corporation greatly exceeded the par value of its capital stock.

Windfalls.

The disposition of windfalls seems to depend on circumstances.

It has been held that collections made on a judgment against a person on claims arising out of his abstractions of capital of the company are properly declared as dividends when the company already has funds largely in excess of its capital stock. Hyams v. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. 82 N. J. Eq. 507, 89 Atl. 37, affirmed on opinion below — N. J. —, 91 Atl. 1069; rehearing denied in 83 N. J. L. 705, 92 Atl. 588.

Where a company, having purchased certain property and assets, including promissory notes not apparently considered of any particular value, later received full payment for the notes and interest, the court, while holding that the corporation would not be allowed to declare a dividend of all of this sum as a windfall pending the result of the whole account of the company for the year, said, referring to the capital part of the sum, "I must not, however, be understood as determining that this sum or a portion of it may not properly be brought into profit and loss account, or be taken into account in ascertaining the amount available for dividend." Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co. [1901] 1 Ch. 208, 1 B. R. C. 959.

90 Cal. 131, 27 Pac. 44; Union & N. H. Trust Co. v. Taintor, 85 Conn. 452, 83 Atl. 697; Allegheny v. Pittsburg A. & M. Pass. R. Co. 179 Pa. 414, 36 Atl. 161; Cook, Corp. 7th ed. §§ 534, 535; Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 34 Fed. 582; Bassett v. United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 668, 70 Atl. 929; Lubbock v. British Bank [1892] 2 Ch. 198, 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. 498, 67 L. T. N. S. 74, 41 Week. Rep. 103; Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159, 4 Mor. Min. Rep. 47; Roberts v. Roberts-Wicks Co. 184 N. Y. 257, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1034, 112 Am. St. Rep. 607, 77 N. E. 13, 6 Ann. Cas. 213; People ex rel. Browne v. Koenig, 133 App. Div. 756, 118 N. Y. Supp. 136; Mellon v. Mississippi Wire Glass Co. 77 N. J. Eq. 498, 78 Atl. 710;

But where the stockholders of a national bank, in order to escape an assessment of $75,000 by the comptroller in consequence of a bad or doubtful investment of about $71,000, reduced its capital stock by $75,000, and later, more than $75,000 was received from such investment, it was held that a stockholder could not compel the bank to distribute this money, as "the rights of the shareholders to compel a distribution, growing out of the reduction, were fixed by the condition of the bank as it existed when the reduction was made, and are not to be determined in the light of subsequent events." McCann v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Ind. 354, 14 N. E. 251. Upon a further litigation over the same transactions (131 Ind. 95, 30 N. E. 893) it appeared that at the meeting at which the reduction in stock was made, the stockholders voted to take the depreciated assets, which were the cause of the impairment, from the assets of the bank, and place them in the hands of trustees, for the use and benefit of the stockholders, but that the officers of the bank ignored this vote and retained the securities in question in their possession. It was held after the bank had realized some $83,000 on such securities that the trust so voted was invalid, and that the bank would not be compelled to turn over such sum to the trustees.

Contributed surplus, and premiums.

Where, shortly before the merger of two corporations, a part of a sum which had been paid in to one of those corporations by stockholders for the purpose of having it added as surplus to the corporation was returned to the stockholders, it was held that this was not a dividend within the terms of a taxing statute, and it was not from "surplus profits" under the provisions L.R.A.1915D.

Hackett v. Northern P. R. Co. 140 Fed. 717; Russell v. American Gas & Electric Co. 152 App. Div. 136, 136 N. Y. Supp. 602; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162; Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co. 73 N. J. Eq. 692, 69 Atl. 1014; Bassett v. United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 668, 70 Atl. 929; Niles v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co. 120 C. C. A. 319, 202 Fed. 141.

The terms of the contract under which the preferred stock of respondent was created reserved to the common stock the right to all profits in excess of 4 per cent per annum paid upon the preferred stock. This contract was not limited to profits of a particular kind, but embraced all the profits of the corporation, including the profits charof a stock corporation law providing that dividends shall only be made from surplus profits; it was contributed solely for the purpose of strengthening the company and adding to its working capital. People ex rel. North American Trust Co. v. Knight, 96 App. Div. 120, 89 N. Y. Supp. 72.

It may be noted that in Re Hoare & Co. [1904] 2 Ch. 208, 73 L. J. Ch. N. S. 601, 53 Week. Rep. 51, 91 L. T. N. S. 115, 20 Times L. R. 581, 11 Manson, 307, Romer, L. J., observed (obiter) that a surplus consisting in part of the premiums on preference shares might have been applied to dividends.

It has been held that where income is burdened by a rate of interest which secures a premium on bonds, then income is entitled to the benefit of that profit. Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 34 Fed. 582.

Forfeitures and penalties.

Money paid in on stock of a railroad company which is forfeited for failure to complete the subscription cannot be credited to profits for purposes of a dividend, at least, before the construction of the road is completed. Gratz v. Redd, 4 B. Mon. 178.

On the other hand, it was held in terms in Alcoy & G. R. & Harbour Co. v. Greenhill, 79 L. T. N. S. 257, that penalties from a contractor may be paid out in dividends; the court stating that "if penalties are not profits, neither are they capital." But it seems at least doubtful whether the question was involved in the case.

Restoring money taken from income.

In Bishop v. Smyrna & C. R. Co. [1895] 2 Ch. 596, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 806, 13 Reports, 803, 2 Manson, 575, 73 L. T. N. S. 337, where a company had invested in its own debentures, and they having fallen, had charged a certain amount to depreciation, on later liquidation of the company the foregoing amount of depreciation was treated as appreciation in investment, on the apparent theory that the debentures had risen in value, and the court held that this amount, having been taken from profits, must go back into profits.

acterized by appellant as accretions of capital and of capital assets.

Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162; Greeff v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 160 N. Y. 19, 46 L.R.A. 288, 73 Am. St. Rep. 659, 54 N. E. 712; Will v. United Lankat Plantations Co. [1914] A. C. 11, 83 L. J. Ch. N. S. 195, 109 L. T. N. S. 754, 30 Times L. R. 37, 58 Sol. Jo. 29, 21 Manson, 24.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the plaintiff as the holder of a large amount of the preferred stock issued by defendant, to restrain the distribution by the latter of about $80,000,000 as a dividend among its common stockholders. The material facts set forth

Excess above amount to which capital stock has been reduced.

It has been held that when, by the reduction of the capital stock, there remains in the treasury an excess of property over the amount to which the stock has been reduced, such excess may be distributed among the stockholders. Strong v. Brooklyn & C. R. Co. 93 N. Y. 426, following Seeley v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, infra.

Similarly, in Seeley v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 8 Daly, 400, affirmed in 78 N. Y. 608, where the capital stock of a bank was reduced from par, which it was worth, to 60 per cent, it being the intention to turn over to the stockholders half the reduction and keep the other half as a surplus, the court ordered that the whole of the amount of the reduction on his stock must be paid over to a stockholder demanding it. (But compare McCann v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Ind. 354, 14 N. E. 251, supra, "Windfalls.")

But the excess is not profits as distinguished from capital. Thus, where a corporation, having cumulative preferred stock and common stock, omitted the dividends on both stocks for several years, and thereafter reduced proportionately its capital both as to common and preferred stock, which reduction left a surplus of capital above the amount of such reduced capital, this surplus belonged to the capital of the corporation, and was not divisible in dividends on the preferred stock, as it was not profit. Roberts v. Roberts-Wicks Co. 184 N. Y. 257, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1034, 112 Am. St. Rep. 607, 77 N. E. 13, 6 Ann. Cas. 213.

Wasting character of the property.

It is well recognized that the property of a corporation may properly in time be dissipated in dividends where the property is of a wasting character, such as mines, or patents having a definite time to run.

In Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 1, 58 L. J. Ch. N. S. 408, 61 L. T. N. S. 11, 37 Week. Rep. 321, 1 Megone, 140, where it seems to have been the opinion of the court that there was not any depreciation.

in the complaint which asks this relief are as follows:

At the times involved the defendant had a large outstanding issue both of preferred and common stock. Prior to January 8, 1914, it had carried to the credit of its profit and loss account large amounts based on valuations which are not questioned, and at that date the credit balance of this account was more than $80,000,000. Of this amount upwards of $15,000,000 had accrued through the retirement of defendant's convertible bonds with common stock on a basis of one share of stock at par for $175 par value of bonds, and upwards of $58,000,000 had accrued as gain or profit on the sale of stocks of other corporations purchased and held by or for the benefit of the defendant. On the date above mentioned the de-tion in the value of the property under the peculiar circumstances of the case, it seems to have been held on principle that there was no reason why, in the case of wasting property, such as a mine, the net profit for the year should not be divided without taking into consideration that these profits were derived from ore, which, of course, could not be replaced. Cited and followed in Excelsior Water & Min. Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 131, 27 Pac. 44. Cited also in People ex rel. United Verde Copper Co. v. Roberts, 156 N. Y. 555, 51 N. E. 293, where it was held that surplus earnings of a mining company were not taxable as "capital," as the company was not required to set money aside from its earnings to make up for the depletion of ore.

So, for the purposes of an income tax, dividends from a mining corporation were considered as income. Van Dyke v. Milwaukee, 159 Wis. 460, 146 N. W. 812, 150 N. W. 509.

In Mellon v. Mississippi Wire Glass Co. 77 N. J. Eq. 498, 78 Atl. 710, it was held that preferred stock was not entitled to require the corporation to accumulate a sinking fund out of which to pay the capital of such preferred stock, although nearly all of the capital of the corporation was invested in patents having a definite time of expiration, where the preferred stock was entitled to 5 per cent cumulative dividends, the remainder of the net earnings to be declared as, or to be available for, dividends upon the common stock, the preferred stock on dissolution to be paid its full par value and any accrued unpaid dividends before anything should be paid on the common stock.

But there is a disposition to treat each case upon its own merits rather than by general rules. Thus, in Bond v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co. [1902] 1 Ch. 353, where the court declined to force the corporation to pay dividends on its preferred stock, it appeared that the company, whose business was in part mining, had lost a large amount in certain matters, and that it had undergone a further loss by way of depreciation defendant declared the extraordinary dividend in issue, payable in cash and property to its common stockholders, and chargeable against said balance so standing to the credit of its profit and loss account. The plaintiff holds its preferred stock under a clause in the defendant's articles of association which reads as follows: "Such preferred stock shall be entitled, in preference and priority over the common stock of said corporation, to dividends in each and every fiscal year, at such rate, not exceeding 4 per cent per annum, payable out of net profits, as shall be declared by the board of directors. Such dividends are to be noncumulative, and the preferred stock is entitled to no other or further share of the profits."

It is conceded that the plaintiff has received all of the dividends and "profits" to which it is entitled under the foregoing article. It is also conceded that the amount carried to the credit of profit and loss as above stated need not be retained by the defendant, but may be distributed among its stockholders. It is, however, insisted that this balance does not represent profits which, under the foregoing article, may be distributed exclusively amongst holders of common stock, but that it represents, to the extent of the two items above mentioned, an increase of or accretion to capital which must be distributed as capital amongst all the stockholders, including those holding preferred stock. Thus arises the question which we are required to decide. If this is a distribution, even though unusual in amount, of accumulated gains or profits of a character which the directors of a going of assets, and that it had in its profit and loss account assets about equivalent to these losses. The court considered that the subject was not one of general rules, but that each case must be decided on its own facts, and observed: "For instance, I cannot think that it would be right for the defendant company to purchase out of capital the last two or three years of a valuable patent, and distribute the whole of the receipts in respect thereof as profits without replacing the capital expended in the purchase."

Miscellaneous.

In Frames v. Bultfontein Min. Co. [1891] 1 Ch. 140, where, by the articles of association, it was provided that in remuneration for their services the directors should be paid each year a sum equal to 3 per cent of the net profits of the company of such year, the business of the company being the opening, working, selling, disposing of mines, minerals, diamonds, etc., or any other real or personal estate or property, of the company, the company closed out its assets by a sale, making a very large profit, and it was held that this profit could not be looked to as profits upon which the directors were entitled to a percentage. The court said, among other things: "Unquestionably the directors might have sold any one of the company's mines; had they done so while the company was a going concern, and made a profit thereby, the surplus proceeds of sale, after providing for the estimated value of the mine, would have to be brought into the profit and loss account of that year; but the article in question has no application to a sale like the present, which was made under the paramount statutory power of the company under the winding-up." It was also held that the compensation of the directors related to the services of the company as a going concern, and that this sale was made by the company in the winding up, and was in no way attributable to the services of the directors.

A company engaged in the business of speculators and dealers in mining property L.R.A.1915D.

acquired certain shares in another corporation, which afterwards went into liquidation and distributed its assets among its shareholders. The first-mentioned company afterwards went into liquidation, and after its debts were paid it had a surplus over the amount of its capital stock, and it was held that this surplus was profit under the terms of an agreement that the company had made with two persons to pay them a certain salary provided that they "shall not be entitled to draw their said salary except only out of profits (if any) arising from the business of the company which may from time to time be available for such purpose, but such salary shall nevertheless be cumulative, and accordingly any arrears thereof shall be payable out of any succeeding profits available as aforesaid." Re Spanish Prospecting Co. [1911] 1 Ch. 92, 20 Ann. Cas. 677. Farwell, L. J., said in his opinion: "The profits arising from a draper's business would not include the increase over cost price of a freehold warehouse used in the business and afterwards sold."

The quotation in the principal case from Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162, referred to a stock dividend representing investments of earnings of the company.

The remark of the judge in the lower court in Niles v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co. 196 Fed. 994 (affirmed in 120 C. C. A. 319, 202 Fed. 141) is sufficiently referred to in EQUITABLE LIFE ASSUR. SOC. v. UNION P. R. CO.

It may be noted that in Mills v. Northern R. of Buenos Ayres Co. L. R. 5 Ch. 621, Hatherley, L. C., said: "It is wholly unprecedented for a mere creditor to say: 'Certain transactions are taking place within the company, and dividends are being paid to shareholders which they are not entitled to receive, and therefore I am entitled to come here and examine the company's deed, to see whether or not they are doing what is ultra vires, and to interfere in order that, as by a bill quia timet, I may keep the assets in a proper state of security for the payment of my debt whensoever the time arrives for its payment.'" B. B. B.

corporation may, at any time, in their discretion, divide amongst the stockholders as returns or income on their investment, the plaintiff has no ground for complaint. It elected to take stock having a preferred but limited right to dividends and profits. It chose the right to returns on its investment which made up in certainty for what they lacked in possible quantity, and there is no inequity in holding it to its choice. If, on the other hand, all or part of the gains which it is proposed to distribute are accretions to and have somehow become permanent capital, and been withdrawn from availability for dividends, it will be assumed that they must be distributed amongst all the stockholders.

When a corporation is organized, it secures capital by the issue of shares of capital stock. The fund or property thus secured answers the twofold purpose of furnishing means for carrying on the operations of the corporation and also security for the payment of creditors. This capital stock is carried as a liability, and universally, so far as I am aware, at its par amount. It is thus carried as a liability because this is the proper bookkeeping entry. But, aside from this, such entry also serves to emphasize the duty of the corporation to keep its capital stock unimpaired for the protection of those dealing with it. If the operations of the corporation result in gains, such gains are carried to the credit, not of the capital stock account, but of some other account as surplus or profit and loss. Of course they may be capitalized by the issue of stock against them, and sometimes in the cases of certain corporations like banks or insurance corporations, where a certain ratio between assets and liabilities other than to capital stock is required, such surplus or profits may be counted and maintained as capital, although not formally capitalized.

In the absence of some such special consideration, I think we may take notice that it is the ordinary rule of corporate management, established by decisions, statutes, and business usages, that the surplus of these gains or profits, beyond what may be necessary to keep good the liability to capital stock which has been issued, may, in the discretion of a board of directors, be distributed amongst its stockholders as dividends and returns on their investment. Such being the general rule, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that there is something so peculiar in the two transactions being considered that the profits resulting therefrom are of a different nature in respect of this subject than those ordinarily realized in corporate business, and I think it has failed to do this.

I shall not attempt to discuss whether there might be an accretion to or increment of capital of a going corporation under such circumstances and of such a character that it would become permanent capital and might not be distributed as dividends. That question, for the purposes now concerning us, doubtless would be surrounded with some uncertainty and difficulties. It is sufficient for this appeal to consider the transactions before us, and see, as I think we must, that there is nothing about them which impresses their results with any other character than that of ordinary current profits which the directors may, in their discretion, divide among the stockholders entitled to dividends.

It is said, because in the retirement of its convertible bonds defendant sold and issued its capital stock at $175 per share of $100 par value, that this entire sum was paid in as capital and must be held and distributed as such. That is not my interpretation of the transaction under the allegations of the complaint. The amount at par value paid for each share of stock undoubtedly became capital which the corporation was required to preserve and maintain as against its liability on the outstanding share of stock which had been issued for it. Just as undoubtedly the extra $75 paid per share represented the amount of accumulated profits or surplus which it was supposed would be apportionable to each share of new stock after payment and issue as aforesaid. In other words, as I think we must assume, the payment of this premium was not for permanent capital, but for the purpose of equalizing as between new and old stockholders their respective rights in accumulated profits, which, so far as we know, were current and distributable in dividends. When paid in, this premium became part of such accumulation of profits and surplus and distributable as such. It was credited to profit and loss, and not to capital.

It is unnecessary to decide what would be the rule of distribution in the case stated by plaintiff by way of illustration, where stockholders, on the organization of a bank, subscribe for stock at double its par value for the express purpose of creating a permanent surplus or capital with the intent of affording a greater security to creditors and attracting depositors. That case is utterly different from this one.

The other transaction which produced a large item in the profit and loss account was the purchase and sale at an advance of various stocks. Ordinarily the profits made by a corporation on the purchase and sale of property would so clearly belong to a fund applicable to the payment of dividends that there would be no debate about it. The plaintiff in this case, however, says in substance that the defendant was not organized to deal in stocks, and therefore the preferred shareholders could not have had such profits in mind when they agreed to take 4 per cent dividends in full of their share of the profits, and therefore, further, "an accretion realized from such traffic is not profits within the contemplation of the instrument (defendant's charter), but belongs to capital." It seems to me that this reasoning involves a misinterpretation of the charter and a decided non sequitur. The language by which these stockholders relinquished all other claims to profits in consideration of preferential dividends was broad and comprehensive. They were to be "entitled to no other or further share of the profits." There is no limitation on this exclusion from any farther participation in whatever was profits; nothing to suggest that one item of profits was to be differentiated from another by the nature of the transaction which produced it. The contract was that whatever in the way of profits went into the profit and loss account should be subject to a payment of certain dividends on preferred stock before common stock received any, and that was the end of the rights of the former class of stock, so far as profits were concerned. The result of the transaction in question was a profit, and the distribution of it is subject to this agreement. This seems so clear that it is difficult by discussion to make it more so. The proposition that these profits, because resulting from what was perhaps an unusual transaction, are not profits, but are an accretion which "belongs to capital," notwithstanding the painstaking argument of counsel, does not seem to have any foundation on which to rest except earnest assertion.

No case has been cited which, in my opinion, sustains the proposition that these gains must be treated as an accretion to capital, and distributed as such, rather than as profits distributable in the discretion of the directors in dividends. The case Re Bridgewater Nav. Co., reported (in chancery division and on appeal therefrom in the court of appeal) L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 1, and (on appeal to House of Lords) L. R. 14 App. Cas. 525, and (on a further appeal) [1891] 2 Ch. 317, is especially relied on by the appellant, but in my judgment it is entirely distinguishable from the present case and does not at all sustain appellant's position.

The Bridgewater Navigation Company is L.R.A.1915D.

sued both common and preferred shares. One of the articles of association provided that, subject to certain possible deductions, the "entire net profits of each year" should belong to the shareholders. It was provided that the preferred shares should "entitle the holders thereof to a dividend after the rate of 5 per cent per annum, . . . taking precedence of and priority over all dividends and claims of the holders of the ordinary shares of the company." Certain sums were carried from current profits each year to various reserve and depreciation funds. After awhile the company sold out its business and property and entered on voluntary liquidation. After satisfying all liabilities and repaying all amounts paid in by the shareholders, there remained a large surplus, and the question was how this surplus should be distributed as between preferred and common shareholders. It is true that the common shareholders amongst other things did urge that the rights of preferred stockholders in gains and profits were limited to a preferential dividend of 5 per cent, and that after payment of this the common stockholders were entitled to all remaining surplus. All of the courts disagreed with this contention, but it is not too much to say that they repeatedly affirmed as the fundamental basis for this conclusion the proposition that, under the articles of association, the principles which would control the distribution by a going concern of current profits between common and preferred stockholders with preferential but limited rights to dividends were utterly inapplicable to surplus and accretion resulting from augmented values realized by a beneficial sale on dissolution and liquidation; that the provisions concerning distribution of profits by way of dividends then no longer applied. There is, in my opinion, nothing whatever to be found in any of the opinions which is applicable to the present case, or which supports the proposition that the profits now about to be distributed have become capital which must be paid, if at all, to preferred as well as common stockholders. In fact, I think some support is found for respondent's position in the decision that the sums carried from annual profits to various reserve funds of a permanent character did not thereby lose their nature of divisible profits, but even in liquidation proceedings were to be distributed as profits away from the preferred stockholders.

The case of Niles v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co. 196 Fed. 994, affirmed in 120 C. C. A. 319, 202 Fed. 141, so far from being an authority for the appellant, is, on the facts presented and questions actually decided, an authority for respondent. While there is a contingent suggestion that preferred stockholders might have an interest in an "addition to the original value of the corporate property . . . due . . . to an unearned increment attaching to the corpus of defendant's estate," I should think that this had reference to the situation which might arise on dissolution proceedings. But at any rate it is held that profits accumulated and carried for many years belong to common stockholders, and that preferred stockholders with limited rights to dividends are not entitled to share therein.

I do not regard as helpful to this discussion those cases cited by the plaintiff, and a multitude of others which might have been cited, dealing with the respective rights of life tenant and remainderman in extraordinary distributions of accumulated gains on stocks held in a trust fund. While chance expressions may be extracted from the opinions seeming to be pertinent to the settlement of the present question, the questions really involved in those cases and in this one are fundamentally different. The general problem with which the courts have struggled in those cases has been how such unusual distributions should be paid over in order best to carry out the assumed intent of the testator or benefactor who created the trust. As was made clear by Judge Chase in his thorough consideration of this subject in Re Osborne, 209 N. Y. 450, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 103 N. E. 723, 823, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 198, more frequently the much-considered question in this class of cases has been whether the distribution impaired what was the corpus or capital of the trust fund when it became effective, rather than whether it involved a division of the capital of the corporation. Various rules adopted in different jurisdictions by which to determine the application of these extraordinary distributions, as well as the ones finally formulated in the Osborne Case, 209 N. Y. 458 et seq., 477, make it perfectly apparent that the courts were not there concerned with questions of capital and profits as between corporation and stockholders which are involved here.

As against the contentions of the plaintiff, I think it is abundantly established by decisions which are in conformity with and fortified by commercial understanding and experience that the gains or profits realized by a corporation, at least from its active transactions such as those under consideration here, constitute profits and surplus which are available for dividends. Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 182, 191; Lubbock v. British Bank [1892] 2 Ch. 198, 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. 498, 67 L. T. N. S. 74, 41 L.R.A.1915D.

Week. Rep. 103; Mackintosh v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (C. C.) 34 Fed. 582, 606.

In the Williams Case it was written on the subject: "But, if it can be conceived that this was a dividend of property within the meaning of the section of the Revised Statutes above set out, then what property did it divide? Not any portion of the capital of the company; that remained intact. After subtracting the dividend there remained to the company the full amount of its prior capital stock, to wit, property to the value of $41,073,410. Such is the finding of the trial court, and that cannot here be disputed. The company had made surplus earnings which it could have divided, but instead of dividing them it had invested them in property to facilitate and enlarge its business; and such property was found to be worth $15,526,590. That sum constituted its surplus. It was commingled with the other property of the company and used for corporate purposes. But it was not beyond the reach of the dividend-making power of the directors. They could reclaim it for division among the stockholders, and, if practicable, convert it into cash for that purpose. They could borrow money on the faith of it and divide that. They could issue to the stockholders certificates of indebtedness, redeemable in the future, representing their respective interests in such surplus, thus, in effect, borrowing the same of the stockholders. Desiring to use the surplus and add it to the permanent capital of the company, and having lawfully created shares of stock, they could issue to the stockholders such shares to represent their respective interests in such surplus. In doing these things no law would be violated, the capital would be kept intact, and no stockholders or creditors would have any legal right to complain. All this, however, depends upon the finding of the trial court that the surplus is equal to the dividend. That finding is not open to criticism here. It was not disturbed at the general term and therefore concludes us. When a corporation has a surplus, whether a dividend shall be made, and, if made, how much it shall be, and when and where it shall be payable, rest in the fair and honest discretion of the directors, uncontrollable by the courts."

The order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs, and the question certified to us answered in the negative.

Werner, Collin, Hogan, Miller, and Cardozo, JJ., concur.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., not sitting.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

EARL S. BAKER, Appt.,
v.

STATE OF INDIANA.

(— Ind. —, 108 N. E. 7.)

Contempt — motion to quash return — truth of facts.

1. In passing upon a motion to quash a return to a rule to show cause why one shall not be punished for contempt, all facts well pleaded in the return must be taken as true, and facts stated in the motion to quash which attempt to deny, or confess and avoid, those stated in the return, must be disregarded.

Note. — Right of bank officer or employee to refuse to disclose state of depositor's account.

The general question of the right to compel the production of bank books irrespective of the question whether the bank may refuse to disclose the condition of the depositor's account is not considered herein.

The right of a bank cashier to refuse to answer as to the condition of a depositor's account, before commissioners in an action in accounting, was denied in Winder v. Diffenderfer, 2 Bland, Ch. 166. The court states that the bank has no greater right to withhold legal evidence that may be in its possession than an individual.

It has also been held that a banker may be compelled, in private litigation, to state what a depositor's balance was on a certain day (Lloyd v. Freshfield, 2 Car. & P. 325, 8 Dowl. & R. 19); that he may be compelled to testify whether any part of a sum deposited to the credit of a private litigant had been withdrawn, over the depositor's objection that the question is illegal, impertinent, and not in issue (Mackenzie v. Taylor, 6 Lower Can. Jur. 83); and that the manager of a bank may be compelled to testify as to dealings with a depositor (Hannum v. McRae, 18 Ont. Pr. Rep. 185).

In a bill for a partnership accounting in Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457, the court refers to the "remarkable notion" of a banker that banking business is free from scrutiny.

The right of a bank officer to disclose the state of a depositor's account arises frequently in taxation matters. As in BAKER v. STATE, the right to refuse to make such disclosure has been uniformly denied.

A bank cashier was compelled to testify in Re Davies, 68 Kan. 791, 75 Pac. 1048, as to the account of a depositor in his bank in a proceeding before a grand jury to determine whether the depositor committed perjury in making a return to the tax assessor, over his objection that the grand jury was without authority in law to require any officer of the bank to make a disclosure of such matters, and the further objection that to make such a disclosure would be destructive of the bank's property L.R.A.1915D.

Same — refusal to answer question of grand jury.

2. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to answer a question propounded by a grand jury as to the state of the account of a particular depositor, on the theory that it was abusing its inquisitorial power, where it knew that the deposits in the bank greatly exceeded the deposits returned for taxation, and was seeking to ascertain who had falsified his tax returns, although it knew of no one who had done so, and was inquiring as to the accounts of persons whose names were taken at random from the tax duplicates of the county.

Same — examination of books — particular service.

3. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to and its assets, and would destroy public confidence in the bank, and that the demand would be violative of the rights of the cashier, and the rights of the bank of which he was an officer, and of the customers as patrons of the bank, in that it would be an unreasonable search for and seizure of the depositor's property. It was also urged in this case that the matter concerning which the cashier was questioned was privileged. As to the question of privileged communications, see note to Hamilton v. Plunkett, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 583, the particular subdivision of that note relating to bankers being found on page 585.

In the exercise of the power to tax, statutes have been enacted empowering taxing officials to inquire of firms or corporations which the official has good reason to believe have evidence as to property omitted. Some statutes merely authorize the taxing official to require the attendance of witnesses and examine them on oath.

Under such a statute a bank was compelled to produce its books showing the state of a particular depositor's account, over the bank's objection that such a statute is unconstitutional. Washington Nat. Bank v. Daily, 166 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53. The bank is stated to have no interest in the taxes to be placed on the tax duplicate, and the assessor to be attempting no discovery that will attack its person or property. It is further stated that its position is that of a person in possession of books and papers containing evidence of value affecting the rights of others, and, like any other citizen similarly possessed, its cashier is at all times subject to be called as a witness duces tecum and required to submit such evidence without reference as to whether it would put him to loss or delay the bank in the transaction of its business. It is further stated that if the cashier should be summoned by a court of justice to produce the books and papers of the bank as evidence of a certain specified account or particular transaction with the bank in a suit between individuals, he could not rely on the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable search to justify his refusal. It is further stated that all that is required of the bank is to cause its answer questions propounded to him by the grand jury which will require his examination of the books of the bank, on the ground that it constitutes an unconstitutional demand for the performance of particular services.

(March 3, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hamilton County convicting him of contempt of court. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Shirts & Fertig, for appellant:

The grand jury cannot compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of books and papers, merely to inquire whether there have been any violations of law. It must first have information from some source pointing to some person (or persons acting concertedly) with such certainty as to cause reasonable belief that he may be guilty of some indictable offense. Therefore, the sworn return of appellant denying such information on the part of the grand jury was sufficient to purge him of contempt, and was erroneously quashed.

Lewis v. Wake County, 74 N. C. 194; Ex parte Gould, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 442, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 835, 132 S. W. 364; 20 Cyc. 1335, 1342; United States v. Kilpatrick, 16

Fed. 765; Re Lester, 77 Ga. 143; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. ed. 652, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370.

No officer charged with the duty of discovering property sequestered from taxation can proceed against any person or property without probable cause, nor without notice to the person affected if resident in the county, and the same rule, at least as to probable cause, should apply to the grand jury when directing its inquiries to such matters.

Co-operative Bldg. & L. Asso. v. State, 136 Ind. 463, 60 N. E. 146; State ex rel. Morgan v. Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. 151 Ind. 502, 51 N. E. 1081; Applegate v. State, 158 Ind. 119, 63 N. E. 16.

There being no pretense or representation that Horace G. Brown or any other designated person had failed to make a list of his property, jurisdiction did not appear, and appellant could not be lawfully cited for contempt.

Burgh v. State, 108 Ind. 132, 9 N. E. 75; Durham v. State, 116 Ind. 514, 10 N. E. 329; Durham v. State, 117 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 327; State ex rel. Martindale v. Lauer, 116 Ind. 162, 18 N. E. 527.

Defendant, as cashier of the incorporated bank, did not have custody of its deposit ledgers so as to empower him to cart them cashier in a proceeding instituted and prosecuted under the statute to produce for examination certain books and papers believed by the county assessor to contain evidence pertinent and necessary to protect the tax list of the county; that the measures taken to secure the inspection of the books are reasonable, appropriate, and prescribed by law, and the order upon the bank to submit the books and papers specified did not contemplate an unreasonable search and seizure. It is further stated that "the bank is invested with a public franchise to receive money on deposit as a public banker, and, like individuals, owes to the public certain duties in return for the protection it receives. It is its duty to co-operate with all other citizens in the enforcement of the laws. Anyone who avoids payment of his ratable share of taxes violates the law, and when such evasion is being attempted it is the public duty of banks, as well as all other persons and corporations having knowledge or evidence of such attempt, when called upon by proper authority, to disclose it, whether written or parol."

So, a bank has been compelled under such a statute to disclose the amount of the deposits in the bank, the names of the depositors, and amount deposited by each. First Nat. Bank v. Hughes, 6 Fed. 737, appeal dismissed in 106 U. S. 523, 27 L. ed. 268, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489. The bank involved in this case was a national bank, and the chief argument was that it was protected from such an investigation by a Fed. L.R.A.1915D.

eral statute providing that no national banking association shall be subjected to any visitatorial powers other than such as were authorized by the statute or were vested in the court. The proceeding in question was held not to amount to a visitatorial power, and therefore the statute to be no protection. It was further urged that the proposed enforced exhibition of its books would expose its business, lessen public confidence, diminish its deposits and consequent profits, and impair the value of the franchise. In answer to this argument it is stated that private rights must to a reasonable extent yield to public necessity; that a witness possessing knowledge of facts material to the vindication of the rights of another may be compelled by judicial process to appear and give evidence on behalf of that other party, notwithstanding the evidence thus coerced may uncover the witness's private business and subject him to a civil action for damages; that for like reasons, and upon the same principles, persons in possession of written evidence of whatsoever character may be required to produce the same to be used in evidence. The action was one in a Federal court to enjoin the taxing officials from proceeding under the state statute. After disposing of the objections as above stated, the court states that it is not incumbent on the Federal court to define the duty of the witnesses in the premises; that this must be determined by the state court having jurisdiction.

W. A. E.

to the grand jury room. The subpoena for their production, if it could issue at all, would have to be directed to the bank itself, which would respond, if required, through its proper officer.

3 Wigmore, Ev. § 2200 (4) p. 2200; 40 Cyc. 2167; Bank of Utica v. Hillard, 5 Cow. 153, 419; LaFarge v. LaFarge F. Ins. Co. 14 How. Pr. 26; Re Sykes, 10 Ben. 162, Fed. Cas. No. 13,707; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 140 Fed. 558; Wilson v. United States, 221 U. S. 361, 55 L. ed. 771, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558; United States v. Collins, 145 Fed. 709; Woods v. DeFiganiere, 1 Robt. 659.

Defendant could be required to testify only to facts within his personal knowledge.

United States v. Kilpatrick, 16 Fed. 765; 40 Cyc. 2194.

Messrs. Aquilla Q. Jones and William W. Hammond, for the Indiana Bankers' Association:

A bank should not be required to be a mentor for its depositors or an instrument in a general hunt for tax dodgers.

Re Lester, 77 Ga. 143.

Messrs. Thomas M. Honan, Attorney General, and Thomas H. Branaman, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Lairy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, at the time of the proceedings of the trial court in this case, was cashier of the Citizens' State Bank of Noblesville. Upon being summoned before the grand jury, he was asked the following questions and made the following answers thereto:

Q. How much does your deposit ledger show that Horace G. Brown has on the 1st day of March, 1913?

A. I cannot tell without referring to the books.

Q. Then you refuse to answer the questions, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are the grounds of your refusal?

A. I do not believe you have a right to ask that.

These questions and answers were certified to the court of Hamilton county, and the court made the order following: "Objection overruled, and witness ordered to refer to the books and answer, but is not required to produce books before grand jury."

Appellant persisted in his refusal to answer the question, and the court then entered an order requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished as for contempt. A verified answer or return was filed by appellant, to which the state admitted a motion to quash. This motion was sustained, and the court found appellant guilty of contempt of court and imposed a fine.

Appellant assigns several errors upon which he relies for reversal; but, as every question thus raised is presented by the ruling of the court in sustaining the motion to quash the return to the rule to show cause, we need only consider the questions thus presented.

In passing upon this motion, all of the facts well pleaded in the return must be taken as true, and all facts stated in the motion to quash which attempt to deny the facts stated in the return, or which attempt to confess and avoid them, must be disregarded.

It will be observed that the witness was not ordered to produce the books of the bank showing the accounts of all its depositors in obedience to the subpoena duces tecum, and appellant was not called upon to show cause why he should not be punished for a failure to comply with such an order. For this reason we are not required in this case to determine whether such an order would constitute an unreasonable search and seizure of the private papers and effects of the bank within the meaning of § 11, art. 1, of our state Constitution, securing the people of the state against such unreasonable searches and seizures.

The refusal to answer the question propounded was placed upon the ground that the grand jury had no right to ask such a question. Appellant attempts to justify his position in this respect by his verified return to the rule, in which he states the facts upon which he bases his refusal to answer the particular question propounded. This return shows that no charge had been preferred against Horace G. Brown to the effect that he had money on deposit which he had failed to list for taxation, and that neither the prosecuting attorney nor the grand jury had any reason to believe that Horace G. Brown was guilty of perjury in making a false oath to his return of property or money for taxation. Such a return further shows that the only information which the prosecuting attorney or the grand jury possessed on the subject was that the official reports of the various banks and trust companies of the county, made next before the 1st day of March, 1913, showed that the total deposits in such banks and trust companies exceeded the total amount of money listed for taxation by $1,500,000, and that the grand jury did not know the persons or the corporations who had on deposit the sums of money which made up such difference. It is further averred in such return that the grand jury was engaged in a wholesale investigation of the subject, and had summoned the cashiers of all the banks and trust companies in the county to appear before it and make general disclosures as to the names of the depositors and the amount of deposits in such banks and trust companies on the 1st day of March, 1913. It is averred that the name of Horace G. Brown was selected at random from the tax duplicate of the county, and that the question as to his deposit was asked without any information or probable cause for so doing, and with the purpose of continuing such investigation indefinitely by interrogatories as to the deposits of other persons whose names were to be selected in like manner.

Appellant asserts that these facts as disclosed by the return show that the inquisitorial power of the grand jury was being abused, and that he was justified for that reason in refusing to answer the question. The court is of a different opinion. The oath administered to the grand jurors requires that they will diligently inquire and true presentment make of all felonies and misdemeanors committed or triable within the county, of which they shall have or can obtain legal evidence. It is not the practice before the grand jury to prefer specific charges against particular individuals and to call witnesses only as to such charges. In this state the inquisitorial power of the grand jury is not so limited. It is the business of this body to diligently inquire as to what felonies or misdemeanors have been committed in the county and to fix the responsibility for such offenses, if this can be done by legal evidence, to the end that a specific charge may be made in the form of an indictment to be returned into the proper court. If it is known that a criminal offense has been committed, witnesses may be called and examined for the purpose of fixing the responsibility, and whether the scope of such investigation may involve many persons or few does not alter the rule. The scope of the investigation is not narrowed in cases where it is necessary to discover the offense, as well as to fix the responsibility for its commission. In this case the return shows that the grand jury had information which would naturally lead it to believe that some of the taxpayers of the county had made false tax returns as to the amount of money on hand on the 1st day of March, 1913, and that some of such taxpayers had committed perjury in swearing to the assessment sheets containing lists of their taxable property. For the purpose of ascertaining who, if anyone, was guilty of one or the other, or both, of such offenses, the grand jury had a right to interrogate appellant concerning the deposit of Horace G. Brown, or of any other taxpayer of the county. It is not to be reasonably supposed that the grand jury would spend time by inquiring about the deposits of persons who were not likely to have money on deposit. The court has power to discharge a grand jury, and it would be justified in exercising such power in case time was being wasted in an idle or fruitless investigation. This power of discharging a grand jury and thus putting an end to an investigation which, by reason of its unwarranted and unreasonable scope, is unnecessarily consuming the time of the grand jury and of the witnesses called before it, and which is not likely to be productive of results, is one which should be exercised with caution and only in proper cases. A witness called before such grand jury has no right to base an objection to a question upon this ground, and so long as the court permits the investigation to proceed, the witnesses called must answer all proper questions propounded.

L.R.A.1915D.

The facts stated in the return show that the witness did not possess the information necessary to enable him to answer the question, and that in order to obtain it he would have to consult the books of the bank. Appellant takes the position that a witness may be compelled to testify to such facts only as are within his knowledge, and that the court may not require him to do anything in order to obtain information upon which to base his testimony. Appellant asserts that such a requirement by the court would amount to demanding the particular services of the witness in violation of article 1, § 21, of our state Constitution. A similar question was presented and decided adversely to appellant's contention in the case of Washington Nat. Bank v. Daily, 186 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53. Where the source of the information is exclusively or peculiarly within the control of the witness, the court, acting within reasonable bounds and in the exercise of a sound discretion, may require the witness to avail himself of such information and to communicate it to the court.

The trial court properly sustained appellee's motion to quash the return of appellant, and the judgment is affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

TELLA McCOY, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM V. FLYNN et al., Exrs., etc., of
T. F. Flynn, Deceased, et al.

(— Iowa, —, 151 N. W. 465.)

Attachment — against decedent's estate.

1. After a decedent's estate has passed to executors for administration under his will, no attachment lies at the suit of creditors to reach property alleged to have been transferred by decedent in fraud of their rights.

Contract — to pay money to one if unmarried — validity.

2. A provision in a contract to settle an action for breach of promise of marriage, to pay plaintiff a specified amount three years after date if she is then alive and unmarried, is void as in restraint of marriage.

Marriage — breach of promise — compromise — invalidity — effect.

3. A right of action for breach of promise of marriage is not affected by an attempted contract of settlement which is invalid because in restraint of marriage.

(March 19, 1915.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County sustaining demurrers to petitions filed to recover upon a written contract between plaintiff and decedent, T. F. Flynn, in settlement of a breach of promise to marry, and for a writ of attachment against his property. Affirmed.

Statement by Deemer, Ch. J.:

Action upon a written contract signed by T. F. Flynn. After the action was commenced, Flynn died, and his executors were substituted as defendants. An amended petition was filed, stating grounds for attachment, and the Iowa Loan & Trust Company and Ida May Flynn were made parties defendant. All the defendants demurred to the petitions, and their demurrers were sustained. The appeal is from these rulings. Affirmed.

Messrs. Dowell, McLennan & Groesbeck for appellant:

The contract in suit is not void as against public policy.

Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392, 58 Am. Rep. 369, 24 N. W. 154; Sherman v. Burton, 165 Mich. 293, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87, 130 N. W. 667; Conklin v. Conklin, 165 Mich. 571, 131 N. W. 154; Buck v. Walker, 115 Minn. 239, 132 N. W. 205, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 882; Merrill v. Packer, 80 Iowa, 542, 45 N. W. 1076.

The power of the court to declare a contract illegal and void as against public policy should be exercised only in case free from doubt.

Baldwin v. Moser, — Iowa, —, 123 N. W. 989; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191; Equitable Loan & Secur. Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 62 L.R.A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 77, 44 S. E. 320.

The contract sued upon was not in restraint of marriage.

Jones v. Jones, 1 Colo. App. 28, 27 Pac. 85; Shafer v. Senseman, 125 Pa. 310, 17 Atl. 350; Holz v. Hanson, 115 Wis. 236, 91 N. W. 663; Appleby v. Appleby, 100 Minn. 408, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 590, 117 Am. St. Rep. 709, 111 N. W. 305, 10 Ann. Cas. 563; Jones v. Jones, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 279, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 166, 34 L. T. N. S. 243, 24 Week. Rep. 274; Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 52 L.R.A. 660, 78 Am. St. Rep. 914, 56 S. W. 840; Wright v. Wright, 114 Iowa, 748, 55 L.R.A. 261, 87 N. W. 709.

Note. — It has been pointed out in the note to Sullivan v. Garesche, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 606, that the condemnation of all conditions or contractual stipulations which tend to operate in total restraint of marriage, as being void on grounds of public policy, is too sweeping, and that the true rule is that public policy does not condemn all restraints upon marriage, but only such as are unreasonable. The inquiry in each case should be whether, under the circumstances and the relation of the parties, the provision there in question subserves a legitimate purpose.

It should be noted that in McCoy v. Flynn the learned court is careful to point out that there was nothing in the record showing any reason for the stipulation making the payment of further damages conditional on the plaintiff's being alive and unmarried three years thereafter, and that no facts were pleaded which would justify the condition imposing the restraint upon plaintiff's freedom to marry. But something may be said in support of the reasonableness of such a provision in a contract to settle an action for a breach of a prom- L.R.A.1915D.

ise to marry. The damages which the disappointed party is supposed to have suffered in person and estate through the loss of the prospective alliance may be considerably mitigated by a subsequent marriage, in which the promisee may be deemed to have found balm for a broken heart as well as a permanent meal ticket; and the payment of a sum of money by way of damages may very properly be made to await the possibility of so happy a denouement. The fact of such marriage would show that the loss of other matrimonial opportunities supposed to have been occasioned by the engagement has done no permanent harm. Lastly, it is not likely that the promisor, being himself unwilling to marry the promisee, intends, by imposing such condition, to deter her from marrying anybody else, so as to bring the case within the doctrine that such a condition, if dictated by caprice or malevolence, is unreasonable and invalid.

For a collection of the decisions upon the validity of contracts in restraint of marriage, see note to Lowe v. Doremus, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 633.

The consideration named in contract is one not forbidden in the law.

McConahey v. Griffey, 82 Iowa, 564, 48 N. W. 983.

The writ of attachment is a proper remedy in all law actions.

Baldwin v. Buchanan, 10 Iowa, 277.

Mr. R. L. Parrish for appellee.

Deemer, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition alleges that on or about the 17th day of June, 1909, plaintiff and the decedent, Flynn, who had theretofore been betrothed, because of Flynn's breach of agreement to marry the plaintiff, entered into a written stipulation, the terms of which are as follows:

My Dear Miss McCoy:—

I will pay you the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars on or before June 18th, 1909. And upon receipt of same you will agree to relinquish all further or future claim on me of any kind whatever, except that there is a mutual understanding between us that in case you do not marry before July 1st, 1912, I will on that date pay to you if living a further sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars. Your acceptance and agreement to this proposition to make its terms binding on each of us from after date of its acceptance, and each will abide by same. Yours very truly,

T. J. Flynn.

Terms and conditions of above letter have been accepted by me this 17th day of June, 1909. Tella McCoy.

It is averred that this was accepted in full and complete satisfaction and settlement of all demands and claims of the plaintiff against the said Flynn, occasioned by his breach of promise to marry the plaintiff; that the deceased paid the plaintiff the sum of $5,000 on or about the 17th day of June, 1909, but neglected to pay the $5,000 maturing July 1, 1912. Plaintiff further averred that she did not marry before the date stated, and that she is yet a single woman.

The grounds for attachment, as stated in the amendment to her petition, were that Flynn fraudulently conveyed to Ida May Flynn and to the Iowa Loan & Trust Company substantially all of his property, both real and personal, for the purpose of cheating and defrauding his creditors, and especially this plaintiff.

The demurrer to the original petition was bottomed upon the proposition that the contract upon which the suit is predicated is null and void and contrary to public policy in that it amounted to a restraint upon marriage. The demurrer to the petition for an attachment challenged the plaintiff's right to have such a writ, because of the death of the original defendant and the appointment of executors for his estate. Little is said in argument regarding the correctness of the latter ruling, and it merits little or no attention.

At the time the petition for the attachment was filed, the property of the deceased, Flynn, was in the possession of his executors for the purpose of being administered under his will, and was not subjected to attachment. If plaintiff some time recovers a judgment on her claim, and the executors fail and refuse to bring action to set aside the conveyances, because in fraud of Flynn's creditors, plaintiff might have some remedy; but it would not be by attachment of the property of the deceased, after it had passed to his executors. No authority need be cited upon so plain a proposition. The other question is much more difficult of solution.

The payment of the second $5,000 was not to be made unless the plaintiff did not marry before July 1, 1912. The proposition was accepted by the plaintiff, and, so far as it is possible to make an agreement, it became mutually binding upon the parties thereto. In order to obtain the $5,000, plaintiff was compelled to remain single for something more than three years, notwithstanding how many favorable opportunities she might have for a desirable marriage.

It is hornbook law that contracts in restraint of marriage are illegal, and, as a rule, it makes no difference how long the restraint. Of course, there are many exceptions to this rule, some of which will be noticed during the course of the opinion. In some cases it is held that, if the restraint be reasonable, it is not inimical to public policy; but there is nothing in the record showing any reason for the making of the stipulation, and no facts are pleaded which would justify any such limitation upon the plaintiff's right in morals or in law to take upon herself the relations of a wife, notwithstanding the breach of promise on the part of Flynn. No benefit or advantage to him is shown, but, for reasons known only to him, he made his promise conditional on the fact that his former fiancée should not marry during the three years. The immediate tendency of this promise was to discourage marriage, and, as a rule, that tendency stamps such contracts as illegal. See Bostick v. Blades, 59 Md. 231, 43 Am. Rep. 548; Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627, 129 S. W. 665; Arthur v. Cole, 56 Md. 100, 40 Am. Rep. 409; Conrad v. Williams, 6 Hill, 444; Waters v. Tazewell, 9 Md. 291; Maddox v. Maddox, 11 Gratt. 804; Hartley v. Rice, 10 East,

22, 10 Revised Rep. 228; Sterling v. Sinnickson, 5 N. J. L. 756. In the latter case the suit was upon a contract which read as follows: "I, Seneca Sinnickson, am hereby bound to Benjamin Sterling for the sum of $1,000, provided he is not lawfully married in the course of six months from date hereof."

In speaking of the legality of the contract the court said: "It has been spoken of by the plaintiff as if this were an obligation to pay money upon a future contingency, which any man has a right to make, either with or without consideration, and as if the not marrying of the plaintiff were not the consideration of the obligation, but the contingent event only upon which it became payable. But I think this is not a correct view of the case. Where the event upon which the obligation becomes payable is in the power of the obligee, and is to be brought about by his doing or not doing a certain thing, it cannot be so properly called a contingency; it is rather the condition meritorious, upon which the obligation is entered into, the moving consideration upon which the money is to be paid. It is not therefore to be considered as a mere contingency, but as a consideration, and it must be such consideration as the law regards. Nor does it at all vary the case that the restraint was for six months only. It was still a restraint, and the law has made no limitation as to the time. Neither can the plaintiff's performance on his part help him. It imposed no obligation upon the defendant; it was wholly useless to him; the contract itself was void from the beginning."

In the early case of Low v. Peers (1770) Willmot's Notes, 364, 4 Burr. 2225, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 347, Lord Mansfield declared: Matrimony is "one of the first commands given by God to mankind after the creation, repeated again after the deluge, and ever since echoed by the voice of nature to all mankind."

See also Hartley v. Rice, 10 East, 22, 10 Revised Rep. 228; Baker v. White, 2 Vern. 215; Grace v. Webb, 15 Sim. 384.

In Hartley's Case the restraint was for six years, and in Sterling's Case, 5 N. J. L. 756, for six months. In Grace's Case the court said: "It is most beneficial to a state to have a multitude of subjects; and therefore restraints on marriage are objectionable as being against public policy. A man may make a provision for his wife, and declare that it shall cease on her second marriage; because it is considered that a husband has a sort of interest to preserve the viduity of his wife, for the sake of his children. But the grantor of the annuity in the present case could not have had any motive whatever for inserting the proviso in the deed, except that the larger annuity might operate as an inducement to Elizabeth Castle not to marry."

Many exceptions exist to rules above stated.

There is nothing contrary to public policy for a person having a parental interest in his offspring from restricting marriage along certain lines, as infancy, relationship, and good morals. And agreements not to marry a person under a certain age, or in a certain degree of relationship, or into a certain family, or not to marry a second time, have been held valid. Hogan v. Curtin, 88 N. Y. 162, 42 Am. Rep. 244; Siddons v. Cockrell, 131 Ill. 653, 23 N. E. 586.

In Hogan's Case, supra, it is said: "A condition prohibiting marriage before twenty-one without consent is by the common law valid and lawful. It is otherwise of conditions in general restraint of marriage; they being regarded as contrary to public policy and the 'common weal and good order of society.' But reasonable conditions designed to prevent hasty or imprudent marriages, and to subject a child, or other object of the testator's bounty, to the just restraint of parents or friends during infancy, or other reasonable period, are upheld by the common law, not only because they are proper in themselves, but because by upholding them the law protects the owner of property in disposing of it under such lawful limitations and conditions as he may prescribe. Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 280 et seq., and cases cited. Now it is the general rule of law that a breach of a lawful condition annexed to a legacy either divests it or prevents an estate therein arising in the legatee, depending upon whether the condition is precedent or subsequent. In accordance with this general principle, it was held in Ex parte Dickson, 1 Sim. N. S. 37, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 33, 15 Jur. 282, that a condition subsequent, that the legatee should not become a nun, was valid, and that the legacy was forfeited by breach of the condition, although there was no gift over. But it has been the settled law of England for a long period that a condition subsequent annexed to a legacy, in qualified restraint of marriage, although the restraint was lawful and reasonable, nevertheless did not operate upon breach to divest the title of a legatee, unless there was an express gift over on breach of the condition, or a direction that the legacy should fall into the residue, and pass therewith, which is deemed equivalent to a gift over. The condition where there is no devise over is said to be in terrorem merely,—a convenient phrase adopted by judges to stand in place of a reason for refusing to give effect to a valid condition. . . . In Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Meriv. 108, Sir William Grant, referring to the subject, says: 'Whatever diversity of opinion there may have been with respect to the necessity of a devise over in the case of conditions precedent, I apprehend that, without such a devise, a subsequent condition of forfeiture on marriage without consent has never been enforced.' It is not necessary to state at length the reason of the apparent anomaly in the law upon the subject. This is fully explained in the judgment of Lord Thurlow in Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. Ch. 432, 2 Dick. 712, and of Lord Loughborough in Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. Jr. 89, 3 Revised Rep. 52. Suffice it to say that it grew out of the adoption, by the English ecclesiastical courts and the courts of equity, of the rules of the civil and canon law by which all conditions in restraint of marriage (with very limited exceptions), or conditions requiring consent, were held to be void. The ecclesiastical courts, having jurisdiction to enforce the payment of legacies, adopted the rule of the civil law in all cases, without considering that, by the common law, reasonable conditions in restraint of marriage were valid. The distinction made in cases where there was an express devise over does not seem to be founded upon any principle, and may possibly have grown out of an effort to partially restore the harmony of the law. It is a clear proposition, therefore, that, according to the settled law of England, the legacy in this case, if it is regarded as a purely personal legacy, was not forfeited by the marriage of the testator's daughter without consent. There was no devise over on breach of the condition. The only gift over was in the event of the daughter's dying unmarried before twenty-one. It has been frequently decided that a general gift of a residue is not a gift over within the rule. Wheeler v. Bingham, 3 Atk. 364; Lloyd v. Branton, supra. The condition, therefore, in this case, would be in terrorem only within the cases cited. But the legacy is not a purely personal legacy. The testator charges the lands devised as an auxiliary fund for the payment of debts and legacies, and there is no personality out of which the legacy can be paid. If it is paid, therefore, it can be only by a sale of the land on which the legacy is charged. This presents a case where the condition must be construed and effect given to it according to the general rules of the common law. Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. 334, was the case of a legacy upon a condition in restraint of marriage without consent, charged upon land in aid of the personality. The legatee married without consent, and afterward suit was brought to compel a sale of the L.R.A.1915D.

land to pay the legacy, and Lord Hardwicke denied this relief, saying that 'where a legacy is a charge upon the lands, to be raised out of the real estate, as the ecclesiastical courts have no jurisdiction, it must be governed by the rules of another forum, to which the jurisdiction properly belongs.' And in Scott v. Tyler, Lord Thurlow said: 'Lands devised, charges upon it, powers to be exercised over it, money legacies referring to such charges, money to be laid out in land (though I do not find this yet resolved), follow the rule of the common law and are to be executed by analogy to it.' And Judge Story, speaking of the distinctions between conditions in restraint of marriage annexed to a bequest of personal estate, and the like conditions annexed to a devise of real estate, or to a charge upon it, says: 'In the latter cases (touching real estate) the doctrine of the common law in respect to conditions is strictly applied. If the condition be precedent, it must be strictly complied with, in order to entitle the party to the benefit of the devise or gift. If the condition be subsequent, its validity will depend upon its being such as the law will allow to divest an estate.' Story, Eq. Jur. § 288. See also Cornell v. Lovett, 35 Pa. 100; Com. v. Stauffer, 10 Pa. 350, 51 Am. Dec. 489; Williams, Pers. Prop. 341."

Quite analogous to these exceptions is another relating to the disposition of property by gift or will, where it is generally held that the donor or testator may impose such conditions to his gift or devise as he may elect, although even in this case there are some refined exceptions to the exception. This is most clearly stated by Pomeroy in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 2, 2d. ed. § 933: "Intimately connected with contracts in restraint of marriage, and depending upon the same principle, are conditions and limitations operating in like manner annexed to or forming part of testamentary dispositions or of family settlements, or similar gifts. Although the subject in some of its special applications and phases is still more confused and uncertain than perhaps any other branch of equity jurisprudence, yet certain general rules have been established beyond all further controversy. Two propositions lie at the foundation, and are recognized by all the authorities: (1) It is ordinarily said that all conditions annexed to gifts, which prohibit marriage generally and absolutely, are void and inoperative. This, however, is a very inaccurate mode of statement, since a condition precedent annexed to a devise of land, even if in complete restraint, will, if broken, be operative and prevent the devise from taking effect. With this limitation all conditions in general restraint are void. Also if a condition is not in absolute restraint, but is of such form that it will probably operate as a general prohibition, it is, under the same limitation, void. (2) On the other hand, conditions annexed to testamentary or other gifts, in partial and reasonable restraint of marriage, are valid and operative; such, for example, as that a devisee or legatee should not marry under age, or should not marry without the consent of parents, guardians, or trustees, or should not marry a particular person, or a person belonging to a particular religious communion. In the application of these two propositions, certain special rules have been settled with more or less certainty, depending upon the facts of the condition being precedent or subsequent, of their being, or not, a gift over upon its breach, and of the original gift to which the condition is annexed being one of real or of personal estate. The system which has been developed is a partial compromise between the technical common-law rules concerning conditions, and the doctrines of the Roman law, which made void all attempts to restrict the perfect freedom of marriage; and, like most compromises, it has some incongruous features. If a condition is precedent and annexed to a gift of land, it operates as at the common law; when broken, it prevents the estate from vesting, whatever be its nature; when annexed to a gift of personal property, if general or unreasonable, it is wholly void, and the gift takes effect; if partial and reasonable, it is operative. When a condition is subsequent and annexed to a gift of land, if general, it is void, and, although broken, the estate of the donee continues; if partial and reasonable, it is operative, and on its breach the estate of the donee is defeated. When a subsequent condition is annexed to a gift of personal property, if general, it is void; if partial and reasonable, and there is a gift over, it is operative, and upon its breach the interest of the first donee ceases, and the gift over takes effect; but if there is no gift over, then the condition is said to be in terrorem merely, and is inoperative. It seems to be settled by an overwhelming weight of authority that limitations and conditions, precedent or subsequent, tending to restrain the second marriage of women, are valid, and by the most recent decisions the same rule has been applied to the second marriages of men. Where a partial and reasonable condition has been imposed, requiring the consent of certain persons to the marriage of a donee, courts of equity are very liberal in construing the provision so that the gift shall not be defeated by a mere formal omission."

L.R.A.1915D.

The text is fortified by innumerable citations in support thereof, and it may be taken as announcing the voice of authority. That contracts in restraint of a second marriage are valid is everywhere affirmed. Appleby v. Appleby, 100 Minn. 408, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 590, 117 Am. St. Rep. 709, 111 N. W. 305, 10 Ann. Cas. 563. The reason for this exception is: "The reason for the rule as to first marriage has no substantial force when applied to a second marriage. Neither the conservation of morals nor public policy furnishes a basis for the rule as applied to the right of a husband or wife to withhold his or her estate from passing to the support of a second husband or second wife, as the case might be. And the authorities declare that the rule has never been extended to second marriages. The precise question arose in Allen v. Jackson, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 399, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 310, 33 L. T. N. S. 713, 24 Week. Rep. 306, and the court distinctly held that the rule did not apply to a second marriage. The question was fully considered in Bostick v. Blades, 59 Md. 231, 43 Am. Rep. 548, a case involving a devise by the wife of certain property to the husband, so long as he should remain unmarried after her death. The court held the will valid on the ground that the rule referred to did not extend to second marriages. The court also considered at some length whether the rule should be limited to the second marriage of the wife, or whether it included both husband and wife. Upon that subject, the court said: 'In the absence of any binding authority to the contrary, we are of opinion that there is no good and substantial ground for maintaining a distinction between a condition imposed in restraint of a second marriage of a woman and a like condition in restraint of a second marriage of a man. As the one is valid and effectual, so is the other.' In Knight v. Mahoney, 152 Mass. 523, 9 L.R.A. 573, 25 N. E. 971, the testator gave his property to his wife, 'so long as she remains my widow.' She married again after her husband's death, and the controversy arose whether the provisions of the will were valid. The court said that the weight of authority sustained devises and bequests conditioned to terminate upon second marriage, citing, in support of the decision, 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 933; White v. Sawyer, 13 Met. 546; Loring v. Loring, 100 Mass. 340; Gibbens v. Gibbens, 140 Mass. 102, 54 Am. Rep. 453, 3 N. E. 1, and some of the cases heretofore referred to. It is unnecessary to discuss the reasons for the rule. The welfare of children by the first marriage is an element entering into consideration in determining the validity of such limitations, as well as the right of persons freely to enter into the marriage relation as their station in life and inclinations may justify and prompt. But no sound principle, founded upon either moral or legal obligation, extends the right of either husband or wife to retain the property of the other in the face of lawful restrictions to the contrary, for the purpose of supporting and maintaining another spouse. The fact that appellant had no children by this marriage does not, as a matter of law, relate back and render the restrictions or limitations of the antenuptial contract unreasonable."

Again, in all these cases a distinction has been preserved between conditions precedent, limitations, and conditions subsequent, the latter of which are disregarded. See cases cited in note to Re Fitzgerald, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 615.

We have never before had the questions here involved for decision, and the authorities generally are not in entire harmony. We have endeavored to state the rules and exceptions generally recognized in this country and in England, and in applying them to this case we are constrained to hold that the contract in question is in restraint of marriage, and that it does not fall within any of the exceptions noted.

Of course, plaintiff's action for breach of promise of marriage still remains, unless barred by the statute of limitations; but she cannot have recovery upon the agreement, for that is contrary to public policy. This was the conclusion of the trial court, and it follows that its judgment must be, and it is, affirmed.

Ladd, Gaynor, and Salinger, JJ., concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

FRANK PRICE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

(132 C. C. A. 1, 218 Fed. 149.)

Indictment — duplicity — one crime as part of another.

1. A count of an indictment under a statute providing punishment for one who, in attempting to effect a robbery, puts the life of the custodian of the property in jeopardy by the use of a deadly weapon, is not duplicitious in charging an attempt to commit robbery and the putting of the life of the custodian of the property in jeopardy by the use of a deadly weapon in the course of the attempt.

Evidence — presumption of good character — evidence of innocence.

2. In the absence of evidence as to the character of the accused, the jury cannot consider the presumption of good character as evidence in his favor upon the question of guilt or innocence.

(November 7, 1914.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma (Ralph E. Campbell, District Judge) to review a judgment convicting defendant of committing an assault upon a railway postal clerk and of robbing the mail. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Hook and Smith, Circuit Judges, and Amidon, District Judge.

Mr. James C. Denton, for plaintiff in error:

If two offenses are charged in the second count, the indictment is duplicitous, and either the demurrer thereto or the motion to elect should have been sustained.

Crain v. United States, 162 U. S. 625, 40 L. ed. 1097, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 952; Blitz v. United States, 153 U. S. 308, 315, 38 L. ed. 725, 727, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924; John Gund Brewing Co. v. United States, 122 C. C. A. 331, 204 Fed. 17.

The law presumes the good character of the accused, and such presumption is to be considered as evidence in favor of the accused in considering the question of his guilt or innocence.

12 Cyc. 389; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1284; 3 Enc. Ev. p. 34; 9 Enc. Ev. p. 927; Jones, Ev. 2d ed. p. 178; Whart. Crim. Ev. 9th ed. § 57, 10th ed. § 67; State v. Hull, 18 R. I. 207, 20 L.R.A. 609, 26 Atl. 191, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 427; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 2d ed. § 1062; Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 4th ed. § 1112; Lawson, Presumptive Ev. 2d ed. p. 520; 3 Rice, Ev. p. 597; Underhill, Crim. Ev. 2d ed. § 76; People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137; People v. Gleason, 122 Cal. 370, 55 Pac. 123; Goggans v. Monroe, 31 Ga. 331; Bennett v. State, 86 Ga. 401, 12 L.R.A. 449, 22 Am. St. Rep. 465, 12 S. E. 806; Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263; Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 124, 19 Am. Rep. 673; State v. Kabrich, 39 Iowa, 277; State v. Roupetz, 73 Kan. 663, 85 Pac. 778; Howard v. Com. 114 Ky. 373, 70 S. W. 1055; State v. Upham, 38 Me. 261; State v. McAllister, 24 Me. 139; Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 14 Am. St. Rep. 474, 37 N. W. 914; People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473; Olive v. State, 11 Neb. 1, 7 N. W. 444; Biester v. State, 65 Neb. 276, 91 N. W. 416;

Note. — For presumption as to good character of defendant in criminal case, see note to People v. Lingley, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 342.
L.R.A. 1915D.

People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281; People v. White, 24 Wend. 520; Ackley v. People, 9 Barb. 609; State v. O'Neal, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 251; State v. Collins, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 117; State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 218; Stephens v. State, 20 Tex. App. 255; United States v. Neversen, 1 Mackey, 152; McKnight v. United States, 38 C. C. A. 115, 97 Fed. 208; Mullen v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 22, 106 Fed. 892; United States v. Breece, 131 Fed. 915; United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528; Lowdon v. United States, 79 C. C. A. 361, 149 Fed. 673; Garst v. United States, 103 C. C. A. 469, 180 Fed. 339; White v. United States, 164 U. S. 100, 41 L. ed. 365, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38; Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 39 L. ed. 481, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394.

Messrs. D. H. Linebaugh and Frank Lee, for the United States:

The indictment was not subject to the charge of duplicity.

34 Cyc. 1799; Bishop, Crim. Law, ¶ 1156; State v. Brown, 113 N. C. 645, 18 S. E. 51, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 310; Fanning v. State, 66 Ga. 167, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 561; Gillotti v. State, 135 Wis. 634, 116 N. W. 252; United States v. Reeves, 38 Fed. 404.

In the absence of evidence as to defendant's character, presumption of good character as evidence in his favor cannot be considered upon the question of guilt or innocence.

Griffin v. State, 165 Ala. 29, 50 So. 962; Bell v. State, 2 Ala. App. 150, 56 So. 842.

Amidon, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was indicted and convicted for a violation of § 197 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows: "Whoever shall assault any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any mail matter, with intent to rob, steal or purloin such mail matter or any part thereof, or shall rob any such person of such mail, or any part thereof, shall, for a first offense, be imprisoned not more than ten years; and if, in effecting or attempting to effect such robbery, he shall wound the person having custody of the mail, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon, or for a subsequent offense, shall be imprisoned twenty-five years."

The indictment contained two counts. The first is based upon the first part of the section, and charges the crime of assault with intent to rob, steal, and purloin mail matter. The second count is based on the latter part of the section, and charges the attempt to commit the crime of robbery, and that in the course of such attempt the defendant put the life of a mail clerk in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon. L.R.A.1915D.

The first assignment of error is based upon the overruling of a demurrer to the second count of the indictment, and also the order of the court declining to require the government to elect as to which of the two crimes charged in the second count the government would stand upon. It is said that these rulings were erroneous because this count is duplicitous. This assignment is clearly devoid of merit. The crime of robbery is an essential element of the crime attempted to be charged in the second count of the indictment. It is quite manifest that the government could not charge the defendant with the offense of having put the life of the postal clerk in jeopardy while attempting to commit the crime of robbery, without charging that crime as an element of the second and graver offense. Where one crime is an essential element of another and more serious offense, the indictment is not duplicitous because it charges both of the crimes. It would be fatally defective if it did not do so.

The error most relied on is the action of the court in declining to give the following request: "You are charged that the law presumes the good character of the accused, and such presumption is to be considered as evidence in favor of the accused in considering the question of his guilt or innocence." No evidence had been offered as to defendant's character. The action of the court was clearly right. The request was wrong in both its aspects. In a criminal case, when no evidence is offered in regard to defendant's character, there is no presumption that his character is good, and certainly such a presumption, if it were to be indulged, would not be evidence.

In our jurisprudence a person on trial for crime cannot be attacked either as to his general character or as to specific acts of wrongdoing. In this respect the common law differs from the systems in vogue on the continent of Europe. There a defendant's whole past is part of every criminal investigation, and any acts of wrongdoing of which he has been guilty may be arrayed against him. They are considered a legitimate basis of inference in determining whether he is guilty of the particular act for which he is upon trial. Our law emphasizes the protection of the citizen rather than society. In order to shield the defendant from surprise, and against being overwhelmed by a multitude of charges, and in order to confine the investigation within reasonable limits, it restricts the trial to the specific act of wrongdoing charged in the indictment. This protection of the defendant against a general charge of bad character or bad conduct is, however, a rule of law, and not a presumption of fact. To call it a presumption is only to indulge in loose language. To say that the defendant's character shall not be attacked, unless he himself puts it in issue, is manifestly a very different thing from saying that his character is presumed to be good. In counsel's brief there are numerous excerpts from text-books and encyclopedias, and some decisions, in which this rule of law that the character of a defendant shall not be attacked, unless he himself puts it in issue, is stated in the converse form, that his character is presumed to be good. For example, in 3 Enc. of Evidence, p. 34, the following language is used: "The law presumes the good character of a person accused of crime, and no inference of bad character arises from his failure to offer evidence of good character."

By the author these two statements are manifestly regarded as equivalent. It needs no argument, however, to show that they are not so. Counsel cites the following cases which are referred to in the encyclopedias and text-books: People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137; People v. Gleason, 122 Cal. 370, 55 Pac. 123 (see this case fully explained and cases cited in People v. Griffith, 146 Cal. 339, 80 Pac. 68); Goggans v. Monroe, 31 Ga. 331; Bennett v. State, 86 Ga. 401, 12 L.R.A. 449, 22 Am. St. Rep. 465, 12 S. E. 806; Stephens v. State, 20 Tex. App. 269; Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263; Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 124, 19 Am. Rep. 673; State v. Kabrich, 39 Iowa, 277; State v. O'Neal, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 251; State v. McAllister, 24 Me. 139; State v. Upham, 38 Me. 261; People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473; Olive v. State, 11 Neb. 1, 7 N. W. 444; Biester v. State, 65 Neb. 276, 91 N. W. 416; Ackley v. People, 9 Barb. 609. An examination of these cases will show that the alleged presumption of good character was not involved in any of them. They all turn upon the question whether error was committed by allowing the state to introduce evidence as to defendant's character when he had introduced no evidence on that subject, or allowing counsel to attack defendant's character under like circumstances, or the giving of instructions which invited the jury to consider against the defendant the fact that he had put in no evidence as to his previous good character. These were the questions that passed into judgment in those cases. Whatever is contained in the opinions touching the presumption of good character is said by way of illustration or emphasis, and is no part of the judgment. Similar language is also used in People v. Weiss, 129 App. Div. 671, 114 N. Y. Supp. 236; State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 216; Com. v. Cleary, 135 Pa. 64, 8 L.R.A. 301, 19 Atl. 1017. But the question L.R.A.1916D.

actually involved in these cases was whether the court could in its instruction restrict the use of evidence produced by the defendant as to his good character to simply turning the scale by producing a reasonable doubt, and thus prevent the jury from considering it generally on the question of defendant's guilt or innocence. It is manifest that general language used in such cases as to the presumption of defendant's good character cannot be considered as part of the decision.

Whenever the question has been directly presented for decision it has been held, with a single exception, that unless the defendant puts his character in issue by producing evidence himself, it is wholly outside the case. On the one hand, there is no presumption in regard to his character being either good or bad; and, on the other hand, neither the court nor counsel can properly refer to defendant's character as an element to be considered by the jury. Addison v. People, 193 Ill. 405, 62 N. E. 235; Dryman v. State, 102 Ala. 130, 15 So. 433; Griffin v. State, 165 Ala. 29, 50 So. 962; People v. Johnson, 61 Cal. 142; People v. Griffith, 146 Cal. 339, 80 Pac. 68; People v. Lee, 1 Cal. App. 169, 81 Pac. 969; People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281, 315; Danner v. State, 54 Ala. 127, 25 Am. Rep. 662; Gater v. State, 141 Ala. 10, 37 So. 692; McQueen v. State, 82 Ind. 72; State v. Smith, 50 Kan. 69, 31 Pac. 784; State v. Collins, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 117; Knight v. State, 70 Ind. 375, 380.

The so-called presumption of good character is properly classed by Mr. Chamberlayne among the pseudo presumptions. 2 Chamberlayne, Ev. § 1168. His entire discussion of the quite common error of treating a rule of law as a presumption of fact is one of the best to be found in the books. Sections 1159 et seq. See also 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 290, note 2. In so far as Mullen v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 22, 106 Fed. 892, is at variance with these views, we do not consider it to be a sound exposition of the law.

Our attention is called to the case of Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 39 L. ed. 481, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394. In that case the trial court gave a full and accurate charge on the question of reasonable doubt, but refused to give a properly framed request on the presumption of innocence. This refusal was assigned as error. The question raised was whether the refusal to charge as to the presumption of innocence was cured by the giving of a proper charge on the subject of reasonable doubt. This question is examined with much learning in the opinion, and the assignment of error is sustained. In reviewing the subject a passage is quoted from Greenleaf to the effect that the presumption of innocence is evidence, and that view is developed to some extent in the opinion. It will be seen, however, from the error assigned, that this point was not directly involved, but is rather a part of the argument than a part of the judgment. When the case of Coffin v. United States went back for a second trial, the proposition that the presumption of innocence is evidence in favor of the defendant was wholly omitted from the charge to the jury. The language of the trial court was as follows: "The burden of proving Haughey and the defendants guilty as charged rests upon the government, and this burden does not shift from it. 'Haughey and the defendants are presumed to be innocent until their guilt in manner and form as charged in some court of the indictment is proved beyond a reasonable doubt. To justify you in returning a verdict of guilty, the evidence should be of such a character as to overcome this presumption of innocence, and to satisfy each one of you of the guilt of Haughey and the defendants as charged, to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt.'"

On the second appeal this language is quoted (162 U. S. 664, 681, 40 L. ed. 1109, 1116, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 943), and in no way criticized by the court. Even more impressive is the action of the supreme court in the case of Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 41 L. ed. 624, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 235. It was there urged that the trial court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction: "The defendant is presumed to be innocent of all the charges against him until he is proven guilty by the evidence submitted to you. This presumption remains with the defendant until such time in the progress of the case that you are satisfied of the guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,"—and in refusing the following instruction asked by the defendant: "Every man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty, and this legal presumption of innocence is to be regarded by the jury in this case as matter of evidence to the benefit of which the party is entitled. This presumption is to be treated by you as evidence giving rise to resulting proof to the full extent of its legal efficacy." 165 U. S. 36, 51, 41 L. ed. 624, 629, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241.

It will be noticed that the request which the court declined to give is taken verbatim from the opinion in the Coffin Case (156 U. S. 432, 459, 460, 39 L. ed. 481, 493, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394), and embraces its most distinctive statements as to the presumption of innocence being evidence. The court held that no error was committed in declining to give this request, and observed that, L.R.A.1915D.

"the court might well have declined to give it on the ground of the tendency of its closing sentence to mislead."

Inasmuch as the Supreme Court itself thus holds that it is not error to refuse to charge that the presumption of innocence is evidence, it would seem that this subordinate feature of the opinion in the Coffin Case no longer expresses its views on that subject. See also Thayer, Ev. 551; Wigmore, Ev. § 2511; Chamberlayne, Ev. §§ 1173, 1175c, 1176c.

Certainly we do not think that the doctrine that the presumption of innocence is evidence should be extended into any new field. To apply it to the pseudo presumption of good character would be peculiarly vicious. The state may rebut the presumption of innocence; all its evidence is leveled directly at that presumption. But against this so-called presumption of good character the state is powerless. It may not meet it by evidence, argument, or instruction from the bench; for, until the defendant has first introduced evidence on the subject of his character, the state may not enter that field. The presumption, if it is allowed at all, must be a conclusive presumption, because it cannot be rebutted by evidence. Thus, in our courts the basest character would be placed in a better position than the most upright; for the latter will usually be shown by evidence, and may be met by counter evidence, while the former will be made whiter than snow by the simple alchemy of presumption. To allow such a presumption would be as unjust to society as the denial of the correct rule of law would be to the defendant. If the presumption exists, counsel have a right to use it in argument, and to require its declaration from the bench. What will be the effect upon juries? When they are told by the court that the presumption exists, and that they must give effect to it in their decision, they are bound to conclude that this means something, though they have no way of knowing what weight they ought to attach to this peculiar "evidence," which has no basis either in testimony or in inference. It would be a poor advocate, indeed, who could not raise a "reasonable doubt" out of such metaphysics. Sound legal administration—an administration that is just to society as well as the defendant—forbids the allowance of any such presumption. When the defendant is given the benefit of the presumption of innocence, and the rule in regard to reasonable doubt, and is protected against any attack upon his past life, either by evidence, argument, or instruction, he is fully protected against injustice. To go farther is, in the language of Mr. Justice Brewer (in an article in the North Amer- ican Review), "not to protect the innocent, but to make it impossible to convict the guilty."

The judgment is affirmed.

Smith, Circuit Judge:

My views of the subject considered in the foregoing opinion are quite fully expressed in Chambliss v. United States, 218 Fed. 154, and I simply concur in the result of the foregoing opinion.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH HOUSKA, Appt.,

v.

JOHN HRABE, Respnt.

(— S. D. —, 151 N. W. 1021.)

Animals — permitting horses to approach fence within which others are pastured.

The owner of a lot used to pasture horses, adjoining another lot used for the same purpose, between which the respective owners maintain wire fences on their own land several feet from the boundary line, for the purpose of preventing the horses in the respective pastures from quarreling, is liable for the resulting injury in case he permits his fence to get out of repair so that his horses enter the intervening line, reach the land of the adjoining owner, and attract to the fence one of his horses, which, in attempting to strike or kick through or over the fence at the visiting horses, becomes entangled in the wire.

(April 6, 1915.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Brule County granting a motion for a directed verdict, and from an order denying a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's horse alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligent maintenance of a fence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. House & Dyer, for appellant:

Defendant was liable for the injury to plaintiff's horse.

Bostwick v. Minneapolis & P. R. Co. 2 N. D. 440, 51 N. W. 781; Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. 515, 49 Am. Dec. 346, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 428; Tonawanda R. Co. v. Munger, 5 Denio, 255, 49 Am. Dec. 248; Delaney v. Errickson, 11 Neb. 533, 10 N. W. 451; Decker v. Gammon, 44 Me. 322, 69 Am. Dec. 99, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 300; Dolph v. Ferris, 7 Watts & S. 367, 42 Am. Dec. 246; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 158 Ala. 509, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 183, 47 So. 1024; Ernst v. Christianson, 24 S. D. 103, 123 N. W. 711; Stockwell v. Sedina, 170 Mich. 476, 136 N. W. 476; McKeever v. Homestake Min. Co. 10 S. D. 599, 74 N. W. 1053.

Messrs. Woerth & Carlson for respondent.

Note. — Liability for injury of live stock upon one side of fence by live stock on other.

Aside from HOUSKA v. HRABE and Ellis v. Loftus Iron Co. 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 24, L. R. 10 C. P. 10, 31 L. T. N. S. 483, 23 Week. Rep. 246; Loiseau v. Arp, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741, 114 N. W. 701, and Johanson v. Howells, 55 Minn. 61, 56 N. W. 460, cited in HOUSKA v. HRABE, no reported cases have been found which have considered the question under annotation, and all these cases are cases where both the animal injured and the animal inflicting the injury were horses.

In the Ellis Case, supra, where a stallion kicked and bit a mare through a wire fence, it was held that trespass was the proximate cause of the injury, as there could have been no kicking and biting unless the stallion protruded some portion of his body over the land of the owner of the mare, and so the owner of the stallion was liable for the injuries inflicted.

In the Johanson Case, supra, two horses, one on each side of a boundary fence, were running and playing, and one of them, while rearing, came in contact with a sharp post and was injured. As the other horse was on land not owned by the owner of the injured horse, and the horses were not fighting, and the injury was not the result of any fighting, kicking, or pushing, or other vicious act on the part of the other horse, it was held that there was no trespass, and so, as there was no evidence that the other horse was of a vicious or mischievous disposition, there was no liability on the part of its owner for the injury inflicted.

It will be noted that the disapproval in HOUSKA v. HRABE of the conclusion in Loiseau v. Arp is only upon the point as to proximate cause, and upon the assumption indulged in that case for the purposes of the point, that the colts, running at large on the highway, were trespassers. Now constat that it would have been so held if a decision on the point had been deemed necessary.

Generally, as to the question touched upon in HOUSKA v. HRABE, as to whether anticipation of the particular accident is an element of proximate cause, see note to Kreigh v. Westinghouse, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684, and later cases that may be found by consulting L.R.A. Digests, under the title "Proximate Cause." Many different phases of the subject of proximate cause are treated in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Proximate Cause."

Generally, as to liability for damage by animals, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Animals." J. H. B.

Gates, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages to plaintiff's two-year-old mare colt. The complaint alleged:

"1. That the plaintiff is the owner and occupant of the west half of section 25 in township 103 north, of range 70 west of the 5th P. M. in Brule county, South Dakota, and maintains a horse and cattle pasture along the east side of said tract and along a certain double fence hereinafter referred to.

"2. That the defendant is the owner and occupant of the east half of the said section 25, and at times grazes and causes horses to be grazed along the west side of the premises occupied by the defendant along the double fence hereinafter referred to.

"3. That horses generally are liable to become injured by quarreling over partition fences if same are used in common between two pastures, and by nature and disposition are liable to and do quarrel over fences if permitted to run in adjoining fields, which fact was and is generally known by persons engaged in farming and stock raising, and was at all times herein mentioned well known to the defendant.

"4. That the plaintiff and the last prior occupant of the east half of said section before defendant constructed and maintained a double fence along the quarter line north and south between the field and pasture hereinbefore referred to, by each constructing a fence about 10 or 15 feet apart, and several feet back from the quarter line on each side, so that an alley or lane was left between said fields several feet wide, for the purpose of preventing the horses grazing in said field and pasture from getting out, each party severally maintaining the fence on the land occupied by them.

"5. That the defendant well knew the purpose of and for which said double fence was built and maintained, and after moving upon and occupying said premises, to wit, the east half of said section, continued to keep and maintain his portion of said double fence, to wit, the east line of said fence, for more than a year.

"6. That thereafter, and during the winter of 1911 and 1912 and the spring of 1912, the defendant took down and permitted his portion of the said fence to remain down and out of repair, so that horses kept by him, the said defendant, and on his premises, could and did enter the lane between the two fences, and wrongfully and carelessly permitted such horses to enter upon said land and upon land of the plaintiff, and to come to and along the fence of this plaintiff on the west side of said lane, while the horses of the plaintiff were being kept in his, the said plaintiff's, pasture aforesaid. L.R.A.1915D.

"7. That the horses of plaintiff, and particularly one certain two-year-old mare colt of plaintiff, was by the horses kept by defendant and wrongfully permitted to be in and upon the same land and upon the land of plaintiff, attracted, led, and brought to the said fence along the west side of said land, and thereby became caught, entrapped in the wire fence on the west side of said line, by reason of the horses biting, fighting, and striking over the said fence.

"8. That the said two-year-old mare of plaintiff, by being so attracted, caught, and entrapped as aforesaid, was cut and injured wrongfully and without the fault of plaintiff, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $100."

The answer was a general denial. The evidence offered on behalf of plaintiff tended to support all of the allegations of the complaint. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, the defendant moved for a directed verdict upon the following grounds:

"1. That the plaintiff has failed to establish that the defendant was the owner of or had any interest in the horses which it is complained caused the injury to this colt.

"2. That the plaintiff has failed to prove a cause of action against the defendant, and if any damage was sustained by reason of the defendant's colts near the plaintiff's fence, the damage was too remote to entitle plaintiff to recover in this action."

This motion was granted. From the judgment entered upon such directed verdict, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

At the time of the accident the defendant's horses were in the lane and on the plaintiff's land. Plaintiff's fence at that point was 8½ feet inside his boundary line. The plaintiff testified as follows in regard to the accident: "My fence was between his horses and my horses; at that time they were playing right over my fence; all at once I saw one of my mare colts jerking and trying to get out of the wire, and she jerked at it a moment or so, and she got loose,—she couldn't walk and that scared the other horses away, so I could just see her there. I went up there as quickly as I could get up there, and saw she was cut bad."

Upon cross-examination he testified: "When I observed the horse playing and fighting over the fence, I was working in the field about 60 rods away. My horses were fighting with Mr. Hrabe's horses, playing together or fighting. Mr. Hrabe's horses were fighting with my horses. I didn't see anybody else. All at once I saw one of my mare colts jerk and try to get loose; she was jerking with her body and she was in with her left foot; she had her left foot in the wire. There were three wires in the fence, and she was jerking when I saw her. She jerked the wire off from eleven posts."

As to the natural propensities of horses in that situation the plaintiff testified:

Q. Now, you may state what you know as to the disposition of horses.

A. I know they generally fight together, and they will paw, and if there is only one division fence they will get cut. My occupation is a farmer and stock raiser for about fifteen years, and I am acquainted with the disposition and characteristics of horses.

Q. Now, you have stated that horses are by nature liable to play over a wire fence and quarrel and strike, you may state whether this is a characteristic of horses generally, or just your particular horses.

A. It is general; take young horses especially.

Upon the same subject Mr. Wodraska testified: "I am acquainted with the disposition of horses, and their general propensities, and know what their dispositions are with reference to quarreling or fighting over a partition fence between two fields; they tease each other and bite and play until they start to kick, and they paw before they turn around, and I suppose that is the way it happened; that is the disposition of all horses."

There is in reality but one question for us to determine, and that is the proximate cause of the injury. The defendant's horses were trespassers on plaintiff's land, and, if they were the proximate cause of the injury, the defendant was liable, under the provisions of chapter 244, Laws 1907, which act is merely declaratory of the common law. Bostwick v. Minneapolis & P. R. Co. 2 N. D. 440, 51 N. W. 781. The substance of that act, so far as we are concerned therewith, has been the law of this jurisdiction since 1877.

If the division fence had been exactly upon the boundary line, and the defendant's horses had kept all portions of their bodies within the boundary line of defendant's land, it is clear that there would have been no liability on defendant's part. It would have been a case of damnum absque injuria. It would have been a case exactly similar in principle to Johanson v. Howells, 55 Minn. 61, 56 N. W. 460. In Ellis v. Loftus Iron Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 10, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 24, 31 L. T. N. S. 483, 23 Week. Rep. 246, the defendant was held liable for injury to plaintiff's horse, caused by a kick of defendant's horse through the line fence. But here the horses of both parties were upon plaintiff's land, fighting and playing over a fence upon plaintiff's land. It is not L.R.A.1915D.

claimed that defendant's horses were vicious, but that all of the horses were engaged in a general frolic, each at times probably reaching over the fence. As a result the plaintiff's colt became entangled in the lower wire of the fence and cut her left front foot.

The controlling causes of the accident were the trespass of the defendant's horses, the barbed wire fence, and the natural propensities of horses. It is clear that, if either of these causes were absent, the accident would not have occurred. The natural propensities of horses alone are not a sufficient cause of the accident. These propensities are alleged and proven, and were shown by the evidence to be known to the defendant. But, even in the absence of such pleading and proof, we think the court should take judicial notice of such natural propensities, and that defendant would be charged with notice thereof. The barbed wire fence, although a contributing cause, was a lawful fence, pursuant to chapter 197, Laws 1909. Hence, we must come to the proposition that the presence of the defendant's horses on the opposite side of the fence from plaintiff's horses was the proximate and efficient cause of the accident.

This view brings us in conflict with the conclusion arrived at in Loiseau v. Arp, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741, 114 N. W. 701. In the note to that case in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, the author cites the case of Johanson v. Howells, supra, and says that case "is on all fours with the above case. No other cases have been found upon the liability of the owner of an animal permitted to run at large, for injury to other animals in adjoining fields, due to its mere presence, and in the absence of trespass."

An examination of the Minnesota case discloses that in the opinion the Minnesota court twice emphasized the fact that the defendant's horses were not trespassers, while in the case of Loiseau v. Arp, supra, this court assumed for the purpose of the decision that Loiseau's horses were trespassers. We are of the opinion that the result arrived at in that case was wrong, if Loiseau's horses were trespassers. It is to be noticed that no evidence appears to have been offered as to the natural propensities of horses in such situation, as was done in the present case, nor was the question of taking judicial notice thereof considered in the opinion. The evidence in that case, as disclosed in the opinion, showed: "I heard the horses squealing and fighting, and looked up and saw those colts fighting with mine. I hurried over, and saw they were fighting over the fence. The plaintiff's colts came against mine, biting and fighting, and mine got into the wire, raised up his front foot, and got caught in the wire, and was completely ruined. When I started over there, I saw . . . that they pushed the fence over and against my colt, and that mine, in fighting back, got onto the wires."

From the fact that upon the cross-examination of Arp it appeared that his horse caught its foot in the top wire of the fence, this court assumed that the horse was trying to jump the fence, and that such attempt was the proximate cause of the injury. Even if the court was right in that assumption, it is clear that such attempt was the natural and probable result of the presence of the other horses across the fence and of their actions. Their presence and activities there were the dominant cause of the action of Arp's horse, and therefore of the injury. In that case the court said: "In the case at bar the injury resulting to defendant's colt could not have been anticipated by the plaintiff in permitting his colts to remain in the highway adjoining defendant's land."

We do not think that statement correctly expresses the rule. We think the rule is not whether the party could have anticipated the particular accident that happened. In the note to that case in 130 Am. St. Rep. on page 747, the author concisely states this rule, which is fully sustained by the authorities cited: "The proximate cause of an injury is that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause, produces the injury, without which the injury would not have occurred. It is not necessary to show that the wrongdoer ought to have anticipated the particular injury which did result; it is sufficient to show that he ought to have anticipated that some injury was likely to result as the reasonable and natural consequence of his negligence." See also 29 Cyc. 499.

It seems to us that the entanglement of the Arp horse in the fence, and the entanglement of the present plaintiff's horse in the fence, were not the result of "any new, independent cause," but that each was the result of the presence and activities of the other fellow's horses across the fence. We are of the opinion that in allowing his horses to get upon the plaintiff's land the defendant in the case at bar should have anticipated, and must be held to have anticipated, that some injury to his or plaintiff's horses, or both, was likely to happen, and therefore that he should be held responsible for the act which did happen because of the trespass of his animals, it being a natural and reasonable result thereof.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.
L.R.A.1915D.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

NORTHWESTERN MARBLE & TILE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Respt.

(128 Minn. 514, 151 N. W. 419.)

Appeal — waiver of new trial.

1. If, after verdict, the unsuccessful party moves for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but does not move in the alternative for a new trial, he cannot on appeal be awarded a new trial. By resting solely upon his motion for judgment, he waives all errors which would be ground only for a new trial.

Carrier — injury to freight — liability.

2. A common carrier is at common law an insurer of the goods shipped, and is responsible for all losses except those arising from certain excepted causes. One excepted cause is improper packing by the shipper. The rules applicable to contributory negligence do not apply to such a case. The carrier must, to relieve himself from liability, show that the fault of the shipper was the sole cause of the loss.

Same — improper packing — refusal.

3. If improper packing is apparent to the carrier or his servants, then the carrier may refuse to receive the shipment. If he does receive the shipment, he assumes to carry the goods as they are, and the full common-law liability as carrier attaches.

Same — assumption of risk.

4. Although the carrier has knowledge of the defective packing, yet, if it is not apparent to the ordinary observation of the carrier or his servants that the goods cannot be safely carried in the condition in which they are presented, the carrier should not be held to take the chances of injury from improper packing. On this point the evidence in this case presents a question for the jury.

(March 5, 1915.)

Headnotes by HALLAM, J.

Note. — Liability of carrier in respect of property which it accepts improperly packed or crated.

For the earlier cases upon this question, see note to Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Rice, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1214.

As to the effect of a shipper's negligence in loading a car, or as to the condition of the car, upon the carrier's common-law liability, see notes to Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 952, and Illinois C. R. Co. v. Rogers, L.R.A.1915C, 1220.

A shipper cannot recover for the loss of goods which is occasioned by reason of the goods being shipped in improper containers or packages, not because of any theory of contributory negligence, but because such facts form exceptions which abrogate the common-law liability of the carrier. Revilla

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Rice County, denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to certain marble slabs while being transferred by defendant from a railway station to destination. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter W. Todd for appellant.

Mr. James P. McMahon for respondent.

Hallam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, a dealer in marble in Minneapolis, shipped a number of marble slabs by rail to the state school for the feeble-minded at Faribault. Defendant is in the transfer business at Faribault. He was engaged to haul the marble from the railway station at Faribault to its destination. The marble was packed in crates, and on the way some of the crates fell from the wagon and several slabs were broken. Plaintiff sued for damages. The jury found for defendant. Plaintiff moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but did not ask for a new trial, and the court denied the motion. This appeal involves only the question of the correctness of this ruling.

1. Plaintiff assigns as error certain rulings of the court in the admission of evidence and in the charge to the jury. If plaintiff were asking for a new trial, it would be proper to consider these assignments of error; but they are quite immaterial on this appeal. A party against whom a verdict has been returned may move in the alternative for a new trial or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7998. When he moves only for judgment, and rests upon that motion alone, he cannot on appeal be awarded a new trial. He has waived all errors which would be ground only for a new trial. Bragg v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 81 Minn. 130, 83 N. W. 511; Krumdick v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 90 Minn. 260, 95 N. W. 1122, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 589; Salden v. Little Falls, 102 Minn. 358, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 790, 120 Am. St. Rep. 635, 113 N. W. 884; Helmer v. Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Co. — Minn. —, 151 N. W. 421. Errors in the admission of evidence or in the charge to the jury are of this sort. They present no ground for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Final judgment cannot be given to the defeated party because the cause was erroneously tried. Such party may, if he asks for it, be entitled to a new trial on this ground, but never to final judgment. The question before us is, not whether the case was properly tried, but whether there is any competent evidence reasonably tending to sustain the verdict. If so, the verdict must be sustained. In determining that question, every intendment will be indulged in favor of the verdict, and judgment will only be

Fish Products Co. v. American-Hawaiian S. S. Co. 77 Wash. 49, 137 Pac. 337.

In Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Southern Seating & Cabinet Co. 157 Ky. 772, 164 S. W. 90, an action for injury to opera chairs shipped over defendant's road, packed in crates, the court said that if goods are insufficiently packed, and this fact is not known to the carrier, nor discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, it is not liable for loss or injury due to such insufficient packing, if itself free from negligence.

The liability of a carrier as an insurer of goods does not extend to loss or damage arising from the negligence of the shipper, or from vices or defects inherent in the nature of the goods, and where, in an action for the loss of a puncheon of molasses that burst during transit, there was evidence on the part of the defendant tending to establish such conditions, defendant was entitled to have them considered by the jury under proper instructions. Currie v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 156 N. C. 432, 72 S. E. 493.

Where a shipper did not comply with a regulation of the carrier that nitric acid carboys would not be accepted for transportation unless they were packed in non-combustible dunnage, and did not give notice to the carrier of the nature of the acid, and the shipment was destroyed by combustion due to the leaking of the acid, L.R.A.1916D.

it was held that the shipper could not recover. Bradley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 145 App. Div. 312, 129 N. Y. Supp. 1045.

In Deake v. United States Exp. Co. 172 Mich. 451, 138 N. W. 196, which was an action for the loss of a bull calf shipped in a crate by plaintiff, due to the crate being too large, so that the calf was enabled to turn around partially and break the crate when he became excited and vicious during the trip, it was held that defendant was not negligent in accepting the calf so crated, where there was no defect in the crate other than its size, and plaintiff's testimony showed that, although he saw the calf get excited and try to turn around in the crate at the point of shipment, he did not think it was necessary to take any further precautions.

In E. C. Fuller Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 61 Misc. 599, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1001, which was an action for damage to machinery shipped over defendant's railroad, the court says it was essential to plaintiff's recovery to prove that the goods when delivered by plaintiff were in good condition and properly packed for transportation, but it does not appear clearly from the facts in the case whether the injury to the machinery was due to the way in which it was packed or in the way in which it was loaded on the car by plaintiff's employees.

R. L. S.

granted when the evidence is conclusive against the verdict. Cruikshank v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 75 Minn. 266, 77 N. W. 958; Fohl v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 84 Minn. 314, 87 N. W. 919; Marengo v. Great Northern R. Co. 84 Minn. 397, 87 Am. St. Rep. 369, 87 N. W. 1117; Fischer v. Sperl, 04 Minn. 421, 103 N. W. 502; Stebbins v. Martin, 121 Minn. 154, 140 N. W. 1029.

2. We address ourselves, therefore, to this question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. Defendant was admittedly a common carrier of goods. A common carrier of goods in general insures the safe transportation of goods committed to him for that purpose, and he is responsible for all damage to the same while in transit, unless such damage is occasioned by certain excepted causes. These excepted causes are act of God, act of public enemy, the inherent quality or "proper vice" of the articles themselves, or some act or omission of the shipper or owner. Christenson v. American Exp. Co. 15 Minn. 270, Gil. 208, 2 Am. Rep. 122; Goodman v. Oregon & Nav. Co. 22 Or. 14, 28 Pac. 894.

Defendant contends that this case comes within the last exception; that is, the contention is that the marble slabs were not properly packed or crated by the shipper, that when they were transferred to wagons they were loaded in the proper and practicable way, and were braced in the usual and proper way by means of boards running from the top of the crates to the bottom of the wagon bed, but that they fell by reason of the fact that the crating was worm-eaten, dozy, and decayed, so that it would not properly hold the nails driven into it for that purpose.

The general rule is that, where the shipper packs articles for shipment, he cannot recover from the carrier for injuries due to improper packing. Hutchinson Carr. § 233; Shriver v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 506, 31 Am. Rep. 353. Some authorities apply here the rules of contributory negligence, and hold that if the bad packing contributes in any measure to the loss or injury the carrier is not liable. 5 Thomp. Neg. § 6465. See Reed v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 176, 212; Ross v. Troy & B. R. Co. 49 Vt. 364, 24 Am. Rep. 144. It appears to us that the rules of contributory negligence have no application to such a case. Contributory negligence of plaintiff is a defense only in cases where the action is founded on negligence of defendant. Here the action is not founded on negligence of the carrier at all. The carrier's common-law liability is founded, not on negligence, but "on broad principles of public policy and convenience, and was introduced to prevent the necessity of going into L.R.A.1915D.

circumstances impossible to be unraveled." Arthur v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 38 Minn. 95, 100, 35 N. W. 721. It would be a distinct extension of the doctrine of contributory negligence to apply it to a case of this kind, and an extension which we believe to be unwarranted. On proof of the contract of carriage and of loss or damage, liability is prima facie established. To relieve himself from liability, the carrier must prove that the loss or damage arose solely from one or more of the excepted causes, and it avails him not to show that the shipper was negligent, if the loss or damage would not have resulted except for the concurring fault of the carrier. The proof must bring the case "entirely and perfectly within the exception." This view is sustained by the weight of authority. McCarthy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 Ala. 193, 48 Am. St. Rep. 29, 14 So. 370; Hutchinson, Carr. § 333; 1 Moore, Carr. 559; Elliott, Railroads, § 1492.

3. It is admitted that defendant discovered that the condition of the crating was defective at the time the marble was loaded on his wagon. It is claimed he thereby assumed all the responsibility of carrying it in its defective condition. There is some authority for the proposition that the full duty of the carrier is simply to carry goods in the condition offered, though the defect in loading or packing is apparent, and that if in such case injury results from such defective loading or packing the carrier is relieved. Ross v. Troy & B. R. Co. 49 Vt. 364, 24 Am. Rep. 144. See Union Exp. Co. v. Graham, 26 Ohio St. 595. The better and the more general rule seems to be that, if goods presented for carriage are not properly packed, and that fact is apparent to the carrier or his servants upon ordinary observation, then the carrier may refuse to receive the goods in that condition; but if he does see fit to receive them he assumes to carry them as they are, and his full common-law liability as carrier attaches to the contract of carriage. McCarthy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra; Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Bates Mach. Co. 98 Ill. App. 311; Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Bates Mach. Co. 200 Ill. 636, 93 Am. St. Rep. 218, 166 N. E. 326; The David & Caroline, 5 Blatchf. 266, Fed. Cas. No. 3,593; Klauber v. American Exp. Co. 21 Wis. 21, 91 Am. Dec. 452; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Rice, 160 Ala. 265, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1214, 52 So. 918, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 389; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 262, 20 L. ed. 423; 1 Moore, Carr. 559.

4. It cannot be said, however, that the carrier must, at his peril, know that the goods are not in fact safely packed. The shipper usually knows better than the carrier the manner in which the goods have been packed and the manner in which they should be packed, and even though the carrier may have knowledge of some defect in the packing, still if it is not apparent to the ordinary observation of the carrier or his servants that the goods cannot be safely carried in the condition in which they are presented, the carrier should not be held to take the chances of injury from improper packing. See Jaggard, Torts, 1064; McCarthy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra. It is right here that we think the evidence in this case presents a question of fact for the jury to determine whether it was manifest to the defendant that the marble could not be carried with safety in the manner in which it was crated.

The motion for judgment was therefore properly denied, and the judgment is affirmed.

Holt, J., took no part.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

HOWARD D. MACGINNIS, Otherwise Known as Howard D. McGennies,
v.

MARLBOROUGH-HUDSON GAS COMPANY.

(220 Mass. 575, 108 N. E. 364.)

Highway — blasting trench — flooding cellar — liability.

One blasting out a trench under municipal authority in a public street in which to lay a gas pipe is not, in the absence of negligence, liable in tort for the flow of water into a cellar on one side of the street from a pond on the opposite side, because of the disturbance of the earth by the blasts.

(April 1, 1915.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligent injury to plaintiff's house by water, which resulted in a verdict for defendant. Judgment for defendant.

Statement by De Courcy, J.:

The plaintiff's house was on the easterly side of Maple street, and about 5 feet from the street line. On the opposite side of the street, and about 200 feet in a northwesterly direction from this house, was a natural depression of the ground. Here the surface water from the surrounding territory collected at certain times of the year and formed a pool or pond that was about 100 feet long, 30 feet wide and 2 feet deep. The bottom of the pond was always moist and muddy, and never was cultivated. All the water that did not overflow into the gutter on the westerly side of Maple street remained in the pond until it either evaporated or seeped into the ground, joining the ground water.

The defendant, under a license duly issued by the city, opened a trench 3½ feet deep the whole length of Maple street, and about 10 feet from the easterly line of the street, for the purpose of laying a line of gas pipe. In connection with this work the contractor employed by the defendant blasted a ledge which extended from a few feet north of the plaintiff's house in a southwesterly direction across the street. When the frost

Note. — Liability for causing discharge of percolating or underground water into another's premises.

There are some cases upon the border line of the subject suggested by the foregoing title that are not included herein, for the reason that they are treated in notes upon other subjects to which they are distinctly related.

Generally, as to correlative rights in percolating water, see notes in 64 L.R.A. 236; 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 331; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465; 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193; and L.R.A. 1915A, 369.

Generally, as to underground pollution of water, see note to Gilmore v. Royal Salt Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 48.

The notes to Brennan Constr. Co. v. Cumberland, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 541, and Weaver Mercantile Co. v. Thurmond, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1061, treat of the liability for escape of water stored on premises.

The cases cited in MACGINNIS v. MARLBOROUGH-HUDSON GAS Co., i. e., Barry v. L.R.A. 1915D.

Lowell, 8 Allen, 127, 85 Am. Dec. 690, holding that no action lies against a city for failure to keep a public sewer and cesspool in repair, whereby waste water accumulates and flows into the cellar of a neighboring house which is not connected by a drain with the sewer, and Kennison v. Beverly, 146 Mass. 467, 16 N. E. 278, which, in accordance with the above ruling, holds a town not liable for injury to property owners by the percolation of waters from its catch basins or gutters, are more fully discussed on pages 697, 698, and 702 of the note to Georgetown v. Com. 61 L.R.A., which treats generally of the duty and liability of a municipality with respect to drainage.

As to liability of municipal corporation for damage to abutting property by water percolating through soil of highway by reason of defect therein, see note to Salzman v. New Haven, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 333.

As to liability for damages to neighboring gas or oil well by percolation of water, see note to Atkinson v. Virginia Oil & Gas Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168.

in the ground began to thaw in the last days of March, 1913, which was about two months after the gas pipe was laid, and soon after the contractor had used a steam roller on the surface, water in considerable quantities began to percolate into the plaintiff's cellar through and under the wall. The city pumped it out daily for twenty-six days, during which time the water in the pond gradually receded. The jury specially found that the plaintiff's cellar was flooded because the ledge was blown out in the trench near the plaintiff's house; and also found that the work on the trench was not done negligently. Upon the return of the answers of the jury to the special questions, the judge ordered a verdict for the defendant and reported the case for determination by this court upon a stipulation of the parties that, if the ordering of the verdict was wrong, judgment should be entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $612.50 with costs; otherwise judgment should be entered on the verdict.

Mr. J. J. Shaughnessy, for plaintiff:

The license from the city of Marlborough would not give the defendant any right to do anything in the street that would cause a special damage to the plaintiff's property, or an additional servitude which was not included in the laying out of the highway.

Lentell v. Boston & W. Street R. Co. 202 Mass. 115, 88 N. E. 765; Daley v. Watertown, 192 Mass. 116, 78 N. E. 143; Baker v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 183 Mass. 178, 66 N.

As to liability of railroad for conducting surface water through its embankments and onto the property of an adjoining owner, see note to Parks v. Southern R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 680.

There does not seem to be any case on all fours with MACGINNIS v. MARLBOROUGH-HUDSON GAS CO., where the flooding was due to blasting.

Where, however, independent contractors excavated up to a neighbor's wall, and were permitted by the landowner employing them to place bricks in the street gutter provided they did not obstruct it, it was held in Bohrer v. Dienhart Harness Co. — Ind. App. —, 45 N. E. 668, that the landowner was liable where the material was so placed as to obstruct the gutter, whereby the water percolated into the neighbor's cellar and caused his wall to fall; and the landowner was liable although the wall was weak and easily disturbed, and he did not foresee the result which followed the obstruction of the gutter.

So, one employing a contractor to construct a drain from his cellar to a common sewer is liable where the work is so negligently done as to cause tide water to flow into the cellar of an adjoining owner. Sturges v. Theological Edu. Soc. 130 Mass. 414, 39 Am. Rep. 463. "In the case at bar, the defendant had the right to make an opening through the barrier for the purpose of laying a drain, but it was its duty to close it securely so that the cellars should be protected from the tide. Having employed an independent contractor, it is not responsible for his negligent acts while doing the work, because in respect to such acts he is not its servant; but if the work after it was done created a nuisance, and caused injury to the plaintiff, it is responsible. The jury would have been authorized in finding that the cause of the plaintiff's injury was the failure of the defendant to make the barrier tight after laying the drain. It was its duty to do this, and it cannot shield itself from responsibility by showing that it employed a contractor to do the work, who was negligent. The mischief to the plaintiff L.R.A.1915D.

is the result of the neglect of the defendant to perform its duty."

Generally, as to employer's liability for injury from flooding of lands through negligent drainage operations of independent contractor, see note to Jacobs v. Fuller & H. Co. 65 L.R.A. 853.

A lot owner who unlawfully allows water to remain in an excavation on his lot is liable for damages resulting from water percolating through the soil and injuring the foundation walls of his neighbor's house. Quinn v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 510, 19 N. W. 336. The court stated that the question as to whether the defendant became guilty of a nuisance, as alleged in the petition, should have been submitted to the jury, and an instruction given that in case they so found, it was proper for them to allow plaintiff for such injury as her premises sustained from the percolation of water from the excavation after the same became and while it remained a nuisance. The court further observed that on principle it would seem that the plaintiff ought not to recover for such damages, if they resulted from the lawful and reasonable use by the defendant of its own lot.

A railroad company which, in the construction of their railroad, opens a supply of underground water, and to prevent inundation, discharges it through an artificial channel upon plaintiff's land, may be held liable therefor in an action of tort, unless the discharge of the water was reasonably necessary and proper in the course of constructing, securing, or maintaining its road; and whether or not it was necessary was a question for the jury. Curtis v. Eastern R. Co. 14 Allen, 55.

The city was held liable in Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 261, 11 Am. Rep. 352, for flooding the cellars of adjacent landowners by percolating water as a consequence of the city raising its dam and reservoir so as to cause an artificial pressure of the water through the soil.

And in Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56, it was held actionable to cause filthy water to percolate from the defendant's vault through his own soil and then

E. 711; Ainsworth v. Lakin, 180 Mass. 397, 57 L.R.A. 132, 91 Am. St. Rep. 314, 62 N. E. 746; Fletcher v. Smith, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 781, 37 L. T. N. S. 367, 47 L. J. Exch. N. S. 4, 26 Week. Rep. 83, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 78.

The finding by the jury that the work on the trench was not done negligently does not affect the plaintiff's case.

Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Fitzpatrick v. Welch, 174 Mass. 486, 48 L.R.A. 278, 55 N. E. 178; Cabot v. Kingman, 166 Mass. 403, 33 L.R.A. 45, 44 N. E. 344; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 66 Am. Dec. 431.

Mr. F. Delano Putnam, for defendant:

The evidence does not show that the plaintiff has any cause of action at common law.

Lincoln v. Com. 164 Mass. 1, 41 N. E. 112; Cheney v. Barker, 198 Mass. 356, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 436, 84 N. E. 492; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7.

Unless negligence on the part of the defendant is shown, it is not liable.

Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117; Davis v. Spaulding, 157 Mass. 431, 19 L.R.A. 102, 32 N. E. 660; Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324, 13 L. J. Exch. N. S. 289, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 168; Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349, 29 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 5 Jur. N. S. 873, 7 Week. Rep. 685, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 729; Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515, 18 L. J. C. P. N. S. 172, 13 Jur. 362, 6 Mor.

Min. Rep. 142; Baird v. Williamson, 15 C. B. N. S. 376, 33 L. J. C. P. N. S. 101, 10 Jur. N. S. 152, 9 L. T. N. S. 412, 12 Week. Rep. 150, 4 Mor. Min. Rep. 368.

Compensation is to be given only for such "injuries" as would have been the basis of an action at common law.

Caledonian R. Co. v. Walker, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 259, 46 L. T. N. S. 826, 30 Week. Rep. 569, 46 J. P. 676; Caledonian R. Co. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. L. Cas. 229; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659, 13 Atl. 690; Brittle Silver Co. v. Rust, 10 Colo. App. 463, 51 Pac. 528; Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537; Shrunk v. Schuylkill Nav. Co. 14 Serg. & R. 71.

De Courcy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The easement in an existing highway permits public uses on and beneath the surface of the way of a far-reaching and ever increasing character. Pipes, sewers, and subways impose no additional servitude upon the land in the public street for which the owner of the fee can claim damages. Cheney v. Barker, 198 Mass. 356, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 436, 84 N. E. 492; Sears v. Crocker, 184 Mass. 586, 100 Am. St. Rep. 577, 69 N. E. 327; Bishop v. North Adams Fire Dist. 167 Mass. 364, 45 N. E. 925; Lincoln v. Com. 164 Mass. 1, 41 N. E. 112. As the appropriation of the space below the surface is not an invasion of his common-law rights, into his neighbor's soil, and thus injure his neighbor's well and cellar.

A waterworks company was held guilty of a trespass in Odell v. Nyack Waterworks Co. 91 Hun, 283, 36 N. Y. Supp. 206, where, by closing the overflow pipe in its reservoir, it caused the waters to overflow a well on its premises, and in that manner unlawfully and wrongfully forced waters through a subterranean course into an adjoining landowner's well, causing the wall and arch thereof to loosen and cave, injuring plaintiff's premises. "While the defendant has the legal right to maintain a reservoir upon its premises, it was bound to so use and guard the same that it would not become a source of annoyance or damage to the plaintiff and others."

So, where one dug out a cellar and rain water collected there and percolated into the cellar of an adjoining landowner, he was held liable for the damages, in Snow v. Whitehead, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 885, L. R. 27 Ch. Div. 588, 51 L. T. N. S. 253, 33 Week. Rep. 128. This case comes within the decision of Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 37 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, 19 L. T. N. S. 220, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, affirming L. R. 1 Exch. 265, 12 Jur. N. S. 603, 14 Week. Rep. 799, discussed at length on page 541 of note in 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) supra, which turns on the principle that anyone who collects upon his own land water, or anything else, which would not in the natural condition of the land be collected there, ought to keep it at his own peril, and that if it escape, he is liable for the consequences.

So, where a defendant landowner allowed rain water to accumulate in an excavation on his lot, he was held liable in Crommelin v. Cox, 30 Ala. 318, 68 Am. Dec. 120, for damages caused by the water percolating into an adjoining lot owner's cellar; and he was liable notwithstanding the excavation was there when he purchased the lot from one who owned both lots, and he simply permitted the property to remain in the state in which it was when he purchased. Generally, as to connection with, or participation in, nuisance, essential to render one responsible therefor, see note to Adler v. Pruitt, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889; and as to necessity of notice to render owner of premises liable for continuing a nuisance created by predecessor, see notes in 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 164, and 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 929.

So, a recovery was allowed in Nelson v. Godfrey, 12 Ill. 20, for damages resulting to plaintiff by reason of an excavation for a coal cellar made by defendant in the sidewalk in front of his premises, through which the water from the gutter of the street passed into defendant's cellar, and then through several other cellars into that of the plaintiff, and did the damage com-the abutter cannot maintain an action of tort for an injury caused thereby, unless the construction work is done negligently or improperly. A common instance of this is where the work necessarily causes surface water to flow, or underground water to percolate, upon the land of an abutter. Ken-nison v. Beverly, 146 Mass. 467, 16 N. E. 278; Barry v. Lowell, 8 Allen, 127, 85 Am. Dec. 690; Flagg v. Worcester, 13 Gray, 601; Holleran v. Boston, 176 Mass. 75, 57 N. E. 220. And see "Ways and Waters in Massachusetts," 28 Harvard L. Rev. 478. It is not disputed here that the municipality duly gave consent to the defendant to lay the gas pipes in Maple street, and that the location of the trench was designated by the superintendent of streets under the terms of the vote of the board of mayor and aldermen. The defendant was thereby authorized to make use of the street under the public right. Rev. Laws, chap. 110, § 76. Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 81, 49 Am. Rep. 7; Lincoln v. Com. 164 Mass. 1, 10, 41 N. E. 112.

On the facts shown the defendant has violated no common-law right of the plaintiff. In many instances where there is no recovery at common law the legislature has provided indemnity for injury suffered by abutters and others. Thus, compensation is recoverable under the highway statute for injury caused by surface water flowing upon an abutter's land by reason of raising the grade of a street. Rev. Laws, chap. 51, § 15.

plained of. The court said that, while a license thus to use a part of the public street may be inferred, it is on the condition that the person doing so shall use more than ordinary care and expedition in the prosecution of the work. It is a familiar principle that when one enjoys a privilege as a matter of favor, in consideration that he alone can enjoy the benefit, he is required to use extraordinary care in the exercise of the privilege. In this case but for the favor extended to the defendant the plaintiff would not have sustained this loss. The defendant alone can reap a benefit, and he ought to be responsible for all damages which might have been avoided by special vigilance and care.

The owners of a mill were held liable in Scott v. Longwell, 139 Mich. 12, 102 N. W. 230, 5 Ann. Cas. 679, where water from a mill race percolated through the banks into the cellar of an adjacent owner as a consequence of scraping and refilling after the race had been empty for a long time. Imputing to defendants under the law, said the court, a knowledge and skill possessed by competent millwrights, it must be presumed that they knew that the water would escape through the banks of the race, which had been so long empty, and they were bound to take precautions to prevent it. Even were it true that, to lessen the damages, plaintiff was under an obligation to L.R.A.1915D.

Woodbury v. Beverly, 153 Mass. 245, 26 N. E. 851. Under the grade crossing act (Rev. Laws, chap. 111, § 153; Stat. 1906, chap. 463, § 37), remedy is given for acts which cause injury of a special and peculiar kind, although they are not a violation of common-law rights. Hyde v. Fall River, 189 Mass. 439, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 269, 75 N. E. 953. A town constructing a sewer in land taken for that purpose is liable under Rev. Laws, chap. 49, § 2, for draining a well on land not adjoining the land taken, although at common law the owner of land lawfully may make excavations in it and thereby drain his neighbor's well. Trowbridge v. Brookline, 144 Mass. 139, 10 N. E. 796; Davis v. Spaulding, 157 Mass. 431, 19 L.R.A. 102, 32 N. E. 650. And under the East Boston tunnel statute (Stat. 1894, chap. 548, § 34, as amended by Stat. 1895, chap. 440, § 1), the owner of abutting land whose cellar was flooded owing to the unauthorized removal of a bulkhead was held entitled to compensation. Fifty Associates v. Boston, 201 Mass. 585, 88 N. E. 427. See also Peabody v. Boston, 220 Mass. 376, 107 N. E. 952.

Rev. Laws, chap. 110, § 76, which authorizes gaslight companies to open the streets for the purpose of laying pipes, with the consent in writing of the mayor and aldermen, provides that "such consent shall not affect the right or remedy to recover damages for an injury caused to persons or property by the acts of such corporations."

construct a drain on her own property or to some similar affirmative act, she was bound to do no more than a person of ordinary prudence would have done. As to defendants' contention that they had a right to do the acts complained of, by virtue of a reservation in a certain deed, and that by prescription they had the right to flood the land of plaintiff, it was a sufficient answer to say that they afforded affirmative defenses, and were not therefor under circuit court rule 7, admissible under the defendants' plea of the general issue.

It has been held, however, that where the waters used for purposes of irrigation on a rice farm percolate through the inclosing levees, and injure the crops on an adjoining sugar plantation, notwithstanding the rice planter has exhausted all the usual and customary modes to prevent the seepage and protect his neighbor, the damage resulting therefrom will be damnum absque injuria. Nagel v. Madere, McGloin (La.) 325.

And so it has been held that a plaintiff has no legal cause of complaint against a defendant because water which gathers into defendant's cellar passes by percolation into plaintiff's cellar, where the injury results from plaintiff's act in sinking his cellar deeper than that of defendant. Beck v. Spinks, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 954 (abstract).

J. D. C.

We do not undertake to pass upon the question whether this provision was designed to give the plaintiff a cause of action where none existed at common law, and to afford compensation for damage necessarily caused by work which was authorized by the statute and was executed in a reasonably proper manner. The present action is one of tort for alleged negligence. The jury specially found that the work on the trench was not done negligently; hence no case of liability at common law was made out, even assuming that an action of tort would lie for negligent acts done in carrying out the purposes of the statute. See Westcott v. Boston, 186 Mass. 540, 72 N. E. 89. We cannot say that the judge was wrong in directing a verdict for the defendant; and under the terms of the report, based on the stipulation of the parties, the entry must be:

Judgment for the defendant.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

ACME COAL COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
NORTHRUP NATIONAL BANK OF IOLA, KANSAS.

(— Wyo. —, 146 Pac. 593.)

Bills and notes — typewritten figures — change by writing — conflict.

1. Uncertainty as to the rate of interest in a note, so as to render it non-negotiable, is not created by drawing with a pen a ring around the figures representing such

Note. — Typewritten matter as written or as printed matter.

The precise question presented in ACME COAL CO. v. NORTHRUP NAT. BANK, as to whether typewritten words or figures are to be deemed written or printed matter for purposes of the rule that written, shall prevail over printed, provisions in case of a conflict, does not seem to have been discussed elsewhere.

Typewriting, however, is stated to be a substitute for and the equivalent of writing, in Deep River Nat. Bank's Appeal, 73 Conn. 341, 47 Atl. 675, where a letter dictated to a stenographer and typewritten is held a sufficient compliance with that section of the General Statutes providing that, "in actions against the representatives of deceased persons, no acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract to take the case out of the statute of limitations, unless the same be contained in some writing made or signed by the party to be charged thereby."

And it has been held that typewriting is not printing within the court rule requiring abstracts of records and briefs to be L.R.A.1915D.

rate as inserted by a typewriter in a printed note blank, and placing a figure above it with a pen, where the statute provides that where there is a conflict between the written and printed provisions in a contract, the written ones must prevail, since the typewritten figures must be regarded as printed.

Same — indorsee — want of consideration.

2. The defense of failure of consideration is not available under the negotiable instrument law against an indorsee of a negotiable note, unless prior to or at the time of his purchase he had notice of infirmity in the note, or knowledge of such facts that taking the instrument amounted to bad faith.

(March 8, 1915.)

ERROR to the District Court for Sheridan County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burgess & Kutcher for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. H. N. Gottlieb, for defendant in error:

Alleged uncertainty in the amount of interest payable did not affect the character of the instrument as a negotiable note.

2 Cyc. 142-144; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 206 and notes; Busjahn v. McLean, 3 Ind. App. 281, 29 N. E. 494; Phillips v. Crips, 108 Iowa, 605, 79 N. W. 373; Durant v. Murdock, 3 App. D. C. 114; Thompson v. Hoagland, 65 Ill. 310; Cramer v. Joder, 65 Ill. 314.

printed. Carroll v. Holmes, 19 Ill. App. 564; Johnson County v. Bryson, 26 Mo. App. 484; Franco-American Loan & Bldg. Assn. v. Joy, 61 Mo. App. 162; Keating v. Lewis, 74 Mo. App. 226; Buckingham v. Reid, 5 Idaho, 312, 48 Pac. 1069; Sunday v. Hagenbuch, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 540 (typewritten bill); National Bank v. Lovenberg, 63 Tex. 506; State v. Oleson, 9 Wash. 186, 37 Pac. 419.

And there seems to be in Buffalo & St. M. R. Co. v. Philadelphia & E. R. Co. 174 Pa. 263, 34 Atl. 561, a recognition of the fact that typewriting is not printing, and that in equity proceedings the one cannot be substituted for the other.

In Sunday v. Hagenbuch, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 540, it is stated in the syllabus that under the act of June 18, 1895, P. L. 125, typewriting is given the same legal force, meaning, and effect as writing.

But typewritten notices are in State ex rel. Coleman v. Oakland, 69 Kan. 784, 77 Pac. 694, held sufficient to meet the statutory requirement as to posting printed notices of application to organize city of third class.

J. D. C.

Testimony of defendant Craig was properly stricken out.

Bank of Leadville v. Allen, 6 Colo. 594; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246; MacRitchie v. Johnson, 49 Kan. 321, 30 Pac. 477; Violet v. Rose, 39 Neb. 660, 58 N. W. 216; Livingston v. Roberts, 18 Fla. 70; Blair v. Buser, Wilson Super. Ct. (Ind.) 333; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 62 Neb. 213, 97 Am. St. Rep. 624, 86 N. W. 1070; Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Jones, 60 Neb. 396, 83 N. W. 197, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 270; Wittenberg v. Mollyneaux, 60 Neb. 583, 83 N. W. 842.

Beard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a promissory note brought by the defendant in error against the plaintiffs in error. Trial was had to the court, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff below, and defendants bring error.

The note was given by the Acme Coal Company, and indorsed by Ora Darnall and A. K. Craig, and payable to the order of the United States Iron Works Company, and by said company indorsed to the bank. The note bears date November 9, 1912, is for $1,589.15, due ninety days after date, with interest from date. A blank printed form was used, and the blanks filled in on a typewriter, and in the blank space for the rate of interest, after the printed word "at," the typewritten figures and words are "7 per cent from date." There is a circle drawn around the figure 7 with a pen and ink, and above it is the figure 8, also made with pen and ink. The defendants denied the execution of the note, but averred that if they did execute it, it was given in renewal of a former note dated August 3, 1912, which was given for a part of the purchase price of certain pit cars for use in the coal company's mines; that said cars were purchased from the iron works company by the coal company under an agreement that they were to be of the same kind and in all substantial respects like cars formerly purchased by the coal company from the iron works company; alleged certain defects in the cars which could not be discovered by inspection, but which the iron works company knew or should have known, and that the cars were practically worthless. That the cars were delivered during the year 1911 and fore part of the year 1912. That the plaintiff knew or should have known that said cars were defective and useless and worthless to the coal company, and if it purchased the note in suit it did not do so in good faith, but for the purpose of defeating the coal company's claim for damages against the iron works company.

L.R.A.1915D.

The defendants contend that the note is not a negotiable instrument by reason of an uncertainty in the rate of interest it bears appearing on its face, there being a conflict between the rate as inserted in the printed blank by the typewriter, and that with pen and ink. The rule of construction provided by our statute (it being what is known as the uniform negotiable instrument act) is, where there is a conflict between the written and printed provisions of the instrument, the written provisions prevail. Comp. Stat. 1910, § 3175, subd. 4. Had the figure "7" been printed in the blank as it was printed on a printing press, and the figure "8" written with pen and ink, the rule of the statute would unquestionably apply. The question here is: Is that portion of this note which is typewritten to be considered as printed, or as written? When we consider what we conceive to be the reason for the rule as laid down in the statute, and the connection in which the words "written" and "printed" are there used, we think the question is not difficult of solution. The printed form or blank is used for convenience, and is prepared in advance of the final agreement between the parties; and when a conflicting provision is afterward inserted therein in writing, the natural and reasonable presumption is that the later and written provision expresses the true intent of the parties. The word "writing" is defined in the Century Dictionary: "Specifically, as distinguished from printing, stamping, incision, etc., the act or art of tracing graphic signs by hand on paper, parchment, or any other material, with a pen and ink, style, pencil, or any other instrument."

And the word "print" is defined by the same authority: "Specifically, to stamp by direct pressure, as from the face of types, plates, or blocks covered with ink or pigments; impress with transferred characters or delineations by the exercise of force, as with a press or some other mechanical agency."

And "typewriting" is defined: "The process of printing letter by letter by the use of a typewriter." When, as in this case, it clearly appears from an inspection of the instrument that the blank form used was "printed," using that term in its common and ordinary sense, and the blanks therein are filled in on a typewriter, and it then further appears that there is a conflict between a typewritten provision and one afterward made with pen and ink, we think the typewritten portion of the instrument must be considered as "printed" within the meaning of the statute. We do not wish, however, to be understood as holding that in all cases and under all circumstances typewriting is to be construed as printing; but that in the circumstances here presented it is to be so construed, and that the rule adopted by the statute applies, and that the rate of interest in the note is not uncertain, and that it is a negotiable instrument. Nor have we overlooked the further provisions of the statute (§ 3349) with reference to the construction of words, viz.: "In this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires: . . . 'Written' includes printed and 'writing' includes print."

To so construe those words in the case before us would render the rule prescribed by § 3175 meaningless and of no force; and in our opinion the case comes within the exception, "unless the context otherwise requires."

The defendants further alleged in their amended answer (upon which the case was tried) that they relied upon the agreement and representations of the iron works company that the cars were like the cars purchased prior to 1911 and could be used for the purpose for which they were intended, and it was by reason of said agreement and representations that the coal company was induced to buy and did buy said cars. As to those allegations, counsel for plaintiffs in error say in their brief: "By failure to deny, the reply of defendant in error admits the ninth paragraph of the answer,"—that being the paragraph containing said allegations.

If a reply was necessary, the reply to the original answer denied the new matters set up in the answer; and we find in the record a written stipulation signed by the attorneys for the respective parties and filed in the court below, that the reply filed to the original answer should stand as the reply to the amended answer. That point is not therefore well taken.

The note being negotiable, the statute provides (§ 3217): "Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course; but when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired the title as a holder in due course."

And by § 3213, id.: "The title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective within the meaning of this chapter when he obtained the instrument or any signature thereto, by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, or for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud."

Assuming the allegations of the amended answer to be sufficient to present the issue L.R.A.1915D.

of defective title in the iron works company on the ground of false representations and fraud in procuring the note, the evidence, including certain testimony stricken out by the court on plaintiff's motion, is insufficient to establish those allegations. The most that can be said of it is that it tended to prove a breach of contract. It was to the effect that the iron works company agreed to furnish cars like those previously purchased by the coal company from it, but failed to do so. There is an entire lack of any evidence that the plaintiff had, prior to or at the time it purchased the note, any notice or knowledge of any defect or infirmity in the note, or knowledge of such facts that in its action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith; which notice or knowledge was necessary to let in the defense of failure of consideration, breach of contract, or breach of implied warranty. Ireland v. Shore, 91 Kan. 326, 137 Pac. 926. The finding of the district court is general, but it must necessarily have held the note to be negotiable, and found that the defendants failed to establish fraud in the inception of the note, or notice of any infirmity or defect therein, or bad faith on the part of plaintiff as holder of the note.

We think the record sustains the judgment, and it accordingly is affirmed.

Potter, Ch. J., and Scott, J., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

BIRMINGHAM WATERWORKS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

MARY B. BROWN.

(— Ala. —, 67 So. 613.)

Water company — municipal supply — special rates — validity.

A water company which has contracted with a municipal corporation to furnish water to its inhabitants at a flat maximum rate for dwellings cannot make a special contract for meter rates with a particular householder, and even though it undertakes to do so, it may cut the supply off from his residence upon his refusal to pay the uniform flat rate.

(Sayre, J., dissents.)

(December 17, 1914.)

Note. — Right of water or light company to discriminate between consumers as to rates.

This note is supplementary to the note appended to State ex rel. Ferguson v. Bir-

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to recover damages for breach of a contract to supply water by meter measurement. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John London and Henry Fitts, for appellant:

The contract is unenforceable.

Brown v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 169 Ala. 230, 52 So. 915; State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 164 Ala. 586, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 137 Am. St. Rep. 69, 51 So. 354, 20 Ann. Cas. 961.

The true construction of the special contract is that plaintiff thereby agreed to pay for water consumed according to meter measurement and without regard to whether the amount thus to become due was more or less than the amount which she would have had to pay under the flat rate.

Birmingham v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. — Ala. —, 42 So. 10.

The gist of each count of the complaint is the breach of a special contract between the plaintiff and defendant, and punitive damages are not recoverable for a breach of contract in this respect, there being a plain distinction between damages arising from tort and those arising ex contractu.

Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Keiley, 2 Ala. App. 628, 56 So. 838; Sutherland, Damages, §§ 393, 1095; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 84 Ala. 159, 5 Am. St. Rep. 354, 4 So. 359; Patterson v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 89 Ala. 318, 7 So. 437, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 71; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Vance, 93 Ala. 144, 30 Am. St. Rep. 41, 9 So. 574; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 93 Ala. 514, 30 Am. St. Rep. 65, 9 So. 722; Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Frazier, 93 Ala. 45, 30 Am. St. Rep. 28, 9 So. 303, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 17; Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Drennen, 175 Ala. 338, 57 So. 879, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1037; Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Robinson, 125 Ala. 483, 28 So. 28; Inman v.

mingham Waterworks Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674.

For the effect of contracts with patrons to preclude regulation of rates of public service corporations, see note to Pinney & B. Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. L.R.A.1915C, 282.

In BIRMINGHAM WATERWORKS CO. v. BROWN, the court expressly overrules its former decision in the same case, reported as Brown v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 169 Ala. 230, 52 So. 915, so far as it held that the water company might discriminate as to the rates charged its consumers as long as the favorable rate was given to the consumer at the expense of the company, and did not impinge upon any rights of other consumers, and in effect overrules State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra, where the rule which is disapproved in the present case was first stated.

The position taken in the overruled cases seems to be, in effect, that a corporation supplying the inhabitants of a city with water could discriminate by furnishing water to some of its consumers at a rate less than the maximum permitted to be charged by ordinance, on the theory that the other consumers were not injured, inasmuch as they were not required to pay a higher rate than the company was permitted by law to charge. The fallacy of this reasoning, aside from the advantage which the consumer receiving a lesser rate might acquire over consumers who were compelled to pay a higher rate, lies in the fact that, by granting the lesser rates to certain customers, the company to that extent reduces its earning power and therefore undermines the basis for a future general reduction of rates beneficial to all consumers; and in adopting the rule that no discrimination is permissible the court puts L.R.A.1915D.

itself in accord with the general rule as stated in the earlier note, that a corporation or municipality authorized to supply water or light to inhabitants of a municipality may not discriminate as to the rates charged; at least, among consumers of the same class.

In Montgomery v. Greene, 180 Ala. 322, 60 So. 900, the court recognized the general rule as above stated and applied it in a case where a city charged a higher rate for water to persons residing outside the city proper, but within the police limits of the city, than was charged to the inhabitants of the city itself, holding that such higher charge was an unlawful discrimination, and distinguishing the Ferguson Case on the ground that in that case there was simply a rate extended to a few persons more favorable than the general rate, which was maximum fixed by the contract, whereas in the case at bar a greater rate was charged to a few than was charged to the public generally.

And in the later case of Montgomery v. Greene, — Ala. —, 65 So. 783, arising out of the same controversy, the court held that a municipality undertaking to supply water to its inhabitants stands in no different relation as to the right to discriminate as to rates than does a private corporation.

In Pinney & B. Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp. 168 Cal. 12, L.R.A.1915C, 282, 141 Pac. 620, involving the right of a municipality to regulate the rate charged by a public service corporation as affected by contracts between the corporation and customers already in force, the court, in response to the contention that the only reasonable use of the police power in the matter of rate fixing is to establish the maximum charge which the public utility may make in leaving it open to the utility Ball, 65 Iowa, 543, 22 N. W. 666; Lienkauf v. Morris, 66 Ala. 416; Wilkinson v. Searcy, 76 Ala. 176; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Wilson, 2 Ala. App. 581, 56 So. 760; Remington v. Kirby, 120 N. C. 320, 26 S. E. 917; Walker v. Fuller, 29 Ark. 448; Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. 69 S. C. 434, 67 L.R.A. 111, 104 Am. St. Rep. 819, 48 S. E. 460; Gerkins v. Kentucky Salt Co. 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2415, 67 S. W. 821, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 189; Pratt v. Pond, 42 Conn. 318; Beveridge v. Rawson, 51 Ill. 504; Garrett v. Sewell, 108 Ala. 521, 18 So. 737; Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318.

Messrs. A. G. Smith and E. D. Smith for appellee.

De Graffenried, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the second appeal in this case. On the first appeal this court upheld, as valid, the contract which is the basis of to fix by agreement a less charge for an individual consumer, said: "The untenableness of this position, however, must become apparent when a moment's consideration is given to the fact that one of the primary and most important objects to be attained by rate regulation is the prevention of discrimination. It must be quite clear that to hold that the rate-fixing power goes no farther than to name an amount beyond which a charge may not be made, leaves the utmost room for abuse by way of favoritism and discrimination within that limit. It is, in practical effect, a denial of the existence of the rate-fixing power itself."

In Economic Gas Co. v. Los Angeles, 168 Cal. 448, 143 Pac. 717, it is held that an ordinance which provides that it shall be unlawful to charge any person any rate greater or less than that demanded of another for the same service, and which prohibits the collection by rebate, drawback, or other device of compensation for gas greater or less than or different from the rate fixed by the ordinance, prohibited a gas company from granting a discount to consumers who paid their bills before a certain date. (As to right of public service corporation to exact a penalty or added amount for delay in payment, see notes to State ex rel. MacMahon v. Independent Teleph. Co. 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 329, and Ford v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 63.)

An ordinance of a city engaged in the business of providing electric light to its citizens, which provides for the payment of a penalty of 50 cents in addition to any bills which may be in arrear as a condition of having electric service reinstated when it has been discontinued because of failure to pay the charges, where no charge is made for turning on and off the current to customers who are not in arrears, is discriminative and unlawful. State ex rel. She- L.R.A.1915D.

this suit. Brown v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 169 Ala. 230, 52 So. 915.

One of the principal questions presented on this appeal is whether this court, on the first appeal, was correct in upholding the contract as valid. For this reason, as well as on account of the importance of this case, the record has been carefully examined in consultation by the full bench, and this opinion is written for the purpose of expressing the views of those members of the court who appear as concurring in the opinion.

(1) In the case of Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104 Ala. 315, 16 So. 123, this court said: "The only cases in which water furnished to the 'inhabitants' is not to be charged for by measurement are specified in the first part of § 12, supra, and include only 'dwellings,' and then for 'water-closets' and 'bath tubs' for private families. For these the contract fixes a definite amount for water furnished with-walter v. Jones, 141 Mo. App. 299, 125 S. W. 1169.

A contract between a municipality and an electric company by which the electric company agreed to furnish electricity for lighting purposes to all of the public buildings of the municipality in exchange for the privilege of maintaining its lines on the city streets, although lawful when made, became unlawful upon the passage of a statute which prohibited the making or giving, directly or indirectly, any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any corporation or to any locality. Public Service Electric Co. v. Public Utility Comrs. — N. J. L. —, P. U. R. 1915C, 229, 93 Atl. 707.

Legislative authority given to a municipality engaged in furnishing water to its inhabitants "to assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount, in such manner as they may deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water," must be taken as meaning the power to fix general rates which shall be assessed equally upon all water takers of a given kind, and does not give the board having control of such matter power to tie the hands of a city for a period of years by special contracts entered into with individual customers. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Elyria, 22 Ohio C. C. 449.

In Kilbourn City v. Southern Wisconsin Power Co. 149 Wis. 168, 135 N. W. 499, an arrangement between the city and a power company by which, ostensibly, the power company paid for certain privileges in the city and the city paid for electrical current furnished to it by the power company, but in reality the arrangement was a subterfuge to enable the city to receive its electrical current free of charge, in evasion of the public utility law which made it unlawful for a public utility to de-out regard to measurement. We would not be understood as holding that the designated classes could abuse the privileges by unnecessary extravagance or waste of water; but for the use of water in reasonable quantities, sufficient without inconvenient economy for the purposes mentioned, the rates are fixed."

The above opinion was rendered by a court which is regarded by the profession as one of exceptional ability, and since the rendition of that opinion this court has not—except in the opinion rendered on the first appeal in this case—upheld as legal any contract covering rates for water furnished by the water company to residences in the city of Birmingham which did not conform to the ordinance contract made by the water company with the city of Birmingham as construed in the above case. The flat rate provided in said ordinance contract for residences is the maximum rate which can be charged by the water company for water furnished to residences, and while undoubtedly that rate may be lawfully reduced, no reduction can be upheld which is not operative alike upon all who occupy the same class, and which is discriminatory in its character. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, — Ala. —, 42 So. 10; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Truss, 135 Ala. 580, 33 So. 657; Mobile v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 130 Ala. 384, 30 So. 445.

In the above case of Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, supra, this court, in holding that the city court of Birmingham, sitting in equity, erred in sustaining the demurrer to paragraph J of the bill of complaint in that case, in reality declared that contracts containing stipulations similar to those contained in the contract now under consideration were illegal. On the former appeal in this case this court, in the effort to sustain the contract now under consideration, said: "The second propmand, collect, or receive any rate, toll, or charge not specified in the schedule of rates required to be filed, was held to be invalid, the court saying that the village was one of the patrons of the defendant, and that it was entitled to receive the same consideration in the matter of rates and charges that any other person was entitled to receive; no less, no more.

A customer of a water company which supplies water to the public is entitled to enjoin it from cutting off his supply because of his refusal to pay water rates which were unreasonable, because discriminatory as compared with rates charged to others similarly situated. Ball v. Texarkana Water Corp. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 1068.

But a public service corporation may lawfully classify its patrons and charge different rates for each character of service, provided the classification is not unjust and the rate does not give an undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or make an unfair discrimination among its patrons and consumers, under the same or substantially similar circumstances and conditions. Elk Hotel Co. v. United Fuel Gas Co. — W. Va. —, L.R.A.—, 83 S. E. 922.

So a lower rate for natural gas, given to hotels which installed boilers, than that given to other hotels where boilers were not installed, but open grates and stoves used, the agreement with the former class of hotels being that the special service for boilers might be cut off at any time that the gas was needed to supply the demand for domestic use and use in hotels having only the stove and grate service, was not unlawfully discriminatory. Ibid.

And the fact that a water company charges a state institution located outside of the municipality a higher rate than it charges to consumers in the municipality does not necessarily show unlawful discrimination. L.R.A.1915D.

People v. Albion Waterworks Co. 140 App. Div. 646, 125 N. Y. Supp. 589.

Likewise in Steinman v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 43 Pa. Super. Ct. 77, a division of the customers of an electric company into two classes, consisting, first, of those whose business required the consumption of not less than a fixed amount of electric current annually, and who would agree to bind themselves by a contract extending over a period of years to purchase their entire supply of current from the company, and the second to embrace all those whose consumption of electric current was smaller than the amount so fixed, and who remained at liberty to buy or not buy from the defendant, as inclination or business advantage might direct, giving to the former class a lower rate per unit, was held not to be an unlawful discrimination.

The fact that a water company has granted a lower rate than that which it was legally entitled to charge by its charter to a certain customer is not a defense to a suit for water furnished to another company. Paris Mountain Water Co. v. Camperdown Mills, 98 S. C. 304, 82 S. E. 417.

In State ex rel. Raymond Light & Water Co. v. Public Service Commission, — Wash. —, 145 Pac. 215, a contract between certain mills which had conveyed a water plant to a water company, part of the consideration being that the water company agreed to furnish water to the mills free of charge for forty-nine years, was held not to be void, but one which the public service commission could order terminated by the water company in case such contract interfered with the proper service of the company to the public generally, such contract to be terminated by an agreement between the parties or by proper proceedings in which damages would be awarded to the mill companies.

R. L. S.

osition is that a condition could arise under the provisions of said contract where a greater charge could be made by defendant than that provided by the maximum rate; that is, that the rate provided for in the contract for water in excess of 3,333 gallons per month is such that the excess could be large enough to make the rate greater than the maximum rate fixed by the franchise contract. We think it sufficient answer to this argument to say that the parties contracted with full knowledge of what the franchise contract provided, as well as the law, and what limitations the same imposed, and that a proper construction of the contract between appellant and appellee would be that there was implied the following: 'Provided, that the charge for water shall in no case be greater than the maximum provided by said franchise contract, and, provided further, that it shall not be greater than what is a reasonable charge.'

The contract which is made the basis of this suit contains plain provisions to pay for all water in excess of 3,333 gallons per month "by the regular schedule of meter rates, which are made a part of this application and agreement." In other words, the contract now under consideration contains, as already stated, provisions substantially identical with those which were described in paragraph J of the bill of complaint considered in Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, supra, and which were in that case, in effect, condemned as illegal. We find nothing in this record indicating that since the rendition of the opinion in Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra, the water company has surrendered the right to exact the flat rates which are provided in the ordinance contract for residences in the city of Birmingham, or that any other rate has been legally provided for such residences, and, this being true, these rates are, in so far as the evidence in this record discloses, the only rates which the water company has the right to offer to, or exact of, its customers in the city of Birmingham. Ibid.; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, supra; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Truss, 135 Ala. 530, 33 So. 657; Bessemer v. Bessemer City Waterworks, 152 Ala. 391, 44 So. 663; Crosby v. Montgomery, 108 Ala. 498, 18 So. 723; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. p. 2236, § 1326. In fact, the contract now under consideration is a contract which this court in Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra, expressly declared the waterworks company had no authority, under its ordinance contract, to make with its customers.

(2) In the opinion on the first appeal L.R.A.1915D.

this court said that the "Birmingham Waterworks Company had a right to contract with an individual to furnish water at a less rate than the maximum rate fixed by said franchise contract, and less than that charged other individuals for similar service so long as the 'discrimination is enjoyed by those having the favored rate at the expense of the company, and does not impinge upon any rights of other consumers.'"

This statement was based upon some expressions which are to be found in State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 164 Ala. 586, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 137 Am. St. Rep. 69, 51 So. 354, 20 Ann. Cas. 951. In that case there was a petition for a writ of mandamus, wherein it was claimed that the company had entered into contracts with some consumers similarly situated with the relator, by which it had undertaken to furnish to them water at a rate less than the maximum charges allowed by the ordinance contract. The relator did not claim that he was charged more than the maximum rate, nor that he was charged more than a reasonable price for the water furnished him, but he contended that he was entitled to receive water at the most favorable rate furnished to any others similarly situated. Upon these allegations of the petition for the writ of mandamus this court held that the relator was not entitled to the writ.

In the opinion in that case this court, after declaring that "the business of a company furnishing water to the public is naturally monopolistic, and, being given the power of eminent domain to serve the needs of the public more effectually, must serve all consumers with equal facilities without discrimination," indicated that a contract made by the Birmingham Waterworks Company with a favored customer at a rate less than the rate fixed for residences, etc., by the ordinance contract as construed in Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Company, supra, and at rate less than that charged its other customers, might, under certain circumstances, be upheld.

This case of State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra, is reported in 164 Ala. 586, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 137 Am. St. Rep. 69, 51 So. 354, 20 Ann. Cas. 951, and in a note to that case (27 L.R.A.(N.S.) page 674) we find the following: "It may be stated as a general proposition that a corporation or municipality authorized to supply water or light to the inhabitants of a municipality may not discriminate as to the rates charged, at least among those of the same class."

Cited, as sustaining the above proposition, we find in this note the following cases: Danville v. Danville Water Co. 180 Ill. 235, 54 N. E. 224; State ex rel. Latschaw v. Water & Light Comrs. 105 Minn. 472, 127 Am. St. Rep. 581, 117 N. W. 827; Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 122 N. C. 206, 41 L.R.A. 240, 30 S. E. 319; Armour Packing Co. v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 115 App. Div. 51, 100 N. Y. Supp. 605; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Bowling Green, 57 Ohio St. 336, 41 L.R.A. 422, 40 N. E. 121; Mobile v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 130 Ala. 379, 30 So. 445; Snell v. Clinton Electric Light, Heat & P. Co. 196 Ill. 626, 58 L.R.A. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 341, 63 N. E. 1082.

When the city of Birmingham made its contract with the waterworks company it intended—and the contract so provides—that there should not be any discrimination made by the waterworks company in the matter of supplying water to the inhabitants of the city of the same class. The maximum rates provided for residences are specific and certain. Stability and equality of rates on the part of a public service corporation are more important than reduced rates. It was the fact that without a contract fixing the rates for water there would probably be instability and inequality of rates, and out of this instability and inequality, unjust discrimination, and other unlawful practices with reference to such rates, the city of Birmingham exacted the contract with appellant, and by that contract fixed a definite, uniform, maximum rate for residences in said city. The law must see that all citizens of the same class receive the same treatment at the hands of public service corporations, and the spirit which controlled the city of Birmingham in exacting this contract from the waterworks company was the same spirit which actuated the Congress of the United States in its legislation with reference to tariffs for freight transported by carriers engaged in interstate commerce. On that subject we quote the following from Poor v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 12 Inters. Com. Rep. 418: "Stability and equality of rates are more important to commercial interests than reduced rates. It was instability and inequality that were the special evils to be remedied; it was the possibility that one shipper, in one way or another, whether by mistake or otherwise, could, and actually did, get a lower rate than another shipper, that led to more stringent legislation."

The case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McMullen, 5 Ala. App. 662, 59 So. 683, in which the opinion of the court of appeals was prepared by the writer, deals with the many questions which are now under consideration, and cites some of the authorities which are pertinent to the subject now in hand. That the members of the public are entitled under the law to receive uniformity of treatment at the hands of public service corporations, and that contracts not partaking of a private nature, between public service corporations and some members of the public, whereby special privileges are obtained which are not commendable as matter of right by all other members of the public of the same class, will not be upheld, have become truisms of the law; and the trend of modern legislation, state and Federal, in so far as public service corporations are concerned, has been largely to that important end. That one member of the public of a particular class shall not be accorded the same identical treatment that is accorded to another member of the public of the same class, by a public service corporation, is not only not in harmony with an enlightened sense of right and fair play, but is opposed to the true reasons upon which such corporations are given their franchises and permitted to exist. Indeed, whenever inequality in such treatment is attempted by a public service corporation, dissatisfaction is the necessary result, and this dissatisfaction ultimately finds expression in unpleasant and expensive litigation.

The city of Birmingham, when it made the contract with the waterworks company which was construed by this court in Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104 Ala. 315, 16 So. 123, was acting for all of the inhabitants of the municipality. While in State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra, this court stated that, under certain conditions, the Birmingham Waterworks Company might vary the terms of the contract which it made with the city for the benefit of some favored customer, the authorities cited in the note to that case, as it appears in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, will show with what sparingness the courts of last resort are willing to uphold contracts made with public service corporations which confer special favors upon individuals with whom they deal as servants of the public.

The pronouncement of the courts in the cases above cited, and the undisputed facts in the instant case, all show the wisdom of the courts in rigidly holding public service corporations, in their dealings with the public, to uniformity in rates. In the instant case, a contract by meter rates was entered into. The customer complied with the letter of her contract and tendered to the water company the amount due under the terms of her contract. This amount the company refused to accept, demanding the amount which, under the flat rate, was due to it. The customer, believing herself entitled to the benefits of the meter contract which she had made with the company, refused to comply with the demands of the company, and thereupon the company cut its water from her residence. This act on the part of the company has caused the plaintiff great annoyance, inconvenience, suffering and in addition to this present resulting litigation has caused expense and annoyance to all of the parties concerned. This record discloses that the plaintiff is not the only party in Birmingham with whom the water company has made a contract similar to that of the plaintiff, and all of this conflict between the parties, and all of the annoyance, inconvenience, and suffering which were occasioned the plaintiff by being denied the defendant's water have been due to the lack of observance by the defendant and some of its customers of the above salutary rules which have been so plainly announced by this court in a large number of its decisions.

If contracts of this character are to be upheld and made the basis of recovery in an action at law, then uniformity of water rates in the municipality of Birmingham disappears, and the water company may discriminate among its customers as it pleases. This the law will not permit it to do. Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. supra; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, — Ala. —, 42 So. 10; Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 122 N. C. 206, 41 L.R.A. 240, 30 S. E. 319.

(3) That there is a divergence of views among the courts of last resort on the question as to whether, at common law, a public service corporation was under the necessity of furnishing to its customers of the same class the same identical rates, there can be no doubt. Lough v. Outerbridge, 143 N. Y. 271, 25 L.R.A. 674, 42 Am. St. Rep. 712, 38 N. E. 292; Louisville & E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson, 132 Ind. 517, 18 L.R.A. 105, 32 N. E. 311; Cowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 94 Cal. 470, 18 L.R.A. 221, 28 Am. St. Rep. 142, 29 Pac. 873; Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. supra. An examination of those cases as above reported, including the notes and the cases cited in the briefs of counsel, will disclose the conflict to which we refer.

The question, however, was set at rest, in so far as this state and the franchisee contract of the Birmingham Waterworks Company are concerned, by this court, in Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, — Ala. —, 42 So. 10. In that case this court said: "An examination of the contract clearly shows that it was the intention of the parties to secure to the citizens of Birmingham water at reasonable and uniform rates, without discrimination in favor of or against any citizen or number of citizens. This was one of the objects sought to be accomplished by the parties. Not only was this a moral duty, but it was a duty imperatively demanded of them by the law. A water company acts not as a private, but a quasi public, corporation. It enjoys and must exercise its opportunities for gain, subject to its obligation to the public that it will supply water without unjust discrimination and at uniform rates to all those along the lines of its mains, who apply and tender a reasonable compensation.' 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 426. Referring to the principle above announced, in Mobile v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 130 Ala. 384, 30 So. 447, it is said: 'The principle announced is reasonable and necessary. Without it the business interests and domestic comfort of the community, so far as dependent on supplies such companies furnish, would be at their mercy and make them masters, in this regard, of the city they were established to serve. As said by the supreme court of North Carolina: "A few wealthy men might combine, and, by threatening to establish competition, procure very low rates, which the company might recoup by raising the price to others not financially able to resist—the very class which most needs protection of the law. The law will not and cannot tolerate discrimination in the charges of these quasi public corporations. There must be equality of rights to all and special privileges to none; and, if this is violated or unreasonable rates are charged, the humblest citizen has the right to invoke the protection of the laws equally with any other." Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 122 N. C. 206, 41 L.R.A. 240, 30 S. E. 319. It will thus be seen that the complainant and respondent were without power to make a contract providing for unreasonable rates or rates not uniform to consumers; nor could they make a contract that would permit discrimination in favor of certain citizens and against others."

See further on the above subject, Montgomery v. Greene, 180 Ala. 322, 60 So. 900, in which the above doctrine is reaffirmed.

(4) The opinion on the first appeal in this case was prepared for this court by a careful and painstaking judge, and was, after consultation, adopted as the law of this case. It may be that it failed to measure up to the rigid exactions of the law because that sense of fair play which dictated the rules governing the subject of equality of rates, which we have above discussed, hesitated to concede to one engaged in the public service the right to make its own violation of its ordinance contract with the city of Birmingham a justification for denying to the plaintiff the right of supplying her residence with water under the terms of an agreement which it had made with her. The demands of the rules of law which we have above extracted from our own cases, appear to be inexorable, and those rules appear to rest upon foundations which are not only unassailable, but which were adopted for the public good. In our opinion the plaintiff's contract with the defendant was void for the reasons which we have above stated, and we do not think that it can be upheld in favor of the plaintiff under the doctrines announced in 1 Page on Contracts, §§ 330-332, Packard v. Byrd, 73 S. C. 1, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 547, 51 S. E. 678, 9 Cyc. 550, and Trentman v. Wahrenburg, 30 Ind. App. 304, 65 N. E. 1057. In this case the parties made a contract which the policy of the law prohibited either party to the contract from making, and it is familiar doctrine that an agreement void as against public policy cannot be rendered valid by invoking the doctrine of estoppel.

(5) In this case there was, it is true, a dispute as to what amount the plaintiff should pay the defendant for water for her residence. This dispute grew out of the fact that the plaintiff and the defendant had made with each other a contract which was void because the law itself condemned the contract which they made. The reasoning, therefore of the supreme court of Maine in Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 293, 29 L.R.A. 376, 32 Atl. 908, and of the supreme court of Mississippi in Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349, has no applicability to the facts in this case.

(6) It follows, therefore, that the opinion of this court on the former appeal (Brown v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 169 Ala. 230, 52 So. 915), in so far as it conflicts with the views expressed in this opinion, is expressly overruled. It also follows that in our opinion the trial judge committed reversible error in giving to the jury at the request of the plaintiff, affirmative instructions in her behalf. In our opinion, under the evidence in this case as it is disclosed in the bill of exceptions, the defendant was entitled to affirmative instructions in its behalf.

Reversed and remanded.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan, Somerville, and Gardner, JJ., concur.

Mayfield, J., not sitting.

Sayre, J., dissents.
L.R.A.1915D.

Anderson, Ch. J., concurring:

While fully concurring in the foregoing opinion, I do not wish to be understood as approving the contract in question even if the terms and rate therein provided were uniform and applied to all of the dwellings of the city. The original ordinance contract between the waterworks and the city has been several times before this court and it was then held that said contract did not authorize a meter rate as to dwellings, and that they had to be supplied with water under a flat rate. Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104 Ala. 315, 16 So. 123; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, — Ala. —, 42 So. 10. It may be that the flat rate there provided was the maximum rate, and that a lower flat rate, if uniform, would be permissible, but to my mind, a contract on a meter rate is questionable under any condition. On the other hand, if it be conceded that the company could make an uniform meter rate which would be less than the maximum flat rate as fixed by the ordinance contract, it would have to affirmatively appear from the last contract that the rate so fixed could not exceed the maximum flat rate prescribed by the ordinance contract, and which fact does not appear in the present contract, or the provision guarding against this point was improperly read into same upon the former appeal of this case. 169 Ala. 230, 52 So. 915. It may be that the sale of water by the meter rate is more equitable to all parties concerned than by the flat rate, but this court must deal with contracts as they are, and not as they might or should be.

Sayre, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in a reversal on the ground taken in the prevailing opinion. I have not examined the record to see whether there can be other ground of reversal; for, as the case has been decided, that would be useless. I do not take issue with all the broad generalizations of the opinion. It is to be conceded, for example, that, in the absence of a statute controlling the subject, a public service corporation has no right to make unreasonable charges for its services, and that, if such corporation exacts a compensation in excess of that which is reasonable, the customer may recover the excess on an indebitatus count. Here the opinion proceeds on the notion, not that plaintiff was required to pay too much, but that she may have been let off with too little. Three things are to be noted: The ordinance contract does not fix any rate absolutely, but only a maximum beyond which defendant could not go; there is no statute or ordinance requiring uniformity, though doubtless it would be better for convenience in administering the law in such cases that there should be; the defendant is a private corporation doing business primarily, it is safe to assume, for the benefit of its stockholders. A municipal corporation in many respects stands on the same footing as a private corporation engaged in the same line of business. It occurs to me, however, that there is this difference, which may be worthy of consideration: That the public are quasi stockholders in any municipal business of a private character, and its members as such are entitled, as matter of law and right, to uniformity of treatment. Being a private corporation, defendant solicited plaintiff to enter into a contract with it. She did so. Defendant now contends, or the opinion so holds, that, the contract being void as against a general public policy requiring uniformity, plaintiff acquired under it no rights which defendant is bound to respect. I do not say she was entitled to the contract in the beginning, though, for aught appearing, she may have been. That she could not have required defendant to enter into the contract, assuming that she was tendered a contract unduly favorable to her, is all that a number of the cases cited in the prevailing opinion go to prove. I do say that neither the legal nor the moral aspects of the defendant's position with reference to the contract in question carries any appeal to my mind.

In the absence of statute or equivalent competent municipal ordinance to the contrary, mere inequality in the charges made by a public service corporation does not of itself amount to an unjust discrimination. "At the foundation of the whole matter lies the common-law rule, just and well settled, that in each particular case there should be charged a reasonable compensation, and no more." 2 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 521.

This was the effect of the language used in State ex rel. Ferguson v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 164 Ala. 586, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 674, 137 Am. St. Rep. 69, 51 So. 354, 20 Ann. Cas. 951, though it may have been aside from the precise question there involved. The idea I find to be more clearly expressed in Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 156, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 549, as follows: "It is a rule of the common law that parties carrying on business which is public in its nature, or which is impressed with a public interest, cannot select their patrons arbitrarily, but must serve all who apply on equal terms, and at reasonable rates, but this is as far as the rules of the common law seem to have gone. They do not require absolute uniformity of rates, nor forbid discrimination by performing the service for one at rates lower than those exacted of others. The most familiar illustration of pursuits of this character is that of a common carrier, and the well-recognized rule is, that while the carrier cannot select his patrons arbitrarily, and must furnish equal facilities to all and on equal terms, he is not forbidden to take one customer's goods at an unreasonably low rate, or to confer on that customer other practical advantages in the transportation to which competitors and the general public are not admitted. Schouler, Bailm. & Carr. § 380; Hutchinson, Carr. § 447. The same rule doubtless, where no statutory restriction has intervened, is equally applicable to all other kinds of business, which have become affected with a public interest, such as that ordinarily carried on by telegraph or gas companies, the construction and maintenance of public wharves, or maintenance and operation of waterworks in cities."

This proposition is discussed and approved in Hutchinson on Carriers, ubi supra, and Schouler on Bailments and Carriers, 2d ed. § 380, modern treatises both, where many cases, modern and ancient, American and English, are cited.

"This court can know nothing of public policy except from the Constitution and the laws, and the course of administration and decision." License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462, 469, 18 L. ed. 497, 500. "When the will of the people has become crystallized into legislative enactment, and a given subject has been surrounded by regulations, limitations, and restrictions, the courts are bound to consider them as indicating a definite policy, and to yield obedience thereto." Baum v. Baum, 109 Wis. 47, 53, 53 L.R.A. 650, 83 Am. St. Rep. 854, 85 N. W. 122. But here as I have already noted, nothing is fixed by the ordinance contract except the maximum charge, and, I take it, this court would hardly hold absolutely void contracts establishing a uniform charge more favorable to the people of Birmingham. "The power to refuse to enforce a contract as against public policy is one of limits not clearly defined and the courts prefer, in cases not settled by recognized precedents, to use such power only in clear cases. The defense of public policy is so often interposed as a last resort that the courts have become somewhat suspicious of it. . . . There may be said to be a strong tendency at modern law to restrict the operation of public policy as avoiding contracts to cases included under recognized legal principles, or under statutes." The foregoing sentences have been collated from 1 Page on Contracts, § 326, a modern and respectable authority, where many modern adjudicated cases are cited. Here plaintiff did no wrong, she could not be required to know what a reasonable rate would be, and defendant was giving the same rate to others. Nor, for that matter, does it appear that defendant, in tendering the contract, did any wrong or hurt to the public. The wrong, if any, may have been that all the citizens of Birmingham were not offered the same rate. So far as anybody knows, the reduced rate, rather than the higher rate which the court has imposed on plaintiff, was the reasonable rate, and should be made the uniform rate. So, in my judgment, the contract at the bottom of plaintiff's asserted right was not void, and defendant's appeal to public policy ought not to be entertained in a court of justice.

Response to Application for Rehearing.

De Graffenried, J.:

On this application for a rehearing, it is argued that this court, in effect, has held that the water company may not voluntarily establish a uniform rate less than the maximum rate fixed by the ordinance contract referred to in the above opinion. It is also argued that this court has in said opinion, held, in effect, that said ordinance contract cannot be altered by legislative action taken either directly by the state, or by the state acting through the city.

In the above opinion we have confined ourselves to the questions presented by the record, and we have undertaken to decide no other question. The above points which it is claimed on this rehearing have been decided, in effect, by the above opinion, have not been before us for review, and they have not, of course, been decided by us. Those points, not being raised by this record, cannot in this case be passed upon by this court.

(2) In so far as the question which, in this case, we have determined, is concerned, we think that the true rule at common law on the subject was correctly stated by the supreme court of New Jersey in the following language: "The business of the common carrier is for the public, and it is his duty to serve the public indifferently. He is entitled to a reasonable compensation, but on payment of that he is bound to carry for whoever will employ him, to the extent of his ability. A private carrier can make what contract he pleases. The public have no interest in that, but a service for the public necessarily implies equal treatment in its performance, when the right to the service is common. Because L.R.A.1915D.

the institution, so to speak, is public, every member of the community stands on an equality as to the right to its benefit, and, therefore, the carrier cannot discriminate between individuals for whom he will render the service. In the very nature, then, of his duty and of the public right, his conduct should be equal and just to all. So, also, there is involved in the reasonableness, of his compensation the same principle. A want of uniformity in price for the same kind of service under like circumstances is most unreasonable and unjust, when the right to demand it is common. It would be strange if, when the object of the employment is the public benefit, and the law allows no discrimination as to individual customers, but requires all to be accommodated alike as individuals, and for a reasonable rate, that by the indirect means of unequal prices some could lawfully get the advantage of the accommodation and others not." Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 531, 18 Am. Rep. 754.

To the same effect is Fitzgerald v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 63 Vt. 169, 13 L.R.A. 70, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 633, 22 Atl. 76. Indeed, we think that the great weight of modern authority sustains the conclusions which have been expressed by this court in the above opinion.

The application for a rehearing is overruled.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan, Somerville, and Gardner, JJ., concur.

Sayre, J., dissents.

Mayfield, J., not sitting.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

ELSIE LEDY, Appt.,

v.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF SECURITY, Respt.

(129 Minn. 137, 151 N. W. 905.)

Insurance — mutual benefit — suicide — change of by-laws.

1. Where the insurance contract between

Headnotes by TAYLOR, C.

Note. — Insurance: subsequent by-law excluding or reducing liability in case of suicide.

This note supplements the note to Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. v. Rehan, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 308, on the same subject. And see notes there referred to on allied questions. In harmony with the Illinois decisions a fraternal beneficiary association and its members provided that if the insured committed suicide, sane or insane, within two years, the association should be liable for only one fifth the amount of the benefit certificate, and that the insured should be bound by the laws of the order then in force or thereafter enacted, a subsequent amendment making the suicide provision effective for a period of five years is binding upon a member who commits suicide while sane, and upon those claiming under his benefit certificate.

Evidence — sanity.

2. Sanity is presumed, and the taking of one's own life does not, in itself, establish insanity.

(March 19, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County denying her motion for new trial of an action brought to recover the amount of a benefit certificate which had resulted in a judgment in her favor for an amount less than demanded. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Arthur Christofferson, Joseph A. A. Burnquist, and Alvin B. Christofferson, for appellant:

Before the enactment of § 8, chapter 345, of the Laws of 1907, it was the settled law of this state that all after-enacted by-laws, in order to be binding on the insured and his beneficiaries, must be reasonable.

Thibert v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 78 Minn. set out in that note, Pold v. North American Union, 261 Ill. 433, 104 N. E. 4, affirming 180 Ill. App. 448, where the insured expressly undertook by his certificate to be bound by the laws, rules, and regulations thereafter enacted, and, at the time the certificate was issued, it was provided by a by-law that one half the face value of the certificate should be paid in case of the member's suicide while sane or insane, it was held that a subsequently enacted amendment providing for the payment of only a sum equal to the actual amount paid in by the insured, in case of suicide, was valid.

And in Streeper v. Mutual Protective League, 186 Ill. App. 535, where a certificate was issued subject to all laws, rules, and regulations that might thereafter be enacted, a by-law subsequently enacted which eliminated the exceptions as to suicide committed in delirium resulting from illness, or while the member is under treatment for insanity, or after he has been judicially declared insane, from a previous by-law that insurer should not be liable in case of suicide by a member, whether sane or insane, except for money contributed to the benefit fund by him, was held valid.

And in another Illinois case, Seymour v. L.R.A. 1915D.

448, 47 L.R.A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412, 81 N. W. 220; Tebo v. Supreme Council, R. A. 89 Minn. 3, 93 N. W. 513; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622.

The statute is not an act which was in any manner intended to affect or overrule the settled law of the state so far as after-enacted by-laws are concerned, and § 8 of said chapter merely enacted into statute what was the settled common law of this state.

Mr. William G. White, for respondent:

If a reason be sought for the intent of the legislature in enacting the statute, it is clear that it was enacted with the intent to supersede the requirement of law as declared by this court to the effect that after-enacted amendments must be "reasonable."

Thibert v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 78 Minn. 448, 47 L.R.A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412, 81 N. W. 220; Tebo v. Supreme Council, R. A. 89 Minn. 3, 93 N. W. 513; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622; Rosenstein v. Court of Honor, 122 Minn. 310, 142 N. W. 331; Ruder v. National Council, K. L. S. 124 Minn. 431, 145 N. W. 118.

Mr. H. E. Hall also for respondent.

Taylor, C., filed the following opinion:

On February 12, 1908, defendant, a fraternal beneficiary association, issued a benefit certificate to Bernard A. Ledy in which Mutual Protective League, 171 Ill. App. 114, where the certificate provided that it was issued upon the express condition that the insured should comply with the constitution, rules, and by-laws in force, or that might be in force thereafter, a subsequent resolution which repealed a clause that the certificate should be incontestable after it had been in force two years, and left in force a provision that only the amount paid as premiums should be paid in case of suicide, except in certain cases, was held valid, since the insured had agreed that the by-laws might be repealed or amended.

And the validity of such changes under the Illinois law was recognized in a Missouri court of appeals case, where the insurance contract was governed by the laws of Illinois, it being held that under the law of Illinois, where the insured agreed in his application to comply with future laws and regulations of the order, and the certificate issued provided that the benefit should be paid under the conditions of the by-law in force, or those thereafter adopted, a subsequently enacted by-law expressly made applicable to members admitted prior to its passage, which provided only for a return of the amount actually paid in, in case of plaintiff, his wife, was named as beneficiary. The contract provided that the insured should be bound by the laws of the order then in force, or thereafter enacted. On December 10, 1912, Ledy committed suicide. The laws of the order in force in 1908 provided that, if the assured committed suicide within two years after receiving his certificate, the association should be liable for only one fifth the amount of such certificate. By an amendment to such laws, which went into effect in September, 1910, the time during which the above provision should be in force was extended to a period of five years from the issuance of the certificate. Ledy died by suicide about two months before the five years expired. Plaintiff sued for the full amount of the certificate. The trial court held that she was entitled to recover one fifth thereof, and no more. She moved for a new trial and appealed from the order denying her motion.

The only controversy is whether she is entitled to recover the full amount of the certificate, or is limited to one fifth thereof by the above provision. In either event, certain deductions are to be made for the benefit of the reserve fund, but these amounts were agreed upon and are not in controversy. The statute in force when the contract was made provided that "any changes, additions or amendments to said charter or articles of association, constitution or laws duly made or enacted subsequent to the issuance of the benefit certificate shall bind the member and his beneficiaries and shall govern and control the contract in all respects the same as though such changes, additions or amendments had been made prior to and were in force at the time of the application for membership." § 3544, Gen. Stat. 1913.

It is contended that the amendment extending the period during which the suicide provision should remain in force is unreasonable and void as against contracts entered into before its adoption, unless the rule announced in Thibert v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 78 Minn. 448, 47 L.R.A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412, 81 N. W. 220; Tebo v. Supreme Council, R. A. 89 Minn. 3, 93 N. W. 518; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622; Rosenstein v. Court of Honor, 122 Minn. 310, 142 N. W. 331, and Ruder v. National Council, K. L. S. 124 Minn. 431, 145 N. W. 118, has been changed by the above statute; and that the present case turns upon the construction to be given to that statute. We cannot assent to this proposition.

Where a fraternal beneficiary association, in the contract for insurance entered into with its members, stipulates that they shall be subject to, and bound by, the subsequently enacted laws and regulations of the order, the rule is well-nigh universal that the association must exercise the power so reserved in a reasonable manner, and that a law of the order enacted under such power, which would make an unreasonable suicide, and which supplanted an earlier by-law which provided for the payment of only one half the benefit in case of suicide within five years, was valid. Kavanaugh v. Supreme Council, R. L. 158 Mo. App. 234, 136 S. W. 359.

Generally, as to conflict of laws as to insurance contracts, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 833; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968; and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 275.

But the court stated that such a by-law would be invalid under the Missouri decisions, which had declined to give effect to these general provisions sufficient to authorize the insurer to reduce, impair, or destroy the indemnity vouchsafed in the certificate. Kavanaugh v. Supreme Council, R. L. supra.

And in harmony with the Missouri court of appeals cases set out in the earlier note, although the insured undertook by his contract to be bound by all by-laws in force or that might thereafter be adopted, it was held in the following cases that a subsequently enacted by-law which attempted to abolish the time during which a restricted amount should be paid in case of suicide of the member was invalid, it being held that the insured's agreement did not contemplate that the right to benefits to accrue L.R.A.1915D.

might be impaired. Zimmermann v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 123 Mo. App. 591; Morton v. Supreme Council, R. L. 100 Mo. App. 76, 73 S. W. 259.

It has been held by the supreme court of Missouri in a recent case, however, that where, by the application and certificate, the member agrees to be bound by by-laws and regulations thereafter enacted, a subsequently enacted by-law reducing the amount to be paid in case of suicide is valid, since such an agreement contemplates that the contract might be changed so as to affect the amount of the insurance to be paid, especially in case of suicide. Claudy v. Royal League, 259 Mo. 92, 168 S. W. 593.

And in Washington in a case where it was provided in the application, certificate, and by-laws that the insured should be bound by by-laws which should thereafter be enacted, a by-law extending the contestable period in case of suicide from two years to five years was held valid, since under the agreement there was held to be no vested right to have the contract remain unchanged, and since the right to commit suicide was not a right which the law would recognize or enforce. Klein v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 79 Wash. 173, 140 Pac. 72.

J. T. W.

change in the terms of prior contracts, is void as against such contracts. While the courts differ little as to the general rule, they differ much as to what amendments are unreasonable within the meaning of the rule. They agree quite generally, however, that an amendment which relieves the association, in whole or in part, from liability in case the assured intentionally ends his own life, is not forbidden by the rule, and is valid. Supreme Commandery, K. G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Fraternal Union v. Zeigler, 145 Ala. 289, 39 So. 751; Scow v. Supreme Council, R. L. 223 Ill. 32, 79 N. E. 42; Knights of Maccabees v. Nelson, 77 Kan. 629, 95 Pac. 1052; Daughtry v. Knights of Pythias, 48 La. Ann. 1203, 55 Am. St. Rep. 310, 20 So. 712; Dornes v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 75 Miss. 466, 23 So. 191; Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 75 Neb. 188, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786, 106 N. W. 224, 110 N. W. 1110; Tisch v. Protected Home Circle, 72 Ohio St. 233, 74 N. E. 188; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. La Malta, 95 Tenn. 157, 30 L.R.A. 838, 31 S. W. 493; Clement v. Clement, 113 Tenn. 40, 81 S. W. 1249; Hughes v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 292, 73 N. W. 1015. In the above cases it appeared that the insured committed suicide, but it did not appear that he was insane. While the various amendments considered in those cases purported to bar a recovery whether the insured was sane or insane at the time of the suicide, and the courts held them valid in language which apparently upheld all the provisions therein, the question actually decided was that they were valid as against those claiming under a member who committed suicide while sane. Such amendments have also been held valid where the insured committed suicide while insane. Supreme Tent, K. M. v. Hammers, 81 Ill. App. 560; Court of Honor v. Hutchens, — Ind. App. —, 79 N. E. 409; Chambers v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 200 Pa. 244, 86 Am. St. Rep. 718, 49 Atl. 784; Eversberg v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 33 Tex. Civ. App. 549, 77 S. W. 246. Other courts have held such amendments valid where the insured was sane at the time of the suicide, but invalid where he was insane and not responsible for his act. In Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258, the New York court held that an amendment extending the suicide provision from one year to five years was unreasonable and void as to a member who committed suicide while insane. In the later case of Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 393, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83, the court approved the decision in the Weber Case, but said that in the Weber Case there L.R.A.1915D.

was a finding that the insured was insane at the time of the suicide, while there was no such finding in the case then under consideration, and held that the insured was presumed to have been sane, and that the amendment was valid in such cases and barred a recovery. In Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. v. Rehan, 119 Md. 92, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, 85 Atl. 1035, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 58, the court, after discussing the authorities, says: "We therefore hold upon what we regard as the safer, sounder, and more reasonable rule upon this question, that the after-enacted by-law before us is not binding upon the plaintiff, if her husband took his own life while insane, but that it is binding upon her, if he committed suicide while sane."

In Plunkett v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. 105 Va. 643, 55 S. E. 9, it did not appear affirmatively that the insured was insane. The court held that he must be deemed to have been sane, and that the by-law was therefore valid and binding, but say they do not determine whether it would be binding in case the member had been insane. In Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 110 N. W. 374, 10 Ann. Cas. 622, this court held that the by-law there under consideration was not valid or binding in a case where the member was insane, and under treatment for insanity, at the time he took his own life. Whether an amendment enacting a suicide provision is valid and binding in a case where the insured committed suicide while sane does not appear to have been considered or determined by this court. A few courts have held such amendments void (Lewine v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 122 Mo. App. 547, 99 S. W. 821; Sautter v. Supreme Conclave, I. O. H. 72 N. J. L. 325, 62 Atl. 529); but, as shown by the cases hereinbefore cited, the great majority of courts hold them valid. The reasons assigned are various. Attention is frequently called to the fact that, at common law, suicide was a crime which entailed forfeiture of property; that, while the successful perpetrator is beyond the reach of the law, he commits an act which is malum in se and which the law tries to prevent by all the means in its power; that he has no moral, legal, or other right to commit such an act; that the law cannot say that a provision which prevents him from fastening liability upon the association by his own criminal act voluntarily committed is unreasonable; and that such a provision not only invades no legal or vested right, but takes away a possible incentive to commit a heinous offense.

In the instant case there is no claim that the insured was insane, and he is presumed to have been sane. 2 Dunnell's Dig. § 4516. The fact that he committed suicide is not, in itself, sufficient to establish insanity. Wilkinson v. Service, 249 Ill. 146, 94 N. E. 50, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 41, and cases cited in note. We think there is a wide distinction between a case where death results from the irresponsible act of an insane person, and a case where it results from the intentional act of a person in his right mind; that the amendment in question cannot be declared unreasonable, either upon principle or authority, when applied to a case in which the insured committed suicide while sane, even if the statute quoted should be construed as merely a legislative enactment of the rule previously recognized by this court; and that plaintiff is bound by the provision as amended.

Order affirmed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

E. W. HARDIN et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

FRANK DALE et al.

(— Okla. —, 146 Pac. 717.)

Bills and notes — sale by corporation to director — bona fides.

1. H. and others made, executed, and delivered their promissory note in payment for school furniture to a manufacturing company as payee. Prior to its maturity, the consideration failed, and the company was notified of that fact. By vote of its board of directors, for value and before maturity, the company sold, and through its

Headnotes by TURNER, J.

Note. — Is officer or employee of corporation chargeable with its knowledge of infirmities in commercial paper purchased from it.

The present note is supplementary to the note on the same subject appended to McCarty v. Kepreta, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 65. HARDIN v. DALE, holding that a director in an industrial corporation who purchases from it for value a negotiable instrument not yet due cannot be a holder thereof in due course, so as to take the paper free from equities of the maker that could have been claimed against it had it remained the property of the corporation, seems to be the only decision in point since the earlier note.

In McCarty v. Kepreta, 24 N. D. 395, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 65, 139 N. W. 992, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 834, the court announced and applied the doctrine later adopted in HARDIN v. DALE, to the president of a bank, who was, of course, director and president conveyed by indorsement, said note to one of its directors. Held, in a suit thereon by him against the makers, that he was not a purchaser in good faith, and hence the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence in support of that plea.

Notice — by director of affairs of corporation.

2. A director of an industrial corporation is chargeable with knowledge of everything it is his duty to know concerning commercial paper belonging to the corporation which he undertakes, as a director, to sell.

(February 23, 1915.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Logan County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. F. McKeel and C. G. Hornor, for plaintiffs in error:

The provisions in the note sued on, and especially the one providing that the time may be extended without notice, destroy its negotiable character.

Rossville State Bank v. Heslet, 84 Kan. 315, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738, 113 Pac. 1052; City Nat. Bank v. Gunter Bros. 67 Kan. 227, 72 Pac. 842; Sykes v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 69 Kan. 134, 76 Pac. 393, 78 Kan. 688, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 665, 98 Pac. 206; Overton v. Tyler, 3 Pa. 346, 45 Am. Dec. 645; Woods v. North, 84 Pa. 407, 24 Am. Rep. 201; Mitchell v. St. Mary, 148 Ind. 111, 47 N. E. 224; Glidden v. Henry, 104 Ind. 278, 54 Am. Rep. 316, 1 N. E. 369; Rosenthal v. Rambo, 28 Ind. App. 265, 62 N. E. 637; Merchants' & M. Sav. Bank v. Frazee, 9 Ind. App. 161, 53 Am. St. Rep. 341, 36 N. E. 378; Oyler v.

stockholder as well. So, the decision in HARDIN v. DALE, based upon the doctrine, the conclusion apparently being reached independently of the McCarty Case, is some indication that the present trend is toward holding corporate officers to a strict accountability for neglect of duty.

Some of the early cases cited by the court in HARDIN v. DALE support the general proposition that an officer of a corporation will be deemed to have knowledge of facts or corporate acts which the performance of his official duty would necessarily disclose to him, but the applicability of that doctrine to the holder of a negotiable instrument which he has in good faith purchased from the corporation is not involved. For example, in Re Newcastle-upon-Tyne Marine Ins. Co. 19 Beav. 97 (see quotation in opinion) the question was whether or not a director who had sold his stock and ceased to be a member before the insolvency of the corporation could be made a contributory on the ground that all the formalities

McMurray, 7 Ind. App. 645, 34 N. E. 1004; Matchett v. Anderson Foundry & Mach. Works, 29 Ind. App. 207, 94 Am. St. Rep. 272, 64 N. E. 229; Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 348, 44 Am. Rep. 685, 13 N. W. 312; Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546, 42 N. W. 963; Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371, 8 N. W. 90; Krouskop v. Shontz, 51 Wis. 204, 37 Am. Rep. 817, 8 N. W. 241; Coffin v. Spencer, 39 Fed. 262; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 4 L.R.A. 190, 12 Am. St. Rep. 860, 17 Atl. 603; Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Bolan, 14 Idaho, 87, 125 Am. St. Rep. 146, 93 Pac. 508; Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. 49; Eaton & G. Com. Paper, 71, 220, 354; Hodge v. Farmers' Bank, 7 Ind. App. 94, 34 N. E. 123; Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 488, 8 N. W. 87; Evans v. Odem, 30 Ind. App. 207, 65 N. E. 755; Miller v. Poage, 56 Iowa, 96, 41 Am. Rep. 82, 8 N. W. 799; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 253.

The directors of a company, being the executive officers of the company and charged with the duty of conducting its affairs, would be presumed to have knowledge of them.

Williams v. Cheney, 8 Gray, 206.

Messrs. Dale & Bierer, for defendants in error:

A person may deal in the purchase of commercial paper with a corporation of which he is a director the same as any other individual may deal with such corporation.

Mann v. Second Nat. Bank, 30 Kan. 412, 1 Pac. 579; Fox v. Bank of Kansas City, 30 Kan. 441, 1 Pac. 789.

The court did not err in its ruling on the demurrer interposed at the conclusion of the evidence offered on behalf of plaintiffs, and which ruling resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff, Frank Dale.

Forbes v. First Nat. Bank, 21 Okla. 206, 95 Pac. 785; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; City State Bank v. Pickard, 35 Okla. 243, 129 Pac. 38; T. S. Reed Grocery Co. v. Miller, 36 Okla. 134, 128 Pac. 271; of a regular transfer had not been observed by him when he sold. It was held that a director must know the rules and by-laws of the company, hence he could be made a contributory. In Greenville Gas Co. v. Reis, 54 Ohio St. 540, 44 N. E. 271, the bond in question was issued by the corporation and placed in the hands of the president to sell for it. A director received the bond from him as collateral security for an indorsement for the president as an individual, and after paying the note indorsed, claimed the bond. It was held that he was chargeable with knowledge of the fact that the president held the bond in trust for the company, and he could therefore be compelled to deliver to it the bond. In Nelson v. Wellington, 5 Bosw. 178, the plaintiffs sued L.R.A.1915D.

McPherrin v. Tittle, 36 Okla. 510, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395, 129 Pac. 721; First State Bank v. Tobin, 39 Okla. 96, 134 Pac. 395; Cedar Rapids Nat. Bank v. Bashara, 39 Okla. 482, 135 Pac. 1051; Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 329, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 688; Borland v. Haven, 37 Fed. 394.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On June 28, 1911, Frank Dale, defendant in error, sued E. W. Hardin and six others, as makers on their past-due promissory note for $1,495.65, made, executed, and delivered on September 16, 1909, to Guthrie School & Office Furniture Manufacturing Company, as payee, and by the company indorsed to the plaintiff Frank Dale. The petition alleged that plaintiff acquired the note in good faith for value and before maturity. For answer defendants, in effect, admitted the execution of the note and its indorsement as pleaded, and that plaintiff had paid value therefor before maturity, but set forth facts sufficient to constitute a failure of consideration, and denied that plaintiff was a purchaser in good faith. There was trial to a jury and judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring the case here. To maintain the issues on his part, plaintiff introduced the note in evidence and rested. Whereupon defendant demurred to the evidence, which was overruled. There was no error in this. In Forbes v. First Nat. Bank, 21 Okla. 206, 95 Pac. 785, we said: "Plaintiff's possession of the draft, indorsed by the payee in blank, was prima facie evidence that it acquired the same in good faith for value, in the usual course of business, before maturity. . . ."

Although the note contained the following: "The makers and all indorsers hereof severally waive presentment for payment, protest, and notice of protest, and consent that time of payment may be extended without notice thereof . . ."—the same "as trustees of an express trust," for the corporation or its creditors, and not as purchasers for value. As trustees they signed the agreement under which the notes were given, and transacted the business of the corporation. Other cases are sufficiently explained by the court in HARDIN v. DALE. No effort has been made to exhaust the list of this class of cases, as they are not in point on the particular question of applicability of the doctrine to officers who purchase negotiable instruments from the corporation in good faith and without actual knowledge of the infirmities. Only those cited by the court in HARDIN v. DALE and not fully explained are here discussed.

J. W. M.

was negotiable. Missouri-Lincoln Trust Co. v. Long, 31 Okla. 1, 120 Pac. 291.

There is no conflict in the testimony. Assuming the burden of proof upon the issue of failure of consideration and want of good faith, defendants introduced evidence tending to prove that the note was given in payment for school furniture, and, before it was due, the payee indorsed the same in blank to plaintiff. The indorsement was for value, and reads: "The Guthrie School & Office Furniture Mfg. Co., by E. M. Hegler, Pres." It was made October 9, 1909. Prior thereto the consideration of the note failed, and the payee knew it, and also knew that the makers would resist payment on that ground. At that time plaintiff was a director in the company and also a stockholder. On October 4, 1909, defendants wrote the payee thus: "The whole lot of furniture is unsatisfactory, and unless some adjustment is made, the state will refuse to take it, and the payment of the note will be protested."

About three days thereafter the payee sold and indorsed the note to plaintiff. On this state of the evidence the court sustained a demurrer thereto and directed a verdict for plaintiff. This was holding that the legal effect of the evidence did not reasonably tend to prove that plaintiff was not a purchaser in good faith. The court erred. From this evidence it may be fairly inferred that here is an industrial corporation, the payee in a promissory note, with knowledge on its part, and that of each and every one of its directors, that the consideration for the note had failed, acting through the same board, presumably by vote, selling that note to one of the board. Can it be said that such member of the board took it in good faith? We think not. We say this note was sold by vote of the board for the reason that, as no one questioned the authority of Hegler to indorse it in blank, as he did, it is fair to presume, as this corporation was not dealing in commercial paper, but in manufacturing, that Hegler was duly authorized so to do. And how was he authorized? As there is no evidence tending to prove that he had express general authority to indorse such paper, and no evidence tending to prove any implied general authority so to do arising from such frequent exercise of the power, we are forced to conclude, as stated, that he was authorized to make this indorsement by express authority of the board, which could only be done by vote of the board. In Elwell v. Puget Sound & C. R. Co. 7 Wash. 489, 35 Pac. 377, it is said: "Whatever else the general agent of an industrial corporation may do to bind his principal by contracts made by virtue of his implied authority, when it comes to uttering negotiable paper to which, in the hands of innocent holders, there can be practically no defense, a strict rule applies. The agent must either have express general authority to issue such paper, or express authority to issue the particular paper, or there must be implied general authority arising from such frequent exercise of the power by the agent, followed by ratification, as to constitute a custom of the corporation."

Being authorized so to do by a vote of the board, each and every member thereof, including plaintiff, was at the time of the sale and indorsement in question chargeable with knowledge that the consideration of this note had failed, and that it would be worthless, should that defense to a suit thereon against them be interposed by the makers.

A director of an industrial corporation is chargeable with knowledge of everything it was his duty to know concerning commercial paper belonging to the corporation which he undertakes, as director, to sell. In Re Newcastle-upon-Tyne Marine Ins. Co. 19 Beav. 97, Sir John Romilly, master of the rolls, said: "A person, when he becomes a director, accepts a trust which he undertakes to perform for the benefit of the company. If, in the due performance of that trust, he must necessarily have acquired certain knowledge, it appears to me to be but fit that he should be charged with the knowledge of those facts which it was his duty to have become acquainted with. It is merely saying that a person should be held to know that which it was his bounden duty to know."

In Gay v. Young Men's Consol. Co-op. Mercantile Inst. 37 Utah, 280, 107 Pac. 237, the court, quoting approvingly from 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 896, said: "As a general rule, an officer or director of a corporation is chargeable with knowledge of all matters relating to the affairs of the corporation which he actually knows or which it was his duty to know. Thus, in actions by strangers against an officer or director, the defendant will generally be charged with knowledge of all facts relating to the condition and business of the company which he might have known by the exercise of due diligence, whether actually known to him or not."

In that case, the husband of respondent having a suit pending against him on a promissory note payable to the defendant corporation, she, to settle the same, conveyed to it certain lands upon condition that the corporation would hold the title in trust for her and sell the same at the best price obtainable, but not for less than a sum certain, pay the demand out of the proceeds, and return the balance to her. Thereafter the company sold the land to Rockhill, one of its directors, for less than it was worth, in violation of the terms of its trust. Whereupon she sued to enforce the trust and to secure an accounting against them both. Rockhill claimed he had bought the property in good faith and without notice of the trust. But the trial court found that he, as a director of the corporation, was chargeable with knowledge of the agreement between the respondent and the company, and hence of the trust, and therefore was not a bona fide purchaser of the land. After holding that the company acted as trustee in the premises, and as such was liable to account under the terms of the trust, the court, in answering the question whether Rockhill took the land subject thereto, said: "The answer to this question depends upon two things, namely, Rockhill's relation to the corporation, and the character of the transaction by which it obtained title to the land in question. Rockhill's relation to the corporation was that of director and vice president. Whenever a corporation in this state exercises its powers, it must do so through the board of directors, since, under our statute (Comp. Laws 1907, § 324), all corporate powers are vested in and 'shall be exercised by the board of directors.' No doubt, the majority of the board, when regularly convened, may exercise any of the corporate powers in the absence of the minority, and bind such minority if the acts of the majority are not ultra vires, or in violation of some positive statute or of some general law, or are void or voidable as against public policy. The minority is not only bound by the acts of the majority, but the minority members are charged with knowledge of all the legal corporate acts that are exercised as aforesaid. If, therefore, the majority acquires any property in trust, every director is charged with knowledge of the trust relation, and, as against the claims of those for whom the corporation became trustee, such member has and can acquire no better right to the trust property than the corporation has. In this regard, it can make no difference whether the majority of the board of directors directly exercise the corporate power or authorized some agent to do so. The act is still the exercise of a corporate power of which every director, as against strangers to the corporation, is assumed to have notice."

And after quoting as indicated, further said: "This text is sustained by the authorities. Merchants' Bank v. Rudolf, 5 Neb. 527; Greenville Gas Co. v. Reis, 54 Ohio St. 549, 44 N. E. 271. The last case, in principle, is precisely like the case at L.R.A.1915D.

bar. In that case the corporation obtained certain bonds in trust. One of the directors subsequently purchased the bonds from the corporation, and in an action against him set up the claim that he knew nothing about the trust agreement; that he purchased the property in good faith for value and without notice. The court, however, brushes his claim aside, and holds that, as a director of the corporation, he must be held as having had knowledge of the trust agreement, although he was absent from the board meeting and had no actual knowledge that the board of directors entered into the agreement."

In the fifth Nebraska case, supra, it was held that if a cashier, on inquiry by a surety, not an officer of the bank, stated that the note upon which he was surety had been paid by the principal, the bank was estopped to deny the truth of such statement, when to do so would entail loss on the surety which he could have avoided had the statement not been made, but that such rule had no application where the surety was one of the directors of the bank, for the reason that he had means of knowing the true condition of its affairs, and was conclusively presumed to know whether payment was made or not.

Nelson v. Wellington, 5 Bosw. 178, was a suit to recover on a promissory note for $351.25 payable to the Atlas Insurance Company, which prior to maturity, the company had turned over as collateral to plaintiffs as trustees of an express trust. The facts were that the company, in order to raise money for business purposes, borrowed a number of notes from its friends, which it discounted, and so used the money. To secure its payment, the company deposited with plaintiffs, who were also members of its board of trustees, the note in suit. The note was executed by defendants for advanced premiums on merchandise to be shipped, and, when shipped and reported to the company, the risk was to be indorsed on an open policy of insurance, or otherwise accepted. The question was whether this collateral note could be recovered by the trustees in full or only for the amount of the premiums for risks so indorsed. In passing the court said that the note was binding in the hands of the insurance company, and that the plaintiffs took no better title than the company itself had, as they were officials or trustees of the company, and must be deemed to have knowledge of the title of the company to the note. Or in other words, as we understand the case, that it would not do for the plaintiffs to say that they took the note other than subject to all the equities existing between the original parties. And so we say it makes no difference whether plaintiff was absent from the board meeting or not at the time of the sale and indorsement of the note in question, or whether he participated in or actually knew the "particulars" of this transaction or not. His duty under his trust, as director, being to know the value of this note, and necessarily its infirmities, he was chargeable with knowing, and cannot be held to be a purchaser in good faith, or to have acquired thereto a better title than the payee had. See also Lyman v. Bank of United States, 12 How. 225, 13 L. ed. 965; United Society of Shakers v. Underwood, 9 Bush, 609, 15 Am. Rep. 731; Nelson v. Wellington, supra; Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 1672; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 28 L. ed. 49, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423.

Let the cause be reversed, with directions to let it go to the jury on the equities existing between the original parties.

All the Justices concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF KNOX-VILLE

v.

PARK CITY, Appt.

(130 Tenn. 626, 172 S. W. 286.)

Tax — municipal water plant — property used for supplying neighboring town.

A municipal corporation which supplies at a profit water from its plant to a neighboring town is not exempt from an ad valorem tax by the latter on the mains and hydrants within its limits, nor from a privilege tax there, by a provision exempting municipal property used exclusively for public or municipal corporation purposes from taxation.

(December 19, 1914.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming a decree of the Chancery Court for Knox County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to enjoin defendant from collecting an ad valorem tax assessed against certain of plaintiff's property, and to enjoin the collection of a privilege tax alleged to be due for the operation of a waterworks plant in the defendant city. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to liability to taxation of property located in one state or municipality, but belonging to another, see note to State ex rel. Taggart v. Holcomb, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 243. L.R.A.1915D.

Messrs. Shields & Cates, for appellant:

The plant and property of complainant lying within the territorial limits of defendant city are not being used by complainant for a public or corporate purpose, because, as a corporation, it is without power and authority to furnish water to a separate, independent, and distinct municipality; and that part of said plant so used is in effect independent of, and not necessary to, the remainder of complainant's property, which is used for corporate purposes.

Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 474, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924; West Hartford v. Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 361; Dyer v. Newport, 123 Ky. 203, 94 S. W. 25; Farwell v. Seattle, 43 Wash. 141, 86 Pac. 217, 10 Ann. Cas. 130; Stauffer v. East Stroudsburg, 215 Pa. 143, 64 Atl. 411; Bly v. White Deer Mountain Water Co. 197 Pa. 80, 46 Atl. 929; Haupt's Appeal, 125 Pa. 211, 3 L.R.A. 536, 17 Atl. 436; Paris v. Sturgeon, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 519, 110 S. W. 459.

The plant and property of complainant lying and being within the territorial limits of defendant, not being used by complainant for its legitimate public or corporate purposes, are subject to taxation under the laws of this state.

Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 474, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924; West Hartford v. Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 361; Newport v. Unity, 68 N. H. 587, 73 Am. St. Rep. 626, 44 Atl. 704; South Carolina v. United States, 199 U. S. 437, 461-463, 50 L. ed. 261, 269, 270, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

Defendant had the right to tax plaintiff's property and thus lessen the fixed charges which the former agreed to pay, and is still paying, for its fire protection, and for the other water used for municipal purposes.

1 Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. p. 266, and notes 1, 2; Desty, Taxn. p. 48; Newport v. Com. 106 Ky. 434, 45 L.R.A. 518, 50 S. W. 845, 51 S. W. 433; Clark v. Louisville Water Co. 90 Ky. 522, 14 S. W. 502; Louisville v. Louisville Water Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 766, and note, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 425, 81 S. W. 698; Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 473, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924.

Mr. W. E. Drummond also for appellant.

Messrs. W. T. Kennerly and Noble Smithson, for appellee:

Complainant is exempt from this tax because using the property in question for public or municipal corporation purposes.

3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1297; People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 42, 8 Am. Rep. 24; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 128, 129; Mitch- ell v. Burlington, 4 Wall. 273, 18 L. ed. 352; Larned v. Burlington, 4 Wall. 275, 18 L. ed. 353; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 654, 18 L. ed. 79; Jarrott v. Moberly, 5 Dill. 253, Fed. Cas. No. 7,223; Maydwell v. Louisville, 116 Ky. 885, 63 L.R.A. 655, 105 Am. St. Rep. 245, 76 S. W. 1091; Shelby County v. Tennessee Centennial Exposition Co. 96 Tenn. 653, 33 L.R.A. 717, 36 S. W. 694; McCallie v. Chattanooga, 3 Head, 318; Adams v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 2 Coldw. 645; Nashville v. Smith, 86 Tenn. 213, 6 S. W. 273; University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 155, 9 S. W. 892; State v. Fisk University, 87 Tenn. 234, 10 S. W. 284; Book Agents of M. E. Church, South v. Hinton, 92 Tenn. 188, 19 L.R.A. 289, 21 S. W. 321; West Hartford v. Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360; State, Hackettstown, Prosecutor, v. Conover, 63 N. J. L. 191, 42 Atl. 838; State, Camden County, Prosecutor, v. Collins, 60 N. J. L. 367, 37 Atl. 623; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 773; People ex rel. New York v. Board of Assessors, 111 N. Y. 505, 2 L.R.A. 148, 19 N. E. 90.

Mr. J. Pike Powers, Jr., also for appellee.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The mayor and aldermen of Knoxville filed its bill of complaint against Park City, another municipal corporation, seeking an injunction against the latter to inhibit the collection of an ad valorem tax for the year 1910, assessed against that portion of the water plant of complainant city located within the corporate limits of the defendant city, and also to enjoin the collection of a privilege tax claimed to be due for the exercise of the privilege of operating a waterworks system in Park City.

The bill of complaint proceeds upon the theory that the property attempted to be taxed is exempt because owned by a municipal corporation; while it is the contention of defendant city that such portion of the plant of complainant which is situated within the boundaries of Park City is not used exclusively for public or corporation purposes of the complainant municipality, but is used in serving Park City for profit.

It appears that the west boundary line of Park City is almost contiguous to the east boundary line of the city of Knoxville for a distance of about 1 mile. There intervenes what is described as a neutral strip, about 300 feet wide, on which factories are located.

Prior to 1909 both of the cities were served by a private water corporation, the Knoxville Water Company, the plant of which was located partially in the territory of each of them. Under legislation later L.R.A.1915D.

noted, the city of Knoxville in 1909 acquired the plant of this company, including that part situated in Park City, and assumed the contract then in existence between the company and Park City, and has since operated its plant there.

The proof establishes that the plant of complainant city lying within the territorial limits of Park City is, as to use, independent of, and not necessary to, that part of the system which is in Knoxville and there in use for that city and its inhabitants. No mains for the Knoxville supply are laid in Park City.

Since its purchase of the plant of the Knoxville Water Company, the city of Knoxville has charged the inhabitants of Park City for water at rates which are 20 per cent higher than its rates to its own inhabitants; and a profit is made from the Park City plant. A portion of these profits has been used to extend water lines into and to serve a third incorporated town, Lonsdale, which is not adjacent to the city of Knoxville.

Section 28 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state provides: "All property real, personal or mixed, shall be taxed, but the legislature may except such as may be held by the state, by counties, cities, or towns, and used exclusively for public or corporation purposes."

Section 1 of chapter 602 of the Acts of 1907 provides:

"That all property—real, personal and mixed—shall be assessed for taxation for state, county and municipal purposes, except such as is declared exempt in the next section.

"Sec. 2. That the property herein enumerated and none other shall be exempt from taxation: All property of . . . any incorporated city, town, or taxing district in the state that is used exclusively for public or municipal corporation purposes."

Complainant city was incorporated under Acts of 1907, chap. 207, which was substantially a re-enactment of its former charter. By its present charter it is authorized to provide the city of Knoxville with water by a system of waterworks to be established within or beyond the boundaries of the city.

Was the city of Knoxville, under the constitutional and accordant statutory test, employing its plant in Park City "exclusively for public or corporation purposes?"

The true test to be applied is whether the municipality sought to be subjected to taxation is engaged in the administration of the property in question for a public purpose; that is, for governmental purposes. It is the character of the use to which the property is put, and not so much the person who owns or administers it, or the place where the property may be situate, that is determinative of this question of exemption from taxation.

We may resort for ascertainment of the meaning of the phrase "public purpose" to the law of eminent domain, which furnishes an analogy not complete, yet fairly apt. 1 Cooley, Tax. 3d ed. 192; Wayland v. Middlesex County, 4 Gray, 500. It cannot be contended that the city of Knoxville would have power, under the law of eminent domain, at least in the absence of express and specific grant, to condemn property for the laying of a waterworks system in Park City for the service of the latter, since it would not be a public purpose to be served by the former municipality to supply the latter with a water supply. We doubt whether any reported case can be cited which shows even an attempt at the assertion of such power, not to mention its being sustained.

If we resort for further analogy to the power to tax for a "public purpose," we find authority denying that the city of Knoxville could validly levy taxes on its own inhabitants and property holders for the immediate purpose of erecting a water distribution plant in another municipality to serve the latter. 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1300.

In Dyer v. Newport, 123 Ky. 203, 94 S. W. 25, it appeared that the city of Newport had taken the franchise to install a water system in, and to furnish for a period of twenty years a water supply to, Clifton, a municipality lying alongside Newport. A citizen and taxpayer of Newport brought suit to enjoin the execution of the contract on the ground that it was ultra vires. The court sustained this contention, saying: "There is no express and implied grant of power to Newport to engage in such enterprise beyond its corporate limits; nor has it the right, therefore, to levy and collect taxes for such purpose. The contract in this suit, if valid, would impose the obligation on the city to put in all necessary water mains and fire hydrants in Clifton at the expense of the city of Newport. To raise the money to do this, it would have to impose a tax on the people and property liable to city taxes, or appropriate money out of the city treasury put there by taxation. In either event, it is equivalent to the imposition of a tax on the people and property of Newport to install and maintain water facilities in the municipality of Clifton. And if the contract with Clifton should prove unprofitable to Newport, and the latter should lose money in the enterprise, the loss would have to be made up by the latter by collecting funds to defray L.R.A.1915D.

it by taxes levied on the property in Newport. Nor could Newport acquire a franchise by purchase, or otherwise, in the absence of express legislative authority, to operate a waterworks system in and for the benefit of another municipality." See also Jackson County v. State, 155 Ind. 604, 59 N. E. 1037.

The court of appeals of Kentucky, in the later case of Com. v. Covington, 128 Ky. 36, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1214, 107 S. W. 231, held that the fact that water was furnished for compensation to inhabitants of its suburbs, without its or any corporate limits, does not alter the public purpose or use of its water system so as to make it subject to taxation. But the court took care to distinguish the case it had in hand from the one we have under investigation, saying: "We do not mean that a city may enter upon the business of maintaining a waterworks system for other cities or towns, but only that the fact that it incidentally furnishes water to a considerable number of persons in proximity to the city, without injury to the rights of the inhabitants of the city, does not alter the public character or use of the property, or make it subject to taxation."

The ruling in Com. v. Covington, supra, is in harmony with the decision of many courts to the effect that the fact that water is furnished to inhabitants of unincorporated suburbs is a mere incident to, and not destructive of, the public use.

It was held in Farwell v. Seattle, 43 Wash. 141, 86 Pac. 217, 10 Ann. Cas. 130, that, in the absence of express authority conferred by statute in clear terms, a city has no power to extend its water system into another municipality for the purpose of furnishing the latter with a water supply, and that such power could not be drawn from a statute giving the city of Seattle power to furnish "such city or town and the inhabitants thereof and any other persons with an ample supply of water." The expenditure of municipal funds in such extension was enjoined at the instance of a citizen and taxpayer. See also Rehill v. East Newark, 73-N. J. L. 220, 63 Atl. 81.

In the pending case we need not decide whether the language of the charter of Knoxville is broad enough to support the power claimed for that municipality in this respect.

It may be, however, that the city of Knoxville has the power under Acts 1903, chap. 153, and Acts 1909, chap. 344, to acquire, hold, and operate the water system in Park City; the first being an enabling act by which complainant city was authorized to issue $750,000 of bonds for the purpose of "acquiring, owning, and operating a system of waterworks, for said city and adjacent territory, either by purchase or construction," and the later act (Acts 1909, chap. 344) providing for an increase of the bond issue for the specific purpose of buying the existing plant of the Knoxville Water Company. This, under the doctrine of the cases of Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 89 C. C. A. 205, 182 Fed. 225, 15 Ann. Cas. 498, and South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co. 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490. If this be conceded, it remains for inquiry whether that power was one that manifested a public corporate purpose, or one that was a demonstration of a mere proprietary right,—a business power inhering in the city of Knoxville as a body corporate.

In the case last cited, the supreme court of California clearly defined the nature of the power thus exercised by the municipality owning and operating such a plant. The city of Pasadena under its charter had power to construct and maintain waterworks "for supplying the city and its inhabitants with water, and the right to supply water to persons who live out of the city." The defendant company was a private corporation engaged in supplying under contracts Pasadena and South Pasadena, distinct municipalities, with water, and the suit was to enjoin it from selling its plant to the city of Pasadena. The court had to deal with the relations that would exist between the two municipalities in event the injunction were denied. After referring to the power of South Pasadena over the private water company, the court said: "Necessarily it has this power [of regulation] as against another city engaged in supplying such water, as well as when an individual or water corporation does so. It is suggested that the two cities each represent the sovereign power, and would have equal authority in all municipal affairs; that a conflict would ensue, and that such consequences cannot be considered as intended, unless the intention is expressly and unmistakably declared. In this connection the rule is invoked that there cannot be two municipalities exercising the same powers at the same time within the same territory. But the two cities would not be of equal authority with respect to the use of water in South Pasadena, in such case. South Pasadena would have the power above stated, under the Constitution, and Pasadena, so far as that service is concerned, would be subject to those powers, to the same extent as the Pasadena Land & Water Company is now subject thereto. In the carrying on of the water service to the people of South Pasadena, the city of Pasadena will not be acting in its political, public, or governmental capacity as an agent of the sovereign power equal in all respects to the city within which it operates. . . . Hav- L.R.A.1915D.

ing taken over the whole system subject to the burden of supplying a part of the water to inhabitants of South Pasadena, the city of Pasadena will have no greater rights or powers, respecting that part of the service, that its grantor previously had.

. . . The powers of the two cities in regard to this water service will be separate and distinct; one will be subordinate to the other, and hence there will not be two cities exercising the same powers in the same territory at the same time; South Pasadena, within its own limits, will be the sole representative of sovereignty in the fixing of rates and in the supervision of the streets; and Pasadena will be subject thereto, as a private person."

By parity of reasoning the city of Knoxville is not exercising a public or political power in Park City, and is subject to the paramountcy of Park City, as the sole representative of sovereignty in respect of the taxing power. As the successor of the Knoxville Water Company, the first-named city will be deemed to stand in the plight of that private corporation as to exemption from taxation.

It is difficult to conceive how the city of Knoxville has any public or corporate purpose to serve within the corporate limits of Park City. All municipal purposes therein are those of Park City, created by legislative act to exercise them. The furnishing of a water supply for itself and its inhabitants is its municipal purpose, and cannot be Knoxville's.

Nor may it logically be conceived that the city of Knoxville serves even incidentally its own corporate public purpose by means of the Park City system. What is the primary "public purpose" of Park City may not be an incidental "public purpose" of Knoxville. The legislature will be taken to have intentionally lodged the full power and duty in that regard in its local governmental representative, Park City.

In Stiles v. Newport, 76 Vt. 154, 171, 56 Atl. 662, followed by Swanton v. Highgate, 81 Vt. 152, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 867, 69 Atl. 667, it was held that where the municipal corporation of Newport had constructed a branch line in another municipality, West Derby, which was devoted wholly to the needs of the latter, and furnished its water supply, that system was taxable by West Derby. The court in a comprehensive opinion said:

"The municipal duty of the village of Newport as regards the maintenance of mains and hydrants is confined to its territorial limits. The municipal relation which enters into the question of domestic supply is confined to its own inhabitants. The furnishing of water to the inhabitants of the defendant village is held to be a public use upon the ground that the making of such a provision, while not strictly a municipal duty, is protective of the public health, and therefore a public use within the meaning of the laws relating to taxation. But this reasoning fails when the furnishing of water to the village of West Derby is in question. We see no ground upon which the West Derby branch of this system can be held to be devoted to a public use, either as regards fire protection or domestic needs. The village of Newport owes no municipal duty to the village of West Derby or its inhabitants, and has no municipal interest there. Its sale of water to that village and its inhabitants is for the revenue obtainable thereby, independent of any connection with municipal duty or interest.

"Here, the village of Newport has built and installed a branch outside its corporate limits, which is devoted wholly to the needs of another village, and can never be made available for its own municipal service; and the question is whether the property so created and circumstanced shall be treated as serving an incidental, and therefore a public, use. It might not be easy to frame a safe and acceptable definition of an incidental use, but we think it may safely be said that the supplying of the municipal and domestic needs of another municipality, through a complete system of distributing pipes and hydrants created for that purpose, is not such a use. The plaintiff has assessed the hydrants located in Derby, and we hold that they are taxable."

The case of West Hartford v. Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360, 367, is much relied upon by appellee city. In that case there was no effort on the part of West Hartford to tax water pipes and hydrants of the city of Hartford lying within the territory of the former, as in the pending case. The effort was to tax 327 acres of land held by Hartford in the limits of West Hartford for storage of water, to be carried thence to Hartford for the use of its inhabitants. Only a part of that acreage was necessary for that purpose; and this portion was held not be taxable by West Hartford, but 140 acres thereof not needed and not purchased for such use, but only to get the required quantity, were held liable to taxation. We see nothing in this holding that is out of harmony with the principles upon which we here proceed, but rather the contrary. We think it clear that a reservoir within the boundaries of Park City, owned and operated by Knoxville for its own water supply, would not be subject to taxation by Park City.

The case of People ex rel. New York v. L.R.A. 1916D.

Board of Assessors, 111 N. Y. 505, 2 L.R.A. 148, 19 N. E. 90, is not in conflict. It was there held that a landing place situated in Brooklyn, for a ferry owned by the city of New York for the public purpose of serving the inhabitants of both cities, was not taxable by the city of Brooklyn. The landing was deemed an inseparable incident, and any hardship imposed on Brooklyn in the maintenance of police supervision over it as a part of its territory was treated as an immaterial circumstance. It is thus seen that the property in question served the public of the owning city.

In an opinion handed down on September 26, 1914, the supreme court of Nebraska, in the case of Omaha v. Douglas County, 96 Neb. 865, 148 N. W. 938, held that the property of the municipality of Omaha, used to supply with water the inhabitants of that city and its adjacent suburban towns, including a municipality, the city of Florence, was not subject to taxation by the county of Douglas or the city of Florence. That decision was placed, and well based, on the provisions of the Nebraska Constitution and statute, which are broader than ours. The court said:

"The county of Douglas, school district No. 5, and the city of Florence severally excepted, and each filed a motion for a new trial and appealed from the judgment and order made.

"It will be seen that the question presented is whether property which is municipally owned should be exempt from taxation. Section 2, art. 9, of the Constitution, in part reads:

"The property of the state, counties and municipal corporations, both real and personal shall be exempt from taxation, and such other property as may be used exclusively for agricultural and horticultural societies, for schools, religious, cemetery, and charitable purposes, may be exempted from taxation, but such exemption shall be only by general law."

"Section 6301, Rev. Stat. 1913, in part provides:

"The following property shall be exempt from taxes: First—all property of the state, counties and municipal corporations."

"The foregoing provisions were in force in the state before the property in question was sought to be assessed.

"It is contended by the appellants that the case must turn on the construction of the clause in the Constitution concerning exemption; that at common law property of a state, county, or city used for public purposes was exempt from taxation, and that the part of our Constitution above quoted was merely declaratory of the common law. . . .

"The brief of appellants contains a long argument calculated to show that under the present system the city of Omaha can keep up the interest, pay off the debt, and soon have a net profit amounting to a large sum of money. That is not the question. Whether Omaha can make money by selling water does not reach the constitutional provision; neither does it reach the statute."

"The statute seems to be as broad as the Constitution, and both Constitution and the statute would seem to be plain enough, so that there should be no great doubt as to what was the purpose intended. The framers of the constitutional provision must have intended to exempt all classes of municipally owned property. That would seem to be the only fair interpretation which can be placed upon the language used in the Constitution and the statute."

We see nothing in this holding that militates against what we rule in the pending case. That court cites Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 7 L.R.A. 469, 12 S. W. 924, on the proposition that a municipality's property outside its borders may be exempt from taxation. That case involved the question of privilege taxes, and it was said that a city did not become liable for the payment of such a tax "by reason of the fact that it furnished water to persons outside its own corporate limits, for compensation, who are not shown to have been residents of any city, taxing district, or town falling within the provisions of said act,"—the act imposing privilege taxes. By this language there was, as we conceive, safeguarded the principle we adopt in the determination of the instant case.

We hold that the physical properties of the complainant city within the boundaries of Park City are not exempt from taxation so far as they serve the municipal purposes of the latter municipality.

We, of course, are not dealing with the power of Park City to tax a pipe line of the other municipality laid through its territory to serve the public and corporate purposes of the city of Knoxville. Nor are we dealing with a power of Knoxville to sell water, or surplus water, to another municipality to be delivered for distribution by the latter through its own plant.

We also determine that Park City is entitled to collect a privilege tax, at the applicable statutory rate, from the city of Knoxville.

The Court of Civil Appeals, affirming the Chancellor, held that the city of Knoxville was not liable to pay either ad valorem or privilege taxes. Reversed, with remand for further proceedings in accord with what is herein ruled.
L.R.A.1915D.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF NASHVILLE

v.
JOHN PENNINGTON BURNS, by Next Friend, Plff. in Certiorari.

SAME

v.
MICHAEL BURNS, Plff. in Certiorari.

(131 Tenn. 281, 174 S. W. 1111.)

Municipal corporation — injury on park playground — liability.

A municipal corporation is not liable for injury to a child by negligent use by other children of a swing on a park playground which it maintains for the public welfare, and for the maintenance of order in which it assigns policemen, although lack of care on the part of municipal employees may have contributed to the injury.

(March 24, 1915.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment dismissing, upon appeal by defendant from a refusal by the Circuit Court for Davidson County to grant peremptory instructions, consolidated actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries to the minor plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Pitts & McConnico and M. S. Ross for plaintiffs in certiorari.

Messrs. A. G. Ewing, Jr., F. M. Garland, and M. T. Bryan, for defendant in certiorari:

Defendant maintains its playgrounds for the benefit of the public, and not as a source of profit or municipal benefit, and is not liable.

Foster v. Lookout Water Co. 3 Lea, 42; Gorman v. Chattanooga, 2 Tenn. C. C. A. 551; Irvine v. Chattanooga, 101 Tenn. 291, 47 S. W. 419; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Wixon v. Newport, 13 R. I. 454, 43 Am. Rep. 35; Maxmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Burrill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 118, 57 Am. Rep. 788, 3 Atl. 177; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 72, 16 Am. Rep. 14; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8, 13 Am. St. Rep. 533; Connelly v. Nashville, 100 Tenn. 262, 46 S. W.

Note. — As to liability of municipal corporation for injuries through unsafe conditions in parks or other public grounds other than streets, see notes to Bisbing v. Asbury Park, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 523, and Bernstein v. Milwaukee, L.R.A.1915C, 435, and see also case of Ackeret v. Minneapolis, post, 1111.

565; East Tennessee University v. Knoxville, 6 Baxt. 173; Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 37 L. ed. 170, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530; Park Comrs. v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567; Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042; Bisbing v. Asbury Park, 80 N. J. L. 416, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 523, 78 Atl. 196; Kerr v. Brookline, 208 Mass. 190, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 464, 94 N. E. 257; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605; McGraw v. District of Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 405, 25 L.R.A. 691.

The act of a third party in toppling the swing over on the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury, and not the city's failure to secure the swing frame to the ground; hence, the city is not liable.

Loftus v. DeHail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379.

Where the act of the child alone, without the concurrence of any negligence on the part of the defendant, causes injury, the child cannot recover, irrespective of whether he can be held responsible for contributory negligence or not.

Lee v. Jones, 181 Mo. 291, 103 Am. St. Rep. 596, 79 S. W. 927; Thomp. Neg. §§ 308, 309; Burckell v. Memphis Street R. Co. 2 Tenn. C. C. A. 575; Van Natta v. People's Street R. Electric Light & P. Co. 133 Mo. 13, 34 S. W. 505; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Golden, 93 Ga. 501, 21 S. E. 68; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 138 Ill. 370, 21 L.R.A. 76, 27 N. E. 899, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 402; Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 171, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308, 21 Am. St. Rep. 670, 26 N. E. 916; Schmidt v. Cook, 1 Misc. 227, 20 N. Y. Supp. 889; Knox v. Hall Steam Power Co. 69 Hun, 231, 23 N. Y. Supp. 490.

If the swings were removed after the hour of closing and the baby baskets were gotten out of the caretaker's keeping surreptitiously by the wrongful intervention of third persons, the city could not be held liable.

5 Thomp. Neg. § 6071; Welsh v. Lansing, 111 Mich. 589, 70 N. W. 129, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 268; McFeeters v. New York, 102 App. Div. 32, 92 N. Y. Supp. 79; Jackson v. Kansas City, 106 Mo. App. 52, 79 S. W. 1174.

Neil, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee, a minor sued by next friend to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted on him by the negligence of the city's agents in not sufficiently guarding the use of a swing in one of its parks. He recovered a verdict for $600. His father L.R.A.1915D.

likewise sued for damages accruing to him by reason of the injury inflicted on his son, and made a recovery of $200. The two cases were tried together. There was a motion for peremptory instructions in the trial court, which was there overruled, but, on appeal to the court of civil appeals, the motion was sustained, and the suits were dismissed. The cases then came here on the writ of certiorari.

We are of the opinion that the court of civil appeals reached the correct conclusion.

The city of Nashville owns and operates for the benefit of the public, 18 parks and playgrounds without compensation. These parks are under the charge of a park commission, and policemen are assigned to them for the protection of visitors, and, generally, to insure good order.

The injury complained of occurred in a little park in East Nashville. It had been but recently opened. Among other means provided for the comfort of the people were certain swings. One of these was known as a baby swing. It was designed only for small children of from five to seven years old; but, on the occasion in question, three larger boys, perhaps of twelve or fourteen years, while using the swing, turned it over in trying to swing too high. Appellee, who was standing near the swing, was struck by it as it fell to the ground, and was seriously injured. At the time this accident happened lights had not yet been installed in the little park, and children were not expected to play there after dark. When the injury occurred, the seats had been taken from the swings and placed in a house near by, the attendant had left, and the park was considered closed. The boys, however, either remained in the park, or came in afterwards, and removed the swing in question from the place where it had been stationed, procured the seats, it having three, and began to use it, with the result stated, without the knowledge of the officers or agents of the city.

The principal negligence urged against the city was the permission given by the policeman in charge to large boys from time to time to use the baby swing, from which it is insisted they felt justified in using it on the occasion in hand.

We believe that a peremptory instruction might well have been based on the absence of any negligence of the city, even assuming that it was liable for the negligence of its agents in the management of parks. The learned court of civil appeals, however, considered the question whether any liability existed at all against municipalities for injuries to persons frequenting parks by reason of the negligence of the servants of such corporations, and held that no such liability existed.

It is true there is great contrariety of opinion in the several courts of final resort in this country upon the question whether municipal corporations, in maintaining parks as resorts for the people, are in the discharge of a public duty, or one purely proprietary and ministerial. It is not our purpose to discuss this question at length, but only to indicate, in a general way, that we are in accord with those authorities which hold that such duty is a public one, based on the obligation of the municipality, as a branch of the state government, to guard and preserve and maintain the public health. Parks, in crowded cities, are eminently conducive to this purpose, as places to which the people may go and enjoy pure air, the sight of trees, grass, and flowers, and find the means of release for a time from the weight of care, rest from labor, relaxation for body and mind, and the recuperation of exhausted energies,—all aids to health of incalculable value. We approve the following authorities on the subject: Harper v. Topeka, 92 Kan. 11, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1032, 139 Pac. 1018; Park Comrs. v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605; Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567. We have read and considered the cases cited from other states, and, while conceding that they outnumber those we have mentioned, we do not think they are so well founded in principle. Moreover, the ground we have mentioned as governing our decision accords with that controlling other cases in this state on kindred aspects of municipal duty. Conelly v. Nashville, 100 Tenn. 262, 46 S. W. 565; Irvine v. Chattanooga, 101 Tenn. 294, 47 S. W. 419; Davis v. Knoxville, 90 Tenn. 599, 18 S. W. 254; Pesterfield v. Vickers, 3 Coldw. 206. We fully sympathize with the observations of Mr. Justice Cooper in Foster v. Lookout Water Co. 3 Lea, 42, 48, to the effect that, while we enforce the liability arising out of the violation of a duty owing in their proprietary character, the inclination of the courts has been not to press the pecuniary liability of municipal corporations to cases where a duty is assumed, not for the mere proprietary or corporate benefit, but for the common good. He continues: The courts "have refused to hold a city liable for the acts of its police officers, although they are appointed by it, or for the acts or negligence of its agents and employees in charge of patients in a public hospital; for the misconduct of the members of its fire department, or for the city's own neglect to provide suitable engines or fire apparatus, or to keep in repair public cisterns, or continue the supply of water to particular hydrants. . . . The reason is that the hazard of pecuniary loss might prevent the corporation from assuming duties which, although not strictly corporate nor essential to the corporate existence, largely subserve the public interest. The supplying of water for the extinguishment of fires is precisely one of those acts which bring no profit to the corporation, but are eminently humanitarian. To hold a city responsible for the loss of a building, or of whole streets of houses, as sometimes happens, because it might be thought, or because in reality, some of its indispensable agents had been negligent of their duty, might well frighten our municipal corporations from assuming the startling risk."

These views were ratified and utilized and substantially passed into decision and judgment in Irvine v. Chattanooga, 101 Tenn. 294, 47 S. W. 419, in which case it was sought to hold Chattanooga liable for the negligence of its agents in the fire department, whereby complainant's house was lost by fire, through want of diligence on the part of the department. In Conelly v. Nashville, supra, it was held that the city was not liable for the negligence of one of its employees, who, in driving a sprinkling cart, ran against a carriage and injured the occupant. The ground of the decision was that the city, in sprinkling the streets, was engaged in an effort to preserve the public health. In the course of the opinion the court referred, with approval, to authorities of other states wherein it had been held that a city was not liable for an injury caused by the negligence of an ambulance driver; for the loss of a slave placed by his master in a city hospital to be treated for smallpox, but who, through the negligence of his attendant, escaped and died from exposure; for the damage caused by a hook and ladder company while driving rapidly along a public street to a fire; for injury to a pupil from defective heating apparatus in a public school.

It is urged by counsel for defendant in error that all or nearly all of the cases which we have cited in support of our conclusion are from states in which it is likewise held that municipal corporations are not liable for injuries caused by defects in their streets unless made so by statute, on the ground that the construction and maintenance of public streets are a part of the public duty of such corporations, while the contrary view was expressed in this state a long time ago in the case of Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. 757; it having been held in that case that such duty belonged to the private or proprietary aspect of the dual nature of such organizations. The Lassar Case has been followed in all subsequent cases on the point that liability for injuries caused by defective streets exists against municipal corporations, although the ground on which it was based has been more than once questioned. (Knoxville v. Bell, 12 Lea, 157, 158; Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 686, 27 Am. Rep. 755); and the liability of cities and towns for injuries caused by defective streets has been asserted in a very recent reported case (Fleming v. Memphis, 126 Tenn. 331, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 148 S. W. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1306), and is daily applied without reference to the original ground of the early decision asserting the liability. It is now simply treated as settled law. But the question now before us is not necessarily bound up with the one last stated. It may be true that both are rooted in the same general principle (see, however, note "b" in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 518, 519), but it does not follow that we are compelled to reason from our street cases as furnishing binding analogies, or that we should overrule those cases as not founded on sound principle; nor does it even follow that the street cases were erroneously based. Everyone knows, as stated in Foster v. Lookout Water Co. supra, and as conceded in the authorities everywhere, that it is extremely difficult to correctly assign the various duties of a municipal corporation as belonging to this or that aspect of its nature. Suffice it to say that we believe our conclusion on the subject of parks is soundly based.

We do not say that the city, and its officers in charge of its parks, would not be guilty of a misdemeanor, and so indictable, for permitting these places to become dangerous to life or limb; but that liability rests on a different ground, and does not arise in this case.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals must be affirmed, with costs.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

CASPER A. ACKERET, Resp't.,
v.

CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS, Appt.

ALOYSIUS J. ACKERET, By Father and Guardian, Resp't.,
v.

SAME, Appt.

(129 Minn. 190, 151 N. W. 976.)

Municipal corporation — caring for street — character of duty.

1. In establishing, caring for, and main-

Headnotes by TAYLOR, C.
L.R.A.1915D.

taining streets, highways, and public parks, municipalities act in their governmental, and not in their proprietary, capacity.

Highway — defect — liability of municipality.

2. Cities and villages are liable for injuries resulting from dangerous conditions in their streets; but, with this single exception, municipalities are not liable in damages for negligence in performing their governmental functions, unless such liability has been imposed by statute.

Parks — defective footpath — liability of municipality.

3. A city that constructs and maintains walks and footpaths in its parks which are used as thoroughfares in passing from one part of the city to another is liable for injuries resulting from dangerous conditions in such walks caused by the negligence of its employees.

Notice — claim for injuries — sufficiency.

4. A notice given by a parent of a claim for injuries sustained by his minor child, which contains the essential information required by the statute, is sufficient, although it fails to state specifically that the parent claims damages on his own account and also as the statutory representative of his child, and fails to make an apportionment between the two of the amount claimed.

Party — injury to child — suit by father.

5. A father who is supporting the family may maintain an action for loss of the services of a minor child without joining the mother as a party of plaintiff.

(March 26, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover for expenses incurred in providing medical treatment for his injured minor child, and for partial loss of services. Affirmed.

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. C. J. Rockwood, for appellant:

Liability for negligence does not attach in the performance of public or governmental functions.

Note. — As to liability of municipal corporation for injuries through unsafe conditions in parks, see note to Nashville v. Burns, ante, 1108.

Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191, 14 N. W. 877; Dosdall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185, 14 N. W. 458; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; Bank v. Brainerd School Dist. 49 Minn. 106, 51 N. W. 814; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763; Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, 53 Am. Rep. 31, 23 N. W. 220; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278, 64 N. W. 812; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N. W. 788, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 183; Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643, 14 Ann. Cas. 673; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332.

The establishment and maintenance of parks, commons, and squares are public or governmental, and not proprietary, functions.

Browne v. Bowdoinham, 71 Me. 144; Corbin v. Dale, 57 Mo. 297; Mayo v. Wood, 50 Cal. 171; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567.

Park uses are public uses in the strictest sense.

Rossmiller v. State, 114 Wis. 169, 58 L.R.A. 93, 91 Am. St. Rep. 910, 89 N. W. 839; State v. Korrer, 127 Minn. 60, L.R.A. —, 148 N. W. 617, 1095; Watson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 321, 48 N. W. 1129; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514, 28 L.R.A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355, 40 N. E. 1014; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Marble, 112 Mich. 4, 70 N. W. 319; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrum, 42 Ind. App. 179, 82 N. E. 934, 84 N. E. 356; Todd v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 19 Ohio St. 514; Louisville, St. L. & T. R. Co. v. Stephens, 96 Ky. 401, 49 Am. St. Rep. 303, 29 S. W. 14; 13 Cyc. 439; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 462; Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, Gil. 75; Poudler v. Minneapolis, 103 Minn. 479, 115 N. W. 274; Cole v. Minnesota Loan & T. Co. 17 N. D. 409, 117 N. W. 354, 17 Ann. Cas. 304.

The maintenance of Loring park is a public and governmental function, in the exercise of which the city is not liable for the negligence of its employees.

Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Veale v. Boston, 135 Mass. 187; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 578, 3 L.R.A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601, 20 N. E. 329; McKay v. Reading, 184 Mass. 140, 68 N. E. 43; Holleran v. Boston, 176 Mass. 75, 57 N. E. 220; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 567; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583; Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605; Park Comrs. v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Bisbing v. Asbury Park, 80 N. J. L. 419, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 523, 78 Atl. 196; Re Certain Land, 119 Fed. 453; L.R.A.1915D.

Higginson v. The Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery), 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523.

The notice served upon the city council was insufficient to found an action.

Terryll v. Faribault, 84 Minn. 341, 87 N. W. 917; Bausher v. St. Paul, 72 Minn. 539, 75 N. W. 745, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 407; Doyle v. Duluth, 74 Minn. 157, 76 N. W. 1020; Nicol v. St. Paul, 80 Minn. 415, 83 N. W. 375; McKeague v. Green Bay, 106 Wis. 577, 82 N. W. 708.

Messrs. Healy & La Du, for respondents:

The city is exercising corporate powers, and not governmental functions.

Reed v. Anoka, 85 Minn. 294, 88 N. W. 981.

Where a municipality is given the exclusive control of its streets, it is required to exercise reasonable care to keep them in a safe condition, and is liable to anyone who is injured as a result of the want of such care.

St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, Gil. 205, 74 Am. Dec. 753; Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300, Gil. 258; O'Leary v. Mankato, 21 Minn. 65; Bohon v. Waseca, 32 Minn. 176, 50 Am. Rep. 564, 19 N. W. 730; Grant v. Stillwater, 35 Minn. 242, 28 N. W. 660; Nichols v. St. Paul, 44 Minn. 494, 47 N. W. 168; Blyhl v. Waterville, 57 Minn. 115, 47 Am. St. Rep. 596, 58 N. W. 817; McDowell v. Preston, 104 Minn. 263, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 190, 116 N. W. 470; Estelle v. Lake Crystal, 27 Minn. 243, 6 N. W. 775; Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 198, 53 Am. Rep. 23, 22 N. W. 444; Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 381; Schigley v. Waseca, 106 Minn. 94, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259, 16 Ann. Cas. 169; Weber v. Harrisburg, 216 Pa. 117, 64 Atl. 905; McDonald v. St. Paul, 82 Minn. 308, 83 Am. St. Rep. 428, 84 N. W. 1022, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 318; Burridge v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 557, 42 L.R.A. 684, 72 Am. St. Rep. 582, 76 N. W. 84; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042; Denver v. Spencer, 34 Colo. 270, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 147, 114 Am. St. Rep. 158, 82 Pac. 590, 7 Ann. Cas. 1042, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 94; Barthold v. Philadelphia, 154 Pa. 109, 26 Atl. 304; Townley v. Huntington, 68 W. Va. 574, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 118, 70 S. E. 368, 3 N. C. C. A. 835.

The notice served upon the city was sufficient.

Kandelin v. Ely, 110 Minn. 55, 124 N. W. 449; Terryll v. Faribault, 84 Minn. 341, 87 N. W. 917; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 77 Minn. 76, 79 N. W. 653; Nicol v. St. Paul, 80

Minn. 415, 83 N. W. 375; Harder v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 446, 42 N. W. 350; Larkin v. Minneapolis, 112 Minn. 311, 127 N. W. 1129; Wornecka v. St. Paul, 118 Minn. 207, 136 N. W. 561.

Taylor, C., filed the following opinion:

Under and pursuant to chapter 281 of the Special Laws of 1883, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the board of park commissioners of the city of Minneapolis has established, improved, and maintains a system of parks and park ways for the use of the inhabitants of that city. Among the parks so established and maintained is a tract of about 36 acres, now known as Loring park, located in the midst of a thickly settled portion of the city. Running through this park in various directions are numerous gravel and cement walks and footpaths, but no carriage ways. These walks and paths are in constant use as thoroughfares by people passing from one part of the city to another. On April 30, 1913, employees of the park board raked together a large quantity of leaves and other rubbish, and burned it at the intersection of two or more of these walks. When they quit work at night they left the ashes and unburned rubbish lying upon the walk. In the evening of the same day, Aloysius J. Akeret, a child less than two years of age, while proceeding along the walk with his mother, stumbled and fell into this pile of ashes, and burned his hands upon the coals and heated refuse underneath the ashes to such an extent that his right hand is permanently crippled. Casper A. Akeret, the father of the child, brought two actions for damages, one on behalf of the child and the other on his own behalf, and recovered a verdict in both. In the action brought by the father in his own behalf, defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. This motion was denied. Judgment was entered, and defendant appealed therefrom. In the action brought on behalf of the child, defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or for a new trial. This motion was also denied, and defendant appealed from the order denying it. The two cases were argued together and submitted upon one brief.

The important question presented is whether the city is liable in damages for injuries resulting from dangerous conditions in the walks or pathways in its public parks.

1. In establishing, maintaining, and caring for streets, highways, and public parks, a municipality acts in its governmental, and not in its proprietary, capacity. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L.R.A. 184, 63 N. W. 267, 65 N. W. 649, L.R.A.1915D.

68 N. W. 458; Schigley v. Waseca, 106 Minn. 94, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259, 16 Ann. Cas. 169; International Falls v. Minnesota, D. & W. R. Co. 117 Minn. 14, 134 N. W. 302; Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042; Hartford v. Maslen, 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740; Higginson v. The Treasurer (Higginson v. Slattery) 212 Mass. 583, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 99 N. E. 523; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605; Park Comrs. v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Bisbing v. Asbury Park, 80 N. J. L. 416, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 523, 78 Atl. 196. From the earliest times it has been the recognized rule that a municipality is not liable in damages for negligence in performing its governmental functions unless such liability had been imposed by statute. This rule has been recognized and applied many times by this court. Dodsall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185, 14 N. W. 458; Altnow v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191, 14 N. W. 877; Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, 53 Am. Rep. 31, 23 N. W. 220; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; Bank v. Brainerd School Dist. 49 Minn. 106, 51 N. W. 814; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278, 64 N. W. 812; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N. W. 788, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 183; Clausen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643, 14 Ann. Cas. 673; Brantman v. Canby, 119 Minn. 396, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 862, 138 N. W. 671. But by what is termed in Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 62 Minn. 175, 29 L.R.A. 708, 64 N. W. 382, as an "illogical exception to this rule," it has become firmly established in this state, and in most of the Middle and Western states, that a city is liable for injuries resulting from defects or dangerous conditions in its streets. 2 Dunnell's Dig. § 6814; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 420. The reasons assigned for making a distinction between such cases and those governed by the general rule are various, and not very satisfactory. The reason most generally assigned is that such municipalities, having been given the exclusive control over their streets with ample power to provide funds to care for and maintain them, are chargeable with the duty to keep them safe for travel, and that it follows by implication therefrom that they are liable for failure to perform such duty. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 420; Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284; Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 198, 53 Am. Rep. 23, 22 N. W. 444; Blyhl v. Waterville, 57 Minn. 115, 47 Am. St. Rep. 596, 58 N. W. 817; Peterson v. Cokato, 84 Minn. 205, 87 N. W. 615, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 576; Schigley v. Waseca, 106 Minn. 94, 19

L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259, 16 Ann. Cas. 169.

But it is difficult to see why the same reasoning would not also impose liability upon cities for negligence in performing many of their other governmental functions. It would certainly apply with equal force to the case now under consideration, for the city is given as plenary power in respect to its parks as in respect to its streets. In Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763, it is suggested that the distinction can best be sustained upon considerations of public policy and the doctrine of stare decisis. The exception, whether logical or otherwise, is now too firmly established to be questioned, and our present concern is to determine whether the case at bar is controlled by the exception or by the general rule. On examining the grounds upon which liability is imposed for defects in streets, we find that the same grounds exist for imposing liability for defects in the walks and pathways in question. These walks and pathways were used not merely for purposes of pleasure and recreation, but as thoroughfares for passing from one part of the city to another. They differed from other walks provided by the city for the use of pedestrians only in the fact that they were within the limits of a park. We find no substantial distinction between such walks and those located along the public streets. When we turn to the decided cases, we find a diversity of opinion. The New England states, as well as some others, do not recognize the exception to the general rule which we have been considering, and hold that a city is not liable for defects in its streets unless such liability is expressly imposed by statute, and, of course, also hold that it is not liable for defects in the paths and ways traversing its parks. Most of the cases cited by defendant are from states where such is the rule, and lack cogency in states which have adopted a different rule. Some courts, however, hold that a city is liable for negligence in respect to its streets, but is not liable for negligence in respect to its parks. Park Comrs. v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 150, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605. Other courts hold that it is also liable for negligence in respect to its parks. Denver v. Spencer, 34 Colo. 270, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 147, 114 Am. St. Rep. 158, 82 Pac. 590, 7 Ann. Cas. 1042, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 94; Barthold v. Philadelphia, 154 Pa. 109, 26 Atl. 304; Weber v. Harrisburg, 216 Pa. 117, 64 Atl. 905; Silverman v. New York (Sup.) 114 N. Y. Supp. 59. We find no sufficient ground for making a distinction between the walks and pathways in question and the ordinary sidewalks provided by the city for the use of pedestrians, and hold that the city is liable for dangerous conditions therein caused by its own employees. See Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 381.

2. The statute requires every person who claims damages from a city for injuries sustained by reason of defective streets, or through the negligence of city employees, to cause a written notice to be presented to its governing body stating the time, place, and circumstances of the injury, and the amount of compensation demanded. A notice was duly served stating the time, place, and circumstances of the accident in question; that the child was the infant son of Casper A. Ackeret, and that damages were claimed in the sum of $10,000. The notice was signed by the attorney for Casper A. Ackeret. Defendant contends that this notice is fatally defective in this: That the accident gave rise to two claims for damages,—one in favor of the father and one in favor of the child,—and that the notice states only one claim, and does not specify whether that is the claim of the child or of the father, and further contends that in any event the notice cannot serve as a basis for both actions. The purpose of the notice is to give the municipal officers information which will enable them to ascertain and investigate the facts while the evidence is available, and to determine whether a liability exists, and, if so, the nature and extent of such liability. While the essential requirements of the statute must be complied with, it has been determined that a claimant is not barred from maintaining his action because his notice was informal, or not technically accurate, if the information required by the statute could, in substance, be ascertained therefrom. Kelly v. Minneapolis, 77 Minn. 76, 79 N. W. 653; Nicol v. St. Paul, 80 Minn. 415, 83 N. W. 375; Terryll v. Faribault, 81 Minn. 519, 84 N. W. 458; Terryll v. Faribault, 84 Minn. 341, 87 N. W. 917; Kandelin v. Ely, 110 Minn. 55, 124 N. W. 449; Larkin v. Minneapolis, 112 Minn. 311, 127 N. W. 1129; Wornecka v. St. Paul, 118 Minn. 207, 136 N. W. 561.

The notice in question gave the officials full and accurate information as to the time, place, and circumstances of the injury. It also informed them that the one injured was the infant son of the one giving the notice, and that damages were claimed in the sum of $10,000. If the facts stated in the notice were true, the law gave the father the right to bring two actions,—one in his own behalf and one in behalf of his child. It is true that the notice did not state whether he made the claim in his own behalf, or in behalf of the child, or in behalf of both, and, if in behalf of both, that it did not apportion the damages between them. The natural inference would be that he was insisting upon all the rights given by the law. We think that all the essential facts were set forth, and that no prejudice resulted to defendant from the failure of the father to state specifically that he claimed damages both individually and as the statutory representative of his child, or from his failure to apportion the damages between the two claims. The purpose of the notice was fully accomplished, and we hold that it was not so defective as to bar either right of action.

3. In the action brought in his own behalf, the father sought to recover for the expenses which he had incurred in providing medical and surgical treatment for the child, and also for the partial loss of services which will result from the child's crippled condition. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that two causes of action were improperly united, and that there was a defect of parties plaintiff. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant answered. The same questions were again raised by objections interposed to the answer, and were again ruled against defendant. Defendant's contention is that the claim for loss of services vested in the father and mother jointly and that they must bring a joint action in order to recover therefor. This contention is based upon comparatively recent statutes. Section 7146, Gen. Stat. 1913, among other things provides: "Where husband and wife are living together, they shall be jointly and severally liable for all necessary household articles and supplies furnished to and used by the family."

Section 7442, Gen. Stat. 1913, states: "The father and mother are the natural guardians of their minor children, and, being themselves competent to transact their own business and not otherwise unsuitable, they are equally entitled to their custody and the care of their education. If either dies or is disqualified to act, the guardianship devolves upon the other."

Defendant insists that both parents are equally liable for the support of their children, and are equally entitled to the custody of them, and that it follows as a consequence that they are jointly entitled to the benefit of the services of the children, and must bring a joint action to recover for the loss of such services. This contention is correct to some extent, but we think it was neither the purpose nor the effect of these statutes to make any material change in the duty imposed upon the husband and father to support and maintain the family. Other late statutes making his failure to do so a criminal offense point strongly to the L.R.A.1915D.

contrary. Where he in fact performs this duty, we think he may maintain an action to recover for loss of the services of his minor child. If in fact he did not perform such duty, a different question would be presented, which is neither involved nor determined herein.

It follows that the order in one case and the judgment in the other are affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

TAX LIEN COMPANY OF NEW YORK,

Resp.,

v.

CATHERINE E. SCHULTZE et al.

WESLEY E. BARKER, Appt.

(213 N. Y. 9, 106 N. E. 751.)

Tax sale — cutting off easements.

1. A tax sale of real estate does not cut off easements of light, air, and access in it belonging to adjoining property owners, although the latter were made parties to the foreclosure proceeding and the judgment provided that each defendant be barred of all right, claim, lien, and easement in the property, if the complaint did not show that plaintiff sought to bar their superior easements.

Same — right to withdraw from bid.

2. A purchaser at tax sale is not bound to comply with his bid if the property is subject to easements of light, air, and access which materially affect its value.

(November 10, 1914.)

APPEAL by the purchaser from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Special Term, Part I., for New York County, relieving him from his bid at the sale and denying plaintiff's motion to compel him to take title, in an action to foreclose a tax lien. Reversed.

Statement by Chase, J.:

The action was brought pursuant to §§ 1035-1039 of the Greater New York charter (Laws of 1901, chap. 466, as

Note.—Tax sale as cutting off easement.

Attention is called to Jackson v. Smith, 153 App. Div. 724, 138 N. Y. Supp. 654, affirmed in 213 N. Y. 630, 107 N. E. 1079, referred to in opinion in TAX LIEN Co. v. SCHULTZE.

Notwithstanding a statutory provision that the purchaser at a tax sale obtains an absolute title free from all encumbrances, a purchaser at such a sale of prop-amended by chapter 490 of the Laws of 1908 and chapter 65 of the Laws of 1911), to foreclose a tax lien upon premises described in the judgment as follows: "Borough of the Bronx. New description, section 9. Block 2277, lot 50. Location, East 132d street, between Willis avenue and Brown place; assessed to unknown owner; on the land and tax map, city of New York, borough of Bronx."

Upon the sale pursuant to the judgment, the appellant, Wesley E. Barker, bid the sum of $5,000 therefor, and the property was struck off to him. He signed the terms of sale and paid $500 on account thereof. He subsequently refused to complete his purchase, for the alleged reason that the premises are affected by easements of light, air, and access in favor of adjoining owners, which are not cut off by the foreclosure of the tax lien, and which said liens were in no way referred to by the terms of sale. The plaintiff, so far as appears from the record, does not deny that there were easements of light, air, and access in favor of adjoining owners, but alleges that all of the adjoining owners were made parties defendant in the action to foreclose the tax lien, and that some of them appeared in the action, and others defaulted after being duly served with process, and that the judgment in the action provides: "That each and all of the defendants in the action who have been served with a summons, and all persons claiming under them or any of them after the filing of the notice of pendency of action, be and they are hereby forever barred and foreclosed of all right, claim, lien, title, interest, easement, and equity of redemption in the premises affected by the said transfer of tax lien, and each and every part thereof."

The motions were made at the special term and were heard together, one by the plaintiff to compel the appellant Barker to complete his purchase, and one by the appellant Barker to be relieved from his purchase.

erty subject to a right of way in favor of adjoining property does not acquire such property free from the easement, especially where the owner of the dominant tenement is not made a party to the proceeding. Blenis v. Utica Knitting Co. 73 Misc. 61, 130 N. Y. Supp. 740, affirmed in 149 App. Div. 936, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1126, which is affirmed in 210 N. Y. 561, 104 N. E. 1127. Motion for reargument denied, 210 N. Y. 614, 104 N. E. 1127.

Contrary to the rule announced in TAX LIEN CO. v. SCHULTZE, and the other New York cases above cited, it is held in Hanson v. Carr, 66 Wash. 81, 118 Pac. 927, that a sale of land for taxes terminated a right of way granted by the owner prior to L.R.A.1915D.

Mr. Edward Miehling, for appellant:

The foreclosure of a tax lien and the sale of premises pursuant to § 1035 of the Greater New York charter do not extinguish private easements of light, air, and access of adjoining owners over the land sold.

Jackson v. Smith, 153 App. Div. 724, 138 N. Y. Supp. 654; Blenis v. Utica Knitting Co. 73 Misc. 61, 130 N. Y. Supp. 740, 149 App. Div. 936, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1126, affirmed in 210 N. Y. 561, 104 N. E. 1127.

Mr. August Weymann, for respondent:

If there were easements affecting the tax lot sold to the purchaser in favor of abutting owners or encumbrancers, they were effectually cut off by the judgment of foreclosure and sale.

Jordan v. Van Epps, 85 N. Y. 427; Blakeley v. Calder, 15 N. Y. 617; 1 Black, Judgm. p. 245; Driggers v. Cassady, 71 Ala. 529; Wiltzie, Mortg. Foreclosure, § 565.

The judgment of foreclosure and sale herein is binding not only as to questions actually litigated, but as to all questions which might have been litigated in the action.

Jordan v. Van Epps, 85 N. Y. 436; Pray v. Hegeman, 98 N. Y. 351; Reich v. Cochran, 151 N. Y. 127, 37 L.R.A. 805, 56 Am. St. Rep. 607, 45 N. E. 367; Lorillard v. Clyde, 122 N. Y. 41, 19 Am. St. Rep. 470, 25 N. E. 292; Goebel v. Iffla, 111 N. Y. 170, 18 N. E. 649; Re Laudy, 161 N. Y. 434, 55 N. E. 914; Bloomer v. Sturges, 58 N. Y. 168.

The purchaser has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and cannot question the validity of the judgment.

Archer v. Archer, 155 N. Y. 415, 63 Am. St. Rep. 688, 50 N. E. 55; Blenis v. Utica Knitting Co. 73 Misc. 61, 130 N. Y. Supp. 740, 149 App. Div. 936, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1126; Paddell v. New York, 50 Misc. 422, 100 N. Y. Supp. 581, affirmed in 187 N. Y. 552, 80 N. E. 1114, 211 U. S. 446, 53 L. ed. 275, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 139, 15 Ann. Cas.

the tax foreclosure proceedings, under a statute giving a tax lien priority, and requiring it to be fully paid and satisfied before any recognizance, mortgage, judgment, debt, obligation, or responsibility to or with which such real estate may become charged or liable, where the owner of the easement did not have the land segregated and obtain a pro tanto reduction of the tax, as authorized by statute. The grant of the easement had been made within the period covered by the delinquent taxes for which the sale was afterwards had, but no point is made of this fact. The decision rests upon the principle that the tax is a paramount lien, and its foreclosure cuts off all charges upon the real estate.

W. A. E.

187; Haight v. New York, 99 N. Y. 280, 1 N. E. 883.

Chase, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

When an easement is carved out of one property for the benefit of another, the market value of the servient estate is thereby lessened, and that of the dominant increased, practically by just the value of the easement; the respective tenements should therefore be assessed accordingly. People ex rel. Poor v. Wells, 139 App. Div. 83, 87, 124 N. Y. Supp. 36, affirmed on opinion below in 200 N. Y. 518, 93 N. E. 1129. See Blenis v. Utica Knitting Co. 73 Misc. 61, 130 N. Y. Supp. 740, affirmed in 149 App. Div. 936, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1126, affirmed in 210 N. Y. 561, 104 N. E. 1127; Smith v. New York, 68 N. Y. 552, 557; People ex rel. Topping v. Purdy, 143 App. Div. 389, 128 N. Y. Supp. 569, affirmed in 202 N. Y. 550, 95 N. E. 1137; Re Hall, 116 App. Div. 729, 102 N. Y. Supp. 5, affirmed in 189 N. Y. 552, 82 N. E. 1127.

The assessment of the lot described in the judgment did not include the easements appurtenant to the adjoining real property. The assessment of the servient estate was subject to the easements included in the assessments of the dominant estate. As a necessary consequence it has been held that, on the foreclosure of a tax lien and a sale of the premises pursuant to §§ 1035-1039 of the Greater New York charter, private easements of light, air, and access of adjoining owners over the land sold are not extinguished. If property rights which are excluded from an assessment are sold or extinguished by a tax sale, there would be a taking of property without due process of law. Jackson v. Smith, 153 App. Div. 724, 138 N. Y. Supp. 654, affirmed on opinion below by decision handed down herewith in 213 N. Y. 630, 107 N. E. 1079.

The owners of the property adjoining the property described at the tax sale, including the easements over the property so described, were not necessary parties to the action to foreclose the tax lien. They were made parties to the action, and the question now arises whether the easements of those who made default in appearing in the action are cut off by the judgment taken against them by such default. We are not in this case considering the propriety of making a person who claims in hostility to a tax lien a party defendant in an action to foreclose such lien. The question before the court is as to the effect of making a person claiming an interest superior to a tax lien a party in a case, where the propriety of making such a person a party defendant is not in any way presented in the action.

It is a general rule that a judgment is conclusive between the parties and their privies upon all matters embraced within the issues in the action which were or might have been litigated therein. It is immaterial whether issues are joined by an answer to the complaint or tendered by the plaintiff and left unanswered. The rule applies as well to a judgment by default, when the facts stated warrant the relief sought, as to one rendered after contest. Goebel v. Iffa, 111 N. Y. 170, 18 N. E. 649.

Was the question whether the defendants had easements in the property described, that are superior to the tax lien, an issue in the action? The answer to the question should be determined from the judgment roll.

The judgment roll was referred to in the notices of motion, but it is not a part of the record. In one of the affidavits upon which the plaintiff's motion is founded it is stated that certain defendants were named as such to cut off possible easements or rights of way. The statement, we assume, is that of the affiant, and not a quotation from the complaint. It is in one of the affidavits stated that the complaint alleges: "That all of the defendants have or may have, and the plaintiff believes that such defendants have or may have, an interest in or claim upon the real property hereinafter described by way of lien, mortgage, devise, dower right, purchase, easement, operation of law, inheritance from or marriage with any of the above-named defendants or otherwise."

It is not disputed that the defendants were the owners of easements appurtenant to adjoining lands. Such easements were acquired prior to the tax lien and were not subject to it.

If a plaintiff in any foreclosure action chooses to make a person, who claims that he holds a lien upon or interest in the property sought to be foreclosed that is prior and superior to the claim of the plaintiff, a party defendant, either for the purpose of determining the amount of the claim and paying it from the proceeds of sale, or of having the same declared to be subject and subordinate to his lien, such claim should be clearly stated in the complaint. When a plaintiff so clearly states his claim in a complaint, the defendant must appear in the action and present his claim by appropriate pleading or pleadings, and, if necessary, by proof, or suffer the ordinary consequences of a default.

If the plaintiff's claim is not so clearly stated in the complaint, but some general allegations are used therein to the effect that a claim is made by the defendant "as subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer or otherwise," it will not bar the defendant of rights that are superior and paramount to that of the plaintiff, if he default therein. Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706; Merchants' Bank v. Thomson, 55 N. Y. 7; Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank v. Goldman, 75 N. Y. 127; Goebel v. Iffla, supra; Nelson v. Brown, 144 N. Y. 384, 39 N. E. 355; Anderson v. McNeely, 120 App. Div. 676, 105 N. Y. Supp. 278; Fern v. Osterhout, 11 App. Div. 319, 42 N. Y. Supp. 450; Barker v. Burton, 67 Barb. 458.

Applying the rule stated to this case, it does not appear from the record that there was anything in the complaint to show the defendants that the plaintiff disputed or sought to bar their prior and superior easement of light, air, and access over the property which it sought to sell in the action. As the question of the defendants' having prior and superior easements to the tax lien was not tendered as an issue in the foreclosure action, the defendants are not bound by the judgment therein.

The easements over the real property bid off by the appellant at the foreclosure sale materially affected its value, and he was not tendered a title to such real property that he was bound to accept.

The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and that of the Special Term affirmed, with costs in both courts.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Werner, Hiscock, Hogan, Miller, and Cardozo, JJ., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

A. G. EMBREY, Appt.,

v.

H. W. ADAMS.

(— Ala. —, 68 So. 20.)

Duress — threat to prosecute parents.

A deed secured for a grossly inadequate consideration, by threats to send the grantor's father to the chain gang for an alleged offense, will be set aside for duress.

(February 11, 1915.)

Note. — Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative.

For the earlier cases on this question, see the notes to City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 26 L.R.A. 48; Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 484; and Ball v. Ball, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539. L.R.A.1915D.

APPPEAL by respondent from a decree of the County Court for Shelby County overruling a demurrer to a bill filed to set aside a deed for duress. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Riddle, Ellis, & Riddle for appellant.

Messrs. Haynes & Wallace and Samuel Henderson, for appellee:

The court below did not err in its refusal to sustain respondent's demurrers to the bill of complaint, and in not dismissing it for want of equity.

Martin v. Evans, 163 Ala. 657, 50 So. 997; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 111 Ala. 466, 20 So. 651; Holt v. Agnew, 67 Ala. 369; Bishop, Contr. § 718; Glass v. Haygood, 133 Ala. 489, 31 So. 973; Treadwell v. Torbert, 133 Ala. 504, 32 So. 126; Royal v. Goss, 154 Ala. 117, 45 So. 231.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this cause avers that appellee, H. W. Adams, owns jointly or as tenant in common with the appellant, A. G. Embrey, certain lands in Shelby county, Alabama; that said lands were purchased and conveyed to appellee and his mother, M. A. Adams; and that, after the death of his mother, appellee's father, H. D. Adams, sold and conveyed said lands by warranty deed to the appellant.

The fifth paragraph of the bill alleges: "That on the 7th day of August, 1908, respondent came to this complainant at or near Harpersville, in Shelby county, Alabama, and stated to him that complainant's father, H. D. Adams, had procured or obtained his money under false pretense. Respondent further told this complainant that, if he did not execute a deed to the said respondent, covering his interest in the lands right then, he (the respondent) would put complainant's father in the chain gang. Upon complainant's refusal to execute the said deed to respondent, he (the said respondent) turned his horses towards Columbiana, stating at the time that he had seen lawyers at Columbiana and would drive down and have the papers issued; that, acting under extreme distress and what he thought the necessity of the case required, he (this complainant) did execute a deed to said respondent covering said lands, and which was the only property he owned; that the only consideration paid by the said respondent to the complainant was the sum of $25, which was totally and wholly inadequate as payment for complainant's interest in said lands, complainant averring that his interest in said lands was worth at least $1,000. Complainant avers that he had no advice and acted hastily and under extreme distress and surprise and without due deliberation, and that he forced his wife to sign her name to said deed solely and for the purpose of preventing the prosecution and possible conviction of his father."

As opposed to public policy, as compounding a felony.

Supplementing notes in 26 L.R.A. 49, and 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 484.

As shown in the above notes, contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative have been declared invalid for il-

By the sixth paragraph of the bill it is averred that offer to pay the purchase price of $25, with interest thereon, was made, and readiness on the part of complainant, at all times, to repay the same is also thereby averred.

The prayer of the bill is that the deed of conveyance thus executed by complainant and wife be canceled and removed as a cloud on complainant's title, upon the payment of the sum of $25, and interest thereon, to the appellant, and that on final hearing said lands be sold for the purpose of dividing the proceeds among the several joint owners or tenants in common. The respondent in the court below demurred to the bill on the ground that "the same contains no equity." The case being heard by the judge of the county court of Shelby, exercising jurisdiction in equity, the demurrer was overruled. From this action of the trial court appeal was duly taken, and errors are assigned thereon in this court.

The solicitors for the appellant, in the brief filed in this court, thus state the issue: "The sum and substance of the bill is that H. D. Adams, the father of the complain-legality of consideration in numerous cases where it is clearly established that there was an agreement not to prosecute.

Thus, where a father, while his son was under arrest on a charge of cheating and swindling in the purchase of a mule, was induced by the seller to sign, as a joint maker with a son, a promissory note for the purchase price of the mule, the inducement being an agreement by the seller that if the father would sign the note he would withdraw the warrant against the son and stop the prosecution, the acts constituted a defense, in favor of the father, to a suit upon the note. Cromer v. Evett, 11 Ga. App. 654, 75 S. E. 1056.

So, where the maker of a note forged the indorsements of his father-in-law and brother-in-law, and upon discovering the forgery the payee procured a guaranty of the indorsement from the father-in-law, and brother-in-law, upon the understanding that the maker would not be prosecuted for the forgery if such a guaranty was given, they were not estopped from denying the validity of their signatures, there being a statute in force making an agreement not to prosecute for a felony a crime. Catskill Nat. Bank v. Lasher, 165 App. Div. 548, 151 N. Y. Supp. 191.

What is paid by a father to prevent the arrest of his son upon a warrant issued against him for obtaining money under false pretenses, which charges were absolutely false, may be recovered. Sykes v. Thompson, 160 N. C. 348, 76 S. E. 252. The court pointed out the illegality of the contract and said that a recovery may be sustained by the more innocent party notwithstanding the illegal features of the agreement, especially when the party seeking relief has been induced to enter into the agreement by fraud or undue influence.

But in Higgins v. Sowards, 159 Ky. 783, 169 S. W. 554, a mortgage given to secure a note of the mortgagor's son-in-law, covering the amount of the son-in-law's shortage in his accounts, was sustained where it was evident that the mortgagor was not induced to execute the note and mortgage by way of compounding a felony, there having been no promise not to prosecute the son-in-law.

And where the consideration for the giving of a bond by the father of the defendant in a bastardy proceeding was not the abandonment of the charge of a statutory offense with a girl under the age of consent, but was a relinquishment of a claim for the maintenance of the child, if any, to be born of the illicit relations, the bond was valid and enforceable. Meredith v. Knox, — Del. Ch. —, 83 Atl. 703.

So, in Godding v. Hall, 56 Colo. 579, 140 Pac. 165, it appeared that the defendant's husband was an officer of a bank which had become insolvent through his defalcations, and that she gave her trust deed upon property which had been bought with the misappropriated funds and given to her by the husband, the deed containing a recital as follows: And whereas the time and attention of the late officers of said bank is required to assist in the realization of such assets, and it being the wish and desire of the undersigned that such officers shall not be hampered or delayed by trivial or other persecutions or prosecutions, and therefore the conveyance hereinafter made is upon the condition that their time and attention be left for such assistance," it was held that the deed was valid and enforceable, inasmuch as neither by oral agreement nor by the language of the instrument itself did it appear that there was an agreement that plaintiff's husband should not be prosecuted for the defalcation, and further, even if the court were to give the deed the construction contended for by appellant, still the conveyance would be in full force and effect for the reason that the condition relied on was not a condition precedent, but subsequent, and where a condition is illegal, indefinite, uncertain, unreasonable, or repugnant to the nature of the instrument to which it was annexed, such condition is void and renders the grantee's estate absolute.

ant, sold to and made this respondent a deed to 80 acres of land in Shelby county, for which the respondent paid the said H. D. Adams, thinking thereby that he was acquiring a complete title to the lands involved in this suit." That, when appellant found out that appellee's "father had practised a fraud, he (Embrey) threatened to prosecute and convict H. D. Adams, complainant's father, for obtaining his money under false pretense, and the complainant, W. H. Adams, to keep his father from being prosecuted and convicted, agreed to and did make respondent Embrey a deed to the land, Embrey paying him the additional consideration of $25, etc."

The demurrer questions the sufficiency of the averment of the bill for relief in a court of equity.

In Kirby v. Arnold, — Ala. —, 68 So. 17, we have collected the general authorities on the subject of duress and undue influence, the consensus of which we believe is decisive of this appeal.

The doctrine is declared in Martin v. Evans, 163 Ala. 657, 50 So. 997, that, where one conveys lands on the representation by the grantee that a son of the grantor has embezzled funds from the grantee, coupled with the threat that the son will be prosecuted for the embezzlement unless the conveyance is executed, the grantor is entitled to have it set aside as having been obtained under duress and undue influence, and without consideration.

Voidable on the ground of duress.

Supplementing notes in 26 L.R.A. 48; 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403; and 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539.

As shown in the above notes, contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative have been declared voidable upon the ground of duress in numerous cases; there being a well-established exception to the general rule that the law does not regard a person as under duress who enters into a contract to relieve another person, and not himself, where the subject of the duress is the wife, husband, parent, child, or other near relative.

To avoid a promissory note given to prevent a threatened imprisonment of the makers' son, it is not necessary that the means used to procure the note were such as to overcome the mind of an ordinary man, but that they were sufficient to overcome the minds of the makers in the condition in which they were in at the time; so, where it appeared that the makers of such a note were aged and feeble, and not persons of ordinary courage and firmness, they could repudiate such a contract on the ground of duress, even though the threats would not influence persons differently constituted. Anthony & C. Co. v. Brown, 214 Mass. 439, 101 N. E. 1056.

Where the feelings or affections of a wife are worked upon through criminal proceedings instituted against her husband, and she is induced thereby against her will to convey her property through the medium of her husband to his creditors, to pay his debts and obtain his release from imprisonment, there is duress as to her, and a purchaser from the husband's creditor with notice of the wife's equity cannot prevail in an action to recover the land from her. Jordan v. Beecher, post, 1122.

A married woman who involuntarily mortgages her separate estate or homestead to secure an individual indebtedness of her husband may have the lien canceled in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, where she was induced to execute it by the mortgagee's threats to imprison her husband for felony. L.R.A.1915D.

ously disposing of mortgaged chattels. Hoellworth v. McCarthy, 93 Neb. 240, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, 140 N. W. 141.

A note executed by a woman to save her brother from threatened imprisonment on the charge of embezzlement is void for duress. Kronmeyer v. Buck, 258 Ill. 586, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1182, 101 N. E. 935.

In Kirby v. Arnold, — Ala. —, 68 So. 17, a deed procured by a man of affairs from an ignorant negro woman for a grossly inadequate consideration, upon threat of prosecution of her aged grandfather, was annulled.

And in EMBREY v. ADAMS, above reported, it was held that a deed secured for grossly inadequate consideration, by threats to have the grantor's father arrested immediately and sent to prison for an alleged fraud in the sale of lands, will be set aside for duress.

The right to avoid a contract because of duress consisting of a threat to imprison a near relative may be extended to a mother-in-law who signs a contract to prevent the prosecution of her daughter's husband, if it appears that the son-in-law and his wife are living in harmony and there is nothing to show any estrangement between the mother-in-law and the son-in-law. Fountain v. Bigham, 235 Pa. 35, 84 Atl. 131, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1188.

But a married woman cannot avoid a contract and deed of trust executed by her because of dread of prosecution of her husband for embezzlement, where it does not appear that any threat of prosecution of her husband was ever made to her by anyone representing the plaintiff, nor that any representative of the plaintiff induced her to execute the contract and deed of trust by any threat of such prosecution. Goodrum v. Merchants' & P. Bank, 102 Ark. 326, 144 S. W. 198, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 511.

And a mortgage executed by a wife upon her separate property, to indemnify a surety upon the official bond of her husband, and who had misappropriated the funds coming into his hands by virtue of his office, in the hope that, or upon assur-

The consideration averred to have been paid for the property involved in this suit was a grossly inadequate one, and the facts here are substantially those on which the decision was based in Martin v. Evans, supra. This wholesome doctrine of relief in equity was extended in Kirby v. Arnold, supra, to the threat of prosecution of a grandfather; and in Holt v. Agnew, 67 Ala. 360, 373, to such a threat against a husband.

In McClintick v. Cummins, 3 McLean, 158, 159, Fed. Cas. No. 8,699, it was said: "The father and son may each avoid his obligation by duress of the other; and so a husband may avoid his deed by duress of his wife."

But it has long been the habit of courts of equity to relieve parties from contracts made under the influence of threats, or of apprehensions not amounting to legal duress. Where a fraudulent advantage has been taken of the fears, the affections, or the sensibilities of a party, equity will grant relief. Judge Story says that circumstances of extreme necessity and distress of a party, though not accompanied by any direct restraint or duress, may so entirely overcome his free agency as to justify the court in setting aside a contract made by him on account of some oppression or fraudulent advantage or imposition attendant upon it. In such case he has no free will, but stands in vinculis. 2 Story, Eq. § 239.

Mr. Justice Morton, in Harris v. Carmody, 131 Mass. 51-54, 41 Am. Rep. 188, says: "In a note to Bayly v. Clare, 2 Bownl. & G. 275, 276, in the common bench, Michaelmas term, 7 Jac. 1, it is said that 'the husband ance from her husband that, the execution of such a mortgage would save him from arrest and imprisonment, is not void for want of sufficient consideration. Nor is it void as having been obtained under duress, where it appears that the mortgagee neither in person nor through an attorney or agent resorted to any undue means by way of threats or deception to obtain the execution of such mortgage. Bode v. Jussen, 93 Neb. 482, 140 N. W. 768; Jussen v. Bode, 93 Neb. 490, 140 N. W. 771.

And in Maddox v. Rowe, 154 Ky. 417, 157 S. W. 714, where a wife executed a mortgage to a bank of which her husband was an officer, to secure indebtedness which he had incurred to the bank in violation of law, and it appeared that she understood the matter perfectly and was in her usual frame of mind at the time she executed the mortgage, it was held that no such duress was shown as would avoid the mortgage.

And in Sulzner v. Cappeau-Lemley & M. Co. 234 Pa. 162, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421, 83 Atl. 103, it was held that a transfer of stock cannot be set aside for duress, because of a threat to imprison the son of the transferor, who had made the contract for the transfer, if no steps towards the arrest had been taken, where it appeared that the transferor was an experienced business man of ordinary firmness, and that both he and his son were at liberty to come and go as they chose, and had ample time to consult an attorney had they so desired. The court said: "Ordinarily, when no proceedings have been commenced, threats of arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment do not constitute legal duress to avoid a contract. The threats must be made under such circumstances that they excite the fear of imminent and immediate imprisonment."

The threat of a lawful arrest for a crime which has actually been committed is not itself a sufficient ground for the cancellation of a mortgage which has been executed as a result of such threat, to cover the loss occasioned by the commission of such crime: so, where a son had mortgaged his mother's horses for his own debt and in his own name, an offense for which he could legally L.R.A.1915D.

have been arrested, and the mother signed the mortgage to prevent such arrest, it will not be deemed to have been executed under duress. Englert v. Dale, 25 N. D. 587, 142 N. W. 169.

A contract obtained by duress may be ratified; so, where a married woman joined in the execution of a deed in the nature of a mortgage, to secure payment of the value of property which her husband has misappropriated, and later gave a quitclaim deed of her interest in the property, and delayed a suit disaffirming the conveyance for nearly three years, during which time the person to whom the property had been conveyed died, and there was no haste exhibited at the time of the execution of the quitclaim deed, and no threats made or communicated to her at that time, it was held that she had ratified the deed. Guinn v. Sumpter Valley R. Co. 63 Or. 368, 127 Pac. 987.

A father who was induced by the payee to sign a note in order to save his son from arrest and stop a prosecution for cheating and swindling in the purchase of a mule is not precluded from setting up duress as a defense to an action on the note, without showing that the arrest was illegal by virtue of the statute providing that "legal imprisonment, if not used for illegal purposes, is not duress," since the arrest was used for an illegal purpose in coercing the father to sign the note. Cromer v. Evett, 11 Ga. App. 654, 75 S. E. 1056.

Where a husband and wife conveyed their homestead, and the husband transferred personal property to cover a shortage in his accounts with the corporation by which he was employed, and it appeared that all of the proved shortage would have been covered by the personal property transferred, it was held, although there was no actual threat of prosecution, that under the circumstances the wife's participation in the conveyance of the homestead was without legal consideration, and, as to her, a decree of the trial court canceling the conveyance of the homestead was affirmed. Clement v. Buckley Mercantile Co. 172 Mich. 243, 137 N. W. 656.

R. L. S.

may avoid the deed that he hath sealed by the duress of imprisonment of his wife or son. . . . But a son shall avoid his deed by duress to his father. M. 7 Ja. B. per Coke. The husband shall avoid a deed by duress to his wife. M. 7 Ja. B. per Coke." 1 Rolle, Abr. 687, pls. 4-6.

Lord Bacon declared: "So, if a man menace me, that he will imprison or hurt in body my father or my child except I make unto him an obligation, I shall avoid this duress, as well as if the duress had been to mine own person." Bacon, Maxims, reg. 18.

The same law is explicitly laid down without question by the author of Bacon's Abridgment, and by Mr. Dane and by Mr. Justice McLean. Bacon, Abr. Duress, B. 5 Dane, Abr. 166, 375.

In McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hamilton, 73 Wis. 486-495, 41 N. W. 727, 730, where many authorities are collected, the court declared: "The contract is then void by every principle of equity. It is the worst species of fraud, because it attacks the weakest point of human nature, and appeals to natural affection. What will not a mother do to save her child from imprisonment for crime of which he is not guilty?" The threat in this case was that, unless she executed a mortgage, the plaintiff would cause the imprisonment of her son for a crime of which the latter was not in fact guilty.

In Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 251, 29 N. E. 528, it is said by the court: "It has sometimes been held that threats of imprisonment, to constitute duress, must be of unlawful imprisonment. But the question is whether the threat is of imprisonment which will be unlawful in reference to the conduct of the threatener who is seeking to obtain a contract by his threat. Imprisonment that is suffered through the execution of a threat which was made for the purpose of forcing a guilty person to enter into a contract may be lawful as against the authorities and the public, but unlawful as against the threatener, when considered in reference to his effort to use for his private benefit processes provided for the protection of the public and the punishment of crime. One who has overcome the mind and will of another for his own advantage, under such circumstances, is guilty of a perversion and abuse of laws which were made for another purpose, and he is in no position to claim the advantage of a formal contract obtained in that way, on the ground that the rights of the parties are to be determined by their language and their overt acts, without reference to the influences which moved them. In such a case, there is no reason why one should be bound by a contract obtained by force, L.R.A.1916D.

which in reality is not his, but another's." Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 111 Ala. 456, 466, 20 So. 651.

In Glass v. Haygood, 133 Ala. 489, 31 So. 973, the rule of duress was declared to apply when the possession of one's goods is unlawfully held against him, and he has such an important, urgent, and immediate occasion for their possession and use as cannot be subserved by a resort to courts to recover them; he may avoid any contract he enters into with the wrongdoer in order to regain the possession of his goods.

We thus see that both ancient and modern authorities agree that the doctrine of duress or threat of punishment to husband or to wife, or to parent or to child, is based upon the nearness and tenderness of the relation, applying as strongly to the case of parent and child as to that of husband and wife. No more powerful or restraining force can be brought to bear upon a man, to overcome his will and extort from him an obligation, than the threat of great injury or punishment to wife or child or parent.

The County Court, exercising jurisdiction in equity, was correct in overruling the demurrer that the bill contained no equity, and the decree is affirmed.

Anderson, Ch. J., and Mayfield and Somerville, JJ., concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

H. H. JORDAN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

E. C. BEECHER et al.

(— Ga. —, 84 S. E. 549.)

Duress — criminal process to collect debt.

1. The law does not countenance the employment of criminal process for the collection of debts. Where a criminal warrant is issued and its principal object is to enforce the collection of a debt due to a corporation of which the magistrate issuing the warrant is the president, and the defendant is imprisoned under such warrant, a conveyance of property to the prosecuting creditor, obtained by means of such imprisonment, in order to secure his release, is void.

Same — conveyance by wife.

2. Where the fears or affection of a wife

Headnotes by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — As to contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative, see notes to City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 26 L.R.A. 48; Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 484; Ball v. Ball, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539; and Embrey v. Adams, ante, 1118.

are worked upon through criminal proceedings instituted against her husband, and she is induced thereby against her will to convey her property, through the medium of her husband, to her husband's creditor, to pay her husband's debt and obtain his release from imprisonment, there is duress as to her, and a purchaser from the husband's creditor, with notice of the wife's equity, cannot prevail in an action to recover the land from her.

Trial — instructions.

3. The court's instruction is not open to the criticism made of it

(February 11, 1915.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Coffee County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain land. Affirmed.

Statement by Evans, P. J.:

H. H. Jordan brought an action against E. C. Beecher and Drucilla Beecher to recover possession of a tract of land. In the abstract of title incorporated in the petition it appeared that the plaintiff claimed title by virtue of a deed from Drucilla Beecher to E. C. Beecher, dated December 16, 1908, upon a voluntary consideration, and a deed from E. C. Beecher to the Henderson-Powell Company, dated December 17, 1908, and a deed from Henderson-Powell Company to the plaintiff, dated August 23, 1911. The defendants pleaded that they sustained the relation of husband and wife, that the deed from the wife to the husband and his deed to the Henderson-Powell Company were obtained by duress and were without consideration, and were given for the purpose of settling a debt due by the husband to the Henderson-Powell Company, and in settlement of a criminal prosecution instituted by the Henderson-Powell Company against the husband. The evidence made the following case: The plaintiff testified that he bought the land from the Henderson-Powell Company in August, 1911, on a consideration of $500, which was evidenced by his two notes of $250 each, indorsed by his brother-in-law, and payable in December, 1912 and 1913; that he did not pay the first note when it fell due, nor has he paid either of them; that he is a farmer by occupation; that the manager of the Henderson-Powell Company approached him to sell him the land, and informed him that it was unoccupied. He had never seen the land, but inquired as to its value, and was told that it was worth from $1,000 to $1,200. In fact, the land was worth $1,500. He did not inspect the land, but agreed to purchase it, if the title was approved by his brother-in-law. He did not know at the time he bought the land that the defendants had any claim to it, and he bought in good faith. The draftsman of the deeds from Mr. and Mrs. Beecher testified, in behalf of the plaintiff, that he explained to Mrs. Beecher, at the time the deeds were drawn, that the only way she could transfer her property to her husband was by making him a deed of gift; that she could not be forced to make such a deed, and need not do it unless she wanted to, to which Mrs. Beecher replied that it was her desire to make the deed and pay her husband's debt. He further told the defendants, at the time of making the deeds, that they did not settle the criminal prosecution against her husband, and that it could not be settled. Mrs. Beecher signed the deed willingly, stating that she was perfectly willing to deed this property to her husband, so he could pay his debts.

The substance of the testimony of the defendants was as follows: In 1908 the husband became indebted to the Henderson-Powell Company for supplies, and on failing to pay in the fall of the year, the manager of that corporation sued out a warrant before a justice of the peace, who was the president of the corporation. He was arrested and put in jail. His creditors agreed to his release on condition that he would procure his wife to make him a deed to the land, and he in turn execute a deed to them. Beecher promised to do this and was allowed to go to his home, but in a few days he was rearrested and put in jail. Henderson, the president of the Henderson-Powell Company, told him that if he would convey this property to that company in settlement of his debt, they would release him from jail and settle the criminal prosecution which they had instituted; but if he refused to do it, they intended to push the prosecution, and he would probably be found guilty and have to serve a term in the chain gang. He informed his wife that the only way to get out of his trouble and settle the prosecution was to give a deed to the Henderson-Powell Company to her land. The wife met her husband in the office of the attorney of the Henderson-Powell Company, and there, in the presence of the president of the Henderson-Powell Company and the sheriff, who had the husband in custody, the wife made the husband a deed upon a purported consideration of love and affection, and the husband executed to his creditors, the Henderson-Powell Company, a deed upon a purported consideration of $275, and he was then released at the bidding of the creditor. The wife was unwilling to convey her land to her husband, and only did so to bring about his release from imprisonment. During the time between this transaction and the bringing of the suit (more than three years), neither the Henderson-Powell Company nor the plaintiff ever returned the property for taxation, but it was returned for taxation by Mrs. Beecher, and she paid the taxes on it. She and her husband have been in possession of the land since the execution of the deeds. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants.

Messrs. H. E. Oxford, Newbern & Meeks, and F. W. Dart, for plaintiff in error:

Courts of justice will not lend their aid to enforce an immoral or illegal contract; if it be executed they will not disturb it, but leave the parties where they find them.

Howell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 176, 46 Am. Dec. 415; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Parrott v. Baker, 82 Ga. 365, 9 S. E. 1068; Ellis v. Hammond, 57 Ga. 179; Garrison v. Burns, 98 Ga. 762, 26 S. E. 471; Beard v. White, 120 Ga. 1019, 48 S. E. 400.

Possession of the defendants was no notice to the plaintiff at the time of his purchase, in the face of the solemn, recorded deeds of the defendants, showing title out of themselves.

Malette v. Wright, 120 Ga. 735, 48 S. E. 229; Jay v. Welchel, 78 Ga. 789, 3 S. E. 906.

Messrs. L. E. Heath and C. A. Ward, for defendants in error:

A wife may avoid her contract on the ground of duress, when it was extorted by threat of the criminal prosecution of her husband.

City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 88 Wis. 188, 26 L.R.A. 48, 43 Am. St. Rep. 880, 59 N. W. 564; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hamilton, 73 Wis. 486, 41 N. W. 727.

Defendant was not in pari delicto within the meaning of the term, and she has a right to set up the fraud complained of in the evidence, and in the defendant's pleadings.

Jones v. Dannenberg Co. 112 Ga. 426, 52 L.R.A. 271, 37 S. E. 729; Taylor v. Allen, 112 Ga. 333, 37 S. E. 408; Exchange Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 139 Ga. 260, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 549, 77 S. E. 37.

The deed from Drucilla Beecher to her husband was not a bona fide deed of gift, but a colorable transaction, and the facts attending the execution of the deed do not take the matter out of the operation of the statute prohibiting a wife from conveying land to her husband without the approval of the judge of the superior court.

National Bank v. Carlton, 96 Ga. 469, 23 S. E. 388; Central Bank & T. Corp. v. Almand, 135 Ga. 231, 69 S. E. 111; Blackburn v. Lee, 137 Ga. 266; 73 S. E. 1; Deen v. Williams, 128 Ga. 265, 57 S. E. 427; Bond L.R.A.1915D.

v. Sullivan, 133 Ga. 160, 134 Am. St. Rep. 199, 65 S. E. 376; Kent v. Plumb, 57 Ga. 207; Small v. Williams, 87 Ga. 685, 13 S. E. 589; Cromer v. Everett, 11 Ga. App. 654, 75 S. E. 1056; Cook v. Hightower & Son, 11 Ga. App. 657, 75 S. W. 1058.

Evans, P. J. delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants set up two defenses. One was that the deeds from the wife to the husband and from the husband to his creditor were executed for the purpose of paying the husband's creditor with the wife's land, and that plaintiff acquired his deed from the husband's creditor with notice of the wife's equity. This issue was submitted to the jury by the court, under instructions to which no exception is taken. The defendants further defended on the ground that the deeds were procured by duress, and in settlement of a criminal prosecution against the husband. Upon that plea the court instructed the jury that, if they should find that the deeds from Mrs. Beecher to her husband and from him to the Henderson-Powell Company were executed in consideration that the Henderson-Powell Company were not to press the criminal prosecution against the husband, such deeds would be void, even as against a bona fide purchaser. In assigning error on this instruction, no exception is taken to the court's declaration on the effect of such conveyance upon subsequent bona fide purchasers without notice. The criticism is that an absolute deed of conveyance is an executed contract, and the grantor cannot impeach it as a muniment of title in the hands of the grantee or a purchaser from him, even though possession has not been yielded under it and it is not founded on a valuable consideration; that E. C. Beecher and Drucilla Beecher are estopped from taking advantage of their own wrong by contending that their deeds are void; that they do not come into court with clean hands, and are not entitled to a cancelation of their deeds. There can be no doubt that a contract to stifle a criminal prosecution is illegal and opposed to public policy, and, if the parties voluntarily enter into such contract, they are in pari delicto, and neither a court of law nor of equity will interpose to give relief to either party, but will leave the parties where they find them. Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404. It has also been decided that a deed upon an illegal consideration, being an executed contract, binds the parties where the illegality does not appear in the deed, and passes to the grantee a title upon which he can recover the premises from the grantor in ejectment. Parrott v.

Baker, 82 Ga. 364, 371, 9 S. E. 1068; Beard v. White, 120 Ga. 1018, 48 S. E. 400.

The case presented by this record is not one for the enforcement of an executed contract, but for the cancelation of deeds executed under duress of imprisonment. Our Code declares:

"The free assent of the parties being essential to a valid contract, duress, either of imprisonment or by threats, or other acts, by which the free will of the party is restrained and his consent induced, will void the contract. Legal imprisonment, if not used for illegal purposes, is not duress." Civil Code 1910, § 4255.

"Duress," as defined by the Civil Code 1910, § 4116, "consists in any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will."

In the instant case not only was the imprisonment of Beecher used to coerce a deed from his wife to himself and from him to his creditor, but that imprisonment, according to the uncontroverted testimony, was upon a warrant issued by his creditor, who was a magistrate. Its principal purpose was to accomplish a payment of the husband's debt with the wife's land, the value of which was largely in excess of the debt. This court has said that it was improper for a magistrate to give a warrant to the prosecutor to execute, although the prosecutor be a constable, and that it was doubtful whether such constable had the right to deputize another person to assist him in the execution of the warrant. Davis v. State, 79 Ga. 767, 4 S. E. 318. Surely it is against public policy for a magistrate to issue a warrant for an alleged offense against himself, and for the purpose of having the warrant used as a means of collecting a debt in which he is beneficially interested. Richardson v. Welcome, 6 Cush. 331; Jordan v. Henry, 22 Minn. 245. Says Mr. Justice Clifford, in Baker v. Morton, 12 Wall. 150, 158, 20 L. ed. 262, 264: "Actual violence is not necessary to constitute duress even at common law, as understood in the parent country, because consent is the very essence of a contract, and if there be compulsion there is no consent, and it is well-settled law that moral compulsion, such as that produced by threats to take life or to inflict great bodily harm, as well as that produced by imprisonment, is sufficient to destroy free agency, without which there can be no contract, as in that state of the case there is no consent."

So far as the record discloses, there was no foundation for the charge preferred L.R.A.1915D.

against the husband. He was allowed to go home, on his promise to procure a deed from his wife, and return to make his creditor a deed. The creditor became impatient of his return and had him rearrested and put in jail. When he and his wife signed deeds conveying his wife's land to his creditor, he was in the custody of the sheriff, who then released him at the creditor's bidding.

Though a person is arrested under a legal warrant by a proper officer, yet, if one of the objects of the arrest is thereby to enforce the settlement of a civil claim, such arrest is a false imprisonment, and a release and conveyance of property obtained by means of such arrest is void. Hackett v. King, 6 Allen, 58; Watkins v. Baird, 6 Mass. 506, 4 Am. Dec. 170; Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 205, 215, 19 L. ed. 134, 137; Fillman v. Ryon, 168 Pa. 484, 32 Atl. 89; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 111 Ala. 456, 20 So. 651; Osborn v. Robbins, 36 N. Y. 365.

As has already been adverted to, where parties enter into an agreement seeking to stifle a criminal prosecution, the parties are in pari delicto, and the law refuses to aid either of them against the other. That rule applies where the nature of the undertakings and stipulation of each, if considered by themselves alone, would show the parties equally in fault; but where the incidental circumstances, such as imposition, oppression, duress, undue influence, taking advantage of necessities or weaknesses, and the like, are used as a means of inducing the party to enter into the agreement, the law will not deem the party influenced by such circumstances as being in pari delicto, so as to deny him any relief from the contract infected with illegality. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 942. Where the fears or affections of a wife are worked upon through criminal proceedings instituted against her husband, and she is induced thereby against her will to convey her property to pay his debt and obtain his release from prison, there is duress as to her, even though the debt may be valid, and the prosecution be for a crime which has in fact been committed by the husband. Giddings v. Iowa Sav. Bank, 104 Iowa, 676, 74 N. W. 21; Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 395; Harper v. Harper, 85 Ky. 160, 7 Am. St. Rep. 583, 3 S. W. 5; Adams v. Irving Nat. Bank, 116 N. Y. 606, 6 L.R.A. 491, 15 Am. St. Rep. 447, 23 N. E. 7; Southern Exp. Co. v. Duffey, 48 Ga. 358. In the last-named case a mother made a deed to procure the release of her son from arrest under a criminal warrant. The purported consideration of the deed was claimed to represent money embezzled by the son. It was in proof that the son was under arrest and in chains, and the grantee in the deed agreed to release the son and stop the proceedings, though he expressly refused to settle the prosecution, stating that he could not control the public officials. The son was released and the prosecution stopped, and it was held that the deed from the mother was illegal and void. In the opinion McCay, J., said: "If the agreement to release a man under arrest and stop that proceeding is not an attempt to suppress a prosecution, we are at a loss to put a state of facts that does make a case within the rule. If this arrest was illegal, if the agents of the express company had this boy in their own custody, and could let him go or not at their pleasure, then this deed was the clear result of duress, since it was made to release the child of the grantor from illegal imprisonment. A man's child stands, under the law, in the same situation as himself in such cases."

It follows that, if the deeds from Mrs. Beecher to her husband and from him to his creditor were obtained in the manner as claimed by the defendants, they would be void as against the grantee, or a purchaser from him with notice.

The instruction to the jury is not criticized on the ground that such deeds would be treated as void instruments, so as to affect subsequent bona fide purchasers without notice. The evidence was without conflict that there was no change in the possession of the land as a result of the execution of the deeds to the Henderson-Powell Company, and that the defendants were in possession of the land at the time the plaintiff bought from that company. As to the possession affecting the plaintiff with notice, see Civil Code 1910, §§ 4528, 4530; Austin v. Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. 122 Ga. 439, 50 S. E. 382; Kent v. Simpson, 142 Ga. 49, 82 S. E. 440.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

LUELLA F. MCKIE

v.

JAMES S. MCKIE.

(— Ark. —, 172 S. W. 891.)

Husband and wife — marriage as extinguishment of debt from one to the other.

The marriage to the mortgagee of one who has executed a mortgage on her real estate to secure repayment of a loan from him does not extinguish the debts under constitutional and statutory provisions making the property of a married woman her separate estate, which she may transfer, and giving her the power to carry on business and sue and be sued.

(Wood and Hart, JJ., dissent.)

(December 21, 1914.)

CROSS APPEALS from a decree of the Chancery Court for Garland County dismissing the complaint and cross complaint in an action for the cancelation of a mortgage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rector & Sawyer, for defendant:

Where, by virtue of statutes, all property and contractual rights of parties to a marriage are preserved, debts due before marriage from the husband to the wife, and vice versa, are not extinguished by the subsequent marriage.

21 Cyc. 1276; Clark v. Clark, 49 Ill. App. 163; Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; Power v. Lester, 23 N. Y. 527, affirming 17 How. Pr. 413; Keyser v. Keyser, 1 N. Y. City Cit. Rep. 405; Spencer v. Stockwell, 76 Vt. 176, 56 Atl. 661.

Messrs. Davies & Ledgerwood, for plaintiff:

The debt was extinguished by the marriage, and the husband could not foreclose his mortgage. If the debt was extinguished by the marriage, it was extinguished by virtue of the contract of marriage, and not by operation of law.

Williams v. Rivercomb, 31 Ark. 294; Schilling v. Darmody, 102 Tenn. 439, 73 Am. St. Rep. 892, 52 S. W. 291; Stewart, Husb. & W. § 44; Govan v. Moore, 30 Ark. 667; Jackson v. Williams, 92 Ark. 486, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 840, 123 S. W. 751; Kies

Note. — Effect of intermarriage between debtor and creditor upon the indebtedness.

This question is covered in the note to MacKeown v. Lacey, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 683. But one case in point, in addition to McKie v. McKie, has been found that was decided since that note. In Delval v. Gagnon, 213 Mass. 203, 99 N. E. 1095, it was held, upon the authority of MacKeown v. Lacey and Crosby v. Clem, 209 Mass. 193, 95 N. E. 297, that a balance upon a loan made by a married woman to her husband before their marriage can be recovered by her assignee. The Crosby Case is not in point, as the debt was contracted after marriage, and it seems to have been cited more to the point that the wife could make a legal assignment of the claim against her husband.

J. W. M.

v. Young, 64 Ark. 381, 62 Am. St. Rep. 198, 42 S. W. 669.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant and appellee were at the time of the commencement of this suit, and are now, husband and wife, but at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage involved in this case they were not married. They resided in the city of Hot Springs, in this state, and appellee, being the owner of certain real estate situated there, borrowed a sum of money from appellant, and executed to him her promissory note and a mortgage on the real estate to secure the payment of the same. Subsequently she and appellant intermarried, and the question raised in this case is whether or not the marriage extinguished the debt. Appellee instituted the action against appellant to cancel the mortgage, on the ground that it had been extinguished by the intermarriage of the parties, and appellant filed a cross complaint to foreclose the mortgage.

The rule at common law was that the intermarriage of the two parties to a contract extinguished the obligation. The question, however, for decision in this case, is whether the modern statutes governing the marriage relation and property rights thereunder, particularly the provision of the Constitution of this state (§ 7, art. 9) to the effect that the property of a married woman "shall, so long as she may choose, be and remain her separate estate and property," and the statute which provides that a married woman may transfer her separate property, carry on any trade or business, and sue or be sued in the courts of the state (Kirby's Dig. § 5214), operate as a modification of the common-law rule so as not to extinguish the obligation of a contract between the parties, executed prior to the marriage. Statutes of this character exist well-nigh universally in the American states, but the courts are not altogether in accord as to the effect thereof. In England there has been a great modification in the strict rules of the common law with respect to the property rights of married women, and the trend of the decisions there is to give a broad interpretation to those statutes in relaxation of those common-law rules.

In Lord Halsbury's Work on the Laws of England, vol. 16, p. 433, in commenting on the case of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, L. R. 2 P. C. 83, 5 Moore, P. C. C. 180, 37 L. J. P. C. N. S. 44, where the English court decided that a husband's antenuptial contract to pay an annuity was not extinguished by the intermarriage of the parties, but was only suspended, the following statement is found: "The rules of the common law were founded on the doctrine of the unity of the person, and the inability of husband and wife to sue one another, and although the married women's property acts contain no express provision on the subject, it is doubtful whether these rules have any application now that this disability has been removed. There seems on principle to be no reason why a husband or wife should not sue the other on a contract made before marriage, unless, regard being had to the nature or terms of the contract, and the other circumstances of the particular case, a contrary intention appears."

In some of the American states where there are statutes similar to ours they have been construed to modify the common-law rule so as to allow the parties to sue on a contract made before marriage. In Massachusetts the court first decided against such modification, but the later cases have overruled the former ones, and now hold it to be the settled law of the state that the subsequent intermarriage of the maker and payee of a note does not extinguish the binding force of the obligation. Butler v. Ives, 139 Mass. 202, 29 N. E. 654; Spooner v. Spooner, 155 Mass. 52, 28 N. E. 1121; and MacKeown v. Lacey, 200 Mass. 437, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 683, 86 N. E. 799, 16 Ann. Cas. 220.

In Illinois it has been decided that statutes similar to ours modify the common-law rules so that a wife's antenuptial contract is not extinguished by her intermarriage with the obligee. Clark v. Clark, 49 Ill. App. 163.

There can scarcely be found a more learned or interesting discussion on the subject of modification, by modern statutes, of the rules of the common law, with respect to the rights and liabilities of married women, than the opinion of Judge Riddick in the case of Kies v. Young, 64 Ark. 381, 62 Am. St. Rep. 198, 42 S. W. 669, where it was held that (quoting from the syllabus) "the common-law liability of a husband for his wife's antenuptial debts has not been abrogated by the married woman's act . . . which excludes the marital rights of the husband in the wife's property during coverture, and confers upon married women power to acquire and hold property."

The rule laid down in that case was subsequently abrogated by statute relieving the husband from liability for the wife's antenuptial debts, but the luminous discussion of the law by Judge Riddick still remains for our guidance upon analogous questions. It cannot be contended that the statutes of this state have in express terms abrogated the common-law rule governing the question involved in the present case any more than they did the question involved in the case just referred to, but the question for determination in this case is, as it was in that, whether the reasons for the common-law rule have been abolished by statutes so as to cause the rule itself to cease.

In Kies v. Young, supra, the court decided that all of the reasons for the common-law rule, so far as it related to the liability of a husband for the antenuptial debts of his wife, had not ceased with the changes in the law wrought by modern statutes, and that therefore the rule itself had not ceased as a part of the law of this state. But it does not follow that the same can be said of the question now before us concerning the extinguishment of the liability of the wife for her antenuptial debts. On the contrary, it seems to us that the provisions of the Constitution and statutes of this state, which sweep away almost entirely the husband's common-law right to take or control the property of his wife, do completely abrogate the common-law rule that an antenuptial debt is extinguished by the intermarriage of the parties. The husband cannot sue at law to enforce the obligation, because the statutes do not confer that remedy, but the obligation remains unextinguished, and may be enforced in equity. The principal reason why this court upheld the liability of the husband for the antenuptial debts of the wife, according to the common-law rule, is that, while the Constitution and statutes of the state give the wife the right to hold her property so long as she may choose, and to sue and be sued on her obligations with respect to her separate estate incurred during coverture, those rights to hold her own property are limited to her exercise of the choice to claim it, and that this does not entirely take away the husband's rights, so that it can be said that the reason for holding the husband liable for the debts has ceased. It is pointed out in the decision that the wholesomeness of the common-law rule in that respect is not affected by modern enactments, because the wife may choose not to take her property, but to allow her husband to take it, and that, as there is no provision in the statute for her to be sued on an antenuptial obligation, there would be no remedy for the creditor unless the common-law remedy against the husband is preserved. The reasons there stated have no application to the present case where the antenuptial obligation of the wife to the husband is under consideration, and, where she has the choice of holding her property and of disposing of it at will without the consent of the husband, there is no reason why the common-law rule extinguishing her obligation to the husband should still prevail.

It has long been the law of this state that an obligation of husband and wife, even during coverture, while unenforceable at law, is binding and enforceable in equity. Pillow v. Sentelle, 49 Ark. 430, 5 S. W. 783. We have held, too, that where there exists a valid obligation of one of the spouses to the other, the remedy is not suspended during coverture, but that the obligation may be enforced in a court of equity. Lawler v. Lawler, 107 Ark. 70, 153 S. W. 1113; Shane v. Dickinson, 111 Ark. 353, 163 S. W. 1140. The question cannot be said to be entirely free from doubt, but we believe the true, the just, and the logical rule to be that the common-law doctrine on this subject has been modified, and that the unity of the parties to the marriage has been destroyed to the extent that obligations incurred before the marriage relation was entered into are not extinguished by it.

We are therefore of the opinion that the learned chancellor reached the wrong conclusion on the question involved, and his decree must be reversed, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

Wood and Hart, JJ., dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

GODFREY M. HYAMS

v.

OLD DOMINION COMPANY, Appt.

(— Me. —, 93 Atl. 747.)

Corporation — act of directors — mutual understanding.

1. Mutual understanding of the directors of a corporation, that property belonging to it shall stand in the names of certain of Note. — Right of minority stockholder to compel corporation to take into its own name stock in another corporation which it is carrying in the names of others.

HYAMS v. OLD DOMINION Co. seems to be the only case upon the question whether a minority stockholder can compel the corporation to take into its own name stock of another corporation which it is carrying in the names of others.

It may be of interest, however, in this connection to refer to Martin v. Ohio Stove Co. 78 Ill. App. 105, where it was held that an action would not lie by an Ohio corporation against one of its directors and their number, is sufficient to make the holding of the property in that manner the act of the board.

Same — ratification of acts of directors.

2. Knowledge and approval by stockholders of a corporation of a course of action by the directors are not sufficient to effect a ratification of the act on the part of the corporation.

Same — ratification without knowledge.

3. A general vote ratifying the acts of directors of a corporation does not ratify the holding of corporate property in the names of individual directors, of which fact the stockholders had no knowledge.

Same — ratification to directors for redress.

4. A minority stockholder need not apply to the directors or to the corporation itself to take over property belonging to it which is standing in the names of individual directors, before suing to compel it to do so, where the title has been held in that manner so long as to indicate a deliberate policy on the part of the directors and majority stockholders.

Same — ratification of ultra vires acts.

5. Stockholders cannot ratify an act of the directors which is ultra vires the corporation, or which is in manifest disregard of the legal rights of minority stockholders.

Same — continuing wrong — rights of stockholders.

6. That an act of a corporation in violation of the legal rights of minority stockholders occurred before a complaining stockholder secured his stock does not deprive him of the right to relief if the wrong is a continuing one.

Parties — suit to compel corporation to carry stock in its own name.

7. A corporation issuing stock is not a necessary party to a suit by stockholders in another corporation which owns such stock, to compel the latter to place the title to the stock in its own name.

Corporation — right to hold stock in other.

8. A foreign corporation may hold stock in a domestic one under a statute providing that any corporation may purchase and hold the stock of any corporation of this state, and exercise all the rights of ownership, including the right to vote thereon.

Same — compelling corporation to carry stock in its own name.

9. Minority stockholders in a holding corporation are entitled to the aid of equity to compel the corporation to take into its own name stock which it owns, but is carrying in the name of individuals, thereby depriving itself of the right to vote the stock at meetings of the corporation; and it is immaterial that, because of stock interests, the ones in whose names the stock is standing will control the policy of the corporation with respect to it.

(April 5, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County in complainant's favor in a suit to compel defendant to take in its own name title to stock which it owns, but is carrying in the name of individuals. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William M. Bradley, Brandeis, Dunbar, & Nutter, and Edward F. McOlenneen, for appellant:

The defendant corporation has the right, with the knowledge and approval of its directors and a majority of its stockholders, to have individuals hold title to this stock, even if this is not required to make the title free from attack under the laws of New Jersey.

Cook, Corp. § 684; Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40; Wells v. Dane, 101 Me. 67, 63 Atl. 324; Hersey v. Veazie, 24 Me. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 364.

The defendant corporation has duly ratified the holding of the stock of the New Jersey corporation by Smith and Dodge.

Sampson v. Bowdoinham Steam Mill Corp. 36 Me. 78; Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 385; Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 47 Fed. 15; Bagley v. Reno Oil Co. 201 Pa. 78, 56 L.R.A. 184, 50 Atl. 760; Jones v. Concord & M. R. Co.

an Illinois corporation to compel the latter to issue to the plaintiff stock subscribed for in the Illinois corporation by such director, and alleged to have been paid for by the property and money of the plaintiff, as the plaintiff could not subscribe for shares in a new corporation, either directly or indirectly, through persons acting as its tools. The court said: "If the transaction was as claimed by the Ohio Stove Company in the bill filed by it, and as found by the decree, then it intended to own and control the new corporation, which, by the law above referred to, it is prohibited from doing. Had the facts as now claimed by defendant in error appeared to the secretary of state in the report of the commissioners appointed by him, it would have been the duty of that officer to have refused the certificate of incorporation. To permit the corporation by its directors to make the subscriptions in the individual names of the latter, thereby giving a semblance of compliance with the statute sufficient to secure the issuance of a certificate of incorporation, as was done in this case, and then by proceedings like the present, instituted by a person in pari delicto, compel the stockholders to transfer their shares to the corporation itself, would be to permit a person to take advantage of his own wrong to perpetuate a fraud upon the law, and to use a court of equity to aid in evading the law and setting it at naught." B. B. B.

67 N. H. 234, 68 Am. St. Rep. 650, 30 Atl. 614; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. 482; Bucksport & B. R. Co. v. Buck, 68 Me. 81; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 227, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Foote v. Greilick, 166 Mich. 636, 132 N. W. 473; Hill v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 143 N. C. 539, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 606, 55 S. E. 854.

The defendant corporation should not be required to secure a transfer on the books of the New Jersey corporation in a suit to which the New Jersey corporation is not a party.

Kelly v. Thomas, 234 Pa. 419, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 122, 83 Atl. 307; Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 157 Mass. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 250, 31 N. E. 697; Jackson v. Hooper, 76 N. J. Eq. 185, 74 Atl. 130; Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 97 Va. 60, 45 L.R.A. 621, 33 S. E. 375; Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Min. & Smelting Co. 113 Ill. App. 600; Wason v. Buzzell, 181 Mass. 338, 63 N. E. 909; Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 89 Md. 99, 44 L.R.A. 149, 73 Am. St. Rep. 169, 42 Atl. 944; Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 38; Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 14 App. D. C. 154, 43 L.R.A. 390; McCloskey v. Snowden, 212 Pa. 249, 108 Am. St. Rep. 867, 61 Atl. 796; Madden v. Penn. Electric Light Co. 199 Pa. 454, 49 Atl. 296, 181 Pa. 617, 38 L.R.A. 638, 37 Atl. 817; North State Copper & G. Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1037; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199; Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; Bill v. Sierra Nevada Lake Water & Min. Co. 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 176, 1 De G. F. & J. 177, 6 Jur. N. S. 184, 1 L. T. N. S. 256, 8 Week. Rep. 205, 7 Mor. Min. Rep. 413; Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; Sudlow v. Dutch Rhenish R. Co. 21 Beav. 43.

Complainant has not sufficiently attempted to obtain redress through the directors and stockholders of the corporation, or accounted for not so doing.

Ulmer v. Maine Real-Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40; Kelly v. Thomas, 234 Pa. 419, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 122, 83 Atl. 307; Hawes v. Oakland (Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co.) 104 U. S. 450, 460, 26 L. ed. 827, 832; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Assn. 146 Mass. 495, 16 N. E. 426; Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co. 114 Fed. 232; Clarke v. Marks, 111 Me. 218, 88 Atl. 718; Law v. Fuller, 217 Pa. 439, 66 Atl. 754; McCloskey v. Snowden, 212 Pa. 249, 108 Am. St. Rep. 867, 61 Atl. 796; Wolf v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 Pa. 91, 45 Atl. 936; McMullen v. Ritchie, 64 Fed. 253; Cook, Corp. 7th ed. § 740. L.R.A.1915D.

Complainant cannot complain, because if any wrong was done, it was done long before he became a stockholder, and was approved by his predecessors in title.

Dimpfell v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 110 U. S. 209, 28 L. ed. 121, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Citizens' Sav. & T. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 173 Fed. 556; Venner v. Great Northern R. Co. 209 U. S. 24, 52 L. ed. 666, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 328; Hawes v. Oakland (Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co.) 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. ed. 827; Hitchings v. Cobalt Central Mines Co. 189 Fed. 241; Venner v. Great Northern R. Co. 153 Fed. 408; Bimber v. Calivada Colonization Co. 110 Fed. 58; Robinson v. West Virginia Loan Co. 90 Fed. 770; Hodge v. United States Steel Corp. 64 N. J. Eq. 90, 53 Atl. 601; Trimble v. American Sugar Ref. Co. 61 N. J. Eq. 340, 48 Atl. 912; Re Syracuse, C. & N. Y. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 1; Boldenweck v. Bullis, 40 Colo. 253, 90 Pac. 634; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber, 67 Neb. 644, 60 L.R.A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 93 N. W. 1024; Clark v. American Coal Co. 86 Iowa, 436, 17 L.R.A. 557, 53 N. W. 291; Alexander v. Searcy, 81 Ga. 536, 12 Am. St. Rep. 337, 8 S. E. 630; Moore v. Silver Valley Min. Co. 104 N. C. 534, 10 S. E. 679; Rankin v. Southwestern Brewery & Ice Co. 12 N. M. 54, 73 Pac. 614; South-West Natural Gas Co. v. Fayette Fuel Gas Co. 145 Pa. 13, 23 Atl. 224; United Electric Securities Co. v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 68 Fed. 673; Symmes v. Union Trust Co. 60 Fed. 830; Venner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Fed. 581; Whittemore v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 26 Fed. 819; Cook, Corp. § 737, p. 2683.

Messrs. Isaac W. Dyer, Scott Wilson, and Carl W. Smith, for appellee:

It is immaterial, so far as this action is concerned, at what time the complainant became a stockholder in the defendant company, whether it was before or after the time when the act complained of occurred.

Majors v. Taussig, 20 Colo. 44, 36 Pac. 816; Chicago v. Cameron, 120 Ill. 447, 11 N. E. 899; Forrester v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 21 Mont. 544, 55 Pac. 229, 353; Sayles v. Central Nat. Bank, 18 Misc. 155, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1063; Montgomery Light Co. v. Lahey, 121 Ala. 131, 25 So. 1006; O'Connor v. Virginia Passenger & P. Co. 46 Misc. 530, 92 N. Y. Supp. 525; Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 5; Winsor v. Bailey, 55 N. H. 218; Carson v. Iowa City Gaslight Co. 80 Iowa, 638, 45 N. W. 1068; George v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 101 Ala. 607, 14 So. 752.

For Smith and Dodge to hold the legal title of corporate assets is a breach of the contract of membership and ultra vires of the corporation.

The charter of a corporation is a contract with the stockholders and furnishes the measure of the corporate powers.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 642; Savage v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 45 W. Va. 275, 31 S. E. 991; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 82, 25 L. ed. 950, 952; Penobscot Boom Corp. v. Lamson, 16 Me. 224, 33 Am. Dec. 656; Franklin Co. v. Lewiston Inst. for Sav. 68 Me. 43, 28 Am. Rep. 9; Kean v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 401; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Utica Ins. Co. 15 Johns. 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 5 Conn. 560, 13 Am. Dec. 100; Berlin v. New Britain, 9 Conn. 175; Head v. Providence Ins. Co. 2 Cranch, 127, 2 L. ed. 229; Cook, Corp. 4th ed. § 669; Hoole v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 3 Ch. 262, 17 L. T. N. S. 153, 16 Week. Rep. 260; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 39 L. ed. 759, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; Langolf v. Seiberlitch, 2 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 64.

The contract of membership and the limitation of corporate powers give any stockholder the right to insist that the corporation hold the legal title to its assets, unless a business purpose is served.

Cook, Corp. 4th ed. § 670; Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 629; Kean v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 401; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 646; 10 Cyc. 298; Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. v. Manhattan Elev. R. Co. 11 Daly, 373; Consolidated Water Power Co. v. Nash, 109 Wis. 490, 85 N. W. 485; Forrester v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 21 Mont. 544, 55 Pac. 229, 353; Endicott v. Marvel, 81 N. J. Eq. 378, 87 Atl. 230; Tillis v. Brown, 154 Ala. 403, 45 So. 589; Union Bank v. Jones, 4 La. Ann. 236; Gallery v. National Exch. Bank, 41 Mich. 169, 32 Am. Rep. 149, 2 N. W. 193; Bedford R. Co. v. Bowser, 48 Pa. 29; Washington Mill Co. v. Sprague Lumber Co. 19 Wash. 165, 52 Pac. 1067; Brinkerhoff Zinc Co. v. Boyd, 192 Mo. 597, 91 S. W. 523; Worthington v. Worthington, 100 App. Div. 332, 91 N. Y. Supp. 443; Armington v. Palmer, 21 R. I. 109, 43 L.R.A. 95, 79 Am. St. Rep. 786, 42 Atl. 308; Polar Star Lodge v. Polar Star Lodge, 16 La. Ann. 53; Jorndt v. Reuter Hub & Spoke Co. 112 Mo. App. 341, 87 S. W. 29; Frankfort Bank v. Johnson, 24 Me. 490.

For Smith and Dodge to hold the legal title of corporate assets involves a breach of trust relation on the part of the corporation, to its stockholders.

A corporation is a trustee for its stockholders.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 237; Taylor v. Chichester & M. R. Co. L. R. 2 Exch. 378; Stevens v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 29 Vt. 549; Thompson v. Page, 1 Met. L.R.A.1915D.

570; Peabody v. Flint, 6 Allen, 56; Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 623, 21 L. ed. 736; Kean v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 407; Taylor v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 4 Woods, 575, 13 Fed. 152; Moore v. Schoppert, 22 W. Va. 282; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 687, 24 L. ed. 558, 560; Bridgman v. Keokuk, 72 Iowa, 42, 33 N. W. 355; Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86, 10 Am. Rep. 282, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 514; Tipton Fire Co. v. Barnheisel, 92 Ind. 88; Trask v. Chase, 107 Me. 137, 77 Atl. 698; Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall. 616, 22 L. ed. 492; Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65, 37 Am. Rep. 546; Wheeler v. Abilene Nat. Bank Bldg. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 89 C. C. A. 477, 159 Fed. 391, 14 Ann. Cas. 917; Beers v. Bridgeport Spring Co. 42 Conn. 17; Oliver v. Oliver, 118 Ga. 362, 45 S. E. 232; Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 573.

Alienation of trust property or delegation of trust is a breach of the trust.

Abbott's Appeal, 55 Me. 580; Schiffman v. Schmidt, 154 Mo. 204, 55 S. W. 451.

An ultra vires act cannot be ratified.

Bangor Boom Corp. v. Whiting, 29 Me. 123; Downing v. Mt. Washington Road Co. 40 N. H. 230; Taymouth Twp. v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22; Germania Safety-Vault & T. Co. v. Boynton, 19 C. C. A. 118, 37 U. S. App. 602, 71 Fed. 797.

Savage, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Bill in equity, in which the plaintiff, a stockholder, on behalf of himself and all other stockholders of the defendant corporation, seeks to have transferred to the defendant certain shares of the capital stock of the Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company, which it is claimed belong, or should belong, to the defendant, but which stand of record in the names of two of its directors, Dodge and Smith. The prayer of the bill is that the defendant "be ordered to get, take, and secure the legal title in its own name to all the shares of stock in other corporations to which it is rightfully entitled," and in particular the shares above referred to. There are other prayers in the bill, but they are not pressed, and need not be specifically stated. The case comes before this court on the defendant's appeal from a decree sustaining the bill.

The parties have agreed upon a statement of facts, and from that statement we glean the following as material to the questions to be decided:

In 1903 the Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company, a New Jersey corporation, had an authorized capital stock of 200,000 shares of the par value of $25 each, of which 150,000 shares had been issued.

The United Globe Mines, a New York corporation, had a capital of 23,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. Both corporations owned mining properties in Arizona, which were near to each other. A large majority of the stockholders of each of these corporations, believing that it would be for the advantage of each corporation if they operated in harmony, determined to make a practical amalgamation of them by organizing a new corporation to own and hold the stock of these two corporations, and in pursuance of this determination, they organized the defendant corporation, the Old Dominion Company of Maine. The defendant corporation has an authorized capital stock of 350,000 shares of the par value of $25 each, of which 293,245 shares of the par value of $7,331,125 have been issued. Among the incorporated purposes of the defendant is the following: "To purchase, acquire, hold, sell, or otherwise dispose of, or deal with, shares of the capital stock, bonds, evidences of indebtedness, or other securities of, or issued by, any corporation or corporations."

By the scheme agreed upon, stockholders in the Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company, designated by us hereafter as the New Jersey corporation, were to have the right to exchange their stock, share for share, for stock in the Old Dominion Company of Maine. It was provided, in effect, that 138,000 shares of the Maine corporation should be issued in payment of the entire capital stock, 23,000 shares, of the United Globe Mines, and for $350,000 in cash, in addition. It was also provided that before the agreement should be made effective, the assent of two thirds in interest of the outstanding stockholders in the New Jersey corporation, and of all of the stockholders of the United Globe Mines, should be secured.

In 1904, in accordance with the scheme thus outlined, the whole of the capital stock of the United Globe Mines was first deposited with a banking house agreed upon, and afterwards transferred to the defendant company for 138,000 shares of its stock and $350,000 in cash. More than two thirds in interest of the stockholders of the New Jersey corporation deposited their shares, and received in exchange stock in the defendant corporation, share for share. Since then, other shares have been exchanged, so that in all 155,245 shares in the New Jersey corporation now belong to the defendant. Among the shares thus received were 150 shares which, after passing through various transfers, were purchased by the plaintiff in 1912, in the name of another, and transferred of record to him in May, 1913, and are now owned by him.

L.R.A.1915D.

The shares in the New Jersey corporation which have been exchanged for shares in the defendant have never been transferred to the defendant corporation, but were transferred to Cleveland H. Dodge and Charles S. Smith on the books of the New Jersey corporation. The certificates for those shares have upon their backs a transfer in blank signed by Dodge and Smith, and they have all been placed, and now remain, in the defendant's vaults. Smith and Dodge are directors of the defendant corporation, and Smith is vice president. Smith is president and a director of the New Jersey corporation. Dodge is a director of the United Globe Mines, and the directorates of the three corporations are more or less interlocked otherwise. The directors of Phelps, Dodge, & Company, one of whom is Dodge, own severally about one half of the shares in the defendant corporation.

Dodge and Smith admit that they hold record title to these shares in the interest of the defendant. There is no written or other formal trust agreement executed between them and the defendant, nor have they made any written declaration of trust respecting this stock. But when the stock of the New Jersey corporation was deposited in furtherance of the scheme agreed upon, Smith, the president of the New Jersey corporation, was advised by counsel that a legal doubt had been expressed as to whether stock in a New Jersey corporation could, under the laws of New Jersey, be held by a corporation organized under the laws of another state, and the defendant claims that it was because of this uncertainty that Dodge and Smith took title to these shares in their own names, in order that the plan and agreement might be carried out in a lawful manner, and the chance that anyone would raise the question avoided.

The by-laws of the defendant provide that "the board of directors shall have the general control and supervision of the business of the corporation, with all the powers that could be exercised by the stockholders, except so far as limited by the vote of the stockholders or by law; may among other things sell, assign, transfer, convey, or otherwise dispose of the property, real or personal, of the corporation, and may delegate any part of their power to any officer or committee of the board."

It appears that neither the stockholders in meeting nor the directors as a board have ever passed any vote directing, sanctioning, or expressly ratifying, or even mentioning, the holding of this stock by Dodge and Smith for the defendant corporation. But the fact that the stock stood in the names of Dodge and Smith has been at all times known to a majority in interest of the defendant's stockholders, and to all of its directors. By whose particular authority, unless it be that assumed by Dodge and Smith themselves, the stock was placed in their names, is not disclosed.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders in 1905, and at each annual meeting since, "all acts, matters, and things entered into and performed by the officers and directors" have been by unanimous vote, "fully and in all respects ratified, confirmed, and approved." Some of the persons who at different times owned the stock which the plaintiff now owns were present at various ones of these annual meetings. But what knowledge they had of the fact that Dodge and Smith held the New Jersey corporation stock is not made to appear, nor is it shown that information was possessed by the minority stockholders in general. The annual balance sheets since 1908, if accessible to the stockholders, or made known to them, would have indicated to them that the defendant had full title to the stock.

The plaintiff never owned any shares in the defendant prior to September, 1912, and there has been no assent by him or by his predecessors in title to the retention of the stock in the names of Dodge and Smith, except such, if any, as has been shown by the foregoing statement.

There has been no dissipation of the assets of the defendant corporation, unless the retention of the title to the stock by Dodge and Smith be regarded as such a dissipation. The dividends on the stock of the New Jersey corporation held by Dodge and Smith are paid directly to them when declared, and by them paid forthwith to the defendant.

The purposes and powers of the defendant corporation, as stated in its certificate of organization, embrace the doing of many kinds of business other than the holding and owning of shares of the capital stock of other corporations. But so far as the record shows it has never attempted to exercise any of those additional powers. Its entire assets consist of the shares of capital stock of the New Jersey corporation and of the New York corporation, and claims for money loaned to those corporations. It is therefore, so far as any of the rights here involved are concerned, a mere holding corporation, and it is to be treated as such.

From these agreed facts we draw certain conclusions of fact, and state them now without regard to their effect upon the rights of the parties. We think that it must be held that the stock was placed and still remains in the name of Dodge and Smith with the acquiescence and tacit approval of the board of directors. Directors of a corporation must act as a board, but it is not necessary that their action be formal or their votes recorded. Peirce v. Morse-Oliver Bldg. Co. 94 Me. 406, 47 Atl. 914. It may be sufficient as to third parties, if they establish a mutual understanding. York v. Mathis, 103 Me. 67, 68 Atl. 746. Their action or their mutual understanding may be shown by circumstances or conduct. Cases just cited. When it appears, as it does in this case, that for nine years all the directors have been conversant with the fact that two of their number hold in their names the record title to more than one half of the assets of the corporation, and have made no objection, it certainly affords very strong evidence of their mutual understanding and unanimous assent.

In the next place we must find that there has been no ratification of the acts of the directors, if any was necessary, by the stockholders. The fact that a majority in interest of the stockholders knew of the situation and approved it has no legal significance. Stockholders can act only as a body, and in meeting assembled. While it is undoubtedly competent for the stockholders to ratify unauthorized acts of directors, which are within the corporate powers, he who relies upon a ratification has the burden of showing that attempted ratification really ratified. Neither individuals, nor stockholders in a body, can be said to ratify acts of which they have no knowledge. The resolutions of ratification were sweeping. They referred to no particular act. It does not appear that the stockholders generally, outside of the directors, had any knowledge that the directors had authorized the New Jersey stock to be put into the names of Dodge and Smith. It does not appear that this was known to the stockholders then holding the stock now owned by the plaintiff. Such a ratification is ineffective because it really does not ratify. It is a paper ratification, not a real one. A decent respect for the rights of stockholders, especially of minority stockholders, should require that he who seeks to bind them by votes of ratification should show that the stockholders generally knew specifically what they were voting about. Camden Land Co. v. Lewis, 101 Me. 78, 63 Atl. 523.

Again, we find that Dodge and Smith have no interest in the stock. Whether they are even naked trustees is left uncertain. They have signed transfers of the stock certificates in blank, and have put them into the defendant's vault. Whether they have delivered them to the defendant in such way as to divest themselves of any actual control of them is not clear. But we think it is immaterial. The stock in fact belongs to the defendant. The certificates of stock are in the physical possession of the defendant. As sole owner in fact it has the undoubted right to reduce them to its legal possession, fill out the blank transfers, and present them to the proper officer of the New Jersey corporation to be transferred of record to itself. And that is what the plaintiff seeks to have it compelled to do.

Several defenses are offered: (1) That the complainant has not sufficiently attempted to obtain redress by application to the directors or to the corporation itself; (2) that the defendant corporation has duly ratified the holding of the New Jersey corporation stock by Dodge and Smith; (3) that the complainant cannot complain, because if any wrong was done, it was done long before he became a stockholder; (4) that the holding was approved by his predecessors in title; (5) that a transfer on the books of the New Jersey corporation should not be required in a suit to which that corporation is not a party; (6) that the alleged uncertainty of the law of New Jersey with respect to the susceptibility of stock in any New Jersey corporation to be transferred to and held by a foreign corporation was an adequate reason for having the shares of the New Jersey corporation stand, of record, in the names of individuals, rather than in the name of the defendant; and (7) that the defendant corporation has the right, with the approval of its directors and a majority of its stockholders, irrespective of any question about the law of New Jersey, to have individuals hold the record title to this stock.

I. It is a wise rule of procedure which requires that aggrieved stockholders seeking remedies for corporate wrongs should first make application for relief through corporate channels, or allege and prove sufficient reasons why such applications would be ineffectual. Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40; Trask v. Chase, 107 Me. 137, 77 Atl. 698. They must apply to the directors or the corporation before they apply to the court, unless it appears from the bill and proof that such application would be useless. But the law requires in this respect no useless formality. The plaintiff in his bill alleges that he has made no application to the directors or corporation, for the reason that such application would be futile. And we are of opinion that his apprehension is well founded. The policy pursued by the directors and the majority interests controlling L.R.A.1915D.

the defendant corporation is deliberate and of long standing. And whatever the motives for it may be, there is not the slightest reason to be drawn from the history of the corporation, to think that the policy would be abandoned at the request or demand of a minority stockholder, but rather the contrary. This point in defense is not tenable.

II. The matter of ratification by stockholders' vote has already been discussed in part. We will add that if it should turn out, as claimed by the plaintiff, that the act of the directors in keeping the stock in the names of private individuals, though they were possessed by by-law with full corporate powers, was ultra vires the corporation, or if it should appear that the act was in manifest disregard of the duties of the corporation to its stockholders, and of the legal rights of minority stockholders, the ratification must, from the nature of things, be nugatory. In fact, there was no such ratification as should be held to bind nonassenting stockholders with regard to unauthorized acts of the directors not known, or made known, to the body of the stockholders.

The matter of ratification, however, is not very important. For if the act of the directors was ultra vires the corporation, as the plaintiff claims, ratification would not help it. And if, as the defendant claims, the act was ultra vires and proper, ratification was unnecessary.

III. The third objection is that the plaintiff cannot complain because the wrong, if any, was done before the plaintiff became a stockholder. One answer to this, and a sufficient one, is that the wrong is a continuing one. If there was a wrong before the plaintiff became a stockholder, it is no less a wrong since. It is an existing condition, alleged to be a corporate wrong, that he complains of. This point is not sustainable.

IV. The claim that the holding of the stock by Dodge and Smith was assented to and approved by the plaintiff's predecessor in title does not appear to be true in fact. At least it is not shown. Whether his predecessors were among those stockholders who knew of it does not appear.

V. We think the New Jersey corporation is not a necessary party to this suit. As a corporation, it can have no interest in the ownership of its own capital stock. The New Jersey corporation is not asked to do anything. The bill assumes that its officers will, upon request, and as a matter of customary business, transfer the title of record of the Dodge and Smith stock to the defendant, who is the owner.

VI. The defendant contends that it was proper, as a matter of business policy, for it to allow the record title to the New Jersey stock to remain in the names of Dodge and Smith, on account of the doubts expressed as to whether, under the laws of New Jersey, stock in a New Jersey corporation can legally be held by a corporation of another state. This point is material, because if it cannot be done, it would be futile to grant the plaintiff's prayer and direct the defendant to try to have it done. If such were the case, it might be that the promoters of the defendant corporation would find it expedient to adopt some other method by which they could adjust themselves to the law. But we think there is no considerable doubt with respect to the law of New Jersey.

We do not propose to discuss the law of New Jersey at length. It is settled law generally that one corporation cannot hold the capital stock of another corporation without legislative authority. But it appears from the cases cited from the New Jersey courts that, by statute in that state, "any corporation may purchase, hold, sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge or otherwise dispose of the shares of the capital stock of . . . any corporation of this or any other state, and while owner of such stock may exercise all the rights, powers and privileges of ownership, including the right to vote thereon." Under this statute there is no doubt that a New Jersey corporation can hold stock in a Maine corporation. But here the question is, Can a Maine corporation hold stock in a New Jersey corporation? Will the New Jersey law permit it? The case of Warren v. Pim, 66 N. J. Eq. 353, 59 Atl. 773 (1904), which has been discussed by counsel, is somewhat illuminating, but by no means decisive. The question in that case was not whether a corporation created by another state could own and hold shares in a New Jersey corporation, but whether an English corporation or association, organized purely as a voting trust, and having no beneficial ownership of the shares themselves, could so own and hold. The question was answered in the negative, but for reasons in no one of which did the majority of the court concur. The opinions of the justices are interesting, however, in this connection, inasmuch as they show the tendency of judicial thinking, though the expressions touching the power of a corporation of another state to hold stock in a New Jersey corporation are mere dicta. Chancellor Pitney, now Mr. Justice Pitney, said that he could find nothing in the New Jersey statute that satisfied him that any discrimination was intended to be made against alien or foreign corporations, either L.R.A.1915D.

as to their ownership of such stock, or as to their right to vote upon it. Other justices expressed similar views. One intimated that the corporations of a sister state, whose laws permitted them the right to hold stock in the corporations of another state, might invoke the doctrine of comity to support them in exercising a similar right in New Jersey corporations. Some of the justices expressed no opinion on this question, as it was not in issue. No one advised that the power did not exist.

In State v. Atlantic City & S. R. Co. 77 N. J. L. 465, 72 Atl. 111 (1909), which was an information in the nature of quo warranto, the question was whether a New Jersey railroad corporation could buy and hold the capital stock of another New Jersey railroad corporation. The power of a corporation of another state to hold stock in a New Jersey corporation was not involved. But Chancellor Pitney, speaking for the court, took occasion to refer to the case of Warren v. Pim, and to make the cautionary observation that a majority of the court had not agreed upon any legal proposition involved in that case. It is not improper to add that the question before us was not involved in that case.

But in Denver City Waterworks Co. v. American Waterworks Co. 82 N. J. Eq. 365, 88 Atl. 1053 (1913), we get a little clearer light. The plaintiff, a Colorado corporation, held stock in the defendant, a New Jersey corporation, which was insolvent, and began proceedings to wind up the affairs of the defendant. Later it applied to the court to direct the receiver to discontinue a certain suit commenced by him. Objection was made that the plaintiff had no interest to protect, was a mere volunteer, and had no right to invoke the judgment of the court. Howell, V. C., said: "I think it sufficiently appears that the complainant is still the owner or holder of shares of stock in the defendant, the American Waterworks Company; and, if so, there can be no question of its right to prosecute this matter." Denver City Waterworks Co. v. American Waterworks Co. 81 N. J. Eq. 139, 85 Atl. 828.

The court of errors, on the appeal from the vice chancellor's decree, said: "The decree appealed from will be affirmed for the reasons stated in the opinion filed . . . below by Vice Chancellor Howell." Denver City Waterworks Co. v. American Waterworks Co. supra.

Here it seems to us is a distinct recognition of the power of a corporation of another state to hold capital stock in a New Jersey corporation. It is true the question was not debated. It seems to have been assumed. If the corporation of another state has not lawful power to hold stock in a New Jersey corporation, or, to put it the other way, if the stock of a New Jersey corporation is not susceptible, by reason of New Jersey law, of being held by a corporation of another state, it is difficult to perceive how an outside corporation by reason of its attempted, but unauthorized, holding of stock, could get a standing in court to proceed for the appointment of a receiver and the winding up of the New Jersey corporation, whose stock it had. Its status in court depended solely upon its rights as a stockholder. If a stockholder, it could be recognized; otherwise not. This point was decided. If an outside corporation can be enough of a stockholder to be able to cause the dissolution of the corporation whose capital stock it held, it would seem that it should be enough of a stockholder to hold its stock in its own name, and to require the transfer of record to it of any stock that it owns. It is our judgment that the law of New Jersey permits a corporation of another state, when empowered by its own state to do so, to hold shares in a New Jersey corporation.

VII. We are now brought to a consideration of the fundamental question in this case. It is this: Has a minority stockholder in a corporation the right to insist, under such circumstances as are shown in this case, that it shall hold in its own name the shares of capital stock which it owns in another corporation?

The facts, briefly stated, are these: The defendant is a mere holding corporation. More than one half of its estate and assets consist of shares of stock in the New Jersey corporation. These shares constitute more than one half of the issued capital stock of that corporation. It, therefore, by stock ownership, has the right and the power to control the New Jersey corporation. For ten years it has neglected, and apparently is now unwilling, to have the record title to those shares transferred to itself, but has tacitly permitted them to stand in the names of two of its officers, although the certificates of stock, with transfers signed in blank, have all the time been in its physical custody. It has taken no corporate action with respect to these shares. It has not voted at the corporate meetings. Neither has the corporation itself, nor have the directors, so far as the case shows, directed the holders how to vote upon any matter at stockholders' meetings. As a corporation, it has abandoned the exercise of the rights, powers, and privileges appertaining to stock ownership, and has left the exercise of those rights, powers, and privileges to the will of individuals who have no interest in L.R.A.1915D.

these shares, and who are not in any way made accountable to it for the manner in which they exercise functions committed to them, not by the corporation itself, but by stockholders in the corporation holding a controlling interest. This state of things has existed from the very organization of the corporation. And as it seems to be in accord with the settled policy of the majority stockholders, it is likely to continue, unless minority stockholders may interfere and obtain a remedy from the court.

The positions of the parties may be briefly stated as follows: The plaintiff contends that the conduct of the defendant in permitting its stock in the New Jersey corporation to be held of record and voted by individuals in the manner stated has been ultra vires, beyond the legitimate power of the corporation, and that it has been such wilful neglect of its corporate duty to its stockholders as to constitute a corporate breach of trust. The defendant contends that the conduct complained of has been purely intra vires, that it related to the internal management of its business affairs, and that minority stockholders have no remedy.

The general policy of the law is so well settled that the citation of many authorities is unnecessary. It is well settled that courts will not undertake to control the discretionary powers of the directors, or of the majority of the stockholders expressed in stockholders' meetings, as to acts intra vires. Such acts cannot be questioned by minority stockholders except in cases of fraud, and, as for a breach of trust, of such acts as imperil the existence of the corporation itself. As to acts within the power of the corporation, which concern the internal management of the corporation, as to questions of corporate policy and economy, questions of business discretion and judgment, the majority stockholders and the directors to whom the corporate powers are delegated ordinarily have absolute control, and the minority must submit. The courts will not undertake to pass upon the wisdom or unwisdom of such corporate acts. 2 Cook, Corp. § 684; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4443.

On the other hand, corporate powers are limited to those expressly granted and the incidental implied powers necessary to carry into effect the powers so expressly granted. The exercise of any other power is ultra vires. Franklin Co. v. Lewiston Inst. for Sav. 68 Me. 43, 28 Am. Rep. 9; 2 Cook, Corp. § 669; Morawetz Priv. Corp. § 682. The relation between a corporation and its stockholders is essentially contractual. The charter is the embodiment of the contract. See same cases. The rule of the majority over the minority as to acts intra vires is implied from the very nature of the contract. But the corporate authority is considered to have been conferred by the stockholders upon the trust and confidence that it will be exercised within the chartered powers, and with a view to advance the interests of the stockholders. Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331, 15 L. ed. 401; Wright v. Oroville Gold, S. & C. Min. Co. 40 Cal. 20, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 558; Forbes v. Memphis, E. P. & P. R. Co. 2 Woods, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926. No stockholder is bound to submit to the doing of ultra vires acts. Such submission is not a part of his contract. He may have relief from ultra vires acts. 2 Cook, Corp. § 669.

It seems also to be well settled that for practical purposes a corporation may, in some respects, be treated as a trustee for the benefit of its stockholders, whenever necessary for the protection of their interests. In a sense it holds the corporate property in trust for the stockholders. Peabody v. Flint, 6 Allen, 52; Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 623, 21 L. ed. 736; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 237.

There is no doubt, we think, that a court of equity may, at the instance of a stockholder, afford a remedy from the consequences, not only of fraudulent acts of the corporation or its officers, but of such acts as are a breach of the trust and confidence which are implied by the very nature of the corporate relations. It may control a corporation and its officers, and restrain them from doing acts even within the scope of corporate authority, if such acts would amount to a breach of the trust upon which the authority had been conferred. Dodge v. Woolsey, supra; Wright v. Oroville Gold, S. & C. Min. Co. 40 Cal. 20, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 558; March v. Eastern R. Co. 40 N. H. 548, 77 Am. Dec. 732; Taylor v. Holmes (C. C.) 14 Fed. 498; Forbes v. Memphis, E. P. & P. R. Co. 2 Woods, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926. It may also control them with respect to acts tending to the destruction of the corporate franchises, and acts in violation of, or inconsistent with, the charter. It may prevent the misuse or the misapplication of corporate power prejudicial to the stockholders, and amounting to a breach of trust. Pond v. Vermont Valley R. Co. 12 Blatchf. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 11,265.

It should be borne in mind that this is not a bill brought in behalf of a corporation which is unwilling or unable to sue, against directors who have undertaken to do ultra vires or otherwise illegal acts, but one against the corporation itself to compel it to perform a corporate duty which it is claimed it owes to all its stockholders, and L.R.A.1915D.

a duty which it is capable of performing. That a corporation owes duties to its stockholders outside of mere business duties we think should admit of no question. One such duty is that it will perform its corporate functions, according to, and within the meaning of, its charter. The manner of performing those duties may be left to the discretion of its directors or majority stockholders. But the corporation should not be permitted to abdicate its corporate functions and utterly abandon the performance of its corporate duties, to the prejudice of stockholders. These are matters which involve more than mere internal administration, and they are matters which affect the interest of each individual stockholder.

We recur again to the facts. The defendant corporation is the owner in fact of more than $3,500,000 of the capital stock of the New Jersey corporation. It is the owner of a controlling interest. Its one corporate power involved in this inquiry is the power to "hold" it. Growing out of that power is a duty to hold it so as to enjoy the privileges of ownership. That we think is necessarily implied in the case of a holding corporation. For ten years it has neglected, and, as we must assume, now declines, to become the owner of record. As none but stockholders of record can vote (Warren v. Pim, 66 N. J. Eq. 353, 59 Atl. 773), it has thereby voluntarily disabled itself from performing its most important function as a stock owner. It has permitted that function to be usurped, so far as minority stockholders are concerned, by individuals. It has had no corporate voice in the management of the New Jersey corporation. It has subjected itself to the liability of loss with respect to the shares themselves. In the present status it is unable to perform the duties which it owes to its stockholders.

We do not say that a corporation may not, for business reasons, hold property in the name of another. We do not say that it may not so hold temporarily the capital stock which it owns in another corporation. What we do say is that when a holding corporation, intentionally, persistently, and unreasonably deprives itself of the exercise of the highest function and privilege of a stockholder, and so proposes to continue, it is such a breach of its duty to its stockholders, and so far removed from any characteristics of internal management and control, which the majority stockholders may properly exercise, that a minority stockholder may invoke the intervention of the court. It is essentially a breach of trust. If a corporation has no lawful power to give away its property,—and it has none,—no more should it have authority to divest itself of corporate power and virtually to give away to others the exercise of its essentially corporate functions.

The essential purpose of such a holding corporation as the defendant is not only to hold shares of stock, but so to hold them as to be able to vote upon them and give them their proper effective influence in the management of the subsidiary corporation. For such a holding corporation to decline to hold in its own name the shares of stock that it owns, and thereby to abdicate its functions and privileges as a stock owner, seems to us to be a perversion of the spirit of the one corporate power which it has so far undertaken to exercise. It is inconsistent with the character of the contractual duties which it owes to its stockholders. It is not only a breach of trust, but it is a neglect to perform the duties which are implied from the very fact that it is a holding corporation.

It is no answer to say that the same gentlemen who now hold of record, and vote upon, these shares, will, by reason of their interests and of the intercorporate associations, be able to control the exercise of the defendant's privileges of stock ownership after they shall have been transferred to it of record. Whatever shall be done then will be done under corporate responsibility, of which there is none at present. Besides that, it is, humanly speaking, certain that the gentlemen who now control the defendant, and in whose interests Dodge and Smith are supposedly acting, will not do so forever. We think the bill is sustainable.

Decree below affirmed, with additional costs.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE BANK

v.

CUMBERLAND SAVINGS & TRUST COMPANY, Appt.

(168 N. C. 605, 85 S. E. 5.)

Bank — cashing forged check — reliance on statement that indorsements are guaranteed.

A bank which pays a check upon itself, the signature of drawer and indorser upon which are forged, cannot recover the amount paid from the bank which originally cashed the check, although it indorsed thereon "all prior indorsements guaranteed."

Note. — As to right of drawee of forged check or draft to recover money paid thereon, see notes to First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Wyndmere, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49; Title Guarantee & T. Co. v. Haven, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1308; and Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & T. Bank, L.R.A.1915A, 77. L.R.A.1915D.

(April 22, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Scotland County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover the amount paid by plaintiff on a forged check. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter H. Neal for appellant.

Messrs. Russell & Weatherspoon for appellee.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges that the defendant, a bank in Fayetteville, cashed a check, purporting to be drawn by the Wade Trading Company, on the plaintiff bank in Laurinburg, and purporting to be indorsed by D. C. Jackson, but that the signature of the said drawer and said indorser were forged, and that thereafter in the course of business the said forged check was sent through a bank in Wilmington to the plaintiff with the indorsement, "All prior indorsements guaranteed," and that it was the custom and practice to take such checks relying upon the exercise of due prudence and diligence on the part of the bank which first cashed the check, and alleging that, the signature of the drawer being forged, the defendant should refund to the plaintiff the amount of said check which the plaintiff had paid by reason of the negligence of the defendant bank in failing to use due prudence and diligence in accepting and paying the said check. The defendant demurred upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The judge overruled the demurrer, and the defendant appealed.

The drawee bank pays a check upon the faith of the genuineness of the signature of the drawer.

When a drawee pays a check "upon which the drawer's signature had been forged, he cannot, upon the discovery of the forgery, recover back the amount if the party to whom he paid it was a bona fide holder. The drawee is held bound to know the signature of his drawer, and the banker, even more, to know that of his depositor; and if they fail to discover the forgery before payment, they must stand the loss." This is the heading of an extended note to be found in 17 Am. St. Rep. 890, citing very numerous authorities. This rule seems to have been established by Lord Mansfield in 1762 in Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1355, who said that it was incumbent upon the drawee to be satisfied of the genuineness of the drawer's signature before accepting or paying the bill, and that if he made a mistake it was his neglect or misfortune, and not that of the drawer.

In Bank of United States v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. 333, 6 L. ed. 334, decided in 1825, Mr. Justice Story, referring to Price v. Neal, supra said: "After some research we have not been able to find a single case in which the general doctrine thus asserted has been shaken or even doubted."

A proposition of mercantile law considered beyond question as correct by Mansfield and Story must be deemed settled unless changed by statute.

In Farmers' & M. Bank v. Bank of Rutherford, 115 Tenn. 64, 112 Am. St. Rep. 817, 88 S. W. 939, it is held: "It is negligence for a bank to pay a forged check drawn on it in the name of one of its customers whose signature is well known to it, where the cashier does not examine the signature closely, which would have disclosed the forgery, but is thrown off his guard by indorsements on the paper. An indorser of a check does not warrant to the drawee, but only to subsequent holders in due course, the genuineness of the signature."

This last proposition seems to be now the well-settled law, though there were some earlier decisions which would seem to indicate a liability on the part of the indorser who negligently pays a check without fully satisfying itself as to the genuineness of the signature of the drawer. The proposition which now obtains, almost universally, is thus laid down in Howard v. Mississippi Valley Bank, 28 La. Ann. 727, 26 Am. Rep. 105: "The drawee of a bill is presumed to have a better knowledge of the signature of the drawer than the holder. So, where a bank cashed a draft and afterward collected it of the drawee, and the draft was a forgery, the drawee cannot recover the amount paid from the bank to which it was paid, though the latter had received the draft from an unknown holder without requiring his indorsement."

In Salt Springs Bank v. Syracuse Sav. Inst. 62 Barb. 101, and Germania Bank v. Boutell, 60 Minn. 189, 27 L.R.A. 635, 51 Am. St. Rep. 519, 62 N. W. 327, it is held: The holder of a check or draft, presenting it to the drawee for payment, owes . . . it no duty to inquire into the genuineness thereof.

The drawee bank has no right to assume that the holder has made such investigation. Failure of a bank to follow the usage or practice adopted for its own security of requiring evidence of the payee's identity L.R.A.1915D.

before receiving on deposit the check drawn on another bank does not excuse the drawee bank from its duty to examine its customer's signatures to checks presented by another bank or other holder in due course. See also numerous citations 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 57-59.

The same proposition is fully discussed and held in Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Md. 11, 96 Am. Dec. 567, and notes,—a very carefully considered case. In Howard v. Mississippi Valley Bank, 28 La. Ann. 727, 26 Am. Rep. 105, it is held, as above stated, that the drawee of a bill is presumed to have a better knowledge of the signature of the drawer than the holder.

In 2 Morse, Banks, 4th ed. § 463, it is said, quoting many cases: "A bank cannot recover money paid on a forgery of the drawer's name from the person to whom it was paid. The bank is bound to know the signature of the drawer."

Morse, supra, cites among other authorities, Bank of St. Albans v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 10 Vt. 141, 33 Am. Dec. 188, which was exactly like the present case, in that the signature of the drawer was forged, and the drawee bank, in action against the cashing bank, asked for instructions that if the jury should find that the cashier of the purchasing bank received the check without due circumspection or the exercise of due diligence in ascertaining its genuineness, or the title of the person presenting it, the drawee bank was entitled to recover; but the court held that it was only necessary that the cashing bank should appear to have received the check in ordinary course of business and in good faith.

In 5 Cyc. 544, there is quoted in the notes the following proposition: "A factor who has received drafts from his principal drawn on him, which have been discounted by a bank, and he has paid them, must stand the loss on those which are discovered to be forgeries."

The latest and fullest discussion of the subject will be found in 3 Ruling Case Law, § 244, with full citations of the more recent authorities. The law is thus summed up: "Where a bank receives in good faith for collection a check upon another bank, the signature of the drawer of which is forged, and receives payment and pays over the proceeds to its customer, the drawee bank cannot recover from the collecting bank the money so paid to it. In order, however, that the collecting bank may claim protection, it must have been a bona fide holder; but the mere fact that the collecting bank receives the check from a stranger does not itself prevent it from claiming protection as a bona fide holder."

Where the cashing bank acts in good faith, the drawee cannot recover the amount which it has paid on the forged check. The drawee should know the signature of the drawer, its own depositor, better than the holder. The drawee cannot plead a custom that would entitle it to pay such draft without the signature being genuine.

The demurrer should have been sustained. Reversed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF CYRUS C. BROCK, JANE BROCK DU BRUILLE et al., Appts.

(247 Pa. 365, 93 Atl. 487.)

Will — mutilation of signature — restoration.

A will from which testator tore his signature, and by so doing mutilated a portion of a codicil, is properly admitted to probate together with the codicil if it was originally duly executed and he restored the portion of the paper torn off, rewrote his signature and the mutilated portion of the codicil, and left it among his papers at the time of his death.

(January 2, 1915.)

A PPEAL by contestants from a decree of the Orphans' Court for Allegheny County, dismissing an appeal from a decision of the register admitting to probate the will of Cyrus C. Brock, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. P. Iams and J. D. Iams for appellants.

Mr. George H. Stengel for appellee Trust Company.

Mr. James G. Hays, for appellee Hare:

Meaningless words, or words not testamentary, following the signature, are not sufficient to strike down the will.

Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. 281, 53 Am. Dec. 597; Swire's Estate, 225 Pa. 188, 73 Atl. 1110; Beaumont's Estate, 216 Pa. 350, 65 Atl. 799, 9 Ann. Cas. 42; Taylor's Estate, 230 Pa. 346, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 66, 79 Atl. 632; Teed's Estate, 225 Pa. 633, 133 Am. St. Rep. 896, 74 Atl. 646.

The wills act does not compel a testator to sign at the end,—the physical end,—but Note.—Cases dealing with the effect of the cancellation and subsequent restoration of testator's signature are cited at page 177 of the note to Re Bullivant, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 169, dealing generally with interlineations or changes by testator after signing.

L.R.A.1915D.

at the logical end shown by the matter of the will.

Swire's Estate, 225 Pa. 188, 73 Atl. 1110; Stinson's Estate, 228 Pa. 475, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1014, 77 Atl. 597; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. 381, 52 Am. Rep. 478.

There is nowhere in the act or in the law any requirement or provision that a testator must keep on signing and resigning his will.

Sheaffer's Estate, 240 Pa. 83, 87 Atl. 577; Wikoff's Appeal, 15 Pa. 281, 53 Am. Dec. 597; Tomlinson's Appeal, 133 Pa. 245, 19 Am. St. Rep. 637, 19 Atl. 482.

This will can be sustained as a valid will by republication.

Forquer's Estate, 216 Pa. 331, 66 Atl. 92, 8 Ann. Cas. 1146; Kerchner's Estate, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 112; Manning's Estate, 46 Pa. Super. Ct. 607.

Elkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The testator was a lawyer and wrote his own will. The language is plain and unambiguous, and the intention is clearly expressed. The original will is dated March 29, 1906, when it was formally executed in the presence of witnesses. After giving directions as to the removal of the remains of his wife and the erection of a monument, the testator made a small bequest to his granddaughter and devised a cemetery lot to his brother. The residue of his estate, which was practically all of it, he gave to his two daughters and a granddaughter, share and share alike. In other words, he directed a division of his estate into three equal parts and named the beneficiaries who were to take under his will. At a subsequent date, January 17, 1907, he added a codicil which provided that his grandson should share equally with the three legatees named in the original will. The effect of the codicil was to divide the residue of the estate into four equal shares instead of three. If the situation had remained as it then was, no one could have seriously questioned the proper execution of the will and codicil. They were testamentary in character, were signed at the end thereof, and disposed of the entire estate in language too plain to be misunderstood. The present controversy grows out of what subsequently happened. During a visit to his daughter who lived in Oregon, the testator had a dispute with his granddaughter, a beneficiary under the will, and, while angry as a result of that dispute, he tore his signature from the lower right-hand corner of the paper upon which the will was written, and in doing so mutilated the codicil, which was written on the reverse side thereof. He did this in the presence of his granddaughter and others and then threw the will and that part of the paper which contained his signature upon the floor, saying, "You have not only cut yourself out, but your little brother also." Very soon thereafter the testator picked up the will which he had thrown upon the floor and put it in his pocket. There is no evidence as to what became of the detached part of the will which contained his signature; but the mutilated will, with such additions and corrections as he subsequently made to it, remained in his possession from the time he put it in his pocket after tearing his signature therefrom until the date of his death, when it was found among his papers. The will when found showed on its face that someone had very carefully and neatly attached to the original will another piece of paper of the exact size as that containing the signature of the testator which had been torn from it by him. This attached piece of paper was at the lower right-hand corner of the original will, and across it at the proper place was written the name of the testator. On the back of it were also written the words of the first codicil which had been eliminated by tearing the signature from the first page of the original will.

It will thus be seen that, when the will was found among the papers of the testator at the time of his death, it was a complete testamentary instrument with both will and codicil signed at the end thereof as required by the statute. If in point of fact the testator attached the piece of paper to the will with such great care, or caused it to be done, then rewrote his name at the end thereof, and followed this by rewriting with his own hand those words which had been eliminated from the first codicil, his intention to republish the provisions of the original will and first codicil which he had attempted in a spirit of pique or anger to destroy could not be made to appear more clearly. This was the view entertained by the orphans' court, but the facts were in dispute, and hence it was that these questions were certified to the court of common pleas for determination by a jury. The jury found that the signature on the attached piece of paper was in the handwriting of the testator, as were also the words written on the reverse side thereof which supplied the words of the first codicil that had been torn therefrom when the testator tore his signature from the original will. The jury also found that the testator either attached the paper to the will or authorized someone to do it for him. In either event his intention would be the same. An inspection of the will shows that the name of the testator was signed after the paper was attached; and, while this precise question was not certified for determination by the jury, it was found as a fact by the learned orphans' court, and in our opinion no other conclusion could be reached without doing violence to what is plain and obvious to anyone who inspects the writing. With all of these facts found on ample evidence either by the jury or by the court, the intention of the testator regarding the disposition of his property is too manifest to admit of doubt. Under these findings of fact, there is presented for our consideration upon review, a writing testamentary in character, signed at the end thereof by the testator, with his signature proved by more than two witnesses, and this is all the law requires in the execution of a will. We also agree with what the learned court below said as to the intention of the testator in republishing his first codicil, and are of opinion that this codicil was properly admitted to probate.

The second so-called codicil was in the nature of a letter addressed by the testator to his brother, and as to the refusal to admit this paper to probate we concur in the views expressed by the learned orphans' court.

Decree affirmed. Costs to be paid out of the estate.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. W. SHAW, Pff. in Certiorari,

v.

J. W. WEBB.

(131 Tenn. 173, 174 S. W. 273.)

Mechanics' lien — statute — priority to conditional vendor.

The claimed lien of one who has, without the knowledge or consent of the vendor, made repairs on an automobile conditionally sold to a vendee in possession, under a statute providing therefor in case of repairs made at the request of the owner or his agents, is subordinated to the title of the vendor, which is retained in the purchase-money notes, although the mechanic had no notice of the vendor's title.

(March 6, 1915.)

Note. — Right to lien for repairs or other services under contract with purchaser under conditional sale.

As to the priority of a lien for services on personal property over a prior chattel mortgage, see note to Reeves & Co. v. Russell, post, 1149.

For priority as between the lien of a chattel mortgage and a lien acquired by furnish-

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court in plaintiff's favor in a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien on an automobile for the amount of a repair bill. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. B. C. Howell and Chester K. Hart, for plaintiff in certiorari:

The title of a vendor under a conditional-sale contract is superior to a mechanics' lien under chapter 150 of the Acts of 1909, when work and repairs are done on and put on an automobile by a mechanic at the request of a conditional vendee of said automobile without the knowledge of the conditional vendor, and before the maturity of the payment for said car by the conditional vendee.

McCombs v. Guild, 9 Lea, 81; Houston v. Dyche, Meigs, 75, 33 Am. Dec. 130; Price v. Jones, 3 Head, 84; McGhee v. Edwards, 87 Tenn. 510, 3 L.R.A. 654, 11 S. W. 316.

Mr. Robert L. Sadler, for defendant in certiorari:

Akers, the conditional vendee, was the owner of the automobile within the meaning of the statute providing that a mechanic has a lien on an automobile for work done or repairs furnished by contract with the owner or his agent.

Marshall v. Penington, 8 Yerg. 424; Alley v. Lanier, 1 Coldw. 542; 29 Cyc. 1550; Keith v. Maguire, 170 Mass. 210, 48 N. E. 1090; State use of Ray County v. St. Joseph, St. L. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Mo. App. 466; Nance v. Piana Co. 128 Tenn. 1, 155 S. W. 1172, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 834.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Shaw sold an automobile to one Akers, the purchase price being represented in two ing food or care to animals, see note to National Bank v. Jones, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 310.

As to the improvement of personal property at the request of a bailee as creating liability against the bailor or the property, see note to Baughman Automobile Co. v. Emanuel, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 97.

The right to a lien for repairs or improvements made on personal property, or for other services furnished in connection therewith, pursuant to a contract with a purchaser thereof under a contract of conditional sale whereby the title to the property is reserved in the vendor, while the vendee has possession, would seem to depend upon the lien claimant's knowledge or notice, actual or constructive, at the time of making the repairs or improvements, or furnishing the other services, as to the title to the property; upon the terms of the statute creating the lien, in case it is not merely a common-law lien; and upon the terms of the contract of conditional sale, as implying authority in the vendee to obtain repairs or not.

Thus, one who, with knowledge, actual or constructive, of the vendor's title, makes repairs upon personal property at the request of the vendee in possession under a contract of purchase, the terms of which are unperformed, can have no lien upon the property, as against the vendor, for the repairs, unless the vendee was authorized by the vendor to impose such a lien. Small v. Robinson, 69 Me. 425, 31 Am. Rep. 299.

And one who, knowing at the time that the title to the property was in another person, and that the one requesting the repairs was insolvent, has performed labor and furnished material to repair an automobile at the instance of the vendee thereof under a duly recorded contract of conditional sale whereby the vendor retains title to the property, has no lien on the property, as against the vendor, for the labor performed and material furnished, although L.R.A.1915D.

the vendor knew that the repairs were being made on the property, and that the vendee was insolvent. Baughman Automobile Co. v. Emanuel, 137 Ga. 354, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 97, 73 S. E. 511.

And a conditional vendor who merely knew that improvements were being made on an automobile which he had sold under a contract whereby he retained title to the property does not, by taking the machine from the conditional vendee, after default, and when the repairer is seeking to subject it to a lien for the labor and material furnished by him, create any liability which will subject his property to the lien, as by an acceptance of the improvements, where the improvements are of such a nature that he has no choice but to accept them; such acceptance not being voluntary. Ibid.

It would seem, however, although no decision upon this point has been found, that one claiming merely a common-law lien for services to personal property, depending upon the continued possession of the property, should be entitled to such lien, although the services were performed at the request of a conditional vendee in possession without title, where he had, at the time of the services, no knowledge or notice, either actual or constructive, as given by statutory filing or recording of the contract, of the vendor's title to the property.

But, as held in SHAW v. WEBB, although a mechanic making repairs at the request of a conditional vendee in possession had no notice of the vendor's title, he is not entitled, as against the vendor, to a lien depending upon a statute providing therefor in case of repairs at the request of the owner or his agents.

On the other hand, where a contract of conditional sale contemplates repairs to the property sold, while it is in the possession of the conditional vendee, and before payment of the purchase price, and the terms of the contract are such as expressly or im-notes, each of which contained a stipulation retaining title to the machine to secure payment. The machine passed at once into the possession of the vendee. Some time thereafter it became necessary to have some repairs made on it, and the automobile was taken to Webb, a mechanic, about the date of the maturity of the first note. After the repairs were placed the machine was turned back by the mechanic to the conditional vendee, Akers. On default being made in the payment of the first maturing note, Shaw, by writ of replevin, repossessed himself of the machine. Suit was thereupon brought by Webb, the mechanic, against Shaw, the vendor, to enforce a claimed mechanics' lien on the automobile for the amount of the repair bill so created.

This action was predicated upon a recent statute (Acts 1909, chap. 150) which provides: "That there shall be a lien upon any vehicle . . . for any repairs or improvements made or fixtures or machinery furnished at the request of the owner or his agent in favor of the mechanic, contractor, founder, or machinist who undertakes the work," etc.

Judgment was rendered in favor of the mechanic by the circuit judge, who tried the case without the intervention of a jury. On appeal that judgment was affirmed by the court of civil appeals; and we are, by petition for certiorari, asked to review the judgment of the court last named.

The mechanic had no actual notice of the retention of title; and the conditional vendor did not know that the machine was placed with the mechanic to be repaired. It is to be noted that we are not dealing with a claim by Webb to the artisan's common-law lien which depends for validity, as against third parties, upon the retention of possession on the part of the artisan. Here pliedly to authorize the vendee to have repairs made by a third person while title to the property remains in the vendor, one making repairs under a contract with the purchaser may have a lien therefor, even as against the vendor. Thus, a coach builder who has repaired a dogcart under a contract with the hirer thereof under a hire-purchase agreement whereby the hirer was to pay for the cart by monthly instalments has a lien for the cost of the repairs against the lessor in the hire-purchase agreement, where that agreement provided that the hirer was "to keep and preserve the said dogcart from injury," thus contemplating that repairs should be made, and implying that the hirer should have reasonable repairs made by a coach builder if necessary. Keene v. Thomas [1905] 1 K. B. 136, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 21, 53 Week. Rep. 336, 92 L. T. N. S. 19, 21 Times L. R. 2.

And under a statute declaring the right and lien which a mechanic has at common law on all personal property in his possession, for repairs, and providing a method for the enforcement thereof, one who has made necessary repairs on an automobile intrusted to him for that purpose by a conditional vendee in possession, who had been using the automobile for a long period of time, with the knowledge and consent of the conditional vendor, who also had knowledge that the vendee, in the course of his use of the property, was having it repaired, and made no objection thereto,—has a paramount and superior lien to that of the vendor of the property for the payment for the labor performed and materials furnished in making the repairs. Broom v. Polk, post, 1146.

And statutes providing that every person who has expended labor, skill, or material on any chattel at the request of its owner shall have a lien upon the chattel for the price or value of such expenditure, etc., and that "every person who is in possession of a chattel, under an agreement for the purchase thereof, whether the title thereto be in him or his vendor, shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed the owner thereof, and the lien of a person expending material, labor, or skill thereon shall be superior to and preferred to the rights of the person holding the title thereto, or any lien thereon antedating the time of expenditure of the labor, skill, or material thereon by a lien claimant, to the extent that such expenditure has enhanced the value of such chattel,"—have been held not to be unconstitutional. Crosier v. Cudihee, — Wash. —, 147 Pac. 1146.

Innkeeper's Lien.

Under a statute providing that the keeper of a boarding house has a lien upon, while in possession, and may detain, property brought upon his premises by a boarder, for the proper charges due from him, unless the boarding-house keeper had notice that such property was not, when brought upon the premises, the property of the boarder,—a boarding-house keeper who received as boarders a husband, wife, and child, has a lien, for board furnished to them, upon a piano which they brought with them to the boarding house, without notice to the keeper that it was not their property, although it had been purchased by the wife under a conditional-sale contract reserving title to the vendor, which contract was not filed, or a duplicate furnished to the purchaser, as required by statute, to render it valid as against a pledgee in good faith. Leonard v. Harris, 147 App. Div. 458, 131 N. Y. Supp. 909, affirmed without opinion in 211 N. Y. 511, 105 N. E. 1089.

As to the lien of an innkeeper on property of a third person, including the vendor in a conditional sale, in possession of a guest, see Horace Waters & Co. v. Gerard, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958, and note. A. C. W.

Webb had parted with possession, after the repairs were made on the automobile, to Akers, the conditional vendee.

However, the few cases that pass upon the right of an artisan in possession and claiming such common-law lien as against a conditional vendor of the personalty repaired by analogy shed much light upon the point we have to decide.

In Baughman Automobile Co. v. Emanuel, 137 Ga. 354, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 97, 73 S. E. 511, we understand from the report of the case that such common-law lien was relied upon by a mechanic for repairs put by him on an automobile, under contract with a conditional vendee in possession, and the court held that the artisan's lien was subordinate to the right of the vendor, standing on his title retained. In that case it appeared that the lien claimant had knowledge of the rights of the conditional vendor at the time the work on the machine was done.

Small v. Robinson, 69 Me. 425, 31 Am. Rep. 299, involved a contest between the conditional seller of a hack, which had been in the possession of the vendee for about two years, and a mechanic urging the common-law lien of an artisan. A like ruling was made in favor of the conditional seller.

If we go, for further analogy, to the law governing chattel mortgages, we find the rulings to be at least apparently variant. The artisan's common-law lien has been held to be subordinate to the rights of a mortgagee of such a chattel under a registered instrument; and the fact that the mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, affords no implied authority on his part to subject the chattel to such a lien in priority. A lien attaches, it is held, but only to the mortgagor's interest. Denison v. Shuler, 47 Mich. 598, 41 Am. Rep. 734, 11 N. W. 402, and cases cited; Bissell v. Pearce, 28 N. Y. 252; Hampton v. Seible, 58 Mo. App. 181, overruling, it would seem; Kirtley v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 144; 7 Cyc. 39.

Other cases uphold the priority of the artisan's lien, over the mortgagee's title, in instances where there may fairly be implied a consent, on the part of the mortgagee, that the mortgagor, while in the use of the chattel, may have it repaired. Thus, in Watts v. Sweeney, 127 Ind. 116, 22 Am. St. Rep. 615, 26 N. E. 680, it was held that a machinist was entitled to prevail on such a lien as against the claim of the mortgagee of a locomotive, the mortgagor being a public or common carrier, and the repairs being made after the condition of the mortgage was broken and the mortgage debt had become due.

In Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294, the subject-matter was a hack let for hire which had been mortgaged and described in the mortgage as "now in use" in a certain livery stable. The mortgagor was left in possession agreeably to the terms of the mortgage; that is, the manifest intention of the parties was that the hack should continue to be driven for hire and kept in a proper state of repair for that purpose. For repairs made under contract with the mortgagor the artisan's lien was awarded priority.

In Ruppert v. Zang, 73 N. J. L. 216, 62 Atl. 998, in an opinion by Pitney, J., it was held that a common-law lien had priority over a mortgage when claimed for repairs upon a wagon by an artificer, made without the knowledge of the mortgagee.

However, in the cases of Watts v. Sweeney and Ruppert v. Zang, supra, the distinction between the effect of such a common-law lien and a statutory lien of a mechanic was noted—whether properly so is a debatable point. Judge Pitney, in the last-named case, refers to Sullivan v. Clifton, 55 N. J. L. 324, 20 L.R.A. 719, 39 Am. St. Rep. 652, 26 Atl. 984, as a case pointing out the ground of such a distinction. It was said in Sullivan v. Clifton: "It is one of the characteristics of common-law liens which arise, upon considerations of justice and policy, by operation of law, as distinguished from liens created by contract or statute, that the former, as a general rule, attach to the property itself without any reference to ownership, and override all other rights in the property, while the latter are subordinate to all prior existing rights therein."

See also D'Gette v. Sheldon, 27 Neb. 829, 44 N. W. 30; 25 Cyc. 678.

We think it manifest that if the New Jersey court had been dealing with a claim that could only have had basis on a statute, like the one in the pending case, it would have held the same inferior to the mortgage lien.

Coming now to precedents which contrast the rights of statutory lien claimants with those of mortgagees under previously registered chattel mortgages:

In McGhee v. Edwards, 87 Tenn. 506, 3 L.R.A. 654, 11 S. W. 316, it was ruled that the statutory lien of a livery stable keeper on a horse must yield to the lien of such a mortgagee, where the lien claim arises under contract with the mortgagor in possession before the maturity of the mortgage. In accord are many cases relating to the statutory lien for pasturage of live stock. National Bank v. Jones, 12 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 310, and note (18 Okla. 555, 91 Pac. 191, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041). The same rule applies to other chattels. 25 Cyc. 678.

Thus, in the recent case of Adler v. Godfrey, 163 Wis. 186, 140 N. W. 1115, it was held that the fact that the mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession of a mortgaged automobile affords him no implied authority to create a lien thereon for storage (a lien by statute in that state) superior to the rights of the mortgagee, and that the rights are not changed by the fact that the mortgagee knew that the mortgagor was keeping the machine in a public garage.

The claim advanced in this case in behalf of Webb as lienor is based upon a statute which awards a lien, notwithstanding the mechanic may have parted with possession, upon any vehicle "for any repairs or improvements made . . . at the request of the owner or his agent," but saving the rights of purchasers without notice under good-faith transfers.

The question for solution, then, is: Is this statutory lien superior to the rights of Shaw, the conditional vendor?

We have not been cited, nor have we been able to find, where the point in the present phase has been ruled in any reported case. We are of opinion, however, that on the above and other analogies of the law the lien claimant must fail in the pending case.

The Michigan court ruled in Presque Isle, Sash & Door Co. v. Reichel, 179 Mich. 466, 146 N. W. 231, that the title of a conditional seller of a saw has priority over a statutory lien of a laborer for services in installing the saw in a mill under contract with the vendee.

Where real estate is the subject-matter of transfer and the vendor retains the legal title, it is not within the power of the vendee, under a bond for title or under a contract to convey (nothing else appearing), to fix a mechanics' lien upon the property which will be superior to the title so retained. Gillespie v. Bradford, 7 Yerg. 168, 27 Am. Dec. 494; Rhea v. Allison, 3 Head, 176; Belnap v. Condon, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601, note.

The prior rights of a mortgagee of realty under a registered mortgage cannot be so affected by the mortgagor in possession (New Memphis Gaslight Co. Cases, 105 Tenn. 268, 302, 80 Am. St. Rep. 880, 60 S. W. 206), even where the mortgagee merely knew of the repairs or improvements (Pride v. Viles, 3 Sneed, 125).

In this state, the retention by a vendor of the title to personal property to secure the purchase money partakes of the nature L.R.A.1915D.

of a lien. McDonald Automobile Co. v. Bicknell, 129 Tenn. 493, 167 S. W. 108, and cases cited. Such title, when retained in a written contract, unregistered, is superior to any right acquired by a purchaser for value and without notice. Price v. Jones, 3 Head, 84; McCombs v. Gould, 9 Lea, 81.

It is not easy to conceive, then, how the title retained or lien that is prior in time may be supplanted by a junior lien, created by statute in behalf of a mechanic, without the concurrence of the holder of the precedent lien; and it is not contended that any such express assent or concurrence is shown in the pending case.

There are cases which hold that such consent may be implied from the nature of the transaction or from the circumstances. In Hammond v. Danielson, and Watts v. Sweeney, supra, the chattels were in use by public carriers, and the courts found room to imply such consent. In Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, 54 Neb. 417, 40 L.R.A. 761, 69 Am. St. Rep. 719, 74 N. W. 966, involving a buggy, the court construed the language of the mortgage to have had the making of repairs in contemplation.

Doubtless a court, in order to sustain a claim to lien, would not hesitate to seize upon any provision in a contract retaining title or in a mortgage which may be construed to look to the making of repairs or improvements at the instance of the vendee or mortgagor in possession. Ragon v. Howard, 97 Tenn. 334, 37 S. W. 136; Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, supra.

The English courts, it appears, take this view of the rights of the parties. In the recent case of Keene v. Thomas [1905] 1 K. B. 136, where by a hire-purchase agreement plaintiff had let a dogcart to one Robertson, who, in the course of time, sent the cart to be repaired to defendant, a coach builder, Lord Chief Justice Alverstone said: "This case raises an important point, and one on which there is not much direct authority. I am rather surprised, indeed, that there is not more, but probably hire-purchase agreements were not so common formerly as they are now. I think that the county judge has come to a right conclusion. The real question that we have to decide is that stated by Alderson, B., in Buxton v. Baughan (1834) 6 Car. & P. 674, 40 Revised Rep. 842, namely, whether the man who made the bargain with the repairer had authority from the plaintiff to make such a bargain. There is no doubt that Robertson made the bargain that the trap should be repaired by the defendant. The hire-purchase agreement expressly says that Robertson is 'to keep and preserve the said dogcart from injury (damage by fire included).' . . . The clause does give Robertson authority to take care of the cart and to keep it in proper order, and that, in my opinion, implies an authority on the plaintiff's behalf to get the trap repaired if it needed repair.

"The case of Buxton v. Baughan, supra, is not authority in favor of the plaintiff. The facts there were not the same. In that case, Alderson, B., said: 'If you trust your goods into a man's possession, and he makes a bargain about them without your authority, you are not bound by that bargain, and may reclaim the goods. . . . A man has no right to keep my property, and charge for the standing of it, unless there was a previous bargain between him and me, or between him and some agent authorized by me;' and he held there on the facts in that case that there was no such authority."

We are of opinion, therefore, that something more is required than the fact that a vehicle, which may need repair in order to continued personal use by the vendee, is placed in the possession of the conditional vendee. The vendor in such case should not be considered as consenting in advance to the subordination to that which both parties patently intended to make superior—the title retained for the security of the purchase money.

The intent of the vendor to permit repairs to be made and a consequent lien to attach to his interest should have been manifested in the note contract, since upon a transfer of the note the transferee is vested with the rights of the conditional vendor. To announce a doctrine such as is contended for by the mechanic in this case would be to deprive a note which contains a reservation of title to personalty of a no inconsiderable element of marketability. The transferee of such paper should not, we believe, take it subject to the risk of having his right embarrassed or lessened by such act of the vendee maker, when the note contains nothing to put him on notice.

It should, perhaps, be noted, by way of parenthesis, that a distinction is taken by the authorities between such a claim of a mechanic and the common-law lien of an innkeeper on a chattel held in possession as conditional vendee by a guest. To such a chattel brought upon his premises, the lien attaches in favor of the innkeeper, provided he had no notice of the nature and extent of the guest's title when the property was brought into the inn. In such case the common-law imposed upon the innkeeper the obligation to receive the guest and his baggage, and that liability is deemed sufficient to give rise to a coextensive lien. L.R.A.1915D.

So to speak, by way of recompense for the enforced obligation, the lien is held to attach to the property regardless of the true ownership.

The Court of Civil Appeals in its judgment awarded priority to the mechanic on his claim to a paramount lien. Reversed, with judgment here in accord with this opinion.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

J. A. BROOM & SON, Appts.,

v.

F. R. POLK.

S. S. DALE & SONS, Interveners.

(— Miss. —, 67 So. 659.)

Mechanics' lien — on automobile sold on condition.

A vendor of an automobile, who takes notes for unpaid purchase money, retaining title to the machine as security, by placing the machine in the purchaser's possession for use, impliedly authorizes the making of necessary repairs upon the machine, so that the lien for such repairs takes precedence of his lien, at least, if he knew without protest that the repairs were being made.

(March 15, 1915.)

A PPEAL by petitioners from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of interveners in an action brought to recover a balance owing on an account for repairs on an automobile in possession of defendant, and for materials used in such repairs. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. C. Oakes for appellants.

Mr. J. E. Parker for appellees.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants filed a petition against F. R. Polk to recover a balance owing on an account for repairs on an automobile in his possession and for materials used in such repairs. Appellants alleged that the work was done and the materials used for repairing and keeping in order the automobile, and they prayed the court to establish a mechanics' lien thereon, and order a sale for the satisfaction of the indebtedness.

Note. — As to right to lien for repairs or other services under contract with purchaser under conditional sale, see note to Shaw v. Webb, ante, 1141.

The question of priority of lien for services on personal property over prior chattel mortgage is considered in the note to Reeves & Co. v. Russell, post, 1149.

Appellees interpleaded, and alleged that they had sold the automobile to Mr. Polk; that notes were given to evidence deferred payments on the purchase price, in which notes title in the property was retained in appellees. They prayed that the automobile be sold, and that the balance owing them as shown by the notes be paid first out of the proceeds of sale and before payment of appellants' claim for repairs.

The case was tried in the circuit court before the judge, jury being waived, upon an agreed statement of facts. The court gave judgment in favor of appellees, deciding that their claim upon the automobile, based on the title retained in the notes, was superior to that of appellants for labor and material used in making repairs thereon.

We quote the agreed statement of facts as follows:

"(1) That on the 20th day of June, 1911, S. S. Dale & Sons sold the automobile in controversy to F. R. Polk for the agreed price of $775, and retained title in themselves to the aforesaid automobile as security for the purchase price thereof; that there is now due and unpaid on account of said purchase price the sum of $465, with interest thereon at 10 per cent per annum from the 20th day of June, 1911; that J. A. Broom & Sons have known at all times that the said automobile had not been fully paid for by F. R. Polk as aforesaid; that said J. A. Broom & Sons do not question or deny the amount that S. S. Dale & Sons say that F. R. Polk is due them on account of this automobile, and the said automobile is of less value than the unpaid part of the purchase price for which title is retained; that S. S. Dale & Sons admit that the amount of $95.25 claimed by J. A. Broom & Sons is just and correct against F. R. Polk for material furnished and repairs made to the automobile involved in this litigation; that S. S. Dale & Sons have been aware and were fully advised during such time as such repairs were being made and material furnished as aforesaid were being made and furnished as aforesaid; that S. S. Dale & Sons at no time ever objected to repairs being made or material furnished for such repairs to the said automobile.

"Whereas, it is agreed by and between the attorneys for both parties that S. S. Dale & Sons retained a title in themselves for security for the purchase money of said automobile, and that they therefore have an equitable lien upon the said automobile for said purchase money to the amount now unpaid, and that the said J. A. Broom & Sons have a mechanics' lien upon the said automobile for the amount due them as aforesaid for repairs made to and material furnished for the said automobile:
L.R.A.1915D.

"Wherefore the question submitted to the court for decision is as to whose lien takes priority; and both parties pray the court for an appropriate judgment defining their rights in the premises."

In this state, by statute (§ 3075 of the Code of 1906), a mechanic is given the right to retain in his possession any article which he repairs until the price of his labor and material furnished in making such repairs shall be paid. The statute states that any article repaired shall be liable for the price of the labor and material employed in repairing the same. Provision is made in the statute for the enforcement of the mechanic's right, including a special order of sale of the property retained in his possession for the payment of the amount due.

A mechanic, at common law, has a lien on all personal property for repairs. Persons have by common law the right to retain goods on which they have bestowed labor, until the reasonable charges therefor are paid. 2 Kent, Com. 635. "In the absence of specific agreement, if a party has bestowed labor and skill on a chattel bailed to him for such purpose, and thereby improved it, he has by general law a lien on it for the reasonable value of his labor, or the right to retain it until paid for such skill and labor." Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, 54 Neb. 417, 40 L.R.A. 761, 69 Am. St. Rep. 719, 74 N. W. 966; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 491, 38 Am. Dec. 663. It was said by Mr. Kent in his Commentaries that "this right rests on principles of natural equity and commercial necessity."

The statute (§ 3075) does not create a new right or lien for the mechanic's benefit, but only declares the right and lien which he has at common law, and then provides a method for the enforcement thereof.

In this case the automobile was intrusted by the party who had the lawful possession of it to the appellants to be repaired. By virtue of the labor done by appellants and the material used by them in making the repairs, they had the right under the common law, as well as under the statute, to retain possession thereof until they were paid their charges, and by the statute were given the right to subject the article by proper proceedings and through sale to the payment of the amount owing.

Appellees, by retaining title to the notes given to evidence the purchase price, were placed in the position of a person holding a lien or mortgage on the property. Mr. Polk occupied the position of mortgagor in possession. It is the general rule that the employment of the mechanic making the repairs should be by the owner of the property to be affected by the lien, or by his consent, express or implied.

It has been held that the common-law lien of a mechanic for repairs under special circumstances may be superior to prior existing liens on property. 3 R. C. L. § 56, p. 134; Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, supra. We quote as follows from 3 R. C. L. § 56, p. 134: "Thus, where property which is liable to need repairs is to be retained and used by a mortgagor for a long period of time, it will be presumed to have been the intention of the parties to the mortgage that it is to be kept in repair; and when the property is machinery, or is of such a character that it must be intrusted to a mechanic or machinist to make such repairs, the mortgagor in possession will be constituted the agent of the mortgagee to procure the repairs to be made; and as such necessary repairs are for the betterment of the property, and increase its value to the gain of the mortgagee, the common-law lien in favor of the bailee for the value of the repairs is paramount and superior to the lien of the mortgagee. The mortgagee is presumed, in such case, to have contracted with a knowledge of the law giving to a mechanic a lien."

In the case of Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, supra, a physician had executed a chattel mortgage on a buggy used by him in his practice. He had repairs made on the vehicle in the shop of the carriage company. The party holding the mortgage knew that the physician used the buggy, and knew that he had left it in the shop for repairs. The court held that the carriage company making the repairs was entitled to its lien superior to the lien of the chattel mortgage. The court said that in cases where the mortgagor can be said to have express or implied authority from the mortgagee to procure repairs to be made on the mortgaged property, that the lien of the mechanic should be superior to the chattel mortgage.

In the case of Watts v. Sweeney, 127 Ind. 116, 22 Am. St. Rep. 615, 26 N. E. 680, it was held that a mechanic who made repairs on a locomotive and tender had a lien which took precedence of that of the mortgagee, where the property was permitted to remain in the possession and use of the mortgagor, and through such use it became necessary to repair it. We quote from the opinion in this case as follows: "When the mortgagee intrusts machinery of the character in controversy to the custody of the mortgagor for a long period of time, to be used by the mortgagor in operating the railroad, it will be presumed against the mortgagee that all necessary repairs were contemplated, and the mortgagor was, in case of needed repairs, constituted the agent of the mortgagee in procuring such repairs, and in such case equity gives the mechanic a lien for his services and materials. The repairs add to the value of the property, and they are for the benefit of the mortgagee, as well as the mortgagor. Where property is to be retained and used by the mortgagor for a long period of time, it will be presumed to have been the intention of the parties to the mortgage, where it is property liable to such repairs, that it is to be kept in repair; and when the property is machinery, or property of a character which renders it necessary to intrust it to a mechanic or machinist to make such repairs, the mortgagor in possession will be constituted the agent of the mortgagee to procure the repairs to be made; and as such necessary repairs are for the betterment of the property, and add to its value to the gain of the mortgagee, the common-law lien in favor of the mechanic for the value of the repairs is paramount and superior to the lien of the mortgagee. The mortgagee is presumed, in such case, to have contracted with a knowledge of the law giving to a mechanic a lien."

In the leading case on this subject (Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417) a shipwright was permitted to detain a vessel for his charges for repairs as against a mortgagee under a prior mortgage. These repairs were made by the mortgagor's directions without the knowledge of the mortgagee. Opinions were delivered in the case by several judges. We quote as follows from that delivered by Byles, J.: "As it is obvious that every ship will, from time to time, require repairs, it seems but reasonable, under circumstances like these, to infer that the mortgagor had authority from the mortgagees to cause such repairs as should become necessary to be done, upon the usual and ordinary terms. Now, what are the usual and ordinary terms? Why, that the person by whom the repairs are ordered should alone be liable personally, but that the shipwright should have a lien upon the ship for the work and labor he has expended on her. Nor are the mortgagees at all prejudicially affected thereby. They have a property augmented in value by the amount of the repairs."

In the case at bar the automobile was in the possession of Mr. Polk, and being used by him with the knowledge and consent of appellees, which use continued for a long period of time. Appellees not only knew and consented to the general use of the automobile by Mr. Polk, but also had knowledge that, in the course of his use of the property, he was having it repaired. Appellees, with this knowledge, made no objection to the repairs being made.

From the agreed facts in the case we understand that the repairs were such as were necessary to preserve the automobile and keep it in proper condition for its use. Repair means to restore, renovate, or mend an article; to keep it in good or sound condition. Repairs, in the ordinary sense, are made to prevent deterioration in an article, and to keep it up in its value and preserve it for the use intended. It was clearly the intention of the parties that Mr. Polk, the mortgagor, should continue in the ordinary use of the automobile. While being so used it was necessary to keep it in a sufficient state of repair. This would be not only to the benefit of the user, Mr. Polk, but by preserving the value of the property, was also for the benefit of appellees as mortgagees.

From the sole possession, control, and use of the automobile by Mr. Polk by agreement with appellees, from the manner of its use and the necessity of repairing it to preserve it and keep it in running order and prevent its deterioration, and from the making of such repairs with the knowledge of appellees, we conclude that there was an implied authority and permission from appellees, as mortgagees, to Mr. Polk, as mortgagor, to have such repairs made, and that appellants have a paramount and superior lien to that of appellees on the property for the payment of the labor they performed and materials furnished in repairing it.

Reversed, and judgment here in favor of appellants.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

REEVES & COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

S. R. RUSSELL et al., Respts.

(28 N. D. 265, 148 N. W. 654.)

Mechanics' lien — priority over mortgage.

1. Action for foreclosure of chattel mortgage of record. Boyle Brothers answer, Headnotes by Goss, J.

Note. — Priority of lien for services on personal property over prior chattel mortgage.

I. Common-law lien.

a. In general, 1150.

b. Services procured by authority of mortgagee, 1151.

II. Statutory lien.

a. Expressly subject to prior liens, 1152.

L.R.A.1915D.

asking affirmative relief for foreclosure of their artisan's lien for material, repairs, and labor performed upon the mortgaged personal property under a contract with the owner of the mortgaged personalty. The mortgage was taken in 1906, has been renewed, and is a valid mortgage upon the property. Boyle Brothers performed the work in 1911, immediately filing a claim for artisan's lien under chapter 168, Laws 1907, and also retained possession of the property under a claim of lien by virtue of such possession under § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, in case chapter 168, Laws of 1907, be unconstitutional, and claim their lien under § 6295 to have priority over a lien by mortgage of record. Held, that an artisan's lien is a common-law lien, and where possession was retained, as here, the statute being but declaratory thereof, and such a lien at common law having priority over mortgage liens, an artisan's lien, under § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, where possession is retained, has priority over existing mortgage liens, and this independent of the provisions of chapter 168, Laws 1907, in express terms granting such priority.

Constitutional law — validity of statute — when determined.

2. It therefore becomes unnecessary to determine whether the 1907 statute is or is not unconstitutional, because, though the same may be assumed to be unconstitutional, Boyle Brothers must recover under the prior existing law (§ 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877), while, if 1907 statute be constitutional, it in express terms authorizes defendants' recovery.

Same — when considered.

3. This court will decline to pass upon the constitutionality of a statute, where the same is unnecessary to a decision of the right of recovery.

Mortgage — waiver.

4. No question of waiver of mortgage rights is involved, because all rights of plaintiff under its mortgage were subordinate to the rights of those claiming under the artisan's lien.

Same — subjecting property to artisan's lien.

5. The fact that the owner, employing Boyle Brothers to repair the engine, had purchased from the mortgagor, who sold the mortgaged property without written consent, does not affect the title of such property in the purchaser, who, as owner, could authorize repairs thereto, and subject

II.—continued.

b. Expressly superior to other liens, 1153.

c. Priority not declared by statute.

1. In general, 1154.

2. Lien of producer, 1156.

This note does not include the question of priority of maritime liens over chattel mortgages on vessels.

For priority as between the lien of a chatthe same to an artisan's lien for repairs so authorized; such owner being, for such purposes, considered in law as the agent of the mortgagee.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Mechanics' lien — statutory priority.

6. Where at common law an artisan's common-law lien had priority over existing contract liens, and the statute granting an artisan's lien is but declaratory of common-law principles, and is silent on such question of priority, the common law granting priority to the common-law lien must be construed to grant priority to the lien so declared by statute, and but declaratory of the common law.

Common law — adoption.

7. The common law is adopted by statute as the basic law applicable to civil rights and remedies not defined by statute.

Statute — construction — common law.

8. The common law must, as to civil rights and remedies, be considered in the tel mortgage and a lien acquired by furnishing food or care to animals, see note to National Bank v. Jones, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 310.

As to the right to a lien for repairs or other services under a contract with a purchaser under a conditional sale, see note to Shaw v. Webb, ante, 1141.

As to the improvement of personal property at the request of a bailee as creating liability against the bailor or the property, see note to Baughman Automobile Co. v. Emanuel, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 97.

I. Common-law lien.

a. In general.

Generally, in the absence of express authority, or circumstances showing implied authority, from the mortgagee to procure services in connection with personal property, a common-law lien on the property for such services furnished at the request of the mortgagor is subordinate to the lien of a prior chattel mortgage, if the lien claimant had notice, either actual or constructive, of the prior mortgage.

Thus, a mechanic's lien for repairs made on an engine at the request of the mortgagor is subordinate to a prior, duly filed and renewed chattel mortgage thereon for the purchase price. Denison v. Shuler, 47 Mich. 598, 41 Am. Rep. 734, 11 N. W. 402.

And a warehouseman's common-law lien for storage charges on furniture and household goods stored by the mortgagor in possession, or one holding under him, does not take precedence of a prior recorded chattel mortgage in which there is nothing which would give the mortgagor authority to store the property with a warehouseman. Vette v. Leonori, 42 Mo. App. 217.

So, one who, at the request of the mortgagor in possession, has moved and stored construction and application of statutes declaratory thereof, and such statutes construed and applied as continuations of or legislative declarations of the common law, so far as covered by such statutes.

Same — alteration of common law — presumption.

9. The statute will not be presumed to alter the common law, "other than what has been specified and besides what has been plainly pronounced."

Mechanics' lien — priority — statutory provision.

10. The statute here declaratory of the common law as to the lien, but silent on its priority, will not be enlarged by negative construction to deny priority existing at common law to the lien so defined, but will be limited in application to the definition of the lien, and the common-law priority considered as continuing in force and applicable to the lien; the common law as to priority supplementing the lien as at common law. The statute will be construed as a continuation of the common law, and not household goods subject to a duly recorded chattel mortgage, has no lien on the goods for the moving and storage, as against the mortgagee, although he had no actual notice of the mortgage, and the storage was necessary for the preservation of the property, and the mortgagee, upon being informed of the moving and storage, expressed no disapproval thereof. Storms v. Smith, 137 Mass. 201.

And the common-law lien of one who has made repairs upon a buggy at the request of the mortgagor in possession after condition broken is subordinate to a prior, duly recorded chattel mortgage, where a mortgagor is held to have no title or interest in, but only bare permissive possession of, the mortgaged property after breach of condition, and there is nothing to show that the mortgagee, or anyone acting on his behalf, authorized the repairs. Hampton v. Seible, 58 Mo. App. 181.

But it has been held that a workman who is in possession of bricks, in the manufacture of which for another he has spent his labor, is entitled to an artisan's lien thereon superior to a previously executed chattel mortgage covering all brick in course of manufacture from time to time during the continuance thereof. Roberts v. Bank of Toronto, 25 Ont. Rep. 194.

And in Loss v. Fry, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 7, it was held that the lien of a mechanic upon coaches of which he had possession, for necessary repairs made thereon by him for the owner, was prior in law to the lien of a chattel mortgage made and duly filed pursuant to statute prior to the making of such repairs.

And see also REEVES & Co. v. RUSSELL. The court, however, in Loss v. Fry, supra, merely followed the holding of the general term of the supreme court in Scott v. Delahunt, 5 Lans. 372, which was subsequently affirmed in 65 N. Y. 128, and which inas excluding the common law on that part of the subject not covered by the statute.

Statute — repeal — revivor of common law.

11. Where a statute either declaratory of or changing the common law is repealed without express provision against the revivor of the common law, the common law is ipso facto revived by such repeal, which repeal will be regarded, in the absence of a contrary legislative intent appearing, as an affirmance of the common law, reviving the same.

(May 8, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Stutsman County in defendants' favor in an action brought to foreclose a chattel mortgage on a threshing machine, and to determine priority of liens thereon. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

involved a lien for repairs to a boat, as to which it seems that a different rule may prevail, upon the theory that necessary repairs made upon a boat at the request of the mortgagor in possession and use thereof are made upon the implied consent and authority of the mortgagee.

And in REEVES & Co. v. RUSSELL, the court seems also to have based its holding as to the priority of the artisan's lien over the prior recorded chattel mortgage upon implied authority of the mortgagor to bind the mortgagee by a lien for repairs; the court stating generally that the owner of mortgaged property is the implied agent of the mortgagee for the authorization of repairs thereto, whose act as such binds the mortgagee and subordinates the mortgage lien to that of the artisan.

As to the priority of a lien for services procured by express or implied authority of the mortgagee, see subdivision, I. b, infra.

b. Services procured by authority of mortgagee.

Where a mortgagor in possession of personal property has express authority, or the nature of the property and surrounding circumstances are such as to give him implied authority, from the mortgagee, to procure services in connection therewith, a common-law lien for such services may be superior to the prior chattel mortgage. As stated in Watts v. Sweeney, 127 Ind. 116, 22 Am. St. Rep. 615, 26 N. E. 680: "Where property is to be retained and used by the mortgagor for a long period of time, it will be presumed to have been the intention of the parties to the mortgage, where it is property liable to such repairs, that it is to be kept in repair; and when the property is machinery, or property of a character which renders it necessary to intrust it to a mechanic or machinist to make such

Messrs. Lawrence & Murphy, for appellant:

The lien statute is unconstitutional and inoperative upon plaintiff's mortgage, executed and filed prior to the passage of such statute, and is contrary to both state and Federal Constitutions as a law impairing the obligation of a contract.

Walker, Am. Law, 11th ed. p. 217; Yeatman v. King, 2 N. D. 421, 33 Am. St. Rep. 797, 51 N. W. 728; Howard v. Bugbee, 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753; 8 Cyc. 900; National Bank v. Jones, 18 Okla. 560, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 310, 91 Pac. 191, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 33 L. ed. 905, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 546; Crowther v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 29 C. C. A. 1, 42 U. S. App. 701, 85 Fed. 43; Kilpatrick v. Kansas City & B. R. Co. 41 Am. St. Rep. 758, note; Giles v. Stanton, 86 Tex. 620, 26 S. W. 615; 1 Jones, Liens, § 701.

repairs, the mortgagor in possession will be constituted the agent of the mortgagee to procure the repairs to be made, and as such necessary repairs are for the betterment of the property, and add to its value to the gain of the mortgagee, the common-law lien in favor of the mechanic for the value of the repairs is paramount and superior to the lien of the mortgagee. The mortgagee is presumed in such case to have contracted with a knowledge of the law giving to a mechanic a lien."

So, where a locomotive engine mortgaged with the other equipment of a railroad was the only engine belonging to the mortgagor, and used in the operation of its railroad, and by the terms of the mortgage it was left in the possession of the mortgagor, and after the debt became due was still permitted by the mortgagee so to remain, to be used by the mortgagor in operating the railroad and earning the money to pay the mortgage debt; and by virtue of such use it became worn, out of repair, and unfit for use, and was by the mortgagor in possession, long after the debt matured, and after there was a forfeiture of the conditions in the mortgage, intrusted to machinists and mechanics to repair,—the necessary implication was, and the fair presumption is, that the engine was to be kept in repair; and that, being machinery requiring skilled mechanics and machinists to repair it, it would be intrusted to such persons to make necessary repairs; and the lien of the mechanics making such repairs is superior to the prior chattel mortgage. Ibid.

And where the mortgagee of certain grading tools used in the construction of railroads permitted the mortgagor to remain in the possession and use thereof after condition broken, a blacksmith who has repaired the tools at the instance and request of the mortgagor thus remaining in possession has a common-law artisan's lien on the

The statute is unconstitutional as class legislation.

Yeatman v. King, 2 N. D. 421, 33 Am. St. Rep. 797, 51 N. W. 728; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Whithed, 2 N. D. 82, 49 N. W. 318; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L.R.A. 725, 50 N. W. 970; Plummer v. Borsheim, 8 N. D. 565, 80 N. W. 690; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L.R.A. 257, 50 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 S. W. 781; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 400, 35 L.R.A. 233, 37 S. W. 1112; State v. Minor, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L.R.A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 380, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Cooley, Const. Lim.

tools for his reasonable charges, which is superior to the prior mortgage, as, notwithstanding the mortgagee's ownership after condition broken, it must be held to have been in the contemplation of the mortgagee that the property would be repaired, it being of such a character as suggests use, and that repairs would become necessary for its proper use and preservation; and the enhancement of value added by the repairs creates a lien in favor of the workman superior to the mortgage. Kirtley v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 144.

Likewise, the common-law lien of one who has made necessary repairs upon a buggy bailed to him for that purpose by the mortgagor in possession, who was using the property in his business, and in whom the legal title remained, is superior to the lien of a prior mortgage which recites that the mortgagor should not so negligently or improperly use or care for the property as to subject it to probable loss or material depreciation in value, where the mortgagee knew that the buggy at times needed repairing, and had once seen it left at the shop to be repaired; such recitals and circumstances disclosing that the mortgagor had at least implied authority from the mortgagee to have the repairs made. Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, 54 Neb. 417, 40 L.R.A. 761, 69 Am. St. Rep. 719, 74 N. W. 966.

And a lien for repairs on a hack takes precedence of a prior mortgage describing the hack as "now in use" at certain stables, where the mortgagor retained possession of and used the property agreeably to the terms of the mortgage, as "it was the manifest intention of the parties that the hack should continue to be driven for hire, and should be kept in a proper state of repair for that purpose, not merely for the benefit of the mortgagee, but for that of the mortgagor also, by preserving the value of the security and affording a means of earning wherewithal to pay off the mortgage debt." Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294.

And the common-law lien of a mechanic for necessary repairs made on a buggy at the request of the mortgagor, who had the possession and use thereof in the prosecution of his business, is superior to the lien of a prior, duly filed chattel mortgage, as the mortgagee, by authorizing the use of the property by the mortgagor in his business, and giving him apparent ownership, impliedly authorized the repairs necessary for the preservation and continued use of the property. Tucker v. Werner, 2 Misc. 193, 21 N. Y. Supp. 264.

6th ed. § 681; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 121; Luman v. Hitchens Bros. Co. 90 Md. 14, 46 L.R.A. 393, 44 Atl. 1051; Moher v. Rasmusson, 12 N. D. 71, 95 N. W. 152; First Nat. Bank v. Scott, 7 N. D. 312, 75 N. W. 254; Wright v. Sherman, 3 S. D. 290, 17 L.R.A. 792, 52 N. W. 1093; Miller v. Anderson, 1 S. D. 539, 11 L.R.A. 317, 47 N. W. 959; Owen v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 11 S. D. 153, 74 Am. St. Rep. 786, 76 N. W. 302.

Plaintiff did not waive its mortgage in favor of the Boyle Brothers lien.

Muench v. Valley Nat. Bank, 11 Mo. App. 144; Stribling v. Splint Coal Co. 31 W. Va.

Where the mortgagee of a wagon permits the mortgagor to retain possession and use it in his business, and the mortgagor has necessary repairs made by a blacksmith, without the knowledge or express consent of the mortgagee, the common-law artificer's lien of the blacksmith, while he is in possession of the wagon, is superior to the prior chattel mortgage, although it was duly recorded, as the mortgagee, by permitting the mortgagor to retain and use the wagon impliedly authorized him to have such repairs made as were necessary to keep it in condition for use. Ruppert v. Zang, 73 N. J. L. 216, 62 Atl. 998.

But "where the lien is purely a statutory one, or where the property is of such a character that it would not be reasonable to anticipate the necessity for any needed repairs for the period of time the property is to or does remain in the possession of the mortgagor, or when it is but reasonable to expect the mortgagor in person to care for or repair the property, in such cases a different rule may prevail." Watts v. Sweeney, supra.

And where a machinist has mortgaged an engine which he is constructing, an agreement by the mortgagee that the mortgagor may go on with the work on the engine, and finish it, under a previous contract, does not give the mortgagor a lien, as against the mortgagee, for work done by the former on the engine, or authorize the mortgagor, or anyone having his rights, to employ any other party to work on the engine in such a manner as to create a lien for such work as against the mortgagee. Globe Works v. Wright, 106 Mass. 207.

II. Statutory Lien.

a. Expressly subject to prior liens.

Some statutory liens on personal property for work and labor are expressly subject to prior liens, and while the question under annotation seems never directly to

82, 5 S. E. 321; Wright v. Sherman, 3 S. D. 290, 17 L.R.A. 792, 52 N. W. 1093; Kansas City Sav. Asso. v. Mastin, 61 Mo. 435; First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 641, 55 Pac. 980; Ross v. Swan, 7 Lea, 467; Gardner v. New London, 63 Conn. 287, 28 Atl. 42; Smiley v. Barker, 28 C. C. A. 9, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. 684; Armstrong v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 130 N. Y. 560, 29 N. E. 991; Linwood Park Co. v. Van Dusen, 63 Ohio St. 183, 58 N. E. 576; Bishop, Contr. § 792; Balfour v. Parkinson, 84 Fed. 855; Hollings v. Bankers' Union, 63 S. C. 192, 41 S. E. 90; Crandall v. Moston, 24 App. Div. 547, 50

N. Y. Supp. 145; Ripley v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 138, 86 Am. Dec. 362; Bucklen v. Johnson, 19 Ind. App. 406, 49 N. E. 612; Re Auerbach, 23 Utah, 529, 65 Pac. 488; Benneke v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 105 U. S. 355, 26 L. ed. 990; Freedman v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 168 Pa. 249, 32 Atl. 39; Johnson v. Schar, 9 S. D. 536, 70 N. W. 838; St. Louis Electric Light & P. Co. v. Edison General Electric Co. 64 Fed. 997.

On petition for rehearing.

The statutes of this state give no priority to the lien claimant.

Moher v. Rasmusson, 12 N. D. 71, 95 N.

have arisen under such a statute, such a statutory lien is, of course, subordinate to the lien of a prior chattel mortgage. See Burrow v. Fowler, 68 Ark. 178, 56 S. W. 1061.

b. Expressly superior to other liens.

Other statutes giving liens for services on personal property expressly purport to make such liens superior to all others. And these statutes have been construed to create liens superior to prior chattel mortgages, even though the lien claimant had knowledge of the prior mortgage; and, as so construed, have been held to be constitutional, provided the prior chattel mortgage was taken subsequently to the passage of the statute in question, as, in such cases, the mortgagee took the mortgage with at least constructive notice of the statute, and knowledge that his mortgage might subsequently become subject to a superior lien for services, as provided in the statute.

Thus, under a statute providing that "laborers shall have a general lien upon the property of their employers, liable to levy and sale, for their labor, which is hereby declared to be superior to all other liens, except liens for taxes, the special liens of landlords on yearly crops, and such other liens as are declared by law to be superior to them,"—the general lien of a laborer is superior to a prior chattel mortgage given after the passage of the statute giving the lien. Allred v. Haile, 84 Ga. 570, 10 S. E. 1095.

And under a statute giving a lien for repairs to a threshing engine, and providing that "said lien shall have priority over all other liens or encumbrances upon said threshing engine . . . created subsequent to the passage and approval of this act, if filed within ten days," etc., a duly filed mechanic's lien for such repairs is superior to a prior chattel mortgage executed after the law took effect. Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 562, 62 N. W. 640.

Similarly, under a statute giving a lien to anyone who, "at the request of the owner or legal possessor of any personal property," transports it from one place to another, or stores it as a warehouseman or bailee, a lien on household furniture for L.R.A.1915D.

charges for transportation and storage at the request of the mortgagor in legal possession is superior to a prior chattel mortgage given since the statute was enacted, though duly filed so as to give constructive notice. Monthly Instalment Loan Co. v. Skellet Co. 124 Minn. 144, 144 N. W. 750.

And these statutes are not unconstitutional. Garr v. Clements and Monthly Instalment Loan Co. v. Skellet Co. supra.

As stated in Garr v. Clements, supra: "This statute, in legal effect, informs every mortgagee in every mortgage thereafter executed that by leaving the mortgaged property in the possession of the owner he thereby makes the owner his agent for the purpose of having necessary repairs made, the cost of which will be a first lien upon the property."

So, under a statute providing that a person keeping a livery stable or boarding stable for animals, or who in connection therewith, keeps or stores any truck, has a lien dependent upon the possession, upon each animal boarded by him and upon any truck stored or kept, provided an express or implied agreement is made with the owner thereof, whether he be a mortgagor remaining in possession or otherwise, for the sum due for the boarding of the animals, or for the keeping or storing of any truck, under the agreement,—a livery stable keeper to whom the owner has taken several horses and trucks, to be boarded and kept by him, including a truck on which was a duly filed and renewed chattel mortgage, has a lien on the mortgaged truck superior to the prior chattel mortgage, for the reasonable charges for the keeping and storing thereof, but not for the charges for the board and storage of the horses and other trucks. Peter Barrett Mfg. Co. v. Van Ronk, 212 N. Y. 90, 105 N. E. 811, affirming 149 App. Div. 194, 133 N. Y. Supp. 691, after the denial of a rehearing and grant of an appeal to the court of appeals, without opinion, in 150 App. Div. 909, 135 N. Y. Supp. 1137. (For other cases involving liens for furnishing food or care for animals, see note in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 310.)

And under a statute giving a warehouseman a lien for storage charges on goods

W. 152; First Nat. Bank v. Scott, 7 N. D. 312, 75 N. W. 254; Gause v. Bullard, 16 La. Ann. 107; Landry v. Blanchard, 16 La. Ann. 173; Ryan v. Vanlandingham, 7 Ind. 416; Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294; Vigo County v. Davis, 136 Ind. 503, 22 L.R.A. 517, 36 N. E. 141.

The common law is inapplicable to change the language of the statute or grant additional rights.

State v. Smith, 2 N. D. 515, 52 N. W. 320; Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. 17 N. D. 610, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 118 N. W. 826; Banbury v. Sherin, 4 S. D. 88, 55 N. W. 724; McClain v. Williams, 11 S. D. 227, 49 L.R.A. 610, 74 Am. St. Rep. 791, 76 N. W. 930; Re Comassi, 107 Cal. 1, 28

L.R.A. 416, 40 Pac. 15; Re Lord & P. Chemical Co. 7 Del. Ch. 248, 44 Atl. 775.

Mr. Burt M. King, with Mr. R. G. McFarland, for respondents Boyle Brothers:

Defendants Boyle Brothers were entitled to the relief granted and decreed by the lower court, and to the prior and paramount lien as decreed against the plaintiff and plaintiff's mortgage herein.

McIntire v. Carver, 2 Watts & S. 392, 37 Am. Dec. 519; Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 562, 62 N. W. 640; Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 353, 8 Jur. N. S. 57, 4 L. T. N. S. 550; Hammond v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294; Watts v. Sweeney, 127 Ind. 116, 22 Am. St. Rep. 615, 26 N. E. 680; Scott v. Delahunt, 65 N. Y. 128; Tucker v. Werner, 2 Misc. 193, left with him and stored, and providing that he may detain such goods until the lien is paid, a warehouseman is entitled to the payment of his lawful charges for storing goods before being required to surrender possession to a prior mortgagee. Industrial Loan Asso. v. Saul, 34 Misc. 188, 68 N. Y. Supp. 837.

And under a statute giving a lien upon personal property for labor performed within six months next proceeding the filing of a claim of lien, and making the continued existence of the lien conditioned upon a filing of a notice of claim of lien within ninety days after the claimant had ceased to perform the labor, etc., and declaring that no mortgage, deed of trust, or conveyance shall defeat or take precedence over said lien,—although the statute has been construed not to give such lien a right of priority over mortgages which had been executed and recorded prior to the time of the commencement of the labor,—the lien is superior to the lien of a chattel mortgage executed prior to the commencement of the labor, but which is recorded after its performance and before the filing of the lien notice, and of which the labor lien claimant had no notice when he performed the work, where the labor lien is either perfected by filing a claim of lien within ninety days after the last labor performed, or is matured in accordance with statute, by the property owner's assignment or passage into a receivership within that period. Olsen v. Smith, — Wash. —, 146 Pac. 572.

But under a statute creating a lien on personal property in favor of a mechanic who performs labor thereon, and providing that such lien is preferred to any lien, mortgage, or other encumbrance which may attach subsequently to the time of the commencement of the performance of the labor, and is also preferred to any lien, mortgage, or other encumbrance which may have attached previously to that time, and which was not filed or recorded so as to create constructive notice thereof prior to that time, and of which the lien claimant had no notice,—a mechanic's lien for repairs L.R.A.1915D.

made on a traction engine at the request of the mortgagor is not preferred to a prior chattel mortgage which was duly filed or recorded so as to give constructive notice. A. H. Averill Machinery Co. v. Allbritton, 51 Wash. 30, 97 Pac. 1082.

And a statutory lien on a crop for the wages of a laborer producing it cannot be superior to a chattel mortgage given before the passage of the statute, as "the legislature could not create a statutory lien which would impair a prior lien expressly permitted by law." Betts v. Ratliff, 50 Miss. 561.

c. Priority not declared by statute.

1. In general.

Where the statute creating a lien for services on personal property does not declare its priority over other liens, or show an intention to give preference to the statutory lien, it is generally held not to take precedence of a prior chattel mortgage of which the lien claimant had either actual or constructive notice at the time of rendering his services, unless the mortgagee expressly or impliedly authorized the mortgagor to engage the services for which the lien is claimed.

Thus a statutory laborer's lien for harvesting grain is not superior to a chattel mortgage executed and recorded before the grain was ready for harvesting, where the statute does not provide for such superiority. Wilson v. Donaldson, 121 Cal. 8, 43 L.R.A. 524, 66 Am. St. Rep. 17, 53 Pac. 404.

And the liens of laborers employed by a contractor with the mortgagor, to harvest and thresh a crop of grain, are not superior to a prior chattel mortgage. Rourke v. Bergevin, 4 Idaho, 742, 44 Pac. 645.

Likewise, a statutory lien upon a mare for the benefit of the keeper of a jack does not take precedence of a prior recorded mortgage, though executed after the passage of the act, where the statute does not evince the intention to give preference to the statutory lien. Easter v. Goyne, 51 Ark. 222, 11 S. W. 212.

21 N. Y. Supp. 204; Meyer v. Berlandi, 40 Minn. 438, 1 L.R.A. 777, 12 Am. St. Rep. 663, 40 N. W. 513; White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 43 Am. Rep. 347; Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, 54 Neb. 417, 40 L.R.A. 761, 69 Am. St. Rep. 719, 74 N. W. 966; Kirtley v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 144; Loss v. Fry, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 7; Herman, Chatt. Mortg. §§ 474, 535; Browne, Civil & Admiralty Law, p. 204; Jones, Liens, § 744; 8 Cyc. 900, note 90; 36 Cyc. 1173, 1174; Bolton v. Johns, 5 Pa. 145, 47 Am. Dec. 404; Parkison v. Bracken, 1 Pinney (Wis.) 174, 39 Am. Dec. 290; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Whithed, 2 N. D. 82, 49 N. W. 318; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L.R.A. 725, 50 N. W. 970; Sasser v. Martin, 101 Ga. 447, 29 S. E. 278; Craig v. Herzman, 9 N. D. 140, 81 N. W. 288, affirmed in 181 U. S. 548, 45 L. ed. 994, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; Notes Dak. Rep. 162, 174; Cowden v. Wright, 24 Wend. 429, 35 Am. Dec. 633.

Goss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff corporation brings this action to foreclose its chattel mortgage upon a threshing engine, and to determine priority of liens thereon, and particularly as against a blacksmith's lien filed against the engine by Boyle Brothers, defendants. Plaintiff sold the engine to one Russell in 1906, taking a mortgage back, which was duly filed and has been renewed, and admittedly is, and always has been, a valid lien upon the prop-

And a statutory lien on a mare for the service of a stallion is not superior to a prior chattel mortgage on the mare, which was duly recorded as provided by the statute of registration, so as to charge third parties with personal knowledge thereof, where the mortgagee has in no way authorized the mortgagor to place the animal under a superior lien. Mayfield v. Spiva, 100 Ala. 223, 14 So. 47.

But a statutory lien of the keeper of a stallion for public use, on the offspring thereof, is superior to a chattel mortgage given on a mare while in foal by the stallion, and registered before the foal is dropped. Sims v. Bradford, 12 Lea, 434.

The lien of a garage-keeper for storage of an automobile at the request of a mortgagor in possession is also subordinate, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, to the prior chattel mortgage, although the mortgagee had knowledge that the mortgagor was keeping the machine in the public garage. Adler v. Godfrey, 163 Wis. 186, 140 N. W. 1115.

And the statutory lien of a common carrier for the transportation of a portable "merry-go-round" at the request of a mortgagor in possession, whom the mortgagee allows to move the property from place to place, for use, within the state, is subject and inferior to the lien of a prior, duly filed mortgage, of which the carrier also had actual notice. Owen v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 11 S. D. 153, 74 Am. St. Rep. 786, 76 N. W. 302.

Where the section of the lien law giving a warehouseman a lien on goods deposited and stored with him, for his storage charges, gives no preference, and states nothing tending to show that the lien of a warehouseman is to be preferred over a prior lien, while other sections of the law contain clauses stating when the lien may or may not have priority over other liens, it may be inferred that the legislature did not intend to give a warehouseman a preferential lien for goods stored over that of a prior, duly filed chattel mortgage. Allen v. Beckett, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1007; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Beckett, 85 N. Y. Supp. 391. L.R.A.1915D.

So, a warehouseman has no lien on personal property for storage, as against the holder of a prior, duly filed chattel mortgage which prohibits a removal of the goods from the residence of the mortgagor, without the consent of the mortgagee. Baumann v. Jefferson, 4 Misc. 147, 23 N. Y. Supp. 685.

And under a statute giving a warehouseman a lien on goods deposited and stored with him, for his storage charges, and providing that he may retain such goods until his lien is paid, the lien of a warehouseman on goods covered by a duly filed chattel mortgage and stored with him by the mortgagor, without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, and in violation of a covenant in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagor would not remove the mortgaged property from the premises where it then was without the consent in writing of the mortgagee, and that, in the event of the property being so removed, the sum then remaining unpaid should become due, and the mortgagee be entitled to the immediate possession of the property,—is subordinate to the lien of the mortgage. Allen v. Beckett, supra.

Likewise, a statutory warehouseman's lien on furniture covered by a duly filed chattel mortgage forbidding removal of the property from the house in which it was when mortgaged, which furniture had been stored, without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, by the mortgagor in possession after default, when the mortgagee's title and right to immediate possession had become absolute, is subordinate to the lien of the chattel mortgage. Baumann v. Post, 26 Abb. N. C. 184, 16 Daly, 385, 12 N. Y. Supp. 213.

And a warehouseman with whom a mortgagor, without the knowledge or assent of the mortgagee, has stored mortgaged goods, after default, and when the mortgagee's title and right to immediate possession have become absolute, has no lien on the goods as against the mortgagee. Eisler v. Union Transfer & Storage Co. 16 Daly, 456, 12 N. Y. Supp. 732.

And a statute providing that a wareerty. On April 11, 1911, Russell wrote plaintiff for its written consent to a sale of the mortgaged engine, receiving a reply dated April 15, 1911, in effect withholding consent until it could investigate and until certain conditions were complied with. Russell, however, took no further steps to obtain such written consent, and sold it to Arbogast, for valuable consideration, who bought with notice of the encumbrance. Arbogast thereafter consulted Boyle Brothers, machinists, at Jamestown, as to repairing the engine, and one of them went to Russell's place, where the machine still remained, and inspected the same as to the probable cost of overhauling, rebuilding, and putting it in suitable condition, and made an estimate that to do so would cost in the neighborhood of $800. Defendants Boyle Brothers, were then engaged by Arbogast, with the knowledge and acquiescence of Russell, to move the engine to the machine shop of Boyle Brothers for repairs and rebuilding the engine, which was thereafter completed at an expense for labor, material, and repairs and incidental expenses, totaling $882.11, and incurred between April 27 and May 26, 1911, and for which amount a blacksmith's lien was soon filed by Boyle Brothers against Arbogast, Russell, and the Reeves Company, by the filing of an affidavit of lien, accompanied with an itemized and verified statement of all labor and items of material and charge entering into the account. Written notice of this was at once given. Plaintiff thereupon demanded possession from Boyle Brothers, who had at all times since the completion of the work retained possession of the engine, and upon their refusal thereof the property was taken under warrant of foreclosure. Boyle Brothers in defense pleaded their artisan's lien and possession for the purpose of foreclosure thereof, and asked that their lien, claimed both under § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, and chapter 168, Laws of 1907, be adjudged to be a prior lien to the mortgage of the plaintiffs. With this question of priority of liens, plaintiff seeks to raise the following questions: (1) Whether an artisan's lien takes priority over a mortgage of record on the property liened; and (2) whether chapter 168 of the Session Laws of 1907, amending § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, passed after this houseman's lien may be enforced "against all goods belonging to others which have been deposited at any time by the person who is liable as debtor for the claims in regard to which the lien is asserted, if such person had been so intrusted with the possession of the goods that a pledge of the same by him at the time of the deposit to one who took the goods in good faith for value would have been valid,"—gives a warehouseman no lien, as against the mortgagee in a prior, duly filed mortgage, on property deposited with him by the mortgagor. Ludwig, B. & Co. v. Roth, 67 Misc. 458, 123 N. Y. Supp. 191.

But under a statute giving the keeper of a hotel a lien upon, while in his possession, and the right to detain, property brought upon his premises by a guest, for the proper charges due from the guest on account of his accommodation, etc., unless the hotel keeper knew that the property was not, when brought upon his premises, legally in the possession of the guest, or had notice that the property was not then the property of the guest,—a hotel keeper, in the absence of actual notice of the existence of a chattel mortgage in default, on property brought by a guest to the hotel, has a lien on the property, superior to the mortgage, although the mortgage is duly filed so as to give statutory constructive notice to "creditors, purchasers, and subsequent mortgagees;" the lien claimant not being either a creditor, purchaser, or subsequent mortgagee within the meaning of this statute. Matthews v. Victor Hotel Co. 74 Misc. 426, 132 N. Y. Supp. 375, affirmed without opinion in 150 App. Div. 928, 135 N. Y. Supp. 1127. L.R.A.1915D.

Generally, as to the lien of an innkeeper on property of a third person in possession of a guest, see note to Horace Waters & Co. v. Gerard, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958.

2. Lien of producer.

In Sheeks-Stephens Store Co. v. Richardson, 76 Ark. 282, 88 S. W. 983, it was held that a statutory laborer's lien on cotton for the price of his labor in producing it was superior to a chattel mortgage on the crop of cotton to be grown. The court said: "When the work of the laborer does not produce the thing upon which he labors, he takes a lien, but it is subject to prior liens. But when the labor for which a lien is claimed produces the thing upon which a lien is claimed, then no lien can, under the statute, be prior to that. No lien upon a crop can be prior to that which the statute gives the laborer who prepares the ground, plants and produces the crop, for his lien attaches as soon as the crop comes into existence, which is as soon as any lien can attach. The lien of a mortgagee does not attach to a crop until it is produced, and therefore cannot be prior to the lien which the statute gives the laborer who produces it."

But in Betts v. Ratliff, 50 Miss. 561, it was held that a statutory lien on a crop for the wages of a laborer producing it could not be superior to a chattel mortgage given before the passage of the statute, as "the legislature could not create a statutory lien which would impair a prior lien expressly permitted by law."

Generally, as to the sale or mortgage of future crops, see note to Dickey v. Waldo, 23 L.R.A. 449. A. C. W.

mortgage lien had accrued, and in express terms declaring that "said lien shall have priority over all other liens, chattel mortgages, or encumbrances against said personal property," and providing the method for the perfecting of the artisan's lien without retention of possession of property, is constitutional. Appellant asserts said chapter 168 to be unconstitutional on several grounds alleged. For reasons hereinafter stated, we find it unnecessary to pass upon any constitutional question, so any statement of appellant's claims in this respect is needless.

Section 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, which does not declare priority of an artisan's lien over recorded mortgages or encumbrances, was the only statute on the subject in 1906, at the time plaintiff's lien became effective. Chapter 168, Laws of 1907, became effective a year after this mortgage was given, and in express terms granted artisans' liens priority over mortgages. Whether this priority is granted as to mortgages taken and in force before its passage is one question arising, but for the purposes of this suit we shall assume the statute to be retrospective in this instance, and as in terms making the artisan's lien superior to the mortgage lien. Whether the statute is thus retrospective or not is immaterial, under the law controlling this decision. In construing statutes on liens, the first consideration is whether the lien is one given at common law, or is instead dependent for its existence solely upon the terms of the statute. Where the statute is merely declaratory of the common law, it is construed together with, and in the light of, the common law; the legislature being presumed to know the common law on the subject and to enact the statute as merely declaratory thereof, and to be so interpreted in the light of its origin and common-law definition, where the statute does not depart from the governing common-law principles. And this here applies, as artisans' liens are a creation of the common law, and not a special lien originating under, and dependent upon, statute for their creation and existence. This is ably discussed and is the settled law of this state under the opinion of this court by Justice Corliss in Garr v. Clements, where the artisan's lien law declared by chapter 88 of the Laws of 1890 was sustained as constitutional on the ground (equally applicable to the legislation before us) that the statute merely declared the existing law on the same subject, or, in other words, that, without the statute, the lien of the common law would exist under the facts of that case the same as with it, and that portion of the Laws of 1890 corresponding to chapter 168 L.R.A.1915D.

of the Laws of 1907, granting priority to the artisan's lien, was not innovation, and did not create any new rights not already enjoyed and in existence at common law at the time the statute became operative. This statute of 1890 was repealed by the enactment of the Code of 1895 (see paragraph 12, p. 1519); § 6295 taking its place as § 4844 of the Code of 1895. But chapter 88 of the Laws of 1890 (almost identical with chapter 168 of the Laws of 1907) was passed upon in Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 559, 62 N. W. 640. Our earliest enactment on the subject was subdivision 2 of § 1814 of the Revised Codes of Dakota territory 1877, which, like § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, did not, even by inference, declare the artisan's lien to be a prior lien to the mortgage. The same was nevertheless, in Garr v. Clements, held superior to the mortgage lien, as entitled at common law to such priority, though the statute of 1890 was the one directly passed upon, and such holding, and the reasoning upon which it is based, are equally applicable to § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, which section must be held to grant the artisan a superior lien to that of the mortgagee, even though the same is not declared by statute. And such was the law in 1906, when plaintiff took this mortgage.

So, without any reference to chapter 168, Laws of 1907, plaintiff's mortgage must be held to be subordinate to the lien of defendants, as such was the law at the time the mortgage was taken, where the party entitled to the lien has retained possession, as have defendants, at all times after the completion of the work. And this is decisive of the rights of appellant, as chapter 168 of the Laws of 1907, if applicable, is but declaratory of the equivalent of § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, as supplemented by the common law concerning priority, which by express terms it purports to amend. It consists, among other things, in declaring the procedure necessary for the perfection and foreclosure of the lien; the notice therein provided for perhaps being inspired by what is said in Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 559, on page 564, 62 N. W. 640, where a defect in the statute of 1890, in failing to provide notice to be given to mortgagees of record, is pointed out. It is not necessary, therefore, to pass upon the constitutionality of chapter 168 of the Session Laws of 1907, although defendants have also perfected their lien by filing their lien statement and account thereunder. It may be assumed that such statute is unconstitutional and void in its entirety, but yet Boyle Brothers are entitled to prevail under their lien, dependent on possession, which would then be valid under § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, they having at all times, after completion of this work, retained possession of the personal property upon which the work was performed under a claim of lien therefor, demanding payment of their charges for labor, material, and repairs. If § 168 is constitutional, Boyle Brothers, having strictly complied therewith, are then certainly entitled to prevail, as possessing a prior lien, not only declared by common law, but expressly defined by chapter 168, Laws of 1907. Plaintiff is thus caught upon one horn or the other of the dilemma, one or the other of which he must choose. Hence he is in no position to exact a holding upon the constitutionality of the law of 1907, as any discussion thereof must be unnecessary to a decision. Under such circumstances, it is the duty of the court to refrain from passing upon constitutional questions.

This likewise disposes of whether appellant waived its rights under its mortgage. The holding that the artisan's lien in any event is prior to the mortgage lien is the equivalent of deciding that appellant had no rights to waive under its mortgage.

Nor is there any merit in appellant's contention that Arbogast, in buying the mortgaged property without written consent having been given the mortgagor to sell the same, could acquire no right or interest sufficient to constitute him an implied agent of the mortgagee, as is the owner of mortgaged property, for the authorization of repairs thereto, whose act as such binds the mortgagee and subordinates the mortgage lien to that of the artisan. Russell acquiesced in the contract for repairing, though the same was wholly immaterial, as Arbogast, by purchase from Russell, became the owner of said property, and as such enjoyed all rights formerly possessed by Russell. True, the sale by Russell, without written consent of the plaintiff, constituted commission of a crime by the seller under § 9442, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 10248, but no liability, civil or criminal, unless arising by implied contract from provisions of the mortgage of record (Ellestad v. Northwestern Elevator Co. 6 N. D. 88-93, 69 N. W. 44), was assumed by the purchaser by a mere purchase of mortgaged property (Sanford v. Duluth & D. Elevator Co. 2 N. D. 6-10, 48 N. W. 434; Black v. Minneapolis & N. Elevator Co. 7 N. D. 129-134, 73 N. W. 90; Willard v. Monarch Elevator Co. 10 N. D. 400-407, 87 N. W. 996; Gorder v. Hillboe, 17 N. D. 281-284, 115 N. W. 843; Taugher v. Northern P. R. Co. 21 N. D. 111, 112, 129 N. W. 747). And Arbogast therefore became owner thereof, L.R.A.1915D.

and as such could repair the property and subject it to an artisan's lien for repairs so authorized.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Goss, J., on September 9, 1914, handed down the following additional opinion:

Appellant filed a petition for rehearing, challenging, as judicial legislation, consideration by the court of the common-law priority of this common-law artisan's lien, and maintaining that because of § 6295, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6877, in terms recognizing an artisan's lien, but silent on its priority, the court must find that no priority of such lien can exist, and that any priority must be given by statute under § 6138, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6714, the general statute concerning priority of liens providing that "other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation except in cases of bottomry and respondentia."

In other words, appellant asserts that, in the determination of this question, we are limited to a construction of statutes, and cannot resort to the common-law rights of the parties to determine the question of priority, where the statute is silent thereon, and counsel cite in support of that contention § 4006, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 4331, a provision of the Civil Code, reading: "In this state there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Codes."

And also cite § 10,509, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 11400, next to the last provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure, providing that "The provisions of this Code so far as they are the same as existing statutes, must be construed as continuations thereof and not as new enactments."

From these statutes appellant reasons that there can be no common law on artisan's liens, the Code having spoken on the subject by the declaration therein providing for such a lien, and that, treating § 10,509 as a general provision applicable to all the Codes and all Code provisions, the statutes are to be considered as continuations of statutes, but not as continuations of the common law in all instances, civil and criminal. To emphasize this claim, appellant has cited § 5 of the Civil Code of California, reading: "The provisions of this Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof and not as new enactments."

Under this California Code provision, and its construction by the courts of that state

(Quist v. Sandman, 154 Cal. 748, 99 Pac. 204, at pages 207, 208; Michaelson v. Fish, 1 Cal. App. 116, 81 Pac. 662; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, at page 384, 10 Pac. 674; and Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, at page 13, 16 Pac. 345), statutes are but continuations of the basic common law, a determination of rights under which necessitates consideration of both the common law and the statute where the statute is either silent or ambiguous. But appellant parallels this provision of the Civil Code of California with § 10,509, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 11400, a portion of our Code of Criminal Procedure, nearly identical, but omitting the phrase of the California Civil Code provision of "or the common law," and therefore contends that in this state in no instance are the statutes to be considered as continuations of the common law. It is urged that the common law is excluded by our Code provision 4006, Comp. Laws 1913, § 4331, reading: "In this state there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Codes."

This decision then narrows to the question of whether the common-law priority still exists, notwithstanding § 6295, declaring a lien in the possessor of the property with the right of possession until the charges for repairs are paid, but silent on the question of priority of such lien, unless governed by § 6138, declaring priority of liens according to time of creation, "other things being equal," and § 6724, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 7312, that "the rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to this Code. This Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates; and its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice."

In its last analysis the decision resolves to whether the provisions of our Civil Code are to be considered as continuations of the common law as well as continuations of statute, or whether, on the contrary, the fact that a common-law lien has been declared by statute makes all rights thereunder dependent solely on the statute, without regard to common-law incidents, rights, or history, in which case a priority that would here exist under the same circumstances at common law as an incident to the same lien given by common law as here declared, also by statute, would be negatived and defeated by the mere silence of the statute as to priority. If the statute is to be considered as but a continuation of the common-law lien without regard to common-law priority, the priority still exists; the statute then declaring the lien and the common law defining priority. If the statute is not a continuation of the common law, but works an abolition of all common law on the subject, inclusive of the incident of priority, then some general statute must be found conferring priority, the particular statute giving none, otherwise there is no priority of artisan's liens over earlier liens.

The conclusions in the main opinion are sustained by all authority, and appellant's attack thereon loses all force in the face of the fact that common law is by statute (§§ 4003-4005, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, §§ 4328-4330) declared to be the basic law, thereby requiring statutory enactment to be considered as but a continuation of the common law as to civil rights and liabilities. Section 4003 reads: "The will of the sovereign power is expressed: . . . (4) By the decisions of the tribunals enforcing those rules which, though not enacted, form what is known as customary or common law."

And § 4005 declares what shall be evidence of such common law. By statute the provisions of the Civil Code are to be considered as but continuations of the common law, as well as other statutes, and no distinction exists in this respect between this state and California, notwithstanding § 10509, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 11400. Plainly this provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure can have no relation to or bearing upon the question of whether the provisions of the Civil Code and civil statutes are to be considered as continuations of the common law. Each of the seven Codes was passed as a separate bill in the Revision of 1895 and as an entirety. The term "Code," as used in many places in each of the seven Codes, must refer solely to the Code of which it was a part at the time of its enactment, and this provision has reference to Criminal Procedure, and is not a general provision applicable to all the seven Codes as separately enacted. The Code provisions relative to crimes and criminal procedure, as §§ 8531-8538, and 10509, Comp. Laws 1913, §§ 9194-9201 and 11400, prescribe a different rule as to such than generally applies to civil rights and remedies. Our penal statutes undertake to and do define all our crimes, and our Code of Criminal Procedure in the main declares the process of administration of our penal statutes. But it is vastly different, as to civil rights and liabilities, to completely codify which would be an absolute impossibility. Manifestly civil statutes must be regarded as they have always been construed to be, but continuations, affirmances, modifications, or repeals of basic common law governing principles, and to be interpreted in the light of the common law as has been done for generations. If authority is needed for our conclusions, the following will suffice:

Unless otherwise provided by statute, all "statutes are to be interpreted in the light of the common law with reference to the principles of the common law in force at the time of their passage."

"The presumption against an intent to alter existing law beyond the immediate scope and object of the enactment under construction applies as well where the existing law is statutory as where it is promulgated by decisions."

"The principle is recognized that an intent to alter the common law beyond the evident purpose of the act is not to be presumed. It has indeed been expressly laid down that 'statutes are not presumed to make any alterations in the common law further or otherwise than the act does expressly declare; therefore, in all general matters, the law presumes the act did not intend to make any alterations, for, if the Parliament had that design, they would have expressed it in the act' that 'the rules of the common law are not to be changed by doubtful implication.'" Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 127.

"First in importance . . . is the consideration of what was the rule at the common law. 'To know what the common law was before the making of a statute, whereby it may be seen whether the statute was introductory of a new law or only affirmative of the common law, is the very lock and key to set open the windows of the statute.' Further as a rule of exposition statutes are to be construed in reference to the principles of the common law, for it is not to be presumed that the legislature intended to make any innovation upon the common law further than the case absolutely required. The law rather infers that the act did not intend to make any alteration other than what is specified and besides what has been plainly pronounced, for, if the Parliament had had that design, it is naturally said that they would have expressed it." Potter's Dwarris on Statutes & Constitutions, p. 185.

Concerning which rule that author quotes Chancellor Kent as follows: "This has been the language of courts in every age, and, when we consider the constant, vehement and exalted eulogy which the ancient sages bestowed upon the common law as the perfection of reason and the best birthright and noblest inheritance of the subject, we cannot be surprised at the great sanction given to this rule of construction."

Sections 454, 455, of Lewis's Sutherland L.R.A. 1915D.

Statutory Construction, 2d ed, Vol. 2, announce the same rule, that "in all doubtful matters, and when the statute is in general terms, it is subject to the principles of the common law; it is to receive such construction as is agreeable to that law in cases of the same nature. A statute in affirmance of a rule of the common law will be construed as to its consequence in accordance with such law."

See Lavin v. Bradley, 1 N. D. 291, 47 N. W. 384; Parker v. First Nat. Bank, 3 N. D. 87, 54 N. W. 313; Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 559, at pages 562, 563, 62 N. W. 640. This rule is here applicable, as the statute (§ 6295) declaring the right to an artisan's lien dependent on possession is but declaratory of that common-law lien. "In some of the states of the Union the common law of England and English statutes enacted prior to a specific time have been expressly adopted by a constitutional provision. In others they have been adopted by statute." 8 Cyc. 373, in note 32 of which mention is made that this state has, by §§ 4003, 4005, and 4006, by statute expressly adopted the common law as the fundamental law, except as modified or supplanted by statute or ordinance. Section 6737, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 7325, a general provision of the Code of Civil Procedure, also in express terms, in prescribing the rule of construction of civil statutes, recognizes such fact by the provision that, "but technical words and phrases and such other as have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, or are defined by statute, are to be construed according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition."

California by express enactment in 1850 adopted the common law of England, evidently to set at rest any question of conflict between whether the English common law or the civil law, in force in the adjoining Mexican territory, and once in effect in such parts of that state as had been Mexican territory, would prevail. See the discussion in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, at page 384, 10 Pac. 674. As to the statute being declared to be but a continuation of the common law, to be construed therewith, see Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, at page 13, 16 Pac. 345: "But the purpose of a statute can only be derived from its words, read in the light of the previous law. If it is so confused and uncertain that it can be given no intelligible meaning, we must consider the common law unchanged by it, . . . and it is a cardinal rule of interpretation that the common law continues, except as altered by the statute."

It is true that California has a statute to this effect (§ 5 of the Civil Code of that state) that "the provisions of this Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments," which statute has been in force since 1872, and that we have no statute explicitly so providing, but the omission is immaterial as to civil rights and remedies in the face of the fact that the common law is by statute adopted as to such rights and liabilities; the statutes having since territorial times declared the same consequences in the statutory provisions that "the evidence of the common law is found in the decisions of the tribunals," and "there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Codes." Sections 5 and 6, Civil Code of 1877, and §§ 4005, 4006, Rev. Code. 1905, Comp. Laws, 1913, §§ 4330, 4331. Where the Codes declare the law, they preclude application of the common law, which, as to the matter covered by the Codes during the existence of the Code provision, becomes nonexistent; but, inasmuch as the common law is the basis, it governs as to matters wherein the law is not so declared. The Codes being but a continuation of the common law, to be construed therewith to constitute the great complete body of law, the two must be considered together, where, as here, the Code but declares the lien already recognized at common law, and is silent on the question of priority of such common-law lien. State ex rel. Morris v. Sullivan, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514, and note (81 Ohio St. 79, 90 N. E. 146, 18 Ann. Cas. 139).

But counsel, in support of his contention, would emphasize the fact that the territorial statute declared no priority of this lien, and that by the Laws of 1890 priority was granted, which provision was repealed in the Revision of 1895, which priority provision has been again expressly re-enacted by chapter 168 of the Laws of 1907; and counsel inquires how the double repeal and enactment on priority can be considered other than as evidencing a successive legislative expression of denial and reaffirmance of priority, and that the lien by mortgage of the appellant having attached at a time when priority of artisans' liens was thus refused recognition and by inference denied, upon what basis can it be found that a lien at common law could exist during such interval? In territorial times, and until the enactment of the statute of 1890 granting it, priority existed at common law, as is held in Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 559, 62 N. W. 640. Upon repeal of the statute of 1890, no mention of priority being made in the repealing statute, and there being nothing to positively evidence a legislative intention to the contrary, the common-law rule as to priority was revived; "the repeal of the statute which abrogated a common-law rule revives that rule." Beaven v. Went, 155 Ill. 592, 31 L.R.A. 85, 41 N. E. 91; Baum v. Thomas, 150 Ind. 378, 65 Am. St. Rep. 368, 50 N. E. 357; Burleigh County v. Rhud, 23 N. D. 362, 136 N. W. 1082; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 294, quoting above rule and declaring same applicable, "even though there is a statute that a repeal of the repealing act shall not revive the act repealed," similar to § 6739, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 7327, identical with § 20 of Civil Code of California, in force since 1872. "Where a statute repeals the common law and is then itself repealed, the common law is revived, and the authorities say that, if a statute that is declaratory of the common law is repealed, the common law more clearly remains in force for the reason that the statute is an affirmation of it." Harper v. Middle States Loan, Bldg. & Constr. Co. 55 W. Va. 149, 46 S. E. 817, 2 Ann. Cas. 42, at page 45; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 475.

Under this rule and the presumption that the common law is abrogated by statute only so far as is necessary to give force to the statute and the legislative intent thereby and no farther (State ex rel. Morris v. Sullivan, 81 Ohio, 79, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514, 90 N. E. 146, 18 Ann. Cas. 139; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Luddington, 175 Ind. 35, 91 N. E. 939, 93 N. E. 273, citing much authority), the territorial statute (subdivision 2, § 1814, of Civil Codes of 1877) did not efface the common-law priority of artisans' liens. Chapter 88, Laws of 1890, by declaring that priority, was but declaratory of the prevailing common law, and repeal of the Laws of 1890, instead of leaving no law on the subject, revived or made applicable the common law, and such was the situation when this appellant's mortgage was taken. That the legislature has by chapter 168, Laws of 1907, again re-enacted the common-law provision of priority is of no consequence as a legislative construction on the question or otherwise. If it be assumed to be a legislative construction as contended, it is not binding on the courts, as it is beyond legislative power or province to interpret retrospectively by legislative act prior statute or common law. The duty and power of interpretation of past legislative enactment lies in the courts alone. But against revival of the common law it is contended that the legislature cannot be presumed to have needlessly declared a statutory priority when a common-law priority existed, and on that assumption it is urged that no priority existed before 1890, or during the interval from January 1, 1896 to 1907. If appellant's basis of exclusion from common law by the statute of every subject touched upon by statute is accepted, this rule would be applicable. But, the civil statutes being but continuations of the prior common law, to be construed therewith, the fact that a statute declares one incident of the common law on the subject does not of itself and alone signify an exclusion of all other common law touching rights on which the statute is silent. Nearly all the substantive law as contained in our Civil Code is but declaratory of established and prior existing common law, a fact which of itself establishes such legislation to be needless, except to render the same accessible and easy of reference,—the principle benefit of our codification of a small portion of common-law principles. Appellant insists that the general statute as to priority of liens (§ 6138, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6714, first found as § 1711, Civil Code of 1877), declaring that, "other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation," here controls to exclude any common-law priority. This statute is but another principle of the common law codified. By its terms only when "other things being equal" is it applicable. The exception made is to exempt from its application instances, as here, where other things are not equal, in that the lien recognized by statute has a common-law origin. Adjudications on statutory liens are in no wise applicable. Hence Moher v. Rasmusson, 12 N. D. 71, 95 N. W. 152, concerning a purely statutory thrasher's lien, is not in point, and the same is true with First Nat. Bank v. Scott, 7 N. D. 312, 75 N. W. 254, as to an agister's statutory lien. Manifestly a lien, dependent solely on the statute for its creation and priority, is measured in such respects by the enactment as its source and definitive of rights thereunder. This distinction has already been made between statutory and common-law liens in our decisions. Lavin v. Bradley, 1 N. D. 291, at page 296, 47 N. W. 384, where the following is found: "In construing the seed lien statute, the fact must not be overlooked that the lien given is wholly statutory in its nature and origin. It was unknown at common law, and hence can neither be acquired nor enforced unless there has been substantial compliance with the act of the legislature from which the lien arises;" quoted in Parker v. First Nat. Bank, 3 N. D. 87, 54 N. W. 313, and distinguished again in L.R.A.1915D.

Garr v. Clements, 4 N. D. 559, at pages 562, 563, 62 N. W. 640.

There the statute was upheld as not by retrospective operation according to its provisions abrogating obligation of contracts, because at common law, in the absence of the statutory priority by statutes of 1890, priority existed under the territorial Code of 1877: "An unbroken line of authority, a settled rule of the common law, sound principle, and a due regard for business convenience, all join to sustain this statute."

The same reasons sustain our holding of a common-law priority of artisans' liens in 1906 when appellant's contract lien became effective. Our statute of 1907 is not, therefore, retrospective in operation as to appellant's contract rights in the priority. Neither does Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. 17 N. D. 610, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 118 N. W. 820, hold contrary to our conclusions. Instead it recognizes that an exemption from liability may arise to exonerate a common carrier as to goods received for transportation in other instances than those declared by § 5690, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 6253, and in doing so resort to common-law principles is approved. In addition to the express conditions enumerated in the statute as exonerating the carrier, the court says: "Where the shipper interferes with the property after accepted by the railway company, and the loss is occasioned by such interference, it may well be contended that the carrier is also relieved."

The court there divided on whether the statute in question was intended as a complete codification or in part a departure from the common law, in effect thereby recognizing the necessity of the construction of the statute in the light of the common law as to the carrier's liability. The case is to such extent authority against appellant's contention. Nor are the South Dakota holdings of Banbury v. Sherin, 4 S. D. 88, 55 N. W. 724, and McClain v. Williams, 11 S. D. 227, 49 L.R.A. 610, 74 Am. St. Rep. 791, 76 N. W. 930, contrary to principles here announced. These holdings are that the statutes under consideration there covered the case and thereby excluded the common-law contentions urged, and in the last case it was held also that, if the ambiguous statute under construction be considered supplemented by the common law as to rights of third persons under consideration, the whole statute itself would be void as unconstitutional, and hence such an interpretation was adopted as would uphold the statute, and it was held not to cover the property of third persons. This was remarked as an aid or added reason for that holding on an ambiguous statute. McClain v. Williams, like Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. supra, may well be considered as authority inferentially contrary to appellant's contention.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Spalding, Ch. J.:

I concur in denying petition for rehearing.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

E. F. JOHNSON

v.

RICHARD BEATTIE.

(— Vt. —, 93 Atl. 250.)

Limitation of actions — failure to return attachment — when runs.

The statute of limitations begins to run against an action to recover damages from a sheriff for failure to return an attachment, when the return is due, although the full amount of injury cannot be ascertained until the release some time later of prior liens on a portion of the property.

(February 6, 1915.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to a ruling of the County Court for Essex County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for failure to return an attachment, sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's replication. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carney & Blake for plaintiff.

Messrs. C. R. Powell, and Simonds, Searles & Graves, for defendant:

An action upon the case, for the negligence or misconduct of an officer, lies immediately, as for suffering an escape, neglecting to arrest the debtor, to attach his goods, or to return the writ.

Miller v. Adams, 16 Mass. 455; Lambert v. McKenzie, 135 Cal. 100, 67 Pac. 6; Peck v. Hurlburt, 46 Barb. 559; Betts v. Norris, 21 Me. 314, 38 Am. Dec. 264; Hall v. Tomlinson, 5 Vt. 228; Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582; McKay v. Coolidge, 218 Mass. 65, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 105 N. E. 455; Bank of Hartford County v. Waterman, 26 Conn. 324; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Batcheller, 62 Vt. 148, 19 Atl. 982.

Note. — The general question as to when the statute begins to run against an action by a private person based on breach of duty by a public officer is considered in the note to McKay v. Coolidge, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701; and see especially pages 704, 707, as to actions growing out of breach of duty in respect of executions and attachments. L.R.A.1915D.

It is a defense to a failure to serve an attachment that the property is under seizure by prior attachment, sufficient in amount to absorb the proceeds or is otherwise encumbered to its full value.

Smith v. Heineman, 118 Ala. 195, 72 Am. St. Rep. 150, 24 So. 364; Phelps, D. & P. Co. v. Skinner, 63 Kan. 304, 65 Pac. 667.

Taylor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case against the defendant as sheriff of Essex county for the default of one of his deputies in failing to make return on a writ of attachment sued out by the plaintiff against one Norcross. As appears from the declaration, the writ was an ordinary writ of attachment issued January 2, 1909, and returnable to Essex county court within twenty-one days from the date thereof. The writ was delivered to defendant's deputy for service on the day of issue, and was served by him by attaching, as the property of said Norcross, certain bank stock and all of said Norcross's real estate in Brighton. The property attached was of sufficient value to secure the plaintiff's claim. Service of the writ was completed by giving said Norcross the required notice; but said deputy did not make return of the writ as commanded, and the same was never returned into court, whereby the plaintiff lost the benefit of said attachment. After the attachment on plaintiff's writ, and before the return day thereof, the same property was attached in the suit of one Clara A. Robinson against said Norcross, and later sold on execution to satisfy a judgment in her favor.

The defendant pleaded the general issue and statute of limitations. Plaintiff replied to the latter plea that he (plaintiff) was a subsequent attaching creditor; that all of the real estate attached on his writ against Norcross was subject to a prior attachment for more than its full value on a writ in favor of one Hattie Willard against said Norcross; that said prior attachment remained in force until February 12, 1913, when the suit of Willard v. Norcross, 86 Vt. 426, 85 Atl. 904, was ended by a final judgment for the defendant; that as soon as he learned of defendant's default he sued out a new writ, and caused all of said real estate to be attached thereon, but, said attachment being subsequent to that of said Willard, he was by law precluded from levying any execution upon said real estate until the termination of the suit of said Willard; that said Norcross had no other property from which an execution could have been satisfied; and so the plaintiff says he was not damaged, and had no cause of action, until the termination of said suit of Willard v. Norcross.

The defendant demurred to the replication, and the county court sustained the demurrer, and adjudged the replication insufficient. An exception was allowed to the plaintiff, and the cause passed to this court before trial. The only question argued here relates to the time when the plaintiff's cause of action accrued. As a bar to the action the defendant relies upon Pub. Stat. 1556, which provides: "Actions against sheriffs for the misconduct or negligence of their deputies shall be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrues, and not after."

This suit was commenced January 16, 1914, more than four years after the alleged default, and so is barred unless, as the plaintiff contends, the cause of action did not accrue until the termination of the suit of Willard v. Norcross on February 12, 1913, when the real estate was released from the prior attachment.

It must be admitted that the particular wrongdoing from which the plaintiff's injury accrued was the failure of the deputy to return the writ. The plaintiff's claim is that, though the nonfeasance did then take place, the injury was consequential, and did not arise until the prior attachment was dissolved by a final judgment in favor of Norcross in that suit. His claim in its last analysis comes to this: That the neglect of the defendant's deputy was in itself innocent in a legal sense, but that consequential injury accrued to him therefrom; in other words, his contention is that the consequential injury, and not the officer's nonfeasance, furnishes the basis of the action. But such is not the case alleged in the declaration. It will be noted that the gravamen of the action—the grievance complained of—is the deputy's failure to return the attachment writ, and it is not suggested in argument that the declaration is framed as an action on the case for consequential damages.

The question is not wholly new in this state, although it has arisen hitherto on default of an officer in service of final process; but, in general, the same liabilities attach to an officer in serving mesne process (note in 95 Am. St. Rep. 105, and cases cited), and no apparent reason exists for a different rule as to the time when an action accrues for default of official duty in one case than in the other. In Hall v. Tomlinson, 5 Vt. 228, the action was for insufficient return of an execution. The plaintiff had been ejected from land acquired through a defective levy made by the defendant, after the expiration of more that six years from the time of the defendant's misfeasance. The plaintiff's claim was that her cause of action did not accrue, or was not complete, until the recovery had against her in the action of ejectment. The court held that the defendant neglected his duty when he failed to make a sufficient levy and return on the execution, and that the cause of action was completed against him at that time; that the insufficiency of the levy to pass title to the plaintiff and the illegality of the defendant's proceedings were then as apparent as they are now; that she was under no necessity of waiting until the validity of the levy was tried in the action of ejectment, but might commence her suit immediately; and that the action was barred by the statute. In Bell v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 582, the plaintiff sued the defendant as sheriff for the negligence of one of his deputies in making a defective levy of an execution in favor of the plaintiff. The defect in title due to the misfeasance of the deputy had been cured, while the action was pending, by the lapse of time under the statute then in force for quieting title. The trial court directed a verdict for the defendant. In reversing the judgment this court held that the action accrued against the sheriff immediately on the breach of duty by his deputy; that under the statute the creditor must be at the expense of taking proceedings in court to correct the levy, or must lay out the use of the land two years, that his title might become quieted; that the neglect of the officer was not damnum absque injuria; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover whatever damages he suffered from the breach of the officer's duty.

These cases are in line with the general rule, supported by the decided weight of authority, that the breach of duty by a public officer which directly affects the rights of an individual gives rise at once to a right of action, even though the entire extent of the injury may not be discovered until later. McKay v. Coolidge, 218 Mass. 65, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 701, 105 N. E. 455; Wilcox v. Plummer, 4 Pet. 172, 7 L. ed. 821; Betts v. Norris, 21 Me. 314, 38 Am. Dec. 264; Owen v. Western Sav. Bank, 97 Pa. 47, 39 Am. Rep. 794; Kerns v. Schoonmaker, 4 Ohio, 331, 22 Am. Dec. 757; Caesar v. Bradford, 13 Mass. 169; Miller v. Adams, 16 Mass. 456; Peck v. Hurlburt, 46 Barb. 559.

Wilcox v. Plummer and Betts v. Norris are leading cases on this question. The former case was presented by distinguished counsel, Wirt arguing for the plaintiff, and Webster for the defendant. The suit was to recover for a loss sustained by reason of the neglect of defendants' testator while acting as an attorney at law. A promissory note was placed in his hands for collection. Through his negligence, which need not be detailed, the plaintiff lost the proceeds of the note. The only question in the case was whether the statute of limitation ran from the time of the attorney's neglect, in which case the action would be barred, or from the time that the damage developed or became definite, which was within the statutory period. The court said that the question was not then (1830) an open one, and held that it was not a case of consequential damages in the technical acceptance of those terms; that the question was when might the action have been instituted, saying that it might have been sustained immediately; and that the action was therefore barred by the statute of limitations. Speaking of the uncertainty as to the matter of damages when the action is commenced immediately, the court said: "Perhaps, in that event, no more than nominal damages may be proved, and no more recovered; but, on the other hand, it is perfectly clear that the proof of actual damage may extend to facts that occur and grow out of the injury, even up to the day of the verdict. If so, it is clear the damage is not the cause of action."

Betts v. Norris was an action for the nonfeasance of a deputy sheriff in not attaching sufficient property on mesne process. The defendant relied upon the statute of limitations. The action was commenced more than the statutory period after the alleged nonfeasance, but within the time after the return of the execution in the attachment suit unsatisfied. The plaintiff claimed, as in this case, that the cause of action did not accrue at the time of the officer's default. In a carefully reasoned opinion that leaves little further to be said by way of argument, the court held that the cause of action accrued, on the return of the writ, and that no substantive cause of action could be considered as having arisen thereafter.

Mr. Freeman, in his note to Betts v. Norris, 38 Am. Dec. 270, in which he cites many cases, says: "The rule of law, now well recognized, is that, in cases of official or professional nonfeasance or misfeasance, the cause of action accrues at the time of such misconduct, and the statute of limitations then begins to run, and not from the time of the consequential injury."

He qualifies this by saying: "Of course, this doctrine can be applied only in the absence of any attempted concealment of the party's misconduct. Fraudulently keeping the facts from the knowledge of the injured person introduces an entirely L.R.A.1915D.

different question, which necessitates the adoption of a very different rule in regard to the running of the statute. But in instances where there is no fraud, causes of action or official or professional negligence arise at the time of the breach of duty, not when the consequential damages are felt."

The rule that the nonfeasance or misfeasance of a public officer, and not the resulting damage, constitutes the cause of action, has long been the law of England. It is said in Wilcox v. Plummer, that this was ruled as early as the twentieth year of Elizabeth in Norwich v. Bradshaw, Cro. Eliz. pt. 1, p. 53. See also Ravenscroft v. Eyles, 2 Wils. 294; Godding v. Ferris, 2 H. Bl. 14, 3 Revised Rep. 339; Battley v. Faulkner, 3 Barn. & Ald. 288; Granger v. George, 5 Barn. & C. 149, 7 Dowl. & R. 729, 29 Revised Rep. 196, 16 Eng. Rul. Cas. 215. So far as has come to our attention, the rule is applied throughout the United States, excepting in Connecticut, Colorado, and Tennessee. It was held in Bank of Hartford County v. Waterman, 26 Conn. 324, and followed by People v. Cramer, 15 Colo. 155, 25 Pac. 302, both considerably relied upon by the plaintiff, that no legal wrong exists in case of official misfeasance until the damnifying consequences of the wrong are felt, and so that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the resulting damages accrued, upon the theory that nonperformance of an official duty is not necessarily a legal injury. The court reasoned that, the duty violated being primarily a duty to the public, it was only when its consequences are the invasion of an individual right that it becomes a proper subject of redress by the injured party. The court recognized the prevailing rule when it said: "Whenever the injury, however slight, is complete at the time of the act, the statutory period commences,"—but held for that case that the wrong complained of was not in itself enough to constitute a cause of action, and that no right to sue became lodged in the plaintiff until a certain consequence resulted from the breach of duty by the officer.

In People v. Cramer it was held that the creditor's right was the judicial collection of his debt, or enforcement of such other legal redress as the law may authorize, and that, if the negligence or misconduct of the officer in no way prevents or retards the vindication of this right, no legal injury exists, and no right of action accrues. It would follow that, if the misconduct hindered the vindication of the right, legal injury would exist, and a right of action therefor accrue.

While the results reached in these cases may not accord with the decisions elsewhere, we apprehend that the departure is not due so much to divergent views of general principles as to their application to the case in hand. The prevailing rule recognizes a distinction between official misconduct which directly affects the rights of others, and conduct that is harmless in a legal sense unless and until certain contingencies arise. In the former, the cause of action is at once complete, involving possibly consequential damages; while in the latter it is the injury itself that is consequential. The disagreeing cases are apparently ruled as belonging to the latter class. State use of Cardin v. McClellan, 113 Tenn. 616, 85 S. W. 267, 3 Ann. Cas. 992, follows the doctrine of Bank of Hartford County v. Waterman.

Our own cases aside, we regard the prevailing rule as based on principle and sound reasoning, and we find nothing in plaintiff's argument to justify a departure from the early decisions of this court. The case at bar presents features not found in any of the cases, affording additional reasons for the application of the rule. The duty which the deputy is alleged to have neglected was one directly and instantly affecting the rights of the plaintiff, and the default occasioned presents substantial injury. The plaintiff lost his attachment on the bank stock, which was not covered by the prior attachment, as well as the expense of instituting and prosecuting his suit up to that time. If the plaintiff had commenced this action immediately after the return day of his writ against Norcross, could the defendant have successfully relied upon a claim that the suit was prematurely brought, so far as damage already suffered was concerned? If not, it is apparent that the statute commenced to run from that time; for it is well settled that the cause of action accrues from the time the plaintiff can first maintain a suit. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Batcheller, 62 Vt. 148, 19 Atl. 982; Dawley v. Wheeler, 52 Vt. 574. The fact that the full extent of his injury was not fixed and certain; nor capable of being immediately ascertained, would not postpone his right to sue for the wrong done him, nor toll the statute of limitations. McKay v. Coolidge, 218 Mass. 65, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 701, 105 N. E. 455 and cases there cited.

Whatever difficulty there is arises from the uncertainty as to the full extent of the plaintiff's damages until the happening of subsequent contingencies, but, as said in Betts v. Norris, the right of action exists apart from such contingencies. The ascertainment of the actual damage is but an incident of the right of action. The consequences in such a case are merely aggravating circumstances enhancing the damages of a legal injury already suffered. In this regard it is not unlike the case of future or special damage arising from assault and battery or other tortious act. In all such cases the damage is a result, and not a cause. It might be found convenient to continue the case until it could be ascertained to what extent the plaintiff has been injured by the owner's wrongdoing, but because, until this has been done, it might be inconvenient to establish the damages, could form no ground to question the plaintiff's cause of action.

As indicated by Mr. Freeman in the note quoted above, the rule that the statute of limitations begins to run, as a general rule, from the act done, is subject to the exception that it does not run in favor of a defendant who, by fraudulent practices, has kept the plaintiff in ignorance of his rights, until discovery of the fraud. Notes in 55 Am. St. Rep. 516, and 99 Am. St. Rep. 248, and cases cited; Lightner Min. Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 120 Pac. 771, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093.

The decisions of this court cited by the plaintiff are in accord with the views herein expressed. Hill v. Pratt, 29 Vt. 119, does not hold, as claimed, that the cause of action depends upon there being nothing forthcoming to satisfy plaintiff's claim at the time of execution. That was an action for failure to attach property as commanded. It appeared that at the time the writ was served the debtor had attached property, which fact the officer could have discovered in the exercise of reasonable diligence; but at the time of judgment the debtor had become insolvent, and the debt valueless. The court held that, in the circumstances, it was the duty of the officer to secure the debt by attachment of property, if the debtor had attachable property in its possession which might with reasonable diligence have been attached, and that for neglect in that matter the defendant was liable for the damages sustained. It was also held that it was not necessary to issue execution on the judgment to fix the officer's liability, as the officer was not charged with neglect in not keeping the property attached to be applied on the execution, but the ground of complaint was his neglect in not making any attachment. The effect of this holding is that the liability of the officer did not depend upon subsequent contingencies.

Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57, was an action against the defendant as sheriff for the neglect of a deputy in the case of property attached by him on process against the plaintiff. The case was tried while the attachment suit was still pending. The question for decision was whether the plaintiff, as general owner of the property, could maintain an action for the officer's neglect in the care thereof while the attachment was still in force. The exception was to the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff did not have any cause of action at the time the suit was commenced. It was held that an injury to the property happening through the officer's negligence in caring for it was an injury to the debtor in any event, as the loss would finally fall on him, whether the property was restored to him or sold to pay his debts. Judge Aldis, who wrote the opinion, uses the language quoted by the plaintiff by way of argument. It is not necessary to consider whether it is mere dictum or whether it correctly states the rule as to the creditor's right to sue for damage due to neglect in the case of attached property; for, treating it as a decision, it amounts to no more than saying that in the case of such official negligence the creditor's injury is remote and consequential in the technical sense of the term.

Munger v. Fletcher, 2 Vt. 524; West River Bank v. Gorham, 38 Vt. 649; and Wolcott v. Gray, Brayton (Vt.) 91, shed no light on the question. The effect of these decisions is that the defendant may defeat the suit by showing that plaintiff has suffered no injury by the defendant's wrongful act. It is unnecessary to decide whether the burden of showing injury rests upon the plaintiff, or whether want of injury is a matter of defense. In the case at bar the facts alleged show present injury, and not a state of facts harmless in themselves, from which, in connection with subsequent circumstances, injury follows. The decisions upon this question are conflicting. It is held in some jurisdictions that the plaintiff would make out a prima facie case by proving the default relied upon and the amount of his claim (35 Cyc. 1640, and cases cited), and that the defendant may show certain facts in mitigation of damages (Second Nat. Bank v. Gilbert, 174 Ill. 485, 66 Am. St. Rep. 306, 51 N. E. 584; notes in 30 Am. Dec. 487, and 72 Am. St. Rep. 160). In Hall v. Brooks, 8 Vt. 485, 30 Am. Dec. 485, this court, holding that, where an officer had final process put into his hands, which he refused or neglected to receive (serve), he thereby made the debt his own, and was liable in damages to the full amount of the debt, said: "In actions for escape on L.R.A.1915D.

meane process and for refusal to serve meane process, as the debt cannot be transferred to the officer by the judgment, the rule of damages claimed by defendant . . . has been adopted."

The claim of the defendant was the right to show in mitigation that the debtor was at the time of the neglect sued for wholly unable to respond. The rather harsh rule laid down in Hall v. Brooks, and followed in several other cases, is apparently restricted by the holding in Kidder v. Barker, 18 Vt. 454, that in case of neglect to return an execution the officer was liable for nominal damages, "and for so much more as have been suffered;" although in the latter case the court remarked that they did not see that the case was fairly comparable to Hall v. Brooks.

The result is that the replication is not sufficient to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations, and defendant's demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed, and cause remanded.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

FANNIE TUCKER, Appt.,

v.

MOBILE INFIRMARY ASSOCIATION.

(— Ala. —, 68 So. 4.)

Hospital — charity — liability for negligence.

A paying patient in a hospital conducted without stock or profit, in which indigent patients are treated without cost, and the fees exacted from patients who can pay are used in promoting the work, may recover damages for injury done him through the negligence of an attending nurse.

(Mayfield, J., dissents.)

(February 11, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mobile County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained while a patient in the defendant hospital. Reversed.

Note. — As to liability of charitable institutions for personal injuries, including hospitals, see notes to Farrigan v. Pevear, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 74; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144; and Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505.

As to liability of proprietor of private hospital, see Index to L.R.A. Notes under title "Hospitals."

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Counts 1 and pleas 2 and 3 mentioned in the opinion are as follows:

Count 1. Plaintiff claims of defendant . . . as damages for that heretofore, to wit, . . . defendant was in the business of conducting an infirmary for the treatment of patients requiring operations and other medical treatment, and, for a reasonable compensation, defendant undertook and promised to properly nurse and care for plaintiff, preparatory to and during a surgical operation which she then required, and thereafter unaided she had sufficiently recovered to leave the institution, and that while plaintiff was so in said infirmary for such treatment, and after she had been operated on for some trouble of the internal organs, plaintiff was badly scalded with boiling water both internally and externally, by reason of the negligence of one of the nurses employed by defendant in the care of plaintiff, and while said nurse was engaged in and about the duties of her employment.

The second count was similar to the first, but amended "by reason of the said defendant's negligently intrusting the care of plaintiff while she was under an anesthetic to an incompetent nurse."

The following are the pleas in the case: (2) To each count of the complaint defendant says that, at the time when plaintiff claims to have been injured in the manner alleged in her complaint, defendant was an institution operated exclusively for charity, and that due care was exercised by defendant in the selection and retention of the service of the nurse referred to in the complaint. (3) At the time when plaintiff alleges that she suffered the injuries described in her complaint, defendant was engaged in the business of conducting a charitable hospital; that the ministrations of said hospital were not confined exclusively to the indigent, but pay was required and received from such patients as were able to pay for the services, attentions, and accommodations furnished them; that defendant corporation has issued no stock and has no stockholders; that it is not operated for profit, and never has been; that as moneys are earned by defendant they are and will be applied exclusively to the operations of its hospital, payment of its debts, and the extension of its work as a charity institution; that defendant exercised due care in the selection and retention of the nurse referred to in said complaint, and, if said nurse was incompetent, such fact was not known to defendant, and defendant had no notice thereof, although defendant exercised reasonable care with regard to the competency of said nurse.

Messrs. Gregory L. Smith, H. T. Smith, and William G. Caffey, for appellant:

A charitable corporation is liable in damages for breach of an express contract resulting in personal injury to a patient.

Ward v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 39 App. Div. 624, 57 N. Y. Supp. 784, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 164; Armstrong v. Wesley Hospital, 170 Ill. App. 81; Donaldson v. General Public Hospital, 30 N. B. 279; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 370.

A charitable corporation is liable in damages for injuries to employees or third persons caused by the negligence of its servants, and the assets of such corporation may be applied to payment of such damages.

Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120; McInerney v. St. Luke's Hospital Asso. 122 Minn. 10, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 141 N. W. 837; Thomas v. German General Benev. Soc. 168 Cal. 183, 141 Pac. 1186; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 74, 110 N. W. 951, 11 Ann. Cas. 150; Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 128 App. Div. 214, 112 N. Y. Supp. 566, 203 N. Y. 191, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 96 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 883, 3 N. C. C. A. 444; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889, 92 N. E. 626; Gartland v. New York Zoological Soc. 61 Misc. 643, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 135 App. Div. 163, 120 N. Y. Supp. 24; Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387, 122 N. W. 631; Holder v. Massachusetts Horticultural Soc. 211 Mass. 370, 97 N. E. 630; Armendariz v. Hotel Dieu, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 1030.

A charitable corporation is liable in a suit on an express contract between it and the patient for careful treatment, where a breach of that contract is shown by showing improper treatment.

Ward v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 39 App. Div. 624, 57 N. Y. Supp. 784, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 164; Armstrong v. Wesley Hospital, 170 Ill. App. 81; Donaldson v. General Public Hospital, 30 N. B. 279; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 370.

There is no universal rule exempting charitable corporations or their assets from liability in damages.

Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120; Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 676; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621; McInerny v. St. Luke's Hospital Asso. 122 Minn. 10, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 141 N. W. 837; Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 128 App. Div. 214, 112 N. Y. Supp. 566; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 74, 110 N. W. 951, 11 Ann. Cas. 150; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889, 92 N. E. 626; Armendarez v. Hotel Dieu, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 1030.

A charitable corporation is liable for its corporate negligence.

Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 128 App. Div. 214, 112 N. Y. Supp. 566; McInerny v. St. Luke's Hospital Asso. 122 Minn. 10, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 141 N. W. 837; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621.

Messrs. C. J. Torrey and Webb & McAlpine, for appellee:

Charitable institutions are not liable for the negligent acts of their servants, if the institutions have exercised due care in the selection and retention of the servants. Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42; Duncan v. Nebraska Sanitarium & Benev. Asso. 92 Neb. 162, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973, 137 N. W. 1120, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1127; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 200 Mass. 465, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486, 86 N. E. 909; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Farrigan v. Pevear, 193 Mass. 147, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 118 Am. St. Rep. 484, 78 N. E. 855, 8 Ann. Cas. 1109; Hearn v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, note; Parks v. Northwestern University, 218 Ill. 381, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 556, 75 N. E. 991, 4 Ann. Cas. 103; 7 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2507, p. 7683.

Gardner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff (appellant here) brought this suit against the Mobile Infirmary Association for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sustained by being scalded with boiling water both internally and externally as a result of the negligence of one of the nurses employed by defendant in care of the plaintiff, and while such nurse was engaged in the duties of said employment. There were two counts in the complaint. The reporter will set out counts 1 and 2 and pleas 2 and 3 in his report of the case. Demurrers to these pleas were overruled and replications were filed. Plaintiff took nonsuit on account of adverse rulings on the pleadings and brings the case here for review.

We think the pleas to the two counts ordered to be set out will be sufficient to present the question raised by the record.

Each of the counts alleged that for a reasonable compensation the defendant undertook and promised to properly nurse and care for plaintiff preparatory to and during a surgical operation and thereafter until she had sufficiently recovered to leave the institution.

In the first count the injuries are alleged to have been the result of negligence of one of the nurses employed by the defendant in care of the plaintiff, and in the second count as a result of defendant's negligently intrusting the care of the plaintiff, while under an anesthetic, to an incompetent nurse.

It is insisted by counsel for appellant in brief that the complaint is one for damages for the breach of a contract, citing Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Littleton, 169 Ala. 99, 53 So. 97; McDaniel v. Johnston, 110 Ala. 526, 19 So. 35; Mott v. Jackson, 172 Ala. 448, 55 So. 528. In the case first cited, quoting from case of Wilkinson v. Moseley, 18 Ala. 288, it was said: "If the cause of action, as stated in the declaration, arises from a breach of promise, the action is ex contractu; but if the cause of action arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is in form ex delicto and case."

The opinion in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Littleton, 169 Ala. 99, 53 So. 97, also makes note of the fact that it has frequently been said that it is often difficult to determine whether a count is on the contract or in tort, and regret is expressed that such is the case.

In each count of the complaint as above shown, the expressed promise and undertaking for a reasonable compensation to properly nurse and care for the plaintiff is alleged, and it is insisted therefore that the cause of action is shown to arise from the breach of this promise, and therefore that the action is ex contractu. However, this we need not determine, as we do not deem it material, for the reasons which will hereafter be stated.

It is next insisted that, the action being ex contractu, the cases of Ward v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 39 App. Div. 624, 57 N. Y. Supp. 784, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 164, and Armstrong v. Wesley Hospital, 170 Ill. App. 81, are authorities to support the cause of action as for the breach of an expressed contract resulting in injury to the patient. It must be conceded, if the counts are so construed, that such seems to be the effect of these decisions.

From the view we take of the case, it is also unnecessary that this be determined, as we are in accord with the following quotation from the case of Duncan v. St. Luke's Hospital, 113 App. Div. 68, 98 N. Y. Supp. 867; found recited in Duncan v. Nebraska Sanitarium & Benev. Asso. 92 Neb. 162, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973, 137 N. W. 1120, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1127: "Nor can we see any reason why there should be any difference in the rule where the tortious act which caused death is alleged to be a breach of an expressed contract than where it is alleged to be a breach of an implied contract, or where no contractual relation at all existed."

We are therefore of the opinion that, in so far as this case is concerned, the rule of liability would be the same whether an expressed contract were alleged or merely one implied by law.

That the complaint upon its face, in ordinary cases, shows a right of action in the plaintiff against the defendant, is, as we view the pleadings, practically conceded. The defendant, as shown more fully by plea 3, seeks exemption from liability because of the fact that it was engaged in the business of conducting a charitable hospital, that the corporation issued no stock, has no stockholders, is not operated for profit, and that, while its ministrations were not confined exclusively to the indigent, and pay was required and received from such patients as were able to pay for the service, yet the moneys earned by the corporation were applied exclusively in the operation of its hospital, payment of its debts, and the extension of its work as a charitable institution; and it is then averred that the defendant exercised due care in the selection and retention of the nurse referred to in the complaint. In short, the defense is that, having exercised due care in the selection and retention of the nurse, the defendant is exempt from all liability to the plaintiff, because of the fact that it is an institution organized, not for profit, but for charitable purposes.

The question presented is one of much interest, and a subject upon which much appears to have been written in recent years. It must be conceded at the outset that the great weight of authority in this country, certainly from a numerical standpoint, lies with the defendant in this case. It appears however, to be conceded by counsel, and we have found nothing to the contrary, that the question is an open one in this state, leaving us free to act without any constraint of the L.R.A.1915D.

rule of stare decisis, and in accordance with what we deem to be the law.

Among the early cases in this country deciding such charitable institution exempt from liability to the patient is that of McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; and it has been frequently cited and approved in subsequent cases in that jurisdiction. Farrigan v. Pevear, 193 Mass. 147, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 481, 118 Am. St. Rep. 484, 78 N. E. 855, 8 Ann. Cas. 1109; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 200 Mass. 465, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 486, 86 N. E. 909.

The above case of McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital has been also frequently cited and followed in other jurisdictions, and we therefore think it important, at the outset, to call attention to what seems to be the only authority relied upon in that opinion upon the question here under consideration,—that of the English court in the case of Holliday v. St. Leonard, 11 C. B. N. S. 192, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 361, 8 Jur. N. S. 79, 4 L. T. N. S. 406, 9 Week. Rep. 694, decided by the court of common bench in 1861.

It is clear, however, that in the subsequent case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, 11 H. L. Cas. 686, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225, 12 Jur. N. S. 571, 14 L. T. N. S. 677, 14 Week. Rep. 872, the principle of Holliday v. St. Leonard, supra, was not followed, but that in effect that authority was overruled. The principal opinion in the case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs was written by Mr. Justice Blackburn, and he was also the writer of the opinion in the case of Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214, wherein, speaking of the said case of Holliday v. St. Leonard, it is said in the opinion as follows: "Upon looking at the facts of that case it would appear that it would have been an authority directly in point for the present defendants if the case were still an authority at all; but, upon looking at the reasons of that decision, we consider it to be overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, supra. It is not overruled by name, but the principle upon which that case was decided in the House of Lords does overrule it."

It is therefore made clearly to appear that the English authority relied upon in the case of McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, supra, had been in effect, and, so far as the principle announced therein is concerned, overruled in the case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, supra, and this is expressly so stated in the case of Foreman v. Canterbury, supra, by Justice Blackburn, who was also the author of the opinion in the Mersey Docks Case. This is significant to be here noted because of the fact that the McDonald Case seems to be among the early cases treating the question in this country. It seems to have been largely followed by other jurisdictions. The McDonald Case was decided in 1876, and the decision in the Mersey Docks Case antedates the McDonald Case some several years, as well also, it appears, does the Foreman Case, supra. This does not seem to have been taken note of or called to the attention of the Massachusetts court in the McDonald Case.

As said by the supreme court of Rhode Island in the case of Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675: "The authority of McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, in so far as it rests upon Holliday v. St. Leonard, is seriously impaired by these cases."

That the McDonald Case was rested upon the English authority which had been overruled is noted in a very recent English case (Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital [1909] 2 K. B. 820), wherein Kennedy, L. J., uses this language: "With the American and New Zealand cases which were cited to us by the learned counsel on both sides I do not think it necessary to deal. They are not in agreement; in one of them, McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, relied upon by the defendants, the judgment appears to have been influenced by an English decision of Holliday v. St. Leonard, supra, which has been overruled by the House of Lords in Mersey Docks v. Gibbs. See per Blackburn, J., in Foreman v. Canterbury."

The importance of directing attention to this situation at this time is further emphasized when we note the fact that the McDonald Case has been considered a leading case, if indeed not the pioneer case, upon this particular question in this country, and been followed, cited, and quoted from in many subsequent decisions. It is said to be a leading case in the note to 6 Cyc. 975; and in Taylor v. Protestant Hospital Asso. 85 Ohio St. 90, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 427, 96 N. E. 1089, 1 N. C. C. A. 438, quoting from another, it is said: "The doctrine of the Massachusetts cases may be said to be the law followed by other states."

The McDonald Case is cited and commented upon in Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, supra, and in the concurring opinion of Justice Potter we find the following remark: "The arguments of counsel have been very able, but their researches have only discovered one case nearly in point, McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, supra."

It is further indicated in the opinion of Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595, that the McDonald Case was among the earliest in this country dealing with this question. The opinion states that the first case to which the attention of the court had been called was that of Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461, decided in Virginia; but it is further shown that liability was denied in that case, on the ground that the management of the hospital was under governmental powers, under the laws of Virginia, and that in fact the government was the principal or master. Such a case as the Virginia case is of the same character as that decided by our own court in the case of White v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 138 Ala. 479, 35 So. 454, where the corporation was held to be only an arm or agency of the state; and cases of this character, therefore, are without application to the question we have at hand. Some of the decisions make note of the point that many of the cases could have been decided upon this doctrine. It is therefore clear that the McDonald Case is among the earliest, if not the first, in this country which is directly in point.

While it must be conceded that the great weight of authority in this country is in favor of exemption to an institution engaged in charitable work from liability for the torts of its servants or agents, yet there is some contrariety of opinion as to the principles upon which this result is rested, and varied reasons are given not at all consistent one with the other. For the purposes of this case these authorities may be grouped into three classes. One line of decisions would rest exemption from liability upon what might be termed "the trust fund theory," that is, that all funds of such institutions are held in trust for the particular charitable purpose, and that it is a breach of trust to apply them to any other purpose, and that the payment of damages due to the negligence of the servants of the institution is not a purpose contemplated by the trust, and that therefore their funds cannot be diverted to the payment thereof. Other authorities rest their conclusion, it seems, upon the theory that the rule of respondet superior does not apply to such institutions, for the reason that the servants in the exercise of their duties are not engaged in the work which is for the benefit or profit of the master, and that such is essential to call for the application of this rule. Still other authorities base their conclusion upon what might be termed an "implied assent theory;" that is, that one who accepts the benefit of charity must be taken impliedly to have assumed the risk of negligent injuries caused to him by servants who have been properly employed or retained in his service, or to have waived liability of a charitable institution for injuries so received.

We will briefly note these three theories, taking them up in the order just named. A detail treatment, however, of each of the authorities relied upon, would cause this opinion to be of undue length, and we will content ourselves with as brief a review as is practicable, citing some of the authorities whereby the reader, if interested, may pursue a thorough research.

The "trust fund theory," as we have above termed it, rests, as previously stated, upon the reasoning that, as the funds are held in trust for a particular charitable purpose, it is a breach of that trust to apply them to any other purpose, and therefore the payment of damages occasioned by the torts of the servants or agents of such institution would result in a diversion of such trust funds. Followed to its logical conclusion, this theory would result in absolute immunity from damages of any character being recovered against such institution, which would exempt them from liability of the servant to the patient and to a third person, and indeed it would seem to also exempt them from damages from the breach of an expressed contract. The doctrine, we think, it clearly appears, can find no support in the English authorities. In the case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, supra, the corporation acted as a trustee for, and collected tolls for the use of, the docks, acted without reward to itself, and the tolls or receipts were not applicable to the use of the corporation, but were devoted to the maintenance of the works, and in case of any surplus the toll rate was to be proportionately diminished. Here was a trust service for the public benefit, without reward and without expectation of profit on the part of those performing the service. In the opinion Mr. Justice Blackburn says: "Now, it is obvious that a shipowner who pays dock rates for the use of the dock, or the owner of goods who pays warehouse rates for the use of a warehouse and the services of the warehousemen, is, as far as he is concerned, exactly in the same position however the rates may be appropriated. He pays the rates for the dock accommodation, or for warehouse accommodation and services, and he is entitled to expect that reasonable care should be taken that he shall not be exposed to danger in using the accommodation for which he has paid."

In the cases of Powers v. Massachusetts Homoeopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294, and Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 74, 110 N. W. 951, 11 Ann. Cas. 150, the English authorities upon this question are given some review, and we think demonstrate clearly that what we here term the "trust fund theory" finds no support in the English jurisprudence of this time. As said in the Powers Case, supra: "Whatever may be the limit of the liability of a political or municipal body in Great Britain for the torts of its servants, that limit is now in no way determined by any doctrine concerning the application of a trust fund."

In the recent case of Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120, may be found a careful review of the authorities upon this question, and a classification of them. The opinion points out many of the cases holding to the "trust fund theory" to such an extent as would create absolute immunity, and then other cases which, while apparently holding to the same trust fund theory, limit this exemption to cases where there was no negligence in the selection or retention of the servants. It is unnecessary that we here cite these cases, as they are set out in the Basabo Case, to which we are now referring. In speaking of these two classes of cases the opinion says: "We think these latter cases must be regarded as entirely inconsistent with the general proposition of the exemption of charitable corporations on grounds of public policy set forth in the previous cases, as was said in reference to many of these cases by Gaynor, J., in Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 128 App. Div. 214, at page 217, 112 N. Y. Supp. 566: 'In many, if not most, of the cases, a ground for the nonliability for the torts of agents or servants of charitable institutions is that to pay damages for such torts would be a diversion of their funds from the trust purposes for which they are donated by the charitable, and thus a contravention of the trust, and that as such institutions have no other funds it would be futile to allow judgments to be taken against them in such cases. But the opinions of the judges in these same cases almost invariably except cases where the agent or servant was incompetent, and there was negligence in his selection; failing to take note that it would be as much a diversion of the trust funds to pay damages for the tort of negligence in selection as for any other tort. If the rule exists, it must necessarily apply to all torts and in all cases. The only support for the argument that it does exist is found in the remarks of judges in certain rather old English cases, which were repudiated in later cases, and never had a direct application to actions of tort against charitable corporations such as are now common. It is true that an action does not lie against a trustee under a will, or the like, as such, for his torts or those of his servants in the affairs or administration of a trust. He has to be sued individually; but the reason is purely technical, and the courts allow the judgment against him individually for damages to be paid out of the trust funds, if he was free from wilful misconduct in the tort. No rule, therefore, that trust funds may not be used to pay damages for torts in the administration of the trust, exists, even in the case of ordinary express trusts, let alone in the general trusts of charitable corporations. Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital and Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, supra; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621. . . . These views were approved by the court of appeals of New York (although the decision was reversed on other grounds) in Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 203 N. Y. 191, 194, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 96 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 883, 3 N. C. C. A. 444."

We are of the opinion that the doctrine of the absolute exemption of charitable corporations is very much weakened by the position taken by the courts in these later citations, and is practically repudiated by them, whatever general remarks the courts may have made in regard thereto, when the same are submitted to a careful and logical consideration.

The case of Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42, has been frequently cited by other courts in support of this trust fund theory, and it is difficult for one giving this case a careful reading and noting the authorities relied upon in the opinion, to reach any other conclusion than that in fact the case was decided upon that theory. As an illustration of this may be noted the case of Gable v. Sisters of St. Francis, 227 Pa. 254, 136 Am. St. Rep. 879, 75 Atl. 1087, 2 N. C. C. A. 381, where the court lays much stress upon the treatment of this theory in the Downes Case. Yet this doctrine is expressly repudiated by the Michigan supreme court in the recent case of Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, supra, in a very able opinion, and in which it was attempted to show that the real theory of the Downes Case rested upon an implied assent. In the opinion it is said: "It is equally true that the proposition that trust funds cannot be used to compensate wrongs committed by the agent of the trustee is not a correct statement of the law." "The doctrine that the will of an individual shall exempt either persons or property from the operation of general laws is inconsistent with the fundamental idea of government. It permits the will of the subject to nullify the will of the people. Nor can I conceive any ground upon which a court can hold that effect can be given to that will when it relates to property devised or conveyed for the purpose of a charitable trust. Such a holding must rest upon the argument that the advantages reaped by the public from such trusts justify the exemption; that is, as applied to this case, the advantages to the public justify defendant's exemption from liability for wrongs done to individuals. If this argument is sound—and its soundness may be questioned, for there are those who will deny that the advantages to the public justify the wrong to the individual—it should be addressed to the legislative, and not to the judicial, department of the government. It is our duty as judges to apply the law. We have no authority to create exemptions or to declare immunity."

L.R.A.1915D.

Discussing the same doctrine, the supreme court of New Hampshire in the case of Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621, has this to say: "It would seem to be entirely unnecessary to discuss a proposition so barren of arguments in its favor. That a charitable institution has certain duties to perform towards those with whom it is associated, which it cannot violate with impunity, in the absence of some express exemption of a legislative character, is not debatable. The sanctity of its general trust fund or property does not make that result necessary or, on grounds of public policy, desirable. The liability of charitable corporations in actions of tort is frequently enforced,"—citing authorities.

In Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 203 N. Y. 191, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 96 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 883, 3 N. C. C. A. 444, the supreme court of New York says: "It must now be regarded as settled that a charitable corporation is not exempt from liability for the tort against a stranger, because of the fact that it holds its property in trust to be applied to purposes of charity."

And also in the case of Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889, 92 N. E. 626, that court, speaking of the same subject, said: "Certainly liability for negligence in the selection of servants may impair the integrity of the trust estate just the same as liability for the negligence of servants, though, of course, not so frequently."

Concerning this theory, Mr. Labatt, in vol. 7, § 2506, p. 7685, of his work on Master and Servant, says: "This doctrine, however, has been repudiated in some of the cases. The difficulty with the impairment of the trust fund theory is that, to apply it consistently, it would exempt charitable institutions from all liability for negligence whatsoever; whereas, even in cases upholding this theory, some exceptions are made. It is generally assumed that such institutions would be responsible, for example, for negligence in the selection of their servants; but, if nonliability is based on the doctrine that the trust fund must not be impaired, why should there be any distinction in this respect between negligence in the selection of servants and negligence of servants chosen with due care? In either case, if judgment is to be paid out of the trust fund, it is bound to be impaired. The same reasoning would apply to negligence in the care of the buildings, resulting in injury to a patient or to a third person, and negligence, say, of an ambulance driver, causing injury to a third person, and to negligence as to all of those duties which are cast upon masters by law, and which cannot be delegated."

What we have here said, and the authorities which we have cited, we think, are all sufficient to show that the trust fund theory is no solid foundation upon which to rest, and is repudiated in the modern well-considered cases, and even in some of the states (as in the Downes Case, supra) where it is supposed to have once been applied.

In the case of Hordern v. Salvation Army, the opinion, written by Chief Justice Cullen, cites and gives some brief review of the Massachusetts cases upon this subject. He points out that in the early case of McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, the plaintiff was a gratuitous patient, but a reading of the opinion in that case clearly demonstrates the conclusion was not affected by that fact. We think the brief review of the Massachusetts cases found in the Hordern Case clearly demonstrates that their decisions cannot be harmonized upon the trust fund theory, and in the opinion it is stated: "Whether since this last decision Massachusetts is to be placed in the class of states adhering to the doctrine of total immunity may well be doubted." See also recent case of Hospital of St. Vincent of Paul v. Thompson, 116 Va. 101, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1025, 81 S. E. 13, where several authorities are reviewed.

The second theory relied upon in some of the cases, that the rule of respondet superior does not apply against such institutions for the reason that the servant or agent in the exercise of his duties is not acting for the benefit or profit of the master, needs, we think, but brief consideration.

The rule of respondet superior was given application in the case of Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, and the true principle concerning this rule was stated in the following quotation found in this case: L.R.A.1915D.

"Upon the principle that qui facit per alium facit per se, the master is responsible for the acts of his servant; and that person is undoubtedly liable who stood in the relation of master to the wrongdoer, he who had selected him as his servant from the knowledge of or belief in his skill and care, and who could remove him for misconduct, and whose orders he was bound to receive and obey."

And, also, it is clearly demonstrated that the rule of respondet superior is not dependent upon whether the master makes profit by the discharge of the duties, in the following quotation from the case of Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795: "The law is plain that whosoever undertakes the performance of, or is bound to perform, duties,—whether they are duties imposed by reason of the possession of property, or by the assumption of an office, or however they may arise,—is liable for injuries caused by his negligent discharge of those duties. It matters not whether he makes money or a profit by means of discharging the duties, or whether it be a corporation or an individual who has undertaken to discharge them. It is also immaterial whether the person is guilty of negligence by himself or by his servants, if he elects to perform the duties by his servants. If in the nature of things he is obliged to perform the duties by employing servants, he is responsible for their acts in the same way that he is responsible for his own."

The case of Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595, seems to rest largely upon the theory that the rule of respondet superior does not apply. Many of the English cases are reviewed as well as others, but the opinion is far from convincing.

Speaking of this case, it was said by the writer of the opinion in Bruce v. Central M. E. Church: "I think one cannot carefully read the elaborate opinion in the Hearns Case and examine the authorities therein cited (see particularly Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 138, 24 L. T. N. S. 385, 19 Week Rep. 719; Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 85, 35 Week. Rep. 30; Levingston v. Lurgan Union, Ir. L. R. 2 C. L. 202, 18 L. T. N. S. 338; and Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, supra) without reaching the conclusion that the doctrine of respondet superior does apply, though the business is not carried on for the purpose of profit. I conclude from this reasoning that corporations administering a charitable trust, like all other corporations, are subject to the general laws of the land, and cannot therefore claim exemption from responsibility for the torts of their agents, unless that claim is based on a contract with the person injured by such a tort, and that Downes v. Harper Hospital and other similar cases are consistent with this rule. They rest upon the principle correctly stated in Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294, viz., that the beneficiary of such charitable trust enters into a contract whereby he assumes the risk of such torts. It is not surprising that years should have elapsed before the correct legal principle governing these cases was announced in Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital. The discovery of correct legal principles, like the discovery of scientific and social truths, requires time and patient investigation."

The following quotation from Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 128 App. Div. 214, 112 N. Y. Supp. 566, is also directly in point and to the same effect: "In many of the cases much is made of the fact that such institutions derive no profit or benefit, on the question of whether such rule applies, or, indeed, whether they can be held liable for any torts. But that exemption from liability does not arise from that fact is manifest from the undoubted liability of other similar institutions which derive no profit or benefit. Church of Ascension v. Buckhart, 3 Hill, 193; Blaehinska v. Howard Mission, 56 Hun, 322, 9 N. Y. Supp. 679; Mulchey v. Methodist Religious Soc. 125 Mass. 487; Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 368; Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 151 Mass. 215, 6 L.R.A. 778, 24 N. E. 39; Chapin v. Holvoke Y. M. C. A. 165 Mass. 280, 42 N. E. 1130. . . . The position of such a corporation in respect of its torts would seem to be the same as that of an individual carrying on similar charitable work with donated funds or with his own funds. I do not understand that if my servant, sent out by me on an errand of mercy or charity, negligently runs over one in the street, I am not liable for his act."

We cite in this connection Gartland v. New York Zoological Soc. 135 App. Div. 163, 120 N. Y. Supp. 24, 29; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 74, 110 N. W. 951, 11 Ann. Cas. 150; Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675; Winch v. Thames Conservators, L. R. 7 C. P. 458, 472; Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, supra; 7 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 7692.

The question, however, we conclude, is foreclosed in this state from the language used in the opinion of Southern R. Co. v. Wildman, 119 Ala. 565, 24 So. 764, wherein it is said: "The words 'interest of,' or L.R.A.1915D.

'prosecution of the business of,' naturally would impress the average juror with the idea that if the act was not done with the purpose or intent to promote the interest of, or in furtherance of the business of, the employer, the employer could not be held liable. Certainly such a rule would restrict the liability of the employer within too narrow a compass."

The basis of the doctrine of respondent superior in this state is to be found in the maxim, qui facit per alium, facit per se. See also Hall & B. Woodworking Mach. Co. v. Haley Furniture & Mfg. Co. 174 Ala. 197, 56 So. 726; Cooper v. Slaughter, 175 Ala. 211, 217, 57 So. 477. We therefore conclude unhesitatingly that exemption from liability cannot be rested upon the theory that the rule of respondent superior has no application.

We are thus brought by the rule of exclusion to the last stated theory, that of "implied assent." This is the theory upon which the more recent and best considered cases seem to rest. Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 74, 110 N. W. 951, 11 Ann. Cas. 150; Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital and Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, supra; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889, 92 N. E. 626; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120.

In the case of Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, supra, it was said: "If, then, in order to find a ground, we again resort to classification of the cases that have come into the courts, or that may arise, and separate torts of such servants against beneficiaries or patients of the charitable trust or institution, from torts against outsiders, a ground for such exemption may be perceived in respect of the former, but not of the latter. The law may imply an intention on the part of the donors of the charitable funds that such funds shall be used for the charitable purpose only, and then imply an acquiescence in this intention by all persons who accept the benefits of the charity, and in that way spell out a waiver by such persons of any responsibility of the institution for the negligence or torts of its servants. If the courts want to exempt such institutions, this may be a tenable, though some may think a rather ingenious or far-fetched, ground on which to do it. But no such acquiescence or waiver can be attributed to an outsider."

In a very recent case in New York, it is stated that immunity now rests upon two grounds by the decisions: First, upon that of implied waiver; and, second, upon grounds that the relation of master and servant does not exist between the hospital and the physicians and surgeons, and even, in some instances, nurses. See Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, 211 N. Y. 125, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 105 N. E. 92.

Some of the cases applying this theory of the implied assent seem to rest largely upon what was said in the opinion by Lowell, District Judge, in the case of Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, supra. In that case, although the language may be said to be very broad, it should be noted that, although the patient in the hospital was what was termed a "paying patient," yet the opinion shows that the sum paid was, in the opinion of the writer, of "insignificant proportion" to the cost of the services rendered. If this is true, then it should be borne in mind that, while the patient was what was termed a "paying patient," yet she did not pay or offer to pay reasonable compensation for the services rendered, and clearly that in proportion as the sum paid was insignificant for the services rendered, then it must follow just to that proportion the patient was not a "paying patient," but in truth and in fact a charity patient. As the opinion seems to form a base or foundation for the conclusion of the court in other cases, we think it important that these facts be made prominent and given emphasis. In the opinion it is said: "That a man is sometimes deemed to assume a risk of negligence, so that he cannot sue for damages caused by the negligence, is familiar law. . . . Such is the case at bar. . . . One who accepts the benefit either of a public or a private charity enters into a relation which exempts his benefactor from liability for the negligence of his servants in administering the charity; at any rate, if the benefactor has used due care in selecting those servants. To paraphrase the illustration put by the learned judge before whom this case was tried, it would be intolerable that a good Samaritan, who takes to his home a wounded stranger for surgical care, should be held personally liable for the negligence of his servant in caring for that stranger. Were the heart and means of that Samaritan so large that he was able, not only to provide for one wounded man, but to establish a hospital for the care of a thousand, it would be no less intolerable that he should be held personally liable for the negligence of his servant in caring for any one of those thousand wounded men. We cannot perceive that the position of the defendant differs from the case supposed. The persons whose money has established this hospital are good Samaritans, perhaps giving less of personal devotion than did he, but, by combining their liberality, thus enabled to deal with suffering on a large scale. If, in their dealings with their property appropriated to charity, they create a nuisance by themselves or by their servants, if they dig pitfalls in their grounds and the like, there are strong reasons for holding them liable to outsiders, like any other individual or corporation. The purity of their aims may not justify their torts; but, if a suffering man avails himself of their charity, he takes the risks of malpractice, if their charitable agents have been carefully selected."

L.R.A.1915D.

In the case of Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, it appears from the opinion that a charitable institution cannot claim exemption from responsibility, unless that claim is based on a contract with the person injured by such a tort. Speaking of the Downes Case and others of similar character, the opinion says: "They rest upon the principle correctly stated in Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294, viz., that the beneficiary of such charitable trust enters into a contract whereby he assumes the risk of such torts. It is not surprising that years should have elapsed before the correct legal principle governing these cases was announced in Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital."

Speaking to this same subject, the supreme court of California in Thomas v. German General Benev. Soc. 168 Cal. 183, 141 Pac. 1186, has this to say: "A final contention of appellant is that it is in no way responsible, by reason of the fact that it is a charitable institution, and that an action against it such as this will not lie. Such was the doctrine of some of the earlier cases. We need not enter into an elaborate discussion of the question. All of the authorities pro and con have been elaborately collated and learnedly reviewed in Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120. With the conclusion there reached we are in accord. That conclusion is that the true doctrine amounts to this: That where one accepts the benefit of a public or of a private charity, he exempts by implied contract the benefactor from liability for the negligence of the servants in administering the charity, if the benefactor has used due care in the selection of those servants."

The opinion in the Powers Case, supra, clearly shows that it proceeded upon the theory that one who accepts charity either wholly or partially, as it were, assumes the risk of negligence, and this we take it must be held to be the underlying principle of the decision.

If it be conceded (without deciding, as unnecessary at this time) that the principle is logical and well founded, we are of the opinion that it could not be given application in this case as presented by this record. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff agreed to pay a reasonable compensation; that is, such sum as is reasonable to be paid for the services rendered. She has depended upon no charity, she sought none, but was to pay a reasonable price for what she received. Had she been a dependent upon another's bounty, either to a great or small degree, there might be some plausibility in the argument that it would not lie in her mouth to say that the institution should be held to strict accountability for the negligent acts of its servants in administering the charity which she herself has sought. We are unable to conceive upon what principle the theory of "implied assent" could be applied to one who pays full price and without regard to the nature of the institution from which she receives her service. There can be no valid reason why such a patient, dealing as she does at arm's length with the hospital, should not stand in as favorable position as the stranger, and yet many of the cases grant relief to the latter and deny it to the former.

The principle, if held to be sound, must rest upon the fact that it is the giving and receiving of charity that creates the exemption, and not the nature of the institution administering it.

We make it clear we premit the question as to liability for injury to one who in fact accepts charity in an institution of this character, as we have not that case before us. It has been questioned that the implied assent theory would be applicable to even such a case, in the dissenting opinion of Justice Fraser in Lindler v. Columbia Hospital, 98 S. C. 25, 81 S. E. 512, wherein, speaking to that question and of some of the cases so holding, he says: "We are told, in effect, that a patient entirely unskilled in legal principles, his body racked with pain, his mind distorted with fever, is held to know, by intuition, the principle of law that the courts after years of travail have at last produced. We cannot accept a rule based upon after-discovered reasons. We confess that it is a new doctrine to us that a court will assume an implied contract to relieve against liability for future negligence."

By quoting the above we do not indicate any approval thereof nor otherwise, but merely make note of the same to show that even in such instances the theory has been questioned. We pass that question by until it arises. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

We are aware of the fact that the opinion in the case of Duncan v. Nebraska Sanitary L.R.A.1916D.

tarium & Benev. Asso. 92 Neb. 162, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973, 137 N. W. 1120, Ann. Cas. 1913F, 1127, would seem to indicate an extension of the principle of the "implied assent theory" to those who were not in fact in any sense recipients of charity, but who paid full compensation for the services rendered. The opinion says, however, that full compensation was not paid in that case, but a reduced rate was paid and accepted. If this were the case, it may be that the decision might be brought within the Powers Case, supra, where in fact charity in part was received by the patient, and, if so, some of the language used may be declared dictum; but whether so or not we are unable to see the force of the reasoning and cannot follow it. Speaking of cases of this character, Justice Fraser, in the above dissenting opinion, says: "Some of the cases hold that the pay patients, when they enter a hospital with a charitable foundation, are really charity patients, and the weekly sums they are required to pay are not payments at all, but contributions to the charity fund. This is brilliant, but is not convincing. We think the first duty of every man and the first call upon every fund is to repair the evil of its own doing, and then the remaining fund or remaining strength may be devoted to charity."

It is a principle of law, as well as morals, that men must be just before they are generous. It is a well-known fact, of which courts may take judicial notice, that many of the most noted institutions of this country for the treatment of the sick were established by endowments, are not operated for profit, accept charity patients, and are such as come within the definition of charitable institutions laid down in the books. We are unable to see upon what line of reasoning one who is willing to pay, and does pay, full price for services to be rendered, should be held to have exempted the institution from all liability merely because it is not operated for profit.

With that the patient is not concerned, nor indeed is he in any mood or condition to inquire. He is seeking restoration to health. He expects to pay the full price, and can it be said with any show of reason that, because forsooth the money which he pays is not to be paid out as dividends or profits, he lays himself liable to injury by the negligence of those in whose charge he places himself, or even it may be—and the doctrine followed to its ultimate conclusion would logically so lead—to the wilful or wanton wrongful conduct of the servants in charge of the institution. We think not, clearly. The conclusion we have reached is supported in principle by the case of Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34

Am. Rep. 675. In that case negligence relied upon was that of an interne in the hospital. The opinion seems to make some distinction as to liability of the hospital for the negligence of physicians and surgeons attendant on it, upon the idea that they are in the exercise of skill, and cannot, in a strict sense, be considered servants or agents of the hospital, and consequently are not subject to be controlled by the hospital. See also Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 85 Atl. 120; 5 R. C. L. § 121. With this distinction, however, we are not here concerned, as the negligence relied upon was that of a nurse, and in regard to a matter which it does not appear would require any peculiar skill or knowledge; and indeed no such defense is here attempted to be set up in any of the pleadings. We therefore find no necessity for a discussion of any such distinction. In the Glavin Case it was said: "The argument is that hospitals like the Rhode Island Hospital are public benefit; but if they are liable for the torts of the physicians or surgeons attendant on them, or of the medical or surgical internes, or of their nurses and other servants, people will be discouraged from voluntarily contributing to their foundation and support, and therefore public policy demands that they shall be exempted from liability. In our opinion the argument will not bear examination. The public is doubtless interested in the maintenance of a great public charity, such as the Rhode Island Hospital is; but it also has an interest in obliging every person and corporation which undertakes the performance of a duty to perform it carefully, and to that extent, therefore, it has an interest against exempting any such person and any such corporation from liability for its negligences. The court cannot undertake to say that the former interest is so supreme that the latter must be sacrificed to it. Whether it shall be or not is not a question for the court, but for the legislature."

Other cases supporting in principle the conclusion we here reach are McInerny v. St. Luke's Hospital Asso. 122 Minn. 10, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548, 141 N. W. 837; Armendarez v. Hotel Dieu, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 1030; Donaldson v. General Public Hospital, 30 N. B. 279; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, 64 Atl. 190, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 621. In this latter case it is said: "In conducting the affairs of a hospital, its officers and agents are as liable to commit acts of negligence as are the officers and agents of a railroad or other business corporations. Men in general are not uniformly careful. Experience shows that negligence—the failure to exercise ordinary care—is to be expected when men engage in industrial pursuits. It may, not inappropriately, be said to be necessarily incidental in the accomplishment of most practical results through the agency of man. The donors of the defendant's property for hospital purposes were not ignorant of this fact, and are presumed to have given the trust property knowing that it might be required for the liquidation of claims in tort, as well as for claims in contract, incurred in carrying out the purposes of the corporation. Indeed, its conceded authority to contract for the employment of nurses and other necessary agents would seem to include power to respond in damages for all breaches of such contracts, one essential or incidental element of which is its duty to . . . pay the stipulated compensation."

We have cited Armendarez v. Hotel Dieu, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 1030, as some of the reasoning appears to support the principle of this opinion, though we are aware that in the recent case of St. Paul's Sanitarium v. Williamson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 36, the rule is stated to be in that state, as to the question directly here at issue, in accord with contention of the appellee.

As previously stated in this opinion, we recognize that the weight of authority in this country is opposed to the conclusion we have here reached. This within itself is, of course, of much force, and has led us to a very careful review of the cases, and a consideration of the principles upon which they may be said to rest. But it sometimes happens that in order to reach a safe harbor one must row against the current. We have here endeavored to show that the theory upon which those cases are founded does not measure with the rule of reason or sound logic, as we view it. While many of them reach the same end, yet they do so by entirely divergent routes and upon theories entirely inconsistent one with the other. For these courts we have the highest respect, but we cannot follow in their wake.

In the Powers Case, 65 L.R.A. 372, 47 C. C. A. 122, 109 Fed. 294, the writer of the opinion said: "Though we feel constrained to differ from the reasoning followed by some other courts in reaching the same conclusion, we are not unmindful that the identity of conclusion reached, though by different roads, is a strong proof of its correctness. Doubtless a weight of authority is more overwhelming if it is identical in reasoning as well as in result, but identity of result is in itself no mean argument for its justice."

Generally speaking, the language of the writer may be accepted as correct; but in this particular instance, upon this interesting subject, the different views are so divergent and so inconsistent that in our minds the weight of authority has lost its force, and we are rather impressed by a reading of the decisions that the courts holding to the majority view have been rather straining at legal principles in order to reach what they seem to think a desirable and just result. With the result the court cannot feel concerned. It is not for this court to create exemptions or declare immunity from liability in a case of this character as shown by this record, and, if considered to be so violently opposed to the public good, it is a matter that may be addressed to the legislative department. Some of the authorities express a doubt that the advantages to the public would justify a wrong to an individual, thus placing the institution above the law, as it were. But, however this may be viewed, we think the following observation made by Justice Potter in the Glavin Case, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675, is most pertinent here: "Is it not better and safer for the court to follow out the analogies of the law, and then, if the legislature is of opinion that public policy demands a limitation of this liability, it is in its power to interfere and grant an entire or partial exemption."

It is ours to declare the law as we see it, and, being unable to find a sound legal principle upon which exemption from liability may rest in a case disclosed by this record, we conclude that pleas 2 and 3, merely in this respect setting up due care in selection and retention in service of the nurse, do not show a defense to the cause of action, and the demurrer thereto should have been sustained. The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause is remanded to be proceeded with in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan, Sayre, Somerville, and Thomas, JJ., concur.

Mayfield, J., dissents.

Mayfield, J., dissenting:

If the law is as it is here decided to be, is it not strange that no text-book writer in England or America has ever been able to learn it? It does seem that such judges and text-book writers as Cooley, Kent, Story, Parsons, Shaw, Gibson, Beasley, Bush, Morawetz, Jaggard, and others of equal note, would have found it out, and not have misled the world-litigants and world-courts for a century or more. Is it possible that one decision of one court of the smallest state in L.R.A.1915D.

the Union contains more wisdom than all other courts, and all text writers on the subject? There is no decision of any American court, nor opinion of any judge, nor mention by any text-book writer, in accord with the decision of this case, that does not base the opinion on the Rhode Island case cited in this opinion. It has been criticized scores, if not hundreds, of times, where it has been approved or followed once. One of the greatest courts in the United States, viz., that of Pennsylvania, has spoken as follows: "I will not consume time by discussing the case of Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 645, which to some extent sustains the opposite view of this question. There a hospital patient paying $8 per week for his board and medical attendance was allowed to recover a verdict against the hospital for unskilful treatment, and it was held that the general trust funds of a charitable corporation are liable to satisfy a judgment in tort recovered against it for the negligence of its officers or agents. It is at least doubtful whether, under its facts, the case applies; and, if it does, we would not be disposed to follow it in the face of the overwhelming weight of authority the other way, and of the sound reasoning by which it is supported." Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 650, 1 L.R.A. 422, 6 Am. St. Rep. 754, 15 Atl. 558.

If the decision of this case is to stand as the law of this state, it cries loudly for the legislature of Alabama to do what the legislature of Rhode Island did,—put the law of that state in line with that of all the other states by a statute. I ask the question: Should we follow the court of Rhode Island, when the decision of that court was deemed so bad by the people that they rid themselves of it by an express statute?

Judge Paxson, of the Pennsylvania court, speaking for the whole court, well expressed the law, according to my view, on the subject of respondeat superior, and I adopt his words: "That doctrine is, at best, as I once before observed, a hard rule. I trust and believe it will never be extended to the sweeping away of public charities,—to the misapplication of funds specially contributed for a public charitable purpose to objects not contemplated by the donors. I think it may be safely assumed that private trustees, having the control of money contributed for a specific charity, could not, in case of a tort committed by one of their members, apply the funds in their hands to the payment of a judgment recovered therefor. A public charity, whether incorporated or not, is but a trustee, and is bound to apply its funds in furtherance of the charity, and not otherwise. This doctrine is hoary with antiquity, and prevails alike in this country and in England, where it originated as early as the reign of Edward V., and it was announced in the Year Book of that period." Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 647, 1 L.R.A. 417, 421, 6 Am. St. Rep. 752, 15 Atl. 557.

Judge Cooley, speaking of the same rule, says: "But this rule does not apply to a purely charitable corporation, having no capital stock, and whose members receive no dividends or profits from its operations, and such a corporation is not liable for the torts or neglects of its servants in the performance of their duties. The officer of a public corporation in the discharge of the proper duties of his office is not, in general, to be deemed the servant of the corporation; neither is any person who is employed in any capacity in the execution of its police regulations, or in its fire department. But in the management of its own property a public corporation comes under the same rules with all others, and its agents are its servants." 2 Cooley, Torts, pp. 1011-1013.

In a note to this text (pages 1011, 1012) he quotes from the Connecticut court as follows: "We think the law does not justify such an extension of the rule of respondet superior. It is perhaps immaterial whether we say the public policy which supports the doctrine of respondet superior does not justify such extension of the rule; or say that the public policy which encourages enterprises for charitable purposes requires exemption from the operation of a rule based on legal fiction, and which, as applied to the owners of such enterprises, is clearly opposed to substantial justice. It is enough that a charitable corporation like the defendant—whatever may be the principle that controls its liability for corporate neglect in the performance of a corporate duty—is not liable, on grounds of public policy, for injuries caused by personal wrongful neglect in the performance of his duty by a servant whom it has selected with due care; but in such case the servant is alone responsible for his own wrong. Hearn v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 126, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595."

Mr. Jaggard, in his work on Torts, states the law as follows: "Where a corporation, not municipal or quasi municipal, is engaged in public work: (a) Liability is determined by the rules applying to private corporations, whenever such works are operated for profit; and (b) its exemption is limited by rules as to municipal corporations, when it is a public charity." Vol. 1, p. 184.

Then, after reviewing and citing many decisions and text-books, he concludes as follows: "Following Holliday v. St. Leonard, 11 C. B. N. S. 192, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 361, 8 Jur. N. S. 79, 4 L. T. N. S. 406, 9 Week. L.R.A.1915D.

Rep. 694, it was held in Massachusetts that a corporation established for the maintenance of a public charity is not liable for injury caused by its servants, if it exercises due care in their selection. In a later decision the responsibility of public charity is determined upon a more logical principle,—that where the charity is performing a purely public duty, without profit, it is 'no more liable for the negligence of officers and agents than the city would be.' The reason for this better opinion is stated in Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, by Mr. Justice Paxson, 'that, when a public corporation has no property or funds but what have been contributed for a special charitable purpose, it would be against all law and all equity to apply the trust funds thus contributed to compensate injuries inflicted by the negligence of its agents and servants.' This is the generally recognized rule." 1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 187.

The same doctrine is stated in Cyc. and in American and English Encyclopedia of Law.

The whole doctrine of respondet superior is at best a very, very harsh one; it makes one person answer for the sins of another. The law has wisely limited the doctrine to cases in which the superior has a private or pecuniary interest in the sin or wrong committed by the other or inferior. It has never been extended, and never should be extended, to cases in which the superior has no private or pecuniary interest in the wrongful act. If the superior is acting for the public, and his acts are righteous and charitable, surely he ought not to be held liable for the sins of others, by whose acts he could not have been benefited, whether carefully or negligently performed. It is a rule of law founded on public policy, if not on necessity, that purely public or charitable bodies or agencies are not liable for the negligence of their agents and servants, though they may be liable for their own negligence. Purely charitable institutions, in this respect, are on the same footing with municipal corporations. Messrs. Cooley and Dillon, and all other reputable text writers, place the two in the same category. See 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 974, and Cooley, Torts, p. 1011.

Municipal corporations are in terms exempt from liability on account of the negligence of their officers and agents, for the same reason that the sovereign—the state or the United States—is exempt. It is true that the state or the United States cannot be sued unless specially authorized so to be; but their exemption from liability on account of the negligence of their servants, agents, or officers rests upon the same principles as those which exempt municipal or purely charitable corporations,—that is, it is against public policy. If, however, the United States, the state, or a municipal or charitable corporation, engage in a private business or undertaking for profit, then quoad hoc it is liable just as is an individual or a private corporation. It may be that, even when liable, the state or the United States cannot be sued unless authorized by an express statute, yet they are nevertheless liable, and if suit could be brought judgment might be obtained.

It is stated in the majority opinion that the question here decided is new to this court. In this conclusion I cannot fully agree. In one sense, it is new; but in others it is hoary with age, and has been decided scores of times, and always contrary to the decision in this case. The case of White v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 138 Ala. 479, 35 So. 454; Leavell v. Western Kentucky Asylum, 122 Ky. 213, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 269, 91 S. W. 671, 12 Ann. Cas. 827, is a recent concrete case. It is true that the opinion in that case based the nonliability on the ground that the defendant was a state institution; but, as I have shown, purely charitable corporations are in the same category as state institutions, and are exempt from liability for the same reason,—that it is against public policy that the public should suffer on account of the negligence of those administering the charity or serving the public. Is it the public policy of this state that property granted or donated to the public for charitable purposes should be diverted from this benevolent and public use to a few individuals who may be injured in person, feelings, or estate, by the negligence of agents or servants who are administering the charity?

If the body or corporation is private in character, and is not serving the public, but only those it chooses, and is so serving them for profit, then, of course, it is not a public or a charitable institution, and the rule we are discussing has no application, though it be a hospital, a reform school, or other benevolent agency. If, however, the body or agency is serving the public, doing the work of the Sovereign, not for gain, but purely for charity, then it is no more liable for the torts of its agents or servants than the state or the United States are liable for the torts of an agent or servant. Such charitable bodies or corporations, when created by the Sovereign for this purpose, and so authorized to do this duty of the Sovereign, are only liable in those cases in which the Sovereign is liable. Corporations created solely for purely charitable purposes, which can do nothing except the work of the Sovereign in ministering charity to the subjects, are not, and ought not to be, liable for the negligence of its servants or agents, if the Sovereign itself would not be liable. This principle has been often stated and decided by L.R.A.1915D.

this court. In the case of State v. Hill, 54 Ala. 67, it is said: "It is plain," says Justice Story, "that the government itself is not responsible for the misfeasances or wrongs or negligences or omissions of duty of the subordinate officers or agents employed in the public service; for it does not undertake to guarantee to any persons the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it, in all its operations, in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests; and, indeed, laches are never imputable to the government." Story, Agency, § 319. For yet another reason, this must be true. Although the individuals who have the administration of public affairs may commit very gross outrages, it is not congruous with the ideas of order and duty that the state, the august Sovereign body whose servants they are, from which proceed all civil laws, and to which we owe unstinted respect and honor, should be held capable of doing wrongs for which she should be made answerable as for tortious injuries, in her own courts to her own children or subjects."

In the case of Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505, the distinction I am now trying to make was well made, as follows: "The question of this case is whether a municipal or public corporation is liable in damages for an injury resulting from the careless or negligent official conduct of one of its officers, in whose selection there was no negligence, and whose employment was the lawful and necessary means of executing a governmental power vested in it for the public benefit, and whose acts are not done under the supervision of the corporation. This question we decide in the negative. Because the corporation is, as to the passage of the ordinances and the appointment of the officer described in the pleadings, a government, exercising political power, it is irresponsible for the official misconduct alleged, upon the same principle which generally protects governments and public officers from liability for the misfeasances and malfeasances of persons necessarily employed under them in the public service. Story, Agency, §§ 319-321; Dunlap's Paley, Agency, 376. Municipal corporations, quoad hoc, stand upon the same foundation with public officers, counties, townships, and other quasi corporations, charged with some public duty, or invested with some portion of the authority of the government, where the employment of officers is necessary and lawful."

The law is thus stated by that almost omniscient law writer, Judge Story: "The rule which we have been considering, that where persons are acting as public agents they are responsible only for their own misfeasances and negligence, and (as we have seen) not for the misfeasances and negligences of those who are employed under them, if they have employed persons of suitable skill and ability, and have not co-operated in or authorized the wrong, is not confined to public officers or agents of the government, properly so called, in a strict legal sense; but it equally applies to other public officers or agents engaged in the public service, or acting for public objects, whether their appointments emanate from particular public bodies, or are derived from general laws, and whether those objects are of a local or of a general nature. For, if the doctrine of respondere superior were applied to such agencies, it would operate as a serious discouragement to persons who perform public functions, many of which are rendered gratuitously, and all of which are highly important to the public interest. In this respect, their case is distinguishable from that of persons acting for their own benefit, or employing others for their own benefit. But the party who suffers the injury under such circumstances is not without redress, for he may maintain a suit against the immediate wrongdoer. Upon this ground it has been held that the trustees of a public turnpike are not liable for the misfeasances or negligences of subagents employed by them in the performance of their duty, unless they have directed the act to be done, or have personally co-operated in the negligence." Agency, § 321, pp. 394-397.

I think these authorities conclusively show that purely charitable corporations, as to the question under consideration, are in the same category as municipalities, counties, states, etc. If so, then the White Case, 138 Ala. 479, 35 So. 454 (Leavell v. Western Kentucky Asylum, 122 Ky. 213, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 269, 91 S. W. 671, 12 Ann. Cas. 827), is decisive of this question, because it was there decided that the doctrine of respondere superior did not apply to that defendant. And, if not to that hospital, then it does not apply to this one. Both were created by the same Sovereign, and authorized to do only works of charity which would otherwise be done by the Sovereign. The mere fact that the state makes annual appropriations to the one, and not to the other, can make no difference. Each is an arm or agency of the state, created and authorized only to do public charity.

The intimation in the White Case, that the property of the insane hospital is the property of the state, is erroneous; it is no more the property of the state than is the property of the defendant corporation in this case. The state could not—if it L.R.A.1915D.

would—take from the insane hospital the property to which it has a vested title, nor divert it from the purposes for which it was granted. A grant of property once made absolute by the state to a public or a private corporation cannot be recalled. Vested rights, even of purely municipal corporations, are within the protection of the Federal Constitution. The insane hospital is therefore no more an arm or agency of the state than are various other hospitals, such as that for the deaf, dumb, and blind, or those created by acts similar to the one which created the corporation in question.

If, however, the state should create a private corporation and authorize it to do hospital work, or to care for the insane, for profit, then, of course, it would not be a charitable institution or corporation, and would not fall within the rule under consideration. If a charitable corporation should be authorized to do other things than charity, for a profit, then quoad hoc it would not be a charitable institution, and would be liable as are other private business corporations. The same is true of municipal corporations, or of even the state or the United States; but the property of no one of these, which is devoted exclusively to governmental public, or purely charitable, purposes, can be subjected to the payment of the liability.

This is true even of railroad corporations: Their depots, tracks, or other property necessary for the corporation in its service of the public, as authorized by its charter, cannot be subjected to the payment of judgments against the corporation. In other words, property devoted to a public use, whether for governmental, charitable, or other purposes, is not subject to execution or other legal process. The right of the individual to such property is secondary to the right of the public. This has been decided in this state too often, as to charitable institutions, municipal corporations, railroads, and other quasi public corporations, to need any citation of authorities.

Apply this undoubted doctrine to the case in hand, and what is the result? If the plaintiff shall succeed in recovering a judgment, if the pleas in this case are true, defendant has no property, and cannot acquire any property, which can be subjected to execution, sale, or other legal process. Even the English cases uphold this doctrine, those that hold the charity liable in certain cases. All the authorities in the world, so far as I can find, hold that property devoted to a public use cannot be sold under execution or other legal process, except the Rhode Island case, and this decision was so abhorrent to the people of Rhode Island that the very first legislature which assembled after its rendition overruled it by an express statute.

Municipalities, counties, and states can be compelled by mandamus to levy and collect taxes with which to pay such judgments; but charitable corporations have no such powers or rights,—there is no feasible means of obtaining satisfaction of judgments against them. For this reason the "trust fund doctrine" is strictly applicable, not on the ground that no liability can be fixed or fastened upon such corporations, but that, if so fixed or fastened, the judgment could not be satisfied, and obtaining it would be useless. And the law never requires, or even allows, the doing of a wholly useless thing. This will clearly appear from an examination of Fordyce's Case, 79 Ark. 559, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 96 S. W. 155. There, by negligence or fraud, the plaintiff had obtained a judgment against a public library, and sought by execution to enforce a sale of its property. The court enjoined the sale. The opinion was written by Judge Rose, one of the greatest lawyers America has produced, and is therefore one of the best considered cases in the world on the subject.

The following authorities are conclusive on this question: "A valid vested estate in trust (for charitable purposes) can never lapse or become forfeited by any misconduct in the trustee, or inability in the corporation to execute it, if such existed. Charity never fails; and it is the right as well as the duty of the Sovereign, by its courts and public officers, as also by the legislature (if needed), to have the charities properly administered." Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. 15, 19 L. ed. 57.

"If a defendant permits a judgment to go against him which he might have successfully defended, he may still claim his homestead and other exemptions. Though a judgment is rendered against a railway company, yet its franchise or other property necessary to the operation of its road cannot be sold under execution, because that would interfere with the public good. East Alabama R. Co. v. Doe, 114 U. S. 340, 29 L. ed. 136, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; 1 Freeman, Executions, § 179. The fact that a city or county is by statute liable to be sued does not necessarily imply that its property may be taken in execution. This has been repeatedly decided. Highway Comrs. v. Martin, 4 Mich. 557, 69 Am. Dec. 333; Waltham v. Kemper, 55 Ill. 346, 8 Am. Rep. 652; White v. Bond County, 58 Ill. 297, 11 Am. Rep. 65; Bussell v. Steuben, 57 Ill. 35; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 352, L.R.A.1915D.

23 Am. Rep. 332. The judgment is conclusive of the amount of the debt or demand, but it does not conclude the question as to the liability of any property to seizure under it. That is a question that may never arise. . . .

"In every city of any considerable size may be found one or more hospitals organized and maintained by the city for charitable purposes, and one or more hospitals maintained by private benevolence, under the control of trustees appointed or elected as the donors may direct or the statute may require. But a devise to a city for charitable purposes is valid. McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 367, 14 L. ed. 732; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 465, 16 L. ed. 701. Let us suppose then that a city had two hospitals, one created and supported out of the municipal revenues and another dependent upon a charitable gift and the donations of private individuals, both under the control of the city as a trustee. According to the doctrine contended for in behalf of the appellants, the former could not be sold under execution because it belonged to the city, and the later could be thus sold because the city was only a trustee; and this, notwithstanding both were charities instituted 'for the public good.' Such a distinction cannot be supported except by ignoring the general public interests common to both of these cases. The question is not as to who holds the property in trust, which is merely a personal consideration, a matter of policy and expediency; but it relates to the objects for which all charitable issues are created, and on account of which they are highly favored by law. A discrimination based, not on the character of the trust, but on the character of the trustee, would be false and misleading. The property of a public corporation, such as a railroad or bridge company, essential to the exercise of its corporate franchise and the performance of its duties toward the public, cannot, without statutory authority, be sold to satisfy a common-law judgment, either on execution, or in the pursuance of an order or decree of court." Fordyce v. Woman's Christian Nat. Library Asso. supra.

The opinion in this case seems to make a distinction between a pay patient in a charitable institution, and one who does not pay. The authorities all hold that there is no difference as to the liability of purely charitable institutions for the torts of their agents, as to pay and non-pay patients. This is well and truly stated in a note to the report of the case of Hordern v. Salvation Army, 139 Am. St. Rep. 899, as follows: "The authorities seem to agree that an institution otherwise charitable in its nature does not lose its character as such, and its consequent exemption from responsibility for the torts and negligence of its servants and agents, from the fact that persons availing themselves of its benefits, at least such as are pecuniarily able to do so, contribute money to pay the expenses of the institution; their contributions going to the charity itself, and not being a source of private gain to the founders or managers. This has been held true in the case of hospitals and institutions of learning, as will hereafter be seen. It has been decided that an institution does not lose its charitable character so as to be liable for the death of a child through the negligence of an experienced employee, merely because the mother of the child contributed to the expense of its care at the institution. Cunningham v. Sheltering Arms, 135 App. Div. 178, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1033."

Most all the cases are reviewed or cited in the opinion and notes to this case.

Of course, if a hospital or an educational institution is operated for private gain and profit, then it is not a charitable institution, and the doctrine or rule being considered does not apply. The very definition of a "charitable trust" or "charitable institution" is that it is for the use and benefit of the public, and not for that of particular individuals. A "charity" is a gift to be applied for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, thereby relieving the government pro tanto of the discharge of its duties as to educating the mines, training the hands, improving the morals, and relieving the pains and suffering, of such indefinite number. If it be not a gift, or if it be a gift to a definite number, then it is not a charity, but is a private business, and is in the same category as other private business corporations. To be a charitable trust there must be a gift by the Sovereign or by individuals, and it must be for a public purpose, either local or general. The gift must extend to the poor as well as to the rich. Charitable uses or trusts may extend to almost anything which tends to promote the well-doing or the well-being of the genus homo. It must, however, be to an indefinite number, and be for a purpose which the government or Sovereign ought otherwise to do, in order that it be protected from spoliation or diversion, as other property is protected which is devoted to a public use, such as city halls, courthouses, state capitols, universities, public hospitals, etc. L.R.A.1915D.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. T. BELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CORA ROSIGNOL

(— Ga. —, 84 S. E. 542.)

Husband and wife — Liability of wife for groceries.

Where a married woman personally applies to a tradesman for the purchase of groceries, stating that she wishes to open an account in her own name, and directs the plaintiff to charge the goods to her, and where in pursuance of this arrangement the goods are delivered at her home and charged to her, she will be personally liable therefor, notwithstanding the legal obligation of the husband to support his wife, and the groceries being such as would be a proper support to be provided by the husband for the family.

(February 11, 1915.)

Headnote by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — Liability of married woman for necessities purchased by her.

This note is supplementary to the note appended to Clark v. Tenneson, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 426.

In equity.

Supplementing 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 426.

In Bowen v. Daugherty, 168 N. C. 242, 84 S. E. 265, the court said obiter that if a husband liable for necessities furnished to his wife should fail to pay, or because of his estate being insolvent payment could not be enforced, authority is to the effect that an equity might arise to the creditor enabling him to collect from the wife's estate, but otherwise, and except under such conditions, the debt is and continues to be that of the husband, and enforceable against him or his estate.

Under general enabling statutes.

Supplementing 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 427.

Under a statute providing in effect that except in conveyances of her real estate and in case of contract with her husband, a married woman was authorized to contract and deal as if she were unmarried, it is held that the estate of the wife was not liable for necessities which were supplied to her when she was living with her husband, without any express promise on her part to pay for them. Bowen v. Daugherty, supra.

Under a statute which completely emancipates a married woman so that she may deal and contract without her husband's consent as freely as if she were unmarried, except in dealing with her husband, she may purchase necessities on her own credit, and the creditor may recover for them with-

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment sustaining a motion for nonsuit in a suit to recover an amount alleged to be due for groceries. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph W. Humphries and John D. Humphries, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant was liable for the groceries.

Freeman v. Coleman, 86 Ga. 590, 12 S. E. 1064; Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393, 13 S. E. 566; Villa Rica Lumber Co. v. Paratain, 92 Ga. 370, 17 S. E. 340; Chastain v. Peak, 111 Ga. 889, 36 S. E. 967; Goodson v. Powell, 9 Ga. App. 497, 71 S. E. 765.

out making the husband a party defendant; and in such an action, brought solely against the wife, it is improper to permit the husband to make a counterclaim against the plaintiff. Lipinsky v. Revell, 107 N. C. 508, 83 S. E. 820.

Under special statute.

Supplementing 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 430.

The statutes of some states expressly provide that the separate estate of a wife shall be liable for necessities.

Thus, the statute of California makes the separate property of the wife acquired by her after marriage, subject to debts for necessities which are furnished to either husband or wife while living together. Evans v. Noonan, 20 Cal. App. 288, 128 Pac. 794.

Necessity for express contract.

Supplementing 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 431.

A married woman who is living with her husband cannot be held liable on an account for necessities furnished herself and children unless she expressly contracted or signified that she intended that she herself, and not her husband, would assume the obligation. Oliver v. Webb, 12 Ga. App. 216, 76 S. E. 1081.

Under a statute making the funeral expenses of a deceased person a preferred charge against his estate, a mere direction by a widow to an undertaker to furnish such service and supplies is presumed to be made on the credit of the estate, and nothing short of an order and an express promise by the widow to pay for the furnishings would create a primary liability on her part. Butterworth v. Brede-meyer, 74 Wash. 524, 133 Pac. 1061.

In Mooney v. McMahon, 83 N. J. L. 120, 83 Atl. 504, in which the plaintiff sought to recover against the estate of her stepmother for services rendered by her in the household maintained by her father and stepmother, to perform which she had abandoned a lucrative position upon the written request of her stepmother, it was held that she could not recover against the stepmother's estate, the court saying that to fix such a liability there must be either an express contract to pay out of her own

Messrs. Smith & Hastings, for defendant in error:

A married woman cannot be held liable on account of necessities furnished for the support of the family, unless it appears that she expressly contracted to be liable therefor.

Freeman v. Holmes, 62 Ga. 556; Rushing v. Clancy, 92 Ga. 769, 19 S. E. 711; Oliver v. Webb, 12 Ga. App. 216, 76 S. E. 1081.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a grocery merchant, brought suit against the defendant, a married woman, to recover upon an alleged indebtedness estate, or circumstances clearly showing the assumption of an individual liability on her part, exclusive of that of her husband.

In H. Leonard & Sons v. Stowe, 166 Mich. 681, 132 N. W. 464, a joint action against a husband and wife in which judgment was taken upon the pleadings against the wife and judgment rendered in favor of the husband upon a written contract, made by the wife alone, for the purchase of goods, the court said it seemed unnecessary to state that in the face of the written contract plaintiff was not permitted to say that the goods were in fact agreed to be sold upon the credit of the husband, and that, assuming that the wife had authority, express or implied to bind her husband by purchases of goods, she did not undertake to bind him.

What is sufficient to show a contract to bind herself.

Supplementing 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 432.

While a wife may by agreement charge herself personally for necessities purchased by her for the family while living with her husband, the presumption is that such purchases were made by her as agent of the husband, and that he alone is liable; so, where the proof goes only to the extent of the showing that the wife came to plaintiff's store and ordered groceries, that they were delivered to her home and the bills sent to her, and that when plaintiff asked the husband for payment, he replied that his wife said she had no money yet and plaintiff would have to wait,—it was held that the wife was not liable personally for the debt, and, the husband being primarily liable, an oral promise to pay made by the wife after the debt was incurred would be merely a promise to pay the debt of another, and not binding upon her. Speckman v. Foote, 138 N. Y. Supp. 380.

In Wilder v. Brokaw, 141 App. Div. 811, 126 N. Y. Supp. 932, it is held that a wife living apart from her husband may bind herself by a contract for necessities, the question being merely as to whether credit was extended to her or to her husband, and where the evidence is conflicting on that question it should be submitted to a jury.

R. L. S.

for groceries. The defendant pleaded that all the purchases were made for her husband's account, as head of the family, which was well known to the plaintiff. She did not deny that the merchandise was furnished, or that it was worth the amounts charged. On the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence he was nonsuited. The testimony submitted by him tended to show that he was a grocery merchant. The defendant applied to him for credit, stating that she wanted to open an account with him in her own name; that her husband was a good, easy fellow and allowed himself to be imposed upon, and she ran the house herself. She directed the plaintiff to charge the goods in her name. The plaintiff had heard that the husband was a bankrupt at the time his wife opened the account. In supplying the goods he made out with each delivery a duplicate statement, one of which was delivered with the goods and the other was kept by him. These statements were made out on a printed blank and the line for the name was preceded by the capital letter, "M." On many of the statements was written the name "Rosignol;" on many, the letters "RS" followed the capital letter "M," and these letters were followed by the name of Rosignol; on others appeared only the address, "106 Cherokee Ave.," without any name. When the plaintiff called at defendant's home, he always talked to the defendant about the account and asked her for the money. On some occasions the defendant's husband would be at home and would meet plaintiff at the door and would say, "You want to see Cora." The defendant made the payments on the account. The husband brought him one payment, and said that his wife had sent the money to be credited on her account. The groceries were furnished for the defendant, her husband and child. The plaintiff knew that the defendant owned a vacant lot, and that the husband worked sometimes for railroads, and that his family lived with him.

There can be no doubt that a married woman on her own credit may, by express contract, bind herself for the purchase of necessities for herself and family. It is true that the husband is bound to support his wife and family, but this legal obligation does not prevent the wife from buying on her own responsibility groceries for the support of the family, and personally agreeing to pay for them. In the instant case it is inferable from the evidence that, unattended by her husband, the wife applied to the merchant for a line of credit to be extended individually to her, that the credit was extended to her, and not to her husband, and that the goods were furnished to her on her credit. This amounts to an ex-L.R.A.1915D.

press contract on her part to buy the goods as an individual.

The facts in the cases of Freeman v. Holmes, 62 Ga. 556, and Rushing v. Clancy, 92 Ga. 769, 19 S. E. 711, are dissimilar from those of the case at bar. In the former case a husband accompanied his wife and child to the office of a dentist, and introduced them to the dentist. Under these circumstances it was held there could be no recovery against the wife for dentistry done for herself and child, especially where it appeared that the dentist knew nothing about her having any separate estate, and impliedly gave credit to the husband, and not the wife. In the latter case, the wife and her husband applied for board, but the husband took no part in the negotiations, and it was held that, in the absence of an express promise by the wife to charge herself or her separate estate, the board contracted for being such as her husband is bound to furnish to her and her children, the husband, and not the wife, was liable therefor. In both cases the husband was present when the services and board were contracted for, and in the absence of an express contract by the wife to pay for same, the implication was that the credit was extended to the husband. In the instant case there was evidence that the wife, without being attended by her husband, applied for credit and requested the goods be charged to her. The court erred in sustaining the motion for nonsuit.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES A. PRICHARD

v.

FREELAND OIL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 84 S. E. 945.

Mines — oil and gas lease — definitions.

1. The words "gas well," employed in a lease for oil and gas providing that the lessor should be paid "three hundred ($300) dollars per year for gas from each and

Headnotes by MILLER, P.

Note. — What constitutes a gas well within an oil and gas lease.

The definition of a gas well as given in PRICHARD v. FREELAND OIL Co., includes not only a well which produces gas "in such quantities, considering the time, place, circumstances, and conditions" that the les-every gas well drilled on said premises; said payment to be made on each well within sixty days after each well is completed, and to be paid yearly thereafter while it is a gas well," interpreted in the light of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties, their relation to each other, the objects and purposes of entering into the contract, and what they subsequently did under the contract, mean a gas well which, considering its location with reference to any market for gas, its capacity as a gas producer, can be profitably operated as such, and not a well producing oil in large quantities and some gas, and operated for many years by lessee as an oil well, and without demand for gas rental by lessor.

Same — rentals — use of gas.

2. The fact that some gas is found in one or more of the sands penetrated in drilling such well, and is afterwards run from the casing head into a gas line from wells on an adjoining lease operated by the same lessee, and the gas from all utilized in operating the wells on both properties, according to a custom prevailing among oil operators, does not render the lessee in such a lease liable to the lessor for annual gas rentals provided for in such lease.

(December 22, 1914.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marion County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for the recovery of rentals alleged to be due under an oil and gas lease. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Neely & Lively for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. B. L. Butcher and Harry Shaw for defendant in error.

Miller, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action by lessor against lessee to recover gas rentals alleged to have accrued to him from an alleged gas well drilled on his land, under his lease, the covenant of the lease relied on as the basis of his action is substantially as follows: "In consideration of the premises, the said party of the second part covenants and agrees, 1st, to deliver to the credit of the first party, his heirs or assigns, free of cost in the pipe line . . . one eighth ($\frac{1}{8}$) part of all oil produced and saved from the leased premises; and to pay three hundred (\$300) dollars per year for the gas from each and every gas well drilled on said premises; said payment to be made on each well within sixty days after well is completed, and to be paid yearly thereafter while it is a gas well."

On the trial plaintiff obtained a verdict and judgment for $2,669.13, and to that judgment defendant obtained this writ of error.

The lease is dated October 14, 1903. The see can, by reasonable effort, market or sell the gas with reasonable profit, but is also made to include wells which produce gas in such quantities that the lessee can use it on the premises with reasonable profit. There seems to be some disagreement between that case and Taylor v. Peerless Ref. Co. 14 Ohio C. C. 315, 7 Ohio C. D. 368, with respect to wells which produce gas in quantities sufficient to be used on the premises, the latter case holding that an oil-producing well which gives off enough gas to run boilers on the premises, but not enough to market, is not a gas well in the general sense in which it is used in a lease providing for the payment of a certain rental for each gas well located on the leased property. The latter case, however, does not make it clear just how much gas was used on the premises, and it may be that in this case there was not such a quantity that the lessee could be said to have used it with reasonable profit, as prescribed in the definition in PRICHARD v. FREELAND OIL CO.

No other cases have been found which attempt to define the term in the general sense in which it is used in gas leases. In a few cases, however, questions have arisen as to what kind of wells will satisfy specific clauses in oil and gas leases referring to the construction of wells. In these cases the wording on the part of the leases under L.R.A.1916D.

consideration governs the conclusions of the courts.

In Hazel Green Oil & Gas Co. v. Collier, 130 Ky. 132, 110 S. W. 343 (rehearing denied in 130 Ky. 139, 112 S. W. 1090), the sinking of a test well within one year, as required by the terms of an oil and gas lease, is held not to be sufficient to satisfy a clause providing for the extension of the term of the lease if "wells are completed during said term." The court says: "Reading these provisions of the lease together, we think it manifest that the writing draws a distinction between the test well, which it provides for, and other wells. In other words, the expression, 'provided wells are completed during said term,' means that other wells are to be completed during the term, besides the test well, and that the mere sinking of a test well during the term, without marketing the gas found in it, does not entitle the lessee to an extension of the term."

In Federal Betterment Co. v. Blaes, 75 Kan. 69, 88 Pac. 555, where a hole was drilled to the depth of 1,000 feet and then plugged up without being shot, it was held that a well had been drilled within the terms of the oil and gas lease providing for the forfeiture of the lease "if at any time after a well or wells have been drilled, six months shall elapse without any revenue being received by the lessors." E. L. D.

well in question, the only one drilled on the land, was begun soon after the date of the lease and completed about August, 1904, and thereafter and up to the date of this suit, August 24, 1911, it was operated as an oil well, having produced some fifteen thousand barrels of oil, one eighth of which was delivered to the plaintiff lessor in accordance with the covenants of the lease.

Outside of his brother, who he says was a member of defendant corporation, but in what capacity he does not say, nor does it appear, and which he says was a year or two after the well was drilled, plaintiff does not pretend to have ever mentioned the subject of gas rentals, until about the time of bringing this suit. He never presented any bill, or made any demand for the gas rental. He says that about two years before giving his testimony on the trial at November term, 1912, he wrote the defendant company that he intended to make a demand for this rental, but did not tell them he expected to demand pay for five or six years back rent.

The declaration has the common counts in assumpsit, without bill of particulars, and a special count demands annual gas rentals alleged to have accrued to plaintiff under said lease, beginning with the ——— day of October, 1904, to and including the ——— day of October, 1910, at $300 per year, with interest on each of said payments from the day they became due respectively until paid, aggregating the sum of $2,100. The damage laid in the writ and declaration is $2,500.

The sole question presented on the trial by pleadings and proofs, and by instructions given and refused, and motion for a new trial, denied, is, what is a "gas well" within the meaning of the contract and the intentment of the parties?

One of the cardinal rules of construction, where there is ambiguity or uncertainty in the meaning of the words of the contract, is to take the instrument by its four corners and read and interpret it in the light of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of making the contract, their relation to each other, the objects and purposes of entering into the contract, and their actions and conduct at the time and subsequently, and the things done under the contract in the execution thereof.

Literally speaking, perhaps, a gas well is any well which produces gas. But it cannot be supposed that the parties to this lease meant a well which produced gas in such quantity that when ignited it should burn like a mere taper on the sacred altar, or, as sometimes happens, should send upward a screaming, hissing shaft of flame, L.R.A.1915D.

uncontrolled, and uncontrollable, and finally die, like some great giant, of self-exhaustion, a total loss to all concerned. Surely neither of these extremes could have been contemplated. Manifestly the parties contemplated a well having such a pressure and volume of gas, and considered with respect to its location, its proximity to the market, as could be operated profitably, and the gas utilized either on the leased premises, or disposed of commercially to others. True, we decided in McGraw Oil & Gas Co. v. Kennedy, 65 W. Va. 595, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, 64 S. E. 1019, with respect to a lease for oil and gas for five years "and as long thereafter as oil or gas, or either of them, is produced by the party of the second part," that the lessor could not forfeit it because he thought gas was not being produced in paying quantity, the lessee claiming that it was, and being willing to pay the stipulated sum for the well as a gas well. We held that it was for the lessee to say whether gas was being produced in paying quantities, acting in good faith. The ground of that decision was that as the lessor got the price of the gas well, he ought not to be heard to complain, if the lessee was willing to pay in good faith therefor, and to protect his lease for oil and gas from forfeiture.

To the same effect is Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller-Sibley Oil Co. 53 W. Va. 501, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027, 44 S. E. 433, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 656. But in Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 56 W. Va. 402, 49 S. E. 548, involving a co-operating contract, under which, if an oil well was developed by either, the oil company was to get the well, by paying the cost, and if a gas well was developed, the gas company should get it by paying the cost thereof, we decided, in effect, that "gas well" in the contract meant a well which developed gas in paying quantities, not a mere pittance of gas, or in a quantity that could not be marketed and used profitably by the owner.

In Roberts v. Ft. Wayne Gas Co. 40 Ind. App. 528, 82 N. E. 558, the lessor sued lessee for gas rentals alleged to be due him under a lease for oil and gas providing, if "gas is found in sufficient quantities to market the same," the lessor should be paid $100 per annum in advance for each gas well drilled, and that operations, should be commenced and four wells completed within four months from date, or all paid for after that time, and that if lessee should fail to perform such work or to pay the rental, he should in lieu thereof, and in full for damages for his default, pay annually during the term $100, for each of such wells. The lessee drilled the four wells within the time prescribed, and for a time produced gas in paying quantities. He also drilled an oil well. When the gas wells ceased to produce gas in paying quantities he stopped paying the annual rentals therefor, but because the oil well continued to produce oil, did not surrender the lease. The appellate court held that it was necessary for plaintiff to aver and prove that the gas wells continued to produce gas in paying quantities for the period for which rental was claimed; that the lease sued on was a lease to take the profit from land, and when the profit became exhausted the liability to pay the consideration therefor was abrogated. Citing numerous cases from Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Ohio.

Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Wilhelm, 44 Ind. App. 100, 86 N. E. 86, was an action for gas rentals under a lease providing that if gas was found in sufficient quantities to market, lessor's compensation should be a certain sum per well. The complaint charged that gas was found in sufficient quantities to be marketed, and to be piped away to market, and that there were good markets within 10 miles, and others farther away, where gas could have been delivered and sold at a profit to defendant. The jury were properly instructed, so the appellate court held, that in order to recover plaintiff must, by his evidence, affirmatively answer the question: "Did said wells, or either of them, produce gas in sufficient quantities to enable the defendant (appellant) to pipe the same away to market therefor, and realize therefrom and thereon a fair, reasonable, and just profit, everything considered?"

Now, while the lease in that case provided for payment of gas rentals if gas were found in sufficient quantities to market,—a provision not in terms contained in the lease involved here,—was not the plaintiff here bound to allege and prove that gas was produced in such quantities, considering the time, place, circumstances, and conditions referred to, that defendant did or could by reasonable effort have marketed, sold, or used the gas, with some reasonable profit? We think this must have been contemplated by the parties when they made their contract. And as to plaintiff, we have him admitting on cross-examination, that his understanding, at the time, was that a gas well meant one that would be profitable to operate.

It is contended, however, that as the evidence shows the well was inclosed by a casing head, the gas confined, and turned into a circuit line, and connected with other wells producing gas on an adjoining lease operated by defendant, and the gas from this line used in operating the wells on both leases, regardless of whether the gas from plaintiff's lease escaped to and was consumed on the adjoining lease, or vice versa, defendant should be required to pay the gas rentals for all the years covered by the declaration. We cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that this is a just or reasonable interpretation of the contract. We find little in the adjudged cases throwing light upon this question. There is much evidence in the record showing and tending to show a custom prevailing in this state not to charge the lessee with gas when produced in small quantities along with oil, and used for operating the well on the premises, unless the contract specifically provides otherwise. In Wright v. Warrior Run Coal Co. 182 Pa. 514, 38 Atl. 491, 19 Mor. Min. Rep. 102, it was decided, that under the custom which prevails in the anthracite coal region, coal used by a lessee in the operation of the furnaces of the mine is not subject to royalties, unless provision is made therefor in the lease, and we think this rule ought to be made applicable to the production of oil and gas under an oil and gas lease. Applying this rule in the case in hand, what are the facts disclosed by the record? It is not alleged nor proven that defendant ever sold a foot of gas or reaped any profit from the gas produced from the well. The evidence is overwhelming that when the well in question was drilled, in 1904, there was practically no market for gas in the vicinity of this well, and there was absolutely no market for gas produced from wells of its caliber. Not a witness swears that defendant by proper effort could have sold this gas locally or to the large gas companies engaged in piping and marketing gas commercially. A well was drilled on an adjoining tract about the same time, by another company, producing oil and about the same quantity of gas from the same sands, and one of the owners of that well swears its operation as a gas well was not even considered; that there was no market for the gas produced from such wells in that vicinity. Besides, defendant company about the same time drilled other wells on the Michael lease adjoining plaintiff's land and got gas along with oil in some of them, particularly No. 5, which they say was much stronger in gas than the well on plaintiff's land, and which they made the greatest effort to dispose of as a gas well to the gas companies, but without success; that these gas companies declined to take gas from wells producing gas along with oil. There is some evidence that by using an extra string of casing in a well producing oil and gas from different sands, the gas and oil can be kept separate, but that the casing is very expensive, and unless the well is of such caliber as to be profitable, and there is a market for it, the operator would not be justified in incurring the expense of putting in a double line of iron casing.

But it is contended that defendant connected up this well by a circuit pipe line with the gas wells on the Michael lease, and used gas from the Prichard well to operate the wells on the Michael lease, and burned it in a couple of houses on the Michael land. Now the facts are that gas from the wells on the Michael lease was first piped to the Prichard well in 1905, and used to clean out that well, and to run the tools for a fishing job defendant had on hand at that well. After the work of cleaning out the well and the fishing job had been completed, that well was connected to the pipe line that had brought the gas from the other wells, and all run together for the mutual benefit of both leases, and the testimony of defendant shows, or tends to show, that the wells on the Michael lease, so joined up, produced more gas than the well on the Prichard, and that in fact the Prichard well got more gas from the Michael lease than it got from the Prichard, and that, therefore, defendant got no kind of profit, from the gas from the Prichard, as it had gas enough from the Michael lease to operate the wells on that property.

But the strongest phase of the case in favor of defendant is, that the well was operated not as a gas well, but as an oil well. There is little evidence that anyone connected with the property ever thought of treating it as a gas well, until the oil production had run so low as to bring small returns to lessor or lessee, and gas had come more into demand. Then it was, after seven years of operating the well as an oil well, plaintiff seems to have conceived the notion that his well was also a gas well, and that he ought to have the back gas rental, as well as the oil royalty; wherefore his suit.

We do not think a case has been made entitling plaintiff to the gas rental, and we are of opinion to reverse the judgment and remand the case for a new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied April 20, 1915.
L.R.A.1915D.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

EMMA J. CORDUAN, Appt.,

v.
LEONARD J. MCCLOUD.

(— N. J. —, 93 Atl. 724.)

Trial — jury — good faith of tender of marriage.

1. A tender of performance of a promise of marriage must be made in good faith, and if, in any view of the testimony, the good faith of the tender is questionable, then it is a question of fact for the jury.

Breach of promise — influence of intention.

2. In an action for breach of promise to marry, an unequivocal intention on defendant's part not to perform his contract may be inferred from his conduct.

Same — time for action.

3. Where no time of performance of a marriage contract is fixed, an action for breach thereof may be brought after a reasonable time.

Contract to marry — necessity of writing.

4. It is presumed that a marriage contract, where no time is fixed, is not intended to be performed more than a year after its making, and therefore it does not fall within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise not to be performed within a year to be in writing; and, as such a contract is possible of performance within a year, a jury would have a right to infer that the defendant did not intend to perform it, when in fact he permitted five years to elapse without having done so.

Breach of promise — defense — tender.

5. Defendant's offer of marriage after breach is, as a rule, no defense.

Same — termination of contract.

6. An offer on the part of the defendant to fulfil the promise of marriage after his refusal to do so, or a renewed offer in his answer or in open court, is not a defense unless it is made bona fide, and unless, also, the plaintiff has not signified an intention to regard the contract as at an end. These questions are questions of fact, and are for the jury.

(Black, Terhune, and Williams, JJ., dissent.)

(March 1, 1915.)

Headnotes by WALKER, C.

Note. — Promise of marriage as within statutes of frauds as to contracts not to be performed within a year.

Most of the authorities on the question whether a promise of marriage is within the statute of frauds as to contracts not to be performed within a year have simply applied the general rule as to the construction of this clause of the statute of frauds.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a nonsuit granted by the Hudson County Circuit of the Supreme Court in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a promise of marriage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William D. Edwards, and William G. McLoughlin, with Messrs. Edwards & Smith, for appellant:

Upon the evidence as to the alleged "tender" of marriage by the defendant on the evening of January 15, 1913, a question of fact was presented which the trial court had no right to withdraw from the jury, whether the "tender" was such as would fulfil defendant's engagement.

38 Cyc. 166, 167; 21 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 554; Kaufman v. Bush, 69 N. J. L. 645, 56 Atl. 291, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 137; Hayward v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 74 N. J. L. 678, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 65 Atl. 737; Laragay v. East Jersey Pipe Co. 77 N. J. L. 516, 72 Atl. 57; Western Electrical Instrument Co. v. Benecke, 82 N. J. L. 445, 82 Atl. 878, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 11; Arrowsmith v. Van Harlingen, 1 N. J. L. 26; Shotwell v. Dennman, 1 N. J. L. 174; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 31; Nantz v. Lober, 1 Duv. 304; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149; McPherson v.

In 20 Cyc. 206, it is said generally with reference to this clause of the statute: "A verbal contract which is susceptible of complete fulfilment within one year is not void under the statute of frauds because it is merely not likely or merely not expected to be performed within that time, or even because it is probable that it will not be so performed. The question is not what the probable, expected, or actual performance of the contract may be, but whether, according to the reasonable interpretation of its terms, it requires that it should not be performed within the year. . . . The contingency upon which the performance of the contract depends must be such as, in the ordinary course of nature, is likely to occur within a year."

Under this general rule, the agreements in most of the cases have been held not to be within the statute, and the court was not called upon to decide whether a contract to marry was in its nature such as to come within the statute of frauds if it was not to be performed within a year. In the few cases in which the latter question has arisen, the courts have disagreed.

On the one hand, it has been held that a contract to marry, not to be performed within one year, is within that clause of the statute of frauds providing that no action shall be brought upon an agreement that is not to be performed within one year from its making, unless in writing. Nichols v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 373.

And in Ullman v. Meyer, 10 Fed. 241, 10 Abb. N. C. 281, it was held that a contract to marry, to be performed more than a year after it was made, was within the statute of frauds in New York; and it was held also that such contracts were not taken out of the statute by reason of the fact that, in the clause of the statute referring to agreements made upon consideration of marriage, there was an exception of mutual promise to marry, the exception being held to refer only to the clause in which it was found.

In Ullman v. Meyer, supra, the court said that as an original proposition it might be debated whether the statute of frauds was ever intended to apply to agreements to marry; that they were agreements of a private and confidential nature, which at L.R.A.1915D.

the time the English statute was passed were not actionable at law; but that, nevertheless, at an early day after actions on such contracts became cognizable in courts of law, the defense of the statute of frauds was interposed under that clause of the statute which denies the right of action upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage unless the agreement is in writing, and, though it was held that such clause related only to agreements for marriage settlements, there seems to have been no doubt in the minds of the judges that promises to marry were within the general purview of the statute.

Also in Derby v. Phelps, 2 N. H. 515, it was held that a contract to marry which was not to be performed till the expiration of about five years was within the statute of frauds. The court said that had the agreement been that the contract should be fulfilled on a certain event which might or might not have happened within a year, but which in fact did not happen till after a year, the agreement would not have been within the statute; but that such was not the tenor of the agreement. It was said also that such contracts cannot be "taken out of the statute by the circumstance that when the original statute of frauds passed under Charles the II., these contracts were not sued at law, but were merely the subject of proceedings to compel a performance of them in the ecclesiastical courts. For numerous kinds of contracts, not then in use and not then prosecuted in the common-law courts, have since had birth under the new exigencies and improvements of society, and are all brought to the test of the general provisions of the statute."

The weight of authority, it was said in Barge v. Haslam, 63 Neb. 296, 88 N. W. 516, affirmed on rehearing in 65 Neb. 659, 91 N. W. 528, seems in favor of the proposition that mutual promises to marry are within the inhibition of the provision of the statute of frauds avoiding contracts unless in writing which by their terms are not to be performed within a year. On a later appeal, 69 Neb. 644, 96 N. W. 245, the court, without deciding whether the instructions of the trial court were correct that a contract to marry, to be performed Wiswell, 16 Neb. 625, 21 N. W. 391; Fisk v. Holden, 17 Tex. 408.

Nor was the trial court justified in refusing to permit the jury to determine whether, upon the evidence, the plaintiff really rejected this "tender of marriage" of January 15, 1913.

Shotwell v. Dennman, 1 N. J. L. 174; Kaufman v. Bush, 69 N. J. L. 645, 56 Atl. 291, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 137; Hayward v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 74 N. J. L. 678, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 65 Atl. 737.

Reasonable inference could be drawn from the evidence that plaintiff's cause of action set up in her complaint was complete, because a reasonable time for performance had already elapsed, before January 15, 1913.

more than a year after its making, was within the statute of frauds, held that such a contract, if within the statute, would not be taken out of the statute by an oral acknowledgment made within one year from the time the contract was to be performed.

In Paris v. Strong, 51 Ind. 339, the court said: "We do not doubt but that a contract of marriage, not to be performed within a year, is within the statute, as well as a contract on any other subject. But the evidence does not clearly show that the contract might not have been performed within the year. It was to be performed either in or within three years. If it might be performed at any time within the three years, and consequently within one year, it would not be within the statute."

It seems to be assumed in Daggett v. Wallace, 75 Tex. 352, 16 Am. St. Rep. 908, 13 S. W. 49, that a contract to marry, if not to be performed within one year, is within the statute of frauds.

On the other hand, in Brick v. Gannar, 36 Hun, 52, it was held that a contract to marry, to be performed more than one year from the time it was made, was not within the statute of frauds in New York. The court called attention to the title of the statute, which reads, "Of fraudulent conveyances and contracts relative to goods, chattels, and things in action;" and held that its provisions referred only to the contracts embraced within the title. The decision in Ullman v. Meyer, supra, was disapproved, it being said that the court in that case overlooked the title of the statute, and the cases of Derby v. Phelps, and Nichols v. Weaver, supra, and Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 443, were distinguished, on the ground that the titles of the statutes of frauds in those states were different, the title to the statute in New Hampshire being "Actions," in Kansas "Frauds and Perjuries," and in Maine, "Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries in Contracts and Actions Founded Thereon." The court said that it was the settled law of New York that the title may be resorted to to aid in discovering the design of the legislature and to limit the meaning of general

5 Cyc. 1001; Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 697; Spencer, Dom. Rel. § 19; Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. § 188; Coil v. Wallace, 24 N. J. L. 291; Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 443; Paris v. Strong, 51 Ind. 339; Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495; McConahey v. Griffey, 82 Iowa, 504, 48 N. W. 983; Clements v. Moore, 11 Ala. 35; Wagenseller v. Simmers, 97 Pa. 465; Clement v. Skinner, 72 Vt. 159, 47 Atl. 788; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275.

Defendant's tender of marriage after the commencement of this action is no defense.

Smith v. Compton, 67 N. J. L. 548, 58 L.R.A. 480, 52 Atl. 386; Holloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa, 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208; Connolly v. Bollinger, 67 W. Va. 30, 67 S.

words, and that it was evident that if the above cases were well decided, they had no application to this case.

In Brick v. Gannar, supra, the court said that contracts of marriage were not actionable at law before the English statute of frauds was passed, but were subjects of proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts to compel specific performance, and that such contracts therefore were not within the mischiefs which caused the passage of the statute; that although actions at law have long been maintainable in England on such contracts, no defense based upon the statute of frauds has ever been interposed in that country as far as the reported cases disclose.

Brick v. Gannar, supra, was approved in Nearing v. Van Fleet, 151 N. Y. 643, 45 N. E. 1133.

So, assuming that the contract of marriage in question was not to be performed until after the expiration of three years, the court in Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 294, 47 L.R.A. 385, 45 Atl. 459, held that a contract to marry was not of such a nature as to come within the provision of the statute of frauds requiring agreements not to be performed within a year to be in writing. The English statute of frauds was in force in Maryland, by virtue of provisions of the Declaration of Rights. As grounds for the decision, the court stated that at the time the English statute of frauds was adopted, no action was maintainable in the common-law courts on an agreement to marry, and that the contract to marry is so essentially different from every other contract known to the law, that it could not be assumed that Parliament by the use of the words "any agreement," in that provision of the statute of frauds requiring any agreement that is not to be performed within a year to be in writing, intended to include a contract to marry.

There was evidence, however, in Lewis v. Tapman, supra, that the contract to marry was to be performed "within three years," and it was held that even if a contract to marry was within the statute of frauds, the contract in this case was not within the

E. 71, 20 Ann. Cas. 1350; 5 Cyc. 1004; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275; Liefmann v. Soloman, 7 Abb. Pr. 409, note; Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. 254.

Mr. Frank Koch, for appellee:

Plaintiff should have been nonsuited on the opening, or when the defendant tendered himself ready to perform his contract.

In order to permit a recovery it must appear by the conduct of the defendant, or by his declared intention, that he had made a breach of the contract.

Coil v. Wallace, 24 N. J. L. 291.

Walker, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action at law for a breach of promise of marriage. The complaint statute, as there was a possibility of its being performed within a year.

In Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495, it was held that a contract to marry when the defendant returned from a whaling voyage, on which he expected to be absent for about eighteen months, was not within the statute of frauds requiring an agreement not to be performed within one year to be in writing, as it did not appear that the voyage would necessarily occupy more than a year. This conclusion was reached although the voyage did in fact take more than a year.

And in Huggins v. Carey, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 390, it was held that a complaint alleging a contract to marry as soon as the defendant could have a suitable home erected and so wind up his business affairs that he could quit work and take a wedding trip did not state a contract void within the statute of frauds as not to be performed within a year.

So, in Clark v. Reese, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 64 S. W. 783, it was held that the statute of frauds did not apply to a contract to marry when the defendant had built an addition to his place of business, or when the plaintiff had given up her business and moved into a house owned by the defendant, since, so far as appeared, the contract might have been performed within a year.

A promise to marry within four years is not within the statute of frauds. Lawrence v. Cooke, supra. The court said: "It is obvious that this promise might have been performed within a year; and it does not appear that the parties understood that it was not to be performed within that time. It is well settled that such a promise need not be in writing."

So, a contract to marry "in a year," the understanding being that it should be "a year's engagement," is not within the statute of frauds, as an agreement not to be performed within a year. Smith v. Jamieson, 17 Ont. Rep. 626.

And a contract to marry, for the performance of which no definite time is fixed, is not within the provision of the statute of frauds relating to contracts not to be performed within a year, if the contract alleged that the promise was made on July 4, 1908, which was renewed subsequently; that plaintiff relied upon these promises, remained and continued sole and unmarried, and had been and still was ready and willing to marry the defendant. Breach alleged, and damages in the sum of $50,000 demanded.

Defendant in his answer admitted the promise and its repeated renewals, but denied that the plaintiff had been at all times, and was still, ready and willing to marry him, and said, although he, ever since the promise, had been ready, willing, and anxious to marry the plaintiff, and asked her to fix the date for the marriage, that the plaintiff at all times refused to fix a date, or to marry him at any date fixed by him, and he may possibly be performed within a year, and it does not appear that it was agreed that it should not be performed within that time. CORDUAN v. McCLOUD; Blackburn v. Mann, 85 Ill. 222; McConahey v. Griffey, 82 Iowa, 564, 48 N. W. 983; MacElree v. Wolfersberger, 59 Kan. 105, 52 Pac. 69; Hellenthal v. Bleuhm, 13 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 513.

In MacElree v. Wolfersberger, supra, the court approved an instruction "that if the promise of marriage was to be performed in the future, and no time was specified for the performance of it, and such contract is capable of entire performance within one year from its date, it is not within the statute of frauds. This question does not depend entirely upon the intention or understanding of the parties to the contract, nor upon the fact that the promise was not performed within one year; but if, when the contract was made, it was in reality capable of full performance in good faith within a year, without violating the terms of the contract, or without the intervention of extraordinary circumstances, then it is to be considered as not within the statute of frauds, and a valid and binding contract."

In Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600, the court did not decide whether a contract to marry is within the statute of frauds, if it is not to be performed for more than a year, saying that in this country it has been held that a promise to marry at the end of five years was within that clause of the statute requiring that a promise not to be performed within one year from its making shall be in writing, and that if it adopted this conclusion, still the objection in this instance was not good that the promise was void under the statute of frauds because not made in writing, as the evidence clearly showed that the promise, if any was made, was to be performed in less than one year.

As to effect of statute of frauds upon parol contracts for services which may be, but are not intended to be, performed within a year, see note to White v. Fitts, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 313. R. E. H.

tendered himself ready, willing and anxious to marry the plaintiff at any time, if she so desired.

Plaintiff testified that after visiting her a year, and on July 4, 1908, the defendant proposed marriage to her at her home in her daughter's presence, and that she accepted; that there was no stated time for the performance of the marriage; that he set the time in the spring, and then in the fall, and that he made excuses that he did not have time, his children were sick, there was to be an increase in his daughter's family; that he kept calling on her up to January 15, 1913, when, on that evening, he wanted to go and get married right away, and she said that he knew better, that they could not get a marriage license at that time (after 8 o'clock, P. M.); that he never got a license, and never came back; that she did not want to marry him then (time of trial), after she had been humiliated.

Plaintiff's daughter, Clara L. Wilson, corroborated her mother as to the engagement; that she heard him make excuses for not getting married; that she asked him when they were going to be married, and he said that they were going to be married soon, but they were not; that she heard defendant ask her mother to go and get married January 15, 1913, and heard her reply that they could not get a license then; that the place (office) would be closed up; that was after 8 o'clock in the evening, and defendant did not go out to get a license, and that was the last time he was at the house.

On cross-examination Mrs. Corduan testified that on January 15, 1913, she was not ready and willing to marry the defendant, and told him so, and said that he had refused her many times before. She qualified this by saying that it was in an argument with him, and that she never had a chance to marry the man, and afterwards said that she never refused to marry him.

The alleged tender of marriage on January 15, 1913, was not set up by the defendant in his answer, but was elicited at the trial. It may, however, be said to be involved in his statement that he had always been ready and willing and anxious to marry the plaintiff, and offered himself to her, but that she had at all times refused, etc. Anyhow, plaintiff's counsel in his brief does not claim that it could not be made evidence because not pleaded, contending that the so-called tender was not sufficient to warrant the court in withdrawing from the jury the question whether it was an offer made in strict performance of the engagement, and whether plaintiff rejected it, and, further, that defendant had so long delayed performance that the reasonable time allowed by law had expired, and, the breach having already come about, no subsequent tender, whether on January 15th or after the commencement of the suit, was available.

The evidence on this question, plaintiff's counsel submits, raised a question whether the tender was made in good faith or was merely intended to snare the plaintiff into an answer which defendant could distort into an outright refusal. A tender of performance of a promise of marriage, like that of other promises, must, of course, be made in good faith; and if, in any view of the testimony, the good faith of the tender is questionable, then it is a question of fact for the jury.

The delayed offer by defendant to redeem his promise may be said to be like a disingenuous and studied invitation by a deserting husband to his wife to return to him, which is unavailing to absolve him from the consequences of a situation of his own creation. Arrowsmith v. Arrowsmith, — N. J. Eq. —, 71 Atl. 702, 704. In an action for breach of promise to marry, an unequivocal intention on defendant's part not to perform his contract may be inferred from his conduct. Coil v. Wallace, 24 N. J. L. 291.

Appellant contends that it was improper to withdraw from the jury the consideration of the question whether or not the defendant had tendered himself ready and willing to perform his promise within a reasonable time, no time having been fixed for the marriage. The law appears to be that, where no time of performance of a marriage contract is fixed, action for breach thereof may be brought after a reasonable time. 5 Cyc. 1001.

Such a contract, where no time is fixed, is presumed not to be intended to be performed more than a year after its making, and therefore does not fall within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise not to be performed within a year to be in writing. 5 Cyc. 1000. As the contract in question was one which was possible of performance within a year, the jury would have had a right to infer that the defendant did not intend to perform it, when in fact he had permitted five years to elapse without having done so.

Defendant's offer of marriage after breach is, as a rule, no defense. 5 Cyc. 1004. In Holloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa, 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208, it was held: "An offer on the part of the defendant to fulfil the marriage contract after a refusal, or a continuance of the offer in open court upon the trial, on condition that plaintiff would dismiss the suit, should not be regarded by the jury either as a defense or in mitigation of damages."

The condition of the renewed offer of marriage in the Holloway Case, "that the plaintiff dismiss the suit," could have no particular effect. If the offer were made without any such condition, the result would be the same; for, if accepted, the suit would at least have to be continued to enable the ceremony to be performed, and, if it were, then, of course, the action would abate; and, if rejected, the defendant would have any advantage that might flow from his having made it.

We hold that an offer on the part of a defendant to fulfil the promise of marriage after his refusal to do so, or a renewed offer in his answer or in open court, is not a defense unless it is made bona fide, and unless, also, the plaintiff has not signified an intention to regard the contract as at an end. These are questions of fact, and are for the jury.

This case should have been submitted to the jury, and that, not only upon the question as to whether the defendant had broken his contract, and had made a belated and feigned offer of performance, but also whether the plaintiff had not herself broken the contract, and whether her rejection of the defendant's offer or offers was made in good faith; for it may be that this long courtship was continued by and with the mutual understanding and consent, implied, if not expressed, of both of these parties, and that what occurred on January 15, 1913, did not operate to put an end to the contract. The facts of the whole matter raised essential jury questions, and they should have been submitted.

It follows that the nonsuit was wrongly granted, and that the judgment should be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

LOGANVILLE BANKING COMPANY

v.

S. N. FORRESTER et al.

(— Ga. —, 84 S. E. 961.)

Usury — reserving interest in advance.

The reserving of interest in advance by a bank at the highest legal rate of interest on a loan, whether it be a short or long

Headnote by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — Lawfulness of taking interest in advance.

- I. In general, 1195.
- II. In periodical payments, 1197.
- III. For what length of time allowed, 1197. L.R.A.1915D.

term loan, is usurious; and a deed to land given to secure a promissory note for the loan is void on account of the usury.

(April 13, 1915.)

CERTIFICATION by the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court of questions arising upon appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the City Court of Monroe for defendants in a suit to recover the amount alleged to be due on certain promissory notes and to enforce a lien upon certain land conveyed to secure their payment. Answers favorable to defendants returned.

The questions certified to the supreme court were as follows:

"(1) Does the taking or reserving of interest in advance by a bank at the highest legal rate on a short-term loan render the contract usurious within the purview of § 3427 of the Civil Code, so as to make null and void a deed to realty, given to secure the payment of a promissory note representing the amount of such a loan?"

"(2) What would be the maximum length of time in which a loan could run and still be a 'short-term loan,' on which interest at the highest legal rate could be taken in advance?"

"(3) Is the taking of interest in advance at the highest legal rate for a period of nine months and eleven days usurious, or is such a loan relieved of the taint of usury because of being 'a short-term loan?'"

Mr. J. H. Felker, for plaintiff in error:

If the notes sued on are to partake of the 8 per cent paid in advance on the canceled notes, this lawful rate reserved in advance does not render the new transaction usurious.

MacKenzie v. Flannery, 90 Ga. 591, 16 S. E. 710; Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Dotzenheim, 107 Ga. 614, 34 S. E. 217; McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 243, 42 S. E. 468; Bank of Newport v. Cook, 60 Ark. 288, 29 L.R.A. 761, 46 Am. St. Rep. 171, 30 S. W. 35; Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 8 Wheat, 338, 5 L. ed. 631; Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co. 141 U. S. 384, 35 L. ed. 786, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; 39 Cyc. 943; Ervin v. First Nat. Bank, 161 N. C. 42, 76 S. E. 529; Crowell v. Jones, 167 N. C. 386, 83 S. E. 551.

Messrs. R. L. Cox and O. Roberts, for defendants in error:

The deed made by S. N. Forrester to Loganville Banking Company, conveying 275 acres of land to secure a loan of $7,000, is void because tainted with usury, and the

In general.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to Bank of Newport v. Cook, 29 L.R.A. 761.

As to whether computation of interest on dealings of the bank with defendants is a scheme to avoid the usury laws of the state of Georgia.

Howell v. Pennington, 118 Ga. 494, 45 S. E. 272; Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 124 Ga. 965, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 53 S. E. 664, 4 Ann. Cas. 639; McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 242, 42 S. E. 468; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 517; Lockwood v. Muhlberg, 124 Ga. 660, 53 S. E. 92; Archer v. Mc-Cray, 59 Ga. 546; Pinckard v. Ponder, 6 Ga. 253; Tallman v. Truesdell, 3 Wis. 443; Dixon's Notes.

Evans, P. J. delivered the opinion of the court:

The legal rate of interest in this state is 7 per centum per annum, but the parties may stipulate in writing for a higher rate, not to exceed 8 per centum per annum.

the basis of thirty days for a month, or 360 days for a year, is usury, see note to Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 592.

It is held in a majority of the cases that the taking of interest in advance at the highest legal rate is not usurious. Cobe v. Guyer, 237 Ill. 516, 86 N. E. 1071; Bramblett v. Deposit Bank, 122 Ky. 324, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 612, 92 S. W. 283; Warren Deposit Bank v. Robinson, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 78, 35 S. W. 275; Sandford v. Lundquist, 80 Neb. 414, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 633, 114 N. W. 279, 118 N. W. 129 (by statute); Covington v. Fisher, 22 Okla. 207, 97 Pac. 615 (by statute—not exceeding one year's interest); Newton v. Woodley, 55 S. C. 132, 32 S. E. 531, 33 S. E. 1 (annual interest in advance on a loan for five years); Heyward v. Williams, 63 S. C. 470, 41 S. E. 550; Webb v. Pahde, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 19 (note for six months).

While no emphasis is placed upon the time which the loan ran in these cases, it does not appear in any of them that the interest was taken in advance on long-time loans.

A taking of interest in advance at the highest legal rate is assumed not to be usurious in Merchants' & P. Bank v. Sarratt, 77 S. C. 141, 122 Am. St. Rep. 562, 57 S. E. 621.

In Willett v. Maxwell, 169 Ill. 540, 48 N. E. 473, a note payable in one year with interest at the rate of 10 per cent after its maturity was given by the borrower, who paid interest for the one year in advance, receiving the difference. The note was allowed to run for many years after maturity, and interest thereon was paid at the rate specified in the note. The contention of the borrower was that the amount borrowed by him must be determined by the amount which he received, and that interest could be charged only on this amount at the highest legal rate; that the effect of the transaction as above given was to reserve interest at a higher rate than the law allowed. This contention was denied, however, the court adhering to the well-settled law in this jurisdiction that it is not usurious to collect and receive as in this case the first year's interest in advance.

In National L. Ins. Co. v. Donovan, 238 Ill. 283, 87 N. E. 356, interest at 1 per cent less than the highest legal rate allowable was charged on the note, and in addition the lender received a commission. The court states that if the total amount of interest charged and the commissions received by it do not exceed the highest legal rate for the length of time for which the loan was made, the loan is not usurious. Computing by this method it was determined that the total amount received was not as much as would have been received had the highest legal rate been charged, and therefore the loan was decided to be not usurious.

It is stated in syllabus to Lichtenstein v. Lyons, 115 La. 1051, 40 So. 454, that the discount of a note, the proceeds of which are placed at the disposal of the maker from its date, is not added to, but is in lieu of, interest, when the interest runs only from the maturity of the note; and where the rate charged, whether for discount or interest, does not exceed 8 per cent per annum, the contract is not usurious.

There is an obiter statement to same effect in Foster v. Pitman, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 672, 89 N. W. 763.

The statute involved in Fidelity Loan Asso. v. Connolly, 95 N. Y. Supp. 576, authorized discount interest, and nothing is said as to payment in advance at the highest legal rate constituting usury.

Other cases, however, hold the reservation of interest in advance to be usurious. These cases regard the actual sum received as the amount on which interest is to be computed. It is apparent that computing on this sum raises the rate above the legal rate. Hiller v. Ellis, 72 Miss. 701, 41 L.R.A. 707, 18 So. 95.

The reservation of quarterly interest in advance at the highest rate allowed by law is usurious under a statute making it unlawful to reserve, charge, or take for any loan or forbearance of money, as interest or otherwise, any amount "whereby the debtor is required or obligated to pay a greater sum than the actual principal sum received, together with interest at the rate of 10 per centum per annum." Purvis v. Frink, 57 Fla. 519, 49 So. 1023.

Nor is the application of this rule prevented by the device of an agreement to pay interest on the loan from the time application is made for it, when the loan is not consummated until some time afterward. Hiller v. Ellis, supra.

In order that a transaction be usurious, there must be an intent to violate the law. This corrupt intent is not established by the mere fact that a part of the interest agreed upon was advanced by the borrower, in the absence of all other evidence of a usurious intent. Swanson v. Realization & D. Corp. 70 Minn. 380, 73 N. W. 165.

Our statute defines usury as "the reserving and taking, or contracting to reserve and take, either directly or by indirection, a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful interest." Civil Code 1910, § 3427. The Code (§ 3436) further declares: "It shall not be lawful for any person, company, or corporation to reserve, charge, or take for any loan or advance of money, or forbearance to enforce the collection of any sum of money, any rate of interest greater than 8 per centum per annum, either directly or indirectly by way of commission for advances, discount, exchange, or by any contract or contrivance or device whatever."

All laws respecting the rate of interest charged for the loan of money by individuals are applicable to banks. Civil Code 1910, § 2336. Titles to property made as a part of an usurious contract or to evade the laws

II. In periodical payments.

The taking of interest annually in advance at the highest legal rate, computed on the amount to be paid by the borrower, and not merely on the amount received by the borrower, is not usury under a statute providing that the rate of interest agreed upon, not to exceed the maximum, may be taken yearly or for any shorter period or in advance if so expressly agreed. Steen v. Stretch, 50 Neb. 572, 70 N. W. 48.

See Purvis v. Frink, 57 Fla. 519, 49 So. 1023, and Newton v. Woodley, 55 S. C. 132, 32 S. E. 531, 33 S. E. 1, supra.

III. For what length of time allowed.

Whether or not the taking of interest at the highest legal rate in advance is usury is sometimes made to depend upon the length of time the note has to run.

Interest by way of discount may be taken in advance for short periods. Crowell v. Jones, 167 N. C. 386, 83 S. E. 551.

That interest paid in advance on a short-term loan is not usurious is the opinion expressed obiter in Howell v. Pennington, 118 Ga. 494, 45 S. E. 272, but that point is not decided.

This point was also reserved in Patton v. Bank of Lafayette, 124 Ga. 965, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 592, 53 S. E. 664, 4 Ann. Cas. 639, where the taking of interest in advance on a short-time loan was held not to be usurious where the days of grace had not been counted, as the holder of the note (a bank) might have done, and therefore the rate of interest actually received was within the legal rate.

In Howell v. Pennington, supra, the entire amount of the loan was given to the borrower, who thereupon executed a note to the lender for the amount of the interest for the term of the loan, together with interest on this interest. This was held to be in excess of the lawful legal rate, and therefore usurious.

See Willett v. Maxwell, 169 Ill. 540, 48 N. E. 473, supra.

A loan for one year is a short-term loan. Crowell v. Jones, supra.

See Covington v. Fisher, 22 Okla. 207, 97 Pac. 615, and Webb v. Pahde, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 19, supra.

A loan having five years to run was held a long-term loan so as to make it usurious where the aggregate of the amount reserved and that contracted to be paid exceeded the L.R.A.1915D.

lawful rate. McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 235, 42 S. E. 468.

The statutes in some jurisdictions make it lawful to take interest in advance for a certain short period. These statutes, by application of the doctrine expressio unius est exclusio alterius, are held to make unlawful the taking of interest in advance for a period longer than that named.

Thus, a statute making it lawful to take interest in advance for twelve months renders the taking of interest for a longer period than twelve months in advance usurious. Ellis v. Terrell, 109 Ark. 69, 158 S. W. 957. The court expresses an opinion that the taking of interest in advance for a longer period than twelve months is usurious in the absence of statute.

Without making any distinction between long and short term loans, it has been held in case of long-term loans that the taking of interest in advance at the highest legal rate for a long term is usury.

Thus, under a statute making valid any rate of interest which may be agreed upon not exceeding $10 per year upon $100, upon any loan or forbearance of money, and providing that "the rate of interest so agreed upon may be taken yearly or for any shorter period or in advance if so expressly agreed," the reservation of 3 per cent on a loan for a period of five years, together with the giving of a note for the amount actually received by the borrower plus the interest so reserved, which amount bore interest at the rate of 7 per cent, is usurious. Allen v. Dunn, 71 Neb. 831, 99 N. W. 680.

The taking of only a part of the interest in advance has been treated as usurious without any discussion, where the per cent thus taken in advance added to that reserved in the note amounted to the highest legal rate.

Thus, a loan of $200 for five years, in which $40 was reserved in advance and five interest notes for $12 each were given, was treated as usurious in Ellis v. Terrell, supra. The court states that $160 bearing interest at 10 per cent, the highest legal rate, for five years, would require $240 to discharge, while under the plan involved the debtor was required to pay $260, or $20 more than legal interest.

A loan of $1,600 for five years, in which $80 was reserved and 7 per cent contracted to be paid, was held to be usurious where the rate was 8 per cent. McCall v. Herring, supra.

See Allen v. Dunn, supra. W. A. E.

against usury are void. Civil Code 1910, § 3442. That interest at the highest legal rate cannot be reserved in advance in loans extending over a year will not be controverted. Numerous decisions establish that proposition. Is there any proper ground of differentiation between reserving interest at the highest legal rate on long-term loans and in taking such interest in advance on short-term loans, within the purview of our statutes? It has been stated, in the course of the argument in several of the opinions of this court, that the taking of interest in advance on short-term loans in the usual and ordinary course of business is not usurious. Mackenzie v. Flannery, 90 Ga. 591 (5), 599, 16 S. E. 710; Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Dottenheim, 107 Ga. 606, 614, 34 S. E. 217; McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 235, 243, 42 S. E. 468. On the other hand, it has been strongly intimated that the statutes respecting interest and usury apply alike to short and long term loans. Howell v. Pennington, 118 Ga. 494, 45 S. E. 272. But the observations in those cases are obiter dicta, and the proposition is res integra in this state. Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 124 Ga. 965, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 592, 53 S. E. 664, 4 Ann. Cas. 639.

In many jurisdictions a rule has been evolved that interest may be taken in advance on short-time paper without rendering the transaction usurious. This rule of law is said to have arisen out of the custom and practice of banks. Webb, Usury, § 111; Tyler, Usury, 298. A very interesting history of the legislation respecting interest and usury in England and in the state of Georgia will be found in the opinion of Mr. Justice Cobb, in Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Dottenheim, supra. In England by Stat. 12 Anne, 5 per cent was the maximum rate of interest, and all bonds and assurances for the payment of any money to be lent, whereby a greater sum was reserved or taken for interest, were declared void. The practice grew up for bankers to require payment of bank discount in addition to the highest rate of interest. In Auriol v. Thomas, 3 T. R. 62, it was held that in the discount of bills a banker may take more than the highest legal rate, if the excess be taken only to defray the expense of remittance, provided such excess be reasonable, and that it be not a cover for usurious interest. If the transaction was not a discount in the way of trade, but was merely employed as a means of obtaining more than the legal rate of interest, it would be usurious. Marsh v. Martindale, 3 Bos. & P. 154. The rules and practices of the banks in this regard were extended to transactions between individuals and to paper not negotiated at a bank. The extension of the custom of banks to individuals is not allowable on any proper basis of logic, and is defensible only on the principle of uniformity. In this connection it may be well to notice that our statute applies the laws of interest and usury as affecting individuals to banks, and this affords strong ground for the conclusion that banks cannot ingraft on the law any usage or custom of banks variant with the law of usury. Perhaps a majority of the American courts are in line with the English decisions, and extend to individuals the same privilege of discount, as affecting the interest demanded in advance, as is allowed by the usage of banks. But our statute expressly forbids an increase of the maximum interest rate by way of discount; and usage cannot override a positive enactment of law. In some jurisdictions statutes prohibit banks from taking any greater rate of interest or discount on any note or draft or other security than a prescribed rate, but provide that such interest or discount may be calculated and taken according to established rules of banking. In such cases it is held that the statute permits the taking of interest in advance upon loans made by a bank according to the established rules of banking. Ticonic Bank v. Johnson, 31 Me. 414; Sanford v. Lundquist, 80 Neb. 414, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 633, 114 N. W. 279, 118 N. W. 129.

If we follow the words of the statute, there can be no legitimate differentiation of short-term from long-term loans. Interest is compensation for the use of money. In determining whether a greater sum than the maximum rate has been reserved, we look to the amount received and the interest reserved. If the borrower does not receive all of the principal stated in his obligation, because of the reservation of enough to pay the interest, he does not receive the full amount of his loan. The real principal of his obligation is the amount which he actually receives. When he pays the principal as stated in his obligation, from which the maximum rate of interest was deducted in advance, he pays a sum in excess of that which he received, and the interest on it. This is true in both short and long loans, and the only difference is that, as applied to short loans, the disparity between the sum reserved for interest and the actual interest is not nearly so great as in long loans. The rate of interest and the effect of taking more than the maximum are peculiarly the subject of statutory regulation. Our lawmakers were not content with a simple statement of the rates of interest and a general definition of usury (Civil Code 1910, §§ 3426, 3427), but undertook to denounce as unlawful for any person, bank, or other corporation to reserve or take for any loan of money any rate of interest greater than 8 per cent per annum, either directly or indirectly by way of commission, discount, exchange, or by any contract or contrivance or device whatever. The reference to discount and exchange excludes the custom of banks in making these charges additional to interest in the loan of money. The exclusion does not except short loans, and to make such an exception would be to amend and change the statute, which courts are powerless to do.

To constitute usury it is essential that there be, at the time the contract is executed, an intent on the part of the lender to take or charge for the use of money a higher rate of interest than that allowed by law. Bellerby v. Goodwyn, 112 Ga. 306, 37 S. E. 376. If the intent be to take only legal interest, a slight and trifling excess, due to mistake or inadvertence, will not taint the transaction with usury. Rushing v. Willingham, 105 Ga. 166, 31 S. E. 154. But if the purpose be to take from the money advanced, at the time of the loan, the legal maximum rate of interest, the transaction is a usurious one, and a deed to land given to secure the debt is void by virtue of the statute (Civil Code 1910, § 3442), which declares: "All titles to property made as a part of an usurious contract, or to evade the laws against usury, are void." Beach v. Lattner, 101 Ga. 357, 28 S. E. 110.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HENRY A. JOHNSON, Admr., etc., of A. L. Swenson, Deceased, Resp.,

v.

BANKERS' MUTUAL CASUALTY INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(129 Minn. 18, 151 N. W. 413.)

Insurance — accident — autopsy — demand.

1. The evidence in this case sustains a

Headnotes by HALLAM, J.

Note. — Accident insurance: validity, construction and effect of provision in policy as to autopsy or examination of body of assured.

Generally as to right of court to order disinterment of corpse for evidential purposes, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513; for privilege as to information acquired by autopsy, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1186; as to admissibility of findings of coroner to finding that deceased suffered death from accidental drowning.

show cause of death, see notes in 68 L.R.A. 285 and 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 404.

Where a policy of accident insurance gives to the insurer the right, in case of death, to an autopsy by a medical adviser, and the policy holder suffers death claimed to be accidental, and leaves a widow who is also sole beneficiary, the widow is the proper person upon whom to make a demand for an autopsy.

It is not necessary that the demand be made upon her in person, so long as it is communicated to her.

Such a demand, to be effective, must be made within a reasonable time after death, and at a reasonable time and upon a proper occasion, and when made upon the widow between the death and burial of her husband, the language should leave nothing to intendment, but should be free from doubt or ambiguity.

In this case a demand for an autopsy was made by the claim auditor of the company at 10:18 A. M. The funeral was set for 1 P. M. Friends were beginning to arrive from a distance, and the body was being prepared for burial. The demand was a present demand, calling for present compliance or refusal. The medical adviser, whom the auditor had in mind to perform the autopsy, was in Minneapolis, many miles away. Compliance with the demand would have caused a delay in the funeral obsequies, the extent of which cannot be determined. The claim auditor had been within 2 miles of the place of demand, investigating the cause of death, since the day before. Held, the demand for an autopsy was not made at a reasonable time or upon a proper occasion, and its refusal did not defeat right of action under the policy.

Same — notice of claim — waiver.

2. Failure to give notice of claim within the time stipulated in the policy is waived, where, in response to the notice, the company denies liability wholly on another ground.

Appeal — calling witness for cross-examination.

3. No reversible error can be predicated on a ruling permitting plaintiff to call the claim auditor of defendant for cross-examination under the statute, where plaintiff did not seek to avoid his testimony, and the form of the questions would have been proper had he been called as plaintiff's witness.

(March 5, 1915.)

show cause of death, see notes in 68 L.R.A. 285 and 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 404.

The propriety and necessity of these provisions have been recognized by the courts.

Thus, the provision in an accident policy as to the examination of the body of the insured is a reasonable provision, and quite necessary in accident insurance, as affording protection against fraud. Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 153 N. Y. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35.

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Washington County, denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff, or for a new trial, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Simon Michelet and Clyde R. White, for appellant:

A demand for an examination of and autopsy upon the body of the deceased was duly made by the defendant company, and unconditionally refused by the wife of the deceased, within the meaning and intent of the policy of insurance.

The demand was made upon the proper person. The right to the possession of a dead body belongs to the surviving husband or wife.

Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 14 L.R.A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370, 50 N. W. 238; Brown v. Maplewood Cemetery Assn. 85 Minn. 498, 89 N. W. 872; Lindh v. Great Northern R. Co. 99 Minn. 408, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1018, 109 N. W. 823; Sacks v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 30, 77 N. W. 563; Beaulieu v. Great Northern R. Co. 103 Minn. 47, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 564, 114 N. W. 353, 14 Ann. Cas. 462.

The demand was made within a reasonable time after the death of the insured, and that question should not have been submitted to the jury.

American Employers Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 16 C. C. A. 51, 32 U. S. App. 444, 68

The court in Whitehouse v. Travelers' Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 17,566, said: That the necessity of the provision in accident policies that insurer shall have the right to make an autopsy can be seen "where a man might die and be buried, and it be alleged afterward that the death was caused by accident, whereas, if an autopsy had been made, it might have been shown otherwise."

Time for making demand for autopsy or examination.

As will be seen, JOHNSON v. BANKERS' MUT. CASUALTY INS. CO., in holding that the demand for an examination must be made at a reasonable time in order that a refusal shall work a forfeiture, finds support in the following cases:

Under the provision of an accident policy giving insurer the right to examine the body of the insured, failure to extend such permission upon demand made at a reasonable time and place before burial will preclude recovery upon policy. Patterson v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. 25 App. D. C. 46.

But refusal to permit examination of body of assured ten days after interment will not work forfeiture of policy where immediate notice of death was given to the company. Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 153 N. Y. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35. The court stated that the provision authorizing examination of the body should have been availed of immediately upon receipt of notice of death, and that the delay in the demand was, as a matter of law, unreasonable in the absence of any fact or circumstances excusing it.

And in Root v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 92 App. Div. 578, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1055, affirmed without opinion in 180 N. Y. 527, 72 N. E. 1150, it was held that under a provision of accident policies "that any medical adviser of the company shall be allowed to examine the . . . body of assured," a delay until day after burial in making demand for autopsy was unreasonable, as the company knew of the assured's death two days before the burial. L.R.A.1915D.

Denial by widow of assured under accident policy, of permission to insurance company to exhume and examine her dead husband's body three or four weeks after it had been embalmed and buried, is not a defense to an action on the policy by the beneficiary, who was a nephew of the deceased, where there is no evidence that he refused to allow the body to be examined either before interment, when it was in his power to grant the request, or that he refused such request after interment, or that it was in his power to grant the request to exhume. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 16 C. C. A. 51, 32 U. S. App. 444, 68 Fed. 873.

In Ewing v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 55 App. Div. 241, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1056, affirmed without opinion in 170 N. Y. 590, 63 N. E. 1116, it was held that under a provision of an accident policy that "no claims shall be payable under this certificate unless any medical adviser of the association shall be allowed to examine the person of the member in respect to any alleged . . . cause of death, then and so often as may be necessary or reasonably required on behalf of the association," demand for examination must be made before death; and so, refusal of demand made nearly one month after interment will be no defense to an action on the policy. The court said: "If this should be interpreted as conferring upon the insurance company an absolute and unconditional right to exhume and examine at least once the body of any member, on pain of forfeiture of the right to recover, it would be giving to it the full force which defendant claims for it. If a body should by the living relatives be cremated instead of buried in the ground, no recovery could be had under the policy. But does this clause necessarily mean so much? The contract is with a member of the association; it is in part for the benefit of the assured; in case of partial disability from accidental causes, the assured is to receive the benefits, and he agrees that the medical adviser shall be allowed to examine his person,—the person of the member." There is no express stipu-

Fed. 873; Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 153 N. Y. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35; Ewing v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 55 App. Div. 241, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1056; Root v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 92 App. Div. 578, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1055; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hollowell, 14 Ind. App. 611, 43 N. E. 277; Grangers' L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446.

Messrs. Wilson & Thoreen, for respondent:

The appellant waived any defect in the notice of death and failure to file final proof of loss.

1 C. J. 473, 480; Fisher v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 124 Tenn. 460, 138 S. W. 316; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1246; Hurt v. Employers' Lia- bility Assur. Corp. 122 Fed. 828; Moore v. Wildey Casualty Co. 176 Mass. 418, 57 N. E. 673; Breedon v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 23 S. D. 417, 122 N. W. 348; Newman v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 17 Minn. 123, Gil. 98; First Nat. Bank v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 58 Minn. 492, 60 N. W. 345; McCarvel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 193, 66 N. W. 367; Lake Superior Produce & Cold Storage Co. v. Concordia F. Ins. Co. 95 Minn. 492, 104 N. W. 580; Taylor-Baldwin Co. v. Northwestern F. & M. Ins. Co. 20 Ann. Cas. 438, note; Canadian R. Acci. Ins. Co. v. Haines, 21 Ann. Cas. 919, note; Jennings v. Brotherhood Acci. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 109, note; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 5 Minn. 492, Gil. 393; Butler Bros. v. American Fidelity Co. 120 Minn. 157, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.)

lation here that the defendant may dissect the body of the member; no stipulation for a forfeiture should any relative having lawful custody of the body of a deceased member refuse to permit it to be dug up and dissected. I think the policy holder interpreting this clause to bind the member so long as the member has control of his own person would place upon it a rational construction. If 'his right to 'examine the person of the member' in respect to any 'cause of death' is extended for a reasonable time after death, and so long as the body is unburied or not finally disposed of, I think the utmost limit of the privilege stipulated for would be reached. Thereafter other interests than the wishes of the beneficiary or the expressed wishes of the contracting member while living might reasonably be expected to prevail. In any case, I think a party who alleges a contract right to invade the tomb, or the graves of the buried dead, should be sure of the language of his written agreement; it should at least be unmistakably clear, the purpose should be apparent, and the terms so plain that inference or conjecture need not be resorted to to discover the true intent of the contracting parties. If the policy in question in plain terms stated to an applicant for membership that by accepting membership the applicant bartered to the insurer the right at any time to dig up and examine or dissect his dead body, it is quite conceivable that there would be few applicants for membership."

Where no effort was made for an autopsy while the body of an insured was in the hands of the coroner, although liability was denied because of suicide by poison, and no reason is shown why an application to the court for an order to exhume the body was delayed until nine months after death, four months after commencement of the action, and two days before trial, such order is properly refused. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hollowell, 14 Ind. App. 611, 43 N. E. 277.

An order compelling the exhumation of a body in plaintiff's control should be granted only upon strong showing that without examination a fraud is likely to be accomplished, to expose which the company has exhausted every other method known to law. Grangers' L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446.

Upon whom demand must be made.

In holding that the demand must be made upon a proper person, JOHNSON v. BANKERS' MUT. CASUALTY INS. CO. is in accord with Root v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 92 App. Div. 578, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1055, affirmed without opinion in 180 N. Y. 527, 72 N. E. 1150, which held that forfeiture of claims under accident policies cannot be predicated on refusal of demand for autopsy, made upon one not a relative of the deceased, and who had no authority to grant the privilege.

* And see also American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 16 C. C. A. 51, 32 U. S. App. 444, 68 Fed. 873.

By whom autopsy to be made.

It is not necessary that an insurance company call the attending physician to make an autopsy, but it may call its own physician; and so, failure to call the attending physician is not evidence per se of fraud on the part of the company. Whitehouse v. Travelers' Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 17,566.

Necessity that insurance company be notified of intended autopsy.

A provision of an accident policy that the insurer shall have the right to perform an autopsy does not give the insurer exclusive right to perform an autopsy, or require that the company be notified of an intended autopsy, and so failure to notify the company of an autopsy will not forfeit the policy. Crotty v. Continental Casualty Co. 163 Mo. App. 628, 146 S. W. 833.

In Loesch v. Union Casualty & S. Co. 176 Mo. 654, 75 S. W. 621, the accident policy provided that if a post mortem be held without notifying the company in time to have its medical examiner present, all 609, 139 N. W. 355; Zeitler v. National Casualty Co. 124 Minn. 478, 145 N. W. 395.

The claim auditor was a proper person to call for cross-examination under the statute.

Bennett v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. 77 Minn. 198, 79 N. W. 682; Ames-Brooks Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 83 Minn. 346, 86 N. W. 344; Leystrom v. Ada, 110 Minn. 340, 125 N. W. 507.

The demand of the defendant to hold an autopsy, relied upon as its defense, was not made by it as agreed upon by the policy, nor was the demand which was proven made at a reasonable or proper time, or as agreed upon by the policy.

Cook v. Modern Brotherhood, 114 Minn. 299, 131 N. W. 334; Rudd v. Great Eastern Casualty & I. Co. 114 Minn. 512, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1205, 131 N. W. 633, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 606; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 16 C. C. A. 51, 32 U. S. App. 444, 68 Fed. 873; Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 153 N. Y. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35; Sudduth v.

Travelers' Ins. Co. 106 Fed. 822; Patterson v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. 25 App. D. C. 46; Loesch v. United Casualty & S. Co. 176 Mo. 654, 75 S. W. 621; Ewing v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 170 N. Y. 590, 63 N. E. 1116; Root v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 180 N. Y. 527, 72 N. E. 1150; Crotty v. Continental Casualty Co. 163 Mo. App. 628, 146 S. W. 833.

Hallam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A. L. Swenson held a policy of accident insurance issued by defendant, covering death from accidental injury, and payable in case of his death to his estate. On June 15, 1913, Swenson was visiting with a relative, Peter Holm, on a farm situated on Sand lake, a small lake near New Scandia, in Washington county. He dressed himself in a bathing suit, took a rowboat, went a short distance out upon the lake, and dove head first into the water. He came up once, appeared to struggle, and then sank and claims under the policy should be forfeited. The company claimed a forfeiture because the beneficiary, at the request of insured's physician, permitted a post mortem of which no notice was given to the company. The court, while it said that it is a reasonable requirement under reasonable interpretation, and a violation of its terms under circumstances reasonably showing disadvantage to the company would work a forfeiture of the policy, yet held that failure to give notice did not work forfeiture in this case, as no disadvantage to the company was indicated, the evidence showing that it was very doubtful if the beneficiary was responsible for the act, as she testified that she did not know what post mortem meant, and did not know what the physicians were doing. And further, and which was the real ground of the decision, that as soon as the attending physician saw the policy and read the clause, which was immediately after the post mortem, he went to the office of the company and told them what had been done, and offered to allow them to make a re-examination, and there was no suggestion in the record of any fact or theory which would tend to show that a re-examination of the body at that time would not have disclosed to the company's physicians everything which the first examination disclosed to the physicians who made it.

It cannot be said that there is a failure to comply with the provisions of an accident policy with reference to notice of autopsy where the company's agent was informed of an intended autopsy by physicians engaged by the beneficiary to perform it. Legnard v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 81 App. Div. 320, 81 N. Y. Supp. 516.

Under a provision of an accident policy that if a post mortem be held without notifying the company in time to have its medical examiner present, then all claims under the policy shall be forfeited, a post mortem which occurred without knowledge or consent of beneficiaries would be no defense on the ground of lack of notice. Loesch v. Union Casualty & S. Co. supra.

Failure to notify an insurance company of an autopsy to be held to ascertain the cause of death will not, in an action on the policy, affect the competency as evidence of facts adduced thereat, where there is no provision of law or of the insurance contract that the company should be notified when a post mortem examination is to be held. Sun Acci. Asso. v. Olson, 59 Ill. App. 217.

Right to examine body as including "autopsy" and "exhumation."

That the right of the insurer to "examine" body of insured, conferred by an accident policy, did not include the right to make an autopsy or to dissect, was held in Sudduth v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 106 Fed. 822. The court said that it did not "think that any ordinary person, in agreeing to the stipulation for an examination of the insured before or after death, would suppose he was agreeing to what would have been much more clearly expressed by the word 'autopsy' or by the word 'dissect.' I do not think that one would ordinarily suppose that the word 'examine,' as applied to the human body, either living or dead, would, ex vi termini, include, or by an insured, at least, would be supposed to include, the idea of cutting it up. The word 'examine' may not definitely express the same idea to every person who sees it or who uses it, but it is quite clear to me that it does not, in the clause of the contract we are considering, include the idea was seen no more alive. Next day the body was recovered. There were some bruises on the face which the evidence shows must have been caused before death. There is abundant evidence of accidental drowning; in fact, the evidence would not sustain any other conclusion. There is some evidence that deceased had suffered from heart trouble, but no substantial evidence that he died from any such ailment. The defenses urged are as follows:

The policy provided that "the company shall in no event be liable . . . in any case where any medical adviser appointed by it shall have been denied the right or opportunity of making a personal examination, or of holding an autopsy in case of death."

It is claimed that the right to an autopsy was denied. The facts as to this are as follows: C. E. Drennan, claim auditor of defendant, learned of the death of deceased about 11 A. M. of June 17th. He was then at Minneapolis. He telephoned this plaintiff, who was the local agent of the defendant at New Scandia, and at 5:25 P. M. took a train for Copas, the nearest railway point to New Scandia. He arrived at Copas at 6:53 and at New Scandia at 7:30. He was then within 2 miles of the Holm farm, where deceased met his death, and where the body of deceased then was, and where the widow of deceased then was. Drennan spent the evening at New Scandia making investigations. About 10 A. M. the next day he was driven in an automobile to the Holm residence. The funeral was set for 1 P. M. Numerous friends and relatives from a distance had already gathered to attend the funeral, and more were expected on an 11 o'clock train. In this situation and at 10:18 A. M. Drennan sought out Mrs. Magney, the mother of the widow of deceased, and, as he himself testified, made the following demand: "The substance of it was that under our policy we had the right of performing an autopsy in case of death, and that as a representative of the company either of an 'autopsy' or of a 'dissection,' if there is any essential difference between those two words in this connection. 'Autopsy' is defined to be an examination of a dead body by dissection. 'Dissection' is the cutting apart of a dead body, or the cutting of it into pieces. Can it reasonably be supposed that it was in the contemplation of both of the parties to these contracts at the time they were made that the meaning of the word 'examine' in its context was to be so expanded as to include either the idea of an autopsy or the idea of a dissection? While an autopsy, speaking generally, always includes an examination, can it be said that an examination always includes an autopsy? or can it be fairly held that the simple word 'examine,' as used in the policies sued on, would be accurately defined in the same words as those used to define either 'autopsy' or 'dissection,' when endeavoring to arrive at the mutual agreement of the parties at the time they were contracting? It seems to me not; particularly when construing policies for insurance against death from external causes only, and which ordinarily would only involve or require external inspection. If the company desired or expected the insured to agree to a condition such as either of these words would have clearly indicated, there is no obvious reason why it should not have been expressed in plain terms. If there is a fair doubt as to the meaning of the words used in a policy, it should be solved in favor of the insured, because there appears to have been no reason why the plainest words could not have been employed by the company in framing the condition. It may be that the right to dissect a body, even after burial, is or would be an important right to the company; but that would make it all the more necessary for it to express it in language in no way ambiguous or doubtful, or which, in order to effect the company's purpose, would have to be extended beyond its ordinary import."

So also it was held in Patterson v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. 25 App. D. C. 46 (action on insurance policy insuring against "accidental bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, and visible means"), that the right to "examine" the body of insured does not include the right of autopsy or dissection, much less exhumation.

But there is an obiter statement in Whele v. United States Mut. Acci. Assn. 153 N. Y. 116, 80 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35, that if it should appear in any case that at some subsequent date after the interment of a body circumstances or facts coming to the knowledge of the insurer warranted a reasonable belief that death was occasioned by means or causes excepted from the contract, a reasonable construction of such provision would authorize the insurer to insist upon an exhumation of the body and upon a dissection.

Bill of discovery.

Under a policy insuring against death from accident, and providing that the insurer shall have the right to make an autopsy, a court of equity has jurisdiction to entertain a bill of discovery, and appoint a receiver to take charge of the organs of the deceased insured pending examination as to cause of death, when demand of autopsy is refused, the court holding that under its contract the insurer had a right to make an examination of the organs superior to any property right in any member of the family of the assured. Painter v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 123 Md. 301, 91 Atl. 158.

J. H. B.

I wished to have that right in order to determine the cause of death and see whether there was anything due them under the policy or not."

Mrs. Magney communicated the demand to the widow of deceased. The demand was refused. Drennan testified that the reason given was "they said they thought it was too close the time of the funeral."

Plaintiff does not question the validity of this provision in the policy which gave defendant a right to demand an autopsy, and, if the demand for an autopsy was properly made, its refusal defeats any right of action on the policy. The question is as to the sufficiency of the demand.

The demand was made upon the proper person. The widow of deceased was the sole beneficiary under the policy and she had control of the body of deceased. Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 14 L.R.A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370, 50 N. W. 238; Lindh v. Great Northern R. Co. 99 Minn. 408, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1018, 109 N. W. 823. She alone had the right to say whether or not an autopsy should be held. It was proper that the demand be addressed to her.

It was proper also to communicate the demand to her through her mother. It was not necessary that demand be made upon her in person. A decent respect for the proprieties of the occasion made it peculiarly proper that defendant communicate through someone who could better approach her with a matter of serious business than could a stranger.

We are of the opinion, however, that the time and circumstances of the demand were such that its refusal did not operate to defeat plaintiff's right of action. We must bear in mind that, except for some formal requirements, and except for the chance that the autopsy would develop facts of which we have no knowledge, the right of action upon this policy had fully accrued. The forfeiture of a right of action through the operation of a condition subsequent will be enforced only where the right to such forfeiture is plain. 25 Cyc. 821. The right to an autopsy given by this provision of the policy was one calculated under the most favorable circumstances to cause some distress of mind to the family of deceased, and although no time was fixed when the exercise of the right might be demanded, a due regard for the sensibilities of the survivors clearly requires that there should be some limitation as to the time and occasion of such a demand. We are cited to no decided case involving a state of facts just like the case at bar. There are many cases, however, which hold in general terms that a demand for an autopsy, under a policy containing provisions similar to this, must be made within a reasonable time after death. Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 153 N. Y. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 598, 47 N. E. 35; Ewing v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 55 App. Div. 241, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1056; Root v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 92 App. Div. 578, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1055; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 16 C. C. A. 51, 32 U. S. App. 444, 68 Fed. 873; Cooley, Briefs on Ins. 3449 (g). In Wehle v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. supra, it was said: "Although no time is specified within which the permission to examine may be availed of, still, a due regard for the sentiments of the family and friends of the deceased, if not public policy, required as immediate an exercise of the option to examine as was possible."

On similar principle, we think it must also be held that such a demand, to be effective, must be made at a reasonable time and upon a proper occasion. We are of the opinion that demand made in this case was not made at a reasonable time or upon a proper occasion.

We think the natural purport of the demand was for an autopsy to be held at once. The language of the demand would naturally be so understood, and it evidently was so understood by all parties. The reason given for its refusal is indicative of this. It is suggested now that the widow might understand the demand as one for an autopsy after the funeral obsequies had taken place but defendant's representative made no suggestion of this sort, even when the ground given for refusal of the demand was that it was too close to the time of the funeral. One in the situation of the widow of deceased is not to be expected to make counter propositions or suggestions, or to construe language used in such a demand in any but its plain and obvious meaning. When an insurance company feels called upon to serve a notice upon a widow between the time of the death and burial of her husband, and when the character of the notice is such that her conduct in reference thereto may result in the forfeiture of insurance money, the right to which has already accrued, the language of the notice should leave nothing to intendment, and should be free from doubt or ambiguity. We construe the demand made by the claim auditor as a present demand, calling for present compliance or refusal.

Now, the examination which defendant had a right to demand was for an examination by a "medical adviser appointed by it." We should not consider that it was necessary that the medical adviser make the demand in person, if one were appointed and at hand for the purpose of performing the autopsy. But clearly a demand made by a claim auditor, with no "medical adviser" at hand, could avail nothing. This claim auditor was not a physician, and he had no physician with him. His testimony is that he had in mind one of the company's doctors located in Minneapolis, and who was in Minneapolis at that time. The autopsy must await his coming. The claim auditor testified that the autopsy could have been held before the time set for the funeral, but the evidence is conclusive that it could not. Compliance with his demand would have caused a delay in the funeral obsequies, the extent of which we have no means to determine. There was no reason why the demand could not have been made several hours earlier, if not the day before. The claim auditor had learned of the death of deceased nearly twenty-four hours before. From the early evening before, and for nearly fifteen hours, he had been within ten minutes' ride of the place where the body lay and where the widow and her near relatives were. Yet he deferred his visit and his demand until the eleventh hour, and presented his demand under circumstances which must inflict upon the widow, not only the distressing experience of an autopsy upon the body of her husband, but the harrowing ordeal of a suspension of the funeral as well. The policy should not be construed as giving the defendant the right to demand an autopsy under such conditions. The undisputed facts fail to sustain this ground of defense, and it is accordingly unnecessary to consider the propriety of the instructions to the jury on this subject.

The policy contained a provision that "no claim shall be valid unless written notice thereof shall be given the company . . . within twenty days from the date of death . . . unless such notice may be shown not to have been reasonably possible."

Notice of claim was made July 11th, more than twenty days after death. This failure to give notice of claim within the time prescribed in the policy is now asserted as a defense. There are several reasons why this defense is not available. We need mention but one. On July 21st, defendant replied to the notice given denying liability on the policy on the express ground that "the right which we have of holding an autopsy in case of death was denied us on June 18th." The denial of all liability on this ground alone was a waiver of the objection that notice was not given in time. 1 C. J. 480; Levine v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 66 Minn. 138, 146, 68 N. W. 855; Butler Bros. v. American Fidelity Co. 120 Minn. 157, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 609, 139 N. W. 355; Taylor-Baldwin Co. v. Northwestern F. & M. Ins. Co. 18 N. D. 343, 122 N. W. 396, 20 Ann. Cas. 432, note L.R.A.1915D.

438; Canadian R. Acci. Ins. Co. v. Haines, 44 Can. S. C. 386, 21 Ann. Cas. 916; Fisher v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 124 Tenn. 450, 511, 138 S. W. 316, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1246.

It is contended the court erred in permitting plaintiff to call Mr. Drennan for cross-examination under the statute. The party calling him did not seek to avoid his testimony, and the form of the questions propounded would have been proper if the witness had not been called for cross-examination. No reversible error can therefore be predicated upon the ruling. Leystrom v. Ada, 110 Minn. 340, 125 N. W. 507.

Order affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

McCOOK IRRIGATION & WATER POWER COMPANY

v.

PAULINE BURTLESS et al., Appts.

(— Neb. —, P. U. R. 1915C, 587, 152 N. W. 334.)

Irrigation company — regulation of rates.

1. An irrigation company is a "common carrier" of water to a limited degree, and its rates and charges are subject to regulation and control.

Public service corporation — regulation of rates — jurisdiction.

2. Jurisdiction to inquire into the reasonableness of water rates and to regulate and fix the same has, by the Constitution and statutes, been conferred upon the State Railway Commission.

Irrigation company — contract for rates — control.

3. Contracts between an irrigation company and water users under its ditch, providing for the use of water and for the maintenance of the ditch, are entered into with the law as to the right of the state to regulate rates forming a part of the contract, and such rates are subject to control.

Public service corporation — property rights — jurisdiction.

4. The Railway Commission is not vested with jurisdiction to settle disputed property rights as to the ownership of an irrigation canal.

(April 3, 1915.)

Headnotes by LETTON, J.

Note. — State regulation of rates of irrigation company.

The present note is supplementary to a note on the same question appended to Salt River Valley Canal Co. v. Nelssen, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 711.

APPEAL by respondents from an order of the Nebraska State Railway Commission granting complainant authority to charge respondents an annual maintenance fee of $2 per acre for water furnished to them. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. S. Morlan, for appellants:

The burden of maintaining the canal is on the ditch company by contract and law.

Farmers' & M. Irrig. Co. v. Hill, 90 Neb. 847, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798, 134 N. W. 929, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 524; 2 Wiel, Water Rights, 2d ed. § 1501, p. 2700.

The Commission should not entertain a complaint made by the ditch company of its own rate.

Fenton v. Tri-State Land Co. 89 Neb.

479, 131 N. W. 1038; 2 Wyman, Public Service Corp. note 1, § 1121, p. 998; 4 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1725, p. 3688; Condon v. New Rochelle Water Co. 136 App. Div. 897, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1119, affirming 116 N. Y. Supp. 142; Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. 183 N. Y. 330, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, 76 N. E. 211, 5 Ann. Cas. 504.

The ditch company did not make a sufficient statement to give its complaint consideration.

McCook Waterworks Co. v. McCook, 85 Neb. 677, 124 N. W. 100; State v. Adams Exp. Co. 85 Neb. 25, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 396, 122 N. W. 691.

The people have not granted the Commission power to create obligations, amend contracts, or make up the promoters' losses in

In Green v. Jones, 22 Idaho, 560, 126 Pac. 1051, the question involved was whether, under the statute, a water rate fixed by a board of county commissioners, and sustained by the courts, remained in force until a new rate was fixed. The statute provided that the commissioners, after hearing, should fix a reasonable maximum rate for water delivered from irrigation ditches, which rate should not be changed within one year; also that at the January session and at such other sessions as they deemed proper, the board should hear applications by any party interested in delivering water for irrigation or by parties consuming the water, the applications to be supported by affidavits showing reasonable cause for the board to proceed to fix a maximum rate of compensation for water delivered from irrigation ditches. In 1901 a maximum rate was established by a board of county commissioners, and sustained by the courts; in 1903 the irrigation company petitioned the board to establish a new rate, on the ground that the old rate was too low; the board entered an order fixing the same rate as had been fixed by the order of 1901, but the order of 1903 was set aside by the courts on the ground that the rate established was unreasonably low and would amount to a confiscation of the company's property without due process of law; no further application was made to the board for the fixing of any other rate. It was held that the rate fixed by the order of 1901 remained in force, and that the company could not compel consumers to pay a higher rate stipulated in a contract which the consumers had been compelled to sign to procure water during the pendency of the appeal from the second order of the board.

What is a reasonable charge for irrigation under a statute providing that such charges shall be reasonable has been said to depend largely on the cost of constructing and operating the irrigation works. Young v. Hinderlider, 15 N. M. 666, 110 Pac. 1045.

Under the California statute it was held in San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. L.R.A.191511.

Co. v. Stanislaus County, 155 Cal. 21, 99 Pac. 365, that where more than a year had elapsed after the fixing of the water rates, an irrigation company must first apply to the board of supervisors for re-establishment of rates which it claimed were unreasonable, before it could apply for relief to a court of equity. The statute authorizes boards of supervisors in the different counties to fix water rates so that the net annual receipts to the water companies shall not be less than 6 nor more than 18 per cent upon the value of their property, and provides that the rates so fixed shall be binding and conclusive for not less than one year after their establishment, and until established anew or abrogated; that at any time after the establishment of the rates they may be established anew or abrogated, the re-establishment or abrogation to take effect not less than one year after the first establishment, and that the board may, subject to the above limitation of one year, abrogate existing rates and establish other rates on the petition of consumers or of the irrigation company.

Under the California statute authorizing and requiring the boards of supervisors of the various counties to fix rates for irrigation companies so that the return shall not be less than 6 nor more than 18 per cent upon the value of the "canals, ditches, flumes, chutes, and all other property actually used and useful to the appropriation and furnishing of such water," the rule was laid down in San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Stanislaus County, 191 Fed. 876, that, in determining the value of an irrigation plant on which at least 6 per cent must be allowed, the cost of reproduction of the plant should be determined as of the date of the use in question, and that from this cost the depreciation that had occurred from age and usage should be deducted; also that the irrigation company was not entitled to have the water right valued in determining the value of the plant, upon which it was entitled to at least 6 per cent interest. On appeal, however, in 233 U. S. 454, 58 L. ed. 1041, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652, it was held by the Fed-an unsuccessful venture, or to fix irrigation rates.

Madison v. Madison Gas & Electric Co. 129 Wis. 249, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 529, 116 Am. St. Rep. 944, 108 N. W. 65, 9 Ann. Cas. 819; Re Kearney Water & Electric Powers Co. 97 Neb. 139, 149 N. W. 363; Cote v. Highland Park, 173 Mich. 201, 139 N. W. 69; Clague v. Tri-State Land Co. 84 Neb. 499, 133 Am. St. Rep. 637, 121 N. W. 570; Price v. Riverside Land & Irrigating Co. 56 Cal. 431; Jack v. Grangeville, 9 Idaho, 291, 74 Pac. 969; 3 Kinney, Irrigation, § 1381, p. 2499.

The enforcement of the order impairs the obligations of the contract between the ditch company and its customers, and deprives the customers of their property without due process of law.

Black, Const. Law, 3d ed. §§ 281-283, pp. 723, 728, 730, 731; 2 Wyman, Public Service Corp. § 1421, p. 1251; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Birmingham, 211 Fed. 497.

The control of the canal has passed from the ditch company to its customers.

La Junta & L. Canal Co. v. Hess, 6 Colo. App. 497, 42 Pac. 50; Blakely v. Ft. Lyon Canal Co. 31 Colo. 224, 73 Pac. 249; Wyatt v. Larimer & W. Irrig. Co. 18 Colo. 298, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280, 33 Pac. 144, 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906; 3 Kinney, Irrigation, 2d ed. § 1517, p. 2732; Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Lake Supply Ditch Co. 44 Colo. 214, 98 Pac. 729; Union Mill &

eral Supreme Court that notwithstanding the declaration in the Constitution of California that water appropriated for sale is appropriated to a public use, the water rights of an irrigation company acquired by prescription or by purchase should be included in the valuation of its property in determining whether the rates fixed by the board of supervisors would yield the 6 per cent return upon the value of the property to which the company was entitled under the California statute.

On a motion for a preliminary injunction in the above case, 163 Fed. 567, the rule was laid down that if a deduction is to be made from the value of the irrigation plant on account of deterioration, in fixing its value for the purpose of determining the rate, an allowance should be made for the deduction and added to the annual income so to enable the irrigation company to renew and reconstruct the plant and thereby preserve its integrity.

In considering the application for a preliminary injunction, the court in San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Stanislaus County, supra, indicated that, as regards the relative rates paid for water by consumers in different counties at various distances from the head works of the canal, a rate to the consumers in the county farthest from the head works less than that in a county nearer thereto would be unjustifiable, since the service to the consumers in the former county is of greater value, owing to evaporation and seepage of water in the canal.

Also in San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Stanislaus County, 191 Fed. 998, a motion for a preliminary injunction, in an action between the same parties involving other water rates, was denied.

An order of the board of county commissioners fixing the rate at which an irrigation company, a party to the proceeding, shall furnish water to consumers, cannot be collaterally attacked in a mandamus action brought by a consumer to compel the company to deliver water at the rate fixed. Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. v. Pouppirt, 47 Colo. 490, 108 Pac. 23. L.R.A.1915D.

Nor can the irrigation company defend such an action on the ground that the complainant has contracted with it for a higher rate than that fixed by the board. Ibid.

In an action between the same parties for damages on account of the irrigation company's failure to supply water, it was held in Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. v. Pouppirt, 22 Colo. App. 563, 127 Pac. 125, that the order of the board, fixing the maximum water rate at $1 per acre, was not void for uncertainty in not prescribing the amount of water which the company should be required to furnish to any consumer, where the statute provided that persons who had purchased and used water for irrigation from any ditch, and who had not ceased to do so for the purpose of procuring water from some other source of supply, should have a right to continue to purchase water to the same amount on paying the rate fixed by the county commissioners, and the amount of water to which the plaintiff was entitled was determinable from previous contract and recognized usage.

In Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. v. Pouppirt, supra, the court said there was no question that under the Constitution, statutes, and decisions of that state the irrigation company was required to carry and deliver water to the class of consumers named in the certificate of its incorporation for a reasonable maximum charge, to be fixed by the board of county commissioners, and that when such rate had been fixed it was binding upon the company until relief had been afforded in some appropriate proceedings; also that the company could not exact a bonus as a condition precedent of the right of a consumer to procure water.

Water rates to be charged by an irrigation company, fixed by a board of county commissioners, as provided by the Constitution of Colorado, cannot be attacked collaterally as unreasonable in an action by the company to recover an excess alleged to be due for a supply of water. McCracken v. Montezuma Water & Land Co. 25 Colo. App. 280, 137 Pac. 903.

Under the Constitution of Colorado neither the legislature nor any court has power

Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. 73; Broadmoor Dairy & Live Stock Co. v. Brookside Water & Improv. Co. 24 Colo. 541, 52 Pac. 792.

The regulation of a public service corporation is only to prevent it exacting unreasonable and unjust rates, not to better for it its unthrifty contracts.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; 4 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1725, p. 3699; Adinolfi v. Hazlett, 242 Pa. 25, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 88 Atl. 869; Elliott, Priv. Corp. 4th ed. § 91a, p. 97.

Mr. C. E. Eldred, for appellee:

The power given the Railway Commission to "regulate" rates includes the "fixing" of rates.

State ex rel. Hamilton County v. Ream, 16 Neb. 681, 21 N. W. 398; Higgins v. Mitchell County, 6 Kan. App. 314, 51 Pac. 72; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 16 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092;

Com. v. Bailey, 81 Ky. 395; Butte v. Pal-trovich, 30 Mont. 18, 104 Am. St. Rep. 698, 75 Pac. 521; Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144, 6 Pac. 142; 34 Cyc. 1029.

The State Railway Commission had jurisdiction and authority to regulate and fix the rates. The fixing and regulation of water rates is a governmental function, one of the police powers of the state, and is not suspended, except by express provision of the law. At the time the contracts were entered into the parties joining in the contracts were bound to know that the rates were subject to legislative control.

White v. Farmers' Highline Canal & Reservoir Co. 22 Colo. 191, 31 L.R.A. 828, 43 Pac. 1028; Brummitt v. Ogden Waterworks Co. 33 Utah, 289, 93 Pac. 828; Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 736, 77 C. C. A. 267, 147 Fed. 1; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Owensboro to fix a maximum rate to be charged by an irrigation company for the delivery of water; but such power is vested in the boards of county commissioners, to be exercised on the petition of an interested party. Ibid.

Under the Constitution and statutes of Idaho, declaring that the use of all waters appropriated for sale or distribution is a public use, subject to the control and regulation of the state, that the right to collect tolls for compensation for the use of water supplied to any county or its inhabitants is a franchise and cannot be exercised except in the manner prescribed by law, and authorizing the county commissioners to prescribe maximum rates for water delivered for irrigation purposes, an irrigation company cannot obtain a decree canceling a rate fixed by the commissioners, on the ground that it is too low and does not yield it just compensation, unless the rate would be too low as applied to the total number of acres irrigated; in other words, it cannot supply part of its consumers with water free or at an inadequate rate under contract, and secure the cancellation of the prescribed rate on the ground that, if such rate is applied to the balance of the irrigable land, its total income will not be just compensation. Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clarke, 65 C. C. A. 399, 131 Fed. 415.

It was held in Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clarke, supra, that although the year for which the board of county commissioners had fixed a water rate had expired, the court would entertain and decide an appeal from a decree upholding the rate, partly because a rate once fixed continued in force until changed as provided by law, and partly because of the necessity or propriety of deciding questions of law presented which might serve to guide the board when again called upon to act in the matter of fixing the rates.
L.R.A.1915D.

And the court in Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clarke, supra, approved the rule that if the irrigation plant was built for a larger area than it found itself able to supply, or if as yet it did not have the customers contemplated, it was not necessary to fix the rate so high that a reasonable return would be paid upon the entire investment.

A consumer, it was held in Jackson v. Indian Creek Reservoir Ditch & Irrig. Co. 16 Idaho, 430, 101 Pac. 814, may make a valid contract as to the amount of maintenance charge to be paid an irrigation company, under the Constitution of Idaho, providing that the legislature shall designate the manner in which reasonable maximum rates may be established for the use of water sold or distributed for any useful or beneficial purpose, and a statute providing that any person who may contract to deliver a certain quantity of water to any party shall deliver that same, and that the amount to be paid for such delivery, "which amount may be fixed by contract, or may be as provided by law," is a first lien upon the land irrigated. And the court said that even if the legislature had not expressly provided that the amount to be paid for water might be fixed by contract, the right so to contract existed, there being no constitutional or statutory inhibition against such contracts.

And it was held also in Jackson v. Indian Creek Reservoir Ditch & Irrig. Co. supra, that the consumer was not deprived of the right to contract as to water rates by reason of the fact that the legislature had provided a manner by which the rate to be charged for the use of water might be established upon application to the board of county commissioners.

R. E. H.

v. Owenaboro Waterworks Co. 191 U. S. 358, 48 L. ed. 217, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 82; State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Ct. 67 Wash. 37, L.R.A.1915C, 287, 120 Pac. 861, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 78; Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Tampa, 199 U. S. 241, 50 L. ed. 172, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 23; Neb. Const. art. 1, § 26; Wiloughby, Const. § 502; Black, Const. Law, 3d ed. §§ 287-291, p. 742; 4 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1377, p. 3714; Dawson v. Dawson Teleph. Co. 137 Ga. 62, 72 S. E. 508; Wiel, Water Rights, 3d ed. p. 1321; Kinney, Irrigation, 2d ed. p. 1382; Osborne v. San Diego Land & Town Co. 178 U. S. 22, 44 L. ed. 961, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; Portland R. Light & P. Co. v. Portland, 210 Fed. 668; Manitowoc v. Manitowoc & N. Traction Co. 145 Wis. 13, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1066, 129 N. W. 930; Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 155 Fed. 554.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A complaint was filed by the McCook Irrigation & Water Power Company before the State Railway Commission against 18 holders of water-right contracts under its canal, setting forth that the annual maintenance fee due from water-right holders to the company under the contracts was $1 per acre per annum; that complainant has not sufficient income therefrom to enable it to keep up and properly maintain the canal; that an increased charge is necessary, and that a charge of $2 per acre would be a reasonable rate, which it is entitled to receive. The prayer is that a hearing may be had and complainant be authorized to charge consumers an annual maintenance fee of $2 per acre, to be made to apply for water furnished for the year 1913. The respondents filed an answer denying the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission of the subject-matter of the complaint, which it is said is within the jurisdiction of the courts. The answer also pleads the failure of complainant to furnish sufficient water in the irrigation season of 1913; that it carelessly and negligently allowed the canal to become filled with weeds and debris, and to be obstructed, so that it failed to carry the amount of water to which the respondents' lands were entitled. It also pleads a number of acts of misconduct on the part of certain directors of the corporation whereby it is alleged they obtained special privileges and advantages, and charges general mismanagement. A hearing was had, and an order made allowing the complainant to increase its maintenance charges to $2 per acre per annum. The company was also required to set apart each year $4,500 for the operation, maintenance, and betterment of the ditch, and to place any unexpended portion of this amount in a reserve fund for use in emergencies. It was also ordered that a new set of books be opened containing certain specified entries, and that a daily record be kept during the irrigation season of the flow in the main canal and the distribution of water to the users. From this order respondents have appealed.

The principal contention of respondents is that the Commission has no authority to make an order releasing complainant from the provisions of the contracts; that the order deprives the defendants of their property without due process of law, and impairs the obligation of their contracts, contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of Nebraska, the Constitution of the United States, and of the 14th Amendment thereof. It is also said that the order is not supported by the evidence, and that under the covenants in the water deeds the title to the canal was and should be in its customers, since the whole amount of available water rights had been sold. These contentions will be considered in different order than presented.

1. The evidence conclusively shows that the rate of $1 per acre per annum is insufficient to maintain the canal, even after deducting certain charges criticized by the respondents, and that unless the complainant is allowed to increase the rate, it will be impossible to maintain the canal in a condition so that it will deliver water. The computations made by respondents and set forth in the reply brief, showing that the income is more than sufficient to meet expenses, are not accurate, since they include hundreds of dollars received from the sale of water rights. Such sums are no part of maintenance charges. The plan of the corporation, expressed in its deeds or contracts with holders of water rights, provides that when the water rights to the capacity of the canal have been sold and paid for, the canal becomes, by certain acts of its officers therein specified, the property of the water-right holders. Under such provision the money paid for a water right represents pro tanto a portion of the capital of the corporation. When the rights have all been sold, the title to the canal passes, but the title to the money remains in the corporation. It may not therefore be taken from the corporation without its consent to be used for maintenance. This is said, assuming, of course, that the prices paid have been fair and reasonable, and not padded to such an extent that it is seen that at least a portion of the cost of maintenance should be met from the excess charge. In this case, however, no such condition appears as to any of the respondents. Under the order made by the Railway Commission complainant is not allowed to squander or dissipate any sum realized from the increase in rates in excess of that actually expended each year for the maintenance of the ditch. Its books are subject to inspection, and if it should prove when further repairs have been made to the canal, or a more specific and detailed system of bookkeeping used, that the rate now fixed is excessive, it can be reduced upon proper application being made to that body.

2. It is strongly insisted that the evidence shows that all the available water which could be furnished has been disposed of under existing water-right contracts; that for that reason the consumers own the canal, and the complainant as a stock corporation has no interest in the property. This question involves the ownership of the property, and is one which the Railway Commission has no jurisdiction to hear or determine. If the facts warrant, proper relief may be afforded by appropriate proceedings in a court of equity.

3. Respondents insist that if the existing rate is unsatisfactory to the company, it cannot complain because it was competent, and under no restriction when it fixed the rate, and that regulation can only apply on the complaint of water users when they show the agreed rate is unreasonable. This involves the constitutional questions raised.

The crucial question is whether the rate of $1 per acre per year fixed in the contract is a property right with which the state, in the exercise of its regulatory power, cannot interfere. At the time the canal was built the practice of irrigation in this state was in its infancy; but from the very first the legislature recognized the public interest in the use of water from the streams of the state for irrigation purposes. It placed canal companies in the same class as railways and other common carriers, and it has uniformly been considered that their rates were subject to regulation and control. Cummings v. Hyatt, 54 Neb. 35, 74 N. W. 411; Castle Rock Irrig. Canal & Water Power Co. v. Jurisch, 67 Neb. 377, 93 N. W. 690; Farmers' Canal Co. v. Frank, 72 Neb. 136, 100 N. W. 286; Fenton v. Tri-State Land Co. 89 Neb. 479, 492, 131 N. W. 1038. At first no tribunal was provided which had the power to fix and establish rates, and the only remedy the consumer had was to apply to the courts to restrain unjust exactions or unreasonable charges; but afterwards by constitutional amendment and statute the State Railway Commission was vested with full power and authority to regulate and fix rates and charges so that they would be fair and equitable both to the consumer and to the corporation supplying the water. Const. art. 5, § 19a, Rev. Stat. 1913, §§ 3382-3384.

The question involved is an important one, and one as to which there has been some difference of opinion; but we believe the larger and broader view, that most consistent with the spirit in which the law of irrigation should be administered, and that to which courts are more and more tending, is that any contracts entered into between the irrigation company and consumers under the ditch, with reference to the annual rates which should be charged for the use of water, were entered into with the law forming a part of the contract, and were subject to legislative control. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Tampa, 199 U. S. 241, 50 L. ed. 170, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 23; Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Manitowoc v. Manitowoc & N. Traction Co. 145 Wis. 13, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1056, 129 N. W. 925; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; White v. Farmers' Highline Canal & Reservoir Co. 22 Colo. 191, 31 L.R.A. 828, 43 Pac. 1028. An interesting discussion of this topic with cases cited may be found in 2 Wiel, Water Rights, 3d ed. §§ 1315-1321.

If the canal company cannot receive sufficient money to keep the canal intact, the water supply must fail. The consumers will be direct sufferers from such a condition of affairs, but the state, which has granted the franchise to cross the lands of others, and has allowed the appropriation of public waters for the advancement of agriculture and the building up of prosperous agricultural communities, would also be injuriously affected by the failure of the enterprise. It is also worthy of consideration that if these contract holders are entitled to be supplied at the rate of $1 per acre, subsequent purchasers of water rights, if any, may be compelled to pay excessive rates in order to provide the necessary funds for maintenance. If the company should attempt to exact such rates, the question might arise whether such discriminatory charges could be upheld.

Osborne v. San Diego Land & Town Co. 178 U. S. 22, 44 L. ed. 961, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860, was a case brought by an irrigation company to settle the question whether it had authority to increase its water rates. The case was tried in United States circuit court and appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. The contract provided that the annual rate should be fixed by the company "as allowed by law." The company had for many years collected $3.50 per acre, and was now seeking to raise the rate to $7. The defendants claimed that the $3.50 rate had been fixed by contract, under the provisions of a statute which provided that until the rates "shall have been abrogated by such board of supervisors, as in this act provided, the actual rates established and collected by each of the persons, companies, associations, and corporations now furnishing, or that shall hereinafter furnish, appropriated waters for sale, rental, or distribution to the inhabitants of any of the counties of this state, shall be deemed and accepted as the legally established rates thereof."

The circuit court held that the question whether an increase to the proposed rate of $7 per acre was reasonable was not open to its decision, and that resort must first be had to the board of supervisors of San Diego county, the only body with power to fix rates. The Supreme Court affirmed this decree. In the opinion, speaking of the claim that the contract rates thus established could not be altered at the desire of the company, that they were property rights, and to change them would be violative of constitutional rights, the court said: "The purpose of the act rejects such view. Its purpose is regulation, deliberate and judicial, and periodical regulation by a selected tribunal, and we cannot believe that the legislature intends by an absolute and peremptory provision to fix rates upon the water companies unalterable by them, no matter what change in conditions might supervene. Against rates which may become unreasonably high, the statute gives relief to consumers through petition to the board of supervisors. Rates which may become unreasonably low it surely does not intend to impose on the companies forever, except as relief may come from the voluntary justice of its customers or by a violation of the statute and appeal to the courts."

We are aware that there are cases, in which the point was not directly involved, which seem to indicate that if the question were before it the court would have taken a contrary view to that taken here, but there are at least an equal number of cases, better reasoned, as we view the matter, holding practically in conformity herewith.

Holding the view that the contracts were entered into subject to the right of the state, in the exercise of its police power, to regulate and fix reasonable rates to be charged for the use of the water, the order of the Railway Commission does not take property without due process of law, and is not in violation of the Constitution of the United States, the 14th Amendment, or the Constitution of the state of Nebraska.

Many complaints of mismanagement and L.R.A.1915D.

of undue preferences in the sale of water rights and of other irregularities are made. For these a remedy exists in equity, and the Railway Commission is not vested with the power to settle and adjust the property rights involved.

The order of the Commissioners is reasonable and is affirmed.

Rose and Sedgwick, JJ., not sitting.

Petition for rehearing denied June 5, 1915.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES TURK, Resp't.,

v.

MARTIN BENSON, App't.

(30 N. D. 200, 152 N. W. 354.)

Abstracts — Liability of abstractor.

An abstractor is not liable for failure to show a judgment against William J. Rideout upon search for William G. Rideout.

(Goss, J., dissents.)

(April 10, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Pierce County in plaintiff's favor in an action to recover the amount of a judgment paid by plaintiff which was alleged to have been erroneously docketed by defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Torsen & Wenzel for appellant.

Mr. Albert E. Coger, for respondent:

It is the general rule, obtaining not only in the state of North Dakota, but generally, that the middle initial is no part of a Headnote by BURKE, J.

Note. — Certainty and accuracy as to Christian names or initials in record or index relied on as imparting constructive notice.

The early cases dealing with the question considered in the present note are gathered in the notes to Burns v. Ross, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 415, and Prouty v. Marshall, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1211, which this note supplements.

Generally as to liability of title abstractor, see notes to Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bank of Commerce & T. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 449; Stephenson v. Cone, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1207; and Anderson v. Spriestersbach, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 176.

As to effect of summons or notice to person by wrong initial, see notes to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hasenwinkle, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) person's name, and that a mistake with reference thereto is not material.

Johnson v. Day, 2 N. D. 295, 50 N. W. 701; Pollard v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co. 1 S. D. 570, 47 N. W. 1060; Stever v. Brown, 119 Mich. 196, 77 N. W. 704; Mosely v. Reily, 126 Mo. 124, 26 L.R.A. 721, 28 S. W. 895; Beattie v. National Bank, 174 Ill. 571, 43 L.R.A. 654, 66 Am. St. Rep. 318, 51 N. E. 602; Fincher v. Hanegan, 59 Ark. 151, 24 L.R.A. 543, 26 S. W. 821; Huston v. Seeley, 27 Iowa, 190; Pinney v. Russell & Co. 52 Minn. 443, 54 N. W. 484; Miltonvale State Bank v. Kuhnle, 50 Kan. 420, 34 Am. St. Rep. 129, 31 Pac. 1057; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 307; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 114; Laffin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler, 14 L.R.A. 690, note; People v. Lake, 110 N. Y. 61, 6 Am. St. Rep. 344, 17 N. E. 146; Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 333, 32 Am. Rep. 580; Allen v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 599; Felker v. New Whatcom, 16 Wash. 178, 47 Pac. 505; Long v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 665, 17 S. E. 197; State v. Martin, 10 Mo. 391; Re Snook, 2 Hilt. 568; Bletch v. Johnson, 40 Ill. 116; Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. 327, 10 L. ed. 478; Fink v. Manhattan R. Co. 29 N. Y. S. R. 153; Erskine v. Davis, 25 Ill. 255; Milk v. Christie, 1 Hill, 102; Morgan v. Woods, 33 Ind. 24; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Doherty, 23 C. C. A. 144, 39 U. S. App. 468, 77 Fed. 853; Rooks v. State, 83 Ala. 80, 3 So. 720; State v. Smith, 12 Ark. 622, 56 Am. Dec. 287; Hicks v. Riley, 83 Ga. 332, 9 S. E. 771; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, 24 N. E. 874; Schofield v. Jennings, 68 Ind. 232; Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451; State v. Bowman, 78 Iowa, 519, 43 N. W. 302; Nicodemus v. Young, 90 Iowa, 423, 57 N. W. 906;

129, and White v. Himmelberger-Harrison Lumber Co. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 151.

As to use of initials instead of Christian name in publication of process, see note to Butler v. Smith, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 436.

In a recent case, Loser v. Plainfield Sav. Bank, 149 Iowa, 672, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1112, 128 N. W. 1101, it was held that where a man is commonly known as "William" McGregor, the record of a mortgage in that name will be notice to a subsequent mortgagee taking a conveyance from him in the name of "J. W." McGregor, at least where the mortgage or the chain of title contains internal evidence that the grantor of the two instruments is the same.

And it has been held that the mere fact that the name of an heir is listed in the probate records in a certain form does not prevent a record of a conveyance by him of his interest in the estate, in another form, from being notice, to subsequent purchasers, of the former conveyance. Ibid.

And in another case, Stephenson v. Cone, 24 S. D. 460, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1207, 124 N. W. 439, it was held that an abstractor who Sparks v. Sparks, 51 Kan. 195, 32 Pac. 892; Nolan v. Taylor, 131 Mo. 224, 32 S. W. 1144; King v. Hutchins, 28 N. H. 561; Dilts v. Kinney, 15 N. J. L. 130; Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Silver Bow Abstract Co. 31 Mont. 448, 107 Am. St. Rep. 435, 78 Pac. 774; Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104, 19 N. W. 767; Security Abstract of Title Co. v. Longacre, 56 Neb. 469, 76 N. W. 1073; Hershiser v. Ward, 29 Nev. 228, 87 Pac. 171; United States Wind Engine & Pump Co. v. Linville, 43 Kan. 455, 23 Pac. 597; Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685, 22 L.R.A. 99, 32 Pac. 410; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115, 30 Pac. 545; Geller v. Hoyt, 7 How. Pr. 265; Clute v. Emmerick, 26 Hun, 10; Weber v. Fowler, 11 How. Pr. 458; Haverly v. Alcott, 57 Iowa, 171, 10 N. W. 328; Hibberd v. Smith, 50 Cal. 511; Gillespie v. Rogers, 146 Mass. 612, 16 N. E. 711.

Mr. T. A. Toner also for respondent.

Burke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In April, 1907, defendant Benson was a bonded abstractor, and as such prepared and certified an abstract of title for plaintiff to a certain lot which defendant was about to purchase from one William G. Rideout. At said time, there was in said county a judgment docketed against William J. Rideout upon which there was due the sum of $87.58. The abstractor knew neither the judgment debtor nor any person of the name of Rideout within the county, and certified that there was no judgment of record "against any of the within-named grantees, . . . which are liens on said premises." On the strength of this abstract, omits from a search of the real estate title of Edward J. B., a record of judgments against Ed. J. B. is liable to one having a right to rely upon his abstract who is injured by such omission, if the judgments are against the one whose title he was searching.

In First Nat. Bank v. Hocoda Mercantile Co. 169 Ala. 476, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 243, 53 So. 802, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 599, it was held that the recording of a chattel mortgage signed "W. H." McDonald did not constitute constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser in good faith that the instrument was executed by one whose name was William N. McDonald, and whose regular way of signing his name was "W. N." McDonald.

In Wicker v. Jenkins, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 366, 108 S. W. 188, where the statute required abstracts of judgments for record to state the names of the plaintiff and defendant, it was held not sufficiently complied with by giving the name of a plaintiff as W. B. F. Wicker, instead of W. F. B. Wicker, and no lien was held to be created thereby.

J. T. W.

plaintiff purchased the lot, and claims that he was later forced to pay the amount due upon the judgment because said judgment was a debt of William G. Rideout which had been erroneously docketed against an imaginary William J. Rideout. Plaintiff had judgment in the court below, and defendant appeals.

1. But one question is presented to us for decision, namely, whether it was the duty of the abstractor to show that there was a judgment docketed against William J. while making certificates relative to William G. Respondent relies largely upon the case of Johnson v. Day, 2 N. D. 295, 60 N. W. 701. He admits in his brief, however, that there has always been a division of the authorities as to the effect of the omission of, or mistake in, the middle initial, and further admits that in the case of Dutton v. Simmons, 65 Me. 583, 20 Am. Rep. 729, the court says: "But there has been a growing dissatisfaction with the doctrine of the ancient cases upon this subject; and in this state (and Massachusetts) the old doctrine must be regarded both by the precedents and practice as overruled." The trial court in his memorandum decision, although attempting to follow the Johnson-Day Case, recognizes the weight of the contrary doctrine and the fact that in the Johnson-Day Case the question at issue was between the parties to a mortgage; the rights of third persons not being involved.

Appellant cites a long line of cases showing that the ancient rule that the court would pay no attention to a middle initial has been largely, if not entirely, abrogated by the modern decisions. This is, of course, a natural consequence of the increase of population and the frequency with which persons appear with both Christian names and surnames identical. Aside from the distinction as to the age of the authority, there is a still further division of the cases along the lines of the extraneous knowledge of the person making the examination. Thus, if William G. Rideout had been served in a civil action with a summons in which his name had been erroneously written William J. Rideout, it is not likely that the proceedings would have been held to be a nullity, because certain duties devolved upon him by reason of the fact that he was made the recipient of a copy of the summons. For this very reason the case of Johnson-Day, supra, is not in point in this case, it being evident that a notice relative to mortgage wherein there was a description of the land, and page where it might be found in a certain book, and other means of identification, would not as readily be vitiated by an erroneous initial in the mortgator's name as would the judgment in the case at bar. In a case note at page 415 of volume 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) will be found a résumé of most of the cases in point upon this question. A perusal thereof will impress the reader with the necessity of considering the circumstances of each case, rather than relying upon any rule of law. The rule is likewise given in Cyc.: "The erroneous omission or introduction of a middle initial in defendant's name, or a mistake in such middle initial, will prevent the judgment from having effect as a lien." 23 Cyc. 1358 (ii) and note 40; Crouse v. Murphy, 140 Pa. 335, 12 L.R.A. 58, 23 Am. St. Rep. 232, 21 Atl. 358; Hutchinson's Appeal, 92 Pa. 186; Davis v. Steeps, 87 Wis. 472, 23 L.R.A. 818, 41 Am. St. Rep. 51, 58 N. W. 769; Wicker v. Jenkins, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 366, 108 S. W. 188; notes in 14 L.R.A. 394; and 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 416; Warvelle, Abstracts, §§ 466, 467; Johnson v. Wilson, 137 Ala. 468, 97 Am. St. Rep. 52, 34 So. 392; Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 9 L.R.A. 471, 25 N. E. 446; Phillips v. McKeig, 36 Neb. 853, 55 N. W. 259; Grundies v. Reid, 107 Ill. 304.

As stated in the note in 23 L.R.A. 818: "The general rule by which an initial of a middle name is regarded as no part of the name is denied application to the case of docketing a judgment for constructive notice."

Judgments stand in a class by themselves because there is no extraneous data from which the examiner can determine the identity of the person. In this it differs from chattel mortgages, where the searcher always has the description of the property covered thereby as a guide to aid him in determining the identity of the person executing the same. For these reasons we limit the application of this rule to judgments alone, leaving other questions to be determined when reached. In the case at bar there is nothing to indicate that William J. was the same and identical person as William G., the middle initials being different. Had one or the other of the initials been entirely omitted, and either the grantee of the deed or the judgment debtor been shown as simply William Rideout, a different state of facts would exist, and possibly it would be the duty of the abstractor to show the judgment. Upon this, however, we express no opinion. Under the existing facts, however, he was confronted with a name which, though similar, was yet complete, and distinctly different from the one for whom his search was being conducted, and he could not be expected to index this different name. If plaintiff's contention were adopted, it would cast upon the abstractor not only the duty of making search for similar names, but also the burden of determining the validity of the lien created by these judgments. This is not the contemplation of the law. The plaintiff herein, being a subsequent purchaser without notice, was under no obligation to pay such judgment. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 133, note 1, and cases cited.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to dismiss the action.

Goss, J., dissenting:

Did the judgment docketed in the name of Wm. J. Rideout operate to give constructive notice that the judgment was against Wm. G. Rideout, the true name of the judgment debtor, or put the searcher upon inquiry to determine the fact of identity? This precedent stops, not with the question of constructive notice concerning judgment dockets, but under our law as to filing of chattel mortgages also indexed only as against the mortgagor, our holding as to constructive notice will likewise apply to constructive notice afforded by the chattel mortgage indices of mortgagors, and either oblige a party to search, or relieve the party interested from search, with reference to the middle initial or name, according as this case is determined. The laws as to constructive notice afforded by tens of thousands of entries of record are thus in effect passed upon by this decision. This is mentioned that the importance of this precedent in business affairs may not be overlooked in connection with the policy of electing, if so it may be termed, which rule of several prevailing throughout the United States as to constructive notice concerning middle names shall be imputed by these records. Because of this the writer offers this dissent.

In order to avoid confusion in application of precedent, it is well to state some of the general rules to be deduced from decisions. It should be remarked that indices of real estate records, and decisions thereon concerning identity of names and initials or abbreviations for names, are not altogether precedent as to the rule of constructive notice to be here announced. Concerning real estate transactions the records compelled to be kept by law usually, if not always, afford a double check to the purchaser against error, inasmuch as in addition to the index by grantors and mortgagors there is the tract index, so that notice is afforded from indices of both the tract and the grantor. However, in the judgment docket, as in the index of mortgagors of chattel mortgages, the searcher or prospective purchaser must rely for notice upon the name alone, in the absence of any actual knowledge of the facts. Then again, L.R.A.1915D.

between the parties themselves the name or designation is wholly immaterial, as proof may supply identity, or actual knowledge may impute facts, or the parties may be estopped from asserting invalidity of or want of record notice. And the same is true in pleadings in both civil and criminal cases. While old decisions may be found requiring strictness of proof in criminal cases, they have long since ceased to be the law, and the matter has resolved to the mere question of identity of the party as the party served with process or charged with crime. So decisions on such matters are not precedent.

At common law there were but two material parts to a name, namely, the surname and the Christian name; the former the family name, the latter the baptismal name. No middle name was recognized at common law as the badge of identity, but strictness was required in the designation of both Christian and surnames, but the Christian name could be designated by initial or abbreviation and still impart constructive notice. Thus John Brown could be designated as J. Brown, and constructive notice in the latter would operate as well as in the former; but Jas. Brown could under no circumstances be held to impart constructive notice that the person intended was John Brown. Thus emphasis was laid at common law upon the correct designation of the Christian name or abbreviation for it. And such explains decisions like Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 9 L.R.A. 471, 25 N. E. 446, wherein a judgment against one William Mankedick was held not to charge constructive notice to a purchaser from Henry William or H. W. Mankedick, inasmuch as no notice could be imputed that they were in the same person, because the Christian name or initial standing therefor apparently designated a different person. To that extent there is unanimity in the holdings.

Some few states, as Wisconsin, base their holdings upon the letter of their statute, and are driven to what, in the absence of statute, can properly be designated as extremely technical or unreasonable holdings. The Wisconsin statute requires an entry to be made of "the name at length of each judgment debtor." Under this statute it was held, in Davis v. Steeps, 87 Wis. 472, 23 L.R.A. 818, 41 Am. St. Rep. 51, 58 N. W. 769, quoting from the syllabus: "A docket of a judgment against Edward Davis is not, under a statute requiring the entry to set out 'the name at length of each judgment debtor,' constructive notice to a bona fide purchaser of a judgment against E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis." Manifestly the statement of this holding condemns it as precedent where we have no statute requiring such a conclusion.

The Massachusetts rule is that, whether the record is right or wrong as a compliance with the statute, the loss must fall upon the purchaser. This is on the theory that the fault, if at all, must be held to be in the law as to constructive notice. If the law does not properly safeguard the purchaser, the fault is charged to the purchaser or the law, and not to prior parties. In Illinois the rule is that the law protects the purchaser of property by the title which "appeared of record," unless there was notice of something to the contrary. "Therefore one who made a loan in reliance on the record title was protected against a prior judgment against the owner by another name, although he was as well known by the latter as by the former" (note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) at page 417, and Grundies v. Reid, 107 Ill. 304), although in the case announcing that rule the decision could have been put upon common-law grounds that "Charles E." and "Conrad E." were not from constructive notice to be presumed to be the same person.

Maine, in Dutton v. Simmons, 65 Me. 583, 20 Am. Rep. 729, departed admittedly from the common law, and "the law of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of many, if not most, of the state courts in this country," and followed Massachusetts, which state had in Com. v. Hall, 3 Pick. 262, held that "Charles Hall" and "Charles James Hall" are to be regarded as different names.

Pennsylvania, in 1844, departed from the common-law rule in a per curiam opinion (Wood v. Reynolds, 7 Watts & S. 406) holding that a judgment entered against "John M. Gruver" in the name of "John Gruver" did not impart constructive notice. There was no discussion of cases attempted. It was later followed by a per curiam opinion in Hutchinson's Appeal, 92 Pa. 186, cited in the majority opinion. These cases were later overruled by Jenny v. Zehnder, 101 Pa. 296, wherein an entry on the judgment index as "F. Zehnter" was held to be notice to a purchaser of title from "John Jacob Frederick Zehnder," an extreme holding even under common-law doctrine. In this case an opinion was written. Later the Zehnder Case was expressly overruled in Crouse v. Murphy, 140 Pa. 335, 12 L.R.A. 58, 23 Am. St. Rep. 232, 21 Atl. 358, and that court reverted to its early rule, and held that where record title was in the name of Daniel J. Murphy, a judgment against Daniel Murphy did not attach to defeat a purchaser who, subsequent to the judgment and in ignorance thereof, bought from the judgment debtor. L.R.A.1915D.

name of Daniel J. Murphy; and in the opinion it is said that a judgment entered in the name of D. Murphy or Dan Murphy or Daniel Murphy is no notice to one who takes title from the same party as Daniel J. Murphy. And this is the only logical outcome of the holding in the instant case. If the change of the initial is material, to be consistent its omission must likewise be held to be fatal, and consistency is no less a jewel in judicial opinions than in demeanor. But in the recent decision of Burns v. Ross, 215 Pa. 293, 114 Am. St. Rep. 963, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 415, 64 Atl. 526, that same court holds "the record of a judgment against one whose Christian name is 'Francis,' if indexed under the name of 'Frank,' charges a prospective purchaser from the judgment debtor's heirs with notice of the existence of the judgment," on common-law reasoning concerning Christian names and their derivation, though in that jurisdiction the common law is repudiated as to middle names, or initials for middle names, the common law recognizing no middle name.

It is upon these Pennsylvania cases and that of Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 9 L.R.A. 471, 25 N. E. 445, heretofore discussed (which really turned upon a difference in Christian names, instead of the use of initials for middle names), upon which the text at 23 Cyc. 1358, is wholly based. It reads: "Further, the erroneous omission or introduction of a middle initial in defendant's name, or a mistake in such middle initial, will prevent the judgment from having effect as a lien."

This classifies and differentiates authority apparently sustaining the majority holding. It seems to me apparent that the weight of authority, as well as of reason, is to the contrary, and supports the judgment rendered. Nearly all the other jurisdictions hold to the common-law theory as declared in Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. 322-327, 10 L. ed. 476-479, that "the law knows of but one Christian name, and the omission or insertion of the middle name or of the initial letter of that name is immaterial."

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 307, says that "it is generally held that the law does not recognize a middle name, and therefore in a legal instrument an omission of the middle name or initial, or a mistake in such name or initial, or the insertion of a middle initial in a name which has only two members, is of no importance,"—citing cases from many jurisdictions: Fallon v. Kehoe, 99 Am. Dec. 347, and note (38 Cal. 44); Note to Choen v. State, 21 Am. Rep. 181; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hasenwinkle, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129, and note (232 Ill. 224, 83 N. E. 815); Fincher v. Hanegan, 24 L.R.A.

543, and note (59 Ark. 151, 26 S. W. 821); Beattie v. National Bank, 174 Ill. 571, 43 L.R.A. 654, 66 Am. St. Rep. 318, 51 N. E. 602, and note to Burns v. Ross, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 415.

These authorities cite many other cases. Last, but not least, this state, in Johnson v. Day, 2 N. D. 295, 50 N. W. 701, years ago elected to follow the common law: "It is now quite generally held that the omission of the middle initial, or a mistake in such initial, is entirely immaterial in legal proceedings, whether civil or criminal; the law recognizes but one Christian name." And in the syllabus of the case the statement is reiterated that "the law recognizes but one Christian name."

There is merit in respondent's contention that the statements in this holding have become a rule of property in this state, and it may have been under reliance thereon that plaintiff paid this judgment, assuming from the language and reasoning in Johnson v. Day that it was necessary to do so to protect his property. It has been held in State Finance Co. v. Halstenson, 17 N. D. 145, 114 N. W. 724, following similar reasoning, that the omission "of the initial letter [of the middle name] creates no doubt or suspicion as to the identity of the person, requiring extrinsic evidence to show identity," holding that a mortgage given by "Ole S. Ackerland" on land standing of record in the name of "Ole Ackerland" would be presumed to be given by the record owner; the court stating that "the use of the initial 'S.' in the mortgages, although it was not used in the patent, is immaterial. It is not an unusual occurrence to drop an initial in writing a name, and the authorities are general that such fact does not constitute a misnomer or variance,"—citing Johnson v. Day, supra.

In Styles v. Theo. P. Scotland & Co. 22 N. D. 469-479, 134 N. W. 708, it was held that a mortgage given by "Charlie" was not an instrument recorded without the chain of title which stood of record in the name of "Charles W. Goodman," citing Woodward v. McCollum, 16 N. D. 42, 111 N. W. 623.

As intimated at the beginning of this dissent, the rule announced in this case is bound to be precedent as to what constructive notice is imputed from the index of mortgagors of chattel mortgages. No fine-spun distinction consistently can be drawn between constructive notice imparted from a judgment docket and the constructive notice imparted from an index of chattel mortgagors. There is a lame attempt in the main opinion to make this distinction in the assertion: "Judgments stand in a class by themselves because there is no extraneous data from which the examiner can determine the identity of the person. In this it differs from chattel mortgages, where the searcher always has the description of the property covered thereby as a guide to aid him in determining the identity of the persons executing the same. For these reasons we limit the application of this rule to judgments alone, leaving other questions to be determined when reached."

This statement begs as well as befores the issue, because it is not the chattel mortgage that affords constructive notice, but the record of the indexing of it. When the searcher running through, not the mortgages, but the chattel mortgage index of mortgagors, discovers indexed a chattel mortgage given by W. J. Rideout upon a search of chattel mortgages for Wm. G. Rideout, the searcher must have the same right to rely or not upon whether the middle initial imparts notice, as he does in this instance where the judgment docket shows "Wm. J." instead of "Wm. G." It is the judgment docket which by imparting notice or not says he must or must not search further. Under the rule announced in the majority opinion, he need not consult the judgment or make further inquiry, something that must strike the ordinary man as permitting culpable negligence in a search of the records by one about to buy on the strength of them. It certainly renders an abstract of title a delusion and a snare. The rule is announced emphatically in 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 151, in the following language, every word of which is used advisedly, and is of importance as defining the rule governing searches of judgment dockets and chattel mortgage indexes both and alike: "The constructive notice which flows exclusively from the record cannot be more extensive than the facts stated therein, and must be understood to be only such notice as could have been obtained from an actual inspection of the record. A subsequent purchaser is entitled to rely upon the record, and cannot be charged with constructive notice of latent equities or facts not disclosed or suggested by the record itself."

If this be law, this decision will prove embarrassing the first time a subsequent encumbrancer in effect says to us that "following the rule announced in Turk v. Benson, I was under no obligation to look for a prior chattel mortgage upon this property, as the name of my mortgagor is Wm. G. Rideout, and the purported prior chattel mortgage in question that I did not look up was against Wm. J. Rideout."

It will be equally perplexing when the situation is presented to this court that arose in the leading cases followed by it, cited in the majority opinion from Pennsyl- vania and Wisconsin, and this court is asked to pass upon whether a judgment entered as against Daniel Murphy, judgment debtor, was a lien upon land owned of record in the name of Daniel J. Murphy but deeded out from under said judgment.

Again, the majority opinion attempts to hedge by the following statement contained in it: "Had one or the other of the initials been entirely omitted, and either the grantee of the deed or the judgment debtor been shown as simply Wm. Rideout, a different state of facts would exist, and possibly it would be the duty of the abstracter to show the judgment. Upon this, however, we express no opinion."

Why not express an opinion? Every case cited to support, and that does support, this holding, most emphatically expresses just that opinion. The trouble is the opinion and the holdings followed are so out of harmony with business usage and ordinary ideas of prudence that the majority opinion has seen fit to refrain from expressing an opinion upon something that the precedent cited and followed has held upon. To illustrate, examining the precedent cited: In Crouse v. Murphy, the holding is that "Daniel Murphy" is not "Daniel J. Murphy." In Davis v. Steeps, 87 Wis. 472, 23 L.R.A. 818, 41 Am. St. Rep. 51, 58 N. W. 769, from Wisconsin, it is expressly held that a judgment entered against "Edward Davis" is not constructive notice that the judgment debtor is "E. A. Davis" or "Edward A. Davis." Our court refrains from expressing an opinion upon this matter, but by the very fact of refusing to do so indicates that it may or may not follow in the future the same precedent it cites and follows as authority for this decision, upon which and similar precedent it justifies its departure in this case from the common-law rule. Grundies v. Reid, 107 Ill. 304, is cited, while Illinois, as heretofore stated, has a separate rule of its own. Likewise, too, Johnson v. Hess, the Indiana case cited, but followed the common law. In Phillips v. McKaig, a Nebraska case, found at 36 Neb. 853, 55 N. W. 259, cited in the majority opinion as authority, it is held that a judgment entered against "May Alley" was not constructive notice to a purchaser of the real estate from "Mary Ann Alley;" the decision could not have been otherwise and the common law been followed. In Johnson v. Wilson, 137 Ala. 468, 97 Am. St. Rep. 52, 34 So. 392, cited in the majority opinion, the following from the syllabus makes its citation seem strange: "The record of a mortgage executed in the name of A. W. Dixon is not constructive notice to purchasers for value that J. W. Dixon executed it." L.R.A.1915D.

This decision also but follows the common law. But in Johnson v. Wilson is found the following: "The case of Fincher v. Hanegan, 59 Ark. 151, 24 L.R.A. 543, 26 S. W. 821, cited by appellant's counsel, only involved a mistake in the initial letter of the middle name of the mortgagor. In that case the mortgagor executed the first mortgage by his true Christian name and surname. The court held the middle letter was immaterial, as the law recognizes but one Christian name. It is therefore not an authority upon the question here involved, if abstractly sound, of which we express no opinion."

That court there expressly refrained from venturing an opinion upon the very subject upon which the majority here cites and deems it an authority.

Wicker v. Jenkins, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 366, 108 S. W. 188, does squarely support the majority holding. It also cites and follows the same cases from Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Indiana as does the majority opinion. In that opinion is the following: "Would one in searching the record of this abstract know that 'W. B. F. Wicker' was the same person as 'W. F. B. Wicker'?" Ordinary prudence would seem to say, "Yes, ascertain the fact,—such similarity should invoke inquiry." Common law also answers, "Yes." If this be authority for its holding, evidently this court should also be prepared to hold that any transposition of middle initials destroys any presumption of identity. The L.R.A. notes cited in the majority opinion but classify the holdings, as has been attempted in this dissent, and but little if anything more.

To the writer it would seem that, if any departure from the common law is to be declared, it should be based upon the Illinois rule, wherein the record title of the real estate controls. The rule is arbitrary, but no more so than the hybrid or mongrel one that must be adopted wherever the common-law rule that the middle names or initial is immaterial is departed from. This decision seems to me to in effect at least overrule the basic reasoning in Johnson v. Day, and to demonstrate its fallacy by its attempt to draw distinctions, contrary to the very authorities upon which it is based. It can therefore result only in unsettling the prior settled and established law of this state upon a very important matter. But, whatever the effect of this precedent, it has been declared after thorough consideration. The writer is of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 26, 1915.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

STATE BAR COMMISSION EX REL. BEN
F. WILLIAMS

v.

P. M. SULLIVAN.

(35 Okla. 745, 131 Pac. 703.)

Attorney — disbarment — verification of specifications.

1. In disbarment proceedings instituted by the state bar commission by the order and direction of the supreme court, no verification of the specification of charges is necessary, under § 267, Comp. Laws, 1909.

Same — contradiction of specifications.

2. The sufficiency of the verification must be determined by an inspection of it, and the evidence of the affiant cannot be taken for the purpose of showing that he had no personal knowledge as to the charges.

Same — character of proceedings.

3. The right to practise law is not a vested right, but a mere privilege, and an action to disbar an attorney under § 267, Comp. Laws, 1909, is a civil proceeding, and the accused is not entitled to a trial by a jury as a matter of right.

Note. — Statute of limitations as a defense to revocation of physician's or attorney's license.

This note is supplementary to the note appended to State Medical Examining Board v. Stewart, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 557.

It is shown in the earlier note that the ordinary statutes of limitation do not apply to proceedings for disbarment of an attorney or revocation of the license of a physician. While no later cases involving revocation of licenses of physicians have been found, subsequent cases involving attorneys sustain the rule there stated.

Thus, in Re Leonard, 127 App. Div. 493, 111 N. Y. Supp. 905, affirmed without opinion in 193 N. Y. 655, 87 N. E. 1121, in which an attorney was disbarred because his admission to practice was procured upon a false certificate of practice and admission in another state, the court said: "Of course, there is no statute of limitations as affecting such a proceeding."

In Re Ramsey, 24 S. D. 266, 123 N. W. 726, it is held that an action for disbarment of an attorney for misconduct which occurred more than six years prior thereto was not barred by the lapse of time.

And in Re Crum, 7 N. D. 316, 75 N. W. 257, it was held that an action for disbarment was not barred by laches in prosecution of the charges where it appeared that the prosecution was diligent up to the point of presentation to the court, and that the delay was the fault of the court, and the court further said that they knew of no statute of limitations in the state that was applicable to such a proceeding.

In some cases, however, there are statutes of limitation expressly applying to proceedings for disbarment.
L.R.A.1915D.

Same — duty towards court.

4. The obligation which attorneys assume when they are admitted to the bar is not simply to be obedient to the Constitution and laws, but to maintain at all times the respect due the courts of justice and judicial officers; this obligation is not discharged by merely observing the rules of courteous demeanor in open court, but includes abstaining, out of court, from insulting language and offensive conduct toward the judges personally for their judicial acts. An attorney may criticize the courts so long as his criticisms are made in good faith and in respectful language, but the printing and publication of a pamphlet falsely, purposely, and maliciously attacking the integrity of the courts and the judges thereof, designed to wilfully, purposely, and maliciously misrepresent the courts and the judges thereof, and bring them into disrepute and lessen the respect due them, violates his duties and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, for which he may be disbarred.

Same — pleading — attack on judge.

5. Under § 266, Comp. Laws, 1909, an attorney cannot be suspended or disbarred for the filing of any pleading or exhibit in Under such a statute it was held in State Law Examiners v. Shimer, 131 Tenn. 343, 174 S. W. 1142, that the statute did not begin to run until knowledge of the fraud upon which the proceeding was based was brought to the attention of the board.

And in Re Mosher, 24 Okla. 61, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 530, 102 Pac. 705, 20 Ann. Cas. 209, it is held that in construing a statute of limitations it must, so far as affects rights of action in existence when the statute is passed, be held, in the absence of a contrary provision, to begin when the cause of action is first subjected to its operation, so that a statute which provided that all actions for suspension or removal should be brought within one year after the act charged was committed, and not thereafter, was held not to bar an action for disbarment of an attorney for misconduct which occurred more than one year prior to the bringing of the action, where the action was brought within one year after the statute took effect.

While the courts do not apply ordinary statutes of limitation to disbarment proceedings, they frequently take lapse of time into consideration in such cases.

Thus, in People ex rel. Colorado Bar Assn. v. Tanquary, 48 Colo. 122, 109 Pac. 260, the court dismissed a proceeding for disbarment of an attorney where the offenses complained of were shown to have occurred eight and one half years before any investigation thereof was made or prosecution begun, the court saying that that fact alone was, in their judgment, sufficient answer to the charges, and that it had ever been the policy of the court to discourage proceedings of that sort upon stale claims, and properly so, as a matter of common justice to the the courts of the state, but a petition, with a pamphlet attached thereto as an exhibit, falsely and maliciously attacking the courts of this state and the judges thereof, may be considered as evidence upon the question of the attorney's moral and mental fitness to practise law.

Court — power to disbar attorney.

6. The supreme court, having exclusive jurisdiction to admit attorneys to practise law, has, independent of statutory authority, the inherent power to disbar attorneys for misconduct.

(Headnotes 1-6 by DUDLEY, Special Judge.)

On Petition for Rehearing.

Same — authority to present charges for disbarment.

7. Proceedings to disbar an attorney cannot be defeated because the committee presenting the charges had no authority to do so from any other person or body.

Same — failure to order filing of charges.

8. Failure of the court to order the filing of charges for disbarment of an attorney is not available to accused after the court has taken jurisdiction and tried the case.

Same — degree of proof.

9. To disbar an attorney, his guilt of the charges presented against him need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Limitation of actions — disbarment proceedings.

10. A proceeding to disbar an attorney for conduct disrespectful to a constitutional court cannot be barred by a statute of limitations.

Election of remedies — libel and disbarment.

11. Proceeding against an attorney for criminal libel upon the court does not prevent his disbarment for the same offense.

Attorney — disbarment — notice of intention to render judgment.

12. Special notice to an attorney is not necessary before the rendition of a judgment disbaring him.

(Burford and Hubbell, Special Judges, dissent.)

(July 23, 1912.)

one charged, who otherwise might manifestly be placed at great disadvantage.

In People ex rel. Noyes v. Allison, 68 Ill. 151, the court, in dismissing an information for a rule upon respondent to show cause why his name should not be stricken from the roll of attorneys, said: "Nearly seven years have elapsed since the alleged misconduct. No explanation is given for the delay and the law will not favor the institution of prosecutions of this character after the lapse of such a great length of time. The charge is a serious one, and if respondent should be found guilty, the consequences would be most disastrous. The party whose rights are injuriously affected by conduct of the character alleged ought to be required to exhibit his information within a reasonable time, that the attorney implicated might be afforded an opportunity to make his defense while testimony for that purpose could be had. In analogy to our statutes which bar prosecutions for misdemeanors, there ought to be a limit as to the time in which informations could be filed."

In Re Whitridge, 162 App. Div. 884, 146 N. Y. Supp. 306, where the petitioner charged the respondent attorneys with unprofessional conduct, in that he had employed them to incorporate a mortgage insurance company, but that instead they made use of his ideas and plans and incorporated a company for their own benefit, which transaction took place twenty years prior to the filing of the petition for disbarment, it appeared that an action against the attorneys to recover damages for the alleged misconduct in the matter had been decided against the petitioner over ten years before the petition for disbarment was filed, and the decision affirmed by the highest court.

of the state, and petitioner had had ample opportunity to establish the truth of the charges if the respondents had been guilty of the fraud as charged—the court, in dismissing the petition, said that it was the petitioner's duty to present the facts to the court within a reasonable time after the alleged wrongful acts were committed.

In State ex rel. Jewett v. Clopton, 15 Mo. App. 589, it was held that while it was a misdemeanor for an attorney to agree with a witness who was beyond the jurisdiction of the court to give him a sum of money if he would give his deposition, payment being conditioned upon the success of the side of the cause represented by the attorney, nevertheless if the attorney's intention was to secure none other than truthful testimony, and the facts were at the time known to the relator, the attorney representing the other side of the cause, and no action was taken until five years thereafter, and then in consequence of ill feeling between relator and defendant, and it appeared that the latter had in the meantime conducted himself in an exemplary manner, and had maintained an honorable position at the bar, the court would dismiss the proceeding at the cost of the relator.

In State v. Hays, 64 W. Va. 45, 61 S. E. 353, affirming a judgment of disbarment of an attorney, it is held that misconduct such as affords a ground for disbarment is not subject to the defense of the statute of limitation as a matter of law, but the court says: "Clearly where evidence shows a turning of one from wrong to right, a 'living down' of gross errors after a sufficient length of time, in which there is a plain demonstration of such disposition to pursue the even tenor of his way, an at-

PROCEEDINGS for the disbarment of defendant. Judgment of disbarment. The facts are stated in the opinion. Mr. C. W. Stringer for plaintiff. Mr. James Twyford for defendant.

Dudley, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in this court by the state bar commission, on the relation of Ben F. Williams, against P. M. Sullivan, a member of the bar of this court and the inferior courts of the state, residing at Oklahoma City. The regular judges of the supreme court were disqualified, and this fact was certified by them to the governor of the state, who thereupon appointed five special justices of the supreme court to hear and determine this cause, who thereafter assembled at Oklahoma City and qualified as such, and heard the testimony in this case. Before proceeding to a discussion of the merits of the case, it becomes necessary to determine some preliminary questions raised and urged by counsel for defendant.

The specification of charges was filed January 13, 1912. The defendant was duly notified of the filing of the charges and furnished with a copy thereof, and in due course of time filed an answer to and an explanation of the charges and specification filed against him, to which the plaintiff filed a reply, by way of general denial. Upon the hearing of the cause, the defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the part of the plaintiff in support of the specification of charges, for the reason that the petition or specification of charges was not verified, as required by law, in that it was verified upon information and belief, and not positively, and thereupon C. W. Stringer, the attorney for the plaintiff, and the person who verified the specification of charges upon information and belief, asked leave of court to amend the verification of charges by making the verification positive. Leave was granted to do so and the amendment was made, and after the conclusion of the taking of testimony upon the part of the plaintiff the defendant again challenged the sufficiency of the verification of the specification of charges, for the reason that the testimony clearly showed that Mr. Stringer had no personal knowledge of the allegations contained in the specification of charges, and that by reason thereof the court did not have jurisdiction. The position of counsel for defendant is not well taken for two reasons: (1) This proceeding was commenced by the bar commission of the state of Oklahoma, by the order and direction of this court, and therefore, under § 267, p. 229, of Snyder's 1909 Compiled Laws of Oklahoma, it was not necessary for the specification of charges to be verified at all; and (2), even though it were necessary for the specification of charges to be verified, after the amendment was made as to the verification, it was then a positive verification, and its sufficiency must be determined by an inspection of the verification itself; and, even though it developed upon the hearing of the case (a point which we do not concede) that the person who made the verification did not have actual knowledge of the statements contained therein, this fact cannot be taken for the purpose of showing that he had no persontorney's name should not be stricken from the roll."

In Re Attorney, 39 U. C. Q. B. 171, the court, in refusing to take summary action against an attorney for past misconduct, said that even though the misconduct had been clearly proved, still the delay in making the application had been so great that it would not, in a matter of such serious consequences to the attorney, feel justified in proceeding further against him.

In an early case, Re —, 2 Barn. & Ad. 766, the court, in denying a motion to strike an attorney off the roll on the ground of misconduct and want of regular service and clerkship, said that, though the facts presented would have been a ground for opposing the admission of the attorney, or for an application to strike him from the roll if made very shortly after their occurrence, such as a month or two or a term or two after the admission, it came too late after the party had been admitted three and one-half years.

In People ex rel. Stead v. Phipps, 261 L.R.A.1915D.

Ill. 576, 104 N. E. 144, the court said that while they would not regard the fact that an attorney had misappropriated money eleven years prior to the bringing of an action for disbarment, which money had been repaid by his surety, as a wrong justifying disbarment or discipline, although, if it had been brought to the attention of the court at the time or soon thereafter, disbarment would have been inevitable, such conduct could not be overlooked or disregarded in view of subsequent acts of unprofessional or disreputable conduct which were proved.

In Re R. A. An Attorney, 6 Manitoba L. Rep. 601, where the court apparently takes the view that a proceeding to strike an attorney from the rolls should be commenced within a reasonable time, it is held that a delay of six months is not a bar to such a proceeding where an unsuccessful motion for an order to compel the attorney to answer has been made in the meantime.

R. L. S.

al knowledge. Re Collins, 147 Cal. 8, 81 Pac. 221.

It was also contended by the defendant that his right to practise law in the courts of this state was a vested right, and that therefore, as a matter of right, he was entitled to a trial by a jury in this court, upon the charges preferred against him, under chapter 56, p. 97, of the Session Laws of 1910, providing for trial by jury in this court. To this contention of the defendant we cannot agree. The right to practise law is not a vested right, but a mere privilege. 4 Cyc. p. 898, and cases cited; State ex rel. Mackintosh v. Roseman, 53 Wash. 1, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821, 101 Pac. 357, 17 Ann. Cas. 625. Section 268, p. 229, Snyder's 1909 Compiled Laws of Oklahoma, on the subject of "Trial in Disbarment Proceedings," specifically provides that the issues joined shall in all cases be tried by the court. This is a specific statute covering this class of proceedings, and should govern over the general statute. Section 1, chap. 56, p. 97, of the Session Laws of 1910, provides: "That in any cause now pending or hereafter brought in the Supreme Court wherein, said court is exercising its original jurisdiction in which an issue of fact is presented properly triable by a jury, and either party to said cause demands a jury trial, said court shall not dismiss such cause for the reason that a jury is required but shall proceed in the manner hereinafter prescribed." The issue of fact presented here is not properly triable by a jury for the reason that the special statute governing the trial of proceedings of this kind specifically provides that all questions of fact shall be tried by the court. The provision of the Constitution as to the right of a trial by a jury means the right of trial by jury as it existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Williams's Anno. Const. of Oklahoma, § 27, p. 15; State ex rel. West v. Cobb, 24 Okla. 662, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, 104 Pac. 361; Baker v. Newton, 27 Okla. 438, 112 Pac. 1034. A disbarment proceeding, under our statute, is a civil proceeding (Re Biggers, 24 Okla. 842, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, 104 Pac. 1083), and the right to a trial by a jury in a disbarment proceeding did not exist at the time of the adoption of the Constitution (Dean v. Stone, 2 Okla. 13, 35 Pac. 578). We therefore are clearly of the opinion that the defendant was not as a matter of law entitled to a trial by a jury, and his application was denied. This disposes of all preliminary questions raised and urged by the defendant, and we now proceed to a discussion of the merits of the case.

It is alleged in the specification of charges, L.R.A.1915D.

is not a fit and proper person to engage in the practice of law in this state, and should be disbarred, for the reason that he has been guilty of gross misconduct and has violated his oath and duty as an attorney and counselor at law. This paragraph is subdivided into five specific charges. However, we only deem it necessary to consider two of them, namely, the second and fifth, and we will therefore discuss them in their order. In the second subdivision of this general charge it is alleged that the defendant has been guilty of gross misconduct and violated his duty and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, in that he, within a year prior to the filing of the specification of charges in this court, falsely, maliciously, and without reasonable justification or excuse caused to be printed and published a certain book or pamphlet entitled "A Criminal Combine," consisting of the governor, the attorney general, the supreme court, district courts, district clerks, district attorneys, referees, perjurers, murder plotters, and crooks galore in the state of Oklahoma; that said book or pamphlet was printed and published by the defendant for the purpose of giving vent and expression to his own personal spleen and malice, and to excite and create an ill will and prejudice against the courts of this state and the judges thereof, and the other officers and attorneys mentioned in said publication. The defendant in his answer admitted the printing and publication of the pamphlet, but claims that the publication was in good faith and without malicious motives, and that the statements and allegations therein contained are true; he denies, however, that the pamphlet was printed and published at any time within one year prior to the filing of the specification of charges herein, and claims that, if he did violate any of his duties and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, he cannot be disbarred on account thereof, for the reason that the same is barred by the statute of limitations. In the fifth subdivision of the specification of charges it is alleged that the defendant has been guilty of misconduct and violated his duties and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law by preparing and filing in the district court of Oklahoma county, Oklahoma, a certain document styled a "Petition," in case No. 11,054, wherein he is a plaintiff and the Watch Tower Bible Tract Society and others, including the district, superior, and county judges of Oklahoma county, the district judge of Cleveland county, the judges of the supreme court, C. N. Haskell, governor, and Chas. West, attorney general, are defendants, in which he charges these defendants and others mentioned therein with a conspiracy to judicially rob him of certain real estate in Oklahoma City,

that the defendant

and in connection with this general charge of conspiracy he charges them with robbery, bribery, perjury, and numerous other offenses; that the preparation and filing of said pleading was not actuated by an honest purpose to present and state in said petition any issuable or triable matters of fact or law, but was prepared and filed maliciously and for the purpose upon his part to slander and libel said defendants and bring the courts of this state, and the judges thereof, and the other officers mentioned therein, into contempt, ridicule, hatred and malice, and to injure the defendants in their reputations as citizens and public officials. Defendant in his answer admits that he prepared and filed said petition, but claims that the statements and allegations therein contained are true; that he filed the action for the purpose of recovering the lands which he had lost by reason of the acts and conduct of the defendants, as therein stated; and that the filing of said petition was no misconduct upon his part, nor a violation of any of his duties and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, and, even if it were, he cannot be suspended or disbarred on account thereof under the statutes of this state.

We think the statements and allegations of the second and fifth subdivisions of paragraph 2 of the specification of charges are sustained by the testimony, and it therefore becomes pertinent to determine whether or not the conduct upon the part of the defendant, as set out in these two subdivisions, justifies his suspension or disbarment under the statutes of this state. Section 266, p. 228, Snyder's 1909 Compiled Laws of Oklahoma, enumerates three causes for which an attorney may be suspended or disbarred. The one applicable, if at all, to the facts in this case, is subdivision 3, which is, "For the wilful violation of any of the duties of an attorney or counselor." Section 257, p. 227, Snyder's 1909 Compiled Laws of Oklahoma, defines the duties of attorneys. The part of the statute applicable to the case at bar is: "Not to encourage either the commencement or continuance of an action or proceeding upon any motive of passion or interest." Section 255, p. 226, of Snyder's 1909 Compiled Laws of Oklahoma, prescribes the oath that attorneys and counselors at law of this state shall take in open court. The part of the oath applicable to this case is: "You shall not wittingly, willingly or knowingly promote, sue or procure to be sued, any false or unlawful suit, or give aid or consent to the same; you shall delay no man for lucre or malice, but shall act in the office of attorney in this court according to your best learning and discretion, with all good fidelity as well to the court as to your client." These are all of the sections of our statute that in any way apply to the facts and circumstances of this case; and, if the conduct of the defendant does not come within these provisions, then there is no statutory authority for his suspension or disbarment upon the charges brought against him.

The pamphlet or book referred to is a 36-page document, with defendant's picture on the front page. A mere casual reading of this pamphlet by one familiar with the judicial history of this state will convince him that it is a false, malicious, and unwarranted attack upon the courts and the judges thereof mentioned and referred to in the publication. It bristles with malice and hatred from start to finish, and was published for the purpose of creating an ill will and prejudice against the supreme court, the inferior courts, and the judges thereof mentioned therein. The pamphlet gives a detailed history of the proceedings instituted by defendant in the district court of Oklahoma county to recover a certain piece of valuable real estate located in Oklahoma City. The case, or some phase of it, has been before three or four district judges and as many special judges and referees, the superior and county judges of Oklahoma county, and the regular district judge and special judge, W. J. Jackson, of the district court of Cleveland county, and finally reached the supreme court, where the judgment of the district court of Cleveland county was reversed and a new trial granted. The publication charges every judge, special or regular, and the referees to whom said cause, or some phase thereof, has been referred, with a conspiracy to judicially rob the defendant of the piece of land in Oklahoma City, and in furtherance of this general conspiracy he charges them with bribery, perjury, and other crimes and misdemeanors too numerous to mention. Finally, after the case got into the supreme court, even though he secured a reversal, he takes exception to the action of the supreme court because they did not render a judgment in his favor on the merits of the case, and then proceeds to accuse them with bribery, forgery, perjury, and other serious charges. The publication, upon its face, is conclusive of the falseness and maliciousness of the statements therein contained. It would take too much space to refer to the various charges contained in this pamphlet, but the following paragraph from what is styled the "Introductory" in the publication is a fair index to the contents thereof: "And I know from a bitter, boycotted, persecuted experience that not only the supreme court, but the governor (C. N. Haskell), the attorney general, four district judges, two district clerks, three county attorneys, and other county and state officials of Oklahoma, are impure and guilty of many high crimes and misdemeanors in office for which they can and should be driven from power to prison." Upon the trial of the case the defendant offered no apology for the publication of the document, but asserted that the statements therein contained were true. This assertion, however, was made in his pleadings, and not under oath in open court, because he did not see proper to testify in his own behalf upon the hearing. An attorney has a right to criticize the courts of this state, so long as his criticisms are made in good faith and in respectful language and with no design to wilfully or maliciously misrepresent the position of the courts, or tend to bring them into disrepute or lessen the respect due them. Is this publication a criticism? Certainly not. It is a wilful, malicious, outrageous, and unwarranted attack upon the integrity of the courts of this state and the judges thereof, with the sole and only purpose of creating a feeling of ill will and prejudice against the courts of this state and lessening the respect due them. Freedom of speech is one of our boasted guaranties of liberty; but even this right should be curbed when the integrity of the courts is wilfully and maliciously assailed. The court has the inherent right to protect itself from such malicious attacks, and we think the publication of this pamphlet by the defendant a wilful violation of his duties as an attorney and counselor at law, in that it violates that part of his oath as an attorney which provides that he shall act in the office of an attorney according to his best learning and discretion, with all good fidelity as well to the court as to his client.

Our statute undertakes to limit the grounds upon which an attorney may be suspended or disbarred, and one of these grounds is the wilful violation of any of the duties of an attorney or counselor. The statute also in a general way defines the duties of an attorney, but it in no sense attempts to define and set out all of the duties of an attorney. An attorney is an officer of the court, and as such it is his duty not merely to observe the rule of courteous demeanor in open court, but also to abstain, out of court, from all insulting language and offensive conduct toward the judges personally for their judicial acts. 4 Cyc. 908. The oath which an attorney is required to take before being permitted to practise law in the courts of this state is not simply to be obedient to the Constitution and laws of the State, but to maintain at all times the respect due the courts of justice and judicial officers (Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646; Re Breen, 30 Nev. 164, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 572, 93 Pac. 997); and for a violation of these duties an attorney may be suspended or disbarred. The defendant in this cause has not shown the proper respect due the courts of this state and the judges thereof.

In the petition above referred to, which the defendant prepared and filed in the district court of Oklahoma county, he reiterates, to a very large extent, the contents of the pamphlet or book, and in fact attaches the pamphlet to the petition as an exhibit and makes it a part thereof, and asks judgment against the defendants, including the district, superior, and county judges of Oklahoma county, and the district judge of Cleveland county, and the members of the supreme court and others, for $250,000. It is insisted by counsel for defendant that he cannot be suspended or disbarred for filing a pleading in court under our statutes. This contention, we think, is correct, but we think the petition and the exhibit are competent evidence to be considered along with other evidence in the case, as affecting the defendant's mental and moral fitness to continue to practise law before the courts of this state. He certainly did not expect to recover a judgment against the judges of the supreme court and the inferior courts of the state. He evidently sought this means to harass and attack the courts of this state and the judges thereof with the hope that he might create a feeling of ill will and prejudice against them, and we think the pleading, with the exhibit attached thereto, is competent evidence upon the general charge of misconduct and moral fitness in the specification of charges.

The supreme court of this state has exclusive power to admit attorneys to practise law before it and in the inferior courts of the state; and, this being true, it has, independent and aside from the statutory grounds of disbarment, the inherent power to suspend or disbar attorneys. Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 646; 4 Cyc. 905; Re Newby, 76 Neb. 482, 107 N. W. 850; Re Robinson, 48 Wash. 153, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 525, 92 Pac. 929, 15 Ann. Cas. 415; Re Wilson, 79 Kan. 450, 100 Pac. 75; Re Durant, 80 Conn. 140, 67 Atl. 497, 10 Ann. Cas. 539; Re Breen, 30 Nev. 164, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 572, 93 Pac. 997; Re Ebbs, 150 N. C. 44, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 892, 63 S. E. 190, 17 Ann. Cas. 592; Re Thatcher, 80 Ohio St. 492, 89 N. E. 39; Re Egan, 22 S. D. 355, 117 N. W. 874; Danforth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 119 N. W. 1021, 20

Ann. Cas. 418; Underwood v. Com. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 32, 105 S. W. 151; Re Simpson, 9 N. D. 379, 83 N. W. 541; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Burr, 19 Neb. 593, 28 N. W. 261; State v. Mosher, 128 Iowa, 82, 103 N. W. 105, 5 Ann. Cas. 984.

After a thorough consideration of all the testimony in this case, we are of the opinion that his conduct is such that he is not a fit and proper person to practise law in the courts of this state, and that his license should be revoked.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the license of the defendant to practise law before this court and the inferior courts of this state be and the same hereby is revoked, and that the costs in this case be taxed against the plaintiff.

Johnson and Zevely, Special Judges, concur.

Burford, Special Judge, dissenting:

I regret that I am unable to concur in the judgment pronounced by the majority of the court. In my judgment the defendant Sullivan is not a fit or proper person to engage in the practice of law in the state of Oklahoma, but I cannot come to the conclusion that under the laws in force in this state there is authority for disbarment.

The charges against defendant, when reduced to their ultimate conclusion, charge him with being mentally and morally unfit to engage in the practice of law. This charge is based upon the publication of two certain pamphlets reflecting in the most bitter and malicious way upon the various courts of this state. Sufficient substance of these pamphlets is set out in the majority opinion of the court. Assuming with the court that the publication of these pamphlets within the period of limitation and their falsity have been properly established, I yet cannot conclude that they constitute proper grounds for disbarment. Section 266 of Snyder's Statutes (Comp. Laws 1909) provides in part: "The following are sufficient causes for suspension or revocation: First, when he has been convicted of a felony under the laws of Oklahoma, or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in either of which cases the record of conviction is conclusive evidence. Second, when he is guilty of a wilful disobedience or violation of any order of the court requiring him to do or forbear any act connected with or in the line of his profession. Third, for the wilful violation of any of the duties of an attorney or counselor: Provided, that whenever any act is done by the attorney for an honest purpose or with the intent to discover the truth in some matter heretofore being litigated and pending in any tribunal at the time the acts were done, or to prevent litigation, then they shall not be grounds for revocation or suspension of the attorney's license. The filing of any pleading or exhibit in court shall not be cause for suspension or revocation of the attorney's license, but may be punished as a contempt and according to the laws governing proceedings in contempt cases. An attorney's license shall not be revoked or suspended for any cause or in any manner except as provided in this chapter of the statutes of this state as amended by this act." It is not charged that the defendant has been convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. It is not charged that he has been guilty of any wilful disobedience or violation of any order of court. The charges, therefore, cannot be brought under the first or second subdivision of the statute. Has he been guilty under the third subdivision, to wit, of any wilful violation of the duties of an attorney or counselor? These duties are specifically set out in § 257 of Snyder's Statutes (Comp. Laws 1909) as follows: "(1) It is the duty of an attorney and counselor while in the presence of the courts of justice or in the presence of judicial officers engaged in the discharge of judicial duties, to maintain the respect due to the said courts and judicial officers, and at all times to obey all lawful orders and writs of the court. (2) To counsel and maintain no actions, proceedings or defenses, except those which appear to him legal and just, except the defense of a person charged with a public offense. (3) To employ for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to him such means only as are consistent with truth and never to seek to mislead the judges by any artifice or false statements of facts or law. (4) To maintain inviolate the confidence, and, at any peril to himself, to preserve the secrets of his client. (5) To abstain from all offensive personalities, and to advance no fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness unless required by the justice of the cause with which he is charged. (6) Not to encourage either the commencement or continuance of an action or proceeding from any motive of passion or interest. (7) Never to reject for any consideration personal to himself the cause of the defenseless or the oppressed." I cannot conceive that the publication of a pamphlet outside of court which makes unwarranted reflections upon the courts and the officers thereof can be construed to come under any of the seven subdivisions of the duties of an attorney as specified in the statute. The defendant has perhaps failed to maintain the respect due to courts and judicial officers, but this failure was not charged or proven to be in the presence of any court, and the statute specifically limits the application of such language to conduct in the presence of judicial officers. The majority of the court seem to place the alleged misconduct of the defendant under the subdivision "not to encourage either the commencement or continuance of an action or proceeding upon any motive of passion or interest." I cannot agree that the publication and circulation of this pamphlet encouraged the commencement or continuance of any action or proceeding. It is charged that such pamphlet was filed in the district court of Oklahoma county, attached as an exhibit to a pleading. Section 266 expressly provides that the filing of a pleading or exhibit shall not be cause for suspension or revocation of an attorney's license, and I cannot conclude that the publication and circulation of this pamphlet outside of court would in any way have affected the commencement or continuance of any action or proceeding whatsoever.

I am forced to the conclusion, therefore, that the defendant's conduct does not constitute a violation of any of the duties of an attorney as prescribed by our statutes, and that, therefore, neither of the three statutory causes of disbarment have been proven against him. Nor can I agree with the court that the inherent power exists in the supreme court to disbar an attorney for other than the grounds laid down in the statute. Undoubtedly, at common law, inherent power existed in courts of record to suspend or disbar the attorneys practising before such court when the power of admission was vested in the court exercising the power of disbarment. Undoubtedly, at common law, the publication of a false and malicious pamphlet reflecting upon the courts, as does the one in the case at bar, would constitute proper grounds for disbarment. Perhaps the weight of authority is to the effect that, where statutes have been passed merely declaring what shall be grounds for disbarment, without any prohibition therein contained, the courts may continue to exercise the inherent power of disbarment for causes other than those named in the statute, upon the principle and assumption that the grounds named by the statute are not intended to be exclusive. But our statute specifically provides that "an attorney's license shall not be revoked or suspended for any cause or in any manner except as provided in this chapter of the statutes of this state as amended by this act." I have been unable to find a single adjudicated case that goes so far as to hold that such a statute may be empt aside and declared invalid and the court proceed to exercise the power of disbarment which formerly inhered in it. A few cases touching upon this subject will be noted.

In the case of Re Lambuth, 18 Wash. 478, 51 Pac. 1071, cited in the case of Re Robinson, 48 Wash. 153, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 525, 92 Pac. 929, 15 Ann. Cas. 415, the court, speaking of the power of disbarment, says: "But power to strike from the rolls is inherent in the court itself. No statute or rule is necessary to authorize the punishment in proper cases. Statutes and rules may regulate the power, but they do not create it." If the statute may regulate the power of this court, then it is apparent that the legislature has, in as strong language as could be used, limited the power to disbar to the causes named in the statute.

In Re Peyton, 12 Kan. 404, Judge Valentine says that the power to disbar "is a necessary incident to the proper administration of justice; that it may be exercised without any special statutory authority, and in all proper cases, unless positively prohibited by statute." Here the judge, even while asserting the inherent power of the court, recognizes the power of the legislature to prohibit the exercise of it.

In Re Smith, 73 Kan. 743, 85 Pac. 584, the supreme court of Kansas, in declaring that a court may punish for causes other than those enumerated in the statute, shows the reason of the rule: "As will be observed, the statute does not provide that the only causes for which the license of an attorney may be revoked or suspended are those specified in . . . [the statute] nor does it undertake to limit the common-law power of the courts to protect themselves and the public by excluding those who are unfit to assist in the administration of the law. It merely provides that certain causes shall be deemed sufficient for the revocation or suspension of an attorney's license." In this state the legislature has prescribed the only causes for which a license may be revoked or suspended.

In Re Mills, 1 Mich. 392, where it is held that the statutory grounds are not exclusive, the court, in discussing the statute, says: "That the legislature never intended to withhold from our courts the exercise of a power so necessary to preserve the administration of justice from pollution, and the public from imposition." In this state, on the contrary, the legislature has expressly said that it intended to withhold this power.

In Delano's Case, 58 N. H. 5, 42 Am. Rep. 555, the court says that the act of the legislature was not intended to be exclusive.

In State v. McLaugherty, 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407, the court holds that the statute, there in force is applicable only to a proceeding for disbarment, whereas the proceeding being considered was one for suspension.

In Bar Asso. of Boston v. Greenhood, 168 Mass. 169, 46 N. E. 568, the court holds that, there being no prohibition in the statute, the grounds therein set up will not be held to be exclusive.

Similar adjudications may be found in Sanborn v. Kimball, 64 Me. 140; Serfass's Case, 116 Pa. 455, 9 Atl. 674; State ex rel. Johnson v. Gebhardt, 87 Mo. App. 542, and others.

In no case which I have been able to examine has the court held, in the face of a prohibition such as is contained in our statute, that the inherent power of the court to disbar continued. On the other hand, in Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 243, 85 Am. Dec. 62, the court, speaking of attorneys and their duties, said: "The manner, terms, and conditions of their admission to practice, and of their continuing in practice, as well as their powers, duties, and privileges, are proper subjects of legislative control to the same extent and subject to the same limitations as in the case of any other profession or business that is created or regulated by statute."

In Re Collins, 147 Cal. 13, 81 Pac. 222, the court said: "Whatever the rule may be in the absence of statutory regulations as to the power of courts to deprive attorneys of their license for causes which, in the judgment of the court, may warrant that action, we are satisfied that, when the legislature has specified the acts for which an attorney may be disbarred or suspended, the court is not authorized to act for other causes, or warranted in invoking an asserted implied power to remove for causes not specified in the statute; that the legislature has the power to regulate the causes for which a disbarment or suspension of an attorney may be had; and that the courts are bound by this regulation and the limitation it imposes."

In Re Eaton, 4 N. D. 514, 62 N. W. 597, the court said: "Where the statute enumerates grounds for disbarment of an attorney, no other ground can be considered by the court."

To the same effect is Ex parte Schenck, 65 N. C. 353; State v. Byrnett, 4 Ohio Dec. 89; Ex parte Smith, 28 Ind. 47; Kane v. Haywood, 66 N. C. 1; Ex parte Trippe, 66 Ind. 531.

Both under principle and authority I am unwilling to concede the power of this court to sweep aside the specific language of the legislature acting upon a matter which I believe to be within its power. It is to be regretted that such a law is upon our statute books; but, finding it there, in my judgment the courts must leave the remedy to the people and the legislature, rather than to their own power. Even under the statute as it exists, the facts alleged in the petition for disbarment constitute a crime of which the defendant might regularly have been indicted and convicted, and such conviction would have operated as a conclusive ground for disbarment in this court.

I am therefore forced to dissent from the judgment of the court that the defendant be disbarred.

Hubbell, Special Judge, concurs in dissent.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Zevely, Special Chief Justice, on November 22, 1912, handed down the following opinion:

The respondent was tried before this court composed of five special justices upon the charge of uttering a document defamatory of and grossly disrespectful to the five regular justices of this court. He was adjudged guilty and disbarred from practice, and he now files an application for rehearing based on 13 several grounds, which will be discussed seriatim.

1 and 9. It is contended by respondent that his right to practise his profession as an attorney is property, and that under the due process of law provision of the Constitution he could not be deprived of such property without a jury trial. Conceding for the sake of argument, without deciding, that this professional capacity is property, a jury is not indispensable in a trial for disbarment. That he is not entitled to a jury has been expressly decided by the highest authority, which we are content to follow. Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 288, 27 L. ed. 552, 562, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Davis v. State, 92 Tenn. 643, 23 S. W. 62; People ex rel. Moses v. Goodrich, 79 Ill. 148; Re Shepard, 109 Mich. 633, 67 N. W. 972. Nor are we aware of any authority in conflict with this view.

2 and 3. If the bar commission is not a legal entity, its relator, Ben Williams, must be deemed sole complainant. As he is a natural person, capable of making the complaint, it is immaterial whether he or the bar commission is to be deemed the complainant. But this is not technically a suit by the complainant; the only purpose of requiring a complainant at all is to have a moral sponsor for the charges who shall be responsible for costs if cast therefor. Nor is it material whether the committee presenting the charges had authority to present them from any other person or body. Fairfield County Bar v. Taylor, 60 Conn. 14, 13 L.R.A. 769, 22 Atl. 442. In that case the court, by Andrews, Ch. J., said: "It was the duty of the attorneys, if they knew of unprofessional conduct by the appellant or any other attorney, to bring it to the attention of the court. An appointment by the bar to do that which it was their duty to do without any appointment could give them no added authority. Nor was any such appointment necessary to give the court jurisdiction. The court might summon the appellant to a hearing upon any information it had that it deemed worthy of credit, whether it came from lawyers or laymen. The manner in which the proceeding should be conducted, so that it be without oppression or injustice, was for the court itself." Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

4. It is complained that the supreme court does not appear to have ordered the filing of the charges. There is no merit in this contention especially at this late day. The court has taken jurisdiction of the charges and had a trial, which is a sufficient authorization for all practical purposes. The lack of a prior formal authorization works no prejudice to defendant, even if one was necessary, which we do not decide. If this objection is worthy of consideration at all, it should have been interposed in limine.

5 and 6. These grounds complain that the complaint is brought by Ben Williams on behalf of the bar commission, and that the charges are sworn to by one Stringer. It is not essential to jurisdiction to hear this case that the original petition should be sworn to. Even if necessary to be sworn to, the oath of Stringer was enough, though upon information and belief. Re Shepard, 109 Mich. 633, 67 N. W. 972. Nor was the objection asserted in limine, as it should have been to be available.

7. The contention that the guilt of the respondent should be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, as in criminal cases, is not sound. "In the case of Ex parte Wall, supra, the Supreme Court, in speaking of this question, said: 'The proceeding is in its nature civil, and collateral to any criminal prosecution by indictment. The proceeding is not for the purpose of punishment, but for the purpose of preserving the courts of justice from the official ministrations of persons unfit to practise in them.' In the case of People ex rel. Shufeldt v. Barker, 56 Ill. 299, the supreme court of that state, with reference to such a proceeding, said: 'The respondent, in express terms, denies the charge exhibited against him, and to overcome this express denial there ought to be required more than a mere preponderance of evidence. A charge so grave in its character, and so fatal in its consequences, ought certainly to be proved by what the law denominates a clear preponderance of the evidence.' Those courts recognize in this rule, as we believe, that the proceeding is a civil one, and not a criminal one." Re Brown, 2 Okla. 590, 39 Pac. 469.

8 and 12. Nor is the offense with which respondent was charged barred by limitations. While there may be some classes of offenses which may be barred by limitations, this is not one of them. In speaking of a similar charge against an attorney for disrespectful conduct towards the court, the supreme court of California said: "As to the objection made that the offenses charged are barred by the statute of limitations, it appears that the acts complained of were committed some three years since. We do not understand that a charge of this kind can be barred by the statute of limitations, or that it should be, under any circumstances. The fullest opportunity should be given to investigate the conduct of an attorney who is charged with a violation of his duties as such; and while this court might not be willing to disbar or suspend an attorney if it appeared that there had been unreasonable delay in the presentation of the charges, so that a fair opportunity could not be had for procuring the witnesses and meeting the accusation, we are not prepared to say as a matter of law upon this demurrer that the accusation is barred either by the express terms of the statute of limitations or by analogy." Re Lowenthal, 78 Cal. 427, 21 Pac. 7. This court in the case of Re Mosher, 24 Okla. 61, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 530, 102 Pac. 705, 20 Ann. Cas. 209, quoted the language of the California court with approval when discussing the identical statute of limitations now invoked by respondent.

There has not been cited to us, and we doubt that there can be found, any authority sustaining a plea of statute of limitations to a proceeding for disbarment upon charges of conduct disrespectful to the court. The authorities rather sustain the contention that the courts have inherent power to protect their own dignity and enforce respect and punish disrespect from the attorneys practising therein. Re Brown, supra; People ex rel. Moses v. Goodrich, 79 Ill. 148; Beene v. State, 22 Ark. 157. "It is a general rule that the legislature is powerless to interfere with the jurisdiction, functions, or judicial powers conferred by the Constitution upon a court, nor can it diminish, enlarge, transfer, or otherwise infringe upon the same." 11 Cyc. 706. "While the statutes of many of the states authorize the suspension or removal of attorneys upon specified grounds, it has generally been held that such statutes do not restrict the general powers of the court over attorneys, who are its officers, and that they may be removed for other than statutory grounds." [4 Cyc. 905.]

Our own Constitution emphasizes the independence of the three great departments of government, each from the other, by § 1 of article 4, reading as follows: "Section 1. The powers of the government of the state of Oklahoma shall be divided into three separate departments: The legislative, executive, and judicial; and except as provided in this Constitution, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of government shall be separate and distinct, and neither shall exercise the powers properly belonging to either of the others." It may be difficult to lay down any general rule, applicable to all cases, defining the exact boundaries between the power of the courts established by the Constitution and the power of the legislature with reference to the admission to practice and disbarment of attorneys, who are officers of the courts. There may be a broad field of operation for proper legislative enactment upon this subject without encroaching upon the inherent powers of the court to protect its own dignity from contemptuous assault. The legislature, in creating statutory offenses meriting disbarment, may conceivably prescribe proper rules of limitation, especially in courts of statutory creation. Without attempting to decide anything but the pending case, we lay down the principle that the legislature has no power to fix a limitation, either as to time or upon the power of this court, that could be set up in bar of this prosecution. It would be intolerable if the attorneys, who are officers of the court, could treat the court with pronounced disrespect and be immune from disbarment by reason of the lapse of short time or other technicality. This court is established by one Constitution, and it is not competent for the legislature to abolish it directly or indirectly, nor can it take away from this court those powers which inhere in similar courts at common law and which vested in it by virtue of its very establishment by the Constitution. If it were competent for the legislature to enact that such offenses could not be punished by disbarment after one year, they could put a limitation of one day as well, and thus practically abolish the inherent power of the court to protect itself from further assaults by disrespectful practitioners. We cannot admit that the legislature has power to encroach upon the inherent constitutional powers of this court, and are persuaded that by the enactment of the act of limitation invoked in this case the legislature had no intention L.R.A.1915D.

of giving the statute such an application as would so encroach.

Even if the legislature had the power and intended the act of limitation to apply to charges of disbarment for conduct disrespectful to the courts, it may well be doubted whether it would apply in the present case. The act complained of was a case of the publication of a document in its nature grossly libelous of the regular members of this court. So long as the document remained in circulation, it was a continuous offense against the dignity of this court, and the offense cannot be said to be ended within the meaning of an act of limitation so long as it is outstanding, unexpressed, and unatoned for. The first utterance of the offensive matter may constitute offense sufficient to merit punishment, but its continuous remaining in the state of offense is none the less an affront to the dignity of the court. It would be possible, if defendant's contention is correct, to give wide circulation in remote localities to a libelous document grossly disrespectful to the court which might impair the usefulness of the court, and yet not be punishable, because not brought to the court's attention within the short period of limitation. The affront to the court's dignity and the tendency to impair its usefulness and to weaken the confidence of the people in it by means of the libel takes place whether the court knew of it or not, and the power of the court to protect itself from such indignities should not be made to depend upon the fact or quickness of discovery of it. The court should not tolerate at its bar anybody who is now disrespectful or has at any time in the past been guilty of disrespectful conduct not fully excused or punished.

For the reasons just stated, we must also overrule the contention that the court is limited in its disciplinary power to the grounds and remedies indicated by statute. The statutory provisions are wise, but are merely cumulative, and do not impair the inherent constitutional power of the court to deal with such contempts in a proper, though nonstatutory, way. In Wyoming an attorney was charged with applying vile epithets to the court out of its hearing, and the defendant was disbarred. The court, per Lacey, Ch. J., said: "Our statute provides that this court 'may revoke or suspend the license of any attorney or counselor at law to practise therein, . . . fifth, for the wilful violation of any of the duties of attorney or counselor.' The statute does not define the duties of an attorney or counselor. We have also a general statute adopting the 'common law of England, as modified by judicial decisions,' and expressly providing that that common law 'shall be considered as of full force until repealed by legislative authority.' Comp. Laws, p. 193, § 1. The duties of an attorney in this territory are therefore the same as under the common law, his first duty being to the court of which he is an officer. 'The obligation which attorneys impliedly assume, if they do not by express declaration take upon themselves, when they are admitted to the bar, is not merely to be obedient to the Constitution and laws, but to maintain at all times the respect due to courts of justice and judicial officers. This obligation is not discharged by merely observing the rules of courteous demeanor in open court, but it includes abstaining out of court from all insulting language and offensive conduct towards the judges personally for their judicial acts.' Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 335, at page 355, 20 L. ed. 646, 652. The fountain of the power of the courts to remove attorneys, as exercised at common law, is Stat. 4 Henry IV., chap. 18, which is as follows: 'And if any such attorney be hereafter found notoriously in any default of record or otherwise he shall forswear the court and never after be received to make any suit in any court of the King. They that be good and virtuous and of good fame shall be received and sworn at the discretion of the justices, and, if they are notoriously in default, at discretion may be removed upon evidence either of record or not of record.' It seems to us that the power to remove under our statute, and the causes sufficient for removal, are as broad and comprehensive as at common law. Further, so far as questions now arising in this case are concerned, there is nothing in our statute, either expressly or by implication, repealing the common law." Re Brown, 3 Wyo. 121, 4 Pac. 1085, 1087, 1088.

10. In this tenth ground for the motion for rehearing defendant says: "That the record and undisputed evidence in this case shows that defendant was arrested for libeling the courts and judges here complained of and in the book here complained of, and his case was set for trial before a jury on October 11, 1910, in the county court of Oklahoma county, and these courts and judges by their attorney came into court on the day of trial, and, against the protest L.R.A.1915D.

of the defendant, dismissed the cases, . . . and we submit that these courts and judges having elected their remedy and voluntarily abandoned it, this proceeding should be dismissed." It must be manifest that no other courts or attorneys could make an "election" that would deprive this court of its inherent disciplinary power to purge its rolls of attorneys of unworthy members, nor can it be seriously contended that this court made or estopped itself by an appearance (if such can be imagined) in the nisi prius court referred to. It appears that the charge in the court referred to was a simple charge of criminal libel upon which defendant could have been punished on proof of guilt, without impairing the power of this court to disbar him. In the dismissal of the criminal charge in the nisi prius court defendant was more fortunate than deserving.

11. The defendant's eleventh contention is highly technical and without merit. Though the court sustained a motion to make allegations more definite and certain, the allegations which were the subject-matter of the motion were not abandoned or thereby put out of court. Defendant's failure to insist upon compliance therewith operated as a waiver thereof. It is evident that the defendant was not misled or prejudiced by any obscurity, indefiniteness, or uncertainty therein, and he points out none such in the motion for rehearing.

13. Respondent objects that he was not present when the decision of this court was rendered. He was within the jurisdiction of the court, and it was his duty to attend upon it. There is no law requiring special notice to him that the court will render a judgment in his case. He has every right he would have had were he present, and is not injured even by his own neglect to be present. He also complains that only two of the five special justices were "present and concurring when said decision was handed down." The fact is, and the record shows, that a quorum of the court was present and concurring in the decision at its rendition. Neither law nor custom require a majority of the court to announce a decision in chorus. This objection is obviously without merit.

The application for rehearing is overruled.

INDEX TO NOTES

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Abutting owners. Rights of, see HIGHWAYS.		Liability of foreign corporation which has complied with conditions of doing business in state to attachment as nonresident 116
Acceptance. Of offer, see CONTRACTS.		Attorneys. Statute of limitations as to defense to disbarment 1218
Accident insurance. See INSURANCE.		Attractive nuisance. Doctrine of, as applied to walls, fences, etc. 160
Action or suit. By stockholder, see CORPORATIONS.		Automobiles. Validity of excise or license tax upon motor vehicles 322 Prohibition or regulation of garage 603 Operating automobile on highway with- out license 628 Liability of owner, upon the ground of dangerous agency; or of negligence in intrusting car to incompetent or negligent person, for injuries in- flicted while latter is operating car for his own purposes 691 Defendant's violation of law as affect- ing defense of contributory negligence 968
Act of God. Burden of proof when the defense in an action to recover for loss or in- jury to goods during carriage is act of God or vis major 547		Autopsy. Validity, construction and effect of provision in accident insurance policy as to 1109
Administration. Of decedents' estates, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.		Banks. Right of bank officer or employee to refuse to disclose state of depositor's account 1061 Right of bank to contradict entries in its books or statements in public reports 935 Payment of money deposited on joint account 920 Duty of a depositor having a checking account with a bank to examine pass book and vouchers upon their return from the bank 741 Rights, against receiver, as to paper deposited before, but not collected at the time, the bank closed its doors 402
Adultery. Effect of fact that but one of the par- ties is married upon the offense of "adultery" within the penal statutes 438		Bible. Reading of, in schools, see SCHOOLS.
Allowance. To executor de son tort , see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.		Bills and notes. Duty of government official to know sig- nature of drawer of draft 797
Ancillary administration. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
Animals. See also HORSES. Liability of a carrier for injury or damage inflicted by an animal which escapes from its custody or control 564 Liability for injury of live stock upon one side of fence by live stock on other 1074
Appeal and error. Right of receiver to appeal 802 Effect of judge communicating with jury not in open court 719
Architect. Right of, to mechanic's lien 204
Assessments. For public improvements, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Attachment. Property exempt TIONS. L.R.A.1915D.	see EXEMP.

- Is officer or employee of corporation chargeable with its knowledge of infirmities in commercial paper purchased from it 1099
- Bonus.
Right of directors to vote bonus. to officers as compensation for services 632
- Breach of promise.
Promise of marriage as within statute of frauds as to contracts not to be performed within a year 1190
- Buildings.
Prohibition or regulation of garage 603
- Burglary.
Breaking out as the equivalent of breaking in for purposes of burglary or housebreaking 972
Breaking as affected by defendant's authority to enter building 1015
- Business.
Transaction of, under assumed name, see NAME.
- By-laws.
Of insurance company, see INSURANCE.
- Carriers.
Liability of a carrier for injury or damage inflicted by an animal which escapes from its custody or control 564
Liability of a carrier for injury to passenger by latent defect in car 305
Sudden stopping of train in an emergency as negligence toward passenger 368
Duty and liability to passenger who boards a train that does not stop at his destination 705
Liability of carrier in respect of property which it accepts improperly packed or crated 1077
Burden of proof when the defense in an action to recover for loss or injury to goods during carriage is act of God or vis major 547
Presumption and burden of proof as to carrier's negligence or lack of negligence in case of contract limiting its liability 644
Power to require establishment of union station 98
Power to compel change of location of railroad station 91
- Chattel mortgage.
Priority of lien for services on personal property over prior chattel mortgage 1149
- Civil rights.
Validity of segregation statute or ordinance prohibiting persons of different race or color from living in same locality 684
- Collections.
By bank, see BANKS.
L.R.A.1915D.
- Commerce.
Attachment or garnishment of foreign railroad car 838
- Compensation.
Of corporate officers, see CORPORATIONS.
- Compulsory education.
See SCHOOLS.
- Condemnation.
Of property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.
- Conditions.
In insurance policy, see INSURANCE.
- Conspiracy.
Indictment, of woman transported in violation of the white slave traffic act, for conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States 281
- Constitutional law.
Power to prohibit the keeping of intoxicating liquor irrespective of any intention to sell it in violation of law 172
Validity of statute or regulations affecting right to practise dentistry of one who has practised in another state 538
Constitutionality of statute requiring preliminary apprenticeship or experience for railroad employees 677
- Contempt.
Misconduct toward witness as contempt of court 569
Right of bank officer or employee to refuse to disclose state of depositor's account 1061
- Contracts.
Limiting liability of carrier, see CARRIERS.
Effect of duress on validity of, see DURESS.
Of married woman, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Combinations between persons or corporations in restraint of trade, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.
Specific performance of, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.
Right to accept offer after submitting counter proposition 145
Promise of marriage as within statutes of frauds as to contracts not to be performed within a year 1190
Validity of contracts made by individual or partnership under an assumed name in violation of statute 988
Typewritten matter as written or as printed matter within rule that written shall prevail over printed provisions in case of conflict 1084
- Contribution and indemnity.
Between sureties, see PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Corporations.

- Is officer or employee of corporation chargeable with its knowledge of infirmities in commercial paper purchased from it 1099
- Right of directors to vote bonus to officers as compensation for services 682
- Liability of directors under statute purporting to make them liable for contracting debts in excess of a fixed limit 1028
- Fraud as a ground of release from subscription to stock after insolvency of corporation 792
- Specific performance of contract for sale of stock in corporation 300
- Delivery of certificate of stock without indorsement or transfer on books 738
- Right of minority stockholder to compel corporation to take into its own name stock in another corporation which it is carrying in the names of others 1128
- Right of stockholder in mutual irrigation company to maintain action against the company for negligent failure to furnish water 292
- Accretions in value of corporate assets as basis of dividends 1052
- Liability of foreign corporation which has complied with conditions of doing business in state to attachment as nonresident 116

Counties.

- Right of state to authorize or direct diversion of county funds to purpose other than that for which collected 274

Courts.

- Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.

Covenants.

- In lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Criminal law.

- See also ADULTERY; BURGLARY; HOMICIDE; PROSTITUTION.
- Indictment, of woman transported in violation of the white slave act, for conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States 281
- Waiver of presence of accused at time of receiving verdict upon trial for felony 817

Crossings.

- Accidents at railroad crossings, see RAILROADS.

Curtsey.

- Rights of husband as tenant by the curtesy initiate 996

Damages.

- Right to compensation building taken in proceedings for fixtures in eminent domain 492

L.R.A.1915D.

- Condition of place of imprisonment and treatment while in custody as elements of damages in action of malicious prosecution or false imprisonment 621

Dangerous agency.

- Automobile as, see AUTOMOBILES.

Debtor and creditor.

- Sale of real estate in state other than decedent's domicile to pay debts 754
- Effect of intermarriage between debtor and creditor upon the indebtedness 1126

Decedents.

- Administration of estates of, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Declarations.

- Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

Deeds.

- Effect of deed on one who signs, but is not named in, it 196
- Meaning and effect of term "lend" or "loan" employed in a deed or will 496

Dentists.

- Validity of statute or regulations affecting right to practise dentistry of one who has practised in another state 538

Deposit.

- In bank, see BANKS.

Depot.

- See CARRIERS.

Descent and distribution.

- Admissibility of declarations of relatives of claimant upon the issue of his relationship or heirship to decedent 215

Directors.

- Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Disbarment.

- Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

Discrimination.

- By public service corporation, see PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Dividends.

- On corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.

Divorce and separation.

- Effect of, on rights of beneficiary under insurance policy or benefit certificate 130
- Character of residence essential to give jurisdiction in divorce proceedings 852

Duress.

- Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative 1118

Easements.

- Tax sales as cutting off easement 1115

Electric lights.

Right of electric light company to discriminate between consumers as to rates

1086

Emergency.

Sudden stopping of train in an emergency as negligence toward passenger

368

Eminent domain.

Right of railroad company to compensation for the crossing of its track, where it intersects a street or highway, by an electric road

843

Right to compensation for fixtures in building taken 492

Estoppel.

Right of bank to contradict entries in its books or statements in public reports

935

Right of lessor to maintain an action for possession against his covenant not to disturb lessee's possession when the covenant is repugnant to the estate granted

467

Evidence.

Presumption and burden of proof as to carrier's negligence or lack of negligence in case of contract limiting its liability

644

Burden of proof when the defense in an action to recover for loss or injury to goods during carriage is act of God or vis major.

547

Admissibility of declarations of relatives of claimant upon the issue of his relationship or heirship to decedent

215

Declarations explaining why person injured or killed was at place of accident as res gestæ

503

Evidence as to results of use of substance upon issue as to breach of warranty as to ingredients

875

Excise.

See LICENSE.

Execution.

Exemption from, see EXEMPTIONS.

Executors and administrators.

What assets will give jurisdiction to appoint administrator

856

Sale of real estate in state other than decedent's domicile to pay debts

754

Allowance to executor de son tort of disbursements or payments

948

Exemptions.

Selection of exempt property

381

False imprisonment.

Measure of damages for, see DAMAGES.

Fences.

Doctrine of attractive nuisance as applied to 160

L.R.A.1915D.

Fictitious name.

See NAME.

Fire insurance.

See INSURANCE.

Fixtures.

Right to compensation for fixtures in building taken in eminent domain proceedings

492

Flood

Duty of warehouseman to protect goods against 726

Foreign corporations.

See CORPORATIONS.

Forfeiture.

Of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

935

Forgery.

Payment of forged paper by bank, see BANKS.

467

Fraternities.

See SECRET SOCIETIES.

Fraud.

Fraud as a ground of release from subscription to stock after insolvency of corporation

792

Freight carriers.

See CARRIERS.

547

Fright.

Of horse on highway, see HIGHWAYS.
Right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act

830

Garage.

Prohibition or regulation of garage

603

Garbage.

Monopoly in disposition of, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

875

Garnishment.

Of foreign railroad car

838

Gas.

In mines generally, see MINES.

Consumer's right to compel gas company to respect rates stipulated in contract with municipality

911

Right of gas company to discriminate between consumers as to rates

1086

Gift.

Delivery of certificate of stock without indorsement or transfer on books

733

Greek letter fraternities.

See SECRET SOCIETIES.

Highways.

Use of automobiles on, see AUTOMOBILES.

Negligent driving on, see NEGLIGENCE.

- Does the fact that one is prevented by an unlawful obstruction from using a highway cause him a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer 142
- Liability of successor of railroad company for damages to abutting property from construction of road in street 397
- Liability of municipality for injury to person or property of one driving over defective highway where his horse is frightened without fault of either party 243
- Liability for frightening horses by paper or other objects liable to be set in motion by wind 617
- Homestead.
Conveyance of homestead by husband after abandonment by wife 551
- Homicide.
Negligence of physician 201
- Horses.
Liability for frightening horses by paper or other objects liable to be set in motion by wind 617
- Hospitals.
Liability of proprietor of private sanitarium or hospital for negligence of nurse or attendant 384
Liability of hospital contracting to provide medical or surgical attention 884 Liability for detaining patient at hospital against his will 611
- Hours of labor.
See MASTER AND SERVANT.
- Husband and wife.
As to adultery, see ADULTERY.
As to curtesy, see CURTESY.
Effect of intermarriage between debtor and creditor upon the indebtedness 1126
Liability of married woman for necessities purchased by her 1184
Right of husband to recover for loss of consortium through personal injury to wife 524
- Infants.
As to doctrine of attractive nuisance, see NEGLIGENCE.
- Injunction.
Right of citizen or taxpayer to enjoin waste or unlawful expenditure of state funds 178
- Insolvency.
Of bank, see BANKS.
Of corporations generally, see CORPORATIONS.
As to receivers, see RECEIVERS.
- Insurance.
Subsequent by-law excluding or reducing liability in case of suicide 1095
L.R.A.1915D.
- Mortgage or instrument given as security as breach of condition as to sole and unconditional ownership 812
- Effect of provision permitting temporary removal of property from place of insurance designated in policy, after a permanent removal from that place 230
- Use of engine on farm premises as violation of general provision in fire policy against increase of risk or specific provisions relating to engines 187
- Accident insurance: validity, construction, and effect of provision in policy as to autopsy or examination of body of assured 1199
- Extent of loss or mutilation contemplated by provision as to loss or removal of bodily member or part thereof 264
- Accident insurance: provision for forfeiture or reduction of benefits in event of injury while engaged in more hazardous occupation, or variations of that provision, as applied to occasional or temporary acts 812
- Effect of divorce on rights of beneficiary under insurance policy or benefit certificate 130
- Interest.
As to usury, see USURY.
- Interstate commerce.
See COMMERCE.
- Intoxicating liquors.
Power to prohibit the keeping of intoxicating liquor irrespective of any intention to sell it in violation of law 172
- Irrigation.
Right of stockholder in mutual irrigation company to maintain action against the company for negligent failure to furnish water 292
State regulation of rates of irrigation company 1205
- Joint deposit.
See BANKS.
- Judge.
Libel or slander in imputing misconduct to 578
- Jurisdiction.
In divorce proceedings, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.
To appoint administrator, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
- Juror.
Libel or slander by imputing misconduct to 578
- Jury.
New trial for matters pertaining to, see NEW TRIAL.
Charging jury on Sunday 861

Landlord and tenant.

Right of lessor to maintain an action for possession against his covenant not to disturb lessee's possession, when the covenant is repugnant to the estate granted

467

Lease.

Oil and gas lease, see MINES.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Legislature.

Power of legislature to compel payment by municipal corporations of nonlegal demands

927

Right of state to authorize or direct diversion of county funds to purpose other than that for which collected

274

Levy and seizure.

As to exemptions, see EXEMPTIONS.

Attachment or garnishment of foreign railroad car

838

Libel or slander.

Liability of employers other than proprietor of publication, for libel by employee

867

Imputing misconduct to judicial officer or juror

578

License.

Of physician, see PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Operating automobile on highway without license

628

Validity of statute or regulation requiring procuring of state license by dentist who has practised in other state

538

Validity of excise or license tax upon motor vehicles

322

Liens.

Of taxes, see TAXES.

Right to lien for repairs or other services under contract with purchaser under conditional sale.

1141

Priority of lien for services on personal property over prior chattel mortgage

1149

Life insurance.

See INSURANCE.

Limitation of actions.

Statute of limitations as a defense to revocation of physician's or attorney's license

1218

Limitation of liability.

By carrier, see CARRIERS.

Live stock.

See ANIMALS.

Local improvements.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Location.

Of insured property, see INSURANCE.

L.R.A.1915D.

Malicious prosecution.

Measure of damages for, see DAMAGES.

Is the question of probable cause for the court or jury

1

Marriage.

Breach of promise of, see BREACH OF PROMISE.

Effect of intermarriage between debtor and creditor upon the indebtedness

1126

Married women.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Master and servant.

Constitutionality of statute requiring preliminary apprenticeship or experience for railroad employees

677

Construction, applicability, and effect of hours of service laws

408

Necessity of, and time for, acceptance of resignation by employee of a private employer

477

Liability of employer, other than proprietor of publication, for libel by employee

967

Mechanics' liens.

Right of architect to mechanics' lien

204

Mines.

Pollution of stream by mining operations

911

What constitutes a gas well within an oil and gas lease

1186

Mistake.

In name, see NAMES.

Monopoly.

Power of municipal corporation to grant exclusive right or create monopoly for removal of substances inimical to health

209

Trading stamp contract as a monopoly

520

Mortgage.

Effect of, on one who signs but is not named in it

196

As breach of condition in insurance policy as to sole and unconditional ownership

812

Usury in mortgage as affecting rights of purchaser or redemptioners under foreclosure

349

Right of mortgagor or owner of equity of redemption to contest validity of tax paid by mortgagee

432

Motor vehicles.

Validity of excise or license tax upon motor vehicles

322

Municipal corporations.

Liability for injury by defects in highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Power of legislature to compel payment by municipal corporations of nonlegal demands

927

- Power of municipal corporation to grant exclusive right or create monopoly for removal of substances inimical to health 209
- Validity of segregation ordinance prohibiting persons of different race or color from living in same locality 684
- Violation of ordinance by operator of automobile as affecting defense of contributory negligence 968
- Violation of ordinance giving one vehicle right of way over another as affecting liability for injury 1021
- Name.
- Validity of contracts made by individual or partnership under an assumed name in violation of statute 988
- Right of individual to change name or to transact business and make contracts under an assumed name 982
- Certainty and accuracy as to Christian names or initials in record or index relied on as imparting constructive notice 1211
- Negligence.
- In use of automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.
- Of depositor, see BANKS.
- Of carrier, see CARRIERS.
- Evidence in action for, see EVIDENCE.
- Negligent homicide, see HOMICIDE.
- Or hospital attendants, see HOSPITALS.
- In operation of railroad trains, see RAILROADS.
- Of warehouseman, see WAREHOUSEMEN.
- Doctrine of attractive nuisance as applied to walls, fences, etc. 160
- Violation of statute or ordinance giving one vehicle right of way over another as affecting liability for injury 1021
- Negroes.
- Civil rights of, see CIVIL RIGHTS.
- New trial.
- Effect of judge communicating with jury not in open court 719
- Nonresidents.
- Attachment against, see ATTACHMENT.
- Notice.
- Of rights of third persons in note taken by assignment, see BILLS AND NOTES.
- From record, see RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.
- Nurse.
- Negligence of, see HOSPITALS.
- Obstruction.
- Of highway, see HIGHWAYS.
- Occupation.
- Of insured, see INSURANCE.
- Offer.
- In general, see CONTRACTS.
- Officers.
- Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.
- L.R.A.1915D.
- Libel or slander by imputing misconduct to judicial officer 578
- Oil.
- In mines generally, see MINES.
- Ordinances.
- See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
- Parties.
- Action by stockholder, see CORPORATIONS.
- Action by husband or wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Right of citizen or taxpayer to enjoin waste or unlawful expenditure of state funds 178
- Consumer's right to compel public service corporation to respect rates stipulated in contract with municipality 917
- Partnership.
- Validity of contracts made by individual or partnership under an assumed name in violation of statute 988
- Passenger carrier.
- See CARRIERS.
- Pedigree.
- Admissibility of declarations of relatives of claimant upon the issue of his relationship or heirship to decedent 215
- Personal injuries.
- Evidence in action for, see EVIDENCE.
- Caused by fright, see FRIGHT.
- Liability for, generally, see NEGLIGENCE.
- Personal representatives.
- See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
- Physicians and surgeons.
- Homicide by negligence of 201
- Duty and liability of one other than a physician or surgeon who contracts to provide medical or surgical attention for another 884
- Statute of limitations as defense to revocation of license 1218
- Pollution.
- Of water, see WATERS.
- Presence.
- Of accused, see CRIMINAL LAW.
- Principal and surety.
- Right of reimbursement or contribution as between sureties of official for different terms 481
- Priority.
- Of tax lien, see TAXES.
- Private action.
- Does the fact that one is prevented by an unlawful obstruction from using a highway cause him a special damage which will sustain an action by him against the wrongdoer 142

- Probable cause.
As question for jury 1
- Process.
See WRIT AND PROCESS.
- Prostitution.
Indictment, of woman transported in violation of the white slave traffic act, for conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States 281
- Public improvements.
Validity of assessment as affected by unlawful invasion of property rights 772
- Public money.
Right of citizen or taxpayer to enjoin waste or unlawful expenditure of 178
Right of state to authorize or direct diversion of county funds to purpose other than that for which collected 274
- Public schools.
See SCHOOLS.
- Public Service Commission.
Power to compel change of location of railroad station 91
Power to require establishment of union station 98
- Public service corporations.
See also CARRIERS; GAS; RAILROADS; STREET RAILWAYS; WATERS.
Right of water or light company to discriminate between consumers as to rates 1086
- Race segregation.
See CIVIL RIGHTS.
- Railroads.
As carriers, see CARRIERS.
Liability of successor of railroad company for damages to abutting property from construction of road in street 397
Constitutionality of statute requiring preliminary apprenticeship or experience for railroad employees 677
Attachment or garnishment of foreign railroad car 838
Right of railroad company to compensation for the crossing of its track, where it intersects a street or highway, by an electric road 843
Duty of railroad company to give crossing signals for the benefit of persons near crossing, but not about to use the same 962
- Rates.
Gas rates, see GAS.
Of irrigation company, see IRRIGATION.
Of public service corporations generally, see PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.
Water rates, see WATERS.
- Real property.
Of decedent, sale of, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
L.R.A.1915D.
- Receivers.
Right of receiver to appeal 802
Rights, against receiver, as to paper deposited before, but not collected at the time, the bank closed its doors 402
- Records and recording laws.
Certainty and accuracy as to Christian names or initials in record or index relied on as imparting constructive notice 1211
- Redemption.
From mortgage foreclosure, see MORTGAGE.
- Religious teaching.
In schools, see SCHOOLS.
- Repairs.
Lien for, see LIENS.
- Res gestæ.
See EVIDENCE.
- Resignation.
Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
- Risk.
Of insured property, see INSURANCE.
- Sale.
Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS.
Delay in attempting to regain property obtained under agreement to pay therefor on delivery as waiver of that condition 355
Right to lien for repairs or other services under contract with purchaser under conditional sale 1141
Evidence as to results of use of substance upon issue as to breach of warranty as to ingredients 875
- Sanitarium.
See HOSPITALS.
- Schools.
Expulsion or exclusion of child from school as excuse or justification for noncompliance with compulsory education law 223
Forbidding student's affiliation with secret society 588
Religious exercises or instructions in public schools 941
- Secret societies.
Forbidding student's affiliation with secret society 588
- Segregation.
Of races, see CIVIL RIGHTS.
- Service.
Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.
- Signals.
At railroad crossings, see RAILROADS.
- Signature.
Of testator, see WILLS.

Sole and unconditional ownership.
See INSURANCE.

Sororities.
See SECRET SOCIETIES.

Special damage.
By obstruction of highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Specific performance.
Specific performance of contract for sale of stock in corporation 800

State.
Right of state to authorize or direct diversion of county funds to purpose other than that for which collected 274

Statute of frauds.
See CONTRACTS.

Statutes.
Violation of statute by automobile operator as affecting defense of contributory negligence 968
Violation of statute giving one vehicle right of way over another as affecting liability for injury 1021
Consideration of extrinsic evidence to show unconstitutionality of statute 458

Stock and stockholders.
See CORPORATIONS.

Subrogation.
Right of one who voluntarily advances money to pay the taxes on property of another to be subrogated to the rights of the public 697

Suicide.
Of insured, see INSURANCE.

Sunday.
Charging jury on Sunday 361

Suretyship.
See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Taxes.
As to license tax, see LICENSE.
As to assessment for public improvements, see PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Right of mortgagor or owner of equity of redemption to contest validity of tax paid by mortgagee 432
Right of one who voluntarily advances money to pay the taxes on property of another to be subrogated to the rights of the public 697
Priority of lien for personal taxes over pre-existing liens on property of the taxpayer 886
Tax sale as cutting off easement 1115

Taxpayers.
Action by, see PARTIES.

Telephones.
Service of writ or process by telephone 427
L.R.A.1915D.

Threats.
As duress, see DURESS.

Trading stamps.
Trading stamp contract as a monopoly 520

Trial.
New trial, see NEW TRIAL.
Is question of probable cause in action for malicious prosecution for the court or jury 1

Typewriting.
Typewritten matter as written or as printed matter 1084

Union station.
See CARRIERS.

United States treasury.
Duty of government official to know signature of drawer of draft 797

Usury.
Lawfulness of taking interest in advance 1195
Usury in mortgage as affecting rights of purchaser or redemptioners under foreclosure 349

Vaccination.
Exclusion of unvaccinated child from school as excuse for noncompliance with compulsory education law 223

Vendor and purchaser.
As to deed, see DEEDS.

Waiver.
Of rights by accused, see CRIMINAL LAW.
Of conditions of sale, see SALE.

Walls.
Doctrine of attractive nuisance as applied to 160

Warehousemen.
Duty of warehousemen to protect goods against high water 726

Waters.
Pollution of stream by mining operations 911
Liability for causing discharge of percolating or underground water into another's premises 1080
Right of stockholder in mutual irrigation company to maintain action against the company for negligent failure to furnish water 292
State regulation of rates of irrigation company 1205
Consumer's right to compel water company to respect rates stipulated in contract with municipality 917
Right of water company to discriminate between consumers as to rates 1086

White slavery.

See PROSTITUTION.

Wills.

What amounts to signature by testator 902

Meaning and effect of term "lend" or "loan" employed in a deed or will 496

L.R.A.1915D.

Witnesses.Misconduct toward witness as contempt of court 569Writ and process.

Services of writ or process by telephone 427

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PARAGRAPHS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

Of real property, see Contracts, 4.
Of husband, effect on rights in homestead, see Homestead, 1, 4, 5.

ABSENTEE.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to death of, see Evidence, 7.

ABSTRACTS.

An abstractor is not liable for failure to show a judgment against William J. Rideout upon search for William G. Rideout. Turk v. Benson, L.R.A.1915D, 1211, 152 N. W. 354, 30 N. D. —. (Annotated)

ABUSE OF PROCESS.

Liability for, see False Imprisonment; Malicious Prosecution.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Rights of, as against railroad in street, see Highways, 2.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of offer, see Contracts, 1, 2.
Of employer's resignation, see Master and Servant, 4, 5.

ACCESS.

Easement of, see Easements, 2; Taxes, 3.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

ACCOMPLICE.

Corroboration of, see Evidence, 49.

ACCOUNTING.

By directors of corporation, see Appeal and Error, 16; Corporations, 8, 9, 15-20; Pleading, 1.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Time for objection on ground of misjoinder of causes of action, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Appearance in, see Appearance.

By stockholder of corporation, see Corporations, 15-23.

Conditions precedent to action by corporation, see Corporations, 23.

L.R.A.1915D.

Conditions precedent in mandamus suit, see Mandamus, 1.

Disbarment proceedings as civil or criminal, see Jury, 1.

Limitation of actions or suits, see Limitation of Actions.

Parties to action, see Parties.

As to witnesses, see Witnesses.

1. Where no time of performance of a marriage contract is fixed, an action for breach thereof may be brought after a reasonable time. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A.1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724, — N. J. —.

2. A railroad company prosecuted for violating the provisions of a statute requiring it to remodel caboose cars which go into the shop for repairs cannot question the validity of sections of the statute attempting to confer powers upon the Railroad Commission, the provisions of which are not necessary to the determination of the cause, and are separable from the sections under which the prosecution is conducted. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 458, 102 N. E. 25, 180 Ind. 245.

3. An insurance contract may be reformed and a recovery thereon enforced in the same action. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

ACT OF GOD.

Loss by, of goods during transportation, see Carriers, 12.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 16; Trial, 11.

What constitutes act of God within meaning of proviso in hours of service act, see Master and Servant, 3.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators.

ADOPTED STATUTE.

Construction of, see Statutes, 8.

ADULTERY.

A statute providing for the punishment of adultery without defining the offense applies to an unmarried man having illicit intercourse with a married woman, although another statute expressly provides punishment of an unmarried woman having illicit intercourse with a married man. State v. Bigelow, L.R.A.1915D, 438, 92 Atl. 978, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

AFFIDAVITS.

Time for objection that warrant for search of premises was not supported by affidavit, see Appeal and Error, 13.

On motion for new trial, see New Trial, 4.

AIR.

Easement of, see Easements, 2; Taxes, 3.

ALIENS.

Administration of estates of, see Diplomatic and Consular Officers; Executors and Administrators, 1a.

ALLOWANCE.

Of claim against decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators, 3.

AMBASSADORS.

Foreign minister, see Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

AMBIGUITY.

In demand for autopsy by insurance company, see Insurance, 18.

AMENDMENT.

Of writ of mandamus, see Mandamus, 5.
Of pleading, see Pleading, 2.

AMUSEMENTS.

See Bathing Resorts.

ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION.

See Executors and Administrators, 4, 6, 9, 10.

ANIMALS.

Injury to, through failure to maintain sufficient fence, see Fences.

Fright of, see Highways, 6, 7; Pleading, 5; Proximate Cause.

A railroad company is liable for injuries to a pedestrian walking on the sidewalk in a village, caused by his being run over by a wild Texas cow which had escaped from one of its cars in a collision resulting from the railroad company's negligence, while such cow was being driven to the stockyard by persons employed by the railway company for that purpose. Hartman v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 563, 146 Pac. 335, 94 Kan. 184. (Annotated)

ANSWERS.

In contempt proceeding, see Contempt, 6.

L.R.A.1915D.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Appellate jurisdiction generally.

For certified questions, see Cases Certified.

Judicial notice by appellate court, see Evidence, 1.

Necessity of, to review objection to local assessment, see Public Improvements, 3.

As to bill of review, see Review.

1. An order of the district court which confirms an order of the county court in an ancillary administration, refusing to grant a petition filed by the principal administrator under the direction of the principal court for the sale of real estate in the state of the ancillary administration, and the transmission of the proceeds thereof to such principal court for the payment of the debts there provided, is a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding, and is appealable as such under § 7225, Rev. Codes of N. Dak. 1905. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

2. An appeal may be had from a decision of the probate court refusing to appoint an administrator and grant letters of administration of the estate of a nonresident intestate, where the decision is based upon the ground that such intestate left no property in the state to be administered. Re Miller, L.R.A.1915D, 866, 136 Pac. 255, 90 Kan. 819.

3. A criminal proceeding originating in an inferior court is within the provision of a constitutional provision that the appellate division in any department may allow an appeal upon any question which, in its opinion ought to be reviewed by the court of appeals. People on Complaint of Pugliese v. Ekerold, L.R.A.1915D, 823, 105 N. E. 670, 211 N. Y. 386.

Transfer of cause.

4. A receiver who brings an action to establish a claim in the court from which he received his appointment cannot appeal from an adverse decision without permission of the court. Coffey v. Gay, L.R.A.1915D, 802, 67 So. 681, — Ala. —. (Annotated).

Record on appeal.

5. In case of an appeal from an order of the district court confirming an order of the county court in an ancillary administration, refusing to grant a petition filed by the principal administrator under the direction of the principal court for the sale of real estate in the state of the ancillary administration, and the transmission of the proceeds thereof to such principal court for the payment of debts there provided, where the trial in the district court is had upon a stipulation of facts and depositions which are included in the certified record on appeal from the county to the district court, and no oral evidence is taken in the latter court, no statement of the case is necessary, and the supreme court can take into consideration the evidence as presented by the depositions and the stipulations.

Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

Objections and exceptions; raising questions in lower court.

6. Objections to instructions made for the first time upon motion for new trial cannot be considered on appeal. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —.

7. Objection to language used by counsel in argument cannot be considered on appeal if made for the first time on motion for new trial. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —.

Interlocutory matters; orders, etc., not appealed from.

8. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment refusing a new trial after verdict for nominal damages upon a new trial granted upon the setting aside of a verdict in his favor, brings before the appellate court the order granting the new trial, if both bills of exception are in the record. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —.

9. The allowance of amendments rests largely within the sound discretion of the trial court. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

10. It is not such an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to refuse to admit evidence in rebuttal which, under the pleadings, is part of plaintiff's case in chief, for the nonintroduction of which in proper order no adequate excuse is offered so as to require a reversal. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —.

11. The action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict and granting a new trial for error of law, which is not in fact error, is error. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —.

12. No abuse of discretion which will require a reversal on appeal in refusing to set aside a verdict for bias of a juror is shown by the fact that the court acts upon a statement in his affidavit that he used his influence to reduce the punishment fixed by the jury, in preference to affidavits by friends of the accused that the juror told them that accused should be given the limit. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

Questions not raised below.

13. The objection that a warrant for search of premises for intoxicating liquors was not supported by affidavit as required by statute cannot be raised for the first time on appeal from a conviction for wrongful possession of the liquors found. Frogg v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 330, 173 S. W. 383, — Ky. —.

14. The objection that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, or that a cause is of equitable, and not of legal, cognizance, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

15. Failure of an indictment for arson to describe the dwelling or identify the person alleged to have been in it is not, in the absence of demurrer, available on appeal. People v. Grutz, L.R.A.1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

16. The variance caused by proof without objection, of money paid employees in addition to that paid the directors themselves, in an action to compel directors of a corporation to account for money paid themselves, may be disregarded. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 106 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

Errors waived or cured below.

17. A new trial cannot be awarded upon appeal where the unsuccessful party after verdict moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but did not move in the alternative for a new trial, as he was entitled to do under the statute, since by resting solely upon his motion for judgment, he waived all errors, which would be ground only for a new trial. Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A.1915D, 1077, 151 N. W. 419, 128 Minn. 514.

Review of facts.

Instances of excessive amounts of damages, see Damages, 4.

18. The amount allowed by a jury as compensatory damages for false imprisonment approved by the trial judge is not reviewable on appeal. Cook v. Highland Hospital, L.R.A.1915D, 611, 84 S. E. 352, — N. C. —.

19. That the evidence would have warranted a larger award of damages than was allowed by the trial court is no reason for the appellate court disturbing the judgment. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A.1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —.

20. Refusal to admit in evidence an affidavit, the truth of which has been admitted, to prevent a continuance, is not error where it is directed at the credibility of a state's witness who has not been introduced. Lawson v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 972, 169 S. W. 587, 160 Ky. 180.

21. In an action against a corporate owner of an office building to hold it liable for injury to a passenger on the elevator through a structural defect, there is no error in admitting evidence of the original owner of the building that he had conveyed it to the corporation of which he and his wife were the principal stockholders. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69.

22. No reversible error can be predicated on a ruling permitting plaintiff to call the claim auditor of a defendant corporation for cross-examination under the statute, where plaintiff did not seek to avoid his testimony, and the form of the questions would have been proper had he been called as plaintiff's witness. Johnson v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

23. An instruction that in order for probable cause for an arrest to exist, the facts must be such as would justify an ordinarily cautious person in entertaining a belief in another's guilt, and that whether such facts came to the knowledge of the defendant at the time he caused the arrest of the plaintiff is a question for the jury to determine, is materially erroneous where not accompanied by a clear and accurate statement of what specific facts, under the circumstances of the case, would, if found to exist, be sufficient under the law for that purpose, where it cannot be said from the record that the jurymen were not in fact misled, as it tends to lead the jury to understand that they are to decide not only what information the defendant had, but whether it was enough to justify a reasonable belief in the plaintiff's guilt. Matson v. Michael, L.R.A.1915D, 1, 105 Pac. 537, 81 Kan. 360.

24. It is error to assume the existence of an injury in instructing the jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries due to another's negligence. Salmi v. Columbia & N. R. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 834, 146 Pac. 819, — Or. —.

25. It is not prejudicial error for the attorney for plaintiff in a suit against a police officer for false imprisonment, to refer in argument to the fact that defendant's counsel is assistant city attorney, although that fact does not appear in the record. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —.

26. Where, from the conceded facts, it appears that the parties to an action have no title to the subject-matter of the litigation, hence no right to maintain an action or to recover affirmative relief by cross petition, and where the only judgment recovered against them, except an adverse adjudication of the title, is vacated on appeal, error in the trial court forcing them to trial on the day that the issues of fact were joined is without prejudice, and furnishes no ground for reversal. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —.

Judgment.

27. It cannot be said as matter of law that one claiming the estate of a deceased person upon evidence of declarations as to pedigree, but failing to establish the relationship of declarant to the family, cannot do so on another hearing, so as to justify a dismissal of the petition without new trial. Aalholm v. People, L.R.A.1915D, 215, 105 N. E. 647, 211 N. Y. 406.

28. Matters considered in an original motion for a new trial, and there determined by the trial court and subsequently affirmed by the supreme court, will not again be considered in a subsequent attempt to set aside the verdict. Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

29. The grounds for a petition for rehearing of an appeal should be brief and concise, and made separate from the argument. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A.1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

APPEARANCE.

No judgment can be entered against a foreign corporation which has appeared L.R.A.1915D.

specially for the purpose of pleading in abatement, or moving that the action be dismissed, if no personal service of process is shown. Koontz v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 838, 107 N. E. 973, 220 Mass. 285.

APPOINTMENT.

Of personal representative, see Executors and Administrators, 1, 1a.

APPORTIONMENT.

Of local improvement assessments, see Public Improvements, 6.

APPURTENANCES.

Easements as, see Easements, 1.

ARCHITECT.

Right to mechanics' lien, see Mechanics' Liens.

ARREST.

Civil liability for making, see False Imprisonment.

ARSON.

Indictment for, see Appeal and Error, 15.

Evidence in prosecution for, see Evidence, 24, 37, 38, 41.

ARTISAN.

Lien of, see Liens.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

On witness as contempt, see Contempt, 1, 2, 7.

ASSESSMENTS.

For improvements, see Drains and Sewers; Public Improvements.

Of tax, see Taxes, 1, 5.

ASSIGNMENT.

Of corporate stock, see Corporations, 12, 13.

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS.

Conversion by purchaser at assignee's sale, see Trover.

ASSUMED NAME.

Transaction of business under, see Contracts, 8.

ASSUMPSIT.

1. No return of unearned premium upon a bond insuring the fidelity of a public officer for a yearly premium can be had, although he dies in the middle of the year; at least, where duties involving the principal hazard have all been performed before his death. Crouch v. Southern Surety Co. L.R.A.1915D, 966, 174 S. W. 1116, 131 Tenn. 260.

2. The United States cannot recover money paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to a bona fide holder for value, guilty of no negligence contributory to the fraud, upon a draft upon him bearing the forged signature of an officer having the right to make such drafts, since he was bound to know the signature of such official, and the question whether the bill is negotiable or not is immaterial. United States v. Bank of New York, Nat. Bkg. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 797, 219 Fed. 648, — C. C. A. —.

(Annotated)

ASSUMPTION OF RISKS.

By employee, see Master and Servant, 8.

By one depositing goods in warehouse, see Warehousemen, 2.

ATTACHMENT.

As to garnishment, see Garnishment.

What property subject to, see Levy and Seizure, 1.

Limitation of time of action against sheriff for failure to return attachment, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

A statute giving foreign corporations which comply with the local laws all the rights and privileges of like domestic corporations, and subjecting them to the laws of the state applicable to like domestic corporations, does not exempt them from the operation of the statute authorizing an attachment in actions against defendants not residing in the state. Jennings v. Idaho R. L. & P. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 115, 146 Pac. 101, 28 Idaho, 703.

(Annotated)

ATTORNEYS.

Liability of municipality for attorneys' fees, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

District and prosecuting attorneys, see

District and Prosecuting Attorneys. Slander by, see Libel and Slander, 3.

Disbarment.

Inherent power of court to disbar, see Courts, 1.

Admissibility of evidence, see Evidence, 43.

Sufficiency of proof, see Evidence, 46.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury, 1.

Defense of bar of limitation, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

1. The obligation which attorneys assume when they are admitted to the bar is not simply to be obedient to the Constitution and laws, but to maintain at all times the respect due the courts of justice and judicial officers and this obligation includes abstaining out of court from insulting language and offensive conduct toward the judges personally for their judicial acts. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

2. An attorney may criticize the courts so long as his criticisms are made in good faith and in respectful language, but the printing and publication of a pamphlet falsely, purposely, and maliciously attacking the integrity of the courts and judges thereof, designed to vilify the courts and judges thereof, and maliciously misrepresenting them into disrepute and lessen the respect due them. L.R.A.1915D.

violates his duties and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, for which he may be disbarred. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

3. Special notice to an attorney is not necessary before the rendition of a judgment disbarring him. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

4. Proceedings to disbar an attorney cannot be defeated because the committee presenting the charges had no authority to do so from any other person or body. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

5. In disbarment proceedings instituted by the state bar commission by the order and direction of the supreme court, no verification of the specification of charges is necessary under § 267, Comp. Laws 1909 of Oklahoma. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

6. The sufficiency of the verification of the specification of charges in disbarment proceedings must be determined by an inspection of it, and evidence cannot be taken for the purpose of showing that the affiant had no personal knowledge as to the charges. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

7. Failure of the court to order the filing of charges for disbarment of an attorney is not available to accused after the court has taken jurisdiction and tried the case. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

8. Proceedings against an attorney for criminal libel upon the court does not prevent his disbarment for the same offense. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE.

See Negligence, 2-4.

AUDITOR.

Presumption of truth of certificate by, see Evidence, 10.

Sufficiency of auditor's findings to sustain verdict by jury, see Evidence, 44.

AUTOMOBILES.

Regulation of use and construction of garage, see Buildings, 1-4; Constitutional Law, 17; Municipal Corporations, 6, 11.

Insurance on, see Insurance, 10, 12, 13.

Lien for repairs on, see Liens, 4, 5.

License; registration.

Discrimination in license tax, see License, 3.

Reasonableness of license tax, see License, 4.

1. The fact that the operator of an automobile upon the street of a city does not have a license as required by an ordinance does not prevent his recovery of damages for injury suffered through another's negligence. Armstead v. Lounsberry, L.R.A. 1915D, 628, 151 N. W. 542, 129 Minn. 34. (Annotated)

2. The fact that an automobile is not registered as required by law does not prevent a recovery by the owner of damages for injury suffered through another's negligence. Armstead v. Lounsberry, L.R.A. 1915D, 628, 151 N. W. 542, 129 Minn. 34. Negligence in use of.

New trial in action for injury, see New Trial, 1.

3. The law of the road does not apply in case of an automobile turning around in the street. Armstead v. Lounsberry, L.R.A. 1915D, 628, 151 N. W. 542, 129 Minn. 34.

4. An automobile in good condition is not such a dangerous instrument that one letting it for hire must test the competency and skill of a customer before intrusting him with it, under penalty of liability for injuries done by the hirer's negligence. Neubrand v. Kraft, L.R.A. 1915D, 691, 151 N. W. 455, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

5. The keeper of a motor car livery is not liable for injury done by a car through the negligence of one to whom he let it with knowledge that the hirer had no acquaintance with the operation of that make of cars. Neubrand v. Kraft, L.R.A. 1915D, 691, 151 N. W. 455, — Iowa, —.

6. Evidence that the driver of an automobile on a public street, who, when he saw another automobile in front of him headed in the same direction commence to turn in the street,—practically the whole width of the street being required to make the turn,—instead of stopping his car and avoiding a collision, as he could have done, increased his speed and attempted to pass ahead of the turning car before it should reach the left curb, is sufficient to charge the driver with negligence. Armstead v. Lounsberry, L.R.A. 1915D, 628, 151 N. W. 542, 129 Minn. 34.

7. A city ordinance requiring the driver of an automobile to look to the rear before turning is complied with when one riding with him looks and then directs him to go ahead. Armstead v. Lounsberry, L.R.A. 1915D, 628, 151 N. W. 542, 129 Minn. 34. Contributory negligence.

8. Violation of a statute fixing under penalty a speed limit for automobiles on a highway does not deprive one of the defense of contributory negligence on the part of one injured by collision with the automobile, unless his conduct is such under all the circumstances as to amount to gross negligence. Ludke v. Burck, L.R.A. 1915D, 968, 152 N. W. 190, 160 Wis. 440. (Annotated)

AUTOPSY.

Stipulation as to, in insurance policy, see Insurance, 16-19.
L.R.A. 1915D.

BAGGAGE.

In general, see Carriers, 7.

BAILMENT.

As to warehousemen, see Warehousemen.

BANKS.

Refusal of cashier to answer questions propounded by grand jury, see Contempt, 3, 4.

Fraud in securing subscription to stock, see Corporations, 11.

Estoppel to deny entries on books of bank or sworn statements, see Estoppel, 2.

Usury in bank transaction, see Usury, 1.

Deposits generally.

1. The proceeds of a draft which, with a bill of lading attached, is delivered to the bank in whose favor it is drawn, and by it forwarded to a correspondent bank for collection, and immediate credit given to the drawer of the draft while in the hands of the correspondent bank, are to be regarded as belonging to the payee named in the draft, as against a creditor of the depositor who attempts to reach them by garnishment after the account, as increased by the deposit, has been overdrawn; and this is true notwithstanding the practice of the first-named bank to charge its depositors with the interest on such items from the time of giving credit until the proceeds are actually received and to charge back their amount in the event of nonpayment; and notwithstanding that a serial number is placed on said draft by the original bank in sending it out for collection, and that a witness testifies to a general practice of bankers to place such numbers upon items received for collection, but not upon those accepted as cash. Scott v. W. H. McIntyre Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 139, 144 Pac. 1002, 93 Kan. 508.

Payment of checks; forgeries.

2. A bank which pays upon the checks of the wife alone a man's money deposited to the joint account of himself and wife is liable to him therefor except so far as he may have ratified the checks or received the benefit of them. Gish Bkg. Co. v. Leachman, L.R.A. 1915D, 920, 174 S. W. 492, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

3. A bank which pays a check upon itself, the signature of drawer and indorser upon which are forged, cannot recover the amount paid from the bank which originally cashed the check, although it indorsed thereon "all prior indorsements guaranteed." State Bank v. Cumberland Sav. & T. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 1138, 85 S. E. 5, 168 N. C. 605.

4. A bank depositor whose clerk has charge of the account is negligent in comparing only the vouchers returned to him when his account is balanced from time to time without looking at the check list or the balance in the pass book, so that, in case checks have been forged by his clerk, and the vouchers withdrawn from the package and destroyed before the genuine ones are delivered to him, which he does not discover, he cannot charge the bank with the loss if it was not negligent in paying the checks. Morgan v. United States Mortg. & T. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 741, 101 N. E. 871, 208 N. Y. 218. (Annotated)

Insolvency.

Officer's liability on bond for loss of money by failure of bank, see Bonds.

Fraudulent sale by insolvent bank of shares of its capital stock, see Corporations, 11.

Estoppel of bank to deny statements concerning deposit to credit of another insolvent bank, see Estoppel, 2.

Set-off in case of, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 2.

5. One who has deposited checks on account in an insolvent bank is not prevented from having payment on them stopped and reclaiming them from the bank's receiver, by the fact that they have been forwarded to a correspondent bank and credited to the account of the insolvent one, if the correspondent makes no claim to them. Knaff v. Knoxville Bkg. & T. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 402, 170 S. W. 476, 130 Tenn. 336. (Annotated)

BATHING RESORT.

1. The ownership of premises is not essential to the liability of a person who operates or maintains a bath house where bathing suits are furnished for hire, at a seaside resort, for injuries due to his negligence in failing to maintain proper and safe life lines and life rafts for the protection of his patrons. McKinney v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 442, 66 So. 988, — Fla. —.

2. An action may be maintained against a person who operates or maintains a bath house where bathing suits are furnished for hire, at a seaside resort, for negligence in failing to maintain proper and safe life lines and rafts for the protection of his patrons, by a patron not guilty of contributory negligence who is injured as a proximate result of the negligence of such operator or his agents, where the statute makes it the duty of a person operating or maintaining such a bath house to maintain at all times proper and safe life lines and life rafts for the protection of bathers, and prescribes a fine or imprisonment or both for failure to comply with the duty. McKinney v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 442, 66 So. 988, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Insurance by, see Insurance.

BETTING.

See Gaming.

BIAS.

Of juror, see L.R.A.1915D.

BIBLE.

Reading of, in public schools, see Constitutional Law, 19; Schools, 3.

BILL OF REVIEW.

See Review.

BILL OF SALE.

As violation of condition in insurance policy, see Insurance, 8, 9.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Recovery of money paid on forged draft against United States Treasury, see Assumpsit, 2.

Negotiability.

1. Uncertainty as to the rate of interest in a note, so as to render it non-negotiable, is not created by drawing with a pen a ring around the figures representing such rate as inserted by a typewriter in a printed note blank, and placing a figure above it with a pen, where the statute provides that where there is a conflict between the written and printed provisions in a contract, the written ones must prevail, since the typewritten figures must be regarded as printed. Acme Coal Co. v. Northrup Nat. Bank, L.R.A.1915D, 1084, 146 Pac. 593, — Wyo. —. (Annotated)

Indorsement and transfer.

2. The defense of failure of consideration is not available under the negotiable instrument law against an indorsee of a negotiable note, unless prior to or at the time of his purchase he had notice of infirmity in the note, or knowledge of such facts that taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. Acme Coal Co. v. Northrup Nat. Bank, L.R.A.1915D, 1084, 146 Pac. 593, — Wyo. —.

3. The payee of a note unenforceable because of lack of consideration cannot, by repurchasing the paper after transferring it to a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice, acquire the rights of such purchaser, so as to hold the paper free from equities. Shade v. Hayes, L.R.A.1915D, 271, 151 N. W. 42, — S. D. —.

Who are bona fide purchasers.

4. A director of a corporation to whom a note payable to the corporation has been transferred by vote of its board of directors, for value and before maturity, but after the consideration therefor had failed and the company had been notified of that fact, is not a purchaser in good faith so as to entitle him to maintain a suit on the note against the makers notwithstanding the failure of consideration. Hardin v. Dale, L.R.A.1915D, 1099, 146 Pac. 717, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

BLASTING.

Injury through fright caused by, see Fright, 2.

One blasting out a trench under municipal authority in a public street in which to lay a gas pipe is not, in the absence of negligence, liable in tort for the flow of water into a cellar on one side of the street from a pond on the opposite side, because of the disturbance of the earth by the blasts. McGinnis v. Marlborough-Hudson Gas Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1080, 108 N. E. 364, 220 Mass. 575. (Annotated)

pen and Error

BONA FIDE HOLDER.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 4.

BONDS.

Recovery of unearned premium upon bond of public officer, see Assumpsit, 1.

Right of legislature to divert proceeds of county bonds, see Counties.

By person engaging in messenger business, see License, 1.

Contribution between sureties on bond of public officer, see Principal and Surety.

Set-off in action on official bond, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1.

A town treasurer who, upon re-election to office, continues a deposit account of the town's money in a bank so insolvent that it cannot pay the amount, does not, although he is ignorant of the true conditions, account for it within the meaning of his official bond satisfying its obligation in case of such accounting, so as to relieve the surety from liability in case the account is lost because of the bank's insolvency. Yawger v. American Surety Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 481, 106 N. E. 64, 212 N. Y. 292.

BOOKS.

Right to inspect books of corporation, see Corporation, 7, 7a, 24.

BREACH.

Of covenant, see Covenants and Conditions, 3.

BREACH OF PROMISE.

Prematurity of action for, see Action or Suit, 1.

Oral promise to marry, see Contracts, 3.

Validity of contract of marriage, see Contracts, 6.

Presumptions and burden of proof in action for, see Evidence, 10.

Good faith of tender of performance of promise as question for jury, see Trial, 3.

1. A right of action for breach of promise of marriage is not affected by an attempted contract of settlement which is invalid because in restraint of marriage. McCoy v. Flynn, L.R.A.1915D, 1064, 151 N. W. 465. — Iowa, —.

2. Defendant's offer of marriage after breach is as a rule no defense. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A. 1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724. — N. J. —.

3. An offer on the part of the defendant to fulfil the promise of marriage after his refusal to do so, or a renewed offer in his answer or in open court, is not a defense. L.R.A.1915D.

unless it is made bona fide, and unless, also, the plaintiff has not signified an intention to regard the contract as at an end. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.), L.R.A.1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724. — N. J. —.

BREAKING.

Sufficiency of, to constitute burglary, see Burglary.

BRIDGES.

The cost of the construction of bridges on the public highway across a drainage ditch constructed by a drainage district must be borne by the county, and not by the drainage district, where the bridges are a public necessity and convenience, and where the estimated cost of such construction was deducted from the share levied upon the county as its portion of the cost of the improvement, on the theory that the county was damaged to the extent of such cost of construction, and no appeal was taken from such action. Wilkins v. Hillman, L.R.A.1915D, 249, 145 Pac. 1111. — Okla. —.

BROKERS.

1. A property owner cannot accept the benefits of a contract for sale negotiated by a broker finally compensated by him, although he acted originally for the purchaser without ratifying the statements as to the income of the property made by the broker to effect the sale. Whitney v. Bissell, L.R.A.1915D, 257, 146 Pac. 141. — Or. —.

2. The agreement by a property owner to pay a broker a commission for selling the property, knowing that he was employed by the buyer, is a fraud upon the rights of the buyer, if the agreement was not assented to by him. Whitney v. Bissell, L.R.A. 1915D, 257, 146 Pac. 141. — Or. —.

BROTHER.

Right to appointment as administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 1a.

BUILDINGS.

Denial of equal protection of laws by building regulations, see Constitutional Law, 2.

Police power as to, see Constitutional Law, 17.

Restrictions in covenants, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

Injunction to prevent destruction of, under void municipal ordinance, see Injunction, 4.

Lien on, see Mechanics' Liens.

Delegation of power as to, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

Forbidding storage of inflammable substances in garage in certain locations, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

Partial invalidity of ordinance establishing fire limits, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

1. Power to forbid the construction of a public garage in a city block without the consent of a majority of the property owners is conferred upon a municipal corporation by statutory authority to direct the location and regulate the use and construction of garages, inter alia, within the city limits. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

2. Power to direct the location and regulate the use and construction of garages does not authorize a municipal corporation to forbid their location within the city limits. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

3. Requiring one who desires to operate a public garage in or within 100 feet of a city block in which two thirds of the buildings on both sides of the street are used exclusively for residences, to secure consent from a majority of the property owners, is not unreasonable. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

4. Forbidding the location of a public garage within 200 feet of a church is not unreasonable. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

5 Statutory power to establish limits within which no building composed of combustible material shall be erected does not authorize an ordinance establishing limits within which no such building shall be erected without permission of the mayor and council. Hays v. Poplar Bluff, L.R.A. 1915D, 595, 173 S. W. 676, — Mo. —.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

In general, see Evidence, 4-20.

BURGLARY.

Loss of passenger's baggage by, see Carriers, 7.

Evidence in prosecution for, see Evidence, 25, 33.

Competency of witnesses in prosecution for, see Witnesses, 1.

1. An employee's opening a building at a time when his duties did not require him to do so, by means of a key furnished him by the employer for the limited purpose of opening the store for business in the morning, followed by his taking property of his employer therefrom with intent to convert it to his own use, is a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary. State v. Corcoran, L.R.A.1915D, 1015, 143 Pac. 453, 82 Wash. 44. (Annotated)

2. Burglary may be established by proof of the breaking out as well as breaking in, under statutes providing punishment for anyone who shall feloniously break any dwelling house and take away anything of value, and requiring statutes in derogation of the common law to be liberally construed with a view to promote their objects. Lawson v. Com. L.R.A. 1915D, 587, 160 Ky. 180. (Annotated)

3. The opening wider of a chicken house door which had been left partly open by the owner, and was held in position by means of a fence post placed on one side thereof and a brick on the other, by removing the post and brick, without which removal no entry could have been made into the building, constitutes a forcible breaking within the meaning of a burglary statute. Goina v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 241, 107 N. E. 335, — Ohio St. —.

BURIAL INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 1.

BY-LAWS.

Of insurance company, see Insurance, 3.

CABOOSE.

Statute as to remodelling or construction of, see Action or Suit, 2; Commerce; Evidence, 3; Statutes, 4.

Judicial notice as to safety of, see Evidence, 3.

CANALS.

Jurisdiction of railway commission over question of ownership of irrigation canal, see Public Service Commissions, 1.

CANCELATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Of stock subscription, see Corporations, 11.

CARRIERS.

Statute as to construction or remodelling of caboose, see Action or Suit, 2; Commerce; Evidence, 3; Statutes, 4.

Forbidding person to act as conductor without having previously served as freight conductor or brakeman, see Constitutional Law, 11.

As to elevators, see Elevators.

Injury to employee, see Master and Servant.

Irrigation company as a common carrier, see Waters, 4.

Measure of care required; negligence generally.

Measure of damages for injury to passenger, see Damages, 5.

1. A carrier which, after injury to a boy upon its car, takes him, against the protest of his guardian, to its own surgeon for treatment, is liable for any injury which the surgeon may inflict upon him through malpractice, whether it used care in the selection of a surgeon or not. Easler v. Columbia Railway, G. & E. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 883, 84 S. E. 417, — S. C. —. (Annotated)

2. The negligence of a person in peril on a highway crossing, which requires the application of the emergency brake to the train, does not relieve the carrier from liability for consequent injury to a passenger if the necessity of resort to such brake was due to its own negligence. Dorr v. Lehigh

Valley R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 368, 105 N. E. 652, 211 N. Y. 369. (Annotated)

3. A railroad company cannot avoid liability for injury to a passenger by the application of the emergency brake to avoid collision with a traveler on a highway crossing on the theory that it might assume that he would leave the track in time to escape injury, if he was manifestly unconscious of the approach of the train. Dorr v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 368, 105 N. E. 652, 211 N. Y. 369.

4. A railroad company is liable for injury to a passenger by the sudden application of the emergency brake to avoid striking a traveler at a highway crossing if it was negligent in failing to warn him or to observe his danger in time to avoid the accident without resort to the emergency brake. Dorr v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 368, 105 N. E. 652, 211 N. Y. 369.

Leaving at destination.

5. A railroad company is not liable for carrying past his destination a passenger who knowingly boards a train not scheduled to stop there, although the gateman and brakeman made no objection to his boarding the train, if the conductor, upon ascertaining his destination, informed him that the train would not stop, and advised him to leave it at a suitable intermediate stopping place and wait for another train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gaddie, L.R.A.1915D, 708, 172 S. W. 514, 162 Ky. 205.

(Annotated)

Limitation of liability.

Effect of Federal employer's liability act to invalidate contract exempting carrier from liability for injury to Pullman porter, see Master and Servant, 1.

6. One who, when employed as a Pullman porter, agrees to protect the Pullman Company in its contracts by which it undertakes to indemnify railroad companies against liability for injuries to Pullman employees, deprives himself of the right to maintain an action against the railroad company for injuries received in the course of his employment. Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 510, 40 App. D. C. 169.

Baggage or property of passenger.

7. A passenger who does not claim his baggage at destination until forty-eight hours after its arrival cannot hold the carrier liable as insurer for loss of the baggage twenty-four hours before by burglary, although he failed to reach destination earlier because of inability to procure sleeping car accommodations, if he did not notify the carrier that he would not accompany the baggage. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Doyle, L.R.A.1915D, 113, 145 Pac. 688, — Colo. —.

Freight carriers.

Liability of carrier for injury by livestock escaping from cars, see Animals.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence, see Evidence, 14, 15; Trial, 11.

L.R.A.1915D.

Negligence as question for jury, see Trial, 4.

Question for jury as to fairness of contract limiting liability, see Trial, 6.

8. In order that a carrier may relieve itself from liability for loss of, or damage to, goods while in transit, it is necessary for it to show that the loss or damage arose solely from one or more of the excepted causes; it is not sufficient for it merely to show that the shipper was negligent, if the loss or damage would not have resulted except for the concurring fault of the carrier. Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A.1915D, 1077, 151 N. W. 419, 128 Minn. 514.

9. A common carrier is at common law an insurer of the goods shipped, and is responsible for all losses except those arising from certain excepted causes, one of which is improper packing by the shipper. Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A.1915D, 1077, 151 N. W. 419, 128 Minn. 514.

10. If improper packing in a shipment offered to a carrier is apparent to the carrier or his servants, he may refuse to receive the shipment, but if he receives it he assumes to carry the goods as they are, and the full common-law liability as carrier attaches. Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A.1915D, 1077, 151 N. W. 419, 128 Minn. 514.

11. Although a carrier has knowledge of defective packing in goods shipped, yet, if it is not apparent to the ordinary observation of the carrier or his servants that the goods cannot be safely carried in the condition in which they are presented, the carrier should not be held to take the chances of injury from improper packing. Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A.1915D, 1077, 151 N. W. 419, 128 Minn. 514. (Annotated)

12. An act of God, such as a severe blizzard and snowstorm, which will excuse a carrier from liability for loss, must not only be the proximate cause of the loss, but it must be the sole cause, and though the loss may have been caused by an act of God, yet, if the negligence of the defendant commingles with such act of God as an efficient, contributing, concurrent cause, and it appears from the evidence and the circumstances of the case that such injury would not have occurred except for such negligence, the company will be liable. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus, L.R.A.1915D, 547, 141 Pac. 773, 42 Okla. 401.

13. Where property is injured or lost while in the hands of a common carrier, the shipper may sue the carrier upon the latter's common-law liability, without regard to the existence of any special contract of shipment that may have been entered into limiting the carrier's liability, thus leaving it to the defendant to plead such contract by way of defense. McGrath v. Northern P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 644, 141 N. W. 164, 121 Minn. 258.

Governmental control; rates: discrimination.

Regulation of interstate business of, see Commerce, 1.

Due process in regulations as to depots, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Police power as to depots, see Constitutional Law, 18.

Presumption in support of order of Railroad Commission, see Evidence, 4.

Mandamus to compel receivers to obey order to join in construction of union depot, see Mandamus, 1.

Review by courts of order of Railroad Commission as to union depot, see Public Service Commissions, 2.

14. A Railroad Commission has authority to change the location of depots formerly established, under statutory power to hear petitions for the establishment, enlargement, equipment, and discontinuance of depots, and determine the character of construction, equipment, change or enlargement of depots which shall be supplied. St. Louis, I. & M. & S. R. Co. v. Bellamy, L.R.A. 1915D, 91, 169 S. W. 322, 113 Ark. 384.

(Annotated)

15. The Railroad Commission, in locating a railroad depot, is not bound to adopt the exact location set forth in the petition therefor, where the statute does not require the petition to define the place of location or require the Commission to adopt the spot which may be designated by petition. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bellamy, L.R.A. 1915D, 91, 169 S. W. 322, 113 Ark. 384.

16. Authority to require the abandonment of present facilities is included in a grant of power to a Railroad Commission to require railroad companies to maintain a union station. Railroad Commission v. Alabama, G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

17. Locating a depot at a place where the main line of the railroad will be upon a curve and a branch line upon a grade is not so unreasonable and arbitrary as to make the order of location void where the curve is not greater than that upon which other depots are located, and the railway company owns land sufficient to enable it to straighten the tracks for several hundred feet at the place of location. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bellamy, L.R.A. 1915D, 91, 169 S. W. 322, 113 Ark. 384.

18. Arbitrary power is not conferred upon a Railroad Commission by granting it authority to require railroad companies within a particular city to construct and maintain union stations when the necessities of the case, in its judgment, requires it, so as to make the statute unconstitutional. Railroad Commission v. Alabama, G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

(Annotated)

19. That a railroad session of receivers does not take it out of the operation of a statute providing that railroad companies may be maintained under penalty, to construct, L.R.A. 1915D.

stations, although the order must be executed by the receivers, and the statute is not made expressly applicable to them, where, by statute, a railroad company includes any person operating a railroad. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

20. A requirement under statutory authority that a union depot be constructed by several railroads, one of which is in possession of receivers, is within the operation of the Federal statute requiring receivers appointed by Federal courts to obey the valid laws of the states in which the property under their control is located. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

21. An order of a Railroad Commission requiring the construction and maintenance of a union depot by several railroad companies is not invalid in not fixing the exact spot where it is to be located, if the general location is designated. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

22. An order of a Railroad Commission requiring the construction of a union depot is not invalid because it does not furnish the plans and specifications. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

CASE.

Conspiracy to secure discharge of employee, see Conspiracy.

Evidence in action for damages for securing discharge of employee, see Evidence, 21.

CASES CERTIFIED.

The appellate division, in allowing an appeal in a criminal case to the court of appeals, is not bound to formulate and certify a specific question. People On Complaint of Pugliese v. Ekerold, L.R.A. 1915D, 223, 105 N. E. 670, 211 N. Y. 386.

CASHIER.

Refusal to answer question propounded by grand jury, see Contempt, 3, 4.

CAUSE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 12, 13.

Of death or injury of insured, see Insurance, 22, 23.

CERTIFICATE.

Presumption as to truth of certificate of public officer, see Evidence, 19.

Certificate of redemption, see Mortgage, 4.

CERTIFIED QUESTION.

See Cases Certified.

CERTIORARI.

Upon certiorari to review the action of a municipal council in reassessing the cost of a special improvement upon abutting property the court is confined to an examination of the records and the proceedings of the council resulting in the assessment. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A.1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

CHANGE.

Of judge, see Judges.

CHARACTER.

Presumption as to, see Evidence, 6.

CHattel MORTGAGE.

Priority over chattel mortgage of lien for repairs, see Liens, 2, 3.

Right to question statute existing when mortgage was taken making personal taxes a lien on all personal property of taxpayer, see Statutes, 2.

Under a statute making all taxes upon personal property a first lien on all personal property of the person against whom they are assessed, an assessment of a personal property tax will take precedence, as to the entire tax on the owner's personalty, of an existing chattel mortgage given to secure the purchase price of a particular article of machinery. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Roberts County, L.R.A.1915D, 886, 149 N. W. 163, — S. D. —. (Annotated)

CHURCHES.

Forbidding location of garage near, see Buildings, 4; Municipal Corporations, 6.

CITIES.

See Municipal Corporations.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Constitutionality of segregation of white and colored persons, see Constitutional Law, 14.

CLAIMS.

Against decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators.

Against municipality, moral obligation to pay, see Municipal Corporations, 2, 3.

Against city, presentation of, see Municipal Corporations, 16.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Conclusiveness in action to quiet title against one redeeming from mortgage sale, of foreclosure decree, see Judgment, 2.

CLUBS.

Forbidding keeping of intoxicating liquor in, see Constitutional Law, 6; Statutes, 5.

C. O. D.

Sale of goods C. O. D., see Sale, 1.

COMMERCE.

Garnishment of cars of foreign interstate railroad company, see Garnishment. L.R.A.1915D.

A state may, without interfering with the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, prescribe the length of and form of running gear upon caboose cars used in the state; at least in the absence of any legislation by Congress or attempted regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the subject. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 458, 102 N. E. 25, 180 Ind. 245.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Right to discharge, see Master and Servant, 4, 5.

COMMISSIONS.

Of broker, see Brokers, 2.

Public Service Commissions, see Public Service Commissions.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMMON LAW.

Right of shipper to sue carrier on common-law liability and ignore contract limiting liability, see Carriers, 13.

Presumption as to alteration of, by statute, see Statutes, 6.

Consideration of, in construction and application of statutes declaratory thereof, see Statutes, 7.

Revival of, by repeal of statute, see Statutes, 9.

The common law, in general terms, is the law in Tennessee. Moss v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 361, 173 S. W. 859, — Tenn. —.

COMPLAINT.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 3, 4.

CONCLUSIVENESS.

Of decree, see Judgment.

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see Eminent Domain.

CONDITION.

To taking of appeal, see Appeal and Error, 4.

Relating to real property, see Covenants and Conditions.

In insurance policy, see Insurance.

Precedent to mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus, 1.

CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

In insurance policy, see Insurance, 5.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

See Privileged Communications.

CONFLICTING INSTRUCTIONS.

See Trial, 9.

CONSENT.

Of property owners to construction of garage, see Buildings, 1, 3.

Of property owner to erection of non-fireproof building, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

CONSIDERATION.

For note, see Bills and Notes, 2-4.

CONSPIRACY.

Evidence in action securing discharge of employee, see Evidence, 21.

Evidence to show, see Evidence, 41.

1. Workmen cannot lawfully combine to secure the discharge of a fellow workman by notifying the employer that they will quit if he is not discharged, merely because he makes conditions so unpleasant for them that they do not care to work with him. Bausbach v. Reiff, L.R.A.1915D, 785, 91 Atl. 224, 244 Pa. 559.

2. Neither a labor union nor the members thereof are liable to a nonmember who was discharged from his employment because of a demand therefor made by the authorized agents and committees of the labor organization, who informed the common employer that if such nonunion man was not discharged, the union men would strike. Roddy v. United Mine Workers of America, L.R.A.1915D, 789, 139 Pac. 126, 41 Okla. 621.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Who may maintain action to determine constitutionality of act providing for, see Parties, 5.

Who may maintain suit to determine result of election on question of, see Parties, 6.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Who may question constitutionality of statute, see Action or Suit, 2.

Refusal to pass upon constitutionality of statute not necessary to decision of case, see Courts, 2.

Relation of courts to other departments of government, see Courts, 3.

Vested right of beneficiary in insurance policy, see Insurance, 5, 25, 26.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury.

Vested right to practise law, see Jury, 1.

Separation of powers.

1. The constitutional provision distributing the power of government into departments is not violated by a statute excluding Greek letter fraternities from state schools. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623. Equal protection and privileges.

2. A municipal ordinance prohibiting the erection of buildings composed of combustible materials within certain limits without permission of the mayor and council is unconstitutional as granting special privileges. Hays v. Poplar Bluff, L.R.A.1915D, 595, 173 S. W. 676, — Mo. —.

3. An ordinance limiting the collection of garbage in a particular city to one licensed collector is unconstitutional as granting exclusive privileges. Rochester v. Gutberlett, L.R.A. 1915D, 209, 105 N. E. 548, 211 N. Y. 309.

4. A provision in a statute for the licensing of dentists preserving the rights of those licensed and registered at the time of its passage does not affect the constitutional rights of one licensed at the time in another state, who, under the statute, must comply with its terms to secure a license to practise in the state after the passage of the statute. People v. Griswold, L.R.A.1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929, 213 N. Y. 92.

5. A provision authorizing the granting of a license to practise dentistry to persons holding a license in other states, granted by a state board of dental examiners "indorsed by the dental society of the state" passing the statute, is not unconstitutional as granting an exclusive privilege or franchise to a private corporation, since the grant is not a privilege, but a duty to determine the standard exacted by other states for dental licenses. People v. Griswold, L.R.A.1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929, 213 N. Y. 92.

6. A state does not unconstitutionally deprive one of equal protection of the laws by forbidding the keeping of intoxicating liquor in any locker or other place in any social club, or carrying it to such club, although a property right in such liquors is recognized by the law. State v. Phillips, L.R.A.1915D, 530, 67 So. 651, — Miss. —. Due process of law; right to life, liberty, and property.

7. "Due process of law" implies the administration of laws which apply equally to all persons according to established rules, and which are "not violative of the fundamental principles of private right, by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the case and proceeding upon notice and hearing." Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

8. No constitutional property rights of one desiring to procure garbage for stock are infringed by limiting the right to collect it in a particular city to one licensed collector. Rochester v. Gutberlett, L.R.A.1915D, 209, 105 N. E. 548, 211 N. Y. 309.

(Annotated)

9. Requiring the rebuilding of a railroad depot which has been destroyed by fire, upon a new location the title to which must be acquired and which will require an abandonment of the old location, is not an unconstitutional taking of property if the difference in cost of the establishment and maintenance of the depot upon the respective locations is not unreasonable. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bellamy, L.R.A.1915D, 91, 169 S. W. 322, 113 Ark. 384.

10. No constitutional privileges or property rights are denied by making renunciation of allegiance to Greek letter fraternities a condition to becoming students in schools supported by the state. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623. (Annotated)

11. An unconstitutional infringement of the liberty of contract without due process of law results from a provision of a state statute which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to act as a conductor on a railway train in that state without having previously served for two years as a freight conductor or brakeman. Smith v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129.

(Annotated)

12. A statute requiring a print or package to contain 16 oz. avoirdupois, or, in case of a less weight, the weight to be disclosed by the seller to the buyer, or a statement of the net weight to be made upon a label attached thereto, is not violative of § 17, art. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, nor of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives persons of liberty or property without due process of law. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

13. A statute imposing a fine or imprisonment or both for the use of a false weight, measure, balance, or measuring device, and making the one guilty of the use thereof liable to the injured party in double the amount of the property wrongfully taken or not given, and for $10 in addition thereto, and making the selling and delivery of any commodity or article of merchandise prima facie evidence of representations on the part of the vendor that the quantity sold and delivered is the quantity bought by the vendee, is not violative of § 17, art. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, nor of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives persons of liberty and property without due process of law. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

14. Sections 1 and 2 of the ordinance of the city of Atlanta, adopted June 16, 1913, and the corresponding sections of an amendment thereto, adopted November 3, 1913, prohibiting white persons and colored persons from residing in the same block, deny the inherent right of a person to acquire, enjoy, and dispose of property, and for this reason are violative of the due process clause of the Federal and state Constitutions. Carey v. Atlanta, L.R.A.1915D, 684, 84 S. E. 456, — Ga. —.

(Annotated)

15. A statute prohibiting the keeping of intoxicating liquors which are not intended for sale at places other than private residences is an unconstitutional interference with property rights. Com. v. Smith, L.R.A. 1915D, 172, 173 S. W. 340, — Ky. —.

(Annotated)

16. One indicted for murder who has had full opportunity under the Constitution and laws of the state to defend his case in the courts of the state having jurisdiction thereof, either in person, by attorney, or both, according to established constitutional rules of procedure, has been afforded due process of law under the state and Federal Constitutions, which provide that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Frank L.R.A.1915D.

v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

Police power.

17. The police power extends to the forbidding of the construction of a public garage within a city block without consent of a majority of the owners of property in such block, without depriving the one seeking to do so of any right of liberty or property. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

18. The police power extends to requiring railroad companies entering a particular city jointly to acquire the necessary property and construct and maintain a union passenger station. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

(Annotated)

Religious freedom.

19. The reading of the Bible, including the Old and New Testaments, in the public schools of a state, is a preference given to Christians, and a discrimination against Jews, and a resolution directing this to be done is invalid under a Constitution providing that every person has a natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, and that no preference shall ever be given to or any discrimination made against any church, sect, or creed of religion or any form of religious faith or worship. Herold v. Parish Board of School Directors, L.R.A.1915D, 941, 68 So. 116, — La. —.

(Annotated)

Impairing obligation of contracts.

20. Chapter 127 of the N. Dak. Laws of 1907, amending § 7142, Rev. Codes 1905, and providing that notices of redemption shall be recorded with the register of deeds, rather than filed, is not unconstitutional, though applied to mortgages which were executed before its enactment; the requirement that such notice shall be recorded rather than filed in no way impairs the obligation of the contract of the mortgagor, or deprives him of property without due process of law. Heitsch v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 349, 150 N. W. 457, 29 N. D. 94.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of insurance policy, generally, see Insurance, 6, 7.

Of statute, see Statutes, 6-8.

CONSUL.

See Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

CONTEMPT.

Criminal contempt.

1. That one who assaults a prospective witness against him does not know that he has been subpoenaed is immaterial to the question of his liability for contempt. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

2. It is a criminal contempt for one under several indictments, in one of which the jury is out but eventually returns a verdict of guilty, with another yet to be tried, to commit a battery on a witness who testified against him in the pending case and is to be called in a subsequent one, for the purpose of punishing him for the testimony given and intimidating him for the future. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350. (Annotated) Disobedience.

3. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to answer questions propounded to him by the grand jury which will require his examination of the books of the bank, on the ground that it constitutes an unconstitutional demand for the performance of particular services. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —.

4. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to answer a question propounded by a grand jury as to the state of the account of a particular depositor, on the theory that it was abusing its inquisitorial power, where it knew that the deposits in the bank greatly exceeded the deposits returned for taxation, and was seeking to ascertain who had falsified his tax returns, although it knew of no one who had done so, and was inquiring as to the accounts of persons whose names were taken at random from the tax duplicates of the county. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —. (Annotated)

Procedure.

5. A court whose power summarily to punish for contempt is not adequate to inflict a suitable punishment for a criminal contempt may submit the matter to the determination of a jury. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

6. In passing upon a motion to quash a return to a rule to show cause why one shall not be punished for contempt, all facts well pleaded in the return must be taken as true, and facts stated in the motion to quash which attempt to deny, or confess and avoid, those stated in the return, must be disregarded. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —. Judgment; punishment.

7. A fine of $1,000 and six months' imprisonment in jail is not excessive to inflict upon one convicted of criminal contempt in committing a battery upon one who testified against him in a criminal case, to intimidate him from giving evidence in another case yet to be tried in which he is a prospective witness. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

CONTRACTS.

Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 20.

Custom as guide in construction of, see Custom.

Right of action on generally, see Parties, 1-3.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Offers and their acceptance or withdrawal.

1. One who, in response to a quotation L.R.A.1915D.

for flooring, orders a quantity with an irregular matching to which the quotation did not apply, which the seller declines to fill, cannot perfect a contract by merely notifying the seller that regular matching will be satisfactory, since, having rejected the original offer, his power to accept it without renewal was gone. Shaw v. Ingram-Day Lumber Co. L.R.A.1915D, 145, 153 S. W. 431, 152 Ky. 329. (Annotated)

2. Tender of the money is sufficient to make an option to purchase real estate binding upon both parties, and written acceptance is not necessary. Agar v. Streeter, L.R.A.1915D, 196, 150 N. W. 160, — Mich. —.

Formal requisites; statute of frauds.

3. It is presumed that a marriage contract, where no time is fixed, is not intended to be performed more than a year after its making, and therefore it does not fall within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise not to be performed within a year to be in writing; and, as such a contract is possible of performance within a year, a jury would have a right to infer that the defendant did not intend to perform it, when in fact he permitted five years to elapse without doing so. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A. 1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

4. Abandonment of real property must be in writing. Quaker Realty Co. v. Starkey, L.R.A.1915D, 176, 66 So. 386, — La. —.

5. An offer in writing for the sale of land by a prospective vendor, being rejected by the prospective vendee, cannot thereafter be accepted by the vendee unless the vendor's assent thereto is in writing. Lewis v. Johnson, L.R.A.1915D, 150, 143 N. W. 1127, 123 Minn. 409. (Annotated)

Validity and effect.

Effect of contract invalid because in restraint of marriage on right of action for breach of promise, see Breach of Promise, 1.

Contracts limiting liability of carrier, see Carriers, 6, 13.

By corporation, see Corporations.

Effect of duress, see Duress.

Validity of married woman's contract. see Husband and Wife, 2.

Contracts exempting master from liability to employees, see Master and Servant, 1.

Right to maintain action for breach of contracts made under assumed name, see Tradename, 1.

6. A provision in a contract to settle an action for breach of promise of marriage, to pay plaintiff a specified amount three years after date if she is then alive and unmarried, is void as in restraint of marriage. McCoy v. Flynn, L.R.A.1915D, 1064, 151 N. W. 465, — Iowa, —.

7. Contracts by which one issues trading stamps to merchants, which, for the purpose of suppressing competition, prohibit them from using the stamps of others, and which enable him to control nearly 90 per of law results from a provision of a state statute which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to act as a conductor on a railway train in that state without having previously served for two years as a freight conductor or brakeman. Smith v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129.

(Annotated)

12. A statute requiring a print or package to contain 16 oz. avoirdupois, or, in case of a less weight, the weight to be disclosed by the seller to the buyer, or a statement of the net weight to be made upon a label attached thereto, is not violative of § 17, art. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, nor of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives persons of liberty or property without due process of law. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

13. A statute imposing a fine or imprisonment or both for the use of a false weight, measure, balance, or measuring device, and making the one guilty of the use thereof liable to the injured party in double the amount of the property wrongfully taken or not given, and for $10 in addition thereto, and making the selling and delivery of any commodity or article of merchandise prima facie evidence of representations on the part of the vendor that the quantity sold and delivered is the quantity bought by the vendee, is not violative of § 17, art. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, nor of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives persons of liberty and property without due process of law. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

14. Sections 1 and 2 of the ordinance of the city of Atlanta, adopted June 16, 1913, and the corresponding sections of an amendment thereto, adopted November 3, 1913, prohibiting white persons and colored persons from residing in the same block, deny the inherent right of a person to acquire, enjoy, and dispose of property, and for this reason are violative of the due process clause of the Federal and state Constitutions. Carey v. Atlanta, L.R.A.1915D, 684, 84 S. E. 456, — Ga. —. (Annotated)

15. A statute prohibiting the keeping of intoxicating liquors which are not intended for sale at places other than private residences is an unconstitutional interference with property rights. Com. v. Smith, L.R.A.1915D, 172, 173 S. W. 340, — Ky. —.

(Annotated)

16. One indicted for murder who has had full opportunity under the Constitution and laws of the state to defend his case in the courts of the state having jurisdiction thereof, either in person, by attorney, or both, according to established constitutional rules of procedure, has been afforded due process of law under the state and Federal Constitutions, which provide that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Frank L.R.A.1915D.

v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

Police power.

17. The police power extends to the forbidding of the construction of a public garage within a city block without consent of a majority of the owners of property in such block, without depriving the one seeking to do so of any right of liberty or property. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

18. The police power extends to requiring railroad companies entering a particular city jointly to acquire the necessary property and construct and maintain a union passenger station. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354. (Annotated)

Religious freedom.

19. The reading of the Bible, including the Old and New Testaments, in the public schools of a state, is a preference given to Christians, and a discrimination against Jews, and a resolution directing this to be done is invalid under a Constitution providing that every person has a natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, and that no preference shall ever be given to or any discrimination made against any church, sect, or creed of religion or any form of religious faith or worship. Herold v. Parish Board of School Directors, L.R.A.1915D, 941, 68 So. 116, — La. —. (Annotated)

Impairing obligation of contracts.

20. Chapter 127 of the N. Dak. Laws of 1907, amending § 7142, Rev. Codes 1905, and providing that notices of redemption shall be recorded with the register of deeds, rather than filed, is not unconstitutional, though applied to mortgages which were executed before its enactment; the requirement that such notice shall be recorded rather than filed in no way impairs the obligation of the contract of the mortgagor, or deprives him of property without due process of law. Heitsch v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 349, 150 N. W. 457, 29 N. D. 94.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of insurance policy, generally, see Insurance, 6, 7.

Of statute, see Statutes, 6-8.

CONSUL.

See Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

CONTEMPT.

Criminal contempt.

1. That one who assaults a prospective witness against him does not know that he has been subpoenaed is immaterial to the question of his liability for contempt. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

2. It is a criminal contempt for one under several indictments, in one of which the jury is out but eventually returns a verdict of guilty, with another yet to be tried, to commit a battery on a witness who testified against him in the pending case and is to be called in a subsequent one, for the purpose of punishing him for the testimony given and intimidating him for the future. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350. (Annotated) Disobedience.

3. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to answer questions propounded to him by the grand jury which will require his examination of the books of the bank, on the ground that it constitutes an unconstitutional demand for the performance of particular services. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —.

4. A cashier of a bank cannot refuse to answer a question propounded by a grand jury as to the state of the account of a particular depositor, on the theory that it was abusing its inquisitorial power, where it knew that the deposits in the bank greatly exceeded the deposits returned for taxation, and was seeking to ascertain who had falsified his tax returns, although it knew of no one who had done so, and was inquiring as to the accounts of persons whose names were taken at random from the tax duplicates of the county. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —. (Annotated)

Procedure.

5. A court whose power summarily to punish for contempt is not adequate to inflict a suitable punishment for a criminal contempt may submit the matter to the determination of a jury. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

6. In passing upon a motion to quash a return to a rule to show cause why one shall not be punished for contempt, all facts well pleaded in the return must be taken as true, and facts stated in the motion to quash which attempt to deny, or confess and avoid, those stated in the return, must be disregarded. Baker v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 1061, 108 N. E. 7, — Ind. —. Judgment; punishment.

7. A fine of $1,000 and six months' imprisonment in jail is not excessive to inflict upon one convicted of criminal contempt in committing a battery upon one who testified against him in a criminal case, to intimidate him from giving evidence in another case yet to be tried in which he is a prospective witness. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

CONTRACTS.

Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 20.

Custom as guide in construction of, see Custom.

Right of action on generally, see Parties, 1-3.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Offers and their drawal.

1. One who, in acceptance or withdrawal, in response to a quotation

for flooring, orders a quantity with an irregular matching to which the quotation did not apply, which the seller declines to fill, cannot perfect a contract by merely notifying the seller that regular matching will be satisfactory, since, having rejected the original offer, his power to accept it without renewal was gone. Shaw v. Ingram-Day Lumber Co. L.R.A.1915D, 145, 153 S. W. 431, 152 Ky. 329. (Annotated)

2. Tender of the money is sufficient to make an option to purchase real estate binding upon both parties, and written acceptance is not necessary. Agar v. Streeter, L.R.A.1915D, 196, 150 N. W. 160, — Mich. —.

Formal requisites; statute of frauds.

3. It is presumed that a marriage contract, where no time is fixed, is not intended to be performed more than a year after its making, and therefore it does not fall within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise not to be performed within a year to be in writing; and, as such a contract is possible of performance within a year, a jury would have a right to infer that the defendant did not intend to perform it, when in fact he permitted five years to elapse without doing so. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A. 1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

4. Abandonment of real property must be in writing. Quaker Realty Co. v. Starkey, L.R.A.1915D, 176, 66 So. 386, — La. —.

5. An offer in writing for the sale of land by a prospective vendor, being rejected by the prospective vendee, cannot thereafter be accepted by the vendee unless the vendor's assent thereto is in writing. Lewis v. Johnson, L.R.A.1915D, 150, 143 N. W. 1127, 123 Minn. 409. (Annotated)

Validity and effect.

Effect of contract invalid because in restraint of marriage on right of action for breach of promise, see Breach of Promise, 1.

Contracts limiting liability of carrier, see Carriers, 6, 13.

By corporation, see Corporations.

Effect of duress, see Duress.

Validity of married woman's contract, see Husband and Wife, 2.

Contracts exempting master from liability to employees, see Master and Servant, 1.

Right to maintain action for breach of contracts made under assumed name, see Tradename, 1.

6. A provision in a contract to settle an action for breach of promise of marriage, to pay plaintiff a specified amount three years after date if she is then alive and unmarried, is void as in restraint of marriage. McCoy v. Flynn, L.R.A.1915D, 1064, 151 N. W. 465, — Iowa, —.

7. Contracts by which one issues trading stamps to merchants, which, for the purpose of suppressing competition, prohibit them from using the stamps of others, and which enable him to control nearly 90 per cent of the trading stamp business in the locality, are within the operation of a statute declaring unlawful and void every agreement in violation of common law, if thereby a monopoly in the production or sale of any article or commodity tends to be created. Merchants' Legal Stamp Co. v. Murphy, L.R.A.1915D, 590, 107 N. E. 968, 220 Mass. 281. (Annotated)

8. Persons who carry on business under an assumed name without complying with a statute requiring them under penalty to file their true names in the office of the clerk of the county cannot maintain actions in the courts to enforce payment for goods sold by them. Hunter v. Patterson, L.R.A. 1915D, 987, 173 S. W. 120, 162 Ky. 778. (Annotated)

CONTRIBUTION AND INDEMNITY.

Between sureties, see Principal and Surety.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence.

CONVERSION.

Action for, see Trover.

CORONER.

Right of coroner selling property of decedent to allowance for funeral expenses in action by administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 5.

CORPORATIONS.

Situs of shares of stock for purpose of administration of decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

Liability of municipality for costs and attorneys' fees in suit by state to forfeit charter of private corporation, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Mode of corporate action.

1. Mutual understanding of the directors of a corporation, that property belonging to it shall stand in the names of certain of their number, is sufficient to make the holding of the property in that manner the act of the board. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —.

Contracts; ultra vires acts.

2. Knowledge and approval by stockholders of a corporation of a course of action by the directors are not sufficient to effect a ratification of the act on the part of the corporation. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —.

3. A general vote ratifying the acts of directors of a corporation does not ratify the holding of corporate property in the names of individual directors, of which fact the stockholders had no knowledge. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —. L.R.A.1915D.

4. Stockholders cannot ratify an act of the directors which is ultra vires the corporation, or which is in manifest disregard of the legal rights of minority stockholders. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —. Criminal liability.

5. A statute providing for a fine or imprisonment or both, for a "person" who uses a false weight, measure, balance, or measuring device, applies to a corporation as well as to an individual. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

6. That the punishment by imprisonment cannot be inflicted upon a corporation under a statute prescribing a fine or imprisonment or both for a person who uses a false weight, measure, balance, or measuring device is not sufficient ground to hold the statute applicable only to individuals, and not to corporations, on the theory that the statute, if applied to corporations, cannot have a uniform operation in the state. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389. Officers.

Raising objection for first time on appeal in action against directors, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Director as bona fide purchaser of note from corporation, see Bills and Notes, 4.

Evidence on question of liability of directors, see Evidence, 42.

Mandamus to compel corporation to permit director to inspect books, see Mandamus, 2, 6, 7.

Charging director with knowledge of corporation, see Notice, 1.

Pleading in action against directors, see Pleading, 1, 4.

7. A director is entitled to have the assistance of his attorney or agent in the exercise of his right to inspect the books, papers, and records of the corporation, provided the agent has no interest adverse to the corporation, rendering his employment therein improper. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

7a. That the inspection sought by a director may disclose a right of action in him against the corporation or some of its agents does not preclude his right to inspect the books, papers, and records of the corporation. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A. 1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

8. Directors of a corporation who attempt to close the business do not discharge their fiduciary duties simply by accounting for its tangible assets if it possesses a valuable good will. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

9. Directors of a corporation may be compelled to account for money improperly paid out with their consent while they were directors, although the payments were made under resolutions adopted before they became such. Godley v. Crandall & Godley

Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

10. The statutory liability to creditors of directors of a corporation for contracting debts in excess of the paid-up capital is not affected by the fact that the debt had been reduced under the paid-up capital by dividends in bankruptcy proceeding. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Arnold, L.R.A.1915D, 1028, 87 Atl. 17, 35 R. I. 456.

(Annotated)

Subscriptions to stock.

11. A fraudulent sale by an insolvent bank of shares of its capital stock may be rescinded by the purchaser, though action in that behalf is not taken until after a receiver for the bank has been appointed, where no great length of time elapsed between the sale and the receivership, the purchaser did not actively participate in the management of the bank, no want of diligence on the part of the purchaser in discovering the fraud or in taking steps to rescind appears, and no considerable amount of indebtedness, remaining unpaid, accrued against the bank subsequently to the sale. Morrissey v. Williams, L.R.A. 1915D, 792, 82 S. E. 509, — W. Va. —.

(Annotated)

Transfer of stock.

Specific performance of contract of sale, see Specific Performance.

12. A valid gift so as to pass the equitable title is effected by the delivery and acceptance of a certificate of stock in a corporation with intent to pass title, but without any written assignment or indorsement, although the certificate is made transferable only on the books of the corporation. Herbert v. Simson, L.R.A.1915D, 733, 108 N. E. 65, 220 Mass. 480. (Annotated)

13. A mutual irrigation ditch company cannot defeat an action for negligent failure to deliver water to one in possession of land under the ditch, because the shares of stock representing the water to be used on such land have not been transferred to the property owner on its books; at least, if it has recognized the right by delivering water to the one in possession. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A.1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —. (Annotated)

Rights of shareholders.

Raising objection for first time on appeal in action by stockholders, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Parties defendant in suit by stockholders, see Parties, 9.

Mandamus to compel corporation to permit inspection of books, see Mandamus, 2, 6, 7.

14. Majority stockholders cannot vote to discontinue the business of the corporation for the purpose of turning it over to another corporation and excluding minority stockholders from participation therein. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

15. A minority stockholder may maintain an action on behalf of the corporation to compel directors to account for money which they have distributed to employees under the guise of dividends upon stock held by them, above the rate of dividend declared on such stock, in accordance with the amount of stock held, and not of services rendered. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

16. A minority stockholder of a corporation may maintain an action on behalf of the corporation to compel directors to account for salaries voted themselves out of profits for services already performed. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

(Annotated)

17. The majority stockholders of a corporation who have received preferential payment out of profits of the concern, through the acts of the directors, cannot ratify such acts after the beginning of an action by minority stockholders to compel the directors to account for the money so misappropriated. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

18. Directors of a corporation may, at the suit of minority stockholders, be compelled to account for money paid one of the officers for winding up the business, where the required majority did not agree to discontinue the business, and the services were destructive of the true interests of the corporation. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

19. A corporation and its directors who appropriate the good will of another corporation through collusion with its directors, without making compensation therefor may be compelled to account for its value to complaining stockholders. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

20. Directors of a corporation against whom an action is brought to compel an accounting of funds of the corporation illegally appropriated by them should not be compelled to account in the action for the expenses of defending it, if they had no notice of such claim and the evidence is meager that they paid the expenses out of corporate funds. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

21. That an act of a corporation in violation of the legal rights of minority stockholders occurred before a complaining stockholder secured his stock does not deprive him of the right to relief if the wrong is a continued one. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1916D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —.

22. Minority stockholders in a holding corporation are entitled to the aid of equity to compel the corporation to take into its own name stock which it owns, but is carrying in the name of individuals, thereby depriving itself of the right to vote the stock at meetings of the corporations: and it is immaterial that, because of stock interests, the ones in whose names the stock is standing will control the policy of the corporation with respect to it. Hyams v.

Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. — (Annotated)

23. A minority stockholder need not apply to the directors or to the corporation itself to take over property belonging to it which is standing in the names of individual directors, before suing to compel it to do so, where the title has been held in that manner so long as to indicate a deliberate policy on the part of the directors and majority stockholders. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —

24. That a stockholder of a corporation also holds stock in a rival corporation, and desires to inspect its books to enable him to ascertain its prices and customers, so that the rival may underbid it and discredit its work to its customers, does not deprive him of the benefit of a by-law entitling each stockholder to inspect the books and records of the corporation at any time during business hours. State ex rel. Gwinn v. Bucklin, L.R.A.1915D, 285, 145 Pac. 58, — Wash. —

25. Profits made by a railroad company by investments in stocks of other corporations, and by converting its bonds into stock, need not be dealt with as an accretion to capital, to be distributed among all stockholders, but may be treated as earnings, and distributed as dividends, within the application of a clause in its articles of association by which the dividends to preferred stock shall not exceed a specified per cent per annum, and therefore, when that per cent has been paid to preferred stock, the remainder may be distributed amongst common stockholders. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Union P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1052, 106 N. E. 92, 212 N. Y. 360. (Annotated)

Foreign corporations.

Special appearance by foreign corporation, see Appearance.

Attachment against, as nonresident, see Attachment.

26. A foreign corporation may hold stock in a domestic one under a statute providing that any corporation may purchase and hold the stock of any corporation of this state, and exercise all the rights of ownership, including the right to vote thereon. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 1128, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —

CORROBORATION.

Of accomplishment, see Evidence, 49.

COSTS AND FEES.

Liability of municipality for, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

COUNTERCLAIM.

See Set-Off and Counterclaim.

COUNTIES.

Liability for cost of construction of bridge, see Bridges.

Liability for sewer improvements, see Drains and Sewers, 1.
L.R.A.1915D.

Paying expense of drainage ditch assessed against county by special assessments against property owners, see Eminent Domain.

The legislature may divert the proceeds of bonds issued by a county under statutory authority for the construction of a particular highway to the construction of other highways within the county. State ex rel. Bell v. Cummings, L.R.A.1915D, 274, 172 S. W. 290, 130 Tenn. 566. (Annotated)

COURTS.

Jurisdiction on appeal, see Appeal and Error.

Contempt of, see Contempt.

Jurisdiction to allow funeral expenses to coroner in action against him to recover property of decedent, see Executors and Administrators, 5.

As to judges, see Judges.

Judicial proceedings as privileged communications, see Libel and Slander, 3.

Judicial proceedings on Sunday, see Sunday.

1. The supreme court, having exclusive jurisdiction to admit attorneys to practise law, has, independent of statutory authority, the inherent power to disbar attorneys for misconduct. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

Real controversy.

2. A court will not pass upon the constitutionality of a statute where the same is unnecessary to a decision of the right of recovery in the case before it. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

Relation to other departments of government.

Acceptance of findings by public service Commission, see Public Service Commissions, 2.

3. The question of the sufficiency of the title of a statute is for the legislature, and not for the courts, to determine. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Damages for breach of, see Damages, 1.

1. Where the right to enforce a restriction contained in a conveyance as to the use of the property conveyed is doubtful, all doubt should be resolved in favor of the free use thereof for lawful purposes by the owner of the fee. Hunt v. Held, L.R.A. 1915D, 543, 107 N. E. 765, — Ohio St. —

2. A clause in a conveyance restricting the use of the property conveyed to "residence purposes only" does not prohibit the erection of a double or two family house on the premises. Hunt v. Held, L.R.A.1915D, 543, 107 N. E. 765, — Ohio St. —

3. An existing railroad track across the property may be treated as a breach of covenant against encumbrances in a conveyance thereof, if the purchaser was misled into the belief that the railroad had merely a leasehold interest in the right of way. Schwartz v. Black, L.R.A.1915D, 898, 174 S. W. 1146, 131 Tenn. 360.

CRIMINAL CONTEMPT.

See Contempt, 1, 2, 7.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Right to appeal in criminal case, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Due process in criminal matters, see Constitutional Law, 16.

Statute as to use of false weight, measure, etc., see Constitutional Law, 13; Corporations, 5, 6.

As to criminal contempt, see Contempt, 1, 2, 7.

Criminal liability of corporation, see Corporations, 5, 6.

Presumptions and burden of proof in criminal case, see Evidence, 5, 6.

Opinions and conclusions in criminal case, see Evidence, 24, 25.

Admissibility of dying declarations, see Evidence, 31.

Evidence as to intent, see Evidence, 33.

Evidence of other crimes, see Evidence, 37-39.

Relevancy of evidence, generally, see Evidence, 41.

Sufficiency of proof, see Evidence, 48, 49.

Admissibility of evidence under pleading, see Evidence, 50.

Civil liability for false arrest and imprisonment, see False Imprisonment.

As to requisites and sufficiency of indictment, information and complaint, see Indictment, etc.

Injunction against criminal proceeding, see Injunction, 1, 2.

As to criminal libel, see Libel and Slander.

Civil liability for bringing prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution.

Violation of statute regulating hours of labor, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

As to Sunday law, see Sunday.

Statute as to liability for doing business in name of person as partner who is not interested therein, see Tradename, 2.

As to witnesses, see Witnesses.

See also Adultery; Arson; Burglary; Conspiracy; Homicide; Intoxicating Liquors.

Parties to offense.

1. A woman may conspire "to commit an offense against the United States" within the meaning of the provision of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, § 37, although the object of the conspiracy is her own transportation in interstate commerce for purposes of prostitution, contrary to the white slave act of June 25, 1910. United States v. Holte, L.R.A.1915D, 281, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271, 236 U. S. 40, 59 L. ed. (Annotated) L.R.A.1915D.

Waiver of right.

Waiver of objection by failing to include it in motion for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

2. Although one accused of murder did not consent to the waiver by his counsel, without his knowledge, of his presence at the reception of the verdict and the polling of the jury, which was done also in the absence of his counsel, yet, where it appeared that when the accused was sentenced to suffer death he was present in court in person and by attorneys, and later, within the time allowed by law, made a motion for a new trial which recited, among other things, his absence at the reception of the verdict and the waiver of his presence by his counsel, and that his motion for a new trial was refused by the trial court and that judgment affirmed by the supreme court,—the accused will be considered as having acquiesced in the waiver made by his counsel of his presence at the reception of the verdict, and he cannot, at a subsequent date, set up such absence as a ground to set aside the verdict in a motion made for that purpose. Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741. (Annotated)

CROPS.

Damages for injury to, or destruction of, see Damages, 6.

CROSSINGS.

Injury at railroad crossing, see Railroads, 3.

CURTESY.

Right of curtesy initiate as entitling husband to maintain action to recover wife's real estate or for injury thereto, see Husband and Wife, 6.

CUSTODY OF LAW.

Levy on property in, see Levy and Seizure, 1.

CUSTOM.

Evidence of, generally, see Evidence, 32.

A usage or custom, to be a guide in the construction of contracts, must be uniform, reasonable, and generally known. Shaw v. Ingram-Day Lumber Co. L.R.A.1915D, 145, 153 S. W. 431, 152 Ky. 320.

DAMAGES.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

Nominal damages.

1. Nominal damages only can be recovered for breach of covenant against encumbrances in a deed of real estate because of an existing railroad track upon the property, if the track is an actual benefit to the property. Schwartz v. Black, L.R.A.1915D, 898, 174 S. W. 1146, 131 Tenn. 360.

For breach of warranty.

2. The measure of damages for breach of warranty that fertilizer contains certain ingredients is the difference between the value of the article delivered and what it would have been worth had it been as represented. Hampton Guano Co. v. Hill Livestock Co. L.R.A.1915D, 875, 84 S. E. 774, 168 N. C. 442.

False imprisonment.

3. Damages for false imprisonment may include compensation for all the natural and probable consequences of the wrong, including injury to the feelings, fear, humiliation, indignity, and disgrace, and injury to the person and physical suffering, interruption of business, and loss of time from the restraint. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. — (Annotated)

4. Seven hundred and fifty dollars is not excessive to allow a seventeen-year-old girl of good family and reputation for arresting her without warrant and taking her to police headquarters to interview her with respect to the commission of a crime of which she was ignorant, merely because her Christian name was the same as that of the one for whom the police were looking. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —

Personal injuries; death.

Allegations as to, see Pleading, 3.

5. A carrier is liable for injury to a passenger thrown from its car through its sole negligence, although proper recovery from the injury may have been prevented by the incompetency of the attending surgeon. Easler v. Columbia Railway G. & E. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 883, 84 S. E. 417, — S. C. —

Injury to real property.

6. The damages to be allowed for injury to a crop by failure to furnish water from an irrigation ditch is the value of the crop at the time of the injury, to be determined by its value on the land at that time, or its value at maturity less the cost of perfecting and marketing it. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A.1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —

Eminent domain cases.

7. The state cannot, in condemning for its use real estate with a building thereon, refuse to pay for the fixtures attached to the building, if there is nothing in the notice of condemnation to show that only a portion of the property was to be taken. Jackson v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 492, 106 N. E. 758, 213 N. Y. 34. (Annotated)

DANGEROUS AGENCIES.

Automobile as, see Automobiles, 4.

As to electricity, see Electricity.

DANGEROUS ATTRACTIONS.

See Negligence, 2-4.

DEATH.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 7.

Presumption as to cause of, see Evidence, 12.

Admissibility of declarations of person killed, see Evidence, 30.

L.R.A.1915D.

DEBT.

Power of legislature to compel municipality to pay, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Creditors of decedent, see Executors and Administrators, 2-9.

As to exemption, see Exemptions; Homestead.

Effect of marriage of debtor and creditor to extinguish debt, see Mortgage, 2.

DECEDENTS.

Administration of estates of, see Executors and Administrators.

DECLARATIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 26-31.

In pleading, see Pleading, 3, 4.

DECREE.

See Judgment.

DEEDS.

Covenants in, generally, see Covenants and Conditions.

Effect of duress, see Duress.

By husband or wife to third person, see Husband and Wife, 3.

Given to secure usurious loan, see Usury, 2.

DEFENDANTS.

Parties defendant, see Parties, 9.

DEFENSES.

In general, see Action or Suit, 2.

To action for breach of promise, see Breach of Promise, 2, 3.

In mandamus case, see Mandamus, 7.

In foreclosure suit, see Mortgage, 3.

DEFINITENESS.

See Indefiniteness.

DEFINITIONS.

Due process of law, see Constitutional Law, 7.

Lend, see Wills, 5.

DELAY.

In rescinding contract for fraud, see Vendor and Purchaser.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

By municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

DEMAND.

By insurance company for autopsy, see Insurance, 16-19.

DEMURRER.

See Pleading, 5.

DENTISTS.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law, 4, 5.

1. Requiring from applicants for license to practise dentistry an educational qualification equivalent to a four-year high-school course and graduation from a registered dental school is not unreasonable. People v. Griswold, L.R.A.1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929, 213 N. Y. 92.

2. No constitutional right of a dentist who has practised many years in one state is infringed by requiring him, upon seeking a license in another state, to comply with educational qualifications much higher than were required when he first began to practise. People v. Griswold, L.R.A.1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929, 213 N. Y. 92. (Annotated)

DEPOSIT.

In bank, see Banks.

DEPOTS.

Carrier's duty as to, see Carriers, 14-22.

Regulations as to, see Constitutional Law, 9, 18; Public Service Commissions, 2.

Presumption in support of order of Railroad Commission as to, see Evidence, 4.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Tax on right to take property by, see Taxes, 4-6.

DESCRIPTION.

Parol evidence of mistake in, see Evidence, 23.

Of land in assessment for taxation, see Taxes, 1.

DE SON TORT.

Executor de son tort, see Executors and Administrators, 5, 7.

DESTINATION.

Leaving passenger at, see Carriers, 5.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

The statutory provisions for administration, of the state where a citizen of a foreign country dies, are not superseded by a provision of a treaty between that country and the Federal government that, in the event of any citizen of either country dying without will in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation to which the deceased may belong shall, so far as the laws of each country will permit, pending the appointment of an administrator, take charge of his assets, and, moreover, have the right to be appointed as administrator of such estate; and therefore a consul has no prior right of administration over a resident brother of decedent who is first in order of right under the laws of the state. Re D'Adamo, L.R.A.1915D, 373, 106 N. E. 81, 212 N. Y. 214.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See Trial, 8.

DISBARMENT.

Of attorney, see
L.R.A.1915D.

Attorneys.

DISCHARGE.

Of employee, see Master and Servant, 4, 5.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 9-12.

DISCRIMINATION.

In license tax, see License, 3.

In water rates, see Waters, 7, 8.

DISOBEDIENCE.

As a contempt, see Contempt, 3, 4.

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Privileged communications to prosecuting attorney, see Evidence, 27.

DIVERSION.

Of proceeds of county bonds, see Counties.

DIVIDENDS.

On preferred stock, see Corporations, 25.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Effect of, on interest in proceeds in insurance policy, see Insurance, 27.

That a wife compelled to leave her husband's domicile goes to another state with the intention not to return unless he sends for her does not destroy her residence in the state, so as to deprive its courts of jurisdiction over a proceeding for divorce begun by her under a statute requiring a year's residence in the state to entitle one to maintain such action. Miller v. Miller, L.R.A.1915D, 852, 92 Atl. 9, — Vt. —.

(Annotated.)

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 21, 22.

DOMICIL.

For purpose of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Liability for cost of construction of bridge across drainage ditch, see Bridges.

Assessments as a taking of private property for public use without compensation, see Eminent Domain.

1. Where substantial benefits are assessed to a county on account of drainage to the public highways, that part of the expenses of constructing the drainage ditch apportioned to the county, corresponding to the amount of benefits conferred, must be paid by the county out of funds raised by general taxation. Wilkins v. Hillman, L.R.A.1915D, 249, 145 Pac. 1111, — Okla.

2. In the construction of a drainage ditch, special assessment under the Constitution and laws of this state can be made only for corresponding specific benefits conferred. Wilkins v. Hillman, L.R.A.1915D, 249, 145 Pac. 1111, — Okla. —.

DROWNING.

Of children, liability for generally, see Negligence, 4.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 7-16.

DUPLICITY.

In indictment, see Indictment, etc., 3, 4.

DURESS.

1. A conveyance of property by a debtor to his creditor is void where a criminal warrant is issued the principal object of which is to enforce the collection of the debt due to a corporation of which the magistrate issuing the warrant is the president, and the defendant is imprisoned under such warrant, and the conveyance is made in order to secure the release of the debtor. Jordan v. Beecher, L.R.A.1915D, 1122, 84 S. E. 549, — Ga. —.

2. The conveyance by a wife whose fears and affections are worked upon through criminal proceedings instituted against her husband, to her husband's creditors through the medium of her husband, of her property to pay the husband's debt and obtain his release from imprisonment, is a conveyance under duress as to the wife, and a purchaser from the husband's creditor with notice of the wife's equity cannot prevail in an action to recover the land from her. Jordan v. Beecher, L.R.A.1915D, 1122, 84 S. E. 549, — Ga. —.

3. A deed secured for a grossly inadequate consideration, threats to send the grantor's father to the chain gang for an alleged offense, will be set aside for duress. Embrey v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 1118, 68 So. 20 — Ala. —. (Annotated)

DUTY.

Presumption of performance of, see Evidence, 20.

DYING DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility of, see Evidence, 31.

EASEMENTS.

Duty of purchaser at tax sale to comply with bid for property subject to easements, see Taxes, 3.

1. A grant by metes and bounds of a parcel of land over which a visible right of way exists in favor of remaining land of the grantor which is located on a public highway, by a deed containing full covenants of warranty and no express reservation, does not reserve the right of way by implication, although it is reasonably necessary for the full enjoyment of the grantor's remaining land, since under such circumstances a reservation of easement is implied only in case of strict necessity. Howley v. Chaffee, L.R.A.1915D, 1010, 93 Atl. 120, — Vt. —. L.R.A.1915D.

2. A tax sale to real estate does not cut off easements of light, air, and access in it belonging to adjoining property owners, although the latter were made parties to the foreclosure proceeding and the judgment provided that each defendant be barred of all right, claim, lien, and easement in the property, if the complaint did not show that plaintiff sought to bar their superior easements. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze, L.R.A.1915D, 1115, 106 N. E. 751, 213 N. Y. 9. (Annotated)

EJECTMENT.

By husband for wife's property, see Husband and Wife, 6.

ELECTIONS.

Vote of municipality for incurring indebtedness, see Municipal Corporations, 13.

Right of election officials to maintain action to prevent waste of public funds, see Parties, 4.

Who may maintain action to determine result of election, see Parties, 6.

ELECTRICITY.

One maintaining heavily charged wires in a city street, 29 feet from the ground and 12 feet from the adjoining building, is not liable for the death of the janitor of the building, who, in attempting, while on the ground, to substitute a wire for a rope on a flagstaff on the building, walks toward the street far enough to bring the wire in contact with the current, thereby causing his death, since there is no duty to anticipate such an accident. Geroski v. Allegheny County Light Co. L.R.A.1915D, 560, 93 Atl. 338, 247 Pa. 304.

ELEVATORS.

Error in admitting evidence in action for injury to passenger on, see Appeal and Error, 21.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence, see Evidence, 17, 18.

Husband's liability for wife's negligence as to, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Attempt of insured to operate as increase of risk, see Insurance, 23.

1. The liability of the owner of an elevator in an office building to those rightfully using it is that of a common carrier to passengers. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69.

2. The owner of an elevator in an office building is liable for injuries to passengers because of the negligence of the manufacturer of the apparatus in using an unsafe bolt to unite the cables to the car. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69. (Annotated)

EMERGENCY BRAKE.

Injury to passenger by application of, see Carriers, 2-4.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Amount of recovery, see Damages, 7.
 Right of abutting owner to compensation for location in street, see Highways, 2.
 Necessity of exercise of, before laying street railway tracks across railroad, see Railroads, 1.

That part of the expense of constructing a drainage ditch assessed against a county for the benefits accruing to such county by virtue of the drainage of public highways cannot legally be paid out of funds collected by special assessments made against the property owners of said drainage district, since this would be taking private property for public use without just compensation, in violation of the Constitution and laws of the state. Wilkins v. Hillman, L.R.A.1915D, 249, 145 Pac. 1111, — Okla. —.

EMPLOYEES.

See Master and Servant.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

See Master and Servant.

ENACTMENT.

Of statutes, see Statutes, 1.

ENCUMBRANCES.

Covenants against, see Covenants and Conditions, 3; Damages, 1.
 On insured property, see Insurance, 10.

ENROLLED BILL.

Absence of signature of Speaker of House, see Statutes, 1.
 Conclusiveness of, see Statutes, 3.

ENTIRETY.

Of insurance contract, see Insurance, 15.

EQUALITY.

Of immunity, privileges and protection, see Constitutional Law, 2-6.
 Of license tax, see License, 3.

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

See Estoppel.

EQUITY.

Time for objection that cause is of equitable and not of legal cognizance, see Appeal and Error, 14.
 See also Injunction; Specific Performance.

ESTOPPEL.

Of insurer, see Insurance, 20, 21.
 As to validity of local improvement assessments, see Public Improvements, 4, 5.

1. A lessor of an estate by a lease purporting to be for life, but invalid as a life estate because not under seal, upon consideration of support cannot, where the statute does not require an ordinary lease to be under seal, be in a real action to recover the possession while the lessee complies with his agreement. Calkins v. Pierce, L.R.A.1915D, 467, 92 Atl. 529, 112 Me. 474. (Annotated)

2. The officers of a bank will not be heard to deny the entries on the books of the bank, their sworn published statements, and their sworn representations to the state examiner of state banks concerning a deposit to the credit of another insolvent bank, where the state examiner, the depositors and creditors of the insolvent bank, and the public, have accepted and acted upon such sworn published statements. Kennedy v. Young, L.R.A.1915D, 935, 67 So. 547, — La. —. (Annotated)

EVIDENCE.

First objecting to, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16.
 Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 20-22.

Judicial notice.

1. The supreme court will take judicial notice of its own record, and will of its own motion or at suggestion of counsel inspect such record in a former appeal of the same case. Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

2. The court takes judicial notice that X-ray machines sometimes inflict serious burns. State v. Lester, L.R.A.1915D, 201, 149 N. W. 297, 127 Minn. 282.

3. The court does not judicially know that a caboose car 24 feet long with adjustable and oscillating four-wheeled trucks is not more safe than one 18 feet long with two-wheeled rigid ones, so as to declare a statute requiring a change from the one to the other unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 458, 102 N. E. 25, 180 Ind. 245.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumption as to intent to perform marriage contract within year, see Contracts, 3.

Instructions as to, see Trial, 11.

4. The court will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presume, in support of an order by a Railroad Commission directing railroad companies to procure land within certain limits and construct thereon a union station, that such land for that purpose can be obtained within the prescribed limits at a reasonable price. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

5. To avoid the penalty provided by the hours of service act, a carrier which is shown to have kept an employee on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours has the burden of showing facts which bring it within the conditions under which the proviso makes the act inapplicable. Great Northern R. Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 408, 218 Fed. 302, — C. C. A. —.

6. In the absence of evidence as to the character of the accused, the jury cannot consider the presumption of good character as evidence in his favor upon the question of guilt or innocence. Price v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 1070, 218 Fed. 149, 132 C. C. A. 1.

7. An absentee is presumed to live until the contrary is proved; otherwise the absence must be such that the life of a man, who may live one hundred years, should be presumed to have ended. Quaker Realty Co. v. Starkey, L.R.A.1915D, 176, 66 So. 386, — La. —.

8. Sanity is presumed, and the taking of one's own life does not, in itself, establish insanity. Ledy v. National Council of K. & L. of S. L.R.A.1915D, 1095, 151 N. W. 905, 129 Minn. 137.

9. A mere fitful or temporary mental disorder will not be presumed to continue. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

10. In an action for breach of promise to marry, an unequivocal intention on defendant's part not to perform his contract may be inferred from his conduct. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A.1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724, — N. J. —.

11. Failure of a railroad company to produce in response to a subpoena the record of the cars with which an employee in a yard was at work when injured does not amount to a suppression of evidence which will raise a presumption against the company, if the evidence is uncontradicted that no such record was kept. Hench v. Pennsylvania R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 557, 91 Atl. 1056, 246 Pa. 1.

12. Where, in an action on a policy of accident insurance, it is claimed that death was due to one of the causes excepted from the operation of the policy, it is for the insurer to plead and prove such fact. Union Accident Co. v. Willis, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812, — Okla. —.

13. To hold one liable for a physical condition alleged to be due to negligent injuries, but which might have resulted from another cause, plaintiff has the burden of showing that it is more probable that the condition was due to the negligent act than to the other alleged cause. Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co. L.R.A.1915D, 524, 151 N. W. 724, — Mich. —.

14. Where a shipper sues a common carrier upon its common-law liability for injury to or loss of the property, and the defendant pleads and proves a special contract limiting its liability to losses occurring through its negligence, the burden is upon the defendant to prove that the loss was not caused by its negligence, and not upon the plaintiff to prove that it was so caused. McGrath v. Northern P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 644, 141 N. W. 164, 121 Minn. 258.

(Annotated)

15. In an action for damages occasioned by a delay in shipment, the burden is upon the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case that the shipment was delivered to the carrier in good order and received from the carrier in damaged condition; and where the carrier denies liability because such L.R.A.1915D.

loss was occasioned by an act of God, the burden is upon the carrier to show that such loss was the proximate result of the act of God, but, when this is done, the burden then shifts to the shipper to show that negligence on the part of the carrier co-operated with the act of God in bringing about the damage to the shipment. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus, L.R.A.1915D, 547, 141 Pac. 773, 42 Okla. 401.

(Annotated)

16. The rule of res ipsa loquitur does not establish negligence against the owner of property upon which a tank of gas explodes, in the absence of anything to show that it was in his control. Conley v. United Drug Co. L.R.A.1915D, 830, 105 N. E. 975, 218 Mass. 238.

17. The owner of an elevator in an office building which falls to the injury of a passenger because of the breaking of the bolt which unites the cables to the car has the burden of showing that the manufacturer made a test of the tensile strength of the bolt if that would have disclosed its weakness, or if the apparatus had been used so long that the manufacturer's negligence might not have been the cause of the accident, he must show that he examined and tested the parts to ascertain whether or not they had been weakened by use. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69.

18. Proof by a passenger in an elevator in an office building that he was injured by its fall due to a defective bolt casts upon its owner the burden of showing that he took all the precautions to safeguard passengers which the law required him to take. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69.

19. A certificate of the auditor whose duty was to assess the cost of a street improvement on abutting property, that he had made the assessment in proportion to benefits, is presumed to be true. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A.1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

20. One seeking to recover damages for the death of an employee injured at a place where he was forbidden to be by the rules of his employer has the burden of showing that he was there in the performance of some duty owing to the employer. Hobbs v. Great Northern R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 503, 142 Pac. 20, 80 Wash. 678.

Documentary evidence.

21. A letter of recommendation given a workman discharged at the request of fellow workmen, on the day of his discharge, stating the reasons therefor, is admissible as res gestæ in an action for damages by such employee against those who secured his discharge. Bausbach v. Reiff, L.R.A.1915D, 785, 91 Atl. 224, 244 Pa. 559.

22. Mortality tables are not rendered inadmissible in evidence by proof of disease or ill health of the person whose expectancy of life is under consideration, such facts going only to the probative effect of the tables. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

Parol and extrinsic evidence concerning writings.

23. Parol evidence may be introduced in an action at law as well as in a suit in equity, to show a misdescription of land on which crops insured against hail are growing, by reason of a mistake of the insurance agent in writing down such description. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

Opinions and conclusions.

24. Expert testimony is not admissible upon the question whether or not the fire which is the basis of an indictment for arson was set. People v. Grutz, L.R.A. 1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

25. Upon trial for burglary evidence is inadmissible that witness learned that someone other than accused had placed the stolen property near the house of accused to cast suspicion on him. Lawson v. Com. L.R.A. 1915D, 972, 169 S. W. 587, 160 Ky. 180.

Hearsay; declarations; res gestæ.

26. Declarations by a person since deceased, of relationship to a particular family, are not of themselves sufficient to establish such relationship, so as to render admissible evidence of his declarations with respect to the pedigree of persons claiming to be members of such family. Aalholm v. People, L.R.A.1915D, 215, 105 N. E. 647, 211 N. Y. 406. (Annotated)

27. Communications made by a complaining witness to the prosecuting attorney concerning his knowledge of matters relating to the probable guilt or innocence of the defendant are privileged, and cannot be given in evidence over his objection in an action against him for malicious prosecution. Matson v. Michael, L.R.A.1915D, 1, 105 Pac. 537, 81 Kan. 360.

28. Evidence of communication by a man to his wife in the presence of others is not inadmissible on the ground of confidence or privilege. Pilcher v. Pilcher, L.R.A.1915D, 902, 84 S. E. 667, — Va. —.

29. Upon the question of liability of a railroad company for injury to an employee through the negligent collision of two engines, evidence of his statements soon after the injury as to why he was at the place where the injury occurred is not admissible as res gestæ, because they do not in any way explain or characterize the main facts under investigation. Hobbs v. Great Northern R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 503, 142 Pac. 20, 80 Wash. 678. (Annotated)

30. Statements made by a patient in a hospital as to where he obtained poison tablets which he took thinking them to be medicine are admissible in evidence as admissions or declarations tending to prove negligence on the part of the hospital in an action subsequently brought for wrongful death resulting from such poison, where the statements were made to one who had previously inquired of the head nurse of the hospital, while in the performance of her duties, how the patient got poison, and who was referred to the patient with directions to go to his room and ask "how and where he got it and what it was," and such nurse afterward assented to statements made by the patient in answering these questions when promptly repeated to her by the inquirer. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

31. Dying declarations are admissible as such only in case of felonious homicide. Hobbs v. Great Northern R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 503, 142 Pac. 20, 80 Wash. 678.

Relevancy and materiality.

Of unreasonableness of statute, see Statutes, 4.

32. The practice of others engaged in the same business is evidence upon the question of negligence in not maintaining an elevation of a warehouse above the possible reach of tides, so as to render the owner liable for injury by tides to property stored therein. Hecht v. Boston Wharf Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 725, 107 N. E. 990, 220 Mass. 397.

33. To show intent of an employee charged with burglary of his employer's store, evidence is admissible that he padded the inventory, concealed articles about his work bench which were subsequently taken from the building, and entered the building at an unusual hour and took articles therefrom at a time different from that charged in the indictment. State v. Corcoran, L.R.A. 1915D, 1015, 143 Pac. 453, 82 Wash. 44.

34. In an action to recover damages for injuries to a woman through fright at an explosion on adjoining property, evidence is not admissible of a promise that no explosion should occur while her husband was away from home. Salmi v. Columbia & N. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 834, 146 Pac. 819, — Or. —.

35. Evidence as to the débris deposited on adjoining premises by an explosion is admissible in an action to recover damages for injury to a woman on the premises because of a swoon from fright at the explosion. Salmi v. Columbia & N. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 834, 146 Pac. 819, — Or. —.

36. In an action by a mail carrier to hold a street car company liable for injury due to collision with its car, the fact that at the time of the collision the car was being operated in violation of an ordinance giving mail wagons the right of way may be shown as tending to establish negligence. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

37. Upon trial for arson in which defendant is alleged to have consented to procure insurance on buildings, burn them, and collect the insurance, evidence is not admissible of a fire in his own building before the conspiracy existed, and which was not started by the one who started those under the alleged conspiracy, or shown to have been connected with the one for which the indictment was found. People v. Grutz,

L.R.A.1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

38. Evidence of fires which had taken place from time to time under agreement between two persons to get the property insured and one to set it on fire and the other collect the insurance and to share in the proceeds is not admissible upon a trial of an indictment for causing one of the fires, if each was a separate transaction, with no such relation between them in respect to time, place, or circumstances that the mere evidence of the origin of one would tend to prove the origin of another. People v. Grutz, L.R.A.1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

39. Upon a prosecution for statutory rape, evidence of subsequent acts of intercourse between prosecutrix and accused is admissible if they are so related by brevity of time, continuity of lewdness, or otherwise, to the principal act, as to justify the inference or indicate that the mutual disposition of the parties evidenced by them existed at the time of such act. People v. Thompson, L.R.A.1915D, 236, 106 N. E. 78, 212 N. Y. 249.

40. Upon the question of breach of warranty that fertilizer contains certain ingredients in certain proportions in a contract which provided that the vendor should not be liable for results evidence of the effect of the fertilizer upon crops is admissible in connection with proof of the kind of soil, manner of cultivation, accidents of season and other pertinent facts to prove that it did not contain the ingredients stated or in the proportion specified. Hampton Guano Co. v. Hill Live Stock Co. L.R.A.1915D, 875, 84 S. E. 774, 168 N. C. 442.

(Annotated)

41. Upon the question of the guilt of one accused of arson through the agency of another, evidence is admissible of conversations between accused and such person, tending to show a conspiracy between them to insure buildings and set them on fire to procure the insurance. People v. Grutz, L.R.A.1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

42. Upon the question of liability of directors of a corporation for distributing funds among themselves as salaries, evidence is not admissible that the predecessor of the complaining stockholder consented to such practice, if his consent related to a predecessor of the corporation with respect to which complaint is made, at a time when there was no attempt at discrimination between shareholders. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

43. Under Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, § 266, an attorney cannot be suspended or disbarred for the filing of any pleading or exhibit in the courts of this state, but a petition, with a pamphlet attached thereto as an exhibit, falsely and maliciously attacking the courts of this state and the judges thereof, may be considered as evidence upon the question of the attorney's moral and mental fitness to practise law. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

44. A verdict by a jury may be based on an auditor's finding, unless it is not supported by the facts found, or they are so inconsistent as to neutralize each other, or are overcome by other evidence. Hecht v. Boston Wharf Co. L.R.A.1915D, 725, 107 N. E. 990, 220 Mass. 397.

45. Upon the question of the right to recover for the death of an employee, the jury cannot speculate as to what he might have been doing or why he was at the place where the injury happened, contrary to the positive testimony in the case. Hobbs v. Great Northern R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 503, 142 Pac. 20, 80 Wash. 678.

46. To disbar an attorney, his guilt of the charges presented against him need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

47. That the evidence of theft is wholly circumstantial does not defeat recovery on a policy of insurance against loss by theft, although it provides that assured shall produce direct and affirmative evidence that the loss was due to theft; disappearance of the articles not to be deemed such evidence. Miller v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 615, 93 Atl. 320, 247 Pa. 182.

48. In an action by a municipal corporation for the penalty for transacting a business without license, a preponderance of the evidence is sufficient to show violation of the ordinance, and the proof need not be direct. Portland v. Western U. Teleg. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 260, 146 Pac. 148, — Or. —.

49. One with whom a bet is made is not an accomplice of the other party to the transaction, who is under prosecution for violating the statute against betting, within the rule that a conviction cannot be had upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. Paylor v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 682, 42 App. D. C. 428.

Admissibility under pleadings.

50. To justify evidence of conditions within the exception to the Federal hours of service act relating to employees on interstate railroads, the facts concerning them must be pleaded. Great Northern R. Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 408, 218 Fed. 302, — C. C. A. —.

EXAMINATION.

Of witnesses, see Witnesses, 2.

EXCEPTIONS.

Negation of, in indictment, see Indictment, etc., 2.

EXCISE.

See License.

EXECUTION.

Exemption from, see Exemptions.
 Levy on, see Levy and Seizure.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Effect of discharge of administrator in one state upon liability for inheritance tax imposed in another state, see Judgment, 3.

Attachment of property in hands of executors, see Levy and Seizure, 1.
 Set-off by or against, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1.

Liability for inheritance tax, see Taxes, 6.

Appointment.

Appealability of decree refusing to appoint administrator, see Appeal and Error, 2.

Right of consul to take charge of administration of estate, see Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

1. The situs of shares of capital stock in a corporation of one state, owned by one who was a resident of another state at the time of his death, is, for the purpose of administration, at the domicile of the decedent, rather than in the state in which the corporation is organized and has its place of business. Re Miller L.R.A.1915D, 656, 136 Pac. 255, 90 Kan. 819. (Annotated)

1a. A resident brother of a resident foreigner is entitled to administer upon his estate under a statute providing that administration in case of intestacy must be granted to the representatives of decedent entitled to succeed to his personal property who will accept same, in the following order: Husband or wife, child, father, mother, brothers,—where those having priority to him under the statute are nonresidents and therefore disqualified. Re D'Adamo, L.R.A. 1915D, 373, 106 N. E. 81, 212 N. Y. 214.

Indebtedness; distribution.

Right of coroner sued for property of deceased to set off funeral expenses, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1.

2. Sections 8225 and 8226 of the North Dakota Revised Code, which impress the estate of a decedent with a trust in favor of creditors, and provide for the transmission of the residue of the estate to the executor or administrator in the state or county of the decedent's domicile, do not relate solely to cases in which the decedent has left a will. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

3. In allowing or rejecting a claim, an administrator acts merely as an auditor, and his refusal to allow such claim is not res judicata. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

4. Where there are both a principal and an ancillary administration, creditors may prove their claims in either jurisdiction, and it is not always necessary that they should be proved in both. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

5. Where a district court has jurisdiction, L.R.A.1915D.

tion of the subject-matter and the parties in an action by an administrator against a coroner, who had sold property of the decedent, and applied the proceeds in payment of funeral expenses, and the surety on his official bond, it should adjudicate and determine the whole matter instead of rendering judgment against the defendants, and then sending the coroner to the county court to file claims against the estate, thereby unnecessarily increasing the expenses of the litigation. Lenderink v. Sawyer, L.R.A. 1915D, 948, 138 N. W. 744, 92 Neb. 587.

6. The statute of limitations or of non-claim is not involved in an action by a principal administrator to sell real estate in a state other than that of his appointment, and transmit the funds derived therefrom for the payment of claims properly proved and allowed in the state of his appointment, although the claims, to pay which the sale is sought, were filed in the ancillary administration in the state where the real estate is situated, but were not allowed by the administrator nor action brought thereon within the time limited, but they were properly filed and allowed in the state of the principal administration. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

7. An administrator is bound by the act of an executor de son tort in paying lawful funeral expenses, such as the administrator of the estate of the deceased would be bound to pay if they had not thus already been paid. Lenderink v. Sawyer, L.R.A.1915D, 948, 138 N. W. 744, 92 Neb. 587. (Annotated)

Creditors' rights against land; sale of land for debts.

Appeal from order refusing to grant petition for sale of land, see Appeal and Error, 1, 5.

8. Sec. 8134, Revised Codes of North Dakota 1905, which provides that any local creditor may make an application for the sale of real estate of a decedent, if the administrator neglects to do so, does not cover local creditors merely, to the exclusion of creditors in a foreign jurisdiction. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

9. Under the Code of North Dakota the sale of real estate of a nonresident decedent located in that state is authorized to pay debts of the estate duly proved in the domiciliary jurisdiction, to the exclusion of the heirs of the decedent in North Dakota. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512. (Annotated)

10. Under statutory provisions authorizing the sale of real estate of a nonresident decedent to pay debts approved in the administration of the decedent's estate in a foreign jurisdiction, and the transmission of the proceeds there for distribution, a sale will be ordered where the claim to pay which the sale is asked has been duly proved in the foreign court, which was the domiciliary court of the decedent, and there are not assets in such jurisdiction sufficient to pay the same, and the petition asking for the sale of real estate is filed in an ancillary administration had in the state where the real estate is thus situated, in which there is no money or personal property and no debts, and the contestants of the sale are the heirs, who had knowledge of the foreign administration and opportunity to defend against the claims. Dow v. Lillie, L.R.A.1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082, 26 N. D. 512.

EXEMPTIONS.

Homestead exemptions, see Homestead.
From taxation, see Taxes, 2.

Duty of debtor whose property is levied on to select exempt property, see Levy and Seizure, 2.

1. It is no part of the duty, nor is it the right, of an officer holding an execution, to select and set apart the judgment debtor's exempt property, but such right rests wholly with, and can be exercised only by, the judgment debtor. Parsons v. Evans, L.R.A.1915D, 381, 145 Pac. 1122, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

2. It is the duty of a judgment debtor having more property of a certain class than is exempt by statute, who desires to claim his exemptions out of the whole, to promptly inform the officer holding execution of the particular property selected and claimed as exempt from levy. Parsons v. Evans, L.R.A.1915D, 381, 145 Pac. 1122, — Okla. —.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In general, see Evidence, 24.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence, see Evidence, 16.

Evidence in action for injury by explosion, see Evidence, 34, 35.

Injury through fright caused by, see Fright.

Of gas, see Gas.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

For note, see Bills and Notes, 2-4.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Prejudicial error in argument of counsel, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 3, 4.

Review of damages on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18.

1. A police officer who arrests without warrant a person whom the police officials desired to interview, is answerable in damages for mistreatment of the prisoner by such officials while they are subjecting him to examination in the absence of the officer. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 681, 174 S. W. 36, — Ky. —. L.R.A.1915D.

2. A patient of full age who is detained in a hospital against her will, denied communication with her friends, and subjected to compulsory physical treatment when she might have been released without danger to herself, is entitled to damages as for false imprisonment, although the hospital authorities acted in good faith and the patient contracted to be subject to the rules, which justified such action. Cook v. Highland Hospital, L.R.A.1915D, 611, 84 S. E. 352, — N. C. —. (Annotated)

FEDERAL EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY ACT.

See Master and Servant, 1, 6, 7.

FENCES.

Insufficiency of fence around reservoir, see Negligence, 4.

The owner of a lot used to pasture horses, adjoining another lot used for the same purpose, between which the respective owners maintain wire fences on their own land several feet from the boundary line, for the purpose of preventing the horses in the respective pastures from quarreling, is liable for the resulting injury in case he permits his fence to get out of repair so that his horses enter the intervening line, reach the land of the adjoining owner, and attract to the fence one of his horses, which, in attempting to strike or kick through or over the fence at the visiting horses, becomes entangled in the wire. Houska v. Hrabe, L.R.A.1915D, 1074, 151 N. W. 1021, — S. D. —.

FERTILIZER.

Warranty on sale of, see Damages, 2; Evidence, 40; Sale, 2, 3.

FICTITIOUS NAME.

Transaction of business under, see Contracts, 8; Tradename.

FINALITY OF DECISION.

For purpose of appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1, 2.

FINES.

As punishment for contempt, see Contempt, 7.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRE LIMITS.

See Buildings, 5; Municipal Corporations, 4, 5.

FIRES.

Criminal liability for setting, see Arson.

FIXTURES.

Allowance for, on condemnation of property, see Damages, 7.

FLOOD.

Injury to property in warehouse by, see Warehouseman.

FOOD.

As to weights and measures, see Weights and Measures.

FORECLOSURE.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage, 3.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See Corporations, 26.

FOREIGN EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See Judgment, 3.

FOREMAN.

Assumption of risk by, see Master and Servant, 8.

FORGERY.

Recovery of money paid on forged draft against United States Treasury, see Assumpsit, 2.

Payment by bank of forged paper, see Banks, 3, 4.

FRATERNITIES.

Excluding from state schools, see Constitutional Law, 1, 10; Injunction, 3; Schools, 1; State Universities.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Secret commission by owner of property to broker employed by purchaser, see Brokers, 2.

In securing subscription to corporate stock, see Corporations, 11.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

In application for insurance, see Insurance.

Rescission of contract for, see Vendor and Purchaser.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

See Contracts.

FREEDOM OF WORSHIP.

See Constitutional Law, 10.

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

FRIGHT.

Evidence in action for injury caused by, see Evidence, 34, 35.

Of horse, see Highways, 6, 7; Pleading 5; Proximate Cause.

1. The rule disallowing damages for fright does not apply where physical injuries are caused by a fall consequent upon a faint caused by an explosion due to another's negligence. Conley v. United Drug Co. L.R.A.1915D, 830, 105 N. E. 975, 218 Mass. 238. (Annotated)

2. One who negligently explodes a heavy blast in close proximity to and casts debris upon a dwelling occupied by a woman, when he could have foreseen that some injury was likely to happen to the inmates of the house from his act, is liable for a physical injury inflicted upon the woman in falling as a result of a swoon from fright at the explosion. Salmi v. Columbia & N. R. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 834, 146 Pac. 819, — Or. —.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Liability of decedent's estate for, see Executors and Administrators, 5, 7.

Contract to furnish burial as insurance, see Insurance, 1.

GAMING.

One with whom bet is made as accomplice of other party, see Evidence, 49.

GARAGE.

Regulating use and construction of, see Buildings, 1-4; Constitutional Law, 17; Municipal Corporations, 6, 11.

GARBAGE.

Grant of monopoly in collection of, see Constitutional Law, 3, 8; Municipal Corporations, 10.

GARNISHMENT.

Of bank deposit, see Banks, 1.

Cars of a foreign railroad company engaged in interstate commerce are not subject to garnishment when in possession of a local company also engaged in interstate commerce, under an agreement by which the local company might transport to destination loaded cars coming into its possession, and employ the cars in its business for a per diem compensation, where it would be practically impossible for the local company to carry on its business independently of the arrangement. Koontz v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 838, 107 N. E. 973, 220 Mass. 285. (Annotated)

GAS.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence in case of explosion of, see Evidence, 16.

As to gas in mines, generally, see Mines.

One is not liable for injuries caused by an explosion of a tank of gas upon his premises, if it was not at the time in his custody and control. Conley v. United Drug Co. L.R.A.1915D, 830, 105 N. E. 975, 218 Mass. 238.

GASOLINE.

Use of, on insured premises, see Insurance, 11, 14.

GIFT.

Of corporate stock, necessity of transfer on books, see Corporations, 12.

GOOD CHARACTER.

Presumption as to, see Evidence, 6.

GOOD FAITH.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 3.

GOOD WILL.

Of corporation, fraudulent appropriation of, by other company, see Corporations, 19.

GOVERNMENT.

Separation of powers of, see Constitutional Law, 1.

GRAND JURY.

Refusal of witness before, to answer questions, see Contempt, 3, 4.

GREEK LETTER FRATERNITIES.

Excluding from public schools, see Constitutional Law, 1, 10; Injunction, 3; Schools, 1; State Universities.

GROCERIES.

Wife's liability for, see Husband and Wife, 2.

HAND.

Extent of recovery by insured for loss of, see Insurance, 24.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-26.

HIGHWAYS.

Right of legislature to divert proceeds of bonds issued by county for construction of highway, see Counties.
Municipal regulations as to, see Municipal Corporations, 8, 9.

Obstruction generally.

1. One who has occasion to pass over a highway more frequently than others does not sustain special damage peculiar to himself, beyond that of the general public, which would entitle him to relief by injunction against an obstruction of the highway. Borton v. Mangus, L.R.A.1915D, 142, 145 Pac. 835, 93 Kan. 719. (Annotated)

Use and occupation by railroads.

2. The lien for compensation provided by the Constitution for injury to abutting property by the location of a railroad in a street may be enforced against the property in the hands of a successor in title of the corporation which located the road, if it undertakes to operate the same, without making the predecessor a party to the proceeding. Appel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 397, 148 N. W. 513, — S. D. —. (Annotated)

Liability for injuries on.

Liability for injury by animal on, see Animals.

Injury to property by blasting in street, see Blasting.

Liability for injury by electric wires in highway, see Electricity.

Liability as to parks, see Parks and Squares.

Demurrer to complaint in action for injuries caused by fright of horse, see Pleading, 5.

L.R.A.1915D.

Proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause.

3. It is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary travel by the public. Muskogee v. Miller, L.R.A.1915D, 243, 145 Pac. 782, — Okla. —.

4. In establishing, caring for, and maintaining streets, highways, and public parks, municipalities act in their governmental, and not in their proprietary, capacity. Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A.1915D, 1111, 151 N. W. 976, 129 Minn. 190.

5. Cities and villages are liable for injuries resulting from dangerous conditions in their streets; but, with this single exception, municipalities are not liable in damages for negligence in performing their governmental functions, unless such liability has been imposed by statute. Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A.1915D, 1111, 151 N. W. 976, 129 Minn. 190.

6. Where a person is riding upon a well-broken horse ordinarily sure of foot, not at an unusual speed, and such animal, without fault on the part of the rider, becomes frightened and temporarily unmanageable, and, by reason of coming in contact with a defect in a street negligently created or permitted to remain therein by a city, falls and injures such rider, the municipality is liable therefor. Muskogee v. Miller, L.R.A.1915D, 243, 145 Pac. 782, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

7. The proprietor of a business house who places on the sidewalk in front of his place of business, without confining in a receptacle, at a time when a high wind is blowing, trash and loose sheets of paper, which are easily blown about in such a manner as to frighten horses, may be liable to a traveler on the street who is injured through the fright and consequent runaway of his horses, which are reasonably well broken, steady, and roadworthy, and which are frightened by paper blown from the pile. Rowen v. Smith-Hall Grocery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 617, 82 S. E. 23, 141 Ga. 721.

(Annotated)

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills, 3.

HOMESTEAD.

1. An attempted conveyance by deed of the homestead of the family by a married man, given without the wife's consent in the manner prescribed by law, is void, and this is true notwithstanding the fact that the husband and wife may be living separate and apart, or even though the wife may have, without justifiable cause, abandoned the husband, under a constitutional provision prohibiting the sale of the homestead of the family where the owner is a married man, without the consent of the wife given in such manner as may be prescribed by law. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

2. The purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a mortgage on a homestead, given by a husband to his wife to secure the payment of a postnuptial settlement, succeeds to the rights of the wife, and may attack as void a deed of the homestead given by the husband without the wife's consent. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —

3. Section 883, Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. of Oklahoma, 1903, providing that an instrument executed by the husband or wife, relating to the homestead, without being joined by the other, could be avoided only by the one not joining, is repugnant to § 2, art. 12, Oklahoma Constitution, providing that the homestead of the family shall not be sold by the owner if married without the consent of his or her spouse given in such manner as may be prescribed by law. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —

4. Section 882, Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. of Oklahoma, 1903, providing that where the title to the homestead is in the husband, and the wife voluntarily abandons him for the period of one year, or for any cause takes up her residence outside of the state, he may convey, mortgage, or make any contract relating thereto without being joined therein by her, is unconstitutional under a Constitution providing that the homestead of the family shall not be sold by the owner if married without the consent of his or her spouse given in such manner as may be prescribed by law. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —

5. A wife who has abandoned her husband, with whom she has effected a settlement purporting to be in full of property rights, which settlement she sought to and did enforce in a subsequent judicial proceeding, is not entitled to a judgment for rents and profits against the occupant of the homestead, to whom the husband alone conveyed. Whelan v. Adams, L.R.A.1915D, 551, 145 Pac. 1158, — Okla. —

HOMICIDE.

Admissibility of dying declarations, see Evidence, 31.

Indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 1.

A physician, or a person acting in that capacity, will be held guilty of "culpable negligence" within the meaning of Minnesota Gen. Stat. 1913, § 8612, subd. 3, defining manslaughter in the second degree as homicide committed without design to effect death, "by any act, procurement, or culpable negligence" not constituting a higher crime, where he has exhibited gross incompetency or inattention, or wanton indifference to his patient's safety. State v. Lester, L.R.A.1915D, 201, 149 N. W. 297, 127 Minn. 282. (Annotated)

HORSES.

Fright of, see Highways, 6, 7; Pleading, 5; Proximate Cause.

HOSPITAL.

Liability for retaining patient against her will, see False Imprisonment, 2.
L.R.A.1915D.

Evidence in action from death of patient resulting from negligence, see Evidence, 30.

Liability of physician for negligence of nurse, see Physicians and Surgeons.

Negligence as question for jury, see Trial, 5.

1. A hospital conducted for private gain is liable to a patient for the negligence of nurses while acting within the scope of their employment. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648. (Annotated)

2. A patient is generally admitted to a hospital conducted for private gain, under an implied obligation that he shall receive such reasonable care and attention for his safety as his mental and physical condition, if known, may require. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

3. A paying patient in a hospital conducted without stock or profit, in which indigent patients are treated without cost, and the fees exacted from patients who can pay are used in promoting the work may recover damages for injury done him through the negligence of an attending nurse. Tucker v. Mobile Infirmary Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 1167, 68 So. 4, — Ala. —

HOTELS.

Forbidding location near, of garage storing inflammable substances, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

HOURS OF LABOR.

See Master and Servant.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

See Legislature.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to adultery, see Adultery.

Joint deposit of husband and wife, see Banks, 2.

As to breach of promise, see Breach of Promise.

As to divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Admissibility of statements between, see Evidence, 28.

Rights in homestead, see Homestead.

Wife of one of two persons indicted for burglary as competent witness in behalf of the other, see Witnesses, 1.

Husband's Liabilities.

1. A man is not, under statutes giving his wife the right to manage her separate property, liable for torts committed in the management of her statutory separate estate, such as injuries to a tenant by the operation of an elevator in her apartment house, where he was not present, and did not direct or otherwise participate in the management, although his express statutory exemption extends only to liability for debts and liabilities contracted by the wife before marriage. Boutell v. Shellabarger,

L.R.A.1915D, 847, 174 S. W. 384, — Mo.

Wife's liabilities.

2. A married woman who personally applies to a tradesman for the purchase of groceries, stating that she wishes to open an account in her own name, and directs the tradesman to charge the goods to her, is personally liable therefor, where, in pursuance of this arrangement, the goods are delivered at her home and charged to her, notwithstanding the legal obligation of the husband to support his wife and the fact that the groceries are such as would be a proper support to be provided by the husband for the family. Bell v. Rosignol, L.R.A.1915D, 1184, 84 S. E. 542, — Ga. — (Annotated)

Conveyances to third persons.

3. Failure to name the wife in a contract apparently made by the husband alone, to convey their joint property, does not, if the instrument is properly executed by her, prevent its binding her interest. Agar v. Streeter, L.R.A.1915D, 196, 150 N. W. 160, — Mich. — (Annotated)

Actions by husband.

4. A father who is supporting the family may maintain an action for loss of the service of a minor child without joining the mother as a party plaintiff. Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A.1915D, 1111, 151 N. W. 976, 129 Minn. 190.

5. A man cannot, since the passage of the married woman's act, recover damages against one who has negligently injured his wife, for loss of consortium. Blair v. Seitzer Dry Goods Co. L.R.A.1915D, 524, 151 N. W. 724, — Mich. — (Annotated)

6. A man cannot, because of his curtesy initiate, sue, without joining his wife in the action, to recover possession of her real estate, and to recover damages for timber cut therefrom, and rents and profits, where she has conveyed the property without his joining in the conveyance. Bryant v. Freeman, L.R.A.1915D, 996, 173 S. W. 863, 131 Tenn. 87. (Annotated)

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

See Constitutional Law, 20.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Presumption and burden of proof, as to sanity, see Evidence, 8, 9.

As to married women, see Husband and Wife.

Negligence toward, see Trial, 5.

INDEBTEDNESS.

Of city or town, see Municipal Corporations, 13, 14.

INDEFINITENESS.

Of indictment, see Indictment, etc., 5.

Of demand for autopsy by insurance company, see Insurance, 18.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Who are, see Master and Servant, 10. L.R.A.1915D.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

First objecting to sufficiency of indictment for arson on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 15.

Of woman transported in violation of white slave act for conspiracy to violate laws of United States, see Criminal Law, 1.

1. An indictment of a physician for manslaughter under a statute defining manslaughter in the second degree as homicide committed without design to effect death, "by any act, procurement, or culpable negligence" not constituting a higher crime, need not allege knowledge on the defendant's part of probability of consequences from the act or omission charged; nor is it necessary to charge his duty in the premises, or set up a specific standard of duties, nor to allege "culpable" or any other degree of negligence eo nomine, nor set out defendant's acts in any other than general terms and as ultimate facts. State v. Lester, L.R.A.1915D, 201, 149 N. W. 297, 127 Minn. 282.

2. The failure of a complaint under a statute making the use of a false weight, measure, balance, or measuring device a misdemeanor, to negative a proviso in the statute that a slight variation from the stated weight, measure, or quantity for individual packages is permissible, provided the variation is as often above as below the weight, measure, or quantity stated, does not render the complaint defective. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

3. A count in an indictment for violation of a statute against the use of false weights and measures, which charges that the accused did unlawfully "expose for sale and sell and deliver" certain goods in violation of the statute, is not bad for duplicity. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

4. A count of an indictment under a statute providing punishment for one who, in attempting to effect a robbery, puts the life of the custodian of the property in jeopardy by the use of a deadly weapon, is not duplicitous in charging an attempt to commit robbery and the putting of the life of the custodian of the property in jeopardy by the use of a deadly weapon in the course of the attempt. Price v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 1070, 218 Fed. 149, 131 C. C. A. 1.

5. A complaint in an action for the violation of a statute prescribing the weight for a "print or package" of butter, which charges the accused with having sold a "print and package" of butter, is not indefinite and uncertain on the theory that it does not inform the accused whether it was a print or package, where the legislature used the words "print" and "package" synonymously. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 515, 111 Pac. 474, 83 Kan. 389.

INDORSEMENT.

Of bill or note, see Bills and Notes, 2, 3.

INFANTS.

Action by father for loss of services of minor child, see Husband and Wife, 4.

Negligence towards, see Municipal Corporations, 15, 16; Negligence, 2-4.

INFLAMMABLE SUBSTANCES.

Effect of use of, on insurance, see Insurance, 11, 14.

Storage of, in garage, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

INHERITANCE TAX.

See Taxes, 4-6.

INITIALS.

Mistake in middle initial of name, see Abstracts.

Signature of will by, see Wills, 3.

INJUNCTION.

Private action to restrain obstruction of highway, see Highways, 1.

Right to jury trial, see Jury, 2.

Joinder of parties plaintiff, see Parties, 8.

1. While equity will not ordinarily enjoin a criminal prosecution, yet, where repeated prosecutions are threatened under a void municipal ordinance, and the effect of such prosecutions would tend to injure or destroy the property of the person so prosecuted, or deprive him of the legitimate enjoyment of his property, equity will entertain a suit to inquire into the validity of the ordinance, and enjoin its enforcement. Carey v. Atlanta, L.R.A.1915D, 684, 84 S. E. 456, — Ga. —.

2. Ordinarily a court will not enjoin the prosecution of a criminal proceeding, but the remedy of injunction may be employed to protect personal and property rights, although it may operate incidentally to restrain a prosecution under an invalid ordinance. Brown v. Nichols, L.R.A.1915D, 327, 145 Pac. 561, 93 Kan. 737.

3. Admission that Greek letter fraternities are moral agents will not sustain an injunction against trustees of a state institution to prevent their exclusion therefrom, if their existence is prohibited by statute. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623.

4. Injunction lies to prevent the destruction of buildings under a void municipal ordinance. Hays v. Poplar Bluff, L.R.A.1915D, 595, 173 S. W. 676, — Mo. —.

INSOLVENCY.

Of bank, see Banks, 5.

INSPECTION.

Of books of corporation, see Corporations, 7, 7a, 24.

INSTRUCTIONS.

In general, see Trs, 9-13.
L.R.A.1915D.

INSURANCE.

Parol evidence to show misdescription of land in insurance policy, see Evidence, 23.

Sufficiency of proof in action on policy against loss by theft, see Evidence, 47.

Sufficiency of evidence in insurance actions, see Evidence, 47.

Right and manner of doing business.

1. A contract by an individual engaged in the undertaking business, to furnish burial in consideration of payment of interest during life on notes of varying amounts according to age and service to be rendered, is within the operation of the statute governing the transaction of insurance business. Renschler v. State ex rel. Hogan, L.R.A.1915D, 501, 107 N. E. 758, — Ohio St. —.

2. The fact that a life insurance company collected money to meet its obligations by so-called annual dues, instead of by premiums, does not conclusively make it a mutual association or a fraternal benefit association, and not an old line life insurance company. Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130, 137 Pac. 793, 91 Kan. 220. Constitution, rules, and by-laws.

3. Under a provision in an insurance contract between a fraternal beneficiary association and its members that the insured shall be bound by the laws of the order then in force or thereafter enacted, a provision that if the insured commits suicide, sane or insane, within two years, the association should be liable for only one fifth the amount of the benefit certificate, may be changed so as to render the suicide provision effective for a period of five years, and such provision so changed is binding upon a member who commits suicide while sane, and upon those claiming under his benefit certificate. Ledy v. National Council of K. & L. of S. L.R.A.1915D, 1095, 151 N. W. 905, 129 Minn. 137. (Annotated)

Reformation.

Reformation of policy and enforcement thereof in one action, see Action or Suit, 3.

4. It is not necessary for an insured to bring a suit in equity to reform a policy containing a misdescription of land on which crops insured against hail are growing, where such misdescription is due solely to the error of the agent of the insurance company in preparing the application for such insurance, but the insured may, by setting forth the facts relating to the mistake in his complaint, bring an action at law thereon in the first instance. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

Cancellation; paid-up policy.

5. A provision in a life insurance policy that should the insured reach a certain age and so desire he could then surrender such policy and receive back his payments with interest is a condition subsequent not impairing the vested interest of the beneficiary unless and until the insured reaches the designated age and chooses to surrender the policy. Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130, 137 Pac. 793, 91 Kan. 220.

Construction of policy generally.

6. A policy of insurance on a farm barn will be held, in the absence of express language to the contrary, to cover it during the ordinary uses to which it is put, such as the annual threshing of the grain gathered into it in the customary way. Bouchard v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 899, — Me. —.

7. If an accident insurance policy is so drawn as to require interpretation, and to be fairly susceptible of two different constructions, the one will be adopted that is most favorable to the insured. Union Accident Co. v. Willis, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812, — Okla. —.

Warranties; representations; conditions.

8. A bill of sale of chattels to secure money advanced to pay the purchase price is not a violation of a condition in an insurance policy on the property that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership. Petello v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 812, 93 Atl. 137, 89 Conn. 175.

(Annotated)

9. A bill of sale of chattels to secure money advanced to pay for them is not, although recorded, within the operation of a provision in an insurance policy rendering it void if the property becomes encumbered by a chattel mortgage. Petello v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 812, 93 Atl. 137, 89 Conn. 175.

10. The inclusion in a deed of trust of personal property, of an automobile insured by a policy providing that it shall become void if the property becomes encumbered, will not prevent recovery on the policy if the deed of trust is only temporary, and is satisfied and canceled before the loss, and is not material to the risk, or fraudulent. Cottingham v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 344, 84 S. E. 274, — N. C. —.

11. The mere temporary use in an insured barn of a gasoline engine to thresh grain is not within a provision in the policy making it void if the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall be so altered as to cause an increase of the risk. Bouchard v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 899, — Me. —.

(Annotated)

12. A policy on an automobile to be kept in a specified private garage with the privilege of operating the car and housing it temporarily in other places while en route or being cleaned or repaired, which has been suspended by the permanent removal of the car to another state, is not restored by temporarily placing the car in a repair shop without returning it to the place specified in the policy, so as to render the insurer liable for its destruction while in such shop. Lummus v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 239, 83 S. E. 688, 167 N. C. 654.

(Annotated)

13. The permanent removal of an automobile from one garage, where it was insured, to another, is not such an immaterial breach of warranty that the policy will not be avoided thereby. Lummus v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 239, 83 S. E. 688, 167 N. C. 654.

14. The use by a farmer of a gasoline engine in his barn as part of an outfit for threshing his grain is not within the operation of a provision in a policy of insurance on the property making it void if burning fluids are kept or used by the insured on the premises. Bouchard v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 899, — Me. —.

15. A policy insuring for a single premium specified sums on the dwellings on a farm and its barns, sheds, furniture, products, equipment on the premises, and live stock anywhere in certain specified counties, is divisible, and the insurance on the personality is not avoided by breach of warranty as to condition of chimneys on the dwellings and the placing of an encumbrance on the realty without authority, except so far as it is contained in the buildings as to which the risk is increased. Benham v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 736, 131 N. W. 87, 165 Mich. 406.

16. Where a policy of accident insurance gives to the insurer the right, in case of death, to an autopsy by a medical adviser, and the policy holder suffers death claimed to be accidental, his widow, who is sole beneficiary, is the proper person upon whom to make a demand for an autopsy. Johnson v. Bankers' Mutual Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

17. It is not necessary that a demand for an autopsy to which an accident insurance company is entitled under the terms of its policy in case of death of the insured be made upon the proper person in person, so long as it is communicated to him. Johnson v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

18. A demand for an autopsy under the terms of an accident insurance policy, to be effective, must be made within a reasonable time after death, and at a reasonable time and upon a proper occasion, and when made upon the widow of the insured between his death and burial, the language should leave nothing to intendment, but should be free from doubt and ambiguity. Johnson v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

(Annotated)

19. A demand for an autopsy as provided in an accident insurance policy was not made at a reasonable time or upon a proper occasion, and its refusal does not defeat the right of action under the policy, where the demand was made by the claim auditor of the company about three hours before the time set for the funeral of the insured, and when friends were beginning to arrive from a distance and the body was being prepared for burial, and when the demand was a present demand calling for present compliance or refusal, and the medical adviser whom the auditor had in mind to perform the autopsy was many miles away, so that compliance with the demand would have caused a delay in the funeral, the extent of which cannot be determined, and when the claim auditor had been within 2 miles of the place of demand investigating the cause and death since the day before. Johnson v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

Waiver or estoppel.

Waiver as question for jury, see Trial, 7.

20. Error of an insurance agent in making out an application, notwithstanding the facts are truthfully stated to him by the applicant for insurance, is chargeable to the insurer, and not to the insured. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

21. Failure to give notice of claim within the time stipulated in the policy is waived, where, in response to the notice, the company denies liability wholly on another ground. Johnson v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1199, 151 N. W. 413, 129 Minn. 18.

Risks and causes of loss, injury, or death.

Presumption as to cause of death of insured, see Evidence, 12.

22. A policy of insurance which provides that indemnity shall not be payable for injuries, fatal or otherwise, intentionally inflicted upon the insured by himself or some other person, does not exclude a recovery where the insured dies from a fracture of the skull caused by a fall on a hard pavement, the result of a blow in the face struck by the fist of another, where the blow, but not the fatal result, was intentionally inflicted. Union Accident Co. v. Willis. L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812, — Okla. —.

23. One insured against accident as "proprietor" of a trucking business, "no manual labor," does not, by undertaking to operate an elevator after working hours when the regular operator has gone home, in order to unload some trucks engaged in moving his business from one location to another, bring himself, as matter of law, within a clause in the policy making the amount recoverable in case of injury while insured is doing any act or thing pertaining to any more hazardous occupation such portion of the face of the policy as could be purchased by the premium paid at the rate fixed for such occupation, although the occupation of elevator operator is classed as more hazardous than the proprietorship of such business, but the question of the casual or habitual character of the act is for the jury. Gottfredson v. German Commercial Acci. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 312, 218 Fed. 682, — C. C. A. —

Extent of injury or loss.

24. A policy providing compensation for accidental loss of hand by removal of above the wrist covers an accident requiring the removal of all the bones of the fingers at the wrist, leaving only flesh enough to protect the bones remaining and the thumb in a stiffened and useless condition. Moore v. Etna L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 264, 146 Pac. 151, — Or. —.

(Annotated)

Interest in proceeds.

25. The rights of a beneficiary in an ordinary life insurance policy become vested upon the issuance of the policy, and can thereafter during the life of the beneficiary be defeated only as provided by the terms of the policy. Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130, 137 Pac. 793, 91 Kan. 220.

26. Whether a policy of life insurance or a benefit policy issued to one for the benefit of another vests a present interest in the beneficiary depends, not upon the name or nature of the company, but on the terms of the policy, the existing statutes, and the by-laws, if any, by which such company and its policy holders are bound; and when such policy is issued to a member for the benefit of a proper beneficiary, then, in the absence of some statute, by-law, or contract to the contrary, the beneficiary thereby becomes vested with an interest which cannot be destroyed at the will of the insured. Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130, 137 Pac. 793, 91 Kan. 220.

27. The benefit accruing from a policy of life insurance in an old line company, upon the life of a married man payable upon his death to his wife, naming her, is payable to the surviving beneficiary named, although she may have several years thereafter secured a divorce from her husband and he was thereafter married to another, who sustained the relation of wife to him at the time of his death, where the insured continued to pay all sums required by the terms of the policy after the divorce and remarriage up to his death with no attempt to change the policy or the beneficiary, and where there is nothing to indicate that the insured at the time the policy was taken out contemplated a divorce from his then wife, or that he was contemplating any protection to anyone who might thereafter become his wife and maintain that relation at the uncertain time of his death. Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130, 137 Pac. 793, 91 Kan. 220.

(Annotated)

INTENT.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 10.

Evidence as to, generally, see Evidence, 33.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 3.

INTENTIONAL INJURY.

To insured, see Insurance, 22.

INTEREST.

Effect of uncertainty as to rate of interest on negotiability of note, see Bills and Notes, 1.

Usurious interest, see Usury.

INTERLOCUTORY ORDER.

Consideration of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 8.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.Prohibition and regulation.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law, 6.

Due process in, see Constitutional Law, 15.

Title of statute, see Statutes, 5.

1. A statute making it unlawful to keep, store, or possess any intoxicating liquors in any place other than a private residence will not be limited to a keeping for sale, where other provisions relate to a keeping for such purpose. Com. v. Smith, L.R.A.1915D, 172, 173 S. W. 340, — Ky. —
Unlawful sales; offenses and proceedings.

Search of premises for intoxicating liquors, see Appeal and Error, 13.

2. One having possession of intoxicating liquor to be delivered to carriers for shipment to other states upon receipt of the price is within the operation of a statute providing for punishment of one who has such liquors in possession for purpose of sale. Frogg v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 330, 173 S. W. 383, — Ky. —.

IRRIGATION.

Liability of irrigation company for failure to deliver water to stockholder, see Corporations, 13.

Damages for injury to crop by failure to furnish water for, see Damages, 6.

Who may maintain action for negligent failure to maintain irrigation ditch, see Parties, 2.

Jurisdiction of Railway Commission over question of ownership of irrigation canal, see Public Service Commissions, 1.

Use of water for, generally, see Waters, 2, 3.

Regulation of rates of irrigation company, see Waters, 4-6.

JERK.

Injury to passenger by, see Carriers, 2-4.

JOINDER.

Of causes of action, see Action or Suit, 3.

Of parties plaintiff, see Parties, 8.

JOINT DEPOSIT.

In bank, see Banks, 2.

JOLT.

Injury to passenger by, see Carriers, 2-4.

JUDGES.

There is no error in one of several judges of a trial court having co-ordinate jurisdiction calling in another judge to try a case after an affidavit of prejudice had been filed against himself, although the affi- L.R.A.1915D.

davit was not filed within the time specified by statute. Dibbert v. Metropolitan Invest. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 305, 147 N. W. 3, 158 Wis. 69.

JUDGMENT.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 27-29.

Waiver of error by motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict, see Appeal and Error, 17.

In contempt proceeding, see Contempt, 7.

Validity; effect and conclusiveness.

Conclusiveness of act of administrator in allowing or rejecting claim, see Executors and Administrators, 3.

1. A voluntary nonsuit is not res judicata. Starling v. Selma Cotton Mills, L.R.A.1915D, 850, 84 S. E. 388, 168 N. C. 229.

2. The usurious character of a debt secured by a mortgage which had been foreclosed and sale held cannot be raised in an action by the mortgagors to quiet title against a subsequent mortgagee who, without knowledge of the usury, redeemed from the prior mortgagees, who had purchased at their foreclosure sale, and received a sheriff's deed to the premises. Heitsch v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 349, 150 N. W. 457, 29 N. D. 94. (Annotated)

Foreign judgments.

3. A decree in one state distributing the estate of the decedent who died domiciled in another state, and discharging the administrator after finding that all claims which had been presented against the estate had been paid, is not conclusive that all existing claims were presented so that, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, claims for inheritance taxes upon the estate so distributed cannot be allowed against the executor by the courts of testator's domicile, where, under the law of the former state, inheritance taxes are not expenses of administration or charges upon the general estate, although the administrator is permitted to retain sufficient funds to pay the local inheritance tax. People v. Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.
Relief against.

As to new trial, see New Trial.

4. The remedy of one against whom a judgment has been entered by a justice of the peace without service of summons is by motion before the justice to set aside the judgment. S. Lowman & Co. v. Ballard, L.R.A.1915D, 427, 84 S. E. 21, — N. C. —.

JUDICIAL EXAMINATION.

Of statute, see Statutes, 3, 4.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See Evidence, 1-3.

JUDICIAL SALE.

Sale of decedent's land for debts, see Executors and Administrators, 8-10.

Foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgage, 3.
For taxes, see Taxes, 3.

JURISDICTION.

To appoint administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

JURY.

Review of discretion in refusing to set aside verdict for bias of juror, see Appeal and Error, 12.
Submitting question of punishment for contempt to, see Contempt, 5.
Slander by charge against juror, see Libel and Slander.
New trial for matters pertaining to, see New Trial, 2.
Testimony or affidavits by member to impeach verdict, see New Trial, 4.
Charging jury on Sunday, see Sunday. Questions for, see Trial, 1-7.
Taking case from, see Trial, 8.
As to grand jury, see Grand Jury.

1. The right to practise law is not a vested right, but a mere privilege, and an action to disbar an attorney under § 267, Comp. Laws 1909 of Oklahoma, is a civil proceeding, and the accused is not entitled to a trial by a jury as a matter of right. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745.

2. There is no right to a jury trial in a proceeding to enjoin the violation of a municipal ordinance. Rochester v. Gutberlett, L.R.A.1915D, 209, 105 N. E. 548, 211 N. Y. 309.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Vacation of judgment entered by, see Judgment, 4.

KNOWLEDGE.

See Notice.

LABORERS.

Lien of, see Liens.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Conspiracy by, see Conspiracy.

LAND CONTRACT.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Estoppel by lease, see Estoppel, 1.
Lease for oil or gas, see Mines.
Husband's liability for injury to tenant of wife by negligence as to elevator, see Husband and Wife, 1.

LARCENY.

Insurance against loss by theft, see Evidence, 47.
Probable cause for prosecution for, see Malicious Prosecution, 3.

LAW OF THE CASE.

Decision on former appeal as, see Appeal and Error, 25. AP

LEASE.

For oil or gas, see Mines.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See Executors and Administrators.

LEGISLATURE.

Right to divert proceeds of county bonds, see Counties.
Power of, over municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 3.
Enactment of statutes by, see Statutes.

A constitutional grant of power to the legislature to raise revenue by certain specified methods does not interfere with its inherent power to employ other methods for that purpose. Re Kessler, L.R.A.1915D, 322, 146 Pac. 113, 26 Idaho, 764.

LETTERS.

As evidence, see Evidence, 21.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

As to exemptions, see Exemptions.
Garnishment of foreign railway cars, see Garnishment.

1. After a decedent's estate has passed to executors for administration under his will, no attachment lies at the suit of creditors to reach property alleged to have been transferred by decedent in fraud of their rights. McCoy v. Flynn, L.R.A.1915D, 1064, 151 N. W. 465, — Iowa, —.

2. Where only a part of property levied upon is claimed as exempt, a demand by the execution defendant for the return of his exempt property, unaccompanied by any effort to make a selection of a part out of the entire lot, will not, in an action in replevin for possession of the exempt property subsequently selected and claimed, entitle such party to damages against the officer for the detention of such exempt property; the officer making no further defense to the action than to resist plaintiff's right to recover damages. Parsons v. Evans, L.R.A.1915D, 381, 145 Pac. 1122, — Okla. —.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Effect of proceeding against attorney for criminal libel on right to disbar him for the same offense, see Attorneys, 8.

Liability of master for libel by servant, see Master and Servant, 9.

1. To charge a juror with returning a verdict which he knew to be wrong is not actionable per se. Smallwood v. York, L.R.A.1915D, 578, 173 S. W. 380, — Ky. —.

2. The position of juror is not an office or employment within the rule that it is slanderous to impute unfitness to perform the duties of an office or employment. Smallwood v. York, L.R.A.1915D, 578, 173 S. W. 380, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

3. A statement by an attorney in open court that the jury in another case had turned in a verdict which they knew to be wrong is not privileged. Smallwood v.

York, L.R.A.1915D, 578, 173 S. W. 380, — Ky. —.

LIBERTY.

Guaranty of right of, see Constitutional Law, 7-16.

LICENSE.

Effect of operating automobile without license on right to recover for injury, see Automobiles, 1.

Sufficiency of proof in action for penalty for transacting business without license, see Evidence, 48.

1. Under charter authority to regulate occupations within its limits, a municipal corporation may require one undertaking to transact a messenger business within the city to secure a license and furnish a bond for the faithful performance of the duties incident to such business. Portland v. Western U. Teleg. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 260, 146 Pac. 148, — Or. —.

On what business.

Of dentists, see Constitutional Law, 4, 5; Dentists.

2. A telegraph company which has, incident to its business, undertaken to furnish messengers to carry notes, packages, and similar matter for patrons, transacts a messenger business within the meaning of a municipal ordinance requiring the procurement of a license therefor, although its offer to transact such business states that its sole undertaking is to furnish messengers and not to deliver the packages. Portland v. Western U. Teleg. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 260, 146 Pac. 148, — Or. —.

Uniformity and equality.

3. A license tax on motor vehicles for revenue purposes, graduated according to the power of the machines, does not violate a constitutional provision that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, since that provision does not apply to license fees. Re Kessler, L.R.A.1915D, 322, 146 Pac. 113, 26 Idaho, 764.

(Annotated)

Reasonableness; amount.

4. That a tax upon the right to use the highways with motor vehicles is in excess of the cost of policing the highways, and is not graduated according to the value of the cars, does not bring it into conflict with a constitutional provision that the legislature shall provide revenue by levying a tax by valuation. Re Kessler, L.R.A.1915D, 322, 146 Pac. 113, 26 Idaho, 764.

LIENS.

For compensation for injury to abutting property by location of railroad in street, see Highways, 2.

Of mechanics or materialmen, see Mechanics' Liens.

For taxes, see Taxes.

For repairs.

1. A statute declaratory of the common law as to the existence of an artisan's lien, but silent on its priority, will not be enlarged by negative construction to deny L.R.A.1915D.

priority existing at common law to the lien so defined, but will be limited in application to the definition of the lien, and the common-law priority considered as continuing in force and applicable thereto. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

2. The fact that mortgaged chattel property was sold by the mortgagor without written consent of the mortgagee, does not affect the title of the purchaser so as to prevent him from authorizing repairs thereto and subjecting the same to an artisan's lien therefor, superior to the chattel mortgage, since the purchaser is, for such purposes, considered in law as the agent of the mortgagee. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

3. A chattel mortgage taken by the vendor of personal property to secure unpaid purchase money is, at common law, subordinate to an artisan's lien for work thereafter done upon the property, where the artisan has retained possession at all times after completion of the work; and this is true although a statute granting an artisan's lien is silent as to its priority. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265. (Annotated)

4. A vendor of an automobile, who takes notes for unpaid purchase money, retaining title to the machine as security, by placing the machine in the purchaser's possession for use, impliedly authorizes the making of necessary repairs upon the machine, so that the lien for such repairs takes precedence of his lien, at least, if he knew without protest that the repairs were being made. J. A. Broom & Son v. Polk, L.R.A.1915D, 1146, 67 So. 659, — Miss. —.

5. The claimed lien of one who has, without the knowledge or consent of the vendor, made repairs on an automobile conditionally sold to a vendee in possession, under a statute providing therefor in case of repairs made at the request of the owner or his agents, is subordinated to the title of the vendor, which is retained in the purchase-money notes, although the mechanic had no notice of the vendor's title. Shaw v. Webb, L.R.A.1915D, 1141, 174 S. W. 273, 131 Tenn. 173. (Annotated)

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIFE TABLES.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 22.

LIGHT.

Easement of, see Easements, 2; Taxes, 3.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Time to present claim against decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators, 6.

1. A proceeding to disbar an attorney for conduct disrespectful to a constitutional court cannot be barred by a statute of limitations. State Bar Commission ex rel. Williams v. Sullivan, L.R.A.1915D, 1218, 131 Pac. 703, 35 Okla. 745. (Annotated)

2. The statute of limitations begins to run against an action to recover damages from a sheriff for failure to return an attachment, when the return is due, although the full amount of injury cannot be ascertained until the release some time later of prior liens on a portion of the property. Johnson v. Beattie, L.R.A.1915D, 1163, 93 Atl. 250, — Vt. —.

LIMITATION OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Of town or city, see Municipal Corporations, 14.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

For carriage of passenger, see Carriers, 6.

As to freight, see Carriers, 13.

LOAN.

Payment of, see Payment.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS.

See Public Improvements.

LOCATION.

Of depot, see Carriers, 14, 15, 17; Constitutional Law, 9.

Of insured property, see Insurance, 12, 13.

LORD'S PRAYER.

Repeating of, in schools, see Schools, 3.

MAIL CARRIERS.

Giving mail carrier right of way in street, see Evidence, 36; Municipal Corporations, 9, 12; Street Railways, 1; Trial, 12.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Instruction as to probable cause, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Evidence of privileged communications, see Evidence, 27.

As to false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment.

Question for jury, see Trial, 1, 2.

1. For "probable cause" for an arrest to exist, it is not necessary that the accuser shall believe that he has sufficient evidence to procure a conviction of the accused. Matson v. Michael, L.R.A.1915D, 1, 105 Pac. 537, 81 Kan. 360.

2. If a complaining witness believed upon reasonable grounds that the accused was guilty, it is not material, in an action against him for malicious prosecution, whether he believed that probable cause existed in a legal sense, unless as bearing upon the question of malice. Matson v. Michael, L.R.A.1915D, 1, 105 Pac. 537, 81 Kan. 360.

3. Probable cause for a prosecution for larceny exists as matter of law against an employee of a storage company, where he is frequently with another employee who has a key to a room containing slot machines, and both of them play into machines about town slugs of a peculiar pattern identical with those taken from machines in the room which have been forced open, where the facts were stated to a reputable attorney who advised a prosecution. Simmons v. Gardner, L.R.A.1915D, 16, 89 Pac. 887, 46 Wash. 282.

MANDAMUS.

Condition precedent.

1. Previous leave of court is not necessary to the maintenance of a mandamus proceeding to compel receivers of a railroad to obey an order requiring it to join with other roads in the construction and maintenance of a union depot, in view of the Federal statute providing that every receiver appointed by a Federal court may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with the property in his care, without previous leave of court. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

Parties.

2. In a proceeding to compel the officers of a private corporation to allow one of its directors to inspect its books, papers, records, and correspondence, the corporation itself is not a necessary party. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

Pleading; writ and return.

3. A motion for the award of a peremptory writ of mandamus, unaccompanied by a replication to the return of the alternative writ, is equivalent to a demurrer to the return. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

4. An alternative writ of mandamus need not recite the filing of a petition for award thereof. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

5. A clerical error in the date of issuance of a mandamus nisi may be cured by an amendment. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

6. An alternative writ of mandamus sued out for the purpose of compelling the officers of a private corporation to allow one of its directors to inspect its books, papers, records, and correspondence is not vitiated by a recital of the relator's dual status of stockholder and director, and failure formally to claim the right of inspection in one of the two capacities indicated by the recitals. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

Defenses.

7. An averment in general terms by the respondents in an action in mandamus to compel the officers of a corporation to allow one of its directors to inspect its books, papers, records, and correspondents, that the respondents are advised that one of the purposes of the relator in seeking such inspection is to enable him to obtain knowledge of the corporate business for communication to rival or competing concerns, unsupported by any allegation of facts indicating the source of such information, the identity of such rival concerns, or the connection of the relator therewith, is too indefinite, and therefore insufficient as a defense to the writ. State ex rel. Aultman v. Ice, L.R.A.1915D, 288, 84 S. E. 181, — W. Va. —.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See Homicide.

MANUFACTURER.

Liability of, on warranty to retailer, see Sale, 2.

MARRIAGE.

Breach of promise to marry, see Breach of Promise.

Contract in restraint of, see Contracts, 6.

As to divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Effect of marriage of mortgagee to mortgagor to extinguish debt, see Mortgage, 2.

MARRIED WOMEN.

See Husband and Wife.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Statute as to remodelling or construction of cabooses, see Action or Suit, 2; Commerce; Evidence, 3; Statutes, 4.

Burglary by employee, see Burglary, 1; Evidence, 33.

Forbidding person to act as conductor without having previously served as freight conductor or brakeman, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Action by stockholder to compel directors to account for money distributed to employees, see Corporations, 15.

Burden of proving that servant violating rules did so in performance of duty, see Evidence, 20.

Presumption from withholding of evidence in action for injury to employee, see Evidence, 11.

Evidence of statements by injured employee, see Evidence, 29.

Sufficiency of proof in action for injury to employee, see Evidence, 45.

Probable cause for prosecution of employee, see Malicious Prosecution, 3.

When relation exists.

1. A Pullman porter is not an employee of the railroad hauling the car on which he is employed, so as to come within the provision of the Federal employers' liability act invalidating contracts by which carriers attempt to exempt themselves from the liability to their employees created by that act. Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 510, 40 App. D. C. 169. L.R.A.1915D.

Hours of labor.

Presumption and burden of proof in prosecution for violation of statute as to, see Evidence, 5.

Evidence in action for violation of hours of service act, see Evidence, 50.

2. The time during which a fireman is required to watch his engine after the train is tied up because it cannot complete its run within the sixteen hours provided, before he is relieved from duty, must be considered in determining whether or not he has been kept on duty longer than the statute permits. Great Northern R. Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 408, 218 Fed. 302, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

3. Hot journals, unusual traffic, head winds, or the imperfect working of an engine because recently overhauled, are not within the proviso to the Federal hours of service act, that it should not apply in case of casualty, unavoidable accident, or the act of God, nor where the cause of delay was not known to the carrier at the time the employee left the terminal, and could not have been foreseen. Great Northern R. Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1915D, 408, 218 Fed. 302, — C. C. A. —.

Termination of relation; discharge.

Conspiracy to procure discharge, see Conspiracy.

Evidence in action for damages for securing discharge of employee, see Evidence, 21.

4. An employer who has failed to accept a conditional offer to resign made by a traveling salesman cannot discharge the employee thereafter without responding in damages, unless the employee is guilty of some misconduct subsequently to the making of his conditional offer of resignation. Nesbit v. Giblin, L.R.A.1915D, 477, 148 N. W. 138, 96 Neb. 369. (Annotated)

5. An employer who continues a traveling salesman in his employment for more than thirty days, and accepts the benefit of his services for this time, after a conditional offer of resignation which the employer fails to accept, cannot thereafter avail himself of the conditional offer to resign, although there has been no formal withdrawal of such offer. Nesbit v. Giblin, L.R.A.1915D, 477, 148 N. W. 138, 96 Neb. 369.

Federal employers' liability act.

See also supra, 1.

6. Liability under the Federal employers' liability act does not extend to injury to an employee who is not at the time of the injury acting within the scope of his employment, or performing some act which is incidental to his employment. Hobbs v. Great Northern R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 503, 142 Pac. 20, 80 Wash. 678.

7. To entitle a brakeman who is a member of a shifting crew in a freight yard to hold the railroad company liable for personal injuries under the Federal employers' liability act or safety appliance act, he must show that at the time of the injury he was engaged in interstate commerce or with its instrumentalities, and this burden is not met merely by showing that in the yard where he was employed cars containing interstate as well as intrastate shipments were handled. Hench v. Pennsylvania R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 557, 91 Atl. 1056, 246 Pa. 1.

Servant's assumption of risks.

8. The foreman of a roofing gang assumes the risk of injury from falling from a roof upon which he is at work, because of the absence of gutters or hangers thereon to protect employees from falls. Daisey v. Wagner, L.R.A.1915D, 157, 172 S. W. 942, 162 Ky. 554.

Master's liability for acts of servant.

9. An employer is not responsible for a libel perpetrated as a joke by his bookkeeper in stating an account with an employee on a blank furnished for that purpose, which consists of a pencil memorandum of an item implying bestiality, which is not carried into the footings, and for which there is no heading in the blank, since the act is not within the scope of the bookkeeper's employment. Case v. Steele Coal Co. L.R.A.1915D, 867, 171 S. W. 993, 162 Ky. 68. (Annotated)

10. A transfer company which delivers goods under a contract with a manufacturer at so much per hundred weight, along with the goods of other customers of the transfer company, the transfer company routing its delivery so as to make an economical transfer of all goods of its customers going in that vicinity, is an independent contractor, and not the servant of the manufacturer, and therefore the manufacturer is not liable for the negligence of the transfer company in making a delivery. Winter v. American Radiator Co. L.R.A.1915D, 476, 151 N. W. 277, 128 Minn. 508.

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 32-43.

MAXIMS.

1. Cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex. Cottingham v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 344, 84 S. E. 274, — N. C. —.

2. Damnum absque injuria. Houska v. Hrabe, L.R.A.1915D, 1074, 151 N. W. 1021, — S. D. —.

3. Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Moss v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 361, 173 S. W. 859, — Tenn. —.

4. Equity must follow the law. Farmers' Security Bank v. Martin, L.R.A.1915D, 433, 150 N. W. 572, — N. D. —.

5. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Boutell v. Shellabarger, L.R.A.1915D, 847, 174 S. W. 384, — Mo. —.

6. Personal property follows the person. People v. Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.

7. Qui, facit per alium, facit per se. Tucker v. Mobile Infirmary Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 1167, 68 So. 4, — Ala. —.

8. Res ipsa loquitur. Conley v. Ed Drug Company, L.R.A.1915D, 830, E. 975, 218 Mass. 239, — N. H. —.

9. Respondeat superior. Winter v. American Radiator Co. L.R.A.1915D, 476, 151 N. W. 277, 128 Minn. 508.

10. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Packwood v. Mendota Coal & Coke Co. L.R.A.1915D, 911, 146 Pac. 163. — Wash. —.

MEASURES.

See Weights and Measures.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

1. An architect who, under contract with the owner of land, furnishes plans and specifications for the construction of a contemplated building thereon, is entitled to a lien upon the land, although the owner, after the plans are furnished, of his volition and without fault of the architect, abandons the construction of the building, even though the lien statute does not expressly give a lien when no improvement is begun on the ground. Lamoreaux v. Andersch, L.R.A.1915D, 204, 150 N. W. 908, 128 Minn. 261. (Annotated)

2. The lien statement of an architect who was under contract with the owner of land to furnish plans and specifications for, and supervise the construction of, a contemplated building for an entire consideration based on a percentage of the total cost, a project which was subsequently abandoned by the owner of the land, may be filed within ninety days after the repudiation of the contract by the owner, although the last work on the plans and specifications was done more than ninety days prior to the filing. Lamoreaux v. Andersch, L.R.A.1915D, 204, 150 N. W. 908, 128 Minn. 261.

MESSENGER BUSINESS.

License for, see License, 1, 2.

MILLS.

Liability of owner for drowning of child in reservoir, see Negligence, 4.

MINES.

Pollution of water by, see Waters, 1.

1. The words "gas well" employed in a lease for oil and gas providing that the lessor should be paid "three hundred ($300) dollars per year for the gas from each and every gas well drilled on said premises; said payment to be made on each well within sixty days after completion, and to be paid yearly thereafter while it is a gas well," interpreted in the light of all the facts and circumstances, mean a gas well which, considering its location with reference to any market for gas and its capacity as a gas producer, can be profitably operated as such, and not a well producing oil in large quantities and some gas, and operated for many years by lessee as an oil well, without demand for gas rental by lessor. Pritchard v. Freeland Oil Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1186, 84 S. E. 945, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

2. The fact that some gas is found in one or more of the sands penetrated in drilling an oil well, and is afterward run from the casing head into a gas line from wells on an adjoining lease operated by the same lessee, and the gas from all utilized in operating the wells on both properties, according to a custom prevailing among oil operators, does not render the lessee in such lease liable to the lessor for annual gas rentals provided for in such lease. Prichard v. Freeland Oil Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1186, 84 S. E. 945, — W. Va. —.

MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS.

Rights of, see Corporations, 14-23.

MISTAKE.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 23.

In name, see Name.

MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

In collection of garbage, see Constitutional Law, 3, 8; Municipal Corporations, 10.

Contracts between two persons in restraint of trade, see Contracts, 7.

MOOT QUESTION.

See Courts, 2.

MORTALITY TABLES.

See Life Tables.

MORTGAGE.

As to chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage.

Effect of, on insurance, see Insurance, 10.

Priority of mortgage lien to lien of one paying taxes on the property, see Subrogation.

Taxes.

1. A mortgagee who is authorized by the mortgage to pay taxes which have been allowed by the mortgagor to become delinquent may pay a tax after its delinquency and without actual notice of its invalidity, although the assessment is fatally defective, since, the land being subject to taxation, the payment made by the mortgagee discharged it from liability for taxation for that year, while otherwise it would have been subject to reassessment and retaxation, and therefore the security of the mortgage was preserved. Farmers' Security Bank v. Martin, L.R.A.1915D, 432, 150 N. W. 572, — N. D. —.

Satisfaction; release.

2. The marriage to the mortgagee of one who has executed a mortgage on her real estate to secure repayment of a loan from him does not extinguish the debts under constitutional and statutory provisions making the property of a married woman her separate estate, which she may transfer, and giving her the power to carry on business and sue and be sued. McKie v. McKie, L.R.A.1915D, 1126, 172 S. W. 891, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

Enforcement.

Matters concluded by foreclosure decree, see Judgment, 2.

L.R.A.1915D.

3. A mortgagor who has allowed taxes on the mortgaged land to become delinquent cannot defend a foreclosure action brought by the mortgagee, who has paid the taxes and declared the entire debt due under the terms of the mortgage, on the ground that the taxes thus paid were invalid. Farmers' Security Bank v. Martin, L.R.A.1915D, 432, 150 N. W. 572, — N. D. —.

(Annotated)

Redemption.

Impairment of obligations by statute as to recording notice of redemption, see Constitutional Law, 20.

4. A certificate of redemption issued by the sheriff to the owner of mortgaged premises which had been foreclosed is not valid as against a purchaser for value of the sheriff's certificate issued to the mortgagees who had purchased at their foreclosure sale, where the certificate of redemption was wrongfully issued, in that certain taxes and liens which were necessary to the redemption were not paid by the owners. Heitsch v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 349, 150 N. W. 457, 29 N. D. 94.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

To quash return in contempt proceeding, see Contempt, 6.

MOTIVE.

Of stockholder desiring to inspect books, see Corporations, 24.

MOTOR VEHICLES.

See Automobiles.

MULTIPLE STRUCTURES.

Effect of covenant to prevent erection of, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

License by, see License.

Duty as to parks, see Parks and Squares.

Joinder of parties in action against, see Parties, 8.

Exemption of municipal waterworks from taxation, see Taxes, 2.

Powers and liabilities generally.

1. One who deals with a municipality does so with notice of the limitation on its or its agent's powers. Re Afton, L.R.A.1915D, 978, 144 Pac. 184, 43 Okla. 720.

2. A municipal corporation incurs no obligation, legal, moral, or equitable, with respect to the costs and attorneys' fees in a suit instituted by the state to forfeit the charter of a private corporation and to withdraw a monopolistic franchise which it had granted, the holder of which it found violating the terms of the grant and using the franchise for the oppression of those whom it was intended to benefit, even though, as a result of the suit, the municipal corporation obtained without expense a privilege (of establishing a water, sewerage, and drainage system) for which otherwise, in expropriating the franchise in question, it would have had to pay heavily. Forman v. Sewerage and Water Board L.R.A.1915D, 927, 66 So. 351, 135 La. 1031. Legislative control over.

3. The legislature may compel a municipal corporation to pay a debt which is equitable in character, though not binding in law, but it has no power to compel such a corporation to pay a claim which it is under no obligation to pay, moral or equitable; and the less so where the issue of obligation vel non has been finally decided between the parties, by a court of last resort, and where the fund from which the payment is claimed has been placed, by the Constitution, under a particular control, and dedicated to particular uses, which do not include the payment of the claim in question. Forman v. Sewerage and Water Board, L.R.A.1915D, 927, 66 So. 351, 135 La. 1031. (Annotated)

Delegation of power.

4. A provision in a municipal ordinance requiring consent of neighboring property owners to the erection of nonfireproof buildings within fire limits is invalid as a delegation of the legislative power of the municipality to such property owners. Hays v. Poplar Bluff, L.R.A.1915D, 595, 173 S. W. 676, — Mo. —.

Ordinances.

Regulations as to building, see Buildings.

Sufficiency of proof of violation of ordinance, see Evidence, 48.

Injunction against enforcement of ordinance, see Injunction, 1, 4.

Right to jury in proceedings to enjoin violation of ordinance, see Jury, 2.

Negligence in violating ordinance enacted as a sanitary measure, see Negligence, 1.

As to denying equal protection of the laws and abridging privileges and immunities, see Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

Denial of due process of law or property rights by, see Constitutional Law, 8, 14.

Evidence of violation of ordinance to show negligence, see Evidence, 36.

5. A provision in an ordinance establishing fire limits within which buildings composed of combustible materials cannot be erected, which permits the mayor and council to permit such buildings within the prohibited limits, cannot be eliminated, so as to permit the ordinance to be enforced as an absolute prohibition of such buildings. Hays v. Poplar Bluff, L.R.A.1915D, 595, 173 S. W. 676, — Mo. —.

6. One seeking to locate a public garage near a church cannot attack the ordinance forbidding it because it also forbids such location near a public school without forbidding it near a private one. People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

7. A police ordinance passed by a municipal corporation under general authority from the legislature, which does not prescribe its details, must be reasonable. L.R.A.1915D.

People ex rel. Busching v. Ericsson, L.R.A.1915D, 607, 105 N. E. 315, 263 Ill. 368.

8. A city ordinance which, in effect, prohibits one who owns and operates a machine shop from using the streets in bringing and taking traction engines and heavy vehicles to and from his shop, and thereby arbitrarily deprives him of an opportunity to carry on his business, is unreasonable and void. Brown v. Nichols, L.R.A.1915D, 327, 145 Pac. 561, 93 Kan. 737.

9. A municipality which has not reserved, in granting a street railway franchise, the right to create liability to individuals for injuries arising from its acts, cannot, by enacting an ordinance giving mail carriers a right of way in the street superior to street cars, create a right of action in favor of a mail carrier for injuries due to a breach of the ordinance by the railway company. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1031, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

10. An ordinance limiting the collection of garbage in the city to one licensed collector is not void for unreasonableness. Rochester v. Gutberlett, L.R.A.1915D, 209, 105 N. E. 548, 211 N. Y. 309. (Annotated)

11. No constitutional property rights are interfered with, even with respect to existing plants, by forbidding the issuance of any garage permit allowing the storage of volatile inflammable oil, for a building within a prescribed distance of any school, place of public amusement, or assembly, tenement house, or hotel. Re McIntosh, L.R.A.1915D, 603, 105 N. E. 414, 211 N. Y. 265. (Annotated)

12. A municipal ordinance giving wagons carrying United States mail the right of way in the street superior to street cars is to be enforced merely by fine for its violation, and not by private action by a mail carrier injured by its nonobservance. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1031, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —.

Borrowing money; indebtedness.

13. Indebtedness of a town, which under the Constitution can be contracted only by the assent of three fifths of the voters thereof, which was actually contracted without such assent, cannot thereafter be ratified by the voters so as to make it a valid obligation of the town. Re Afton, L.R.A.1915D, 978, 144 Pac. 184, 43 Okla. 720.

14. Section 1, chap. 116, p. 244, Sess. Laws of Okla. 1910, authorizing a court to validate warrants issued for debts in excess of the annual revenue and income of a city or incorporated town, is in conflict with § 28, art. 10, of the Constitution, providing that the indebtedness of a city or incorporated town shall not in any manner or for any purpose exceed in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without consent of three fifths of the voters thereof. Re Afton, L.R.A.1915D, 978, 144 Pac. 184, 43 Okla. 720.

Liability for damages.

Liability for defects or obstructions in street, see Highways, 3-6.

15. A municipal corporation is not liable for injury to a child by negligent use by other children of a swing on a park playground which it maintains for the public welfare, and for the maintenance of order in which it assigns policemen, although lack of care on the part of municipal employees may have contributed to the injury. Nashville v. Burns, L.R.A. 1915D, 1108, 174 S. W. 1111, 131 Tenn. 281.

16. A notice given by a parent of a claim for injuries sustained by his minor child, which contains the essential information required by the statute, is sufficient, although it fails to state specifically that the parent claims damages on his own account and also as the statutory representative of his child, and fails to make an apportionment between the two of the amount claimed. Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A. 1915D, 1111, 151 N. W. 976, 129 Minn. 190,

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTILATION.

Revocation of will by, see Wills, 2.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

See Insurance.

NAME.

Effect of mistake in name on records on liability of abstractor, see Abstracts.

As to tradename, see Tradename.

NATURAL GAS.

In mines, see Mines.

NECESSARIES.

Wife's liability for, see Husband and Wife, 2.

NEGATIVE.

Negation of defenses or exceptions in indictment, see Indictment, etc. 2.

NEGLIGENCE.

Of abstractor, see Abstracts.

In use of automobile, see Automobiles, 3-7.

Of owner of bathing resort, see Bathing Resorts.

In blasting, see Blasting.

Of carrier or passenger, see Carriers.

Measure of damages for negligence causing personal injury or death, see Damages, 5.

As to electricity, see Electricity.

As to elevators, see Elevators.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 14-18.

Evidence of custom as to, see Evidence, 32.

Relevancy of evidence as to, generally, see Evidence, 34-36.

Violation of ordinance as evidence of, see Evidence, 36.

Sufficiency of proof of, see Evidence, 45.

As to gas, see Gas.

L.R.A.1915D.

As to highway, see Highways.

As to negligent homicide, see Homicide.

Of hospital, see Hospitals.

Of master or servant, see Master and Servant.

Of municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporations, 15, 16.

Proximate cause of injury by, see Proximate Cause.

Of railroad, see Railroads.

In operation of street railway, see Street Railways.

As question for jury, see Trial, 4, 5.

Instructions as to, see Trial, 12, 13.

Of warehouseman, see Warehousemen.

Of irrigation company, see Waters, 2, 3.

1. The fact that an ordinance requiring the proprietor of a business house to keep a covered garbage can outside his place of business, in which to place all refuse, garbage, and trash, to be called for by the proper city officers, was enacted as a sanitary measure, does not prevent the placing of trash and loose sheets of paper in front of a business place from being held negligence as a matter of fact, although it may prevent it from being held negligence per se. Bowen v. Smith-Hall Grocery Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 617, 82 S. E. 23, 141 Ga. 721.

Injuries to children; dangerous attractions.

2. The act of coupling two wagons together, and thus driving them on the street without a guard or outlook on or about the rear wagon in order to warn children who might attempt to climb thereon, does not of itself constitute negligence on the part of the owner of the wagon, so as to render him liable in damages for the death of a child who climbed on the connecting pole, from which he afterward fell, and was run over by the rear wagon, the doctrine of the "Turntable Cases" not being applicable to such facts. Zigman v. Beebe & Runyan Furniture Co. L.R.A.1915D, 536, 151 N. W. 166, 97 Neb. 689.

3. A railroad company which maintains without barriers an inclined retaining wall with a wide, smooth top, along the side of a viaduct lawfully constructed over a city street, is not, although the top is some distance from the surface of the street, liable for injury to a child who climbs upon the wall and falls off onto the street, upon the theory of attractive nuisance. Coon v. Kentucky & I. Terminal R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 160, 173 S. W. 325, — Ky. —.

(Annotated)

4. A mill owner is negligent in permitting a fence inclosing a reservoir with perpendicular sides, and filled with 7 to 8 feet of water, to the top of which a sloping embankment leads on the outside, to become dilapidated, when the reservoir adjoins the playground of the children of the mill operatives, so as to be liable for the death of a five-year-old boy who, while at play, crawls through the fence for a drink and is drowned. Starling v. Selma Cotton Mills,

L.R.A.1915D, 850, 84 S. E. 388, 168 N. C. 229.

Contributory.

- Of person injured by automobile, see Automobiles, 8.
- Of bank depositor as to forged checks, see Banks, 4.
- Effect of contributory negligence of shipper on carrier's liability for loss of or damage to goods, see Carriers, 8, 10, 11.
- On street car tracks, see Street Railways.
- Failure to give requisite instruction as to contributory negligence, see Trial, 10.

NEGOTIABILITY.

- Of note, see Bills and Notes, 1.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

- See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL.

- Effect of appeal from judgment refusing second new trial to bring before appellate court order granting the first new trial, see Appeal and Error, 8.
- Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 11, 12.
- Waiver of error giving right to, see Appeal and Error, 17.
- 1. Withdrawing from the jury the question whether or not defendant in an action to recover damages for injuries inflicted by a moving automobile was exceeding the speed limit is ground for new trial at the instance of plaintiff, whose award of compensatory damages was small, even though he was found to be guilty of contributory negligence, since the withdrawal of such issue would deprive plaintiff of the benefit of evidence in support of it in determining the question of his negligence. Ludke v. Burck, L.R.A.1915D, 968, 152 N. W. 190, 160 Wis. 440.
- 2. A written answer to a written question sent by a jury which has retired, to the judge, who is waiting in the lobby of the court to receive the verdict, without requiring the attendance in court of the parties and their counsel, is, although the answer is accompanied by a statement that the question and answer are immaterial, ground for new trial, where the nature of the communication is never disclosed to the contending party, notwithstanding a statute requiring errors relating to pleading and procedure to be disregarded which do not injuriously affect the substantial rights of the parties. Lewis v. Lewis, L.R.A.1915D, 719, 107 N. E. 970, 220 Mass. 364. (Annotated)
- 3. Where a motion for new trial is made by one convicted of murder, with knowledge of the fact that the verdict was rendered in his absence, and such motion does not contain that fact as ground for new trial, though it is recited therein, it is too late, after the motion for new trial has been denied and the judgment affirmed by the supreme court, to make a motion set aside the verdict on the ground of such absence. Frank v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 817, 83 S. E. 645, 142 Ga. 741.

4. Upon the question whether or not a juror was so biased against accused as to justify setting aside a verdict against him, his affidavit to the effect that he used his influence to reduce the punishment fixed by the jury is admissible. Brannon v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 569, 172 S. W. 703, 162 Ky. 350.

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

- See Damages, 1.

NONCLAIMS.

- Statute of, see Executors and Administrators, 6.

NONRESIDENTS.

- Judgment against, see Attachment.

NOTICE.

- To attorney before disbarment, see Attorneys, 3.
- Imputing to officer knowledge of corporation, see Bills and Notes, 4.
- Of redemption, see Constitutional Law, 20.
- Allegation as to, in indictment, see Indictment, etc., 1.
- Of loss or death, see Insurance, 21.
- Of limitation upon powers of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 1.
- To city of claim, see Municipal Corporations, 16.

A director of an industrial corporation is chargeable with knowledge of everything it is his duty to know concerning commercial paper belonging to the corporation, which he undertakes, as a director, to sell. Hardin v. Dale, L.R.A.1915D, 1099, 146 Pac. 717, — Okla. —.

NURSE.

- Liability for negligence of, see Hospitals, 1, 3; Physicians and Surgeons.

OBJECTIONS.

- To raise questions on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 6, 7.

OBSTRUCTION.

- Of highway, see Highways, 1.

OFFER.

- In general, see Contracts, 1, 2.

OFFICERS.

- Bonds of, see Bonds.
- Of corporation, see Corporations, 7-10.
- Presumption and burden of proof as to acts of, see Evidence, 19.
- Liability for false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment, 1.
- Injunction against, see Injunction.
- Judges, see Judges.
- Liability of officer making levy, see Levy and Seizure.
- Mandamus to, see Mandamus.

OIL.

As to oil in mines generally, see Mines.

OPINION.

As evidence, see Evidence, 24, 25.

OPTION.

Option contract generally, see Contracts, 1, 2.

ORDINANCES.

In general, see Municipal Corporations, 5-12.

OWNERSHIP.

Of property insured, see Insurance, 8-10.

Jurisdiction of Railway Commission over question of, see Public Service Commissions, 1.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Action by father for loss of services of minor child, see Husband and Wife, 4.

Sufficiency of notice by parent to city of claim for injury to child, see Municipal Corporations, 16.

PARKS AND SQUARES.

Maintenance and care of, by municipality in governmental capacity, see Highways, 4.

A city that contracts and maintains walks and footpaths in its parks, which are used as thoroughfares in passing from one part of the city to another, is liable for injuries resulting from dangerous conditions in such walks caused by the negligence of its employees. Ackeret v. Minneapolis, L.R.A.1915D, 1111, 151 N. W. 976, 129 Minn. 190.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 23.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

PARTIES.

To criminal offense, see Criminal Law, 1.

Plaintiffs.

Action by stockholder of corporation, see Corporations, 15-23.

Husband, see Husband and Wife, 4-6. Who may question validity of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 6.

Private action for violation of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 12.

Who may question validity of statute, see Statutes, 2.

1. One who has sold and received payment for goods deposited in a warehouse and identified so that the title has passed cannot hold the warehouseman liable for negligently permitting the property to be injured. Hecht v. Boston Wharf Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 725, 107 N. E. 990, 220 Mass. 397. L.R.A.1915D.

2. One leasing land under a ditch constructed by a mutual irrigation ditch company, from a holder of shares in the company, by an instrument providing that he will accept as full water right for said land a definite fraction of the water right held by the lessor, is in such privity with the ditch company as to enable him to maintain an action against it for negligent failure to maintain the ditch, in consequence of which he is deprived of the water to which he is entitled, to his injury. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A.1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —.

3. A consumer may maintain an action to enforce the rates provided in a contract between a municipal corporation and a corporation for supplying water to the inhabitants. Walton v. Proutt, L.R.A.1915D, 917, 174 S. W. 1152, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

4. State election officials are not within the operation of a statute permitting a taxpayer's action to prevent waste of funds of a county, town, city, or incorporated village to be maintained against any officer thereof, or any agent, commissioner, or other person acting in its behalf, or to prevent an illegal official act on the part of officers, agents, commissioners, or other persons acting for any county, town, village, or municipal corporation. Schieffelin v. Komfort, L.R.A.1915D, 485, 106 N. E. 675, 212 N. Y. 520.

5. A court has authority to determine the constitutionality of acts of the legislature only in proceedings by a person whose special, peculiar, personal rights are affected thereby, and cannot, therefore, at the instance of a taxpayer, pass upon the constitutionality of the act of the legislature in providing for a revision of the Constitution. Schieffelin v. Komfort, L.R.A.1915D, 485, 106 N. E. 675, 212 N. Y. 520.

6. An individual taxpayer cannot maintain a suit in equity to determine the result of an election at which the question was submitted to the voters whether or not a constitutional convention should be held. Schieffelin v. Komfort, L.R.A.1915D, 485, 106 N. E. 675, 212 N. Y. 520.

7. A citizen and taxpayer of a state has no standing as such to contest the expenditure of funds under an alleged unconstitutional statute. Sutton v. Buie, L.R.A.1915D, 178, 66 So. 956, — La. —.

(Annotated)

8. Where an owner of a city lot makes a contract of sale, and, upon payment of a part of the purchase money, executes a bond for title, and places the purchaser in possession, the obligor and the obligee are proper parties in a suit against the city to enjoin an illegal interference with the possession of the property. Carey v. Atlanta, L.R.A.1915D, 684, 84 S. E. 456, — Ga. —. Defendants.

In action to enforce lien for compensation to abutting owner for location of railroad in street against property in hands of successor, see Highways, 2.

In mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus, 2.

9. A corporation issuing stock is not a necessary party to a suit by stockholders in another corporation which owns such stock, to compel the latter to place the title to the stock in its own name. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1123, 93 Atl. 747, — Me. —.

PARTNERSHIP.

Doing of business by, under assumed name, see Tradename, 2, 3.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

PATIENT.

In hospital, see Hospitals.

PAYMENT.

Recovery of, see Assumpsit.
Subrogation for, see Subrogation.

Under an application to a banker for a loan to be paid to a specified agent, another banker, to whom the application is forwarded, does not complete the loan so as to be entitled to the note and mortgage given to secure repayment by paying the money to the banker to whom the application was originally directed. Shade v. Hayes, L.R.A.1915D, 271, 151 N. W. 42, — S. D. —.

PEDIGREE.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 26.

PENALTIES.

For violation of hours of service act, see Evidence, 5.
Sufficiency of proof in action to recover, see Evidence, 48.

PERMIT.

For building, see Constitutional Law, 2.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

To passenger, see Carriers.
Measure of damages for, see Damages, 5.
Evidence of declarations as to, generally, see Evidence, 29, 30.
Resulting from fright, see Fright.
By explosion of gas, see Gas.
To married woman, husband's right of action for, see Husband and Wife, 5.
To servant, see Master and Servant.
Proximate cause of, see Proximate Cause.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Mortgage on, see Chattel Mortgage.
Sale of, see Sale.

PETITION.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 3, 4.

PETROLEUM.

In mines generally, see Mines.
L.R.A.1915D.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Effect of wrong treatment by, on measure of damages for personal injury, see Damages, 5.

Liability of carrier for negligence of physician employed to treat injured passenger, see Carriers, 1.

Criminal liability for negligence, see Homicide.

Sufficiency of indictment for manslaughter, see Indictment, etc., 1.

As to dentists, see Dentists.

Where a patient in a hospital is treated by a physician who does not manage or control the hospital, he is not liable for the negligence of hospital nurses or internes, if he had no connection with any negligent act. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

PLAINTIFF.

Parties plaintiff, see Parties, 1-8.

PLAYGROUND.

Injury to child on municipal playground, see Municipal Corporations, 15.

PLEADING.

Evidence admissible under, see Evidence, 50.

In criminal prosecution, see Indictment, etc.

In mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus, 3-6.

Relief under pleadings.

1. Recovery cannot be allowed in an action to compel directors of a corporation to account for salaries alleged to have been illegally paid for years prior to the time claimed in the complaint or set up in plaintiff's evidence. Godley v. Crandall & Godley Co. L.R.A.1915D, 632, 105 N. E. 818, 212 N. Y. 121.

Amendments.

Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 9.

2. Where it clearly appears that the defendant was not misled, surprised, or in any way prejudiced from maintaining his defense upon the merits, an amendment of the complaint to conform to the facts proved should be allowed. French v. State Farmers' Hail Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 766, 151 N. W. 7, 29 N. D. 426.

Declaration or complaint.

Disbarment of attorney for malicious attack on court in petition, see Evidence, 43.

3. One cannot recover for aggravation of a condition existing at the time of a personal injury due to another's negligence unless such condition and its aggravation are pleaded. Salmi v. Columbia & N. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 834, 146 Pac. 819, — Or. —.

4. To render directors of a corporation personally liable for failure to file a certificate of payment of the capital stock, under a statute compelling them to do so within a certain time after payment of the last instalment of the stock "fixed and limited" by statute or vote of the corporation, the complaint must show that the capital was fixed and limited, and that the last instalment had been paid. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Arnold, L.R.A.1915D, 1038, 87 Atl. 17, 35 R. I. 456.

Demurrer.

Demurrer to return in mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus, 3.

5. A petition alleging in substance that the proprietor of a business house whose place of business abutted on a much traveled street in a city placed on the sidewalk in front of his place of business, without confining in a receptacle, or in any other way, on a day when the wind was blowing sharply, a large quantity of trash and loose sheets of paper, which were naturally liable to be blown about the streets by even a light breeze, and naturally and inevitably tended to excite and frighten not only nervous horses, but even quiet and steady ones, and further alleging that the plaintiff was injured while driving two reasonably well broken, steady, and roadworthy horses along the street, through their becoming frightened by papers from the pile being blown against their legs, sufficiently alleges negligence so as to withstand a general demurrer. Bowen v. Smith-Hall Grocery Co. L.R.A.1915D, 617, 82 S. E. 23, 141 Ga. 721.

POLICE.

Liability for false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment, 1.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law, 17, 18; Municipal Corporations.

POLLUTION.

Of water, see Waters, 1.

PORTER.

On Pullman car, injury to, see Carrriers, 6.

POSTOFFICE.

Ordinance giving mail carrier right of way in street, see Evidence, 36; Municipal Corporations, 9, 12; Street Railways, 1; Trial, 12.

POWERS.

Of disposal in will, see Wills, 4.

PREFERRED STOCK.

Dividends on, see Corporations, 25.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-26.

PRESENCE.

Of accused, necessity of, see Criminal Law, 2.

PRESUMPTIONS.

In general, see Evidence, 4-20. L.R.A.1915D.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

As to brokers, see Brokers.

Right to inspect books of corporation through agent, see Corporations, 7, 7a.

Estoppel of insurance company by agent's mistake, negligence, or fraud, see Insurance, 20.

Right to discharge employee, see Master and Servant, 4, 5.

Notice of limitation on authority of agent of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

Authority to receive payment, see Payment.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

As to bonds generally, see Bonds.

A surety on the bond of a town treasurer for a second term who is compelled to make good money lost through a deposit in an insolvent bank during the first term may compel contribution from the surety on the bond covering such term. Yawger v. American Surety Co. L.R.A.1915D, 491, 106 N. E. 64, 212 N. Y. 292. (Annotated)

PRIORITY.

Of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage, 1.

Of liens for repairs, see Liens.

PRIVATE ACTION.

For obstruction of highway, see Highways, 1.

For violation of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 12.

To enforce water rates, see Parties, 3.

To enforce public right generally, see Parties, 3-7.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 27, 28.

PROBABLE CAUSE.

Instruction as to, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Want of, for prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, 1-3.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 1, 2.

PROBATE.

Appealability of probate decrees, see Appeal and Error, 1, 2.

PROCESS.

See Writ and Process.

PROOFS OF LOSS.

By insured, see Trial, 7.

PROPERTY.

Guaranty of right of, see Constitutional Law, 7-16.

PROSTITUTION.

Indictment for conspiracy of woman transported in violation of white slave act, see Criminal Law, 1.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

One who negligently places large quantities of loose paper upon a street, where it will naturally be blown against horses in the street, with knowledge that the wind is blowing, or in the ordinary course of nature is likely to blow while the paper remains there, cannot claim that such a wind is an independent intervening cause, so as to prevent his negligence from being the proximate cause of an injury to a traveler on the street from his horses becoming frightened; especially where there is nothing in the case to show that there was any unforeseen or sudden wind of such a character as to come within the legal meaning of the expression "an act of God." Bowen v. Smith-Hall Grocery Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 617, 82 S. E. 23, 141 Ga. 721.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Cost of constructing and maintaining bridge, see Bridges.

Matters peculiar to drains and sewers, see Drains and Sewers.

Certiorari to review reassessment of cost of improvement, see Certiorari.

Presumption that assessments were made in proportion to benefits, see Evidence, 19.

Writ of review to review facts upon which assessment is based, see Review.

1. An assessment for a street improvement is not invalidated by the fact that the municipality, in making a fill in the highway, extended the slope onto abutting property without obtaining a right to do so, and thereby became a trespasser, although the expense of the encroachment is included in the assessment. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421. (Annotated)

2. That a section of street which is to be improved as a whole contains a wooden viaduct which will require a fill does not make the portions of the improvement on either side of it two improvements, requiring separate proceedings, under a charter providing that the improvement of each street or part thereof shall be made under a separate proceeding. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

3. The objection that an assessment for a street improvement is void because a portion of the improvement extended upon private property without acquiring the right, and that it is not made on the theory required by statute, may be raised by review of the assessment without the necessity of an appeal. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

4. Where the statute provides for filing objections to a municipal improvement, taxpayers waive the objection that two separate portions of a street were included in one proceeding by failing to raise the question at the time the statute provides for it. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

5. Irregularities or defects in proceedings for a public improvement, and the assessment of benefits therefor, which are not brought to the attention of the court in a proceeding to review such proceedings, are waived and cannot be brought forward in a proceeding to review a reassessment made in accordance with the judgment entered on such review. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

6. The cost of extending a fill for a street improvement over onto adjoining property cannot be assessed against the property benefited by the improvement so far as it is in excess of the cost of a proper retaining wall. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A. 1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

PUBLIC MONEYS.

Assumpsit for, see Assumpsit, 2.

Loss of, by bank failure, see Banks.

Who may maintain action to prevent waste of, see Parties, 4, 7.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes, 2.

PUBLIC RIGHT.

Who may maintain action to protect, see Parties, 3-7.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

See Schools.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

Who may question validity of statute conferring powers upon, see Action or Suit, 2.

Authority as to depots, see Carriers, 14-22.

Presumption in support of order of, see Evidence, 4.

Regulation of water rates by, see Waters, 5.

1. A question as to the ownership of an irrigation canal is one over which the Railway Commission has no jurisdiction. McCook Irrigation & W. P. Co. v. Burtless, L.R.A. 1915D, 1205, 152 N. W. 334, P. U. R. 1915C, 587, — Neb —.

2. An order of a Railroad Commission requiring construction of a union railroad station under authority of a statute requiring railroads to maintain such stations when the necessities of the case demand it, commensurate with the business and revenues of the company, will be accepted by the court, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, as a finding that the situation justifies it. Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 98, 64 So. 13, 185 Ala. 354.

PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

See Waters, 4-8.

PULLMAN CAR.

Limitation of liability for injury to employee on, see Carriers, 6.
 Operator on, as employee of railroad hauling car, see Master and Servant, 1.

PUNISHMENT.

For contempt, see Contempt, 7.

QUOTATIONS.

Offer by, see Contracts, 1.

RACE SEGREGATION.

See Constitutional Law, 14.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

See Public Service Commissions.

RAILROADS.

Statute as to remodeling or construction of caboose, see Action or Suit, 2; Commerce; Evidence, 3; Statutes, 4.

Injury to passenger by application of emergency brake to save person in peril on crossing, see Carriers, 2-4.

Forbidding person to act as conductor without having previously served as freight conductor or brakeman, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Railroad track across property as breach of covenant against encumbrances, see Covenants and Conditions, 3.

Garnishment of cars of foreign railroad company, see Garnishment.

Use and occupation of highway for, see Highways, 2.

Rights, duties and liabilities as to employee, see Master and Servant.

Limiting hours of labor of employees, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

Liability on theory of attractive nuisance for injury to child, see Negligence, 3.

1. An exercise of the right of eminent domain is not necessary to enable a street railway company, having municipal authority to lay its tracks along a public highway, to cross the tracks of a railroad company which are laid across the street at grade. Mississippi C. R. Co. v. Hattiesburg Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 843, 67 So. 897, — Miss. —.

(Annotated)

2. A railroad company is not liable for injury to a person near its right of way by a loose spike used to fasten the rail to the tie, which was hurled from the track by a rapidly moving train, even though the company knew of the condition of the spike, since such injury could not have been anticipated. Trinity & B. V. R. Co. v. Blackshear, L.R.A.1915D, 278, 172 S. W. 544, — Tex. —.

3. A statute requiring railroad companies to give signals when trains approach highway crossings creates no duty in favor of persons working near the crossing, and therefore a railroad company which failed to give the required signal is not liable for injury to one at work near the crossing, through the frightening of his horse, although at the time of injury he had taken the horse onto the highway on his way home, to reach which required traveling away from the railroad track. Hutto v. Southern R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 963, 84 S. E. 719, — S. C. —. (Annotated)

RAPE.

Evidence in prosecution for, see Evidence, 39.

RATES.

Water rates, see Waters, 4-8.

RATIFICATION.

By corporation, see Corporations, 2-4.
 Of municipal indebtedness, see Municipal Corporations, 13.

REAL ESTATE BROKER.

See Brokers.

REAL PROPERTY.

Oral contract as to, see Contracts, 4, 5.
 Covenants and conditions as to, see Covenants and Conditions.

Rights, duties and liabilities on transfer of, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Estates or interests created by wills, see Wills, 4, 5.

REASONABLENESS.

Of municipal ordinance generally, see Municipal Corporations, 7.

RECEIVERS.

Right of receiver to appeal, see Appeal and Error, 4.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 1.

RECORD.

Liability for defective search of, see Abstracts.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Recording notice of redemption, see Constitutional Law, 20.

Recording of assumed name under which business is transacted, see Contracts, 8.

Judicial notice by court of its own records, see Evidence, 1.

Of certificate giving names of members of partnership doing business under assumed name, see Tradename, 3.

REDEMPTION.

From foreclosure sale, see Mortgage, 4.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance, 4.

REGISTRATION.

Of automobile, see Automobiles, 2.

REHEARING.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 29.

RELATIONSHIP.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 26.

RELEASE.

By porter on Pullman car of carrier's liability for injury, see Carriers, 6.
Of mortgage, see Mortgage, 2.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 32-43.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

In general, see Constitutional Law, 19.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Forbidding location of public garage near church, see Buildings, 4; Municipal Corporations, 6.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING.

In schools, see Schools, 3.

RENT.

Husband's right to recover rent of wife's property, see Husband and Wife, 6.

REPAIRS.

Lien for, see Liens.

REPEAL.

Of statute, see Statutes, 9.

REPETITION.

Of instruction, see Trial, 10.

REPLEVIN.

To recover exempt property levied on, see Levy and Seizure, 2.

REPRESENTATIONS.

By insured, see Insurance.

RESCISSION.

Of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser.

RESERVOIR.

Drowning of child in, see Negligence, 4.

RES GESTÆ.

See Evidence.

RESIDENCE.

For purpose of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

RESIGNATION.

Acceptance of resignation of employee, see Master and Servant, 4, 5.

RES JUDICATA.

See Judgment, 1, 2.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See Master and Servant, 9, 10.

RETAINING JURISDICTION.

See Executors and Administrators, 5.

RETURN.

To rule to show cause in contempt proceeding, see Contempt, 6. PRO-
L.R.A.1915D.

REVENUE.

Power of legislature as to raising of, see Legislature.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-26.

REVIEW.

The facts upon which an assessment for a public improvement is based and the result of the assessment cannot be reviewed by writ of review where the statute provides for an appeal, where the facts may be passed upon by a jury. Reiff v. Portland, L.R.A.1915D, 772, 141 Pac. 167, 142 Pac. 827, 71 Or. 421.

REVOCATION.

Of will, see Wills, 1, 2.

RIGHT OF WAY.

Ordinance giving mail carrier right of way in street, see Evidence, 36.

ROBBERY.

Indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 4.

SALE.

Acceptance of offer, see Contracts, 1.

Governmental regulation of, see Constitutional Law, 12, 13.

Priority of lien for repairs over claim of conditional vendor of property, see Liens, 3-5.

Of land generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Passing of title; delivery.

1. The failure of a seller of goods to promptly reclaim the goods, which were sold under a contract providing for cash on delivery, upon the failure of the purchaser to pay when the goods were delivered, and his unsuccessful endeavor for six months to collect the account, constitute in law a waiver of the conditions of the sale so that the title passes to the buyer, where it is not shown that the seller's delay in reclaiming the goods was caused by some trick or artifice on the part of the buyer. Lehmann v. People's Furniture Co. L.R.A.1915D, 355, 142 Pac. 986, 42 Okla. 761. (Annotated)

Warranty.

Damages for breach of warranty, see Damages, 2.

Evidence on question of breach of warranty, see Evidence, 40.

2. The liability of a manufacturer of fertilizer upon his warranty to the retailer cannot be enlarged by warranties inserted by the latter in his contracts with consumers. Hampton Guano Co. v. Hill Live-Stock Co. L.R.A.1915D, 875, 84 S. E. 774, 168 N. C. 442.

3. An action for the purchase price of fertilizer sold under a warranty as to ingredients cannot be defeated because it was not suitable to the purpose for which it was sold. Hampton Guano Co. v. Hill Live-Stock Co. L.R.A.1915D, 875, 84 S. E. 774, 168 N. C. 442.

SCHOOLS.

Statutes excluding fraternities from, as violating constitutional provision distributing powers of government, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Infringement of property rights by exclusion of fraternities from schools, see Constitutional Law, 10.

Reading of Bible in public schools, see Constitutional Law, 19.

Forbidding location near, of garage storing inflammable substances, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

1. A legislature which has power to create and abolish institutions of learning to be supported by the state has authority to forbid the existence of Greek letter fraternities in such institutions and deprive members in them of the right to receive honors or diplomas from such institution. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623. (Annotated)

2. The exclusion of a child from school because of failure to comply with the law making vaccination a condition to admission does not justify the parent's neglect to comply with the compulsory education law. People On Complaint of Pugliese v. Ekerold, L.R.A.1915D, 223, 105 N. E. 670, 211 N. Y. 386. (Annotated)

3. As a court will not concern itself with differences or alleged errors in the different translations of the Christian Bible, it cannot be said that a person of Catholic faith or his children would have their consciences violated by the reading of the Bible or the offering of the Lord's Prayer in the public schools of the state. Herold v. Parish Board of School Directors, L.R.A. 1915D, 941, 68 So. 116, — La. —. (Annotated)

SEAL.

Effect of lease invalid because not under seal to create estoppel, see Estoppel, 1.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Time for objection that warrant for search of premises was not supported by affidavit, see Appeal and Error, 13.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

In public schools, see Constitutional Law, 1, 10; Schools, 1; State Universities.

SEGREGATION.

Of white and colored races, see Constitutional Law, 14.

SEPARATE PROPERTY.

Of married woman, see Husband and Wife, 6.

SEPARATION.

See Divorce and Separation. L.R.A.1915D.

SEPARATION OF POWERS.

Of government, see Constitutional Law, 1.

SERVICE.

Of writ, see Writ and Process.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. Where a coroner, at the request of relatives of a deceased person, takes charge of the body for the purpose of burial, and, to defray the expenses thereof, sells certain personal property belonging to the deceased, and applies the proceeds in payment of the necessary funeral expenses, he is entitled to set off the amount thus expended in an action against him and the surety on his official bond, by the administrator, for the value of the property thus sold. Lenderink v. Sawyer, L.R.A.1915D, 948, 138 N. W. 744, 92 Neb. 587. (Annotated)

2. A depositor in an insolvent bank who has indorsed a note discounted by it cannot, after he has been indemnified by the maker, set off his liability against the deposit account, although the maker is insolvent. Knaff v. Knoxville Bkg. & T. Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 403, 170 S. W. 476, 130 Tenn. 336.

SEVERABILITY.

Of insurance contract, see Insurance, 15.

SEWERS.

See Drains and Sewers.

SHELLEY'S CASE.

Rule in, see Wills, 5.

SHERIFF.

Limitation of time of action against sheriff for failure to return attachment, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

SIGNALS.

Duty as to, at highway crossing, see Railroads, 3.

SIGNATURE.

To enrolled bill, see Statutes, 1.
Of testator, see Wills, 3.

SITUS.

Of assets for purpose of administration, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SMALLPOX.

As to vaccination of school children, see Schools, 2.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Specific performance of a contract for the sale of stock in a corporation may be had at the suit of the seller, if it is made to appear that such stock is not for sale in the general market and is of uncertain value, since in such case an action at law for damages is inadequate. Morgan v.

Bartlett, L.R.A.1915D, 300, 83 S. E. 1001, — W. Va. —.

2. Proof that stock in the same corporation was sold by the individual holders thereof about the time the sale in question was to have been consummated, at widely variant prices, is evidence of its uncertain value, so as to justify specific performance of a contract for the sale of stock. Morgan v. Bartlett, L.R.A.1915D, 300, 83 S. E. 1001, — W. Va. —.

SPEED.

Of automobiles, see Automobiles, 8; New Trial, 1.

SPIKE.

Injury by spike hurled through air by railroad train, see Railroads, 2.

SQUARES.

See Parks and Squares.

STATE.

Liability of municipality for costs and attorneys' fees in suit instituted by state, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Injunction against trustees of, see Injunction, 3.

STATEMENT.

Of mechanics' lien, see Mechanics' Liens, 2.

STATE UNIVERSITIES.

Injunction against trustees of, see Injunction, 3.

The trustees of a state university may, under legislative authority, prohibit persons desiring to become students in that institution from holding allegiance to any Greek letter fraternity wherever it may be located. University of Mississippi v. Waugh, L.R.A.1915D, 588, 62 So. 827, 105 Miss. 623.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts, 3-5.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See Limitation of Actions.

STATUTE OF NONCLAIMS.

See Executors and Administrators, 6.

STATUTES.

Effect of violation of, to deprive one of defense of contributory negligence, see Automobiles, 8.

Constitutionality of, generally, see Constitutional Law.

Refusal to pass upon constitutionality of statute not necessary to decision of case, see Courts, 2.

Review of, by courts, see Courts, 3.

Enactment.

See also infra, 3.
1. The absence from the enrolled bill in L.R.A.1915D.

the office of the secretary of state, of the signature of the speaker of the house of representatives, renders the statute void where the Constitution provides that every bill, having passed both houses, shall be signed by the speaker and president of their respective houses. State ex rel. Hammond v. Lynch, L.R.A.1915D, 119, 151 N. W. 81, — Iowa, —.

Who may question validity.

Unconstitutionality of statute as to third person as defense, see Action or Suit, 2.

Who may question validity of ordinance, see Municipal Corporation, 6.

Right of taxpayer to maintain action to determine constitutionality of statute, see Parties, 5, 7.

2. A chattel mortgagee cannot complain of a statute existing when his mortgage was taken, which makes all personal taxes a lien on all personal property of the taxpayer. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Roberts County, L.R.A.1915D, 886, 149 N. W. 103, — S. D. —.

Judicial examination.

3. The courts cannot go behind the enrolled bill to determine whether or not the requirements of the Constitution were complied with in the enactment of a statute. State ex rel. Hammond v. Lynch, L.R.A.1915D, 119, 151 N. W. 81, — Iowa, —.

4. Evidence is not admissible to show that a statute requiring caboose cars to be of a certain length and to be mounted on certain running gear is unreasonable because cars corresponding to those specified are not required for safety, and therefore that the statute which places additional expense on railroad companies is void as taking property without due process of law. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 458, 102 N. E. 25, 180 Ind. 245. (Annotated)

Entitling; expression of subject.

5. A provision prohibiting the carrying of intoxicating liquors into a club room is within a title indicating that the statute is to prohibit the sale of such liquors. State v. Phillips, L.R.A.1915D, 530, 67 So. 651, — Miss. —.

Construction; operation; effect.

6. A statute will not be presumed to alter the common law, "other than what has been specified and besides what has been plainly pronounced." Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

7. The common law must, as to civil rights and remedies, be considered in the construction and application of statutes declaratory thereof, and such statutes construed and applied as continuations of or legislative declarations of the common law, so far as covered by such statutes. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

8. The adoption of a statute from another state is presumed to carry the construction which has been given it by the courts of the state of origin. People v.

Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.

Repeal; amendment.

9. The repeal of a statute either declaratory of or changing the common law, without express provisions against the revivor of the common law, ipso facto revives the common law, since such repeal will be regarded, in the absence of a contrary legislative intent appearing, as an affirmation of the common law. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, L.R.A.1915D, 1149, 148 N. W. 654, 28 N. D. 265.

STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

See Corporations.

STOPPING PAYMENT.

On check, see Banks, 5.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Relevancy of evidence in action for injury, see Evidence, 36.

Private action in favor of person injured by violation of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 12.

Instruction as to negligence, see Trial, 12, 13.

Crossing of railroad track by, see Railroads, 1.

1. Notwithstanding an ordinance giving wagons carrying United States mail a right of way over street cars on the public streets, the one in charge of such wagon, who, while looking at an approaching car, drives in front of it, cannot hold the railroad company liable for the resulting injury unless the motorman was negligent in failing to use due care in endeavoring to stop the car after discovering his peril. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

2. One who negligently drives onto a street car track in front of an approaching car cannot hold the railroad company liable for injuries due to the resulting collision, although the motorman was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, unless the motorman might, by the exercise of proper care, have avoided the collision after discovering his peril. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —.

SUBROGATION.

1. In the absence of a statute permitting tax officials to assign tax claims, a property owner cannot by contract confer a right of subrogation to the claims of the public upon a stranger who pays his taxes at his request, which will preserve a lien superior to that of existing mortgages on the property, although the tax collector attempted to preserve the lien by an assignment on the tax books. Gibson v. Western & Southern L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 697, 171 S. W. 390, 161 Ky. 810. (Annotated) L.R.A.1915D.

SUBSCRIPTION.

To corporate stock, see Corporations, 11.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See Taxes, 4-6.

SUICIDE.

Presumption of insanity from, see Evidence, 8.

By-law of insurance company as to, see Insurance, 3.

SUNDAY.

Charging the jury in a criminal case on Sunday renders the proceeding void, although court was not adjourned at the close of the arguments on Saturday, but merely took a recess, so that the charge could be delivered without the necessity of a formal opening of the court on Sunday. Moss v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 361, 173 S. W. 859, — Tenn. —. (Annotated)

SURETIES.

See Principal and Surety.

SURGEONS.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

SURRENDER.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance, 5.

TAXES.

Priority between tax lien and chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage, 1.

License tax, see License.

Foreclosure of mortgage for default in payment of, see Mortgage, 3.

Provision as to, in mortgage, see Mortgage, 1.

Who may question statute as to lien of, see Statutes, 2.

Subrogation of one paying taxes to rights of public, see Subrogation.

Assessment.

1. A description of land in an assessment for taxation, viz., "Cleveland township, county of Walsh, North Dakota; name of owner, Florence B. Martin; description, N. W. 4, Sec. 1, Twp. 155, Rng. 57," is void as the basis of an assessment for taxation, in a direct attack by a party in a situation to assail it. Farmers' Security Bank v. Martin, L.R.A.1915D, 432, 150 N. W. 572, — N. D. —.

Exemptions.

2. A municipal corporation which supplies at a profit water from its plant to a neighboring town is not exempt from an ad valorem tax by the latter on the mains and hydrants within its limits, nor from a privilege tax there, by a provision exempting municipal property used exclusively for public or municipal corporation purposes from taxation. Knoxville v. Park City, L.R.A.1915D, 1103, 172 S. W. 286, 130 Tenn. 626.

Sale; deed; rights of purchasers.

Effect of tax sale to cut off easements of adjoining property owners, see Easements, 2.

3. A purchaser at tax sale is not bound to comply with his bid if the property is subject to easements of light, air, and access which materially affect its value. Tax Lien Co. v. Schultze, L.R.A.1915D, 1115, 106 N. E. 751, 213 N. Y. 9.

Succession or transfer tax.

Allowance by courts of testator's domicile of inheritance tax after decree of other state discharging administrator, see Judgment, 3.

4. The imposition of a succession tax by a state in which personal property is found will not prevent the imposition of another by the state in which the testator was domiciled. People v. Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.

5. The inheritance tax against a widow who is entitled to a certain sum under an antenuptial agreement and an additional sum under the will will be assessed against the aggregate to which she is so entitled if the contract and will are not set aside, although, because of her contest, a compromise is effected by which she receives a much larger share of the estate. People v. Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.

6. An executor or trustee may be required to pay the inheritance tax only on the funds sent to him by the courts of a sister state for distribution, and not upon those distributed by the local administrator by direction of such courts, where the statute of testator's domicile, where such executor or trustee resides, provides that he shall deduct the tax from legacies or property in his hands for distribution, which is construed to apply only to the beneficial interests of legatees. People v. Union Trust Co. L.R.A.1915D, 450, 99 N. E. 377, 255 Ill. 168.

TAXPAYER.

Right to maintain action, see Parties, 4-7.

TELEGRAPHS.

Duty of telegraph company to take out license for messenger business, see License, 2.

TELEPHONES.

Service of summons by, see Writ and Process.

TENDER.

Of purchase price as acceptance of offer, see Option, 2.

TENEMENT HOUSE.

Forbidding location near, of garage storing inflammable substances, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

THEFT.

See Larceny.

THREATS.

As duress, see duress.
L.R.A.1915D.

TIMBER.

Husband's right of action for cutting of timber on wife's property, see Husband and Wife, 6.

TIME.

For taking exception, see Appeal and Error, 6, 7.

To present claims against decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators, 6.

Of demand for autopay by insurance company, see Insurance, 18, 19.

For filing mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 2.

To move for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

TITLE.

Liability for defective abstract of, see Abstracts.

Of insured, see Insurance, 8-10.

Of personal property, passing of, see Sale, 1.

Of statute, see Statutes, 5.

TORTS.

Of married women, husband's liability for, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Master's liability for, see Master and Servant, 9, 10.

TOWNS.

Indebtedness of, see Municipal Corporations, 13, 14.

TRACTION ENGINE.

Forbidding use of, on highways, see Municipal Corporations, 8.

TRADE.

Validity of agreement in restraint of, see Contracts, 7.

TRADENAME.

Validity of contracts by person carrying on business under assumed name without complying with statute, see Contracts, 8.

1. A person, being the sole owner and manager of a business, has, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the right to assume any name under which he chooses to conduct his business so long as such business is conducted under such name in good faith, and he may maintain an action for breach of contracts made under such business name. Robinovitz v. Hamill, L.R.A. 1915D, 981, 144 Pac. 1024, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

2. Section 2444, Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, providing that "every person transacting business in the name of a person as a partner who is not interested in his firm, or transacting business under a firm name in which the designation 'and Company' or '& Co.' is used without representing an actual partner, except in the cases in which the continued use of a copartnership name is authorized by law, is guilty of a misdemeanor," does not apply to one person who, being the sole person interested in a business, adopts a business or tradename under which the business is conducted. Robinovitz v. Hamill, L.R.A.1915D, 981, 144 Pac. 1024, — Okla. —.

3. Section 5023, Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, requiring every partnership transacting business in the state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, to file a certificate stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence, and publish the same for a stated period, and § 5025, Okla. Comp. Laws 1909, providing that persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of this article shall not maintain any action on or on account of any contracts made in the partnership name, relate to partnerships composed of two or more persons, and do not apply to one person who, being the sole person interested in a business, adopts a business or trade name under which the business is conducted. Robinovitz v. Hamill, L.R.A.1915D, 981, 144 Pac. 1024, — Okla. —.

TRADING STAMPS.

Creation of monopoly by contract as to, see Contracts, 7.

TRANSFER COMPANY.

As independent contractor, see Master and Servant, 10.

TRANSFER TAX.

See Taxes, 4-6.

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

See Commercial Travelers.

TREATIES.

Effect of, to supersede statutory provisions for administration of decedent's estate, see Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

TRESPASS.

In making public improvements, see Public Improvements, 1.

TRIAL.

Review of discretion as to order of proof, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Review of discretion in refusing to set aside verdict, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Time for objection to language of counsel, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Prejudicial error in argument of counsel, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict, see Evidence, 44.

Charging juror with knowingly returning wrong verdict, see Libel and Slander, 1.

New trial, see New Trial.

Questions of law and fact.

1. The question of what information is sufficient to warrant a reasonably prudent man in believing another guilty of a L.R.A.1915D.

crime, in an action for malicious prosecution, is one of unmixed law. Matson v. Michael, L.R.A.1915D, 1, 105 Pac. 537, 81 Kan. 360. (Annotated)

2. The question of the existence of probable cause for a prosecution is one of law where the prosecutor made a full, truthful, and complete statement of facts to a reputable attorney and acted upon his advice. Simmons v. Gardner, L.R.A.1915D, 16, 89 Pac. 887, 46 Wash. 282. (Annotated)

3. A tender of performance of a promise of marriage must be made in good faith, and if, in any view of the testimony, the good faith of the tender is questionable, then it is a question of fact for the jury. Corduan v. McCloud (N. J. Err. & App.) L.R.A.1915D, 1190, 93 Atl. 724, — N. J. —.

4. Where a carrier seeks to avoid liability to a shipper for loss on account of a snowstorm, and there is conflicting testimony as to whether such carrier, notwithstanding such snowstorm, could, by the exercise of ordinary care or reasonable efforts, have prevented the loss, it is proper to submit such issue of fact to the jury. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus, L.R.A.1915D, 547, 141 Pac. 773, 42 Okla. 401.

5. Whether a hospital was negligent in allowing a patient, while suffering from fitful mental disorder, access to a sinkroom where poison was kept, in the nighttime without an attendant, is a question for the jury, although the private physician of the patient instructed the hospital attendants to allow the patient freedom of his room and the halls. Broz v. Omaha Maternity & G. H. Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 334, 148 N. W. 575, 96 Neb. 648.

6. Where the circumstances surrounding the execution of a contract limiting a common carrier's liability for the loss of stock to a certain sum per head are such as could not be held to be just, fair, and reasonable, there is no error in excluding the contract from the consideration of the jury in an action wherein the shipper sought a recovery upon the carrier's common-law liability. McGrath v. Northern P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 644, 141 N. W. 164, 121 Minn. 258.

7. Whether or not an insurer waived proof of loss by denying liability on the policy is a question for the jury. Bouchard v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 899, — Me. —.

Taking case from jury.

Voluntary nonsuit as res judicata, see Judgment, 1.

8. Refusal to direct a verdict is not error unless a request for such instruction is offered in writing. Ross v. Kohler, L.R.A.1915D, 621, 174 S. W. 36. — Ky. —.

Instructions.

Time for objections to, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 23, 24.

9. Instructions should not be considered as in conflict if they can be harmonized. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Trac- tion Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —

10. Complaint cannot be made of a failure of the trial court to give instructions requested by a defendant on the subject of contributory negligence where the instructions which were given fairly covered those requested and a special interrogatory was submitted to the jury on the question and a special verdict returned negating such negligence. McGrath v. Northern P. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 644, 141 N. W. 164, 121 Minn. 258.

11. An instruction in an action by a shipper against a carrier for damages suffered through the alleged negligence of the carrier in delivering goods, "that the burden of proof is upon the defendant to satisfy the jury by its evidence not only that the loss sustained by the plaintiff" was occasioned by the act of God, but also that "the defendant exercised due care and diligence in the performance of its duty, and was not in any manner negligent in doing or omitting to do any act that might have averted the loss," such instruction being unqualified or unmodified by other instructions, is erroneous. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus, L.R.A.1915D, 547, 141 Pac. 773, 42 Okla. 401.

12. A requested instruction in an action by a mail carrier injured by collision with a street car that the city ordinance gave the mail wagon the right of way, and that plaintiff, as the driver of the wagon, had the right to assume that the motorman, if he discovered, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered, the approach of the wagon, would accord the right of way to the wagon, is argumentative and calculated to mislead the jury. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —

13. An instruction in an action to recover damages for injury by collision with a street car, that the verdict should be for defendant if the motorman used ordinary care in the management of the car at and near the place of the injury, includes a requirement of constant lookout for persons on the track. Bain v. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. L.R.A.1915D, 1021, 172 S. W. 843, — Ark. —

TROVER.

1. A purchaser of a stock of goods at an assignee's sale is not guilty of conversion of a millinery stock belonging to another kept in the store in which the assigned stock was kept, because of the fact that he mistakenly believed the millinery stock belonged to the stock purchased, and advertised the same for sale, where, upon discovering his error, and before the sale commenced, he instructed his clerk not to touch the millinery stock, and thereafter made no claim of ownership to the same. Brandenburg v. Northwestern Jobbers' Credit Bureau, L.R.A.1915D, 474, 151 N. W. 134, 123 Minn. 411.

2. An assignee of a stock of goods for the benefit of creditors is not guilty of conversion of the stock if he sells it at a public sale.

of conversion of a millinery stock belonging to the wife of the assignor and kept in the store, where it was left after the assignment with the consent of the assignee, on account of his failure to notify the wife of a sale of the assigned goods, as he had promised to do, where the wife received actual notice prior to the sale from another source, although the purchaser of the stock mistakenly believed that the millinery stock belonged to the stock purchased and advertised it with the other for sale, but subsequently, and before the sale commenced, discovered his error and thereafter made no claim to the millinery stock. Brandenburg v. Northwestern Jobbers' Credit Bureau, L.R.A.1915D, 474, 151 N. W. 134, 128 Minn. 411.

TRUSTEE PROCESS.

See Garnishment.

ULTRA VIRES.

Ultra vires acts of corporation, see Corporations, 2-4.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see License, 3.

UNION DEPOT.

Requiring carriers to maintain, see Carriers, 16, 18-22; Constitutional Law, 18; Evidence, 4; Mandamus, 1; Public Service Commission, 2.

UNITED STATES.

Assumpsit by, to recover money paid on forged draft, see Assumpsit, 2.

USAGE.

See Custom.

USURY.

Right to raise question of, in action to quiet title against one redeeming from mortgage sale, see Judgment, 2.

1. The reserving of interest in advance by a bank, at the highest legal rate of interest on a loan, is usurious whether it be a short or a long term loan. Loganville Banking Co. v. Forrester, L.R.A.1915D, 1195, 84 S. E. 961, — Ga. — (Annotated)

2. A deed to land given to secure a usurious loan is void, under a statute providing that all titles to property made as a part of an usurious contract, or to evade the laws against usury, are void. Loganville Banking Co. v. Forrester, L.R.A.1915D, 1195, 84 S. E. 961, — Ga. —

VACATION.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 4.

VACCINATION.

Of school children, see Schools, 2.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Oral contracts for land, see Contracts, 5.
Option to purchase real estate, see Contracts, 2.

Covenants between, see Covenants and Conditions.

Sale of homestead, see Homestead.

A delay of two and one-half years after taking possession of real estate which was bought upon the faith of a representation that the income had been a certain sum for a year before the transfer, before seeking a rescission, is unreasonable, where the exercise of due diligence would have disclosed the fraud during the first season after the purchaser entered into possession of the property. Whitney v. Bissell, L.R.A. 1915D, 257, 146 Pac. 141, — Or. —.

VERIFICATION.

Of specification of charges in disbarment proceedings, see Attorneys, 5, 6.

VESTED RIGHTS.

Of beneficiary in insurance, see Insurance, 5, 25, 26.

WAIVER.

Of error in trial court, see Appeal and Error, 17.

Of rights by accused, see Criminal Law, 2.

By insurer, see Insurance, 21.

Of objection to assessment for public improvement, see Public Improvement, 4, 5.

Of cash payment for goods, see Sale, 1.

As question for jury, see Trial, 7.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

Evidence of custom on question of negligence, see Evidence, 32.

Who may maintain action for injury to property, see Parties, 1.

1. That a tide which injured property in a warehouse was the highest for a period of nearly sixty years does not alone relieve the warehouseman from liability for the injury, if the floor of the warehouse was below the height reached by the tides several times during that period, and lower than was regarded as safe by experts in the locality. Hecht v. Boston Wharf Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 725, 107 N. E. 990, 220 Mass. 397.

(Annotated)

2. Mere knowledge of one depositing goods for storage in a warehouse of the location and condition of the place where the goods are kept does not place upon him an assumption of risk of injury from a high tide, or relieve the warehouseman of liability for negligence in leaving the property in danger thereof. Hecht v. Boston Wharf Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 725, 107 N. E. 990, 220 Mass. 397.

WARRANTS.

Time for objection that warrant for search of premises was not supported by affidavit, see Appeal and Error, 13.

L.R.A. 1915D.

WARRANTY.

Damages for breach of, see Damages, 2.

In insurance policy, see Insurance.

On sale of personality, see Sale, 2, 3.

WASTE.

Who may maintain action to prevent waste of public money, see Parties, 4, 7.

WATERS.

As to canals, see Canals.

Injury to property by flow of water into cellar due to blasting in street, see Blasting.

Pollution.

1. The use by an upper riparian owner of water from the stream to wash for the market coal taken from his mine, which is then turned back into the stream and pollutes it to such an extent as to render it unfit to water stock on a lower riparian farm, gives the owner of the latter a right of action. Packwood v. Mendota Coal & Coke Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 911, 146 Pac. 163, — Wash. —. (Annotated)

Irrigation.

Refusal of irrigation company to deliver water to purchaser of stock not transferred on books, see Corporations, 13.

Damages for injury to crop by failure to furnish water, see Damages, 6.

Who may maintain action for negligent failure to maintain irrigation ditch, see Parties, 2.

2. Failure of an irrigation ditch company to clean the ditch during the fall and winter when the water is not needed, and their deliberate performance of the necessary work in the spring, so that stockholders are deprived of water when needed for their crops, is negligence. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —.

3. A mutual irrigation ditch company is liable to holders of its stock and their tenants for negligent failure to maintain the ditch in repair, so that water cannot be delivered to them, to their injury. Berg v. Yakima Valley Canal Co. L.R.A. 1915D, 292, 145 Pac. 619, — Wash. —.

Public water supply.

Who may maintain action to enforce rates provided in contract with municipality, see Parties, 3.

Exemption of municipal waterworks from taxation, see Taxes, 2.

4. An irrigation company is a "common carrier" of water to a limited degree, and its rates and charges are subject to regulation and control. McCook Irrigation & W. P. Co. v. Burtless, L.R.A. 1915D, 1205, 162 N. W. 334, P. U. R. 1915C, 587, — Neb. —.

(Annotated)

5. Jurisdiction to inquire into the reasonableness of water rates, and to regulate and fix the same, has, by the Constitution and statutes, been conferred upon the State Railway Commission. McCook Irrigation & W. P. Co. v. Burtless, L.R.A. 1915D, 1205, 152 N. W. 334, P. U. R. 1915C, 587, — Neb.

6. Contracts between an irrigation company and water users under its ditch, providing for the use of water and for the maintenance of the ditch, are entered into with the law as to the right of the state to regulate rates forming a part of the contract, and such rates are subject to control. McCook Irrigation & W. P. Co. v. Burtless, L.R.A.1915D, 1205, 152 N. W. 334, P. U. R. 1915C, 587, — Neb. —

7. A contract establishing meter rates for water for a certain amount of consumption or less per month, a less rate for a consumption between the amount specified and a larger maximum quantity, and so on until a rate is fixed for all consumption over the final maximum specified, with a provision that the minimum amount of bill under one rate shall not be less than the maximum under the preceding rate, does not require payment of the rate fixed for all consumption between the divisions specified, but fixes classes of consumers to be charged a single rate according to the total amount of their consumption. Walton v. Proutt, L.R.A.1915D, 917, 174 S. W. 1152, — Ark. —

8. A water company which has contracted with a municipal corporation to furnish water to its inhabitants at a flat maximum rate for dwellings cannot make a special contract for meter rates with a particular householder, and even though it undertakes to do so, it may cut the supply off from his residence upon his refusal to pay the uniform flat rate. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Brown, L.R.A.1915D, 1086, 67 So. 613, — Ala. —

(Annotated)

WAY OF NECESSITY.

See Easements, 1.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Due process in statute as to, see Constitutional Law, 12, 13.

Criminal liability of corporation for use of false weight or measure, see Corporations, 5, 6.

Indictment for use of false weights or measures, see Indictment, etc., 2, 3, 5.

WHITE SLAVE ACT.

See Prostitution.

WIDOW.

As proper person upon whom to make demand for autopsy provided for in insurance policy, see Insurance, 16.

WILLS.

Matters concerning executors and administrators, see Executors and Administrators.
Tax on gifts, see Taxes, 4.
L.R.A.1915D.

Revocation.

1. A will is not revoked by the unexecuted draft of a later one. Pilcher v. Pilcher, L.R.A.1915D, 902, 84 S. E. 667, — Va. —

2. A will from which testator tore his signature, and by so doing mutilated a portion of a codicil, is properly admitted to probate together with the codicil if it was originally duly executed and he restored the portion of the paper torn off, rewrote his signature and the mutilated portion of the codicil, and left it among his papers at the time of his death. Re Brock, L.R.A.1915D, 1140, 93 Atl. 487, 247 Pa. 365.

Holographic wills.

3. Signature by initials is sufficient to validate a holographic will under a statute providing that no will shall be valid unless signed in such manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended as a signature. Pilcher v. Pilcher, L.R.A.1915D, 902, 84 S. E. 667, — Va. — (Annotated)

Nature of estate or interest created.

4. A life estate only which the life tenant cannot take out of the possession of the trustee is created by a devise to be held in trust for the use and benefit of a person specified "during her life, with power to dispose of the same by her last will and testament." Louisville Trust Co. v. Snively, L.R.A.1915D, 153, 172 S. W. 911, 162 Ky. 461.

5. Since in a will the word "lend" is equivalent to "give" or "devise," a loan in such an instrument of land to one for life, with a devise of it in fee to his heirs at his death, passes the fee to him. Roberson v. Moore, L.R.A.1915D, 496, 84 S. E. 351, — N. C. — (Annotated)

WITNESSES.

Error in refusing to admit evidence directed at credibility of witness who has not been introduced, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Contempt by, see Contempt, 3, 4.

Contempt by assault on, see Contempt, 1, 2, 7.

Privileged communications to, see Evidence, 27, 28.

Competency.

1. The wife of one of two persons indicted for burglary should be permitted to testify in behalf of the other, with a caution that the evidence is not to be considered as affecting the case of her husband. Lawson v. Com. L.R.A.1915D, 972, 169 S. W. 587, 160 Ky. 180.

Examination.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 22.

2. When a witness has denied hostility to defendant in a criminal cause, counsel for accused should be permitted to state his questions to another witness, called to prove hostility, so as to show whether or not they are within the rule admitting evidence of that character. People v. Grutz, L.R.A.1915D, 229, 105 N. E. 843, 212 N. Y. 72.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Reading a summons to defendant over the telephone is not a sufficient service under a statute providing that summons shall be served by reading the same to defendant, where at the time the statute was enacted the telephone was not in existence L.R.A.1915D.

as a general means of communication. S. Lowman & Co. v. Ballard, L.R.A.1915D, 427, 84 S. E. 21, — N. C. —. (Annotated)

X-RAY.

Judicial notice as to danger in use of, see Evidence, 2.

